servants setting up for themselves, and perverting the powers delegated to them to establish their own independence, and make it necessary for Government to employ them exclusively. Against this danger, as an influence in Parliament was the only engine that could be set to work, there was a resource in the power of dissolution, and if the superior Government had been unremittingly vigilant in guarding against the first encroachments of its servants, this might have been sufficient. The very reverse was the case. They were remiss in the extreme, and their servants were vigilant to improve every opportunity of augmenting their influence and strengthening their connections. The redundancy of the public revenue furnished them with the first important advantage. They bribed a majority of Parliament to confederate with them by means of that treasure which should have been husbanded as the best security of the authority of Government. But, by this profusion, the Exchequer was exhausted, and the Government reduced to a dependence, for the moment, upon the grants of Parliament. And in order to perpetuate that dependence, a popular expedient was devised, which the Government were seduced by their treacherous advisers to consent to, namely, the charging the hereditary revenue with bounties upon different articles to a very great amount. The consequences of these manœuvres were soon apparent, and every successive Lord Lieutenant was obliged to make a new contract with the Junta in Ireland, to carry through the ordinary business of the State. Government was, at length, obliged to make a vigorous effort in order to throw off this disgraceful subjection. For this purpose it became necessary to raise the importance of the people, and the Octennial Law was passed. This measure was attended with all the success that could be expected or desired; and it became manifest from experiment that the natural influence of Government was more powerful than any factious combination that could be formed against it. From this period a revolution took place which called for some modification of the ancient principles and forms. The Government had prevailed by the assistance of the country gentlemen in Parliament. The court which had been paid to this description of men during the struggle had awakened their ambition, and the shortening the duration of Parliaments, as well as the breaking the Ministerial confederacy, had really increased their consequence. It was easy to foresee that they would not soon relapse into the torpid inaction into which they had so long been plunged. They had gained one step which, in the nature of things, must lead to more, and provision was to be made for securing their affection, and uniting their interest with Government, lest they should become the instruments of faction and ambition.

“The general persuasion, which I mentioned before, that the two great articles of trade, namely, linen and provisions, upon which the bulk of the nation depended for subsistence and wealth, were absolutely in the power of Great Britain, and the flourishing state of the linen manufacture in particular, furnished a great advantage to Government; and another circumstance, not less in their favour, was the division between Protestant and Papist, each of which naturally looked to Government for protection. The victory which Administration had recently gained enabled them to augment the revenue, so far as to answer fully the necessary expenses of Government, which might, also, be honourably reduced within narrower limits by an economy, which it was no longer to be apprehended would be construed into a timid compliance with factious clamour, instead of being considered as a deliberate and politic system. But the greatest of all possible advantages for settling upon the firmest basis whatever arrangements the crisis might require, and which seems to have been peculiar to the Government of Ireland, was the certainty that no demand for extraordinary supplies could disconcert their plans, nor any event deprive them of leisure for that gradual and silent reformation which is at once the safest and most effectual. A war could add nothing to the public expense but the trifling difference of 4,000 men serving abroad or at home. And as Great Britain, even in time of peace, might be expected to avail herself as far as possible of the Irish army, that difference was reduced to nothing. The obvious intention, and indeed the immediate occasion of Poyning's Law was to guard against the possible treachery of an Irish administration, by making it impossible that any law, prejudicial to the English interest, should pass by their connivance. A remedy calculated for extraordinary occasions was not to be lightly resorted to, more especially at a time when it was not only material to conciliate the affections of the people to English Government, but to repress the attempts of the servants of the Crown in Ireland to obtain an influence there, independent of their employers. The idea of a resident Lord Lieutenant perhaps was wise, and calculated to remove the abuses which had been complained of, if it had been connected with a subordinate administration, who might stand between the Government and the people, and be responsible to both for public measures. But, as things are at present, there is no degree of firmness and sagacity which can save the Lord Lieutenant from being the tool or dupe of men whose interest it is to deceive or betray him. During the whole course of Lord Harcourt's and Lord Buckinghamshire's Governments, they might, at the opening of every Session, have informed their employers, without any violation of truth, that they had a large majority in both Houses, who had engaged to vote whatever should be recommended to them. These men, in the country, were heads of popular associations, and colonels of volunteers, exciting discontent, and toasting confusion to measures which, in the closet of the Lord Lieutenant, they had advised or approved. And when the crisis arrived in Parliament, they supported the Castle as far as was sufficient to fix the odium of every unpopular measure upon English Government, and then deserted their standard, or refused to advance. Their object was to embroil the Government and the people. It made them in some degree necessary to both parties, and secured them, during the struggle, the exclusive emoluments of office and all the patronage of the State. Upon this basis they were erecting the fabric of their future power, and, if circumstances had permitted the popular ferment to subside, and the frequent elections had not brought forward a greater number of adventurers than could be readily provided for, the confederacy of the servants of Government would already have acquired a form and consistence much more formidable and powerful than that which, with so much risk and expense, was broken in Lord Townshend's administration. If any apparent and public responsibility had been thrown upon the servants of the Crown; if their share in advising the general measures of Government which was real had been ostensible; and men of figure and consideration in the country had been selected to take the lead in both Houses in official situations, instead of mere adventurers, it is probable that English Government might never have been committed with the people of Ireland. Its influence need not have been openly and visibly exerted but for their protection. But nothing operated more to disincline the people to England than the practice, which so long prevailed, of suppressing and altering Bills in the Privy Council. It always bore the appearance of a violent act of power, and made the Irish feel the dependence of their situation. Yet nothing was more easy than to have avoided it, as the House of Lords, an assembly devoted to the Crown, might have been employed for the same ends as the Privy Council, without risk or objection. The popular indignation would have spent itself upon Parliamentary leaders, who would have found consolation in the emoluments and patronage of office for all the obloquy to which they might be exposed.

"During the prevalence of the faction which was broken in Lord Townshend's administration, it was obviously necessary to the continuance of their power to garble the sheriffs, upon whom depended the returns of members of Parliament. The same practice was continued afterwards. I do not mention this as a source of the unpopularity of English Government. There was scarcely any description of men who did not find or expect their private advantage in the continuance of this abuse. But, to Government, nothing could be of so much importance as the regular administration of justice, and the due execution of the law, with which it is utterly incompatible.

"I have already taken notice of the two great advantages which England possessed at the period above-mentioned; namely, that the bulk of the people felt no possible grievance, but, on the contrary, considered their interest as materially connected with the favour of Great Britain; and, secondly, that the expenses of Government could be reduced within certain limits, and, under such circumstances, that no augmentation could become necessary. Let us see how the administration availed themselves of these advantages. In the first place, they lavished the public money without any view to the public service, run themselves deeply in debt, and, in every Session, had to apply for new supplies, and new taxes. This was certainly not the best way of making themselves popular, and being considered as the protectors of the people. This occasioned some murmurings, but was of less consequence, as the public indignation was not immediately directed against Great Britain, and the resource of a new Lord Lieutenant was always at hand. The war was now begun, and the fleets of Great Britain were to be victualled. An embargo is evidently a measure which necessity only can justify. It is an expedient for preventing mischief which might happen before a more regular proceeding could take effect. Lord North laid an embargo upon the provision trade of Ireland, and continued it for three years, regardless of the distress and clamour it occasioned. Nor was it thought sufficient to give the pre-emption to the contractors in England. A commissary of provisions was established at Cork, and a letter written by the Treasury to the Commissioners of Revenue in Ireland, desiring them to give orders that such vessels as should be certified by the commissary, from time to time, should be suffered to sail from the ports of Ireland without entry or clearance. That this was contrary to law it is superfluous to remark; and the obvious effect was to enable an individual to buy up all the provisions remaining after the contractors were supplied, at his own price, and to supply the enemy, without fear or punishment, because without the possibility of detection. The man had not discretion to conceal the great fortune which he made with unparalleled rapidity. I never could discover any pretence of public utility upon which this abuse was grounded. It is not easy to conceive the ruin, and misery, which was brought upon Ireland by an act of power which suspended at once, and for so long a period as three years, one great branch of their trade, which was almost the sole dependence of the southern and western provinces. But the evil was felt, more or less, in every part of the island, and by every description of men. I sincerely believe that no people ever experienced a more cruel and general distress. It was this, and this only, which made the whole nation, who had submitted so tamely for a century to every restriction which the monopolising spirit of British commerce could impose, determine at once to throw off the yoke, under which they were actually perishing. The distinctions of Protestant and Papists, and their senseless dissensions, were obliterated at once in the pursuit of their common safety. Their very existence depended upon a vigorous and united effort to save the vessel in which they were all embarked.

“It is superfluous to examine whether any part of the concessions afterwards made to Ireland might have been avoided. Whatever was worth contending for was finally relinquished, and in my opinion very wisely, by the Act of Renunciation which you procured. The ferment which had been raised so high could not be expected to subside at once. The parade of volunteering, and the nonsense of Parliamentary reform, might engage the people for a time, but the first was too expensive to continue long, and the latter too abstract a speculation to create any general interest, at a time when so many new pursuits were opened, of great and immediate profit. The volunteering spirit was continued something beyond its natural period, by ill-judged attempts to suppress it. The Parliamentary reform was treated with contempt, and, after one convulsive struggle, perished, and was forgot. There remained nothing but the protecting duties, a measure founded upon the narrow principles which are universally exploded in theory, and will be soon in practice, but of so hostile a complexion towards Great Britain, and clamoured for so loudly by the mob of Dublin, that I am not surprised the Duke of Rutland, who came over in the middle of a Session without any previous knowledge of the country, should have been alarmed. He had not time to concert any plan for defeating it, even if he had had courage to attempt it ; but, when it came into Parliament, the Northern members to a man, actuated by the motives I have detailed above, exerted themselves against it, and threw it out by a large majority, without any apparent interference of Government. The conclusion of this Session laid the foundation for the famous commercial propositions, by which, in my humble apprehension, the continuance of the British administration, and, what was of still greater consequence, the peace of the two kingdoms was wantonly hazarded, in order, by purchasing a little popularity for Messires Foster and Company, to put it in their power to embarrass all the future measures of Government, as they had the past. I never had but one opinion on this subject, and declared it from the first. That the sentiments of the Duke of Rutland and Mr. Orde underwent a revolution, I can bear witness. As far as I have considered the propositions, they would have been attended with material advantages to both countries. But it was easy to foresee that they would lead to questions which it was much better should continue dormant, and give a handle for disturbing again the public peace. Some points, upon which Ireland at that moment appeared very careless, might have been silently settled to prevent future discussion, and, as opportunities presented themselves, more material objects might have been provided against, and the whole system gradually brought to perfection. The complete pacification of the country at that moment promised leisure for this, and was, alone, a reason sufficient to have prevented men of common prudence from agitating anything new. Every day, every hour, was giving real strength to Government; the people throughout the kingdom were sedulously employed in commercial enterprises, and, beyond the walls of Dublin, all the arts of faction were unable to excite a murmur of discontent. I will venture to say that, if the British Government had been truly informed of the state of Ireland, and consulted whether, in that situation of affairs, a scheme of such extent and difficulty should be proposed, they would not have hesitated to determine in the negative. And for the truth of my representation I may appeal to the event. The Opposition in Parliament declared that the people had asked for nothing; that they acquiesced in the situation they remained in after the renunciation of the supremacy of the British Parliament; that Government called upon them to say whether anything could yet be done for them; that they were grateful for this mark of attention and benevolence, and sent in such propositions as appeared calculated for the benefit of Ireland. Instead of which, another set of propositions was tendered to them prejudicial to their commercial interests, and subversive of their constitutional rights. Thus handle was given to represent the conduct of Government as insidious, and spread universal alarm through the nation, who were justly jealous of their recent acquisitions, the advantages of which began to be sensibly felt. No artifice was omitted to improve this opportunity, and inflame the public resentment; but Ireland was quiet then, and has remained so ever since.

“The address which was voted by surprise in the House of Commons, in a thin House, the last day of the Session, when not one member of any note was present, and which, even after Government had acquiesced, the threat of a protest by one unsupported individual was sufficient to defeat in the Lords, was laughed at in Ireland; and no expectation was entertained that it could be made the ground of any future proceeding; and though I can readily comprehend the motives which might induce certain Irishmen in the service of the Crown to stir in the business, I have never yet been able to understand how Mr. Orde and the Duke of Rutland could be induced to represent as discontented, and clamorous for new grants, the nation which they must have known to be in a state of the most profound tranquillity; and, by that means, to lead their friends in England into a transaction of such difficulty and danger, from which if the event had been complete success, no advantages could be hoped but what they were already in full possession of, domestic peace, and an obsequious Parliament.

“One great point was gained for Government in the Duke of Rutland’s administration, a very considerable augmentation of revenue; and what use has been made of it? Between two and three hundred thousand pounds has been squandered in buildings, and other expenses, in which Government has not the remotest concern. With the help of a lottery, and some little manœuvring in stating the accounts to Parliament, they have managed to keep up a tolerable appearance without any new loan; but the Treasury is exhausted, and money must be raised and new taxes imposed. Thus have the strength and security of Government been wasted, and, what is of the greatest importance, time which might have been employed in such a manner as to enable that country to contribute an ample share of the expenses of war, which must now be borne, as formerly, by Great Britain alone. For it would be childish to expect, and ruinous to exact, any considerable supply from Ireland in her present state. The other points which were effected by the Rutland administration were, the City Police Bill, and the General Police. The objects of both, I mean the avowed objects, must be universally approved; and it was of some consequence to Government that the peace and government of the city should be better provided for than it had been; and of infinite importance that the law should be carried into execution in the whole extent of the kingdom, with vigilance, firmness, and impartiality. The means employed to obtain these ends I cannot consider as dictated by political wisdom.

It was beneath the dignity, and repugnant to the interest of Government, to pervert institutions intended for the furtherance of public justice, and order, to purposes of private corruption. It was still more reprehensible, in my humble opinion, to hold out the magistracy as a punishment, and an object of terror; to threaten the counties with what ought to be considered as a common benefit: and when the subject has, by the constitution, and the general principles of every Government under heaven, a right to a due, and effectual execution of the law, to leave it in the discretion of the Lord Lieutenant whether he shall enjoy it, or not. Before a measure proceeding on principles unknown in the law of these islands was adopted, and an opening given for imputing to Government an intention to make the public disorders a pretence for obtaining new and dangerous powers, it might have been prudent to try the effect of a less corrupt appointment of sheriffs, and new commissions of the peace. At any rate it must have been wiser to make the old law the groundwork of the new. There would have been less room for complaint, and, if ancient maxims may be relied on, the effect would have been more certain, as well as more complete.

"In the whole series of measures which I have been considering, I am not able to find one which was calculated to give any substantial advantage to the Government of this country, either by conciliating the affections of the people of Ireland, or rendering their resentment impotent. I am unable to say what is the system which it was intended to establish, or whether the views of those in power extended farther than by temporary expedients to get through the term of their administration, regardless of any consequences to the fundamental interests of Great Britain. I observe, however, that every measure which Government has thought proper to make their object, has, if persisted in, been carried by large majorities; and I also observe some obscure indications of a consciousness that a new system of administration was necessary, to meet the new relative situation of the two kingdoms. On the part of Great Britain nothing appears to have been wanting to facilitate the government of successive Lords Lieutenant. Whatever measures they recommended have been adopted; whatever persons they pointed out have been distinguished by the Royal favour; and offices, and emoluments of great value, making once a part of the patronage of this country, have been relinquished, and restored to Ireland. Nothing, in short, can be imputed to the British Ministers but their rash confidence in the persons they employed, and their want of leisure or inclination to judge with their own eyes.

"I mentioned some indications of an intention to introduce a new system of administration. Such an intention has been repeatedly announced, both in public and private; and, in consequence, great sums of money have been voted by Parliament, to re-purchase the offices of state which had been granted for life, as sinecures, to persons resident in England. They have been continued as sinecures in Ireland. The establishment has been loaded with increased expense, and the success of one set of adventurers has only excited the rapacity and expectations of another. But what points have been gained for England, and what advantages is she likely to reap from all her concessions? A right, most certainly, to call upon Ireland for larger contributions towards the expense of future wars, a right which Ireland herself has readily acknowledged. But has there been any provision made to render that right effectual? Not the least. Has there been any considerable augmentation of the army? No. Any creation of naval force? No. Any augmentation of revenue so as to leave a fund for the supply of Great Britain? Quite the contrary; the revenue does not equal the expense. In short, the state of things is no other ways altered than as the public debts and expenses have been increased, and, consequently, the difficulty of government. And a national interest having been brought forward, but not a national administration, there is nothing systematic in the public measures of the servants of the Crown in Ireland, nor any public principle pretended to by them, but that the subsisting administration is to be supported. How little such support can contribute to the strength of any party here, the late proceedings have demonstrated, and the principle evidently tends to establish the most mischievous of all distinctions, that of an English and Irish interest. But, surely, if there is anything more peculiarly to be avoided, it is the committing, upon every trivial occasion, the name and authority of Great Britain. This, then, is the conclusion upon which we must rest. After the lapse of so many years, this country has derived no advantage, but some loss, from the concessions made to Ireland. There has been a loss in patronage, and in power, to compensate which neither influence nor security have been gained, so that the policy of yielding in the first instance, though defensible upon every liberal principle, may be called in doubt from the event. Nor is there, at present, any very flattering prospect for the future. The actual state of the revenue is not such as to admit of any further contribution to the common service; and the clamours of discontent are as loud as ever. It remains, therefore, to be enquired whether the people of Ireland still labour under any real grievances, with the continuance of which the interest of this country is in any degree complicated.

“That grievances exist, I think, cannot be denied, and it is equally evident that they are entirely of a domestic nature, and have no relation to British influence and superiority, nor are they of such magnitude as to require immediate redress. They should, however be kept in view, not only as every wise and just Government must make the general happiness of the people its principal object, but they will supply the means of gratifying the people, when the occasion may demand it.

“It is a maxim of good legislation that the poor, from whose labour the public wealth is derived, shall be favoured and protected as much as possible. That the situation of the poor of Ireland is deplorably wretched it would be superfluous to prove; but I do not believe that any person who has not been conversant in the interior of the country can conceive under what a variety of oppression they are crushed. I believe the hearth-money to be a greater source of distress to them than is generally thought. Indeed I am confident that no revenue which has been drawn from houses with single hearths can be considered as compensating in any degree for the misery and discouragement of the poor. The State is a loser by it, in point of immediate profit. I had occasion to talk on this subject with Sir John Parnell, who admitted the distress occasioned by the tax, and that nothing would contribute more effectually to the relief of the people than its repeal, or modification; but justified it by this extraordinary position, that it was necessary to make them feel that there was a Government over them. No other object can be answered by its continuance, for Sir John Parnell, and every other person acquainted with the revenue of Ireland, is fully sensible that houses with single hearths might be exempted, and a larger revenue than the present obtained by increasing the tax upon houses of an higher class. A great part of the revenue now drawn from single hearths is merely nominal. A large arrear is incurred every year, and that arrear is never recovered, nor indeed is it possible to recover it; so that the public Treasury must be a gainer by new modelling this tax. It is sometimes said that no man above the class of beggars can be so poor as to be distressed by the payment of two shillings a year. Labourers in England are never at a loss for an house to shelter them. Many of them have dwellings of their own, and if a landlord was to exact a higher rent for a cottage than they could afford to pay, they have a resource by applying to the parish. In Ireland the great renter of land, whose farm comprehends the extent of one, and often of two or three English parishes, admits just as many families of cottagers to reside upon his land as may supply the labour he has occasion for, and no more. However they may be oppressed, there they must remain. Other farms are already supplied, and they can find neither employment nor room. The poor in the South and West of Ireland have little or no employment but in husbandry. The seat of the linen manufacture is in the North, and no other has yet much extended itself. The nominal wages of a labourer are 6*d.* a day, about 7*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* a year. Out of this he must pay a high rent for his cottage and potato garden, and all the articles of necessary consumption which he cannot be supplied with from thence, he must take from his master. So that, though it is possible in some cases that the peasant may be tolerably subsisted, yet it may well be doubted whether two shillings in ready money is not a greater sum than he can at any time spare. The poor in England pay no direct tax. They contribute, however, to the State by their consumption of taxed commodities. It must be the policy of Government to bring the poor of Ireland gradually into as good a situation, and I should conceive the relieving them from a direct impost would be one of the first means for accomplishing that end. The grievance of hearth-money is certainly not likely to create any disturbance, and may be continued without danger to Government in its present form, but the modification of it has always been among the popular topics. It must be very ill-managed if it is not made to appear as a favour. No revenue can be lost by it. Perhaps there may be some gained, and it will undoubtedly contribute to the general prosperity of the people.

"Tythe is a subject of much greater weight, and demands, in my opinion, more immediate attention from Government. Whether it may be practicable, in any circumstance, to abolish it may be a matter of doubt; but it is the occasion of such extensive mischief, and the examples of other countries afford such strong presumption that it is possible to substitute some less exceptionable provision for the clergy, that it must, undoubtedly, deserve most serious consideration. Tythe is considered as a tax very burthensome in its nature, and which is, in a peculiar manner, grating to the feelings of those upon whom it is levied. It operates as a discouragement to industry and improvement in that particular line which it is the best policy for this country to promote, both as the improvement of the lands of Ireland is that most immediately within reach, and as multiplying the commercial pursuits of the people, and turning any considerable part of their capital into those channels at present, would be only multiplying the difficulties of Government, by throwing new impediments in the way of that final assimilation and consolidation of the trade and revenues of both kingdoms, which should be the ultimate objects of Government.

"In the provision counties of Ireland, an arbitrary vote of the House of Commons having forced the clergy to desist from the claim of agistment tythes, that is the tythes of pasture land, the revenues of the clergy, far below what they are legally entitled to, are paid by the most miserable wretches in the creation. The rich are exempt. Whether the length of time which has elapsed since the resolution of the House of Commons above mentioned would be considered as a legal bar to the claim of the Church, I know not. I presume the negative; but I am sure the private interest, the habits, and the prejudices, of a great part of the nation, run with such force against it, that it would be madness to assert it.

"This exemption from tythe is the reason why great tracts of land, which would otherwise be tilled, are continued in pasture. The landlord finds his interest in reducing his estate to a desert, but the revenue and strength of the State depends upon population; tillage supplies the poor with employment, gives them fixed dwellings, and regular habits of life, attaches them to the soil, and makes them amenable to law. The people of Ireland have, of late years, gradually increased. The quantity of land which is engrossed by the provision trade is one source of their distress, and, of course, one cause of the disturbances which have prevailed. Throwing a larger proportion into tillage is the readiest method of providing for them. The increase of the agriculture of Ireland can be no injury to any description of men in England; the increase of population would open a new market for the manufactures of both countries.

"I am not an advocate for any great or violent changes. I think the danger which always attends them is never compensated by the advantages. My objection to the commercial propositions was their attempting too much at once. But I see in England that much has been done, insensibly as it were, towards the abolition of tythe. Moduses are in many places established. In all the inclosures which have taken place, there has been a commutation for land. I think the policy of assimilation to England would alone be an argument for making timely provision for a gradual change of the same kind in Ireland. But I think there are reasons arising from the peculiar situation of that country, and this among others has great weight with me. The Roman Catholic religion is losing ground there daily. The influence of the priests declines. Every means, therefore, should be taken to make it over to the clergy of the Established Church. Some expense would be well bestowed in providing them proper habitations in every parish, and in opening a retreat for the priests who are fewer in number and more inclinable to conform. But, even in England we know what bickerings and heartburnings prevail between the pastor and his flock, on the subject of tythe; and it must be an object of some consequence to remove every obstacle to affection and goodwill when Popery is dying away, and a trifle may determine whether its ancient professors shall unite themselves to the Established Church, or be formed into a new sect of Dissenters.

"Before I quit this subject I must observe that the Pastors, both of the Papists and Protestant Dissenters of Ireland, depending for support entirely upon the goodwill and zealous attachment of their flocks, are stimulated to keep up, by perpetual exertions, that influence which is of such consequence to them. The emoluments belonging to the clergy of the Establishment are secured to them by law, and it is very rarely that their private interest can be affected by the careless and languid performance of their duty. Whether it might be practicable to lessen this dependence of Dissenting teachers upon their respective congregations, by securing to them some provision under the authority of the State, I am not prepared to give a decided opinion; but I am certain that it would have the effect of relaxing their zeal, and gradually disposing the laity to reconcile themselves to the Established Church. The Protestant Dissenters branch out into such a variety of sects, that it would perhaps answer no purpose of public importance to provide for any particular description among their teachers. The Roman Catholics are much less adverse to the Church of England than most of the Protestant Dissenters. The Papal authority is no longer what it was, and there are Roman Catholic countries in which the King's supremacy is established, and with as little limitation, or nearly so, as in England. If it were possible to conciliate and assimilate the body of Roman Catholics in Ireland with the Established Church, the Dissenters would be of no consequence.

"I must consider as another real grievance to the people of Ireland the accumulated severity of the Revenue Laws. I daresay that the Board of Revenue performs its part of the public service with great integrity, diligence, and capacity. But the subordinate jurisdictions, and officers in remote parts, are the source of infinite oppressions and injustice, and, I am persuaded, not more vexatious to the people than detrimental to the revenue itself. Whoever has remarked that scarce a Session has passed without some reinforcement of the former system of violence, and penalties, or without some new tax; and, at the same time, that the revenue has always fallen far below the expectations of Government, will be satisfied either that the system of taxation is, in its principles, grossly defective, or that the regulations are ill-contrived, or that the revenue is greater than the population and circumstances of the country will bear. The latter of these suppositions is contradicted by its rapid improvement. The deficiency of the revenue must, therefore, be attributed to one, or both, the other causes. In my opinion to both. The general system of the taxes requires revision, and the severity of the laws by which it is enforced is injudiciously applied, and produces no effects but the oppression of the people, and the corruption of the officer. I shall always suspect the wisdom of that Government which appears to have no resource but force, and, when any of its regulations is eluded, has no contrivance for maintaining it but a multiplication of penalties.

"The Pension List is, in my opinion, another just ground of complaint to the people of Ireland, together with all the profusion under the heads of King's Letters, concordatum, and military contingencies. The less the influence of the people of Ireland in the House of Commons, the greater will their jealousy become of any corrupt influence prevailing there. All unnecessary expense, therefore, ought to be avoided. The multiplication of offices, though it may be justified by particular conjunctures, will always excite alarm and clamour. It seems to be, at best, but an expedient to gain a temporary advantage, and by no means calculated to increase the radical and permanent strength of Government.

"The want of apparent responsibility in administration will also naturally occasion discontent. The responsibility of the servants of the State is the acknowledged principle of the British Government, nor can it be expected that the Irish, who are repeatedly told that, in point of constitutional liberty and security, they are now upon the same footing as the people of England, will be deprived of so important a right as that of calling Ministers to account, when they have betrayed their public duties. To convince them that every member of the domestic administration of their country is as truly, and legally responsible, as persons in similar situations in England, is an object of such material consequence, that it should always be kept in sight. The personal responsibility of Ministers is one of the great securities of the monarchy in England; and the personal responsibility of Ministers in Ireland is the only ground upon which British supremacy can be firmly built. The idea that the responsibility of the Government is in the Lord

Lieutenant is false and unconstitutional. He represents the executive magistracy of England, the sovereign of Ireland, between whom and the people no difference can be properly supposed to arise. He is not sheltered by the accidental circumstance of his having no property in the kingdom he governs, nor a residence but merely temporary; but by the principles of the British Constitution, which, for the wisest ends, has made responsible not the sovereign who commands, but the minister who executes. The King's pleasure cannot be pleaded in justification by his servants. They are bound, at their peril, to examine before they act in consequence whether that pleasure is in conformity with the law, and the essential interest of the nation. The Lord Lieutenant, who represents the King, is equally freed from responsibility. Those in official departments under him are properly answerable for the measures which, without them, cannot be carried into execution. But directly in contradiction to these principles has been the system pursued. Everything has been done to take away all appearance of responsibility in the Irish Administration, and to throw every thing upon the Lord Lieutenant and his secretary. To such an absurd extreme has the jealousy of a revival of the old oligarchical tyranny been carried by Government, that all patronage has been taken from every Department, and the Lord Lieutenant is to name, and be personally solicited for, the appointment to the very lowest official situations, as if it could be expected that tide-waiters, searchers and coast officers should conceive that they had contracted an obligation to British Government, and not to those through whose mediation they had obtained its favours. As if every nomination did not make many refusals necessary; as if such patronage was not merely nominal, Government promoting not its own dependents and adherents, but those of other men, and thus incurring all the odium of denials, without any share of the praise of bestowing. In pursuance of the same system, no man in Ireland is called into Cabinet consultations in virtue of his office. The Lord Lieutenant applies, at his discretion, to any person he thinks fit; sometimes it has been the Chancellor, sometimes the Speaker of the House of Commons, sometimes the Prime Sergeant, or Attorney General, at others men in no official situations, with whom the general plan of Government has been concerted, and every measure of importance previously determined, and arranged. Then follows a separate communication, consultation there is none, to each of the leading members of both Houses, whether in or out of office, upon whose support the Government principally rely; and, afterwards, a more general meeting at which the address or the motion, intended to be proposed, is read. This also is mere matter of ceremony, and I have known such meetings attended by men of name and figure, who have gone from the Castle to the House to lead the opposition. Men cannot be properly responsible for measures which they have no share in advising; and, as there is no mark by which the people can distinguish the real advisers of Government, the odium of every measure falls upon the Lord Lieutenant and his Secretary; and with the greater violence as the people are conscious that, whatever may be the demerits of those officers, and though they should in fact intend and attempt all that ruin to the liberty and trade of Ireland which is constantly imputed to them, they are out of the reach of punishment. Yet nothing is more certainly true than that the Irish part of the administration is the spring of all the measures pursued by Government. The suggestions they make, and the information they give, are the grounds of every resolution adopted by the Lord Lieutenant, and the British Cabinet; so that the sum of what has been obtained by breaking the faction in Lord Townshend's time has been no more than this. That formerly men in place in Ireland had power with the risk and responsibility which ought always to be annexed to it; the power still remains with them, and the Lord Lieutenant and his Secretary, that is, the British Government whom they represent, have all the risk and responsibility.

"It remains to say a few words more concerning the nature and extent of the change which has taken place in the relative situation of the two countries. My ideas concerning it have been already explained in some degree, as far at least as relates to the mode of administration. The boundaries of the political powers of both may be thus expressed. The whole domestic administration, legislation, and regulation of commerce, has been restored by Great Britain to the Parliament and people of Ireland. An absolute negative upon all Acts, legislative and administrative, together with the succession to the Crown, and the unlimited power of peace, war and negotiation, has been reserved. As the Crown of Ireland follows no rule of hereditary succession, but is annexed to, and appendant on the Crown of Great Britain, the limitation of which belongs to the British Parliament, the control of this country over the executive of Ireland is complete; and, though the Privy Council of the former has no longer any power to reject or to alter Bills, yet, as the Royal assent must be signified under the Great Seal of England, the control, in this respect, is also complete; and no law can be passed, affecting the interest of Great Britain, for which the Ministers of this country will not be answerable to Parliament.

"Whatever the public force of Ireland may consist of, it is completely at the disposal of Great Britain, and that without expense. The army is supplied from the revenue of Ireland, whose ports, shipping, and seamen are as much in the disposal of this country, as its own. To augment, therefore, the public force of Ireland, either by augmenting the army, or creating a navy, or building docks, or increasing the quantity of shipping by extending trade, wherever it may be done without prejudice to Great Britain, must be the objects of the policy of this country. The whole of their domestic administration we have surrendered to Ireland, with reserve only of that negative power which may prevent any innovations tending to shake the supremacy of this country. The patronage of English Government in Ireland is reduced to two Vice-Treasurers' places, and a few inconsiderable pensions. The remainder is engrossed by the Irish Administration. What concern, therefore, have we with it? If one party there cannot defend their posts without farther assistance, and fresh means of corruption, let them resign to those who can. It can be of no consequence to this country what Irish names adorn the pages of Watson's Almanack, and of very little to any party here. For, at this moment, when clunours are so loud, and the Whig Club holds out an apparent distinction of parties beyond what has yet been known in Ireland, what changes would take place there, if there was to be any revolution in the administration here? The office of Vice-Treasurer remains in abeyance for Lord Shannon. Mr. Ponsonby's object is the chair. A pension provides for Forster's retreat. Lord Downshire will be as zealous a supporter of the next Administration, as of the present, and for the same reasons. So will Lord Waterford, and Lord Loftus, and so will the Chancellor. Half a dozen unconnected men may be turned out from inferior offices, though even that is not very probable. There is precedent for creating new offices, if vacancies do not happen in time.

"According to my ideas, therefore, the grievances of the people of Ireland are to be referred entirely to their domestic administration, and to be corrected by their own Parliament. Great Britain has no political interest but in preserving the command of the forces of Ireland. Whatever number of troops Ireland can be brought to maintain is, in fact, an augmentation of the British army, though attended with no expense to Britain; and all the revenue which Ireland can supply, after deducting the expense of her civil establishments, may be made in effect the revenue of Great Britain.

“But as much as I censure that improvident management, which, by useless augmentations of the establishments, and an idle profusion of public money upon objects of no importance to Government, so much or more must I condemn any kind of sinking fund. I disapprove of taxes when they are imposed for no substantial public end; but I must observe that the low taxes in Ireland have formed a principal obstacle to every commercial arrangement between the two countries, and that to draw a great revenue from Ireland must be a main object of British policy. Every fair opportunity, therefore, of laying on new taxes should be improved, keeping always in view the principle of assimilation with Great Britain, so that the trade of both countries may gradually coalesce, and be melted into one. If the debt is paid off, no pretence remains for continuing the taxes. What is wanted for the advantage of this country is a great surplus of revenue over and above the interest of the debt, and the expense of the Establishment. It will never do to go increasing the expenses of the Government of Ireland, for that is to defeat the very end for which the revenue is augmented. But means must be contrived for disposing of the surplus till it becomes considerable enough to be applied to the service of Great Britain. It must not be applied in any constant course, like the corn premiums for example, which may grow into an establishment. I am for giving it in jobs, and my reason is that this expedient has been tried, and with great success. That it was abused is no argument against it. We are not to suppose the superior Government destitute of all vigilance, capacity, and vigour. Prudently managed, occasional grants to private persons on pretence of some work of public utility, such as canals, roads, bridges, piers, may be the means of extensive influence, and can scarcely fail, in some degree, to contribute to the improvement of the country. Influence may thus be made to go hand in hand with popularity, and what creates an interest in the House of Commons creates an interest also among the people. Here it may be asked in what consisted the abuse which I have admitted, and what is the proper use of this expedient. My answer is that the abuse consisted in suffering what ought to have conciliated a general goodwill to and dependence on the superior Government, to be used as an instrument of power to a faction in the Irish administration. The use, under the present circumstances of the country, consists in providing a temporary application of the surplus revenue, without inducing a necessity or pretence for reducing the taxes; and, at the same time, extending the influence and popularity of British Government by means which cannot fail in some degree to increase the prosperity of the country. But as this expedient would furnish a very limited employment for the revenue which might be raised in Ireland, something farther must be thought of. Many are the public works which might be carried on immediately under the orders of Government, or by the different corporations and public bodies, such, for example, as harbours, fortifications, docks, which would have a popular appearance, and would afford the means of extensive gratification to the people. All these should be undertaken in their turns, and particular funds assigned for each particular purpose. Thus, in process of time, a large revenue might be obtained, which, after the ends for which it was first specifically raised had been answered, would remain for the disposition of Government; that is, might, by an easy transition, be applied to the general service of the empire. If public works are undertaken by Government, or assistance in money given to private adventurers, the charge being thrown upon the same funds by which the ordinary service of Government is supplied, it is, in fact, a deduction of so much from the revenue of the State. If for the support of these grants, separate funds were created, independent of the establishment, the revenue of the State would be unimpaired, and a beneficial and constitutional influence created for Government. The lowering the interest upon the debt is also, according to my principles, a foolish scheme. The object which should be followed in Ireland is not to lower, but gradually raise the taxes, that they may be finally applied to the service of the Empire. The higher, therefore, you can keep the interest of the debt the better, because when the period comes for applying with safety, and without exciting discontent, the surplus revenue of Ireland to the assistance of Great Britain, a larger annual income may be freed by payment of a less sum of money. To illustrate what I have been saying. If a specific fund had been assigned for building the new Custom House, the Inns of Court, et cetera, Government would have had no need of a lottery, no want of money, and a considerable annual revenue, would have been near falling in to the public. If the money laid out to build and furnish magnificent houses for Mr. Beresford, and the other Commissioners, who were already sufficiently bound to Government, had been applied in little jobs, that would have been a real improvement to various parts of the country, the votes of 50 members of Parliament might have been secured, as well as the affection of as many towns. As it is, the expense has been a drain and an embarrassment to Government; and the indignation and envy of the public is excited by the profusion with which palaces have been built for men, to whose offices no dignity and representation belongs, and who were certainly amply paid before, since their situation were the objects of general ambition. A surplus of revenue might also be beneficially employed, and contribute to give Government a more diffused influence, by the encouragement of such branches of trade as might least clash with the particular commercial views of England; and the trade of Ireland be led by bounties into such channels as to give it a necessary connexion with and dependence upon the trade of England, and thus bind numbers in a common interest with Great Britain. I have already taken notice of a great advantage of this nature, which in my opinion Government had, and threw away; namely, the persuasion the Irish were under of the importance of the English market, and the advantage of the bounty paid by England upon the importation of their linens. Since that period a very great and essential revolution must have taken place in the manufactures and trade of Ireland. To what extent, and in what particular branches, I cannot pretend to say. I laugh at all those political adepts who profess to estimate the value of every separate trade, and the proportion each bears to the other, by vain theories and conjectures. Government is perhaps informed upon this point from an actual survey. If they are not, they may be, and it is important that they should; for a tolerably accurate knowledge of the numbers and property engaged in different branches of trade will point out to them what bodies of men it is really worth the while of Government to attach to itself; and at the same time, the best means of getting an hold upon them. I believe there are very few manufactures which flourish, as yet, to any considerable degree. A little encouragement to those few, would, if it were thought worth while, confine the people to them, and diminish the points of competition with England. The division of the people into great bodies of trade, would not only make it more easy to unite their interests, and engage their prejudices in support of British Government, but also to collect and manifest in critical times their sentiments upon public measures, and thus virtually remedy, in some degree, the imperfection of the system of representation. A reform of Parliament I must admit to be measure of great delicacy and danger. I think, however, that it might have very beneficial consequences in Ireland. The more elections are made to depend upon that influence which flows from landed property, the greater will be the steadiness and security of Government. Whatever jealousy subsists between the two countries, springs from persons in trade and the factions of Ireland; either from their clamours and unreasonable monopolising spirit, or from adventurers who purchase seats with no view but, by perplexing and teasing Government, to force themselves into office. Both these descriptions of men would be diminished, as to consequence and numbers in Parliament, by calling in a greater proportion of landed influence. But the preponderance of that influence might be carried to excess, and the nature of our Government requires that all the estates of the people of the realm should be represented. If the close boroughs were to be abolished, or the freeholders in the neighbouring districts be associated to the ancient voters, and, at the same time, the number of county representatives be increased, (a scheme which has been proposed,) in a short space of time, the representation and the right of election would be engrossed by 100, or 150, families. The equipoise might be restored by taking one member from each depopulated or close borough, and making an equal addition to the representation of the counties or large towns; or, leaving all the old corporations untouched, an addition might be made to the county members, and new rights of electing be created in favour of new bodies of men. Belfast, for example, is one of the largest towns in Ireland. The election is in a Sovereign and twelve burgesses. Their franchise might continue, and the inhabitants be empowered to elect two other members for themselves. Clonmel is another great and increasing town, in the same circumstances. Waterford, one of the chief ports of trade, has no proper representatives. The election is in freemen, of whom a vast majority are non-resident, created by a garbled corporation to support a particular interest. A distinct election might here also be given to the inhabitants. But as the contagion of Parliamentary Reform might be dreaded for England, it remains to be considered whether, even in the present state of the Irish Parliament, means may not be found to collect, and to influence the public opinion. I have already touched upon some. I think the House of Lords might be made use of to advantage. Though some improper creations have been made, it consists of the principal landed men in Ireland. The weight of property in it very far exceeds that in the House of Commons. I went over the list of those who are constantly resident, or who reside occasionally and constantly take part in the politics of the country, and I computed the annual landed incomes of 103 of them as amounting to upwards of 700,000*l*. When, in addition to this, is considered the property of the inferior branches of their families, their connexions, and dependents, it is clear their weight in the country must be very great. And, if they were brought a little more forward to public notice, they might be made a most powerful engine of Government; and, if from the vicious system of representation, a faction should prevail for a time in the House of Commons, might be interposed, with safety and effect, as a barrier against their attempts. This is a weapon certainly not to be trusted in rash and common hands, but there will always be a fund of prudence in the House of Lords itself to temper the use of it. I think it one of the best resources which Government has in critical conjunctures, because the exertion of English influence is there least visible, and will, consequently, be attended with the least odium. It is worth remarking that the Opposition which is now considered as so formidable in the House of Commons, cannot muster ten votes in the Lords. Nothing, therefore, can more contribute to lower the tone of the old leaders of parties than raising the importance of the Lords, where they are insignificant. Exclusive of the preponderance which the attachment of the Bishops must give to Government, many causes will constantly operate in their favour with that Assembly. It is to be hoped that honours, I mean, particularly higher ranks in the peerage, will be distributed with a more sparing hand in future; though I rely much more upon the general leaning of the body of the peerage, and the strong interest by which the proprietors of land are bound to the support of Government, than upon any means of gratifying individuals. Though the House of Commons does not contain nearly the same proportion of real weight and influence as the Lords, yet it has some considerable share of both; and it is to be presumed that, as its lustre and reputation has been increased, more gentlemen of fortune will be solicitous to obtain seats. This will gradually operate to the exclusion of those noisy adventurers who have been the source of so much trouble and mischief, and will give a firmer foundation to Government. With a majority in both Houses, but a very great preponderance in the Lords, and with those holds upon the great bodies of trade which I think may be obtained, and which I believe, indeed, actually exist to a considerable extent, there could be no room for doubt or apprehension as to the inclinations of the people.

"I come now to explain, more particularly, the mode of administration which appears to me best calculated to prevent any mischief from growing in Ireland, for, as to immediate danger, I am persuaded there is none. For this purpose some seven or eight offices should be fixed upon to be filled by persons of high rank and natural consequence, and by those upon whose abilities and experience Government must rely to transact the public business both in Parliament and in office. And these men should, in virtue of their offices, be called into council, so that the share they have in those measures which always depend, and must depend, upon their suggestion and advice, may appear more publicly. An effectual barrier between the people and the superior Government cannot be formed, unless a degree of lustre and power be annexed to these offices. They must be such as to appear considerable in the estimation of the multitude, and to be capable of satisfying the ambition of men who have a lead in Opposition. Ireland is already possessed of several offices of high rank and considerable emolument. All that is wanting is to give some business to them, and an ostensible share in the government. There is the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, the Vice-Treasurership, the Secretary of State. These are all sinecures, and the latter is granted for life. It ought to be redeemed, and I would add to these a Privy Seal, through whose office the grants of pensions might pass. The Treasury should be put in commission to the Vice-Treasurer, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Deputy Vice-Treasurer. The only additional expense would be the salary of the Privy Seal. The wine warrants of Privy Counsellors amount to considerably more than a thousand pounds. It has been proposed to take them in aid. In my opinion, if the measure is thought advisable the additional expense of 2,000*l.* or 2,500*l.* ought to be no objection. If the danger is objected of reviving the system which prevailed before

Lord Townshend's time, I answer that the utmost abuse of that system is infinitely preferable to the present; that it is better calculated for the security of the British interest, and for the internal prosperity of Ireland; that, since the Octennial Bill, and that for regulating the trial of controverted elections, it cannot be abused to the same extent that it formerly was; that all the abuses to which it is exposed are incident to the present state of administration; and that it cannot be abused at all, but by the negligence or connivance of the British Government. The Lord Lieutenant and Secretary ought not, in my opinion, to form the efficient administration in Ireland, but to superintend, and control it, and be the medium of communication, not between a party in office exclusively, but between the people of Ireland, and the Ministry of Great Britain. A competent share of the inferior patronage should be distributed to each of the principal Offices. The rest would continue with the Lord Lieutenant. The grant of honours, in particular, should, I think, be entirely reserved. Too many Bishops have been made of late upon Irish patronage; too many Peers merely to gain a temporary support in the House of Commons. If my estimate is not erroneous, the House of Lords should be a principal bulwark of English authority. The Bishops, therefore, ought, if not Englishmen, to belong to no Irish party. Far from recommending the absolute exclusion of Irishmen, there is, I think, an obvious policy in selecting, from time to time, men of that nation, eminent for learning and piety. But it should be a rule, not to be dispensed with, never to give a seat upon the Bench to Irish political interest; and, upon the same grounds, I think Government ought to be very careful neither to increase too much the numbers of the Peerage, nor to create men who, from their properties, birth and connexions, have not a considerable influence in the country, independent of any borough. But, though I would have the Lord Lieutenant the constant Inspector of the Administration of Ireland, and the immediate channel of communication between the people of that country, and the Government of this, Ireland is of too much consequence, as a member of the Empire, to be trusted to the real and effectual control of any man, or body of men, but the Cabinet of England; which, taking into its view all the interests and relations of every part of the King's dominions, may direct and confine the force and resources of the whole to one common end. The Lord Lieutenant appears to me to be too far removed, and for too long a time, to admit of his being sufficiently associated in the counsels of this country, and too much pressed and perplexed by being engaged in the domestic cabals of Ireland, not to lay aside sometimes the consideration of the general interest, in order to be relieved from a present embarrassment. I am one of those who doubt of the good policy of confining the Lord Lieutenant to residence so strictly as it has been done of late. I am unable to discover what end is answered by it, unless to increase the difficulty of finding proper persons to accept the office, and connect, whoever may accept it, in habits of confidence and familiarity with those whose ambitions and selfish views it is one of his principal duties to watch, and to restrain. No danger can arise from Lords Justices, if they are well chosen, and properly limited. I cannot approve the naming, of course, to that situation men in certain offices. It might give them something of a permanent authority; and it might be difficult to deviate from an established practice, where particular reasons might make it expedient or necessary to pass by a particular person. By taking a wider scope, an opportunity would be gained of gratifying, as occasion offered, men of rank and consequence by an honourable distinction, without any new expense to the public and without giving them any lasting or real power. The Secretary of State for the Home Department is, I know, properly the Minister for Ireland. But there are few either there or in Great Britain who are aware of it. I cannot pretend to say how far such an extensive and active application to Irish affairs as I have been recommending would be compatible with the other duties of the office; but I am convinced it is necessary, and also that great advantages would follow from Irishmen of rank finding ready access to a Minister when they come to this country. Certain civilities of routine, such, for example, as an invitation to dinner, without any distinction of parties, just as the Lord Lieutenant invites every man in his turn, would, I am persuaded from what I have seen and heard, have great effect. All this might be done without in the least derogating from the confidence and preference justly due to men in office; at the same time that it would be, in some degree, a check upon them, and countenance the idea that the Government here takes no concern in the mere domestic affairs of that country, but, guarding only against any encroachment on the constitutional powers of the State, and the connexion of the kingdoms, observes as to the rest a strict impartiality. Upon the same principle, the surplus of revenue which I propose to distribute in Parliamentary jobs, should be given indifferently to men in the support of Government, and in Opposition; not scrambled for, as it often has been, for it would then cease to be a source of influence to Government, but distributed upon a regular plan. The appearance of impartiality would give some popularity, and the expectations of members of Parliament soften the spirit of opposition. Grants of this kind, as well as of peerages, being instruments of general influence, ought to be reserved to the English part of the Government. They ought not, in my opinion, to be trusted absolutely even to the Lord Lieutenant. It is now high time to conclude, which I think, will best be done by a short recapitulation.

“Upon a review of the transactions of former years, it is evident to me that the spirit of discontent and resistance which occasioned the emancipation of the trade and Legislature of Ireland did not arise from the pressure of any commercial restraints, but merely from the distress resulting from continued embargo upon the provision trade. I am farther of opinion that the bulk of the nation are satisfied with what they have obtained; that the people labour under few actual grievances; that these are entirely of a domestic nature, such as have been long submitted to, and may continue without danger to Government, as they have no relation to the connexion between the two countries, or the supremacy of the British crown. That, if there is patience, to let the remains of popular ferment subside, and the trade of the country is left to find its own level, many of the obstacles which have stood in the way of any commercial arrangements between the two kingdoms will moulder away of themselves; others may be gradually, and silently, removed; that, however desirable a reform of Parliament may be upon general principles, it is probable that such means remain of collecting the sense of the nation that, if that measure is thought to be dangerous, no necessity exists for recurring to it; that the unpopularity of English Government is to be attributed solely to their having taken upon themselves the whole responsibility of the domestic administration of Ireland, in which this country has no immediate concern, and of which they have resigned in effect the whole direction to others; that the best way of preventing any mischief that may grow from this state of things is to establish an apparent responsibility in Irish Administration, so that their continuance in office may depend, in a great degree, as is the case in this country, upon the success of the measures they recommend, the most effectual pledge that can be taken for their sincerity. And, lastly, that a constant and unremitting attention should be given in this country to the inspection and control of Irish Government, so far as the rights of this country and the general service of the empire may be concerned in it; and care taken not to countenance any exclusive system in the management of parties, so that the private interest of no set of men may lead them to make the distinction of an English and Irish party; but that future Parliamentary contests may not be upon questions, involving the rights of both kingdoms, between English Government and Irish Opposition; but merely between Irish men, for the possession of Irish Offices, under the favour and protection of Great Britain. And that the operations of the superior Government may, notwithstanding any change in the particular administration of Ireland, be steadily and uniformly directed to one end, namely, the gradual augmentation of the forces and revenue of Ireland, to be finally disposed of by the supreme executive authority of both countries, which is one and the same, and the effectual control of which resides in the Parliament of Great Britain."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

[1795], February , London].—" I write to you three lines to inform you that the Bishop of St. Pol called upon me last night accompanied with the Comte de Serrant, who is overjoyed at the communication made to him by the Duc d'Harcourt, that it was intended to send one or perhaps two commissaries with him to attend to the distribution of the money intended to be employed, and to the other objects of his mission. He seems extremely anxious to assemble (in consequence of this arrangement) a meeting of Charrette, Sapineau, Scepeau, Stoffet, George, and Trettau, to concert with Puisaye their operations; and is sanguine in thinking that this assembly might be very useful, if the commissaries had their instructions as to the repartition of the sum now sent according to some rule to be laid down by you, but with powers to them to vary it in concert with him. And he earnestly wishes Government to be persuaded of his wish not only to obey literally their orders, but likewise to facilitate the duties of the commissaries by the most perfect understanding with them. But, as so much depends upon this, he wishes for their personal acquaintance as soon as possible, as the moon necessarily fixes his journey and his debarkation between the 1st and 5th of March. The latter part and the instructions respecting the repartition, are the only important parts of this note; but, I will add, that I am most extremely pleased with the manners, discretions, and good will of this young man, particularly on the subject of Puisaye, which seems a point on which his countrymen are very absurd."

LORD HENRY SPENCER TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1795, March 30, Berlin.—"From the present appearance of things on the Continent, I take it for granted that it is not the intention of his Majesty's ministers to prevent, by any new overtures or proposals, the final conclusion of the treaty which this Court is now negotiating with the French Convention. That treaty will, I should suppose, be immediately followed by an alliance between the two countries, in opposition to the triple league about to be formed between the two Imperial Courts and Great Britain. The claims of the Emperor to the Palatinates of Cracow and Sandomir are judged by the King of Prussia to be utterly incompatible with the safety of his dominions, and this persuasion, whether well-founded or not, will certainly operate to induce his Majesty rather to go to war immediately for the possession of those provinces, than to leave himself at the mercy of the Emperor by a cession of them. The Austrian Cabinet on the other hand, supported by Russia, and countenanced by England, does not seem inclined to give way, so that upon the whole it appears that the interests of France and Prussia in the present contest are likely to become in part the same.

Under these circumstances, I apprehend that the presence of an English minister at this Court would be as little advantageous to the public service, as agreeable or creditable to himself, and that I may therefore look forward with a great degree of confidence to the leave of absence which I have so long solicited for my private affairs."

LORD GRENVILLE to LORD HENRY SPENCER.

1795, April 14, Downing Street.—"I am to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's letter of the 30th of last month containing a request that you may have leave to visit England on account of your private affairs. As your Lordship appears to have made this application only under the idea that your presence at Berlin might be dispensed with under the present circumstances without inconvenience to the King's affairs, it will, I am persuaded, be sufficient for me to mention to you the importance of an English minister with your Lordship's rank being resident at Berlin in the present moment, in order to induce your Lordship to abandon a request which I should not think myself justified in recommending to his Majesty at so critical a period."

NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE.—NOTE OF LORD GRENVILLE.

1796, September 17.—"The person who has made the communication should be acquainted that, in entering into any discussion of this nature, it must be expected that some proof should be given that the proposal is really authorised by those in whose name it is made.

"That on receiving such proof (whether it can now be furnished or after recurring to Paris for it) there would be a disposition to enter into the business on the footing proposed; and that, with that view, it would be essentially necessary that the person who is to conduct the business here should be enabled to enter into particulars as to the terms of the proposed arrangement, and the nature and extent of the inducements expected."

Endorsed.—"Copy of note given to Mr. Fordyce, September 17, 1796, to be by him communicated to Mr. Boyd, and with permission to the latter to suffer it to be copied by the person in question."

1796, September 20.—"The person who has made the communication in question not being enabled to produce any authority for the proposal, no more can now be said except that, on his return to Paris, he may express to those to whom it relates, that there is a disposition here to enter into the discussion on the footing proposed; and Mr. F[ordyce] may add that, should the passport which has been applied for from hence be given, he will accompany Mr. L., and might then continue the discussion with the person who is now here."

[G. MORRIS] to LORD GRENVILLE.

1796, August 10, Berlin.—“Lord Elgin tells me that he shall send a messenger this evening; I will therefore trouble your Lordship with some loose thoughts respecting this Court. You know that ever since the accession of his present Majesty there have been endless intrigues to possess him, and, through him, the power of the State. These still exist, and are pursued with unceasing attention, so that no great plan of conduct can be adopted from the fear that some untoward incident should disgust the monarch before things could be brought to issue, in which case the adviser and supporters of the plan would be overturned. It is from this very circumstance that I think it possible to obtain by the aid of Russia the complete direction of this Cabinet. To that effect it would be proper to understand perfectly with Bischopswerder and his right hand man Haugwitz; so that their greatness should be intimately combined with your interests. Furnish them money when the success of their intrigues may require it, and let them feel that it is better as well as safer to put themselves into the hands of a monarchy than of a republic. The Cabinet of Petersburg combined with you in such plan, the King will be made to understand that both his interest and his quiet require a full confidence in those Ministers. Then an efficient Cabinet will at once exist, and, after it begins to act, will feel (to its astonishment perhaps) that every great movement must be guided by your will. Observe that it is at present understood between Bischopswerder and Haugwitz that proposals not primarily addressed to the latter shall be unsuccessful. If I have a just view of the ground, it will be in vain to try (by showing only public advantage) to lead this Court into the measures you might wish, and that for the reasons already mentioned. I do not conceive it possible to do anything, if you wait for the assent of Austria, unless you have a complete direction and, indeed, dictation there. But, if I am rightly informed, this is not so much the case as it ought to be, all circumstances considered. I will not say anything on that subject, for evident reasons. Propositions from England supported by Russia will meet with a readier attention than if the voice of the Emperor should be heard. This fact your Lordship is well apprized of. I think the contents of this packet will try, if not tire, your patience, so I will proceed no farther.”

---

INDEX.

A.

Abbeville, plot at ; II., 453.
 Abbiss, —; I., 63.
 Abbots' Anne, co. Hants ; I., 53, 54, 59, 60, 76, 78.
     letter addressed to ; I., 72.
     letter dated at ; I., 107.
 Abema, Mynbeer ; II., 280, 284.
 Abendana [Hindoo] ; I., 6, 20.
 Abercorn, Lord. See Hamilton, John James.
 Abercromby or Abercrombie, General Sir Ralph ; II., 191-193, 475, 476 ; III., 142, 243.
     army of ; III., 142.
 Aberdeen, county of, representation of ; I., 568.
 Abingdon, Earl of. See Bertie, Willoughby.
 Accounts, Commissioners of ; III., 284.
 Acheen (India) ; I., 42.
 Achterbrook ; II., 605.
 Ackerman ; II., 77, 169.
 Adair :
     Richard ; II., 100, 101, 103, 114, 129, 134, 142, 144, 149, 150, 178, 181, 211.
     Serjeant ; I., 302.
     "surgeon" ; II., 103.
     — his wife (Lady Caroline) ; II., 103.
     — his son. See Adair, Richard.
 Adams, John, vice-president of the United States ; II., 157, 223.
     —, requisition by, concerning the posts ; III., 521.
     —, son-in-law of ; II., 264.
     a scrivener ; I., 26.
 Adderley, [Charles] ; I., 174.
     — dismissed from the Barrack Board ; I., 180.
 Addington :
     Dr. Anthony ; I., 376, 380.
     Henry ; I., 353, 354.
     — as Speaker of the House of Commons ; I., 564, 610 ; II., 13, 480, 486.
 Addiscombe, Kent ; I., 258.
 Addison :
     [Joseph] ; II., 9.
     Mr. ; I., 40 (2).
     —, as Governor of Madras ; I., 43, 44, 48.
     —, death of ; I., 44.
 Addlestrope, co. Gloucester ; III., 142.
 a 94090.

Adige, the river ; III., 396.
 Administration. See Government.
 Admiral, Lord High. See Herbert, Thomas, Earl of Pembroke.
 Admiralty, the ; I., 326, 555, 604 ; II., 396, 402, 407, 414, 416, 465, 609 ; III., 49. application to be made to ; III., 290.
     Board (Lord Keppel's Board) ; I., 172. charges to be borne by ; III., 375.
     complaints of ; II., 420.
     court or courts of ; I., 204 ; II., 161, 406.
     information given to ; II., 442.
     letters dated at ; II., 608 ; III., 87, 91, 328, 380.
     order of leave from ; II., 613.
     First Lord of ; III., 193. And see Spencer, Earl.
     Lords of ; II., 408 ; III., 35.
 Adriatic, the :
     corn to be bought in ; II., 573.
     fleet for ; III., 301.
 Advocate, his Majesty's ; II., 198, 233, 245 ; III., 533.
 Æneid, the, allusion to ; I., 144.
 Afflick, Mr. ; I., 22.
 Africa ; I., 182, 184 ; II., 105. coast of ; II., 104, 136, 137. corn from ; III., 127.
     Europeans in ; II., 137, 138.
     French settlements in. See French Settlements. trade with ; II., 137, 138.
 African :
     merchants ; I., 524.
     slave trade. See Slave Trade.
 Agar :
     Charles, Archbishop of Cashell (aft. Earl of Normanton) ; I., 174, 177, 178, 227, 314, 396, 400, 412, 417, 441, 443, 471, 514 ; II., 184.
     —, nephew of ; I., 400.
     Henry Wellbore, 2nd Viscount Clifden ; I., 425, 427, 435, 436, 441, 443.
     James, 1st Viscount Clifden ; I., 220, 226, 400.
     —, death of ; I., 395.
     Mr. ; I., 563.
 Aghrin, Lord ; III., 423, 424.
 Aherne, Monsieur ; II., 481.
 Ahr, the, mountains of ; III., 519.
 Aiguillon, Duc de ; II., 473.

Ainslie :

General ; II., 431, 432, 438.

Sir Robert ; II., 100, 137, 144, 173.

Airs, Henry ; I., 97.

Aix, Isle of ; II., 417.

Aix-la-Chapelle ; I., 105, 106 ; II., 118 ; III., 412.

agent to be sent to ; II., 144, 150.

King of Sweden at ; III., 450.

princes going to ; III., 477.

Albani, Cardinal ; II., 119.

Albemarle, Earl of. See Keppel, William Anne.

Albenga ; III., 124.

Alberade or Albarade, de, Ministre de la Marine ; II., 472, 486, 518, 543, 584, 586.

Albert, Duke ; III., 520, 536.

his Quartermaster General ; II., 626.

Albini, minister of the Elector of Mainz ; II., 639.

Albite, Monsieur ; II., 326.

Albret, le ; II., 589.

Alcudia, Godoi, Duc de la, Prime minister in Spain ; II., 368, 376, 386, 392, 399, 406, 555 ; III., 96.

Aldborough, Earl of. See Stratford, Edward.

Alençon ; II., 463.

Alexander ; II., 132.

the Great ; II., 7.

Mr. ; I., 311, 312 (2), 426, 437, 469, 563.

Algerine, the ; I., 273.

Algerines, truce with ; III., 526.

Alien Act ; II., 609.

warnings concerning the execution of ; III., 479.

Allodudas, camp of ; II., 586.

Allègre, Monsieur ; III., 139, 537.

Allen, Major ; I., 210 ; II., 36, 55, 67.

Allen, Bog of, Ireland ; I., 172.

Allies or Allied powers, the ; I., 28 ; II., 1, 2, 47-53, 63, 66, 73-75, 79, 81, 88, 92-94, 97, 121, 124-126, 139, 141, 150, 162, 458, 543, 582, and passim ; III., passim.

agents of ; 575.

armies of ; II., 273, 280, 300, 314, 389, 404, 454, 495, 496, 557, 582, 598, and passim ; III., passim. See also under the various countries.

—, approaching Paris. See Brunswick, Duke of, army under.

—, changes in ; II., 470.

—, command of ; II., 505, 516. And see Coburg, Prince of ; and Brunswick, Duke of.

—, disposition of ; III., 51.

—, disunion in ; II., 531, 539.

—, gloomy prospects of ; II., 326.

—, reported despair in ; II., 584.

—, reverses of ; II., 591.

conduct of, criticised ; II., 455.

debate concerning ; II., 538.

ministers of ; II., 581.

negligence and inactivity of ; III., 485.

Allies, the—cont.

supported supporters of, in Paris ; II., 540.

views of ; II., 529, 530, 568, 569.

want of concert amongst ; II., 648.

Almeida, Count de ; II., 427, 608, 609 ; III., 236, 355, 373.

Almon's "Treaties," alluded to ; I., 189.

Alopicus or Alopæus, Monsieur, Russian minister to Berlin ; II., 493 ; III., 372, 401.

Alps, the ; II., 4, 8 ; III., 132, 233, 485.

army of. See France, armies of.

patriots in ; II., 449.

Alquier, Monsieur, French representative in Holland ; III., 47, 86.

Alresford, co. Hants, French prisoners at ; 430.

Alsace or Alsatia ; II., 406, 433-435, 464, 534, 536 ; III., 516.

attachment to royalty in ; III., 83.

bakers of ; III., 82.

inspector of magazines in ; III., 82.

frontiers of ; II., 85.

threatened insurrection in ; II., 466.

winter quarters in ; II., 452.

Upper, French troops in ; III., 130.

Alsations ; II., 478.

Alstone, Mrs. ; I., 74.

Altamont, Lord. See Brown, John Denis.

Altheim ; II., 392.

Althorp, co. Northampton, letter dated at ; III., 374.

Altona, letter dated at ; III., 222.

Alvarez or Alvaro de Fonseca, Mr. ; I., 5, 6, 17, 19-21, 25.

letter to ; I., 6.

Alvensleben, Baron de, Prussian minister ; II., 70, 71, 183, 493 ; III., 163, 198, 225, 402, 439 (2).

Alvinzi, General ; III., 21-23, 29.

reported success of ; III., 281.

defeat of ; III., 297.

Amadis de Gaule, Palmerin of England ; I., 161.

Amalfi, near Naples ; II., 10.

Amar ; III., 506, 507 note.

Amard ; II., 633.

Amasenus, a river in Italy ; II., 8.

Ambassadors or ministers, English, to foreign courts ; III., 134, 555.

Also —

to Austria. See Keith, Sir R. M. and Eden, Sir Morton.

to Denmark. See Elliot, Hugh.

to France. See Sackville, Duke of Dorset ; Eden, William ; Gower, Earl, and Harris, Sir James (Lord Malmesbury).

to Holland. See Harris, Sir James ; Fitzherbert, Alleyne, Lord St. Helens, and Eden, William, Lord Auckland.

to Poland. See Hailes, David.

to Portugal. See Walpole, Robert.

Ambassadors—cont.

- to Prussia. See Ewart, Joseph; Eden, Sir Morton; Spencer, Lord Henry and Bruce, Thomas, Earl of Elgin.
- to Russia. See Whitworth, Sir Charles and Fawkener, William.
- to Saxony. See Eden, Morton.
- to Spain. See St. Helens, Lord, Jackson, F. J., and Bute, Earl of.
- to Sweden. See Hailes, David.
- to Turkey. See Sutton, Sir Robert.
- to the United States. See Hammond, George, and Bond, P.

Ambassadors or ministers, foreign, in England; II., 93, 365, 509.

Also—

- American. See Pinckney, Thomas; Jay, John; King, Rufus.
- Austrian. See Stadion and Starhemberg, Counts.
- Danish. See Wedel Jarlsberg, Count.
- French. See Luzerne, de la; Barthélemy and Chauvelin, Monsieur.
- Prussian. See Redern, Count and Jacobi, Baron.
- Russian. See Woronzow, Count.
- Spanish. See Del Campo, Marquis.
- Swedish. See Noleken, Baron.

Amburg; III., 254.

Ambresbury, letters dated from; I., 94-104.

Ameland, island of; III., 187, 190.

America; I., 180, 489, 579, 611; III., 39, 289, 312 and passim.

commercial intercourse with; II., 145, 611.

consuls in; II., 249.

consul-general of; II., 249 (2).

deputy quartermaster general in; I., 359.

discontent in; I., 275.

Dutch colonies in; III., 46, 224.

emigration to; I., 191.

exports and imports of; II., 488, 489.

French agents in; II., 580.

— fleet from; II., 590.

King's colonies or British plantations in, convicts sent to; I., 543-551.

—, governors of; I., 543, 551.

the late transactions in; II., 651.

loans or debt of; I., 264, 275.

orders in Council concerning, alluded to; II., 512.

orders sent to, by the King of Spain; II., 74.

ships from; II., 474.

Spanish settlements in; I., 611; II., 399; III., 258, 266.

—, ports of; II., 99; III., 287.

supply of corn from; III., 59.

the status quo in; III., 224.

trade of or with; I., 190, 195, 200, 221, 256, 299, 604; II., 37.

travellers to; II., 160, 408; III., 489.

troops in; I., 184.

war of Independence in; I., 249, 253, 506, 559; II., 348; III., 472, 522, 522. And see American Colonies.

America, North; I., 166; II., 573.

—, British territory in; II., 252.

—, blunder as regards the boundaries of; II., 254.

—, fur trade in; II., 611.

—, lake of the woods in; II., 254.

—, letters from, arrive in France; II., 580.

—, Robespierre wishes to fly to; II., 549.

—, North west coast of; I., 611; III., 380.

trade to; II., 12, 20, 22, 42 (2).

America, United States of; I., 542, 543; II., 561; III., 39.

Acts passed in; III., 521-523, 528.

advantage to, of friendship with England; III., 87, 89.

and France; II., 527; III., 524-526.

arms purchased by the French in; III., 524.

British army in; III., 523.

—, Commanders-in-Chief of; III., 523.

British subjects in, claims of; I., 514; II., 289 (3); III., 521-523, 526, 530.

citizens of; III., 523, 524, 526, 527.

commissioners from, to Spain; II., 254.

Congress of; I., 264, 276; II., 157, 158, 197, 229, 526, 527, 580; III., 472.

—, measures of; III., 360, 521-523.

—, proclamation by; III., 521.

Constitution of; III., 523.

consuls in; III., 535.

corn and provisions from, driven by the English from French ports; III., 526.

Courts of law and equity in; III., 521, 522.

designs of England against; II., 537.

districts of, under the King's arms; III., 521.

English officers and agents in; III., 528.

finances of; II., 228.

flourishing condition of; II., 228.

French interests or party in; II., 145, 157.

friendly feeling towards, in England; II., 158.

government, ministry or administration of; II., 158, 160, 197 (2), 223; III., 243, 244, 360, 361, 523-529.

—, statements by; III., 523, 526.

hostility to England in; II., 145, 146, 157, 158; III., 87, 526, 527.

House of Representatives in; III., 526.

—, committee of; III., 527.

—, members of; III., 526, 527.

Indian territory in; III., 530.

Legation from, in England, secretary of. See Smith, Colonel William Stephen.

minister from, to England; II., 197, 223 And see Pinckney, Thomas; Jay, John; King, Rufus.

America, United States of—cont.

- minister from, to France; II., 543; III., 289. And see Morris, Robert.
- , at the Hague; II., 283; III., 423.
- minister to be sent to; II., 80, 158, 173, 197, 228; III., 39.
- ministers to, See Hammond, George, and Bond, P.
- navy of; II., 527; III., 528.
- need of money by; II., 527.
- negotiations of, with Spain; II., 527.
- neutrality of; III., 524.
- , violation of; III., 524–528.
- peace with [1782]; I., 170, 359.
- ports of, the French allowed to equip vessels in; III., 524, 525, 528.
- , privateers in; III., 524, 525.
- President of. See Washington, George.
- prospect of war between England and; II., 580; III., 13.
- rising population and increasing trade of; II., 157.
- Secretary of finance in; II., 228.
- Secretaries of State. See Jefferson, Thomas; Hamilton, Alexander; and Randolph, Edmund.
- Secretary at war. See Knox, General.
- senate of, member of, expelled; III., 360.
- , secretary of; II., 254.
- senators of; II., 229.
- states of; I., 275.
- , governors of, recommendations from congress to; III., 521.
- , laws of; III., 523.
- , legislatures of; III., 521.
- , the southern; II., 157.
- tea duty in; I., 231.
- trade with; II., 157, 158; III., 136, 157, 526. And see America, trade with, above.
- , committee of merchants engaged in. See American merchants.
- treaties or negotiations with; I., 219, 548; II., 614; III., 34, 69, 89, 148, 243, 244, 256, 517, 523, 529, 535.
- , commissioners for; III., 104.
- , précis of correspondence relating to alleged breaches of; III., 520–528.
- vice-president of. See Adams, John.
- view taken in, of the French Revolution; II., 223.
- wheat cheap in; II., 329.

American :

- agents; II., 554, 578.
- army; III., 528.
- colonies, reasons for the loss of; I., 504, 507.
- , want of dependence of, upon the mother country; I., 504.
- Indians, the English accused of inciting against the United States; III., 525–529.
- letter written by; II., 348.

American—cont.

- merchants; II., 607 (2), 608.
- , committee of; II., 607, 608.
- , chairman of; II., 607.
- papers; III., 361.
- passports; I., 195, 200; III., 105.
- seamen; II., 369.
- , impressment of; II., 610, 611; III., 244.
- , seized by British vessels; III., 525.
- ships; II., 105, 263, 611, 638; III., 93.
- , captured or plundered by the English; III., 244, 525–527, 533.
- , entered at the Customs House; I., 193.
- , prisoners taken on; II., 414, 416.
- Americans, persons professing to be; III., 106.
- Amersfort, in North Holland; III., 411.
- Amherst :
  - Sir Jeffrey, Lord Amherst, Commander-in-Chief; II., 373, 395, 402, 418 (2), 427, 428, 436, 437, 441, 446, 450, 453, 465, 469, 475, 483–485, 490, 613, 614, 644, 646.
  - letter from; II., 428.
- Amiens; II., 305.
  - Armée révolutionnaire* at; II., 497.
  - merchant of; III., 65.
- Amoy, in India :
  - letters dated from; I., 3 (3).
  - letter addressed to; I., 4.
- Amsterdam; I., 8, 264, 285, 590, 595; II., 24, 31, 92, 144, 284, 287, 360, 652; III., 21–23, 177, 210, 211, 251, 252, 445.
  - agioteurs* at; II., 161.
  - burgomaster at; II., 24, 71.
  - change of government in; III., 410.
  - commercial houses at; II., 20, 283.
  - correspondent at; III., 237.
  - discontent at; III., 46, 203.
  - English merchants at; III., 46.
  - express to; II., 357.
  - financiers of; II., 565.
  - fire at; II., 137.
  - French stock jobbers at; II., 112.
  - friends of the House of Orange at; III., 46, 409.
  - frondeurs at; II., 32.
  - general in command at; III., 23.
  - inhabitants of, or Amsterdammers; III., 203.
  - , good disposition of; III., 217.
  - leading party in; II., 270.
  - letters dated at; II., 25, 152, 293, 343.
  - Maison de Ville at; III., 42.
  - majistrat* at; III., 23.
  - merchants of; II., 325; III., 205.
  - navigation of; III., 190.
  - new municipality of; III., 43, 54.
  - objects to the restoration of the Stadtholder; III., 426–428.
  - offer of a loan from; II., 381.
  - opposition to the new government at; III., 54, 171.

Amsterdam—cont.

- parties at; II., 252.
- patriots at; II., 186, 280, 334; III., 42.
- port of, lack of shipping in; III., 56.
- regent or regency of; II., 138, 150.
- rejoicings in, over the new régime;
III., 42.
- representatives of; III., 177.
- resistance of; 431, 435.
- expected surrender or settlement of;
III., 434, 437, 439 (2).
- travellers to and from; II., 24; III., 60, 210, 217, 351, 352.
- troops for; II., 374.
- tumults at; III., 211.
- Amyard or Amyon, Mr.; I., 119, 120.
- Anacreon, odes of, alluded to; I., 159.
- Ancrem, Lord, regiment of; III., 388.
- Andamans, the; I., 590, 591, 604.
- Andermach (Andermack); III., 519.
- Anderson, Mr.; I., 295.
- Andover, co. Hants.; I., 41, 72, 111.
- André, Sieur de; II., 356, 514; III., 216.
- Angers, in Brittany; II., 527, 563, 577;
III., 15.
- convention of; II., 530.
- reported sacking of, by the royalists;
II., 573.
- Andrews, Mr.; I., 133, 230.
- Angel, Mr.; I., 275.
- Anglas, Boissy de; III., 59.
- character of; III., 86.
- Angle, Marquise de l'; III., 65.
- Anglesea; I., 269.
- Anglesey, Earl of (in 1721), see Annesley, Arthur.
- Angoulême, Louis, Duc de [son of the Comte d'Artois]; III., 129, 135.
- Anjou, province of, Chouans in; III., 115.
- Annaly, Lord, see Gore, John.
- Anne, Queen; I., 13, 26-28, 30, 32-34, 37, 39, 41, 364, 365, 546.
- Act of, alluded to; III., 142.
- Court of; I., 33.
- Lord High Treasurer of. See Godol-phin.
- Master of the Ceremonies to. See Cotterell, Sir Charles.
- Annesley:
Arthur, 5th Earl of Anglesey, letter
from; I., 67.
- Arthur, Viscount Valentia; I., 299, 564.
- as Earl Mountnorris; III., 314.
- Francis; I., 78.
- , answers by; I., 78.
- , letters from; I., 86-90.
- , letters to; I., 85-90.
- Francis Charles, 2nd Viscount Glerawley; I., 468, 481.
- Mr. (his brother); I., 431.
- Anspach, Margrave of, marries Lady Craven; II., 241, 242.
- Margraviate of; III., 227.
- Anstruther:
Captain; III., 243, 253.
- , father of; III., 243.
- Mr.; III., 90.
- Antibes, the; III., 84.
- Antigua; I., 593; II., 490.
- Admiralty Court in; III., 69.
- Antony, a spy; III., 250.
- Antraigues, Mons. de. See Entraignes.
- Antrim:
Earl (and, in 1789, Marquis) of. See
McDonnell, Randal William.
- Antrim, county; I., 166; II., 21.
- assizes of; III., 387.
- militia of; III., 387.
- Antwerp or Anvers; II., 333, 378, 379, 387, 389-392, 415.
- loan for the English princes at; II., 25.
- retreat of the British army to; II., 598, 602.
- Apelles, allusion to; I., 142.
- Appenines, the; II., 4, 8.
- Appleby, Westmoreland, M.P. for; I., 16.
- Apsley, —; I., 250, 264, 266, 267 (2), 277, 287.
- Aranda, Comte de; II., 262, 275, 297, 368, 369.
- Aranjo, Mons. de; II., 357; III., 355, 358, 359.
- character of; III., 355.
- as minister from Portugal to the Hague; III., 74.
- as minister at Paris; III., 280, 282, 283.
- Aranjuez, in Spain; II., 257; III., 73.
- letters dated at; II., 65, 74, 86, 98,
268, 386.
- secretary of the Embassy at; II., 99.
- Arbuthnot, Mr.; III., 290.
- Archipelago, the; II., 39, 62, 581.
- Russian fleet to; II., 45.
- [Arcot] Nabob of; I., 243, 281; II., 297
(2), 298.
- rupees; II., 185.
- Arden:
Lord. See Perceval, Charles George.
Richard Pepper; I., 318, 359.
- Arden, forest of; I., 594.
- Ardennes, army of; II., 547, 584.
- Aremberg, Prince Augustus of, see La Marck, Comte de; III., 128.
- Areopagus, the, allusion to; I., 140.
- Argyll, Duke of. See Campbell, John.
- Aricia in Italy; II., 8.
- Ariosto, allusion to; II., 119.
- Arlon, the French Princes at; III., 477.
- Armagh:
Duke of; I., 420.
- Archbishop of, Primate of Ireland.
See Stone, George.
- Armagh, county; I., 486, 487.
- militia of; III., 389.
- sheriff of. See Sparrow, Colonel.
- Armenian merchants; I., 1.
- Armfeldt, General; II., 87.
- letter from; II., 87.
- Army, the, forces or troops; passim.
Adjutant General; II., 491.
- Brigadier General; II., 188.

Army, the—cont.

clothing department of; III., 168.
 Commander-in-Chief of, see Amherst,
 Lord.

commissariat of, commissions in;
 III., 285.

Commissary of musters in; I., 602.

—, assistant in; III., 286.

commissions or promotions in; I.,
 328, 337, 512 (2); II., 26, 28, 441,
 446, 450, 465, 482-485.

—, cancelling of; II., 340.

corps for Canada; II., 185.

fear of revolt in; III., 324.

foreigners in; III., 423, 424.

general officers of; III., 6.

in America; I., 184.

in the Carnatic; I., 602.

in Catalonia; I., 28.

in Flanders. See Flanders.

in Holland. See Holland.

in Ireland. See Ireland.

in Portugal. See Portugal.

Irish establishment of; I., 250. And see Ireland, army in.

jobbery in; I., 441, 442.

Major Generals; II., 483, 484.

martinetism in; II., 349.

money wanted for; I., 564.

musters in; I., 602.

officers, appointment of; I., 335, 336, 345.

—, staff, appointment of; I., 345.

paymaster-general of; III., 286. And see Grenville, W. W.

—, Office of; I., 250.

raising or recruiting of; I., 585; III., 25.

sickness in; I., 602.

Surveyor General; II., 209.

transport department of; III., 168.

victualling department of; III., 168.

Army, the, regiments or battalions of,
 named:—

Artillery; I., 525, 526.

—, Irish; I., 335.

—, Royal; I., 335; II., 502.

—, officers in; II., 424.

—, and Engineer Corps, proposed union of; I., 350.

Engineers; I., 525.

Guards, the; I., 36, 64, 90, 452, 453;
 II., 214, 465, 474.

—, commissions in; II., 120, 165,
 647.

—, disaffection in; II., 349.

—, exchange from; II., 480, 482.

—, go to Holland; II., 380, 384.

—, not allowed to go to the West Indies; III., 102.

—, officers in; I., 235, 291.

—, —, resignation of; II., 490, 501.

—, 1st regiment of; II., 349.

—, the Coldstream; II., 349.

—, —, mentioned as the Duke of York's regiment; III., 454.

Army, the, regiments or battalions—cont.

Guards, 3rd regiment of; II., 340, 349,
 423; III., 243.

Dragoon Guards:

—, 2nd or Queen's; I., 438; II., 390.

—, 3rd; I., 438.

—, 4th; I., 438.

—, 5th; I., 438; II., 36.

—, 6th; I., 341.

—, 7th; I., 438.

Life Guards, Duke of Ormond's troop of; I., 41.

Dragoons; I., 455.

—, 7th; I., 483.

—, 8th; I., 438.

—, 17th; I., 235.

—, 18th; I., 446.

Scotch Brigade; III., 102.

Scots Greys, officers of; II., 328.

Seaforths; II., 423.

Regiments:

9th; I., 288.

12th; II., 42, 101, 186.

13th; I., 473, 486.

14th; II., 446.

18th; I., 347.

19th; II., 423, 446.

20th; I., 465.

21st; I., 347, 465.

24th; I., 465; II., 402.

27th; I., 347, 465, 512; II., 423,
 446.

28th; II., 423.

29th; II., 208, 424.

31st; II., 634.

34th; II., 634.

35th; II., 446.

36th; I., 602.

42nd; II., 423, 446.

46th; II., 15-17.

54th; II., 446.

56th; I., 486.

57th; II., 423, 446.

58th; I., 457, 461, 473; II., 16,
 17.

59th; II., 423.

61st; II., 16.

62nd; II., 423.

63rd; II., 423.

64th; I., 486; II., 186.

69th; I., 348.

79th; II., 634.

85th; III., 136.

Arnheim, in Guelderland; II., 640; III., 23, 24, 203.

Arnold, Captain; I., 37, 40.

Arow, Switzerland, meeting of the Diet
 at; II., 312.

Arpean, Colonel; III., 168.

Arran, Earl of. See Gore, Arthur Saunders.

Arras; III., 219, 357.

Bishop of; II., 393.

Artez, Mons. de; III., 1, 18, 25, 181, 213.
 letter from; III., 19.

Artigoëte, or Artigoyte, de, Commissary; II., 557, 583, 586.

- Artois, Charles Philippe, Comte de, aft. Monsieur (and, in 1824, Charles X.); II., 85, 97, 118, 122, 170, 173, 174, 182, 192, 194, 358, 393, 473, 508, 530, 562, 563, 567, 622; III., 77, 109, 111, 113, 124, 168, 216, 367, 451, 487.
 advisers of; III., 96.
 brothers of. See France, Louis XVI. king of, and Provence, Comte de.
 children of; II., 563.
 creditors of; II., 508.
 eldest son of. See Angoulême, Duc de.
 suite, attendants or household of; II., 393, 616; III., 476.
 arrives at Harwich; II., 394 (2). proposed visit of, to England; II., 609, 616.
 not wished for as Regent; II., 617.
 visit of, to England; III., 89, 95-104, 129.
 Baron de Nantiat sent to France by; III., 105.
 health of, drunk; III., 121.
 expedition of, to France; III., 135, 138, 140, 303. protection needed for, against his debts; III., 142.
 has not a farthing; III., 368.
 at Brussels; III., 451.
 with the King of Prussia; III., 470.
 Artois; II., 452, 471.
 Arts and Commerce, Society for encouragement of, secretary for; I., 142.
 Arundel;
   Henry, 8th Lord Arundel of Wardour; II., 637.
   Thomas, 4th Lord Arundel of Wardour; I., 32, 41.
 Ascension (Assention), Island of; I., 45.
 Ashburton, Lord. See Dunning, John.
 Ashburton, co. Devon; I., 116.
 Asia, the status quo in; III., 224.
   trade with; III., 137.
 Asiatic powers, the; III., 74.
 Aspasia, allusion to; I., 142.
 Asperen, in Holland; III., 6.
 Astle;
   E.; III., 285.
   —; I., 272.
 Aston;
   Captain Harvey; II., 465.
   Mrs.; III., 49.
 Aston Rowant, co. Oxford, living of; III., 103.
 Ath; II., 474.
   Austrian magazines at; II., 559.
   French army at; II., 391.
 Athole, Duke of. See Murray, John.
 Athole House, letters dated at; I., 497; III., 419.
 Attila, camp of; III., 477.
 Attorney General; I., 359, 505, 541.
   And see Macdonald, Sir Archibald, and Scott, Sir John.
 Attornies, tax on; I., 201.
 Aubépy, Mons. le; III., 482.
 Aubert-Duboyet, character of; III., 161.
 Aubrey, John, or Sir John; I., 250, 264, 265, 268, 269, 271, 275, 351, 356, 363, 423, 561.
 Auckland, Lord. See Eden, William.
 Audibert, Mr.; II., 316.
 Augsburg, traveller to; II., 118.
 Augusta, Princess, second daughter of George III.; II., 232, 233.
 Augustus Frederick, Prince, Duke of Sussex; II., 504.
   morganatic marriage of; II., 477.
   baptism of his child; II., 504. wife of. See Murray, Augusta.
 Aunungzebe, sons of; I., 42, 45.
 Aust, George; II., 101, 200, 253 (2), 305, 314, 403, 432, 456, 481, 502, 604; III., 72, 159, 461.
   letters from; II., 305, 310.
   letters to; II., 305; III., 473.
   instructions to; III., 461.
 Austin, Dr.; I., 477-480, 494, 553.
 Austria; I., 613; II. and III., passim. and the Netherlands; III., 28, 30, 514-516. And see Netherlands, the Austrian.
   and Prussia. See Prussia.
 Archduke of; I., 266, 267 (2). And see Spain, Charles, titular King of, and Charles, Archduke.
 the young archdukes of; III., 324.
 Archduchess of; II., 114.
 army or troops of; II. and III., passim.
   —, commander-in-chief of; III., 514, 515.
   —, commissary-general of; II., 641.
   —, council of war of; III., 517.
   —, defeat or retreat of; II., 287, 333, 338, 592, 615; III., 50, 514, 517, 519.
   —, generals or commanders of; II., 599, 603, 617, 631, 648; III., 91, 125, 130-133.
   —, head-quarters of; II., 559, 594, 601, 606.
   —, hussars in; III., 475, 476.
   —, in Italy. See Italy.
   —, magazines for; III., 476.
   —, officers in; II., 451, 566, 594.
   —, pillage by; III., 477.
   —, quarter-master of; II., 617.
   —, strength of; III., 45.
   —, victories or successes of; II., 383; III., 139, 145, 150, 152, 157, 159, 171, 177, 218, 252-255, 258, 272.
   —, expected approach of, to Paris; II., 567-569, 575, 576.
   —, intrigues and want of military talent in; II., 614.
   —, Mr. Pelham with; III., 206.
   —, recalled from the Rhine; III., 213.
   —, proposal to send, to Spain; III., 287.

Austria--cont.

- army of, affection for the Emperor in; III., 314.
- , disorganization of; III., 319.
- , patience and discipline of; III., 476.
- , want of support to; III., 518, 520.
- Court, cabinet or government of (of Vienna, of the Emperor); II. and III., passim.
- , ambassadors or ministers of, to foreign courts; II., 49, 78, 93, 102, 111, 180, 251, 283, 317 (2), 449, 493; III., 32. And see under the several countries.
- , —, to England. See Stadion and Starhemberg, Counts.
- , ambassadors or ministers to:
  - , —, from England. See Keith, Sir Robert Murray; and Eden, Sir Morton.
  - , —, from Russia. See Razoumoukoi, Count.
- , and Holland; III., 153-157, 171, 173, 182, 184, 190, 209, 210. And see Holland.
- , compensation for; III., 516.
- , convention of, with England; III., 148, 206, 260 (2), 272-278, 280.
- , —, projet for; III., 273, 274.
- , danger of alienating; III., 29.
- , despatches, couriers, &c. to and from; II., 125, 280, 287, 471; III., 45, 46, 259, 260, 262, 267-272, 275, 277, 280, 283, 297-300, 307 (2), 317, 322, 323, 326, 328, 331, 333, 334, 381, 395, 411.
- , firmness or good sense of; II., 426; III., 309.
- , inactivity or indifference of; II., 619, 624, 628; III., 67, 92 (2), 125-128, 130, 131, 134-137, 264, 634.
- , intentions, views or opinions of; III., 19, 232, 260, 266, 267, 274, 276, 280, 283, 294, 327, 562, 563.
- , makes war ill and peace worse; III., 213.
- , matters to be laid before; III., 33, 45, 97, 186.
- , ministers or ministry of; II., 628; III., 165, 308, 317, 320, 322, 395.
- , —, of foreign affairs; II., 130, 163.
- , negotiations with; II. and III., passim.
- , negotiations and treaty of, with France; III., 190, 214 (2), 224, 283, 296, 312-327, 331-333, 346, 349, 356, 360, 395 (2), 396, 406, 474, 532. And see Loeben and Udine, treaties of.
- , —, service of, persons in; III., 44.

Austria—cont.

- Court of, subsidy, loan or aid to; II., 604, 614, 619, 625-631, 634-637, 648, 650; III., 515.
- , —, terms of, agreed upon; III., 70.
- , —, dispatched to the Elbe; III., 89.
- , —, a fresh, proposed; III., 192, 214, 215, 267-275, 280, 281, 297, 299, 300, 308, 369.
- Emperor of. See Emperor, the.
- England and Russia, triple alliance of; III., 76.
- finances of; II., 516, 614, 618.
- hereditary states of; II., 631.
- House of; II., 498, 530.
- , danger to; III., 396.
- , aversion of the Paris mob to; III., 480.
- , Prince of; II., 174.
- , provinces of, in the Netherlands I., 612.
- nobility of; II., 525; III., 68.
- , jealous of Thugut; II., 628.
- people of, disposed to peace; II., 614.
- places to be ceded to; II., 620.
- plenipotentiaries of; II., 106, 156.
- proposed cession of Bavaria to. See Bavaria.
- to cede her conquests to Turkey; II., 48, 49.
- Holland in the grasp of; II., 168.
- invitation from, to Holland; II., 274.
- expense of the war to; II., 434.
- money from; II., 495, 497.
- expected to attack Genoa; II., 576.
- minute of points to be represented to; II., 599.
- does not mean to abandon the war; II., 627.
- Kosciusko said to have declared war against; II., 631.
- hatred of, by Prussia; III., 28.
- breach of the truce by; III., 213.
- feared secession of; III., 214, 215, 315.
- suggested re-arrangement of the territories of; III., 224, 227-230.
- danger from, to Germany; III., 227.
- the Pope desires to connect himself with; III., 287.
- military difficulties of; III., 310.
- constant friendship of England towards; III., 321.
- threatened bankruptcy of; III., 320.
- desires to remain friendly with England; III., 326, 331.
- honour of, loss of; III., 331, 332.
- exhausted state of; III., 396.
- and the negotiations between France and England. See Emperor, the.
- Austrian:
  - escamotage*; II., 94.
  - garrison, fall of; II., 532.
  - morgue*; II., 72.
  - Netherlands. See Netherlands, Austrian.

Austrian—cont.

politics; II., 65, 68, 131, 146 post office; II., 292. proclamation; II., 359.
 spies; II., 557.
 territories; III., 448, 450.

Austrians, the:

at Liege. See Liege. ill-conduct of; II., 626.
 in Italy. See Italy.
 jealous of Prussia; II., 536.
 misunderstanding with; II., 605.
 shameful behaviour of, to the troops;
 II., 559.

Austrasia, "petty king of"; II., 46.

Autun, Bishop of. See Talleyrand.

Auvergne, Captain de; II., 419.

Auvergne, avocat from; III., 433.

Auxur, Italy. See Terracina.

Avignon:

brigands of; III., 497. massacre at; III., 497. prison of; II., 584.

Avranches; II., 581; III., 166.

Axminster, letter dated at; I., 263.

Aylesbury, co. Bucks; I., 262, 266, 272,

294; II., 251, 352; III., 147.

election; I., 413, 416, 417, 465.

— meeting at; II., 128.

prebend of, in Lincoln Cathedral; I., 285–287.

quarter sessions at; II., 128.

vicarage of; II., 11.

yeomanry troop of; III., 147.

Aylesford, Earl of. See Finch, Heneage.

Aylmer, Henry, Lord; I., 190, 196.

wife and children of; I., 190.

Ayscough, Rev. Dr. F.; I., 115, 117, 122, 130 (2).

letters from; I., 121, 122.

letters to; I., 108–121, 126–135.

memoranda by; I., 108, 117, 118, 121, 134, 135.

Azem, the Vizir; I., 20.

B.*B:

Abbé; III., 292.

Duke of; I., 527, 530.

Sir R.; I., 55.

Backhouse, Lieutenant; I., 355.

Badcock:

Captain; II., 271, 345.

Colonel; II., 328.

Lieut.-Col.; II., 501.

Baddison, —; I., 302; II., 420.

Baden:

Margrave of; II., 431.

—, troops of; II., 431, 507.

visitors to; II., 313.

Badminton, co. Gloucester; II., 300.

Bagott, —; I., 314, 335.

Bahader Shah. See Mogul, the Great.

Baire, in Italy; II., 9.

castle of and Julius Cæsar's villa at;
 II., 19.

Bailli, former mayor of Paris, execution of; II., 466.

Bailly, Mons. de (exile); II., 358.

Baker, Dr.; I., 366, 398.

Balan, Monsieur; III., 148, 149, 373, 375, 407.

Balbi, Madame de; II., 357, 475.

Balcarres, Earl of. See Lindsay, James.

Baldwin, Baldwin:

Mr., consul at Cairo; II., 263, 373.

— (India); II., 621.

—; II., 456, 509, 510.

—, —, family of; II., 456.

Ball, —; I., 513.

Ballendean, Lord. See Bellenden.

Ballinahinch; III., 387.

Ballinakill, borough of; I., 571.

Ballinrobe, review at; I., 481.

Ballyfinn, Queen's county, letter dated at; I., 241.

Ballyraggett, estate of; I., 349.

Balthazer, General; II., 410.

Baltic Sea, the; I., 596, 612; II. 39, 45,
 48, 58, 74, 227; III., 128.

action in; I., 490.

commerce of; III., 57.

fleet for or in; I., 76; II., 68, 95, 144.

Baltic powers, the; II., 44.

—, negotiation of France with; II., 578.

produce; II., 287.

vessels; II., 62.

war, possibility of; II., 26.

Baltimore, Lord. See Calvert.

Baltimore, U.S.A.:

French consul at; III., 525.

port of, French ship fitted out at;
 III., 525.

Banbury, co. Oxford, wool-combers of;
 I., 271.

Bangalore; II., 226.

Bangor, Bishop of. See Warren, John.

Bank of England; I., 28, 128, 498; II., 552.

call by; I., 53, 54.

Directors of; I., 563, 564.

Governor of (Mr. Ewer); I., 172.

in difficulties; III., 280.

money to be furnished by; III., 382, 383.

the Pitt diamond to be deposited in;
 I., 36 (2).

Banks, Bankes:

Sir Joseph, called his Majesty's "Ministre des affaires philosophiques"; II., 225 (2).

—; I., 218, 484.

Bantam, king of; I., 3.

Baptiste; III., 181, 223.

Baranines, Madame; III., 226.

- Barataria, Governor of; I., 148.
 Barbadoes; I., 189, 593; II., 402.
   Admiralty Court at; III., 69.
   affray in; III., 165.
   Governor of; III., 166.
   ship bound for; III., 525.
 Barbuda, island of; I., 567.
 Barca, deserts of; III., 475.
 Barcelona; II., 580.
   merchants of; III., 127.
   suggested landing of troops at; III., 287.
 Barcelonette, country of; II., 429.
 Barenth, Margraviate of; III., 227.
 Baring, Francis (of the East India Company); I., 257 (2), 258 (2), 497, 510; II., 185, 289, 323.
   letters of; I., 497; II., 185.
 Barnave, Monsieur; I., 609; II., 132, 144, 150.
 Barnet (Bernet), co. Herts; I., 36.
 Barnewall, Thomas, Lord Trimlestown; I., 482.
 Barnstable, co. Devon; I., 355.
 Barras, Paul François (Peter); II., 481; III., 85, 339, 356, 358.
   character of; III., 159.
   mistress of; III., 351.
 Barrère; II., 459, 471, 514, 517, 518, 538, 542, 548, 550, 560, 561, 567, 570, 580, 582, 584, 586, 590; III., 491.
   proposes the expulsion of strangers; III., 483.
   character of; III., 493.
   fall of; II., 632; III., 531.
 Barret, Mr.; I., 108.
 Barrington:
   Admiral [Samuel]; III., 296.
   Hon. Shute, Bishop of Salisbury; I., 293.
   William Wildman, Lord, money due to; III., 461.
 Barrow, Mr.; I., 118.
 Barrow, the, a river in Ireland; I., 231.
 Barry, James, 4th Earl of Barrymore; I., 62.
   letters from; I., 62, 65.
 Barrymore:
   Earl of. See Barry.
   Lady; I., 50.
 Barthélemy or Barthélemy, Marquis de, French ambassador in London; I., 353; II., 206, 243, 457, 458, 568, 584, 587, 588; III., 7, 149, 181, 186, 339, 409, 414. farewell audience to; II., 313.
   letter from; III., 340.
   les deux; II., 461.
 Barthelot, huissier of the Convention; II., 461.
 Bartholomew Fair; I., 22.
 Bartmansemmer, Mr.; I., 50.
 Bas-Breton dialect, manifesto translated into; III., 104.
 Baseam —; I., 51.
 Bascher:
   Monsieur; III., 108, 112.
 Bascher—cont.
   Madame, his mother; III., 108, 119.
   —, daughter of; III., 108.
 Basilico; II., 272, 553.
 Basle or Bâle; II., 572, 616; III., 7, 48, 51, 81, 82, 130, 132, 257, 295. financial transactions at; III., 489.
   maison de commerce at; II., 554. mission to; III., 214.
   negotiations at; III., 26, 58.
   ramparts of; III., 130.
   territory of; III., 130. treaty of, between France and Prussia; III., 78, 94, 139.
 Basseleur, Monsieur; III., 207.
 Basset, a messenger; III., 326.
 Bastard or Bestard, —; I., 60, 61.
 Bastia; II., 524. convention at; II., 517.
   surrender of; II., 560.
 Bataves, regiment of; III., 212.
 Batavia; I., 22, 45, 281. arsenals of; III., 421.
   letters dated from; I., 3, 28.
 Batavian:
   convention; III., 184.
   republic; III., 177, 347. And see Holland, new government of.
   —, reported acknowledgment of, by Prussia. See Prussia, King of. liberty, the price of; III., 222.
 Bath:
   Earl of. See Thynne, Thomas.
   Bishopric of; II., 105.
 Bath, Colonel; II., 331, 332.
   —; II., 551.
 Bath, order of, or "the red ribbon"; I., 199, 277; II., 143, 191, 193, 199, 210, 223, 233, 425; III., 369.
   —, insignia of; III., 375.
 Bath, or the Bath; 158, 289.
   letters dated at; I., 49, 65, 92, 156 (2), 259 (2), 260, 482, 485-490; II., 203, 253 (2), 312, 359; III., 296, 466, 529.
   letters addressed to; I., 71, 74-76, 92.
   visitors to; I., 13, 25, 39, 41, 65, 68, 142, 174, 311, 470, 476, 477 (2), 481, 483, 496; II., 11, 77.
 Bathurst:
   Allan, 1st Earl; I., 98; III., 259.
   Frances, Lady, widow of Sir Benjamin; I., 34.
   Henry, 3rd Earl; III., 400.
   —, moves the address in the Lords; III., 259.
   —, grandfather of. See Allan, 1st Earl, above.
 Batz, Baron de; II., 588, 589.
   father of; II., 589.
 Baugh, General; I., 189.
 Bavaria, II., 46, 208, 399; III., 516.
   Elector of; II., 434; III., 139, 173, 224, 228, 229.
   Electorate of; II., 525.
   forces of; II., 408.

Bavaria—cont.

- suggested cession of, to the Emperor; III., 173, 224, 229, 230, 232, 288, 407.
- Bavay, letter dated at; II., 469.
- Bayard, —; III., 95, 179.
- Bayham, Lord. See Pratt, John Jeffreys.
- Bayley-Paget, Henry, Earl of Uxbridge. See Paget.
- Bayonne; II., 154.
army of; II., 586.
- Bazire; II., 462, 471, 488; III., 493, 496, 500.
- Beacon Hill (co. Wilts?); I., 102.
- Beaconsfield (Beconsfield), letters dated at; II., 450; III., 463.
- Beauchamp, Viscount. See Seymour-Conway, Francis.
- Beaulerc [George]; I., 149.
- Beaufort, Duke of. See Somerset, Henry.
- Beaulieu, General; II., 287, 424, 426, 536.
- Beaumarchais; II., 346, 358.
- Beauprean or Beaupreaux; II., 544, 545. battle field of; II., 527.
- Beauvan, Prince de; I., 151.
- Beckenham, Kent, letters dated from; II., 198, 199, 206, 208, 210, 216, 218, 223, 225, 227, 233, 235, 241–243, 247 (2), 250, 252, 256, 258, 261, 400, 401 (2), 403, 404, 407, 414, 419, 425, 445, 454, 468, 469, 479, 490, 492, 496, 497, 557, 578, 591.
Lord Auckland's house at; II., 295.
parish church of; II., 218.
- Becket, Mr.; I., 160.
- Becklesworth; I., 106.
- Beetive, Earl of. See Taylor, Thomas.
- Bedford, Dukes of. See Russell.
- Bedfords, the, or the Bedford party; I., 207.
join the Coalition; I., 221.
- Bedwyn, Great, co. Wilts; I., 108.
- Beer, Mons. de. See Bere.
- Beer: duty on; I., 251.
import and export of; II., 22, 27, 30, 34.
- Béjary, Mons. de; III., 114, 115.
- Belasyse, Henry, Earl of Fauconberg; I., 536.
- Belfast:
elections at; III., 557.
ship destroyed at; III., 385.
sovereign and burgesses of; III., 557.
United Irishmen at; III., 387.
- Belfort, in Alsace; II., 614; III., 133.
- Belgian clergy, agents of; III., 263, 264.
- Belgians, the; II., 174; III., 263, 264.
- Belgie provinces; II., 85, 591.
- Belgium; I., 594; III., 139, 140, 279, 490, 515.
- Bell, William; I., 535.
- Bellamont, Earl of. See Coote, Charles.
- Bellegarde, General; III., 95, 131, 132.
army of; II., 611.
- Belleisle; II., 464, 468.
- Bellenden or Ballendean, John, Lord
Bellenden; I., 590, 592, 603.

- Belleville, in Brittany; II., 576; III., 107, 123.
- Belle-vue, Mons. de; III., 122.
- Belmont, Ireland, letter dated from; I., 313.
- Belmore, Lord. See Corry, Armar Lowry.
- Belt, the; II., 68.
- Belvoir [Castle], co. Leicester, Duke of Rutland's body taken to; I., 292.
- Bénard, one; II., 590.
- Bender, General; I., 279.
- Bender, on the Dniester; II., 162, 169.
- Benezek; III., 160.
character of; III., 161.
- Bengal; I., 243 (2), 257, 281, 263, 464, 557 (2); II., 185.
Bay of; I., 30. establishment; II., 298.
Government of; I., 605.
judgeship in; I., 494.
manufactures or trade of; II., 168; III., 446.
ships to or from; I., 38, 39, 276.
travellers to or from; I., 42, 253, 588.
- Bennet:
Dr.; I., 571.
Judge; I., 290.
- Benson, Mr.; I., 82.
son of; I., 82.
- Bentheim, Madame de; I., 147, 149.
- Bentinck:
Charles or Count Charles, English agent to Holland; III., 56, 68, 415, 416.
—, letters from; III., 4, 11, 16, 19, 39, 52, 60, 78, 150–152, 155, 164, 170, 176, 180, 182, 183, 186, 194, 196, 201, 203, 207, 208, 217, 236, 245, 250, 252, 253, 417.
—, letters to; III., 9, 19, 58, 189, 226, 424.
—, memorandum for; III., 19.
—, speech translated by; III., 46, 48.
—, eldest brother of. See Rhoon, Count.
—, younger brother of; III., 39, 157, 159, 172, 178, 207.
—, mother and sisters of; III., 419.
- Lord Edward; I., 182.
- Lord George; I., 120.
- Mr.; III., 399.
- William Henry Cavendish, Duke of Portland; I., 162–164, 182, 191, 198, 200, 202, 203, 205, 211, 222, 247, 264, 266, 268, 275, 323, 324, 363, 374, 383, 581;
II., 282, 285 (2), 299, 300, 303, 335, 336, 360, 630, 644;
III., 5, 30, 31, 70, 78, 95, 104, 143, 145, 147, 211, 213, 221, 242 (3), 278, 389, 391.
—, to be First Lord of the Treasury; I., 198.

Bentinck, Duke of Portland—cont.

- , as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland ; I., 198, 247.
- , as Prime Minister ; I., 209–212.
- , in relation to the Coalition Ministry ; I., 209–212, 215.
- , in relation to Ireland ; I., 232 ; III., 3.
- , letters from ; III., 89, 135, 144, 167.
- , letters to ; III., 9, 12, 14, 16, 35, 68, 76 (2), 200, 533.
- , at Cabinet meetings ; II., 644, 646 ; III., 36, 261, 283, 310, 330.
- , department of, matters belonging to ; III., 257.
- , refuses to attend the Council ; II., 271.
- , is to have the Garter ; II., 294.
- , difficulty in finding an office for ; II., 595.
- , refuses to go to the Foreign Office, and accepts the Home Department ; II., 597 (2).
- , his system of Irish government ; II., 634.
- , Ireland surrendered to (i.e., as Home Secretary) ; II., 634.
- , Lord Grenville consults ; II., 638.
- , son-in-law of. See Greville, Mr.
- , private secretary of, (Abbé O'Beirne) ; I., 368.
- , friends or party of ; I., 192, 220, 372, 401 ; II., 634.
- William Henry Cavendish, Lord Titchfield, (son of the Duke of Portland) ; I., 275, 334 ; II., 284 ; III., 200, 201.
- Lord William ; III., 388.
- Bentincks, the ; I., 275.
- Benyon, John ; I., 49.
- , death of ; I., 53.
- Berbice, Dutch colony in ; III., 46.
- Berching's hussars ; III., 476.
- Berder, retreat of the Russians towards ; I., 612.
- Bere or Beer, Mons. de ; III., 176, 177, 180.
- Berealston, M.P. for ; I., 229.
- Berenger, Richard, books by ; I., 159 (2), 160.
- , letters to ; I., 144, 151, 152, 156–162.
- Beresford :
  - George de la Poer, Earl of Tyrone ; I., 172, 191, 229, 385, 388, 399, 462, 404, 412, 442, 458.
  - , to be made a Marquis ; I., 424, 426, 436.
  - , as Marquis of Waterford ; I., 562 ; II., 55 ; III., 554.
  - John ; I., 333, 385, 394, 402, 562 ; II., 39 ; III., 14, 38.
  - , letter of ; I., 247.
  - , dismissal of ; III., 17, 36.

Beresford—cont.

- John, as first Commissioner of revenue in Ireland ; III., 423.
- , house built for ; III., 556.
- , pension for ; III., 9.
- , family of ; III., 9.
- Marcus, (in the army) ; I., 512 (2).
- Mark (M.P.) ; I., 409.
- Mr., senior ; I., 303.
- “ young Mr.” ; I., 409.
- Bergasse, Monsieur ; II., 217.
- Bergen, Norway ; I., 47.
- , letters dated from ; I., 43 (2), 47, 48.
- Bergen-op-Zoom ; II., 387, 390, 598, 613 ; III., 224, 605.
- , garrison of ; III., 10.
- Berger, Captain, III., 58.
- Bergues, in Flanders ; II., 183, 411.
- Berhenrode, M. de, Dutch ambassador ; II., 314.
- Berkeley :
  - Captain ; II., 413 ; III., 11.
  - Frederick Augustus, Earl of ; I., 303.
  - George ; III., 270.
  - Lady ; I., 360 ; II., 282.
  - Mr. ; I., 93, 94 (2), 106, 107.
- Berks, county of ; II., 348.
- Berlin, passim.
  - Academy of Sciences at, curator of ; II., 126.
  - agent from ; II., 79.
  - chargé d'affaires at ; II., 196 (2), 197, 199, 200, 207 (2).
  - convention signed at ; II., 59 ; III., 438.
  - court or cabinet of. See Prussia, court of.
  - despatches received from ; II., 180, 534 ; III., 400, 426.
  - Duke of York's marriage at. See Frederick, Duke of York.
  - Duke of York leaves ; II., 232.
  - English ambassadors at. See Ewart, Joseph ; Eden, Sir Morton ; Spencer, Lord Henry, and Bruce, Earl of Elgin.
  - Englishmen at ; II., 205, 212, 214, 296.
  - expense of living at ; II., 52.
  - French agents at ; II., 276, 332 ; III., 438.
  - garrison of ; II., 82.
  - instructions sent to ; III., 411.
  - leading men at ; II., 493.
  - leave of absence from, desired ; III., 198, 206.
  - letters dated at ; II., 61, 68, 73–75, 78, 81, 82, 87, 91, 93, 95, 104, 110 (2), 124, 132, 147, 153–155, 170, 174, 179, 181–183, 187, 196, 197, 203, 215, 217, 219, 224, 243, 252, 264, 273, 276, 277, 290, 296, 309, 337, 338, 347, 358, 366, 491–494, 505, 533 ; III., 94, 163, 198 (2), 213, 224, 225, 230, 235, 238, 243, 289, 371, 402, 404, 407, 452–459, 561, 563.

Berlin—cont.

- messengers to; II., 203, 250, 252; III., 422.
- Mr. Ewart detested at; II., 219.
- need of a Secretary of Legation at; III., 198, 199.
- news from; II., 280.
- , notes of; III., 148, 149.
- palace of; II., 276, 332.
- residents at; II., 224.
- riotous behaviour of English officers at; II., 82, 97, 110.
- Secretary of Legation (English) at; II., 199, 214, 222; III., 215, 226, 238, 239.
- sects at; III., 289.
- society at; II., 347.
- speculations, reports or opinions at; II., 190, 194, 377.
- travellers to or from; II., 59, 60, 70, 76, 161, 163, 219, 223, 242–244, 270, 287, 330, 577, 633–640; III., 51, 68, 182, 222, 230, 233, 238, 293, 322, 326, 372, 404.

Bermuda privateers; III., 533.

Bernard:

- Eleanor, wife of Scrope; I., 209, 294, 387.
- Scrope; I., 168, 188, 197, 201, 202, 204, 215, 219, 267, 268, 273, 290, 305, 316, 330, 342, 355, 358, 370, 375, 377, 379, 384, 387, 406, 413, 418, 427, 442, 458, 465, 482, 483, 486, 542, 560; II., 165, 215, 273, 282, 345, 382; III., 285, 403, 404.
- , letters from; I., 203, 232, 293, 298, 303 (2), 305, 306, 408 (2), 416, 432.
- , as examiner of the hearth money; I., 202.
- , called "Sir Scrope;" I., 209.
- , as private secretary to Lord Buckingham; I., 234.
- , as Usher of the Black Rod; I., 295.
- , house for; I., 294.
- , wife of. See Bernard, Eleanor.
- [Colonel?]; III., 134.
- Berne; II., 312; III., 82, 84, 168, 16, 197, 486, 513.
- Council of; III., 295, 296.
- English minister at. See Wickham, William.
- letters dated at; II., 404, 449, 455, 591, 596, 616; III., 6, 8, 44, 180, 181 (3), 212, 216, 223, 291, 397, 531.
- canton of; III., 295.
- Bernier, Abbé; III., 394.
- book by; I., 263.
- Bernoise, a; III., 513.
- Bernsdorff, Count; II., 66, 541, 615, 616, 622; III., 59.
- Berthier, murder of; III., 497.
- Bertie:
  - Captain; 402, 419.
  - Major-General; II., 490.

Bertie—cont.

- Willoughby, 4th Earl of Abingdon; I., 163.
- Bertin, Mademoiselle; II., 356.
- Bertrand, Marquis de; III., 477.
- Berwick, Duc and Marshal de; [James Stuart]; II., 379.
- Memoirs* by, alluded to; II., 429.
- aide-de-camp of; I., 8.
- regiment of; II., 379.
- Besangon; III., 97, 133.
- hospitals at; III., 490.
- Besancy, fight near; III., 476.
- Besborodko, Count; II., 144, 224.
- Besnard; II., 547.
- Bessborough, Earl of. See Ponsonby, William.
- Bestard. See Bastard.
- Bethenay alias Chauvin; II., 581.
- Bethman:
  - banker at Frankfort; II., 493.
  - Mademoiselle; II., 492, 493, 535.
  - and Co., Messrs.; III., 131.
- Béthune-Charost, Prince de; II., 325 (2), 326.
- Bettesworth, —; II., 29.
- Betty (servant of Robert Pitt); I., 78.
- Beurnonville, see Bournonville.
- Bicher, Mr.; III., 203.
- Bickford, Mr.; I., 119.
- Bielefeld, Mademoiselle de, governess to one of the Prussian princesses; II., 276.
- Bielfinger, Mons. de; II., 122, 147, 177.
- Bierton, co. Bucks; I., 271.
- Bilbao, in Spain; II., 533.
- Billaut or Billaud de Varennes; II., 532, 542, 548, 550, 557, 584, 590, 616; III., 491, 493.
- character of; III., 493.
- fall of; II., 633; III., 531.
- Bingen, on the Rhine; II., 392.
- Bingley, printer; I., 230.
- Birmingham; II., 133, 271.
- association at; II., 271.
- riots at; II., 133, 140, 166.
- Biron, Duchesse de, execution of; III., 512.
- Biscay, bay of; II., 357, 455.
- Bischoffswerder, Colonel or General; II., 57, 61, 65, 70, 75, 94, 122, 246, 258, 277 (2), 290, 292, 295, 296, 493; III., 27, 167, 199, 563.
- mission of, to the Emperor; II., 61, 78, 85, 107, 125, 127, 139, 147, 155, 166, 170, 172, 173, 181–183, 188; III., 142.
- ascendency of, over the King of Prussia; II., 167.
- wife of; II., 493.
- daughter of; II., 220.
- Bishop:
  - at the Hague; II., 165.
  - query whether a peer can be made; I., 465, 470.
- Bishopries, given to Cambridge men; I., 289.

Bishops :

Bench of; II., 165.

Irish. See Ireland, Bishops in.

Bisset, William; I., 296; III., 400.

Black, Captain; I., 486, 487.

Blackett, Sir Walter; I., 141, 143.

Blackheath; I., 148.

Black Rock, near Dublin :

the Lord Lieutenant goes to; I., 330, 475.

letters dated at; I., 335, 336 (2), 339, 340, 342, 344-346, 351, 355, 357, 358, 478-480.

Black Sea, the; I., 281, 612; II., 23, 45, 72, 87 (2), 88, 91, 259, 438, 489.

England desired to send a fleet to; II., 74, 81, 95, 144.

Blackstone, Judge; II., 233.

Commentaries of; III., 412.

Blair :

Archibald; I., 604 (2).

—, letter from; I., 605.

Robert, to be Solicitor General in Scotland; I., 524.

Robert, professor of astronomy at Edinburgh; I., 604.

—, letter from; I., 604.

—, letter to; I., 605.

Mr. and Lady Mary, his wife; II., 330.

Blake, Mr., of Fulmer; I., 264.

Blandford, Marquis of. See Spencer, George.

Blandford St. Mary, co. Dorset; I., 54, 63, 70.

funeral of Governor Pitt at; I., 77.

lands or estates at; I., 11, 15, 34 (2), 89.

letter addressed to; I., 51.

letters dated at; I., 50, 76.

residents at; I., 26, 32.

Blankenstein's corps; II., 600.

Blann, —; III., 252.

Blaquiere, Sir John; I., 224, 409 (2), 428.

Blayne, Lord; III., 385, 388.

Blenheim Palace, co. Oxford :

building of; I., 28.

visitors to; I., 267, 483; III., 318.

Bletchington, co. Oxford; I., 87.

Bligh, Mr. See Blyth.

Blythman or Blythman, Jasper; I., 86, 88.

Blois, bridge at; II., 479.

Blount, Mrs.; I., 93.

children of; I., 93.

Bludworth, Mr.; I., 108.

Blundell, Sir Francis (1625); I., 472.

Blunt, Thomas; III., 360.

Blyth or Bligh, Mr.; I., 108, 109, 119 (2), 122.

Bockenheim (Bockenham), near Frankfurt, letter dated at; III., 50.

Boconnoc, Boconnock or Boconnick, co. Cornwall; I., 65, 68, 70-73, 120, 131, 132; II., 282, 310.

estate of; I., 62.

letters addressed to; I., 65, 121.

Boconnoc—cont.

letters dated at; I., 65, 71, 80, 110-112, 126-128, 130, 135.

rectory or parsonage of; I., 72 (4).

Bodenheim :

cabinet of; II., 396.

letter dated at; II., 396.

Bodes, "the Mr. "; III., 233 (2).

Bodmin (Bodmyn), co. Cornwall; I., 116, 592.

borough of; III., 77, 89.

charter for; III., 76, 89, 90.

election at; I., 108, 110, 111, 113, 114, 119 (2), 120, 127, 591, 592.

judges at; I., 66 (2).

letter dated at; I., 199.

mayor and corporation of; I., 127, 592.

Boers or Boer, Mr.; I., 279, 281; III., 419, 420, 425, 443-447.

Bog, river in Russia; II., 49, 50.

Bohemia, I., 349; II., 48.

General Mack goes to; II., 614.

Bohemian, an Irish; I., 349.

Boisberthelot, Mons.; III., 139.

Boisguy, reported surrender of; III., 538.

Boishardy; III., 538, 539.

letters from, notes of; III., 540, 541.

house of; III., 539.

Bois le Duc; II., 605.

surrender of; II., 640.

Bolder, Mr.; II., 437.

Bolingbroke, Viscount. See St John, Henry.

Bollet; II., 557; III., 540.

Bologna; II., 5.

Bolsena, lake of, in Italy; II., 5.

Bolton, Dukes of. See Paulet.

Bombay; I., 497, 510; II., 11, 193, 226; III., 417.

Council at; III., 194-196.

Gazette; II., 285.

Governor of, appointment of; III., 195.

letter dated at; III., 195.

Provisional Council of; III., 196.

Bombelles, Marquis de; II., 97.

Bomet, Monsieur; II., 331.

Bonaparte. See Buonaparte.

Bonchamp, Mons.; II., 479.

Bond :

G., letter from; II., 37.

Mr.; II., 297.

P., minister to the United States of America, letters from; III., 243, 256.

Bondy, in France; III., 449, 451.

Bonn; II., 287, 578; III., 519.

letter dated at; II., 665.

Bonne-Carrère, Monsieur; II., 288.

Bonnier, Monsieur; III., 377.

Bonnot, Monsieur; III., 126.

Books or pamphlets :

libellous; II., 327.

—, printers of; II., 336.

named:—

The Case; I., 573.

Dialogues of the Dead (Lord Lyttleton's); I., 141, 158.

Books and pamphlets—cont.

- Dictionnaire Philosophique*; I., 150.
Discovery relative to war; I., 602.
Feritsha, translation of; I., 263.
History and Art of horsemanship; I., 159.
Imitation of Horace's Epistles; I., 159, 160.
Intérêts de la Monarchie-Prussienne; III., 238.
Kouli Khan, history of; I., 263.
Mémoires de la Chevalerie; I., 161.
Orme's History of India; I., 263.
Relation of Maj.-Gen. Morgan's progress in France and Flanders, or Phoenix Britannicus; II., 419.
 Boone, Daniel; I., 108, 113.
   letter of; I., 115.
 Bootle, T., letter of; I., 130.
 Bordeaux; I., 136; II., 154, 464, 468, 576, 582.
   armée révolutionnaire at; III., 497.
   executions at; III., 491, 505.
   letter dated at; I., 136.
 Borghese, Monsieur; II., 262.
 Boringdon, Lord. See Parker, John.
 Borneo, island of, attack upon; I., 3.
 Boscawen:
   Captain or Admiral Edward; I., 109, 127.
   Hugh, Lord Falmouth; I., 111, 112, 114, 121, 127.
   Mr. (M.P.); I., 334.
   Mrs.; I., 160.
   family of (the Tregothnan family); I., 109.
 Bossiney, co. Cornwall:
   election at; I., 110, 114, 115.
   mayor of; I., 112.
   —, letter to; I., 112.
 Bosting, Chef d'Artillerie; II., 547.
 Boston, U.S.A.; III., 13, 356. letter addressed to; III., 13.
 Botany Bay; I., 524. prisoners to be sent to; II., 543.
 Bothmar, Count; I., 85, 90.
 Botterel, Monsieur; III., 215.
 Bouchain; II., 407; III., 483.
 Boucher, paintings by; I., 150.
 Bouchotte or Bouchot, French minister of War; II., 472, 487, 515, 518, 531, 537, 538, 546, 547; III., 503.
 Bouillé, Marquis de, Commandant of Metz; II., 110, 115-117, 122, 130, 133, 182, 431, 468; III., 34, 448, 450, 479.
 Bouillon, Prince de; III., 179, 245, 367. letter to, notes of; III., 539.
 Boulogne; III., 437.
 Boulton, Captain; I., 9.
 Bourbon:
   Duc de; II., 86; III., 103.
   —, son of. See Enghien, Duc de.

Bourbon—cont.

- court. See France, court of.
 fashion; I., 610.
 House of; I., 314; II., 356, 530, 550, 576; III., 58.
   — destruction of; II., 529.
   — re-establishment of, not wished by the Allies; II., 568, 569.
   royal domain of; III., 225.
   Isle de; II., 454.
 Bourbonnois, le, farmers of, forbidden to send provisions to Paris; II., 540.
 Bourdieu, Monsieur; II., 403.
 Bourdieu and Chollet, bills on; III., 510.
 Bourdon de l'Oise [François Louis]; II., 462, 471; III., 496, 498.
 Bourdonnaye; III., 537, 540 (2).
 Bourg en Busse, in France; III., 131.
 Bourgeois, Mr.; I., 96.
 Bourget, in France; III., 449.
 Bourg-la-reine, in France; II., 567.
 Bourgoin or Bourgoing, Baron de; II., 383; III., 427.
 Bourke:
   John, Viscount Mayo; I., 212.
   Mr.; I., 212.
 Bournonville or Beurnonville, General; II., 391; III., 207, 211, 212, 218, 222.
   aide-de-camp of; II., 391.
 Bourtang or Beurange, in Holland; III., 212.
   fort of; III., 124.
 Bouwens, Mr.; III., 222.
 Bowdler, Thomas, letter from; II., 312.
 Bowen, a gardener; I., 72.
 Bowes:
   John, Lord, as former Secretary of State, Ireland; I., 319.
   —, as late Lord Chancellor of Ireland; I., 459.
   Mr.; I., 140.
   Major; II., 186.
 Bowyer:
   Sir Charles; I., 291.
   Sir William; I., 272, 275.
   Lieut.-Colonel; I., 348.
 Box:
   Edward; I., 262 (2).
   —; II., 271, 349, 350.
 Boyd:
   Mr.; II., 83, 540, 610, 622; III., 192, 378, 562.
   Messrs.; III., 273.
   —, banking house of; III., 192, 234.
 Boyle:
   George, Earl of Glasgow; III., 206.
   Richard, 2nd Earl of Shannon; I., 172, 177, 178, 180, 191, 221, 255, 310, 352, 383, 385, 388, 402, 404-406, 409 (2), 418, 420, 421, 424-431, 434-436, 440, 441 (2), 443, 445, 447, 450, 454, 455, 461, 464, 466, 489, 492, 493, 531, 560, 564, 584; III., 554.
   —, dismissal of; I., 442, 443, 445, 458, 460, 464, 465, 469.
   — goes to England; I., 463.

Boyle, Earl of Shannon—cont.

—, patent granted to, as Vice-Treasurer, &c., in Ireland; I., 472.

—, [Catherine] wife of; I., 383, 440 (2), 443.

—, — brother of; I., 441.

—, — family of; I., 443.

—, friends or followers of; I., 442, 445, 460, 461, 466.

Boyne, battle of the, anniversary of; III., 388.

orange ribbons worn in honour of; III., 385.

Boyton, co. Wilts; I., 41.

Brabançon :

dragon; I., 595.

revolution; III., 283.

Brabant; II., 127, 262, 287, 327, 334,

389, 591, 598; III., 251, 401, 484.

army of; I., 594.

Dutch; II., 391.

fermentations in; II., 365.

invasion and conquest of; II., 331, 343.

people of, or Brabanters; II., 2; III., 146.

scum of; III., 497.

States of; I., 594; II., 264, 338.

—, order of arrest by; III., 462.

Brabazon, Anthony, 8th Earl of Meath; I., 190.

Brabourne, Mr.; I., 44.

Bradford, T.; III., 285.

Bradstreet, Sir Samuel; II., 83.

Bradyll, Mr.; I., 37.

Brailow, Turks near; II., 71, 77.

Braithwaite, Colonel; II., 477.

Branca, Henry; II., 391.

Branca, Duchesse de; II., 589.

Brand, Mr.; I., 155.

Brandenburg; III., 231.

House of; III., 232.

— princesses of; III., 455.

Branding:

"old"; II., 10.

his son; II., 10.

Brandy, adulteration of, in France; II., 538.

Brandywine, the, battle of; I., 253.

Branford (? Brentford); I., 93.

Brantzer, M. de; II., 377.

Branwell (co. Cornwall?) deputy stewardship of; I., 71.

Braun, Colonel; II., 258.

Braunston, bill in relation to; II., 390.

Breadalbane, Earl of. See Campbell, John.

Breda; II., 286, 598, 605, 613; III., 6 (2), 60, 103.

governor of; III., 60.

Brehan, Mons. de, laquais of; III., 506.

Bremen; II., 540; III., 24.

director of posts at, for the Emperor; III., 80.

merchants of; III., 191.

Bremerlehe or Bremerthe; III., 100, 103.

Breslau; II., 131, 146.

Brest; II., 341, 383, 418, 461, 465, 474, 534, 584, 590; III., 15, 166, 488.

French forces at; II., 542; III., 296.

fleet of, or at; II., 402, 444, 449, 523, 584, 590; III., 13, 15, 16.

—, commissary with; II., 556.

blocked by Lord Howe; II., 581.

department of, President of; II., 586.

galériens of; III., 497.

insurrection at; II., 532.

Jacobins at; III., 494.

letter dated at; III., 13.

mayor of; II., 586.

people of; II., 429.

Bretagne. See Brittany.

Breteuil, Baron de; I., 484; II., 302, 308, 365, 551, 589; III., 451, 479.

his mistress; II., 589.

letters from; III., 458, 459.

Plein pouvoir given to, by Louis XVI.; III., 460.

Breton, Mr.; I., 108, 111, 117, 118.

Breton admiral; II., 417, 418.

army; II., 405.

lady; II., 85.

language; III., 541.

Bretons; III., 13, 291, 540, 563.

Bricket, —; III., 505.

Bridgman, Orlando; I., 51.

Bridgwater, co. Somerset; I., 355; II., 179, 251.

election at; I., 252.

Bridon, citizen; III., 105, 106.

Bridport, Lord. See Hood, Alexander.

Briel, Commissary; III., 536.

Brienne, Loménie de, Archbishop of Toulouse; I., 353.

made First Minister; III., 424.

Brightelmstone or Brighton; I., 218, 258; II., 211, 212, 304, 450.

letters dated at; I., 256, 263; II., 411, 599; III., 149.

militia at; II., 453.

Brill [Brieille] the, in Holland; II., 72, 121, 422, 426.

Brillet, Monsieur; II., 264.

Brine, —; I., 54.

Brisach or Brisac (Brisack); III., 257.

New; III., 133.

Briscoc or Bristoe, Mr.; I., 274 (2).

Briscan, troops in; II., 85.

Brissac, on the Loire; II., 545.

Brissot :

[Jean Pierre], II., 445; III., 86, 556.

faction of; III., 85, 478. And see France.

de Warville, Sieur, papers by, alluded to; II., 152, 471.

Bristol, Bishop of, (in 1715). See Smalridge, George.

Bristol; I., 68, 259, 355; II., 401; III., 368.

merchants of; I., 261, 262.

British :

Constitution, responsibility of ministers under; III., 553.

flag, insult to; III., 528.

- Brittany or Bretagne; I., 154; II., 417, 418, 431, 452, 469, 471, 540, 545, 604; III., 15, 95, 112, 138, 418, 536, 541, 604.
- Chouans or Chouannerie in; III., 115, 538-540.
- Constitution of; II., 563.
- English descent upon, feared; II., 523.
- , expedition to. See Rawdon-Hastings, Lord Moira, expedition of letters from, abstract of; III., 536-541.
- miserable state of; III., 13.
- people of. See Bretons.
- priests demanded in; II., 540.
- a prince of the blood desired in; III., 537.
- royalists and royalist army in; II., 404, 469; III., 99, 112, 166, 486, 536-541.
- , generals of; III., 540. And see Humbert.
- , aid for, sent or needed; II., 474; III., 45, 88, 363, 364, 392-394, 536-541.
- , chiefs of, demands of; III., 537, 538.
- , instructions given to; III., 223.
- Broa, Monsieur; II., 332, 348.
- Broadstairs; III., 343, 344.
- Brocas votes; I., 251.
- Brocheton, le Sieur; II., 562.
- Brockhausen, M. de, letters to; II., 87, 88.
- Brodie, Mr.; I., 349, 610, 611; II., 303, 304.
- , family of; II., 303.
- Broglie or Broglio, Duc de; I., 434; III., 477.
- , brother of; III., 477.
- Bromfield, —, letter to; I., 113.
- Bromley, Kent:
- Eden Farm at, letter dated at; III., 129.
- Princes and Princess of Orange at; III., 129.
- Brooke, Brookes, Brooks:
- Capt.; I., 224.
- Mr.; II., 86.
- ; I., 177.
- ; letter sent by; II., 102.
- a messenger; III., 335, 355, 370.
- Brookes' Club; I., 202, 203.
- Broom Hall, letter dated at; II., 244.
- Brottier, Abbé; III., 216.
- Brough, —; I., 258.
- Brower or Brewer, —; II., 480, 481, 514.
- Brown, Browne:
- Commissioner; I., 113.
- Cornet; I., 203.
- , family of; I., 204.
- Count, General-in-Chief, Governor-General of Livonia and Estonia; II., 256.
- Count, his son; II., 256.
- , his family; II., 256.
- Denis; I., 306.
- farmer; I., 53.
- Brown, Browne—cont.
- Sir John; I., 426, 430, 468.
- John Denis, Lord Altamont; I., 186, 206, 406.
- Major (at Delhi); I., 243.
- Major (of the 58th); I., 457, 461. (officer in Austrian army); II., 614.
- Thomas, Viscount Kenmare; II., 39, 40, 238.
- Brownlow, Mr.; I., 222, 225, 299, 581.
- Bruce:
- Alexander; I., 607.
- , letter from; I., 602.
- John, professor at Edinburgh; II., 306.
- , history of India by; II., 306.
- Thomas, Earl of Elgin; I., 603; II., 178, 181, 184, 246, 266, 273, 304, 310, 442, 443, 533, 534, 601, 606, 616; III., 173, 235, 306, 308, 326, 509, 513, 563.
- , letters from; II., 111, 126, 317, 320, 328, 396, 469, 471, 474, 488, 502, 503, 516, 557, 558, 393; III., 163, 193 (2), 213, 225, 238, 243, 289, 371, 402, 404, 407, 480.
- , letters to; II., 127, 319, 324, 397, 398, 421, 473, 616; III., 174, 206, 215 (2), 230, 253, 298, 372, 489, 491.
- , mission of, to the Emperor; II., 54 (2), 61, 73-79, 81, 84, 85, 92, 93, 96, 97, 107, 129, 170, 172.
- , goes to Berlin; II., 166.
- , offers to go to Paris; II., 317.
- , doubts whether to stay at Brussels; II., 328.
- , fondness of, for arranging military projects; II., 476.
- , as ambassador at Berlin; III., 163.
- , sends a copy of the secret treaty between Prussia and France, to England; III., 306.
- , letters from, give little insight as to the politics of Berlin; III., 405.
- , servant of; II., 397, III., 400.
- Mr., brother of Lord Elgin; II., 321, 324.
- Mr.; II., 448, 593.
- Bruck in Styria; III., 318.
- Brudenell-Montague:
- George, 4th Earl of Cardigan; I., 96, 97 (2).
- Mary, Countess of Cardigan; I., 96-98, 102 (2), 103 (2), 136, 138, 148, 152, 154.
- Brue d'Ivignac:
- Comte de; III., 106, 122, 124.
- , son of; III., 122, 123.
- Comtesse de, his wife; III., 122, 123.
- Bruen, Colonel; I., 359; II., 14.
- Bruges, letter dated at; II., 393.
- Brugmans, Fiscal; III., 172.
- Bruhl, Count; II., 252, 253, 355; III., 290.
- , formerly governor of the King of Prussia; III., 402.
- , wife of; III., 290.

Brunswick-Luneburg :

Charles William Ferdinand, Duke of ;
I., 278, 284, 349 ; II., 25, 66,
78, 194, 269, 283, 292, 310, 313,
320, 326, 331, 359, 420, 446, 447,
451, 454, 473, 486 ; III., 25, 27, 52,
68, 186, 196, 209, 218, 233 (2), 235,
238, 391, 407, 410, 413, 414, 422,
425, 430, 432, 435, 437, 466, 467, 476.

—, letters from ; III., 139 (2).

—, advice of, to the King of Prussia ; III., 407.

—, army of ; I., 349 ; II., 173,
507 ; III., 45, 196, 218.

—, —, approaches Paris ; II.,
308, 310, 313, 318-320 ; III., 472.

—, campaign of ; II., 320, 322.

—, command given to ; III., 414.

—, complaints against ; III., 475.

—, interviews with ; III., 405, 406.

—, irresolution of ; III., 18, 403, 406 (3), 407 (2).

—, quarters of ; II., 314.

—, retreat of ; 329, 332.

—, removal of, from command, desired ; II., 495.

—, intends to resign his command ;
II., 500.

—, to be invited to command the allied armies in Holland ; II., 639, 641.

—, marriage treaty with (for his daughter's marriage to the Prince of Wales) ; II., 642.

—, son of ; III., 414.

Augusta, Duchess of, sister of George
III. ; III., 19, 52, 147, 167, 278.

—, marriage treaty of, alluded to ;
III., 299-304.

Prince and Princess of ; I., 148.

Princess Caroline of ; III., 9.

—, journey of, to England ; II.,
652 (2) ; III., 5, 19, 43, 44.

—, arrival and reception of, in England ; III., 49 (2).

—, marriage of. See George,
Prince of Wales, marriage of.

—, —, treaty of ; II., 642, 652
(3).

Prince Frederick of ; II., 384, 391.

Princess of [daughter of the Prince of Orange] ; II., 268, 269.

hereditary Prince of ; II., 269.

Brunswick, province or town of ; II., 66,
120, 268 ; III., 48, 167, 209, 218,
221, 233, 254, 283, 292, 293, 406, 407.

academy at ; II., 10.

Chancery, payment to ; II., 653.

Court of ; II., 653.

an envoy to be sent to ; II., 629.

letters dated at ; II., 653 ; III., 139 (2).

mission to. See Harris, Sir James.

the Princess's departure from ; II., 652 (2).

Brussels ; I., 80, 310, 594, 595 ; II., 164, 258, 264, 267, 270, 292, 305, 319,

Brussels—cont.

329, 338, 387, 401, 459, 509, 592 ;
III., 381, 415, 424, 451.

arrests at ; III., 511.

bulletin distributed at ; II., 433.

Club des Amis at ; II., 70.

commissioners at ; II., 357.

confusion at ; II., 545.

court or government at ; II., 217, 411, 463.

Duke of Coburg's headquarters at ;
II., 391.

embassy at ; II., 405.

émigrés at ; III., 451.

the Emperor's journey to ; II., 426, 440, 443, 500, 541.

Englishmen at ; II., 120, 129.

English minister at ; III., 484.

foreign ministers to ; II., 184.

Governor-General at ; II., 278, 280.

Imperial minister at. See Mercy,
Mons. de.

letters dated at ; I., 80, 81 ; II., 204,
317, 320, 328, 471, 474 (2), 475,
488, 502, 503 ; III., 416, 448, 458,

459, 484, 510, 511.

libel published at ; II., 256.

lieutenant of police at ; III., 511.

mission to ; II., 208, 211.

news from ; II., 111, 112, 287.

travellers to ; II., 62, 103, 109, 165,
356, 397, 533, 592 ; III., 463, 513.

Brydges :

Lady Anne, marriage of, to the son of the Duke of Buckingham ; I., 259 ; III., 142.

—, called "my little woman" by Lord Buckingham ; III., 142.

—, family of ; III., 143.

Henry, 2nd Duke of Chandos ; I., 124.

James, 3rd Duke of Chandos, Lord
High Steward ; I., 259, 311.

—, death of ; I., 526, 527.

—, wife of ; I., 259.

—, daughter of ; see Lady Anne,
above.

Brydone, letters of, alluded to ; II., 5.

Buccleuch, Duke of. See Scott, Henry.

Buchera [? Buchenau] ; II., 392.

Buchot, French commissary for Foreign Affairs ; II., 564, 572, 576, 587.

Buckingham :

Duke of. See Villiers, George ;
Sheffield, John.

Marquis of. See Grenville, George
Nugent.

Buckingham ; I., 251, 252, 262.

assizes at ; II., 128.

corporation of ; I., 252, 431, 434.

— and inhabitants of, an address to be presented by ; III., 145-147.

County Hall of, dinner at ; I., 265, 267.

election at ; I., 590.

George Inn at ; I., 268.

mayor of ; I., 431, 434.

Buckingham—cont.

- members for; I., 363.
- rejoicings at, upon the King's recovery; I., 431, 433, 434.
- tradesmen of; II., 271.
- Buckingham, county of; I., 244, 270, 286, 439; II., 348; III., 147.
- an address to be presented from; II., 265, 266; III., 147.
- assize dinner in; I., 264.
- association in; II., 344, 352.
- Custos Rotulorum of; II., 340.
- Grand jury in; II., 284.
- Lord Lieutenant of, [Lord Buckingham]; I., 449, 537.
- markets in; II., 320.
- meetings in; I., 329, 331; II., 282.
- M.P. for [W. W. Grenville]; I., 333, 335.
- militia of; III., 144.
- parliamentary elections in, matters connected with; I., 230, 264–268, 293, 309, 333, 335, 351, 363; III., 200, 201.
- , committee and treasurer for; I., 250.
- sheriff of; I., 266, 268, 291, 293; II., 340; III., 144, 200.
- Buckinghamshire, Earl of. See Hobart, John.
- Buelle; II., 576.
- Bugden, —; I., 42.
- father of; I., 42.
- , widow and children of; I., 42.
- Bugden [? Buckden]; I., 141.
- Buhl, letter dated at; III., 181.
- Bukaty, Monsieur, Polish minister in London; II., 64, 244.
- Bulkeley, Thomas James Warren, Lord Bulkeley; I., 203, 262, 269, 292, 316, 327, 332, 334, 380; II., 56, 428, 465.
- letter to; I., 291.
- brother of. See Williams, Robert.
- Buller:
  - [Francis]; I., 276, 277, 468.
  - Sir Francis; III., 143.
  - [John]; I., 107.
  - , death of; 264 (2).
  - ; I., 349.
- Bullingbroke. See Rolingbroke.
- Bullock, —; I., 264, 274, 275.
- Bulzakow, M. de; II., 77.
- Buol, Baron de; II., 63, 158, 251, 252, 270, 277, 285, 290.
- Buonaparte, or Bonaparte, Napoleon; III., 346.
- in Italy; III., 257, 313 (2), 333.
- fear of his marching on Vienna; III., 313.
- negotiations of, with Austria; III., 318, 319, 324.
- "Ce petit Corse," proceedings of, criticized; III., 319.
- "the brigand"; III., 396.

Burges:

- James Bland, Under Secretary at the Foreign Office; II., 31, 34, 184, Burges—cont.

- 308, 310, 315, 348, 455; III., 49, 52.
- , letters from; II., 211, 301, 302, 305 (2), 307, 308, 311, 315, 323, 325, 331, 412, 430, 435, 437, 445, 448, 467, 478; III., 87.
- , letters to; II., 153, 312, 315, 316.
- , Foreign Office journal of; II., 488.
- , ceases to be Under Secretary of State; III., 141.
- , as Sir James; III., 286.
- Mr.; I., 612;
- Burgh:
  - Mr., Accountant-General for Ireland; I., 307.
  - Walter Hussey, Lord Chief Baron of Exchequer, Ireland; I., 168, 172, 175, 176, 186, 191, 220, 221.
  - , death of; I., 222.
  - ; of Old Town; I., 303.
- Burghe, General de; III., 267.
- Burghley (Burleigh) Lord. See Cecil, William.
- Burgoyne, General; I., 169, 175, 177, 178, 187, 203, 206, 209, 224.
- Burgundy, scarcity in; III., 490.
- Burke:
  - Edmund; I., 162, 178, 245, 264, 268, 270, 374, 594; II., 191, 193, 285, 315, 318, 323, 324, 336, 450.
  - , letters from; II., 450, III., 463, 466.
  - , pamphlets of; II., 19, 120.
  - , and the French Revolution; I., 561; II., 616; III., 136, 463–467.
  - , prosecution of Warren Hastings by; I., 261.
  - , his "Rosinante"; II., 113.
  - , no longer in opposition; III., 465.
  - Richard, his son; I., 270; II., 190–192, 221, 323.
- Burleigh House; I., 141.
- Burnet, Dr. Gilbert, Bishop of Salisbury; I., 33.
- Burnham, co. Bucks; II., 209, 237.
- Buron, a farmer; III., 122.
- Burrard, Major; I., 442, 450.
- Burton:
  - Mr.; I., 327.
  - Mr., of Carlow; I., 250.
- Burton Pynsent, co. Somerset [Lady Chatham's house]; I., 354, 529; II., 294, 300, 303, 306, 310.
- letters dated at; I., 218, 257 (2), 535; II., 12 (2), 13, 214, 299 (2), 300, 417.
- Bury, Mr., Clerk of Assize; II., 328.
- Bushe, —; I., 420, 490.
- Bussorah; III., 195.
- Bute, Earl of. See Stuart, John.
- Butleigh, co. Somerset; I., 530.
- Butler:
  - Comte de; III., 105, 119–121.
  - James, 2nd Duke of Ormond; I., 6.

Butler, James, Duke of Ormond—cont.
 —, (called also Lord James Butler) in connexion with the rebellion of 1715; I., 51–55.
 —, attainer of; I., 584.
 —, troop of guards of; I., 41.
 John, Bishop of Oxford (1777–1788);
 I., 293.
 [John] claimant of the Ormond earldom; II., 15, 27, 41.
 —, his claim allowed; II., 41.
 Mr.; II., 341.
 —; I., 208, 349, 584.
 family, the; I., 584; II., 41.
 Buxton, co. Derby; I., 287, 343, 594.
 letters dated at; I., 286–288, 346.
 Buzot, Monsieur, protégé of; III., 492.
 Byng:
 George, Lord Torrington; I., 314;
 II., 415; III., 415, 435, 462.
 —, letter from; III., 416.
 —, daughters of; II., 415.
 George; I., 388, 396.
 Byrna, C. L.; III., 252.

C.

C. Lord; I., 357.
 Cabarrus, Count; III., 350, 352, 361.
 character of; III., 351. daughter of. See Tallien, Madame.
 Cabell, Mr.; I., 242, 269, 433, 497, 518, 557.
 Cabinet, the, passim.
 changes in; I., 162. difference of opinion in; III., 50 (2). dinner; III., 317.
 meetings of; I., 52, 170, 180, 345,
 456, 528; II., 235, 302, 361, 402,
 441, 621; III., 25, 31, 35, 57, 58,
 169, 170, 227 (2), 329, 376.
 —, minutes of; I., 579; II., 373,
 644, 646; III., 35, 261, 283, 310, 330.
 —, letter read at; II., 137.
 —, postponed on account of the death of the French King; II., 485. members of; I., 468, 580; II., 36, 644, 646.
 —, circular to; III., 341.
 —, news not imparted to; III., 337, 342–344. offices; I., 538.
 “formed from the ranks of the ancient enemy”; II., 597.
 Lord Buckingham offers to unite with; II., 655, 656.
 Cade, Jack; II., 91.
 Cadignan, Monsieur; II., 305.
 Cadiz; II., 383; III., 266, 296. merchant at; II., 539.
 ships from; II., 263.
 Cadsand, island of; II., 612.

Caen, in France; II., 531; III., 309.
 Caffre Coast, proposed settlement on; I., 257.
 Caieta, promontory of, in Italy; II., 8.
 Caillard, Monsieur, French chargé d’Affaires at the Hague; II., 141, 146,
 151, 186; III., 325, 371, 427.
 letter from; II., 152.
 family of; III., 213.
 Caille, Audibert; II., 540, 615, 622.
 Cairo; I., 20.
 consul at. See Baldwin, Mr.
 Calais; I., 51, 593; II., 316, 452, 514;
 III., 296, 377, 413, 429.
 letters dated at; II., 316; III., 260.
 Place d’Armes, at; II., 316.
 reports from; II., 107; III., 214.
 travellers to or from; II., 163, 180,
 182, 198, 267, 305, 306, 325 (2);
 III., 244, 287, 437.
 Calcutta; I., 510, 605.
 Chief Justice of the Supreme Court
 at; I., 510, 587.
 puisne Judges at; 587.
 Callington or Kellington, Cornwall, election
 at; I., 108, 111.
 Calonne, Mons. de; I., 357, 485; II., 97,
 118, 170, 194, 212, 275, 278; III., 451. account received from; III., 450– 452.
mémoire by, III., 439.
 Calvert, Charles, Lord Baltimore; I., 108.
 letter from; I., 118.
 Calvinists; III., 494.
 Cambacères; III., 86.
 Cambollas; II., 473.
 Cambon [Joseph]; II., 457–459, 571–
 573.
 Cambrai (Cambray); II., 377, 569, 620;
 III., 466, 483, 484.
 Cambresis, the; II., 491, 492.
 Cambridge; II., 483.
 letter dated at; I., 342.
 Cambridge University:
 members of, promotion of; I., 289.
 Emmanuel College; I., 571.
 Camden, Lord. See Pratt.
 Camelford:
 Lord. See Pitt, Thomas.
 Lady. See Pitt, Anne.
 Camelford, Cornwall; I., 132.
 election at; I., 110, 111, 113–115, 119, 120, 127.
 letter dated at; I., 72.
 members for; I., 109, 120.
 Camisar prophets; I., 33.
 Campagna, the; II., 119.
 Campbell:
 Sir Archibald; I., 354, 481, 518; II., 11, 191.
 —, letter to; III., 416.
 Duncan; II., 607.
 Colonel; I., 56–58.
 Lord Frederic; I., 485 (2), 490.
 —, as Vice-Treasurer, &c. in Ireland; I., 472.
 Ilay, Lord Advocate of Scotland; I., 524, 534, 535.

- Campbell, Ilay—cont.
 —, as former Solicitor-General; I., 525.
 —, as Lord President of the Court of Session; I., 604.
 John, Duke of Argyll, I., 591; II., 349.
 John, Lord Glenorchy [aft. 3rd Earl of Breadalbane]; I., 76.
 John, 4th Earl of Breadalbane; I., 604.
 —; governor of Jamaica; I., 232.
 —; (of co. Bucks); I., 264.
- Campeachy, bay of; I., 575.
- Campan, in Holland; III., 23, 24.
- Camplin:
 Mr.; I., 334, 357, 360, 364.
 R.; II., 179.
- Campo, Marquis del. See Del Campo, Marquis.
- Campomanes, Sieur; II., 369.
- Campol, Duke of York at; II., 605.
- Camus [Armand Gaston]; II., 391, 445.
- Canada; I., 335, 496; II., 340.
 Council in; I., 507.
 Governor-General of; III., 76.
 hereditary aristocracy for, suggested; I., 507.
 ports on the confines of; III., 527.
 raising of men in; II., 405.
 troops in; I., 587; II., 428.
 water communication of; II., 254.
 Upper, branch of the Legislature in; I., 507.
 —, army corps for; II., 185.
- Canadas, the two; III., 76, 534.
- Canadian business; II., 395.
- Canal: companies, Inspector-General of; II., 499.
 the Grand Junction; II., 499.
- Canary wine. See Wine.
- Candelaux, General; III., 106, 117, 539, 540 (2).
- Candia, King of; II., 236.
- Canning, George; III., 179, 244, 276, 278, 279, 323, 334, 335, 344, 357, 368, 375, 380, 407.
 letters from; III., 337, 341.
- Canterbury, Archbishop of. See Wake, William; Moore, Dr. John.
- Cantire, Mull of; I., 351.
- Canton:
 letters dated at; I., 3, 4 (4).
 treasury at; III., 446.
- Cape of Good Hope; I., 7, 11, 18, 47, 183; II., 645, 646; III., 102.
 Governor Pitt at; I., 43, 45.
 German troops at; III., 185. need of more forces at; II., 645, 646.
- Cape Colony; I., 257.
- Cap Janissaire; II., 581.
- Cap Nichola, mole at; II., 490.
- Capri [Caprea], island of; II., 8, 19.
- Capua, Italy; II., 8.
- Cardigan, Earl and Countess of. See Brudenell-Montague.
- Carency, Prince of; III., 292.
 articles written by; III., 292.
 father of; III., 292.
- Carhampton, Earl of. See Luttrell, Henry Lawes.
- Carinthia, the French in; III., 310.
- Carisbrooke Castle; III., 96.
 Orde's apartments at. See Orde.
- Carleton:
 Guy, Lord Dorchester; I., 496, 587; II., 13 (2), 396, 637.
 —, speech of, to the Indians; III., 527.
 Hugh (Solicitor-General for Ireland); I., 173, 178, 191, 206.
 —, as Lord Chief Justice of Common Pleas, Ireland; I., 294, 396, 461, 469.
 —, to be made a peer; I., 430, 436.
 —, as Lord Carleton; I., 545, 577; II., 376.
- Carlisle, Earl of. See Howard, Frederick.
- Carlisle, late Bishop of. See Lyttelton, Charles.
- Carlow, Ireland; I., 250.
 M.P. for; I., 236.
- Carmagnole, la; III., 66.
 singing of, forbidden; III., 63.
- Carmarthen, Marquis of. See Osborne, Francis Godolphin.
- Carmichael, William; II., 257, 263, 348.
- Carnarvon, Earl of. See Herbert, Henry.
- Carnarvonshire, M.P. for; I., 327.
- Carnatic (Carnatick), the; I., 602; II., 190, 298.
 Nabob of; I., 557.
- Carnicobar, the (India); I., 605.
- Carnot, Comte, (Carlo); II., 403, 473, 584, 589, 590; III., 339, 340, 350, 370, 491.
 character of; III., 86, 160, 493.
 acting as Secretary of the Committee of Public Safety; II., 515.
- Carolina, South, III., 524.
- Carolinas, the; III., 87.
- Caroline, Queen, death of; I., 104.
 Maid of Honour to. See Pitt, Anne.
- Carpenter, General; I., 54.
- Carpentier, commissary at the Temple; II., 529.
- Carr:
 Robert, Earl of Somerset; II., 386.
 Mr.; I., 143.
- Carrickfergus; I., 75.
- Carra, [Jean Louis]; III., 466.
- Carrier; II., 561; III., 531.
- Cartaux, General; II., 487.
- Carter:
 Thomas; III., 389.
 —, letter to; III., 390.
 Mrs.; I., 142.
 —; I., 17, 59.
- Carteret, Mrs.; I., 106.
- Carteret, in Normandy; II., 474.
- Carton, Ireland; I., 402.

Cartwright, Major; II., 327, 337.
 Carysfort, Earl of. See Proby, John Joshua.
 Casas, Mons. de la; III., 104.
 Cashell, Archbishop of. See Agar, Charles.
 Cassel; I., 594; II., 640.
   King of Prussia at; III., 233.
   letter dated at; III., 73.
 Casteux (at Copenhagen); II., 518.
 Castélica, Prince of; II., 395, (2).
 Castlehill, co. Devon; I., 355, 491; II., 179.
   letter addressed to; I., 354.
   letters dated at; I., 493, 496.
 Castle Martyr, Ireland; I., 385.
 Castlestewart, Lord. See Stuart, Andrew Thomas.
 Castletown Roche, co. Cork, rector of; II., 41.
 Castries;
   Maréchal de; II., 609; III., 513.
   Mons. de; I., 281.
   regiment of, III., 250.
 Caswell, Mr.; II., 307.
 Catalonia; II., 580.
   English army in; I., 28.
 Cateau, letter dated at; II., 557.
 Cathcart, William Shaw, Colonel Lord
   Cathcart; I., 484, 559, 591, 603,
   607; II., 424.
   letters from; I., 558, 560.
 Caucasus, the; I., 281.
 Caulfeld [? Koeffelt] in Germany; III., 24.
 Caulfield, James, 1st Earl of Charlemont, and commander of the Volunteer army of Ireland; I., 177, 191,
   198, 199, 222, 226, 294, 388, 396,
   413, 434, 440, 514, 569.
   alias Duke of Armagh; I., 420. as a Knight of St. Patrick; I., 182, 184.
   2nd son of; I., 440.
 Cavagnac, Commissary; II., 586.
 Cavan, county; I., 395, 571. committee in; I., 305.
 Cavendish;
   Lord George; I., 250, 264, 268, 275;
   II., 285.
   Georgina, Duchess of Devonshire;
   II., 103.
   Sir H.; I., 303, 306, 307.
   Harriet. See Clements.
   William, 2nd Duke of Devonshire;
   I., 64.
   William, 5th Duke; I., 385; II.,
   336; III., 242.
   Mr.; I., 308, 310.
   party; I., 410.
   Bentinck. See Bentinck.
 Cavendishes, the; I., 275.
 Cawne Bey, [3rd son of Aurung Zebe];
   I., 45.
 Cazal, Madame; III., 106, 107.
 Cazalès, Mons. de; III., 367.
 Cecil;
   Henry, Earl of Exeter; III., 251.
   James, 4th Earl of Salisbury; I., 89.

Cecil—cont.

James, 1st Marquis of Salisbury;
   III., 10.
 [Mary Amelia], Countess of Salisbury; I., 288, 462, 469.
 William, 1st Lord Burghley; I., 141, 312.
 Ceylon; II., 269.
   cession of, to England, demanded;
   III., 241, 348, 369, 378, 379.
   governor of; II., 286.
 Chabot;
   Duc de; II., 129.
   [Francois]; II., 462, 471, 488, 542;
   III., 493, 496.
   Lady Mary; I., 149.
 Chaffey, a convict; I., 517-519.
 Chagford, co. Devon; I., 116.
 Chalfont, co. Bucks; II., 209, 240.
   — St. Peter, co. Bucks; II., 328.
 Chalmers, Sir Robert; I., 519, 607.
 Châlon, of Lyons; III., 495.
 Chalons, in France; III., 448, 469, 470.
 Chambers;
   Sir Robert; I., 587.
   —, (Indian Judge); I., 510.
 Chamorra's hussars; III., 476.
 Champagne; II., 406; III., 476.
   barren plains of; III., 475.
   commander in; III., 448.
 Champfort, Monsieur; II., 473, 480.
 Chancery;
   clerk in; I., 87.
   Commissioners in; I., 64.
   Clerk of the Pleas in; I., 182.
   Court of; I., 12, 65, 84, 85 (2).
   —, bills in; I., 63, 86-89.
   —, enrollments in; I., 89.
   Masters in; I., 64, 85. And see Pitt,
   Thomas.
 Chandos;
   Dukes of. See Brydges.
   Dowager Duchess of (?) "the old lady;" III., 143.
 Channel, the English; I., 26; II., 278.
   fleet in, or Channel fleet; II., 408,
   468, 534, 608; III., 296. ships in; II., 419, 440.
   —, privateers; II., 369.
 Channel Islands, jurisdiction of; II., 423.
 Chantemerle, one; II., 583.
 Chantilli, near Paris; I., 147. massacre at; II., 517.
   prisoners at; II., 459.
 Chantreau, letters from, notes of; III., 540, 541.
 Chapellier, Mons. de; II., 358.
 Chaplin, or Chaplain, Mr.; I., 264-267,
   272-274, 291, 294, 334, 351, 356; II., 209, 285, 499.
 Chapman, Mr.; II., 306.
 Chapple, Serjeant William; I., 53 (2), 55, 59, 60, 65, 66 (2), 85, 88.
 Chapuy Tourville, taken prisoner by the Austrians; II., 585.
 Charette or Charrette, General; II., 527,
   530, 544, 563, 577; III., 139, 141,
   142, 175, 193, 539 (2), 540, 561.

- Charotte or Charrette, General—cont.
 said to have killed his prisoners; II., 563.
 in La Vendée; III., 15, 96–98. account of a mission to; III., 105–124.
 army of; III., 83, 96, 101, 110–123, 138, 362, 364, 394.
 capture of; III., 364.
 character of; III., 123.
 conversation with; III., 109–118.
 money sent to; III., 363.
 Mademoiselle, his sister; III., 106, 119, 122, 123.
 uncle of. See Fleuriot, Mons. de. cousin of. See Charotte de la Colinière, Monsieur.
 secretary of; III., 117, 118.
 Charotte de la Colinière, Monsieur; III., 112, 116–117.
 Chareville; I., 310.
 Charlemont, Earl of. See Caulfield, James.
 Charlemont; II., 410; III., 435.
 Charleroi, falls into the hands of the French; II., 592.
 Charles I., patent granted by; I., 472.
 Charles II., grants to the Crown in the reign of; I., 509.
 proclamation of, as King, allusion to; III., 532.
 Charles XII. See Sweden, King of.
 Charles, Archduke of Austria, titular King of Spain. See Austria.
 Charles, Archduke of Austria; II., 502, 503, 506, 516, 548, 603; III., 232, 243, 264, 294. suggested appointment of, to the command of the allied armies; II., 603.
 army of; III., 214, 215.
 Buonaparte writes to; III., 318, 324.
 hope that he may drive back Buonaparte; III., 313.
 jealousy of, by the Emperor; III., 294. popularity of, with his army; III., 294.
 portrait of; III., 267 (2).
 said to have brought about the treaty with France; III., 324, 328.
 successes of; III., 257, 258, 263, 267.
 Charles, (Garriek's factotum); I., 156.
 Charlestown, America; I., 184.
 breaches of neutrality at; III., 524.
 French consul at; III., 524.
 Lieut.-governor of; III., 524.
 merchant of, III., 524.
 Charlotte, Queen, wife of George III.; I. 398; II., 37, 243; III., 49, 316, 323, 402.
 as possible regent; I., 388, 392, 395, apartments of; III., 323. birthday fête of; I., 471.
 her ladies; II., 301. portrait of, asked for; III., 143.
 sponsorship of; I., 392, 393.
 master of the horse to; I., 536.
 Charlotte - Augusta - Matilda, Princess Royal, eldest daughter of George III.; II., 232, 234; III., 278, 290, 302. marriage of, to the Prince of Würtemberg. See Würtemberg, Hereditary Prince of. jewels, clothes, &c. for; III., 302.
 jointure and portion of; III., 299, 300.
 picture of; III., 299.
 Russian order presented to; III., 323 (2).
 Charlottenberg; II., 130.
 Chateau-Neuf de Rhendon; II., 584; III., 537.
 Chateaufieux, fête of; II., 266.
 Chatham, 1st Earl of. See Pitt, William.
 2nd Earl of. See Pitt, John.
 Chatham dockyard, officer in; I., 113.
 troops at; III., 257.
 island; I., 605 (2).
 —, Port Cornwallis in, letter dated at; I., 605.
 Chatillon, Mons. de; III., 394.
 Chatterton, Mr.; I., 521.
 Chaumette; II., 462, 471, 540, 542; III., 506, 507.
 arrest of; II., 541.
 Chauvelin, Marquis de, French ambassador in England; II., 266 (2), 267, 277–281, 283, 286, 303–305, 307, 331, 332, 364–367, 369, 370; III., 361.
 letters from; III., 460 (2).
 to leave England; II., 372 (3), 376.
 Chauvin. See Bethenay.
 Chauzaud, General; III., 467.
 Chearsley, —; I., 293.
 Cheltenham; I., 267, 268.
 the King at; I., 350.
 Chemillat, convention troops checked at; II., 530.
 Chepstow, co. Monmouth; I., 355.
 Chépy, Monsieur; II., 326.
 Cher, department of; III., 197.
 Cherbourg; I., 560; II., 402, 419, 463, 474, 501; III., 14.
 Fort d'Artois at; II., 402.
 Isle Pelée at; II., 402.
 Chersem [? Kherson]; II., 169.
 Chesham, co. Bucks; I., 258.
 Cheshire; I., 62 (2), 87.
 Chester, Bishop of. See Cleaver, Wm.
 Chester, deserters sent to; I., 184.
 Chesterfield, Earl of. See Stanhope, Philip.
 Chettle, Mr.; I., 15.
 —, estate of; I., 34 (2), 41 (2).
 Mrs.; I., 89 (2).
 Chettles, the family of; I., 61.
 Chetwynd, —; I., 115.
 Chevening, Kent; I., 65–71.
 Lady Stanhope buried at; I., 69.
 letter dated at; I., 79.
 Chichester:
 Arthur, 4th Earl of Donegal; I., 65.
 Arthur, 5th Earl; I., 566, 581.
 —, to be a marquis; II., 55, 83.

Chichester, letter dated at; III., 90. see of; I., 289.

Child:

Sir Cæsar & Co.; I., 63.

Sir Joshua; I., 15.

Chiltern hundreds, applicant for; I., 482.

China; I., 276, 588; II., 269.

Emperor of, embassy to; I., 484.

government of; I., 484.

Jesuits in; I., 3.

trade to; I., 1, 15, 22, 257, 484; II.,

180, 256, 286; III., 420, 421, 446.

travellers to; I., 2.

Chinese manufactures; I., 15.

Choezim; II., 169.

Choiseul, Duc de; II., 116; III., 57.

Choisy, Robespierre and his party at; II., 541, 542, 548-550.

Chollet; II., 545.

Cholmondeley:

George James, Earl of Cholmondeley;
II., 165; III., 49.

or Cholmley, Robert; I., 61, 62, 75, 84, 85, 87, 92, 135.

Mrs. [Essex, daughter of Governor
Pitt]; I., 56-59.

—, children of; I., 56.

Chouans and their chiefs; II., 581; III., 89, 90, 107, 108, 113, 115, 120-124, 175, 224.

Choudien; II., 576.

Chounes or Jones; II., 633.

Christchurch, co. Hants; I., 34, 42.

Christian, Captain; I., 567.

Christie, Mr.; I., 488.

note to; I., 489.

Christie's; II., 225.

Chroptowitz, Count; II., 244.

Church of England; I., 33, 77; II., 91.

divisions in; I., 19.

used for party purposes; I., 27.

High Church party in; I., 19, 28.

Church lands; I., 89.

Churchill, John, Duke of Marlborough;
I., 28-30.

— aide-de-camp of; I., 27.

— campaigns or victories of; I., 13, 27.

— palace of (Blenheim); I., 28.

Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, his wife; I., 28.

Circe, allusion to; I., 146.

Cicero's villa; II., 19.

Cifuentes, Count; II., 99.

Cillart, Comte de; II., 422, 425.

Ciminus, lake of; II., 5.

Ciney, in Flanders; III., 435.

Cinque Ports, the, Pitt made warden of;
II., 298.

Cipher, dictionary used for; II., 435.

letters written in; II., 188, 229, 248.

Circæan or Circe's promontory; II., 8, 19.

Civil List, charges on; II., 273, 621; III., 446, 454.

Clairfait (Clerfait, Clerfaye), General or Marshal, and his army; II., 326,
336, 389, 470, 507, 559, 570, 592,

Clairfait—cont.

598, 604, 617, 618, 628, 631, 640,
641; III., 68, 143, 156-159, 232, 314.

letters from; III., 21, 50, 517, 519.

his approach towards Guelderland;
II., 636.

crosses the Rhine; II., 640.

victory gained by; III., 145 (2), 146, 149.

offers to attack Dumourier; III., 475.
regiment of; III., 476.

Clanbrassil, Earl of. See Hamilton,
James.

Clanricarde, Earl of. See De Burgh,
Henry.

Clare, county, Roman Catholic delegates
in; II., 318.

Clare-hall (Lord Nugent's house); I., 330.

Clarence, Duke of. See William, Prince.

Clarendon, Earls of. See Hyde.

Clareudon Park, co. Wilts; I., 34, 42.

Clarke:

General; III., 76, 534.

Mr.; I., 77 (2), 89-85, 90.

—; III., 319.

Clauzel, —; III., 85.

Clavé, —; III., 493.

Clavering, Sir Thomas; I., 140.

Clavière [Etienne]; II., 334, 397.

Clear, Cape; II., 533.

Cleaver, Dr. William, Prebendary of Westminster and Bishop of Chester;
I., 174, 278, 285-289; II., 104, 105,
236, 299.

Cleghorn, Hugh; II., 439, 445.

letter from; II., 258.

Clements:

Harriet; I., 310.

Robert; I., 178.

—, as Lord Leitrim; I., 327, 489, 536.

Theophilus; I., 310.

—, wife of. See Clements, Harriet.
jeweller; I., 190.

Clementson, —; I., 610.

Cleopatra, allusion to; I., 143.

Clerfait. See Clairfait.

Clergy, supporters of the Pretender; I., 55.

Clermont, Lord. See Fortescue.

Clermont-Tonnere, Duc de; II., 301.

Clermont, Prussians driven back into;
III., 469.

Cleveland, Duke of. See Fitzroy, William.

Cleves; III., 224.

Duchy of; III., 407.

Clifden, Viscounts. See Agar.

Clifden, Prince of Wales at; I., 122 (2), 126.

Clifford, Lord; II., 593.

Clisson; II., 544.

Clive, Robert, 1st Lord Clive; I., 334.

Clonmel, Viscount. See Scott, John.

Clonmel, elections at; III., 557.

Clootz, Baron de; II., 438.

- Clyde and Forth, navigation between; I., 556.
- Coal, duty on and price of; I., 230, 231.
- Coalition Ministry, the (1783); I., 221. formation of; I., 197-209.
imbecility of; I., 211.
Lord Mornington's opinion of; I., 223, 249.
- Coatherley, —; I., 156.
- Cobentzel, Cobenzel or Cobenzl, Count;
II., 84, 130; III., 208, 246, 307, 395, 396.
to be the Austrian chief minister;
III., 284.
- Coblentz; II., 173, 275, 281, 283, 295, 335, 377; III., 519, 520.
French princes at; II., 164, 170.
—, called "the Jacobins of"; III., 479.
- Coburg, Cobourg, or Saxe Coburg, Frederick, Prince or Duke of;
II., 384, 387, 388, 390-392, 410, 426, 431, 438, 439, 444, 448, 470, 475, 476, 497 (2), 502-504, 507, 548, 557, 594, 605, 607, 616, 617; III., 505, 511, 514-516.
aides-de-camp of; II., 603.
army of; II., 386, 390-392, 410, 532 534, 536, 547, 548, 610.
inactivity or insufficiency of; II., 491, 506, 603.
retreat of; II., 451, 592, 606.
— unsuccessful attack of, upon the enemy; II., 592, 593.
suggested removal of, from the command; II., 603.
- Coccia; III., 510.
- Cochin; II., 286; III., 241, 369.
cession of; I., 601, 606.
demanded by England; III., 348.
- Cochon; III., 198.
- Cockburn, Cockburne:
Archibald; I., 586.
Sir James; II., 297 (2), 298.
—, son of; II., 297, 298.
- Cockroft, Captain; I., 20.
- Coeverden or Coeverden, in Holland; III., 212.
fort of; III., 194.
- Coffin, —; I., 542.
- Coigny, Mons. de; II., 153.
- Coimbatour; II., 103.
- Coin, melting down of; I., 10.
- Coinage:
silver; I., 350.
copper; I., 302, 350, 361.
- Coining, a woman sentenced to be burnt for; I., 586.
- Cointré, Mons.; III., 245, 365.
- Coish, —; I., 541, 542.
- Colchen, Monsieur; III., 339, 340, 371, 377.
- Colchester; II., 267; III., 11.
- Cold Harbour, letters dated at; II., 289, 307.
- Cole:
William Willoughby, Viscount Enniskillen; I., 268.
- Cole—cont.
Mr.; I., 111.
—, brother of; I., 111.
- Colla, suspected assassin; III., 510, 511.
- Colli, Mons. de; III., 124, 125.
- Collioure:
capitulation of; II., 584.
commander of; II., 583.
- Collot d'Herbois [Jean Marie]; II., 140, 526, 527, 543, 550, 574, 582, 584, 616; III., 491, 498, 504-506, 531.
attempt to assassinate; II., 579.
character of; III., 494.
fall of; II., 633; III., 531.
- Colnbrook, co. Bucks; I., 265.
- Cologne; II., 118, 536, 603, 606; III., 146, 519.
Elector of; II., 578; III., 139.
letter dated at; II., 605.
- Colombier, a doctor; II., 538.
- Colonial government, discussions upon the best form of; I., 504-510.
- Colonies, the; I., 155, 179, 567.
of the ancients; I., 504.
American. See American Colonies. convicts in. See Convicts. management of, to remain with the Home Office; II., 597 (2).
Prize Courts in; III., 533, 534. safety of; III., 478.
Vice-Admiralty Courts in; III., 533.
- Colorado, Prince, Vice-Chancellor of Prussia; II., 525.
- Colpoys, Admiral; III., 97.
- Colquhoun, P.; I., 604; II., 249 (2); III., 104.
letters from; II., 145, 157, 160, 197, 228; III., 104.
letters to; II., 145, 197, 228 (2).
- Columbez, Monsieur; III., 131.
- Combe, squire of. See Harvey, Mr.
- Commercial treaty (1786); I., 274 (2).
- Commerce in Lorraine, club at; II., 532.
- Common Pleas, Lord Chief Justice of [1722-1727]. See Wyndham, Thomas.
- Commons, House of. See under Parliament.
- Commutation Act, the; III., 445.
- Compiègne; II., 548; III., 484.
- Comtesse, Madame la; III., 197.
- Condé [Louis Joseph de Bourbon], Prince de; II., 83, 85-87, 103, 122, 133, 153, 161, 418, 604; III., 5, 18, 102, 131-133, 181, 223, 333 (2).
army of; II., 421; III., 1, 18, 45, 105, 135, 303. son of. See Bourbon, Duc de. grandson of. See Enghien, Duc de.
- Condé, town of, commandant of; III., 517.
—, siege and fall of; II., 392, 405, 599, 602.
corps; II., 614.
- Condorcet, Mons. de; II., 69; III., 466.
- Coningsby (Conyngsby), Thomas, Lord Coningsby; I., 25, 472.
letter of; I., 10.
son of; I., 10.

- Conolly, Thomas; I., 191, 225, 255, 255, 297, 299, 303, 306, 388, 389, 396, 419, 435, 443, 492; II., 11.
 followers of; I., 466.
- Constantinople; II., 23, 62, 137, 144, 163; III., 169, 233, 371. ambassadors, ministers, or embassies at; II., 71, 100, 164, 387, 394, 458, 472. And see Sutton, Sir Robert.
- French commissioners to; II., 510, 511, 515, 573.
 planned attack on; II., 66, 87, 88, 123.
 reported English intrigues at; III., 462.
 trading house at; II., 226.
- Continho, Don Dioso Perreira Forjaies da, Governor-General of the Madeiras; III., 400.
- Contye, Chevalier; III., 181.
- Convicts; I., 257, 524, 556.
 Acts of Parliament concerning; I., 524, 545-555.
 employment of, in Scotland; I., 555-557, 560.
 Irish. See Irish Convicts.
 prefer death to transportation; I., 516-523.
 transportation of; I., 482, 483, 524, 543-555, 605.
- Conway:
 Count de; I., 353 (2), 354.
 General Henry Seymour; I., 173, 184, 196, 202.
 —, as Field Marshal; III., 14.
 family; I., 174, 210.
- Conyngham. See Cunningham.
- Coodalore, India, letter dated from; I., 4.
- Cooke, Cook:
 Edward; I., 164, 210, 222, 255, 404, 422, 473, 511, 515.
 —, made military secretary; I., 445.
 —, brother of; I., 164.
 Sir Thomas; I., 8, 27, 30, 34, 38, 40.
 Captain; II., 456.
 —; III., 9.
- Cookstown, Ireland, affray in; III., 385.
- Cooper:
 Anthony Ashley, 4th Earl of Shaftesbury; I., 60.
 [Thomas] of Manchester; II., 266, 333; III., 466.
 —, writings and speech of; II., 327, 328.
- Coote:
 Charles, Lord Bellamont; I., 177, 193, 199, 205, 411, 412, 469, 478.
 —, refuses the Rolls in Ireland; I., 479.
 —, wishes to have the Post Office; I., 479.
 —, wife of; I., 469.
 Sir Eyre; I., 564 (?), 567.
 —, nephew of; I., 567.
 Major; I., 329, 330.
 Mr.; I., 256, 352, 409, 564, 567.
 —; II., 238.
- Cope, Mr.; I., 8, 9, 17, 21, 25, 30, 43, 46.
 letter to; I., 15.
- Copenhagen, I., 47, 353; II., 32, 38, 147, 290.
 [Court of]; III., 60.
 —, negotiations with; II., 22; III., 70.
 Lord Glenorchy goes to; I., 76.
 Lord Robert Fitzgerald to go to; III., 90.
 French minister at; II., 518.
 Prussian minister at; II., 73.
- Copley, Mr.; II., 64.
- Copper; I., 271, 274.
And see Coinage.
- Coppinger, —; I., 209, 210.
- Corbesier, Monsieur; II., 264.
- Corbet, Sir Corbet; II., 105, 113.
- Cordelier; II., 544.
- Cork, I., 41, 75, 165, 200, 231, 421, 549, 582, 585.
 Bishop of. See Foster, William.
 — proposed; I., 571.
 commissary of provisions at; III., 545.
 freedom of, silver box containing; I., 330.
 review at; I., 222.
 ships to and from; I., 248, 314; II., 402.
 troops at; I., 290, 302; II., 429, 452, 492.
 — going to; III., 136, 142.
- Cork, county; I., 221; II., 41, 481.
- Cormartin, Baron de (Theobalde); III., 122, 536, 538, 540, 541.
 letters from, notes of; III., 537-539.
- Corn, export of; I., 549, 550; III., 59.
- Cornbury, Lord. See Hyde, Henry.
- Cornbury, co. Oxford; I., 96, 97, 101.
- Cornish metal company; I., 262.
- Cornwall, Duke of. See Frederick, Prince of Wales.
- Cornwall, I., 62, 68, 70, 73, 107; II., 304.
 assizes in; I., 126.
 election affairs in; I., 65-67, 116.
 monopoly association in; I., 274.
 sheriff of; I., 592.
 Stannaries in. See Stannaries.
- Cornwallis:
 Charles, Earl (and in 1792, Marquis) Cornwallis; I., 484, 494, 519, 557 (2), 590, 607; II., 57, 103, 191-193, 209, 227, 298, 307, 321, 502, 506-508, 546, 552, 566, 577, 601, 602, 606, 607, 621; III., 90, 93, 236, 270, 416, 593.
 —, letters from, III., 34, 45.
 —, at meetings of the Cabinet; III., 283, 310, 330.
 —, return of, to England; II., 608, 610.
 —, journey of, to Flanders; II., 631.
 —, army of; II., 185 (2), 297.
 Commodore William; I., 591, 604, 605.

- Coromandel, coast of; I., 47, 276.
 President and consul of; I., 3.
- Corry:
 Armar Lowry, Lord Belmore; I., 437, 469, 499, 516, 525, 536.
 Mr.; I., 299, 352, 365, 367, 389, 409; II., 405.
- Corse, "ce petit." See Buonaparte.
- Corsica; II., 355, 392, 399, 407, 412, 442, 523, 584, 649; III., 2, 5, 148.
 English troops in, or for; II., 523, 525, 526; III., 25, 267. possession of, by England; III., 12.
 proposed cession of, to Russia; III., 261.
- Corsicans, the; III., 2.
- Corunna; II., 376, 387, 533. packet boats; II., 409.
 Vice-consul at; II., 187, 195.
- Costheim, capture of; II., 403.
- Cosway, portrait of the Queen to be "prepared" by; III., 143.
- Coté-bien, camp of, letters dated at; III., 467, 468, 470.
- Cotterell, Cottrell:
 Sir Charles, master of the ceremonies (in 1707); I., 30.
 Mr.; II., 195.
 [Stephen]; I., 308, 315, 342.
- Cotton, Colonel; I., 75.
- Coulson, Mr.; I., 8, 34.
- Council, the. See Privy Council.
 Board; I., 290.
 Books; I., 542.
 Office; II., 620.
 for Trade; II., 228.
- Courland; II., 233; III., 391, 392.
 Duke and Duchess of; II., 217.
 —, daughters of; II., 217, 269.
 Duchy of; II., 217.
- Court, the; I., 61, 68, 102, and passim.
 mourning at; I., 50; III., 293.
 presentation at, desired; III., 89.
 the Prince forbidden; I., 62.
 residents at or visitors to; I., 94, 101.
- "Court and Cabinets of George III," letter published in; II., 631.
- Courtiers, in the House of Commons; I., 33.
- Courtois, —; III., 85.
- Courtown, Earl of. See Stopford, James.
- Courtrai or Courtray, II., 391, 547, 559.
 retreat of the French from; II., 287.
- Courts of Law, officers of; I., 460.
- Courvoisier, a messenger; III., 6.
- Coutances; II., 581.
- Couthon [Georges]; II., 548, 551, 560, 563, 568, 580, 584, 586, 590; III., 491.
 character of, III., 493.
 illness of; III., 505.
 note signed by; II., 588.
 fall of; II., 616.
- Coutts [Thomas?]; I., 293, 444; III., 281.
- Couturier, apothecary; II., 603.
 brother of; II., 603.
- Coventry; I., 52, 481.
- Coverden. See Coeverden.
- Cowderd [? Coeverden]; II., 24.
- Cowes, squadron at; II., 501.
- Cowper, —; III., 11.
- Cox, Mr.; I., 157.
- Coxheath; II., 396.
- Cracow, II., 563.
 palatinate of; III., 562.
- Craddock, Cradock:
 Capt. or Major; I., 292, 336, 337.
 —, as Lieut.-Colonel; I., 486, 531.
 —, as Colonel; I., 570.
 "cousin"; I., 15, 26.
 Mr.; I., 457, 576; II., 16.
- Craggs, Mr.; I., 30, 37.
- Craig, Lieut.-Colonel or Colonel; I., 335; II., 431, 497, 558, 559.
- Cramer, Mr.; I., 383.
- Crauford, Craufurd, Crawford:
 Captain; II., 387, 390.
 — report by; II., 390.
 Colonel or General; II., 604; III., 91, 130-132, 205, 206, 214.
 —, report of the death of; III., 243, 253.
 James; II., 356.
 —, letter from; II., 356.
 John; II., 400, 403-405, 407, 468, 497.
 —, letters from; II., 403, 407, 497.
 Quintin; II., 604, 605.
 Mr.; II., 329, 535; III., 332, 333.
- Craven, Lady; II., 241.
- Crawford. See Crauford.
- Creighton:
 John, Viscount [and in 1789, Earl of], Erne; I., 352, 468.
 —, brothers of; 352.
 Lieutenant; I., 352, 355.
 —, father of; I., 352.
- Creuznach (Creutzenach); II., 392.
- Crewther, a convict; I., 517.
- Cricklade, co. Wilts, election at; I., 117.
- Crimea, the; I., 281; II., 135, 140; III., 74.
 taken by Russia; II., 45.
- Crissick or Cressiske, John; I., 62 (3), 68.
 letter to; I., 72.
- Croatia, troops of; III., 266.
- Croix. See Delacroix.
- Croix, in Champagne; III., 476.
- Cromwell, Robespierre likened to, by his followers; III., 492.
- Cronstadt (Cronstat), III., 391.
 naval dépôt at; III., 292.
- Crookshanks [Alexander, Justice of Common Pleas, Ireland]; I., 382.
- Crosbie, John, Earl of Glandore; I., 299, 412, 413, 432.
 —, to have half the Rolls in Ireland; I., 486.
 —, as Colonel of the Kerry militia; III., 389.
 or Crosby, Mr.; II., 266, 268, 274.
- Cross Fell; I., 594.
- Crown, the, influence or power of; I., 193, 214, 216, 217, 245.

Crown, the—cont.

- jewels given as security ; I., 62.
- law officers of ; I., 539.
- livings in the gift of ; II., 432, 439 (2).
- patronage of ; I., 322.
- revenues of ; I., 508, 509.
- succession to, alluded to ; I., 188.
- Cuffe, — ; I., 180, 182, 253, 254, 294, 441.
- salary of ; I., 229.
- Cuinotte ; II., 391.
- Cuiricky, Monsieur ; II., 471.
- Culenburg (Kuilenburg) in Holland ; III., 21.
- Culloden, battle of, alluded to ; III., 466.
- Cumberland :
  - [Anne], Duchess of ; I., 365.
  - Duke of, at Culloden ; III., 466.
  - militia ; II., 336.
- Cumæ, in Italy ; II., 19.
- Temple of Apollo at ; II., 19.
- Cunningham, Cuningham, Conyngham :
  - Burton ; I., 297.
  - Colonel ; I., 589.
  - Francis Pierpoint Burton, Lord ; I., 256.
  - Henry, Lord ; I., 499, 516, 525, 536 ; II., 15, 16.
  - , nephew of ; I., 536.
  - General [Robert] ; I., 169, 175, 176, 178, 187, 209, 374, 375, 379.
  - ; III., 338, 339, 358.
- Curaçao ; II., 152.
- Cureton, Mr. ; I., 74.
- Curgenvin, Rev. Mr. ; I., 9, 21, 22, 31, 34.
- letters to ; I., 3 (2).
- Curran, Mr. ; I., 303, 306, 307, 409, 568-570, 572 ; III., 37.
- Curtis, Sir Roger ; III., 328, 329.
- Custine, General ; II., 331, 519.
- army of ; II., 327, 519 ; III., 483.
- , defeat of ; II., 357.
- Custom House ; I., 153, 193, 230, 299.
- Customs, Commissioners of, order to ; III., 251.
- and Excise ; I., 274.
- , officers of ; I., 247.
- Cutting, John Brown ; II., 160.
- letter from ; II., 228.
- Cutts, John, Lord, letter to ; I., 2.
- Cuxhaven ; III., 92, 198, 290, 315, 322.
- agent at ; III., 222.
- letter dated at ; III., 315.
- Cuyler, General ; II., 438.
- Czarsko Zelo or Zarsko Zeloe ; II., 114, 149.
- Czartorisky, Prince Adam ; II., 190.

D.

- D., Monsieur ; III., 449.
- D., Madame ; III., 65.
- husband of ; III., 65.
- Dagge, (Lord Camelford's steward) ; I., 263.
- Dagobert, General ; II., 487.
- Dalkeith, Earl of. See Scott.
- Dallas, Lieutenant ; II., 16.
- Dalling, John, Governor of Jamaica ; I., 232.
- Dalmatia ; III., 332.
- Dalrymple :
  - John, Lord Dalrymple ; I., 273, 278.
  - , as Earl of Stair ; I., 602, 603 ; II., 315.
  - Sir John, Baron of Exchequer, Scotland ; I., 586.
  - General ; I., 594.
- Dalton ; I., 544 ; III., 463.
- Daly, Dennis, Muster-Master-General in Ireland ; I., 225, 246, 251, 253, 254, 259, 380, 381, 388, 399, 402, 410.
- as M.P. for co. Galway ; I., 236.
- Damas, Comte Charles de ; II., 116.
- Danes, or the Danes ; II., 61, 211, 385, 615.
- irruption of, into Sweden ; I., 360.
- Danican, General ; III., 181.
- Danish :
  - chargé d'Affaires, at Paris ; III., 239, 255 (2).
  - fisheries ; I., 189.
  - messengers ; III., 52, 57.
  - ministry ; II., 38.
  - naval officers ; III., 67.
  - ships or Danes ; I., 3, 29, 36, 43, 45, 47 ; III., 14, 59, 92, 105.
  - treaty ; III., 87.
- Dante ; II., 119.
- Danton, George Jacques ; II., 480, 514, 531, 532, 542, 555, 560-562 ; III., 85, 473, 490, 493, 495, 500, 504, 507, 508.
- as Garde de Sceau ; III., 463.
- dictatorship of. See Robespierre.
- his project for proclaiming Louis XVII. ; II., 616.
- friends of ; III., 85.
- Dantzig ; I., 612 ; II., 48, 59, 64, 74 ; III., 475.
- Danube, the river ; II., 22, 91, 113 (?).
- Darçon or Darson, President of the French Committee of war ; II., 547, 548, 563, 569, 572, 576, 580, 582, 583, 586, 587.
- character of ; III., 493.
- Darcy, Mary, Countess of Holderness ; I., 153 ; II., 414.
- Dardanelles, the ; I., 613 ; II., 62, 87, 88, 169.
- Darmfeld ; II., 581.

- Darmstadt; II., 396.
troops of; II., 431, 559.
- Dartigoyle. See Artigoëte, de.
- Dartmoor, Crockenden Tor, on; I., 116.
- Dasharama [Hindoo]; I., 1.
- Dashwood:
Sir J.; II., 476.
—, son of; II., 476.
“young”; I., 263.
—; I., 264, 334.
- D'Aubigny, Duchy of; II., 544.
- Dauphiny, Dauphiné:
scarcity in; III., 83, 490.
troops to be raised in; II., 487.
- Davenport, T., letter of; I., 10.
brother of; I., 10.
- David, citizen; II., 586, 633.
- Davie, Joseph, vice-consul at Corunna;
II., 187.
widow of; II., 187, 195, 330.
- Davis (convict); I., 517.
- Dawes:
Sir William, Bart., Archbishop of York; I., 55.
—; I., 319, 375, 378.
- Dawson, Mr., Lieut.-Governor of the Isle of Man; I., 489.
- Dawson-Damer, John, Earl of Port-arlington; I., 412, 514, 560; III., 388.
- Dayrell, Captain; I., 275, 315; II., 437.
- Deal; II., 285, 323; III., 103.
letter dated at; III., 11.
- Dean Court, Kent, residents at; I., 118.
- Deane, Robert Tilson, Baron Muskerry;
I., 190, 197.
- Dear, Mr., proposal to; I., 117.
reply of; I., 118.
- Deas, Mr.; III., 87.
- Debrett, advertisement by; I., 277.
- De Burgh, Henry, 12th Earl (and in 1785)
1st Marquis of Clanricarde; I., 177,
186, 406, 424, 426, 436.
- Deene, co. Northampton; I., 97.
letter addressed to; I., 96.
- Defurz, Baron; II., 258.
- Degelman, Baron; III., 239.
- De Grey, Thomas, Lord Walsingham, as vice-treasurer in Ireland; 238, 277.
to be ambassador to Spain; I., 264.
- De la Clos; III., 481.
- De la Croix, Charles; III., 161, 263, 268, 269, 275, 276, 279, 280, 291, 339, 341, 370, 371, 373.
character of; III., 160.
- Delancy, Colonel; I., 347.
- Delaval, Sir J.; I., 489.
- Delaware:
Bay of; III., 524.
Capes of; III., 524.
- Delawarr, Baron and Earl. See West.
- Del Campo, Marquis, Spanish ambassador
in England; I., 579, 603; II., 52-54,
188, 189, 204, 383, 386, 398, 406; III., 10, 143, 197, 242, 262, 350-352.
- Delft, in Holland; III., 417, 418, 426.
- Delftziel, in Groningen; III., 164, 205.
- Delhi; I., 243.
- Deloraine, Lord; I., 108.
- Delvin, Lord. See Nugent, George Frederick.
- Demerara (Demerary); II., 105, 364.
- Demosthenes, lantern of, allusion to; I., 140.
- Dengan, or Dangan, Ireland; I., 286.
Castle of; I., 463, 476, 478 (2).
letters dated from; I., 162, 163, 221.
- Denmark, Queen of; II., 114, 124.
- Denmark; II., 22, 47, 61, 227, 512, 554,
569, 573, 580, 581; III., 77, 148,
224, 225, 431.
ministers or envoys from, to foreign courts; II., 70, 93, 541. And see under the several countries.
minister to, from England. See Elliot, Hugh.
— from Holland; III., 48. and France; II., 556, 578. controversy with, conference concerning; III., 58-60.
- Court of; II., 38, 73, 79, 389,
567.
—, agent from; II., 567.
—, reported treaty of, with France;
II., 574, 576.
invasion of Sweden by; II., 48.
military preparations in; I., 353.
ships of. See Danish ships.
trade of, or with; I., 47; III., 59, 420.
- Denny, William; I., 118.
letter to; I., 117.
letter from; I., 118.
- Depréaux [Madame?]; II., 517.
- De Pres, Monsieur; III., 362.
- Derby, Earls of. See Stanley.
- Derby militia; II., 336.
- Derry; I., 177, 178.
Dean of. See Stone, George.
- Derwentwater, Earl of. See Radclyffe,
James.
- Desardrouin, Mr.; II., 636; III., 148, 234.
- Deschamps, Mons.; I., 158.
- Descorches; II., 510, 511.
- Desmoullins, Camille; III., 490, 505. expulsion of; 504.
“Le Vieux Cordelier” by; III., 504.
- Dessin, Monsieur, of Calais; I., 593, 594.
- Detroit, fort of; II., 611; III., 527.
- Deux Ponts, Duke of; II., 46, 454, 503,
504; III., 228.
- Devagnes, —; I., 256 (2).
- Deventer, in Holland; II., 640, 641; III., 22-24.
- De Vesci, Lord; I., 261.
- Devonshire, Dukes of. See Cavendish.
- Devonshire, I., 355; II., 289, 304.
elections in; I., 116.
Stannaries of; I., 114.
- Diamond Island; I., 605.
- Dickens, —; II., 92.
- Dickenson, Mr.; III., 104.
- Dieppe; II., 441.
- Dieu or d'Yeu, Isle; II., 431, 455; III., 140, 141, 362, 363.

Digby, Mr. and Mrs. ; I., 106.

Dijon, chateau near ; III., 84.

Dillon :

Arthur, general in the French service ;
III., 469, 471, 476.

[Charles], Baron ; I., 433 (2).

—, sons of ; I., 483 (2).

Mr. ; I., 563.

Dillon's corps ; III., 25.

Dinant, in Brittany ; III., 435, 538.

Diogenes, allusion to ; I., 141.

Dissenters ; I., 33 ; II., 13, 89, 237, 271.

popular feeling against ; II., 136, 140.

Ditsichstein ; III., 396.

Divernois, Monsieur ; III., 213.

Dives, Mrs. ; I., 92, 93.

Dixon, William, Bishop of Down ; I., 377.

Dniester (Niestor), the river ; II., 22, 49, 67, 71, 73, 77.

free navigation of ; II., 50, 52, 65, 134, 156, 162, 169.

Dobbyn, Mr. (lawyer) ; I., 13, 14.

Dock officers ; I., 541.

Dockyards ; II., 412.

alarm concerning ; II., 136, 137.

Doctors' Commons' business ; II., 273.

Doddington ; II., 179.

Dodginton, Mr. ; I., 30.

Doesburg on the Yssel ; III., 23, 24.

Doggett (Lord Buckingham's steward), suicide of ; I., 263.

Dolben :

Sir Gilbert, letter of ; I., 17.

John ; I., 1, 2, 22, 26, 31 (2), 33, 38, 40, 41, 46, 47.

— letters to ; I., 21, 28, 31, 36, 38,
40, 43.

Dollard, the river ; III., 212.

Domville, Dr. ; I., 142.

Don, Colonel ; II., 656.

Donaghadee ; I., 350.

Donegal, Earl and Marquis of. See Chichester, Arthur.

Donegal Bay, Ireland ; I., 196.
resident in ; I., 395, 404.

Doneraile, Ireland ; I., 290.

Donet, Monsieur, late fermier-général ;
II., 459.

Dönhof, Countess of ; II., 246, 276-278, 280, 292, 325.

"the favourite lady" at Berlin ; II., 122.

Donira Lodge, in Perthshire, letters dated
at ; I., 268, 597, 602, 604 (3), 607, 610.

Donissant, Mons. de ; II., 527.

Donoughmore, Lord. See Hely-Hutchinson,
Richard.

"Don Quichotte du Nord" ; II., 150.

Don Quixote and his Dulcinea, allusion to,
I., 161.

Dorchester, Lord. See Carleton, Guy.

Dorchester, member for ; I., 65, 172.

Dordt, pensionary of ; III., 444.

Dorrington, Mr., of Thame ; I., 267.

Dorset, Dukes of. See Sackville.

Dorset, county of ; I., 53, 68, 72 ; II., 179.
association for ; I., 54-56.

Dorset, county of—cont.

lands in ; I., 14, 32.

M.P.'s for ; I., 60.

militia ; II., 436.

places in ; I., 3, 11, 51, 53, 219.

Dorton, co. Bucks ; I., 267, 561.

Douay, Merlin de, character of ; III., 86.

Douai (Doué), in France ; II., 544, 545, 557.

Doufront, army of la Vendée at ; II., 463.

Douglas :

Lady Catherine ; II., 296.

Charles, 3rd Duke of Queensberry ;
I., 95, 97, 105.

—, wife of [Catherine], Duchess of Queensberry ; I., 105, 106.

—, letters of, 94-105.

—, sons of ; I., 96-98, 101, 103.
And see Douglas, Henry and Charles.

Lord Charles, second son of the Duke of Queensberry ; I., 100, 103.

Dunbar Hamilton, Earl of Selkirk ; I., 591, 596, 597, 602.

George, Earl of Morton ; I., 597.

Henry, Lord Drumlanrig ("Drum") eldest son of the Duke of Queensberry ; I., 101.

Robert (brother-in-law of Governor
Pitt) ; I., 36.

—, letter of ; I., 9.

William, 4th Duke of Queensberry ;
I., 603.

"Cousin" [? son of Robert] ; I., 17.
—, (clergyman) ; I., 285, 289.

Mr., M.P. ; I., 108, 113.

Mr., arrested ; I., 66.

Mons. de, commandant of artillery ;
II., 527.

and Sherley, Messrs. ; I., 15.

Dover, Lord ; II., 220.

Dover, II., 211, 316 ; III., 141, 260.

Custom House and officers of customs at ; II., 315, 316.

landing of French emigrants at ; II., 315.

letters dated at ; I., 558 ; II., 211,
315 ; III., 260, 376, 473.

post office at ; II., 372.

Prince Edward arrives at ; I., 558, 559.

travellers to and from ; I., 593 ; II.,
303, 307, 316, 325 ; III., 136.

Down, Alexander, translation by ; I., 263.

Down, Bishop of. See Dixon, William.

Down, county, militia of ; III., 387.

Down House, letter dated from ; I., 134.

Downs, the, ships coming to or in ; I., 53 ;
II., 324, 423.

Downshire, Marquis of. See Hill, Wills.

Downton, co. Wilts ; I., 125.

Doyle :

General ; III., 98-102, 138, 140-142.

Major ; I., 337, 347 (2), 348, 350,
351, 354.

(lawyer) ; I., 209, 210.

Doz, Miekie or Mary; II., 492.

Drake :
 Francis, British envoy at Genoa; III., 129.
 —, appointed resident at Venice; II., 364.
 —, letters from; II., 456, 509, 513, 517, 523, 526, 536, 541, 546, 552, 560, 566, 574, 578; III., 124.
 —, letter to; II., 524.
 —, bulletins enclosed by. See Paris, bulletins from.
 Henry; I., 118.
 —, letter of; I., 116.
 —; I., 266, 590; II., 282, 284, 285.
 Mr. (at Copenhagen); II., 32, 73.
 "young"; I., 334.

Drayton, letter dated from; I., 106.

Drethe, province of; III., 141, 156, 177, 191 (2)

Dresden; II., 162. china; II., 252.
 Court of; II., 208.
 letters dated at; II., 209; III., 294.
 minister at; II., 199, 205-208, 210, 211.
 secretary of legation at; II., 199, 214.
 travellers to or from; II., 222, 224, 367; III., 322, 326.

Dressin or Dressings (messenger); II., 70, 76, 134, 350, 409.

Drewe, Captain; I., 555.

Drogheda, Earl and Marquis of. See Moore, Charles.

Drogheda, port of; I., 549.

Droitwyche, co. Worcester :
 election at; I., 119.
 letter dated from; I., 119.

Dromore, Bishop of. See Percy, Thomas.

Droptmore, co. Bucks; II., 318, 320, 322, 388, 397, 416, 417, 512, 650; III., 58, 143, 149, 166, 214, 230, 293, 342, 368.
 letters dated at; II., 425, 447, 484, 485, 596, 606; III., 77, 92, 167, 200, 235, 249, 253, 260, 267, 306, 332, 335 (2), 342, 343, 344, 346, 352, 361, 369, 378, 380, 406, 407.
 sheep, trees &c., to be sent to; III., 390.
 visitors to; II., 324, 325, 333, 337, 338, 436, 441, 446, 465, 469, 485, 486; III., 242 (2), 337, 338.

Drouet, Monsieur; II., 116, 445, 457, 459, 461.

Drummond :
 John, Lord Melford; I., 51.
 —, son of; I., 51.
 the banker; II., 353.
 Ensign; II., 50.
 —; I., 357, 358.

Drummond's Bank; II., 354, 280.

Drury, Sir Thomas; I., 108, 122.

Du Barraud; II., 531.

Dublin, Countess of; II., 165, 166.

Dublin, I., 139, 164, 172, 222 (2), 226, 229, 230, 231, 237, 289, 292, 339, 342, 355, 366, 438, 476, 494, 547; II., 255; III., 546.

aldermen of; I., 577.

Archbishop of. See Fowler, Robert.

buildings, streets, &c. in :
 Castle; I., 165, 229, 294, 295, 359, 514, 584; II., 17; III., 544, 553.
 —, letters dated at; I., 165, 168-191, 194-212, 241, 242, 292-306, 309 (2), 312, 314-325, 347 (2), 350, 358-476, 491, 501, 544, 549, 551, 556, 559-562, 566 (2), 568-571, 577, 578, 581, 583, 584; II., 3, 13, 15 (2), 20, 21, 28, 30 (2), 35 (2), 37-43, 50, 55, 66, 83, 101, 186, 235, 255, 330; III., 9, 17, 206, 314, 399.
 —, ball at; I., 197.
 —, council chamber in; I., 294.
 —, council or consultation at; I., 222, 224, 225.
 —, garrison at; I., 347.
 —, household at; I., 204.
 —, St. Patrick's Hall in; 471.
 —, unwholesome air of; I., 419.

College or University, Trinity College; I., 299.

—, Chancellor of. See William Henry, Duke of Gloucester.

—, Vice-Chancellor and visitor of; II., 77, 84.

—, Provost of. See Hely Hutchinson, John.

—, Provost and fellows of; II., 84; III., 36.

—, Vice-Chancellorship of, accepted by Lord Fitzgibbon; II., 84, 93.

College Green; I., 223, 449.

Custom House, clerk in; I., 262 (2).

Merrion Square, letters dated from; I., 163, 220, 225.

Newgate, prisoners in; I., 223, 230.

Parliament House; I., 223, 228.

Phoenix Lodge or Park (Lord Lieutenant's residence); I., 294, 303.

—, letters dated at; I., 165, 203, 299, 300, 307, 310, 326, 328-331, 333; III., 385, 386, 390.

—, Park, houses in; I., 294.

convicts sent to; I., 542, 560.

Corporation of; I., 577.

garrison and forces of; I., 186, 208, 339.

government of; III., 547.

hawkers in the streets of; I., 608.

letters addressed to; I., 313, 341.

letters dated at; I., 221-229, 233-237, 243-255, 270, 332, 342, 478

Dublin, letters dated at—cont.

- (2), 498, 536, 554, 561; II., 129.
And see Castle and Phoenix Park, above.
 Lord Mayor of; I., 223, 224, 555, 577.
 —, dinner given by; I., 294.
 magistrates of; I., 228, 553.
 M.P. for; I., 222. mob of; I., 223; II., 238, 330; III., 546. packet boats of; I., 355.
 port of; I., 549.
 price of wheat in; I., 550.
 quiet restored in; I., 234.
 Recorder of; I., 191.
 reports or opinion in; I., 215, 388, 389, 446, 449; II., 184; III., 13, 17. residents in, or visitors to; I. and II., passim. return of the Irish embassy to; I., 433.
 riots in; I., 224, 227.
 sheriffs of; I., 547, 560.
 Dublin Evening Post; I., 175.
 Dublin, county, desires that Lord Temple should remain; I., 200, 201.
 Du Bois:
 Charles, letters from; I., 13, 20.
 de Crancé; II., 531.
 —, as commander of the army of the Alps; III., 485.
 Du Cange, Monsieur; II., 278, 279, 286.
 Duchess, the; I., 37.
 Duff, James, Earl of Fife; I., 406, 568, 570.
 Dufour; III., 537–540.
 Dugommier, General, commander of the army of the Pyrenees; II., 481, 519, 522, 528, 532, 576, 580, 583.
 army of; II., 520.
 Duhem, Député; III., 62.
 Dulwich, letter dated at; II., 230.
 Dumas, Comte Mathieu; II., 515, 517–520, 523, 546, 547.
 as general of the army of the Alps; II., 576.
 Dumbarton Fencibles, officer of; III., 385, 389, 390.
 Dumervant, General; II., 576.
 Dumonceau, General; III., 164.
 Dumont, André, character of; III., 65.
 Dumouriez or Dumourier, General; II., 265, 266, 278, 284, 331, 334, 336, 341, 343, 344, 353, 356, 357, 360, 371, 377–383, 401 (2), 403, 518–520; III., 469–471, 474, 475, 478, 485, 498. army of; II., 319, 352, 356, 379, 389–391, 519; III., 467, 469, 470, 475, 498. defeat of; III., 472.
 overtures of, to the English Government; II., 373, 377.
 his revolt, and march on Paris; II., 389–392; III., 491.
 intended arrest of; II., 391.

Dumouriez or Dumourier—cont.

- retreat of, from Flanders; II., 598.
 memoirs of, sale of; III., 64.
 Du Montier, of the French guard; III., 513.
 Duncan, Admiral, and his fleet; III., 327–329, 380, 381.
 has only two vessels with him; III., 329.
 the Order of St. Alexander bestowed upon; III., 369. victory of (at Camperdown); III., 381 (3).
 Dundas:
 Colonel Francis, quartermaster-general in Ireland; I., 290, 345.
 — to be adjutant-general; I., 348.
 —, as General; II., 123, 195, 212, 481, 482, 523, 524; III., 89, 91, 141, 150, 243.
 Henry; I., 257, 258, 297, 300, 302, 309, 316, 383, 535, 587, 602.
 —, as Home Secretary; II., 101, 171, 178, 191, 213, 214, 235 (2), 250, 302, 303, 320, 323, 372 (3), 373, 402, 431, 435, 437, 438, 441, 443, 444, 447, 448, 475, 476, 483 (2), 502, 503, 505, 506, 593, 595–597.
 —, as Secretary for War and the Colonies; II., 606, 629; III., 30, 34, 49, 57, 58, 140, 141, 166, 185, 255, 367, 377, 378, 407, 509.
 —, letters from; I., 240, 242, 243, 268, 481, 483, 488, 494, 497, 518, 519, 524, 534, 535, 555, 557, 560, 568, 570, 573, 586, 588 (2), 589, 591, 597, 602, 604 (3), 607, 610, 611.
 II., 11, 146, 184, 185 (2), 188, 190 (2), 191, 193 (2), 212, 243, 249, 289 (2), 297–299, 303, 306, 307, 313, 314, 395, 405, 407, 408, 416 (2), 438, 440, 444, 448, 450, 452, 499, 621, 643, 645, 649.
 III., 17, 58, 102, 104, 128, 194, 205, 257, 266, 362, 390, 399, 419, 461, 534.
 —, letters to; I., 241, 242, 279, 497, 510, 556, 590 (2), 592 (2), 593, 596, 604; II., 185, 192, 215, 221, 236, 243, 244, 246, 249, 258, 263, 287, 289, 295, 297 (2), 299, 373, 409, 411, 414, 425, 432, 450, 481, 500, 504, 511, 620; III., 136, 146, 195, 206, 460.
 —, appointment of, as Home Secretary (in June 1791); II., 146.
 —, movements of; II., 307, 309, 310.
 —, leaves the Home Office (July, 1794); II., 602.
 —, at cabinet meetings; II., 646; III., 261, 283, 310, 330.
 —, behaviour of, to Lord Grenville; III., 167.
 —, and secret service money; III., 193, 194.
 —, instructions from; III., 461.
 —, nephew of; II., 483.
 —, under-secretary of; III., 167.

Dundas—cont.

- Henry, lodge of, in the Highlands.
See Donira Lodge.
 —, villa of, at Wimbledon; I., 488, 489.
 R.; II., 367.
 [Robert] to be Lord Advocate in Scotland; I., 524.
 Dundass, — (King's apothecary); I., 366.
 Dunford, Mr.; I., 100 (2).
 Dungannon, Ireland; I., 592.
   convention at; II., 321.
 Dunkin, Mr.; I., 494, 510, 519, 587, 588, 607.
 Dunkirk; II., 277, 280, 288, 393, 444;
   III., 13, 214, 296.
   privateers; II., 369.
   proposed operations against; II., 384,
   387–389, 407, 409, 410, 417, 420,
   423, 424, 433, 438, 439, 442.
   Risbank and forts at; II., 390.
   sale of, by England, alluded to; II., 411.
   siege of; III., 484, 493.
 Dunn, —; III., 385.
 Dunn, John, Lord Ashburton; I., 173.
 Dunstauville, Lord de; III., 251.
 Duport:
   [Adrien]; II., 132, 154; III., 533.
   Captain; I., 346, 457.
 Durance, la; II., 538.
 Duren, French forces at; III., 518, 519.
 Durham:
   meeting at; I., 144.
   the abbey near; I., 143.
 Durham, county of, candidates for; I., 140, 144.
   nobility and gentry of; I., 140.
 Durno, James; II., 236, 243, 245, 246. letter of; II., 243.
 Dusseldorf; III., 146, 519.
   electoral palace at; III., 519.
 Dutch or the Dutch; passim.
   agents in Spain; I., 588.
   ambassadors. See Holland, ambassadors to and from.
   army or troops; I., 28, 55, 349; II., 360, 386, 388, 415, 424, 432, 435,
   503 (2), 548, 558, 600, 605, 635;
   III., 6, 42, 211, 212, 418, 422, 442,
   515, 516.
   —, destitution of; II., 503.
   —, in the West Indies; II., 363.
   —, officers of; II., 381; III., 60, 61, 91.
   —, settlement of; III., 48, 52, 56, 61.
   —, committee for; III., 52.
   —, shameful conduct of; III., 6.
   cabals. See Holland, cabals in. carrying trade; II., 23 (2). chargé d'Affaires at Mainz; II., 85.
   ciphers; III., 141.
   colonies; I., 280, 599; III., 48, 155.
   And see America, East Indies, and West Indies, Dutch colonies in.
   —, committees for; III., 46.
   —, council of the, abolition of;
   III., 46.

Dutch or the Dutch—cont.

- colonies, probable loss of; III., 348.
 commercial treaty. See Holland, commercial treaty with.
 complaints against, by the Duke of York; II., 644.
 conquests to be ceded to; III., 345, 348.
 defeat of; II., 424.
 East India Company. See East India Company, Dutch.
 East India settlements, Commissioners for; II., 71.
 emigrants; III., 105.
 envoys; II., 189.
 everything possible has been squeezed
 from; III., 353.
 financial proceedings of; II., 186.
 fisheries; I., 189.
 Flanders. See Flanders, Dutch.
 fleet or men of war; I., 47, 589;
   III., 17, 35 (2), 328, 329, 380.
 — to the West Indies; III., 218.
 frigates; III., 234.
 frontiers; II., 599, 605.
 garrisons; II., 269.
 gazettes or newspapers; II., 39, 41, 56, 61, 73, 164.
 government or ministry; II., 49, 51,
   72, 130, 136, 152, 169, 233, 252,
   277, 280, 283, 286, 300, 361–365,
   365, 367, 371, 374, 417; III., 486.
 — and peace with France; II., 646–648.
 — departments of; III., 444.
 —, instructions from; II., 467.
 —, members of; II., 1, 26.
 —, negotiates with Russia; II., 110, 111.
 —, views, decisions or action of;
   II., 281, 283.
 —, want of energy in; II., 591, 612, 613, 614, 646, 647. governor of Pondicherry. See Pondicherry.
 High. See Germans. in the East Indies. See East Indies. islands. See Holland, islands belonging to.
 mail; I., 579; II., 246, 302. merchants; II., 31; III., 443.
 navy; III., 21, 49, 203, 208, 216,
   217, 348.
 — Adjutant-General of; III., 53.
 — committee for; III., 52, 53, 57.
 — officers of; III., 91.
 — remodelled; III., 42, 53, 56, 57.
 patriots. See Holland, patriots in. payments to France; III., 355.
 plenipotentiaries; II., 49.
 ports. See Holland, ports of.
 provinces. See Holland, provinces of. republic. See Holland. seamen; III., 56, 252.
 ships; I., 597; II., 24, 71, 275, 325,
   387, 413, 489; III., 47, 53, 74.
 —, captured; II., 278; III., 35,
   71, 74, 96.

Dutch or the Dutch—cont.

- spiceries ; II., 24.
- trade ; I., 585, 601, 605.
- unfriendly conduct of ; II., 644, 650.
- Dutheil, Monsieur ; III., 180, 244, 249, 304, 305, 368.
- letters from ; III., 303, 308.
- letter to ; III., 309.
- Dutrin, — ; II., 544.
- Duval, picture to be set in diamonds by ; III., 143.
- Duvergne (Duverne), Monsieur ; III., 291, 305, 370, 371.
- Duysbourg, on the Rhine, troops at ; III., 519, 520.
- Dysart, Lord ; I., 592, 593.
- Dzieduszicki, Count ; II., 244.

E.

- Eardley, Sir Sampson Gideon ; I., 489.
- to be made a baron ; I., 496.
- Earle :
  - General ; I., 53, 54 (2).
  - Mr. ; I., 54.
- Earlsfort, Lord. See Scott, John.
- Earl Stoke, co. Wilts ; I., 72, 73.
- East, the, Dutch settlements in ; I., 280.
- And see* East Indies, the.
- Eastbury, co. Berks ; I., 263 ; II., 179.
- Eastchurch, Kent, letter dated from ; I., 113.
- Eastern seas ; I., 588, 591 ; II., 24, 32, 180, 186.
- islands in ; I., 588 ; III., 446.
- East India :
  - Bill ; I., 225.
  - bonds ; I., 498 ; II., 185.
  - business ; II., 225, 228, 395, 396.
  - Commission ; I., 64.
  - goods ; I., 247, 251.
  - house. See India House.
  - ships or fleet (Indiamen) ; I., 247, 248 ; II., 363, 396, 430, 501, 646 ; III., 77, 257, 422.
  - stock ; I., 53 ; II., 161, 293.
  - trade, motion on ; II., 30, 35, 37, 40, 41.
  - treasury ; I., 498.
- East India Company :
  - old or London Company ; I., 2, 3, 7, 13.
  - , annals of, alluded to ; I., 2.
  - , demands of ; I., 29.
  - , general court of ; I., 29.
  - , officials sent out by ; I., 3, 14.
  - , state of affairs of, account of ; I., 29.
  - old and new, union of ; I., 7, 14, 17, 27, 29, 33.

East India Company—cont.

- the new ; I., 3–47 passim, 187, 248, 268, 384, 498, 601 ; II., 42, 287, 289, 298, 299, 373, 430, 437, 477 ; III., 137, 362, 444, 445.
- , board of ; II., 396.
- , board of control of ; I., 240 ; III., 362.
- , chairman of ; I., 243, 356, 498 ; II., 287, 289.
- , charter of, alluded to ; I., 310 (2), 497 ; II., 37, 41 ; III., 137, 420.
- , committees of ; I., 19, 30, 498.
- , court of managers or directors of ; I., 8, 30, 243 (2), 256–258, 484, 498 and passim ; II., 191, 283, 297 ; III., 137, 195.
- , in connexion with the Dutch company ; I., 279–281.
- , in connexion with the French company ; I., 269.
- , loan to ; I., 497.
- , manager cf. See Heathcote, Sir Gilbert.
- , monopoly of ; I., 269 ; II., 35.
- , narrow-mindedness of ; III., 420.
- , proprietors of ; III., 137.
- , refusal of the demands of the old Company by ; I., 29.
- , ships of ; I., 258 ; III., 423.
- And see* East India ships.
- , tea trade of ; II., 14.
- East India Company, Dutch ; I., 257, 258, 279–281, 606 ; II., 186, 269, 294, 646 ; III., 46, 74, 419, 420, 444, 446.
- , committee of ; II., 286.
- , governor of ; III., 445.
- , sales of tea by ; III., 445, 447.
- , seizure of a ship belonging to ; III., 423.
- East India Company, French ; I., 257, 269 ; III., 439.
- East Indians or Nabobs ; I., 567 ; II., 293, 500.
- East Indies, the ; I., 256, 263, 286 ; II., 38, 285, 454, 649 ; III., 19, 258, 348, 438. And see India.
- deserters sentenced to serve in ; I., 182, 184.
- Dutch possessions in ; I., 45, 280, 602 ; II., 46, 47 ; III., 241, 375.
- English acquisitions in ; II., 599 ; III., 375.
- , fleet and troops for ; II., 408.
- And see* India.
- French possessions in ; II., 226 ; III., 224, 241.
- garrisons and forces in ; III., 431.
- officers serving in ; II., 479.
- Scotch brigade in ; III., 102.
- trade with ; III., 136, 154, 419–421.
- Eaton, Mr. ; III., 262.
- Edam, in Holland ; III., 426.
- Eden :
  - Lady Elizabeth (wife of Sir Morton) ; II., 338, 347, 348, 358, 359, 359.

Eden—cont.

- Morton or Sir Morton, brother of Lord Auckland :
- , as envoy at Dresden ; II., 163, 199, 206 (2), 207, 212, 219, 220, 222, 224, 225 (2).
  - , as minister at Berlin ; II., 230, 233, 295, 296, 330, 334, 335, 341, 347, 359, 361, 370.
  - , as minister to Vienna ; II., 403, 410, 415, 419, 478, 505-508, 558, 604 ; III., 5, 45, 92, 95, 128-130, 132, 135 (2), 169, 170, 172, 173, 186, 192, 213, 266, 267, 270, 271, 274, 280, 283, 294, 310, 311 (2), 314, 317, 318, 321, 323-328, 331, 332, 344, 375, 395, 396.
  - , letters from ; II., 209, 245, 252, 257, 273, 276, 277, 296, 309, 337, 338, 347, 358, 366, 426, 498, 525, 594 ; III., 67, 104, 208, 233, 384.
  - , letters to ; II., 207, 214, 222, 248, 297, 440, 495, 509 ; III., 137, 180, 206, 298, 308, 312, 369, 475.
  - , accepts the mission to Berlin ; II., 205.
  - , his style of living ; II., 291.
  - , accepts the mission to Vienna ; II., 366.
  - , proposed removal of, to Madrid ; II., 492.
  - , withdraws his acceptance of the Spanish embassy ; II., 595.
  - , called to the Privy Council ; II., 644.
  - , return of, to Vienna ; II., 644.
  - , instructions to be sent to ; III., 45.
  - , desires an Irish peerage ; III., 384.
  - , wife of. See Eden, Lady Elizabeth.
  - , children of ; II., 338, 347 (2), 348, 595.
  - , family of ; II., 359.
  - , servants of ; II., 359.
- William ; I., 164, 168, 210, 230, 247, 251, 278, 282, 489.
- , as minister to France ; I., 437.
  - , as ambassador at the Hague ; II., 59, 88 ; III., 414, 427, 429, 432, 433, 436.
  - , as Lord Auckland, ambassador at the Hague ; I., 496, 597 ; II., 12, 59, 60, 123, 205, 207, 214, 215, 220, 247, 308, 328, 339 (2), 381, 388, 389, 444, 446, 447, 469 ; III., 43, 47, 91, 141.
  - , letters from, dated at the Hague. (1790) ; I., 585, 588, 591, 595, 605, 612 (2). (1791) ; II., 22-189, passim. (1792) ; II., 268, 296, 300, 304, 313, 324, 329, 334, 335, 341, 346 (2), 350, 353, (2), 356-358, 360. (1793) ; II., 362, 364-367, 370, 374-384, 386.

Eden, William, Lord Auckland—cont.

- , letters from, dated in England (1791) ; II., 198, 199, 206 (2), 208, 210, 213, 216, 218, 223, 225, 227, 233, 235, 241-243, 247 (2), 250-252, 256, 258, 261, 267. (1793) ; II., 400, 401 (2), 403, 404, 407, 414, 419, 425, 445, 454, 468, 469, 479. (1794) ; II., 490, 492, 496-498, 508, 516, 535, 557, 578, 591. (1795) ; III., 129.
  - , letters from, dated at Sèvres ; III., 429 (2), 437-440.
  - , letters to, (at the Hague) ; I., 598 ; II., 1, 25 (2), 50, 51, 63, 66-68, 72, 76, 79, 89, 96, 98, 101, 113, 123, 135, 138, 144, 148, 151, 152, 168, 171, 172, 176, 178, 270, 273, 281 (2), 290, 293, 332, 341, 343, 344, 347, 350, 351, 356-363, 366, 371, 372, 377, 380, 382, 383, 394.
  - , — (in England) ; II., 208, 210, 217 (2), 225, 236 (2), 240, 242, 246, 251, 255, 263, 265, 405, 408, 416, 464, 495, 497, 533.
  - , desires to visit England ; II., 163.
  - , called the Viceroy or Prime Minister of Holland ; II., 186, 383.
  - , leaves the Hague ; II., 189.
  - , wishes to retire ; II., 199, 392.
  - , is to return to the Hague ; II., 241.
  - , advancement of, in the peerage ; II., 394, 395.
  - , chaplain of ; I., 606.
  - , secretary of ; II., 165, 286.
  - , steward of ; II., 295.
  - , valet of ; III., 429.
  - , house of, at Beckenham ; II., 206, 295.
  - , house of, at the Hague ; II., 284.
  - , daughters of ; II., 218.
  - , brother of. See Eden, Morton, above.
  - , family of ; II., 198, 206, 241, 273.
  - , his wife, Lady Auckland ; II., 218, 250, 275, 293, 314, 367.
  - , —, entertainments given by ; II., 274, 277.
- Edgecumbe, Edgecumbe, Edgecombe : George, Viscount Mount Edgecumbe, as vice-treasurer in Ireland ; I., 472.
- Richard, 1st Baron Edgecumbe ; I., 110-113, 129-133.
- , agent of ; I., 130.
  - , agreement by ; I., 119.
- Mr. or Captain ; I., 127.
- Edgecumbes, the ; I., 127.

Edinburgh; I., 143, 592, 607; II., 388.
 letters dated at; I., 243, 560, 602.
 Parliament at, Act of Security passed in; I., 13.
 University, professors at; I., 604; II., 306.
 writers [to the signet] in; I., 535.
 Edmonson, —, herald; I., 183, 190.
 "Edward." See Talleyrand.
 Edward, Prince [afterwards Duke of Kent]; II., 188.
 as Knight of St. Patrick; I., 180, 183, 190, 197, 199, 201.
 —, squires of; I., 190.
 —, proxy of, at the installation; I., 190.
 to have the Garter; I., 260.
 arrives at Dover; I., 558.
 out of favour with the King; I., 558. governor of; I., 558.
 Eems, in Holland; III., 212.
 Effingham, Earl of. See Howard, Thos.
 Egan, Mr.; I., 569, 572.
 Eglington, Earl of. See Montgomery, Archibald.
 Egremont, Earl of. See Wyndham, George O'Brien.
 Egypt; II., 263.
 corn from; II., 573.
 Ehrenbreitstein; III., 139.
 Elba, troops at; III., 295, 296.
 Elbe, the river; III., 4, 9, 89, 282.
 Elburg, in Guelders; III., 212.
 Eldred:
 Sarah, letter to; III., 488.
 Thomas, letters from; III., 13, 488.
 Elector Palatine. See Palatine, Elector.
 Electors, the ecclesiastical; III., 279.
 Elgin, Earl of. See Bruce, Thomas.
 Elias, Monsieur; II., 71.
 Eliot:
 Edward, Lord Eliot; II., 214.
 —, son of. See Eliot, William.
 Lady Harriet, daughter of the 1st Earl of Chatham, death of; I., 269.
 William; I., 269; II., 196, 207, 212, 214–216, 222, 273; III., 385 (?), 534.
 —, as temporary minister at the Hague; II., 403, 425, 489, 496 (2),
 —, letter from; II., 197,
 —, wife of. See Eliot, Lady Harriet, above.
 Mr.; I., 107, 111, 117, 127.
 Elizabeth, Queen; I., 364; II., 237, 239.
 Elliot, Elliott:
 General Sir George Augustus; I., 176.
 —, as Lord Heathfield; I., 508.
 Sir Gilbert, Commissioner at Toulon; II., 429, 435, 436, 438–440, 443 (2), 447 (2), 486, 517 (2), 552, 560.
 Hugh; III., 10, 294.
 —, as English ambassador at Copenhagen; I., 353.
 —, suggested as Minister to Dresden; II., 205, 206, 208, 210, 211.
 —, at Berlin; II., 25, 273, 295, 296, 300, 377.

Elliot—cont.

Hugh, letters from; II., 208, 253.
 —, daughter of; II., 208.
 Mr., former Lieut.-Governor of New York; II., 578.
 Ellis:
 Ensign; II., 50.
 George, with the English mission in France; III., 259, 269, 275–283, 286, 336, 338–341, 346–354, 356–359, 361.
 —, letter from; III., 359.
 —, letter to; III., 358.
 Wellbore; I., 206, 427, 535.
 —, as vice-treasurer for Ireland; I., 472.
 Elphinstone, John, Lord Elphinstone; I., 214.
 son of; II., 214.
 Elsinore, traveller to; III., 262.
 Elton, co. Northampton, letter dated at; II., 354.
 Ely, Earl of. See Loftus, Henry.
 Embden, in Germany; II., 348; III., 5, 24, 51, 201.
 letter dated at; III., 201.
 Emperor, the:
 [Joseph I.]; I., 29.
 [Joseph II.]; I., 349, 544; II., 45–48, 407; III., 263.
 —, Irish officers in the service of; I., 314, 483 (2).
 —, army of; I., 349.
 [Leopold II.]; II., 1–258 passim.
 —, alliance with; II., 44, 61, 62, 78, 81, 84, 85, 141, 155.
 —, and Prussia. See Prussia.
 —, and France; II., 85, 140, 170, 171, 176, 177, 194. And passim.
 —, and the Turks; II., 48, 49, 113, 114, 132. And see Sistova, negotiations at.
 —, and his sister, the French Queen; II., 97, 112.
 —, and the Comte d'Artois; III., 451.
 —, army of. See Austria, army of.
 —, attack on; III., 463.
 —, cabinet, ministers or government of; II., 63, 113, 251, 256, and see Austria.
 —, character or conduct of; II., 147, 188, 193 (2), 218, 242.
 —, mission to. See Bruce, Lord Elgin, mission of.
 —, consents to join the Allies; II., 73.
 —, conventions with. See Reichenbach and the Hague.
 —, Court of. See Austria, Court of.
 —, inauguration of, in the Netherlands; II., 190.
 —, in concert with the Empress of Russia; II., 143.
 —, overtures of, to Holland; II., 217, 242.

Emperor, the, [Leopold II.]—cont.

- , views or intentions of; II., 49, 50, 69, 73, 113.
- writes to the King of England; II., 126.
- , death of; II., 261, 262.
- , successor of; II., 262. And see Francis II. below.
- — election of; II., 271.
- , as the late Emperor; II., 347, 618; III., 494.
- , his son, the King of Hungary; II., 261, 282, 285, 291. And see Francis II. below.
- — wife of, as Queen of Hungary; II., 272.
- , sister of. See France, Queen of.
- [Francis II.]; II., from 258, passim; III., passim.
- , alliance with; II., 415, 416. And see Vienna, treaty of.
- and his army; II., 422, 431, 434, 435, 578.
- and the King of Prussia. See Prussia.
- , army of. See Austria, army of.
- , cabinet or ministers of. See Austria.
- , character of; II., 628.
- , coronation of; II., 283.
- , counsellors of; III., 32.
- , director of the posts of, at Bremen; III., 80.
- , domains of; III., 515.
- , Dutch loan to; III., 71.
- , favourite brother of. See Tuscany, Grand Duke of.
- , Italian states of; II., 336.
- , movements of; II., 426, 440, 443, 500, 578, 584, 594; III., 384.
- , negotiations of, with France. See Austria, Court of, negotiations of.
- , praise of; III., 315.
- , views or intentions of; II., 627, 629; III., 32, 266, 271, 307, 324, 325, 355, 514, 515.
- , reported attempt to poison; II., 295.
- , will probably abandon the Low Countries; II., 335.
- , attentions of, to the Duke of York; II., 421.
- , demand for a Diet by; II., 457.
- , suggested assassination of; II., 459.
- , military debut of; II., 557.
- , victory of; II., 583.
- , a feeble ally; II., 598.
- , and the negotiations between France and England; III., 239-241.
- is jealous of Prince Charles; III., 294.
- is adored by his troops; III., 314.

Emperor, the, [Francis II.]—cont.

- , critical situation of; III., 318, 320.
- , sacrifices made by; III., 325.
- , Venice ceded to; III., 396.
- , protection of, claimed; III., 462.
- , suggestion that he should demand the French Queen as an Austrian duchess; III., 480.
- Empire, the. See German Empire.
- Empress, the:
  - [Maria Theresa]; III., 258, 331.
  - wife of Francis II.; III., 324.
- Empson, Mr.; I., 35.
- Ems, the river; III., 24.
- Emsden secret, the; II., 335.
- Enfield, Middlesex; I., 38.
- Forty Hill, near; I., 25, 27.
- Engelhard, senior and junior; III., 172.
- Enghien, Duc de; II., 87.
- England, passim.
  - Church of; II., 140.
  - coasts of, suggestions for guarding; I., 351.
  - counties of, assessment of; I., 547.
  - , associations in; I., 54.
  - , Lord Lieutenants of; II., 344, 349, 352.
  - , sheriffs of; I., 547.
  - diplomatic agents of, reports of; III., 80-86.
  - discontent in; III., 74.
  - Dutch ships detained in; III., 74.
  - financial crisis in; III., 281, 282, 310.
  - French agent in; II., 230, 326, 538.
  - influx of foreigners to; II., 314, 315 (2), 318, 320, 600.
  - measures to be taken for the safety of; II., 342.
  - people of, desire peace; III., 148, 149.
  - ports of, plan for opening them to "flight goods"; II., 622.
  - projected descent upon. See France.
  - prosperity of; II., 286, 294; III., 148.
  - said to foment the wars with the Indians in America; II., 527.
  - suggested loan in; II., 260; III., 148.
  - treaties of. See Vienna and Petersburg, treaties of; also under the various countries.
  - West of; I., 132.
- English, Mr.; I., 16, 26.
- English:
  - army. See Army.
  - Channel, French troops on the coasts of; III., 489.
  - flag, carried at a French fête; II., 266.
- Enkhuyzen, in Holland; III., 426.
- Enniskillen, Viscount. See Cole, William Willoughby.
- Entraigues or Antraigues, Comte de; III., 213, 292.
- Entrecasteaux, M. de; II., 152.

Eon, Madame de; II., 355, 356.
 Epsom, Surrey, the Durdans at, letter addressed to; I., 113.
 Erff, the river; III., 519.
 Erie, Lake; II., 611.
 Erlach, Mons. de; III., 213.
 Erne, Viscount. See Creighton, John.
 Errol, Earl of. See Hay, William.
 Erskine:
   Lady Frances; I., 148.
   J., letter from; II., 439.
   Sir James; I., 290, 307(?), 379.
   Mr. (in 1765); I., 146.
   Mr.; 143; II., 34.
   Mr., at Rome; III., 12, 145.
   Sir William; II., 446, 475.
 Escars, Comte François de; II., 394.
 Escaut. See Scheldt.
 Espagnac, Baron de; II., 410.
 Essex, county of; I., 264, 358.
 Esterhazy, Prince; II., 108, 194.
   hussars of; 476.
 Eton, Mr.; II., 226.
 Eton, II., 5.
   boys at or going to; I., 33, 38, 66, 70, 73(2), 74, 164.
 Etruria, traveller through; II., 5.
 Ettrick, —; I., 14.
 Eugene, Prince, victory of; I., 28.
 Eure, department of the, deputy of; III., 492.
 Europe:
   East of, nations in; II., 53.
   North of, corn from; III., 59.
   the Powers of, in connection with England and Russia, observations on; II., 44.
   state of; I., 282, 489, 605-607. to arm against France; II., 177.
 Eustace, Colonel, Deputy Quarter-master General; I., 348.
 Euston, Earl of. See Fitzroy, George Henry.
 Evance, Sir Stephen; I., 5-7, 14-17, 22, 26, 30, 31, 33, 40, 41, 43, 46, 61, 63, 64, 83.
   letters to; I., 6, 11, 21, 28, 31, 36, 38, 40, 43.
   shop of; I., 25.
   trustees of; I., 65.
 Evelin or Evelyn, Mr., of Surrey; I., 51, 120.
 Ewart:
   John; II., 253.
   —, letter from; II., 253.
   Joseph, English ambassador at Berlin; I., 353, 613; II., 25, 57, 63, 68, 70(2), 72, 76, 77, 79, 95, 102, 129, 131-133, 146, 147, 149, 156, 159, 160, 163, 166, 170-174, 180, 181, 189, 190, 195, 197, 198, 200, 202, 224, 225(2), 227, 230, 249; III., 195, 408, 413, 414, 423, 431, 434(2).
   —, letters from; II., 51, 61, 68, 73-75, 81, 82, 87, 91, 93, 104, 110, 124, 132, 147(2), 153-155, 179, 183, 187, 196, 205; III., 452-457.

Ewart, Joseph—cont.
   —, letters to; II., 64, 76, 78, 80, 97, 123, 141, 174, 195, 196, 207, 245; III., 453, 454, 456.
   —, observations and memoranda by; II., 44, 49.
   —, returns to Berlin; II., 51(2), 54(2).
   —, ill health of; II., 188.
   —, leaves Berlin; II., 207, 216.
   —, unpopularity of, in Berlin; II., 219, 220, 224.
   —, death of; II., 253(2), 254.
   —, private secretary of; II., 197.
   —, wife of; II., 52, 253(2), 254.
   —, —, letter to; II., 256.
   —, —, pension for; II., 156, 174, 187, 195, 205, 256.
   —, children of; II., 253.
   —, —, pension for; II., 256.
   —, son of; II., 253.
   —, family of; II., 51.
 Ewelme, co. Oxford, honor of, court for; I., 272.
 Ewer, Mr., M. P.; I., 172.
 Exchequer:
   amount of money in the; III., 270.
   auditor of. See Grenville, W. W.
   Chamber, nomination of sheriffs in; II., 328.
   Chief Baron of; II., 314. And see Smythe, Sir Sydney, and Eyre, Sir James.
   Court of; II., 14.
   notes; I., 28.
   office, clerks of; 213, 262(2).
   offices, bill for regulating, alluded to; I., 213.
   process, bill concerning; II., 26. receipt of; I., 505.
   receipts filed in; III., 193.
   Teller of; I., 213.
   —, deputy of; I., 213.
   Teller's office (Lord Buckingham's office) in; I., 213, 264; III., 284, 285, 402.
   —, clerks in; III., 285.
   Tellership in; I., 264.
   See also Scotland and Ireland, Exchequer of.
 Excise, on wine; I., 261.
 Exeter, Earl of. See Cecil, Henry.
 Exeter; II., 613.
 Eyles, —; I., 30.
 Eyre:
   Sir James, Lord Chief Baron of Exchequer; I., 468.
   Mr.; I., 256.
 Eythrope, co. Bucks; I., 267.
   letter dated from; I., 266.

F.

F., John. See Freemantle, John.

F. M., agent to France; III., 305.

Fabre d'Eglantine [Philippe François];
III., 491, 498, 499, 504, 505.
character of; III., 493.

Fabry, burgomaster; III., 462.

Fagel or Fagell:

H., Greffier of Holland; I., 590; II., 68, 94, 121, 141, 147, 151, 160,
180, 227, 235, 236, 240, 243, 247,
250, 251, 269, 270, 287, 293, 294,
296, 325 (2), 326, 329, 365, 366,
377, 409, 414-416, 419, 420, 467,
479, 546, 641, 644, 646; III., 6,
19, 39, 52, 55, 79, 80, 182, 197,
408, 411.

—, letters from; III., 41, 43, 46,
55, 71, 73.

—, letter to; III., 486.

—, refuses gift of a snuff-box, as contrary to law; II., 601.

—, domiciliary visit to; III., 41.

—, dismissal of; III., 43, 57.

—, goods of, seized; III., 72, 80.

—, ancestors of; III., 80.

—, collection of State papers belonging to; III., 80.

—, library and other collections of;
III., 80.

—, uncle of. See Salgas, Mons. de.

James (brother of the Greffier), II.,
325; III., 47, 178.

Fairford, Lord; I., 223, 407.

Fair Head, Ireland; I., 351.

Faitpoul, character of; III., 161.

Falaise, in France; III., 309.

Falernian wine; II., 19.

Falkland Islands; I., 284, 611.

Falmouth, Lord. See Boscawen, Hugh.

Falmouth; II., 145, 324, 357, 409, 423.

letter dated at; III., 15.

Family compact, the; II., 135.

Fane:

John, Earl of Westmorland:

—, suggested as Lord Lieutenant for Ireland; I., 527, 530.

—, appointment of; I., 530.

—, as Lord Lieutenant; I., 531,
536, 541, 545, 548, 551, 552, 554,
556, 559 (2), 561, 562, 565 (3);
II., 12, 33, 212-215, 221, 238, 321,
323, 334, 341; III., 35, 37.

—, letters from; I., 559, 562, 566-
571, 577, 578, 581, 583, 584; II.,
3, 13, 15 (2), 20, 21, 28, 30 (2), 35, 37-43, 50, 55, 66, 83, 101, 186,
235, 330.

—, letters to; I., 550, 565, 567,
569, 570, 576, 580-582; II., 14,
26 (2), 33, 37, 41, 44, 67, 95, 123,
195, 213, 235.

Fane, Earl of Westmorland—cont.

—, Arthur Wesley slighted by; II., 11.

—, attack upon, expected; II., 11.

—, differences of, with General Pitt;
II., 21 (2).

—, officer dismissed by; II., 465.

—, removal of; III., 33, 36.

Lady (1723); I., 70.

Mr.; II., 55.

Farnham, Earl of. See Maxwell, Barry.

Farquhar, Mr.; II., 313.

Fauchet, commissary; II., 539.

Faucitt or Fawcett:

Sir William, Lieut.-General, K.B.; I.,
277, 345, 375; II., 173, 188.

Colonel (his son) Adjutant-General;
I., 345 (2), 347, 348, 350, 351, 455,
531.

Fauconberg, Earl of. See Belaysse,
Henry.

Favart; III., 493.

Favier or Favy, Abbé; II., 552, 554, 555.

Fawcett. See Faucitt.

Fawkener, William, envoy to St. Petersburg; I., 290, 308; II., 58, 59, 61,
62, 65, 66 (2), 68, 70, 73, 74, 76,
84, 88, 89, 95, 96, 100, 102, 103,
107, 111, 131, 137, 141, 143, 149,
160, 164, 181.

letters from; II., 59, 80, 102, 114,
129, 143.

despatches from, alluded to; II., 166 (2).

letter to; II., 79.

Fawley Court, co. Bucks; II., 328.

Featherstone, Sir H.; III., 103.

Fellows, John, letter from; I., 3.

uncle of; I., 3.

Feltz, Mons. de; II., 277.

Fénélon, writings of, alluded to; III., 492.

Fenton, Captain; I., 357.

Fenwick, Mr.; I., 47.

Fer, Mons. de; II., 437.

father of; II., 437.

Ferdinand, Prince [of Brunswick]; I., 508.

Ferrierma, Comte; II., 459.

Ferguson:

Lieut.-Colonel, the late; I., 347, 465.

Mr. (Scotland); I., 563.

— (Bengal); I., 588; II., 621.

Ferishta [History of Hindostan by], translation of; I., 263.

Fermanagh, Lady; II., 282.

Viscountess of; I., 536.

Fermanagh county; I., 167, 231.

Feroner, Mons. de; II., 652.

the King's picture to be sent to; II., 653.

Ferrand, General; II., 548-557.

his army; II., 548.

Ferris or Feris, Irish priest; II., 432;
III., 145, 467, 481.

brother-in-law of; II., 467.

Ferronière; III., 95.

- Fersen, Comte de, assists the Royal family in their flight; III., 448-451.
coachman of; III., 449.
- Fife, Earl of. See Duff, James.
- Fifeshire; I., 588.
- Finance Committee, Report of, alluded to; III., 401.
- Finch:
- Daniel, Earl of Nottingham; I., 26.
  - George, Earl of Winchilsea; I., 525, 535, 536.
  - Heneage, Lord Guernsey (afterwards 3rd Earl of Aylesford); I., 118.
  - Heneage, 4th Earl of Aylesford; I., 525.
  - Mr. (nephew of Lord Nottingham); I., 26.
  - Seymour; II., 23.
- Finch Mason, Major; II., 611.
- Finck, [? Finckenstein] Count; II., 348, 493.
- Finckenstein, Count, Prussian minister; II., 61, 70, 252; III., 163, 198, 402, 437.
- Findlater, Earl of. See Ogilvy, James.
- Fingal, Earl of. See Plunkett, Arthur James.
- Finisterre, Cape; II., 533.
- Finland; III., 224.
- Fiorenzo, gorge of, in Corsica; II., 524.
- Fischer, Banneret; III., 169.
- Fisher:
- aide de camp général; II., 603.
  - Mr. (Queenborough); I., 115.
  - Mr.; III., 368.
- Fitch, Captain; II., 17.
- Fitterman, commissary of the Convention; II., 543.
- Fitzgerald (Fitzgarald):
- Captain; I., 74.
  - Lord Charles; I., 298.
  - Lord Edward; I., 296; II., 340, 349.
  - Lord Henry; I., 296, 400, 457.
  - Lord Robert Stephen; I., 390; II., 136, 265, 266, 378, 400, 425, 435, 438, 509, 637, 638 (2); III., 8, 9, 44, 488, 513.
  - , letters from; II., 115, 270, 404, 449, 455, 596, 651; III., 6, 90.
  - , letters to; II., 427, 470, 632, 651.
  - , wishes to leave Switzerland; II., 596.
  - , not an able nor quick-sighted man; II., 638.
  - , permission given him to come to England; II., 651.
  - , to go to Copenhagen; III., 90.
  - , children of; III., 7.
  - , valet of; II., 378.
  - William Robert, 2nd Duke of Leinster; I., 168, 172, 177, 188, 191, 220, 230, 236, 244, 255, 259, 296-298, 303, 309, 310, 318, 320, 323, 330, 383, 390, 399, 402, 404, 406, 407, 409, 412, 418, 420, 425, 427, 435, 436, 439, 443, 454, 461, 492; III., 388.
  - , letter to; I., 363.
- Fitzgerald, Duke of Leinster—cont.
- , as Knight of St. Patrick; I., 182, 184.
  - , declines to be President of the Council (Ireland); I., 245.
  - , as Master of the Rolls in Ireland; I., 336.
  - , dismissal of; I., 459, 458, 460.
  - , promised the garter by the Prince of Wales; I., 440.
  - , party or followers of; I., 460, 461, 466.
  - , regiment of; I., 208.
  - , sons of; I., 320.
  - , brothers of. See Fitzgerald, Lords Charles, Edward, Henry, and Robert.
  - , pardon of; I., 206.
- Fitzgeralds, the; I., 297.
- Fitzgibbon, John (Lord Fitzgibbon in 1789), Attorney General in Ireland; I., 165, 166, 173, 220-222, 225, 244-246, 297-299, 306, 309 (2), 311, 313, 319, 327, 346, 350, 359 (2), 362, 363, 365, 366, 369, 374, 376, 379, 381, 382, 385, 387-391, 393, 394, 396 (2), 399, 402, 407, 409-414, 417-419, 422-424, 433-435, 439, 440, 442, 461, 464, 469, 477.
- letters from; I., 478, 544, 546, 554.
  - letters to; I., 479, 548, 552.
  - plot to assassinate; I., 229, 230.
  - suggested as Irish Chancellor; I., 331, 423, 426, 439, 441, 446, 459-465, 468, 473, 480.
  - as counsel for Lord Mornington; I., 343.
  - strong support given to Government by; I., 410-413, 417, 424 (2), 446.
  - election of, in co. Limerick; I., 446.
  - alleged unpopularity of, in Ireland; I., 463.
  - proposed peerage for; I., 463.
  - suggested as Lord Justice; I., 480.
  - as Lord Chancellor of Ireland; I., 479-481, 512, 542, 544, 545, 551, 568, 577, 584, 609; II., 14, 35, 39, 66, 83, 222, 328, 445; III., 554.
  - letters from; II., 84, 128.
  - letters to; II., 77, 93.
  - statement by; I., 584.
  - vice-chancellorship of Dublin College offered to; II., 77.
  - intended removal of; III., 36.
  - nephew of. See Beresford, Marcus.
  - Lady, libel upon; II., 128.
- Fitzherbert:
- Alleyne, chief secretary to the Lord Lieutenant; I., 281, 290 (2), 294, 300, 306, 313, 315, 319, 321, 324, 327, 329 (2), 330, 332, 333, 336, 337, 339, 341, 343, 355, 362, 363, 370, 375, 378, 381, 385, 393, 397, 401, 402, 408, 409, 411, 415, 417-419, 435, 439, 442, 445, 449, 451, 454, 458, 463, 514, 519-521.

Fitzherbert—cont.

- Alleyne, suggested resignation of; I., 418, 422, 426, 431, 437.
- , wishes to be ambassador to the Hague or Vienna; I., 424, 428, 433, 437.
- , letter from; I., 453.
- , resigns the secretaryship; I., 445.
- , goes to Spain; I., 603, 606.
- , as Lord St. Helens and ambassador to Spain; II., 54 (2), 109, 204, 225, 297, 444, 447 (2), 448, 508, 604, 610, 637, 643, 646, 652, 653; III., 5, 9, 22.
- , letters from; II., 65, 74, 86, 98, 134, 203, 256, 268, 275, 374, 375, 386, 406, 409, 540, 591, 600, 615, 621, 640, 641; III., 32, 49.
- , letters to; II., 52, 54, 82, 175, 188, 392, 398, 525, 610, 612, 615.
- , returns to Spain; II., 365.
- , directions for; II., 373.
- , as ambassador to the Hague; II., 464, 492, 495, 646.
- Mr. (in 1766); I., 157.
- Mrs.; I., 362.
- , rumoured separation of, from the Prince of Wales; II., 599.
- W.; I., 306.

Fitz-James, Duc de; III., 2.

Fitzmaurice, Mrs.; I., 159.

Fitzpatrick:

- Hon. Richard; I., 164, 182, 191, 203, 316.
- , as clerk of the Pleas in Ireland; I., 182.
- , as secretary to the Lord Lieutenant; I., 247.
- Colonel (in 1720); I., 65.

Fitzroy:

- Augustus Henry, Duke of Grafton; I., 498; II., 337.
- Charles, Lord Southampton; II., 629.
- George Henry, Earl of Euston; I., 525.
- William, Duke of Cleveland; I., 526, 527.

Fitzwilliam, William Wentworth, Earl Fitzwilliam, I., 505, 510; II., 335, 607.

- as Lord President of the Council; II., 638, 644.
- appointment of, as Lord Lieutenant; II., 610, 634, 637, 642, 644.
- as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; III., 14, 17, 35, 36, 38.
- letters from; II., 630; III., 9, 17.
- letter to; III., 13.
- proposals by; III., 36-38.

Fitzwilliams, George, death of; I., 259.

nephew of; I., 259.

Fiume, in Italy; III., 287.

Flanders; I., 279, 281; II., 198, 208, 262, 332, 409, 429, 533, 559, 598, 603, 606; III., 88, 413, 468, 634, and passim. See also Netherlands.

allied armies in; II., 407, 417, and passim. See also Cobourg, Prince of, troops under.

decree for secularizing the goods of the clergy in; III., 263.

defence or relief of; II., 455, 559, 598.

English troops in or for; II., 415, 446, 453, 455, 464, 477, 491, 492, 502, 506, 507, 522, 548, 566 (2), 599, 600, 605, 650.

— proposal to make a separate army; II., 558-569.

—, vetoed by Pitt; II., 560.

—, suggested withdrawal of; II., 646, 648.

French project for invasion of; II., 443.

— possession of; III., 230, 232.

— successes in; II., 598.

mails; II., 302.

operations in; II., 475, 477, 593.

ports of; II., 598.

Prussian army to march to; II., 600.

Scotch brigade in; II., 507; III., 440, 444.

Austrian. See Netherlands, Austrian.

Dutch; II., 386; III., 224, 279.

French; II., 389, 406, 407, 415, 620.

West; II., 572, 578, 591.

—, troops in; II., 471, 506, 507, 525.

Flat Island; I., 528.

Fleet, the, passim. And see Ships.

at Toulon. See Toulon.

for the Mediterranean. See Mediterranean.

for Spain; II., 386.

for the West Indies; II., 402, 403.

floating batteries of; II., 623.

movements of; I., 28, 589, 613; II., 380, 387, 408, 444, 623; III., 92, 162.

mutiny in; III., 330. And see Portsmouth and the Nore.

officers of, orders to be given to; III., 35.

pressing for; II., 361.

sickness in; I., 602.

troops with; II., 423.

virtualising of; III., 545.

want of men for; II., 423.

Russian Empress enquires concerning; II., 129.

design against; II., 136, 137.

Fleet, the—cont.

- takes French ships; II., 586.
- to co-operate with Austria against Nice; II., 631.
- dreaded by the French; III., 16.
- accused of seizing American mariners; III., 525.
- Fleetwood, Mr.; I., 14.
- death of; I., 53.
- son of; I., 14.
- Fleming, Mr.; II., 416.
- Flemings, the, are tired of the French yoke, III., 263.
- Flemish commotions or revolution; I., 281, 544.
- deputies; III., 411.
- Fleuriot, Mons. de, Royalist commander; III., 115.
- Fleurus, French posts at; II., 592.
- Flint, Mr.; III., 71, 95, 294, 437.
- Flint, in Wales; III., 27.
- Flood:
  - Sir Frederick; I., 564, 578.
  - , handbill signed by; I., 578.
  - Henry; I., 163 (2), 166, 169, 175, 177, 182, 184, 186, 192, 222, 225, 226, 244, 249, 254.
  - , as vice-treasurer for Ireland; I., 472.
  - , cousin of; I., 184.
- Florence; II., 121, 380, 512, 554; III., 1.
- Duke of; I., 12.
- English minister at; III., 167.
- letter dated at; II., 536.
- picture gallery, pictures and statues at; II., 5.
- wine; I., 26.
- Florenville, citizen; II., 573.
- Florida; I., 184, 572.
- East; I., 559, 574.
- Florida Blanca, Count, Spanish minister; I., 596, 603; II., 52, 53, 65, 74, 82, 99, 131, 189, 203, 204, 263; III., 440.
- letter from; II., 204.
- dismissal of; II., 256, 257, 262, 368, 369.
- Flotte; II., 457, 481.
- Floyd, or Lloyd, Mr. (1747); I., 113, 115.
- (in India); II., 103.
- Flushing or Vlissingen; II., 279, 361, 370, 379, 380, 605, 610, 612; III., 224.
- basin and canal at; II., 275.
- East India House at; III., 73.
- neglect of means of defence at; II., 612, 613.
- port of, arrangements concerning; III., 73.
- Foley, Mr.; I., 119, 145.
- Folke, co. Dorset; I., 3.
- Folkestone, Lord [Jacob Pleydell Bouverie]; III., 402.
- Follett, Lieutenant; I., 457.
- Fonsenbert; II., 541.
- Fontainebleau; II., 164.
- French court at; I., 147, 151.

Fontainebleau—cont.

- operas at, ordered by the Duc de Richelieu; I., 147.
- treaty of, alluded to; II., 508.
- Fontaine, officer of artillery; I., 571.
- Fontenay, Madame de; III., 85.
- Fonton, dragoman; II., 458.
- Forbes:
  - George, Lord Forbes (afterwards 5th Earl of Granard); I., 154, 155.
  - George, 6th Earl of Granard; I., 337, 353, 420, 492.
  - , members returned by; I., 466.
  - Mr.; I., 225, 300, 306, 310, 381, 406.
  - Sir William; I., 568.
- Ford, Commodore or Admiral; II., 465; III., 17.
- Fordyce, Mr.; III., 562.
- Foreign business, discussion of; I., 474.
- Foreign Office; I., 246, 582, 596; II., 12, 77, 91, 142, 149, 198 (2), 200, 206 (2), 224, 243, 246, 250, 259, 305, 306, 310, 322, 339, 373, 374, 396, 403, 414, 448, 450, 509, 638 (2); III., 31, 279, 294, 299, 307, 308, 320, 323, 328.
- clerk in, said to be bought by the French; II., 445.
- Journal; II., 488.
- papers in or belonging to; II., 186, 253 (2).
- suggested appointment of the Duke of Portland to; II., 595.
- Grenville to remain at; II., 597.
- Foreign Secretary; II., 74. And see Osborne, Marquis of Carmarthen and Duke of Leeds; Grenville, Lord.
- Forez, the, expected insurrection in; III., 95.
- Forgery, person convicted of; I., 502.
- Forgues, Mons. de, French minister for Foreign Affairs; II., 445, 456, 457, 459, 461, 472, 510 (2), 511, 514, 515, 518, 523, 526, 527, 530, 537, 538, 542, 543, 551, 554-557, 573, 579.
- speech by; II., 457.
- clerk of; II., 510.
- Formièr. See Mola di Gaeta.
- Forster:
  - John. See Foster.
  - Mr., Cornwall; I., 108, 120.
- Fort Augustus; I., 556.
- George, Scotland, I., 556.
- Louis; II., 430; III., 131.
- Recovery, U.S.A., attack upon; III., 529.
- St. David, Madras; I., 8.
- , government of; I., 18.
- , letter dated at; I., 10.
- St. George, Madras; I., 37, 43, 53.
- , Governor of. See Pitt, Thomas.
- , letters addressed to; I., 3-40, passim.
- , letters dated at; I., 2-42, passim.
- William, Scotland; I., 556.

Fortescue :

Captain ; I., 290.

Hester (wife of Hugh, 3rd Baron Fortescue, and daughter of George Grenville, sen.) ; I., 196, 355, 361, 367, 496, 502.

Hugh ; I., 203, 209, 212.

—, as 3rd Baron Fortescue ; I., 316, 355, 367, 380, 487, 502, 513.

—, wife of. See Fortescue, Hester.

William Charles, Lord Clermont ; I., 190.

William Henry, Lord Clermont ; III., 49.

Forth and Clyde navigation ; I., 556.

Forty Hill, Enfield ; I., 25, 36, 38.

letter addressed to ; I., 35.

Foster or Forster :

John ; I., 167, 169, 183, 191, 222, 223, 228, 230, 236, 237, 255 ; II., 328 ; III., 546.

—, unpopular in Ireland ; I., 224, 227.

—, plot to assassinate ; I., 229, 230.

—, as Speaker of the Irish House of Commons ; I., 255, 259, 290, 303, 365, 389, 391, 399, 402, 459, 554, 568, 581 ; II., 28, 42, 66.

—, suggested as Lord Justice ; I., 480.

—, pension for, III., 554.

—, wife of, to be made a peeress ; I., 568-570.

—, brother of. See Foster, William.

William, chaplain of the Irish House of Commons ; I., 223, 290.

—, as Bishop of Cork, and translated to Kilmore ; I., 571.

Foulon, murder of ; III., 497.

Fouquier Tinville [Antoine] public prosecutor ; II., 555, 570-572.

denunciations by ; II., 590.

Fournier ; III., 497.

Fowey or Foy, co. Cornwall, election at ; I., 108, 110, 111, 114, 119, 122, 127.

Fowler, Robert, Archbishop of Dublin ; I., 191, 201, 226, 480, 560-562, 564, 566, 567, 570.

letter to ; I., 319.

to be Lord Justice ; I., 481.

Fox, Charles James ; I., 180, 190, 202, 205, 210, 247, 249, 252, 261 ; II., 103, 114, 144, 150, 154, 165, 202, 220, 271, 437.

speeches of, alluded to ; I., 186, 216 ; III., 315.

as possible Prime Minister ; I., 182, 188.

the King's dislike of ; I., 192.

his taking office discussed ; I., 193 ; II., 397.

coalition of, with Lord North ; I., 195, 197, 206, 207.

to be Home Secretary ; I., 198.

attacks the Irish propositions ; I., 251, 252.

Fox, Charles James—cont.

in relation to the King's illness and the regency ; I., 362, 365, 367, 368, 371, 372, 374, 377, 382, 385-389, 398, 435.

said to have bought the newspapers ; I., 400.

and toleration for Roman Catholics ; II., 40, 41.

and the French Revolution ; II., 58, 359 ; III., 478.

envoy from, to Russia ; II., 149.

influence of, over the opposition ; II., 344.

speech of the Empress of Russia concerning ; II., 364.

return of, to the House of Commons ; III., 404.

his accession to the Cabinet ironically suggested ; II., 597.

party of, or Foxites ; I., 391, 448 ; II., 354, 370.

Foy, co. Cornwall. See Fowey.

France, Kings of :

[John] ; III., 451.

[Charles V.] ; III., 451.

[Charles VI.] ; III., 451.

[Charles VII.] ; III., 451.

[Louis XIV.] ; I., 6, 8, 12, 13, 26, 28 (2) ; II., 7, 96, 411, 430.

[Louis XV.] ; I., 65, 147, 154, 155.

—, Queen of ; I., 147, 155.

—, son of, the Dauphin ; I., 151, 155.

—, —, wife of ; I., 151.

[Louis XVI.] ; I., 484, 485, 525, 608, 610 ; II., 83, 93, 109, 112-116, 120, 122, 131, 133, 136, 152, 277, 278, 309, 310, 356, 589 ; III., 181, 413, 436, 441, 464, 474, 497, 507, 512, 513.

—, agents of ; III., 249.

—, Cabinet of ; II., 259.

—, conduct or proceedings of ; II., 117, 192, 204, 242, 265, 302.

—, Court of. See France, Court of.

—, friends or attendants of ; II., 116, 267, 564 ; III., 479, 512.

—, Gardes du Corps of ; II., 85, 116.

—, household of ; III., 476.

—, letters from, alluded to ; II., 108, 156, 204, 266, 285.

—, letter to, alluded to ; II., 205, 206.

—, library of, contents of ; II., 461.

—, —, offers for purchasing, from England and Holland ; II., 461.

—, missions of ; III., 458, 460, 487.

—, troops of ; I., 484. And see France, army of.

—, called "the King of shreds and patches" ; II., 112.

—, flight and arrest of (June, 1791) ; II., 107-112, 115, 117, 458 ; III., 472, 513.

France, King of, [Louis XVI.]-cont.

- , flight of, narrative of; III., 448-450.
- , manifesto of, appointing his brother Regent in case of need; III., 450, 451.
- , defence of, by the Swiss Guards. See Swiss Guards.
- , flies to the National Assembly; III., 472.
- , obliged to wear the cockades of the National Assembly; II., 130.
- , system of government to be offered to; II., 146.
- , accusation of attempted poisoning against; II., 582.
- , efforts in behalf of; II., 159, 302, 376; III., 458-461, 478, 482 (2).
- , imprisonment, trial and execution of; II., 114, 212, 277, 300-302, 329, 357, 360, 370-376, 391, 459, 462, 583, 589; III., 43, 85, 86, 103, 160, 451, 452, 458, 459-461, 463, 479, 480, 482, 484, 532.
- , wife of. See Queen Marie Antoinette, below.
- , children of; II., 113; III., 481. And see Louis, the Dauphin, and Madame Royale, below.
- , family of. See France, Royal family of.
- , Louis, the Dauphin, eldest son of; I., 610; II., 115, 116, 154. [as Louis XVII.] 391, 405, 459, 549, 550, 563, 564, 599, 616; III., 84, 449, 459, 460, 479-484, 487, 531.
- , —, failing health of; II., 466, 488, 529, 556, 564.
- , —, death of; III., 78 (2), 88. [Louis XVIII.], Louis Stanislas Xavier, brother of Louis XVI., Comte de Provence; III., 78, 88, 103-124, 129, 135, 198, 213, 303-305, 333, 367, 368, 407, 449, 450. And see Provence, Comte de.
- , proposed coinage of; III., 101.
- , issues a manifesto; III., 103, 104, 132, 149.
- , health of, drunk; III., 121.
- , family of; II., 212.
- Charles, brother of Louis XVI., afterwards Charles X. See Artois, Comte de.
- Queen of, Marie Antoinette, wife of Louis XVI.; I., 610; II., 97, 112, 113, 115, 120, 122, 391, 405; III., 474, 480, 484.
- , attendants or friends of; II., 108, 356, 517.
- , prayers for; II., 420.
- , as an Austrian Archduchess; III., 480.
- , unpopularity of; III., 480, 482.
- , flight of, from Paris. See Royal Family, flight of, below.
- , illness of; III., 472.

France, Queen of-cont.

- , perilous situation of; II., 112, 122, 300-302, 329; III., 459 (2), 482, 484.
- , refused to leave her husband, and would refuse to leave her children; III., 481.
- , at the Temple; II., 311.
- , sent to the Conciergerie; II., 412, 420.
- , trial and execution of; II., 307, 308, 412 (2), 450, 459, 460; III., 103, 463, 502.
- Madame Royale, daughter of Louis XVI.; II., 472, 488, 528, 529, 571; III., 449.
- Madame Elizabeth, sister of Louis XVI.; II., 116, 472, 550; III., 449.
- , heroism of; II., 556.
- , imprisonment and death of; II., 466, 488, 528, 529, 570, 571; III., 103.
- France, passim.
- Admiralty or Marine tribunals of; III., 524.
- affairs in or state of; I., 280, 281, 329, 353, 484, 485; II. and III., passim.
- , reports on; III., 62-67, 80-86, 397-399. And see Paris, bulletins from.
- ambassadors or ministers from, to foreign courts; II., 46, 122, 130, 136, 146, 281, 283, 313, 355; III., 148. And see under the several countries.
- , to England; II., 128. And see Luzerne, de la; Barthélemy, and Chauvelin.
- , to the Hague; III., 428, 447.
- ambassadors to; I., 147.
- from America. See Morris, Robert.
- from England. See Gower, Lord, and Harris, Lord Malmesbury.
- from Portugal. See Arango, Mons. de.
- from Prussia. See Goltz, Count.
- from Russia. See Simolin, Mons. de.
- ambassadors to (English); I., 137.
- anarchy in; passim.
- and India; I., 281.
- and the other European powers. See under the various countries.
- Archbishop in; I., 357.
- army of. See French army.
- Batavian legion in; II., 277.
- bureaux or departments and ministers:—
- of Finance; I., 484; II., 153; III., 160, 161, 187.
- , committee of; II., 181, 195.
- of Foreign affairs; I., 484; II., 288; III., 160, 161, 239, 240, 339, 340, 347, 350, 459. And see Le Brun, Forgues, Bouchette and Talleyrand.

France, bureaux, &c. of—cont.

- of Foreign affairs, expenses of; II., 538, 542, 554.
- of the Interior; III., 160, 161. And see Paré.
- of Liquidations; II., 589.
- president of; II., 589.
- of the Navy; III., 161. And see d'Alberade.
- of Police; III., 198, 398.
- of War; II., 590; III., 160, 161, 448, 473, 493, 498, 503, 506, 507. And see Bouchette.
- , clerks of; III., 503, 507.
- committee of, or Comité militaire; II., 547, 563, 569–572, 580, 585, 590; III., 493.
- , —, President of. See Dargon.
- , Secretary General of. See Vincent.
- Charte Constitutionnelle of; II., 153, 154.
- Church lands in; II., 206, 217.
- , proposed restoration of; III., 84, 85.
- , purchaser of; III., 354.
- churches of, spoliation of; II., 463, 472.
- , re-opened; III., 66.
- clergy of; II., 184. And see Priests in.
- “Clubocatrie” of; II., 153. And see Paris, clubs of.
- coinage of money in; II., 153.
- colonies of; I., 504, 599, 600, 615; II., 217, 287; III., 478, 484. And see French islands, and under the various names.
- , regulations concerning; I., 595.
- , proposed cession of; III., 224, 230, 533.
- Comité diplomatique; II., 153, 259.
- Comité des Neuf. See Comité du Salut Public.
- Comité de Révision ou de Recherches; II., 152, 154.
- , president of; II., 154.
- Comité du Salut Public or Comité des Neuf; II., 462, 463, 466, 471–473, 480, 481, 487, 488, 510, 514, 515, 517–522, 530–532, 539, 544, 547, 548, 552, 574, 579; III., 29, 48, 61, 67, 69, 82, 86, 114, 115, 489, 490.
- agents of; II., 514, 547, 554, 555, 562, 573, 579, 581, 582.
- , clerks of; III., 95.
- , commissaries or commissioners of; II., 539, 554, 556, 557, 562, 563 (2), 573, 580, 581.
- , financial resources of; III., 496, 497.
- , levies of men by; III., 489, 490.
- , meeting places of; II., 531, 542, 560, 585.
- , members of; II., 459, 616; III., 86, 160, 198.

France, Comité du Salut Public—cont.

- , members of, list of; III., 491.
- , mémoire upon; III., 491–508.
- , President of. See Robespierre, Maximilien.
- , proceedings in; II., 456–461, 486–488, 510, 511, 526–528, 531, 532, 537–540, 542–544, 549–551, 553–557, 560–564, 567–576, 579–590, 592; III., 63, 501.
- , expiration of its powers; II., 537.
- , reconstruction of; II., 542, 587.
- , military operations controlled by; II., 547.
- , the Comité de Sureté Générale is subordinate to; III., 495, 496.
- falls into the hands of the moderate party; III., 532.
- , secretaries of; II., 528. And see Carnot.
- , Secretary-General of; III., 161.
- Comité de Sureté Générale; II., 462, 463, 466, 471, 542, 550, 551, 588; III., 65, 493, 506, 507, 532.
- , description of; III., 495, 496.
- , members of; II., 567, 579.
- Comité de Surveillance; III., 496.
- Commercial Company in; III., 161.
- , treaty with; I., 274; III., 154.
- Commissaries in; III., 63.
- Commission of Legislation of; III., 86.
- Compagnie de Jésus in; III., 399.
- Constitution (of 1791); II., 181.
- (of 1793); III., 65, 149.
- Constable of; II., 356.
- consultation at Pilitz concerning. See Pilitz.
- Controller General in; I., 278; III., 424.
- , secretary of; III., 160.
- Council of Ancients; III., 372.
- of Five Hundred; III., 351.
- Councils, the Two (the Legislative body); III., 309, 335, 339, 340, 347, 349, 351, 353, 356, 357, 372, 397, 398. And see Council of Ancients, and of the Five Hundred, above.
- , quarrel of, with the Directory. See Directory.
- Court of (Court of Versailles, Bourbon Court); I., 147, 148, 278, 353, 555; II., 46–48, 281, 282; III., 462.
- gloom at; I., 610.
- Grenville's mission to; I., 283.
- Crown of; I., 329.
- jewels; II., 554.
- lands; II., 217.
- demands of; I., 183.
- departments of:—
- , armée révolutionnaire in; III., 497.
- , lack of corn in; III., 482.
- , du Nord; II., 153.
- , du Pas de Calais; II., 153.
- , de l'Aine; II., 153.

France, departments of—cont.

- , money levied in; II., 584.
- , municipalities and directories of; III., 508.
- departments of, official. See Bureaux.
- Directory, the; III., 181, 191, 197, 198, 213, 216, 217, 222, 225, 239, 296, 305, 347, 348, 351, 356, 357, 371, 397–399.
- , note on the members of; III., 159.
- , treasury of, empty; III., 222.
- , “stock-jobbing” of; III., 223.
- , and the negotiations with England; III., 239–241, 259, 265 (2), 276, 278, 282, 339–356, 378, 379.
- , under Prussian influence; III., 252.
- , insolent answers from; III., 186, 255, 256.
- , weakness of; III., 262, 347, 349.
- , measures of, in Flanders; III., 263 (2).
- , orders of; III., 309.
- , divisions in; III., 340, 341, 345, 346, 354.
- , extravagant pretensions of; III., 341, 377.
- , and Councils, quarrel between (the struggle or the contest); III., 342, 343, 345, 354, 355.
- , triumphs of; III., 396.
- distress or famine in; II., 439; III., 13, 15, 51, 59, 63, 80–86, 246, 473, 474, 482, 488, 490, 502, 538.
- Duke of Dorset in. See Sackville.
- embassy of, in England, secretary to; II., 355.
- emissaries from; I., 314; III., 47, 435, 438, 462.
- English prisoners in; II., 582; III., 276, 277.
- Etats Généraux; I., 484, 485; III., 451.
- , President of; I., 490.
- , negotiation of, with the King of Prussia. See Prussia, King of.
- factions in:—
  - Anti-Brissotins; III., 498.
  - Brissotins; II., 397, 457, 459, 460, 462, 519; III., 491, 492, 497, 500, 503, 504.
  - Carmagnols; II., 452.
  - Clémentins; III., 505.
  - Commune, party of or Hébertists; III., 498, 501–506, 508, 573, 574.
  - Constitutionnels; III., 500, 532, 533.
  - Dieux infernaux, meetings of; III., 492.
  - Enragés; II., 251.
  - Exagérés; III., 493.
  - Fédéralistes; III., 85, 86, 500, 532.
  - Feuillans; III., 500.

France, factions in—cont.

- Girondists; II., 408, 457; III., 483.
- Hébertistes. See Commune, party of.
- Independents; III., 85, 86.
- Jacobins; II., 266, 273, 278, 285, 295, 305, 316, 317, 326, 479, 490, 519, 520, 549; III., 85, 86, 219, 223, 307, 331, 340, 370, 380, 398, 399, 464, 479, 484, 494, 499–508. And see Paris, Jacobin Club at.
- Maratists; III., 483, 497.
- Mitoyennistes; II., 549.
- Modérés; III., 85, 86, 341, 505, 532.
- Monarchiens; II., 462, 473, 549.
- Montagnards; III., 496, 502, 505, 506.
- Philippotins; III., 499.
- Rolandistes; III., 505.
- Sans-culottes; II., 457, 459, 460, 463, 519, 522, 532, 540; III., 505.
- Septembriseurs; III., 505.
- Société des défenseurs des droits de l'homme; III., 505.
- Terrorists; III., 65, 66.
- Farmers-general of; II., 571.
- Fête à l'Éternel* in; II., 589.
- finances of; II., 206, 208, 242, 250, 278, 280, 284, 287, 350, 452, 579, 590; III., 81, 82, 219, 222, 231, 237, 348, 355, 417, 489, 491.
- frontiers of; II., 86, 170, 464; III., 88.
- Garde de Sceau* in. See Danton.
- Garde Nationale; II., 107, 116, 122, 287, 472, 508, 528, 545, 567, 574; III., 468, 472.
- , Commandant of; II., 472.
- , reconstruction of; II., 153; III., 62, 341.
- , leads the King to execution; II., 583.
- government or rulers of; III., passim.
- And see the various committees, &c. in.*
- horse-racing in; I., 154, 155.
- Hotels de Ville or Maisons de Commerce in; II., 315.
- imports and exports of; I., 200, 231, 261, 549, 600; II., 29; III., 59.
- insurrections in; II., 532. And see La Vendée.
- Legislative body (in 1797); see Councils, the two, above.
- maitre des Postes; II., 110.
- maréchal de Camp of, rank of; III., 1.
- magistrates of, massacre of; II., 564.
- National Assembly, the 1st or Constituent Assembly [June 1789]; I., 525, 539, 561, 606, 608; II., 69, 85, 108, 118, 131, 133–136, 152, 164, 171, 267, 356, 553; III., 86, 451.

France, National Assembly, the 1st,—cont.

- , clerks of; I., 609.
- , cockades of; II., 130.
- , commissaries from; II., 115.
- , decrees of, mentioned; I., 610; II., 115, 152, 153; III., 448.
- , Huissiers of; I., 610.
- , leaders of; I., 610; II., 135, 150.
- , letters or petition addressed to; I., 92; III., 450, 458.
- , members of, demand bribes; II., 203.
- , proceedings in; II., 116, 153, 154, 181.
- , sitting of, described; I., 609, 610.
- , President of; I., 609, 610.
- National Assembly, the 2nd or Legislative Assembly [October 1791]; II., 242, 262, 285, 300, 307, 515, 553; III., 159, 161, 460, 463, 493.
- , commissioners from; II., 304 (2).
- , decrees of, mentioned; II., 312; III., 460.
- , Hall of; II., 301.
- , Journal of; II., 306.
- National Convention (September 1792); II., 352, 353, 355, 356, 364, 365, 375, 391, 412, 413, 429, 449, 453-457, 459-463, 466, 472, 481, 520-522, 538, 540, 542, 548-551, 554, 556, 557, 561-563, 567, 568, 571-576, 580, 590, 633, 646; III., 29, 40, 59, 64, 70, 80-85, 161, 472-474, 483, 484, 492, 493, 498, 501-508, 511, 531, 532.
- , agents of; II., 573.
- , and the rising in Brittany and la Vendée; II., 530, 531, 604; III., 13, 51, 538-540.
- , commissaries or commissioners of; II., 357, 466, 472, 487, 531, 543, 547, 576, 580; III., 60.
- , committees of; II., 462.
- , correspondents of, in England; III., 480, 481, 514.
- , decrees of, mentioned; II., 359, 650; III., 495, 496.
- , Executive Council of; II., 334, 335, 344, 358, 375, 526, 580.
- , —, Commissioners of; II., 567, 568, 580.
- , factions or divisions in; III., 85, 86, 491. And see France, factions in, above.
- , members or deputies of; II., 391, 584, 587, 616; III., 64, 82, 95, 117, 129, 532, 538. And see under their names.
- , —, description of; III., 64, 65, 85, 86.
- , —, imprisoned; III., 507, 508.
- , negotiations of, with America; II., 527, 528.

France, National Convention—cont.

- , negotiations of, with Spain; III., 57.
- , President of; II., 582.
- , proceedings of; II., 412, 440; III., 66.
- , property in the hands of; III., 490.
- , report to; III., 474.
- , treaty of, with Prussia. See Prussia, King of.
- , treaty of, with Sweden; II., 515.
- , speech of Robespierre against; II., 588.
- , death of the young king a disadvantage to; III., 78.
- , Robespierre denounced in; III., 473.
- , speedy dissolution of, expected; III., 51, 483.
- , is losing its head; III., 484.
- , is a chaos; III., 533.
- , last days of; III., 160.
- naturalized citizen of; II., 325.
- news from; I., 53, 54, 297, 310; II., 632. And see Paris, bulletins from.
- old government of, mildness of; III., 69.
- orders for corn from; I., 483.
- Pairie* of; I., 329.
- paper money in. See French assignats.
- Parliament of; I., 150, 154, 155.
- , Grande Chambre de; I., 155.
- , members of; III., 451.
- , resistance by, to proposed taxation; III., 417.
- people of. See French, the.
- person taking refuge in; II., 582.
- Pitt's visit to; I., 219.
- plots in; III., 219.
- price of money in; III., 483.
- priests in, return of, and respect shown to; III., 66, 84, 85.
- provinces of, commissioners in; III., 496, 498, 503.
- provisional Government of; II., 375.
- public opinion in; II., 182; III., 18, 64.
- refugees from. See French emigrants.
- Regent of [Duke of Orleans]; I., 56.
- Regents of; II., 268.
- residents in; passim.
- revenues of, commissioner of; II., 571.
- revolution in, or the French revolution; I., 484, 485, 490, 561, 606, 608; II. and III., passim.
- , believed to be nearly at an end; I., 485, 525; II., 464.
- , principles of, fear of the spread of; II., 184.
- , Burke's views on; II., 193.
- , view taken of, in America; II., 223.

France, revolution in—cont.

- , leaders of; II., 331. And see under their names.
- Royal cause or party in. See French royalist party.
- Royal family of; II., 313, 317 (2), 318, 335, 413, 420, 472; III., 459–461, 472, 481, 482.
- , members of. See above.
- , flight and arrest of; II., 107–112, 115, 120, 122; III., 448, 450.
- , close confinement of, in the Tuileries; II., 116.
- , in the Temple; II., 523.
- Royal houses, sale of the furniture of; III., 161 (2).
- Sainte guillotine in; II., 459.
- Secretary of State in; II., 267.
- ships built for or in; II., 275; III., 87.
- Société de la Propagande* in; II., 68, 123, 342.
- southern provinces of; I., 136–138, 148; II., 427, 429, 569; III., 25, 31, 83, 84, 484, 485.
- trade of; I., 189, 323; II., 260, 261, 350; III., 420, 421.
- travellers to and from; passim.
- trees of liberty in, cut down; III., 83.
- Trésor or Trésorerie Nationale; II., 570, 572, 574, 576, 587.
- , exhaustion of; III., 81, 82.
- Tribunal Révolutionnaire; II., 550, 560–562, 568, 570, 583, 586, 587, 590; III., 496.
- , accusateur of; II., 551, 555.
- , reconstitution of; II., 588.
- , executions by order of; II., 589.
- wars of; II., from 262 passim; III., passim.
- west coast of; II., 469.
- assistance to the Pretender from; I., 51.
- attitude of, towards England; I., 149; II., 341, 342, 351.
- negotiations of, with England; I., 265; II., 561; III., 255, 329, 330 (3), 333–337, 369, 379. And see Lille, negotiations at.
- , minutes of; III., 239–242.
- , note concerning; III., 562.
- , proposed; II., 598; III., 135, 136, 140, 149, 169, 170, 181, 190, 191, 228, 229, 310, 327 (2).
- , regretted; III., 217. And see George III., dislike of, &c.
- , rupture of; III., 290.
- negotiations of, with the Baltic powers; II., 578.
- , with Austria or the Emperor. See Austria.
- , with Spain. See Spain.
- negotiations of German princes with. See Germany, princes of.
- proposed recall of ambassadors from; II., 117.

France—cont.

- new constitution of, to be offered to the king; II., 154.
- crusade against; II., 167, 177, 181, 273.
- crisis in; II., 291, 294.
- retention of Savoy by; II., 322.
- new republic of; II., 339.
- , recognition of; II., 351.
- declaration of war against England by; II., 378, 524.
- chances of the restoration of the monarchy in; II., 391, 609, 617, 638; III., 15, 84–86, 88, 135, 136, 187, 397, 532.
- expected rising in; II., 429.
- evacuation of conquests by; II., 430.
- English fleet to range the coast of; II., 444.
- proposed invasion of England by; II., 454, 466, 518, 556; III., 214, 217.
- anarchist or republican faction only left in; II., 462.
- proscription of religion in; II., 463, 472.
- military position of, reading of a paper on; II., 515.
- towns in, seeking English protection; II., 517.
- danger to, from England and the Emperor; II., 521.
- belief that England would treat with a stable power in; II., 549.
- is expecting proposals of peace from England and Prussia; II., 562.
- means of resistance of; II., 591, 593.
- surrender of Flanders to; II., 598.
- mishaps and misconduct in the war with; II., 602, 648.
- not strong enough to disturb England; II., 603.
- chance of a counter revolution in; II., 616, 617, 619.
- irrecoverable detriment done to the navy and commerce of; II., 627.
- must be invaded by Frenchmen; II., 630.
- danger to the colony at the Cape, from; II., 645.
- danger of the invasion of Italy by; III., 2.
- supply of provisions to, objected to; III., 59.
- celebration of the Décadi in; III., 66.
- religious liberty restored in; III., 66, 84.
- tendency towards a settled state in; III., 69, 80, 81, 140.
- change of opinion in (towards royalty and religion); III., 83–85.
- new constitution of; III., 149.
- conquests of, in Italy; III., 212, 396.
- comparison of, with ancient Rome; III., 230.
- future government of; III., 231.

France—cont.

power of, stretches from the Alps to the pillars of Hercules; III., 233.
 reception of Lord Malmesbury in; III., 260.
 elections in; III., 309, 398.
 demands of; III., 333.
 expedition of, against Ireland; III., 361.
 new revolution in; III., 372.
 increasing embarrassment in; III., 417.
 interposition of, in favour of America; III., 462.
 "not her enmity but her friendship is terrible"; III., 465.
 is willing to lose her colonies; III., 478.
 proposals for barring the aggressions of; III., 516.
 partiality shown to, by the Americans; III., 524, 525.
 hatred of England in; III., 533.
 expected return of the emigrés to; III., 533.

France, Isle de. See Mauritius.

Franche Comté; II., 457; III., 83, 131.

scarcity in; III., 490.

Franco-Irish regiments; III., 2.

François, mulatto; 478.

Frankfurt or Frankfort am Main (Frankfort); II., 85, 118, 535, 543, 565, 578, 642; III., 50, 51, 213, 448.

banker at; II., 493.

ladies of; II., 396.

letters dated at; II., 625, 633, 636-640.

coronation of the Emperor at; II., 283.

reported attempt to poison the Emperor at; II., 295.

French Commissioners at; II., 525, 543.

Lord Malmesbury intends to leave; II., 626, 628.

military concert signed at; II., 628.

proposed congress at; III., 78.

Fraser, Frazer (Frazier):

Captain; III., 385, 388.

Charles Henry, resident at Hamburg; III., 20, 40, 78, 158, 178, 182, 193, 222, 233, 447.

Mr., secretary of legation; II., 99, 226.

Mr., India (1785); I., 257.

Simon, Lord Lovat, trial of, alluded to; I., 125.

William, Under Secretary of State; III., 437.

William, in India; I., 1, 2, 18, 32, 37, 38, 40, 44-46, 48.

—, history of Kouli Khan by; I., 263.

Fraser Fencibles, the; III., 388.

Fredegonde, Queen, allusion to; I., 150.

Frederick, Prince of Wales, eldest son of George II.; I., 101, 102, 122, 126, 133, 134.

Frederick, Prince of Wales—cont.

as Duke of Cornwall; I., 116, 129.
 letter from; I., 122.

—, alluded to; I., 126.

letters to; I., 115, 116.

marriage treaty of; II., 628.

in relation to Parliamentary elections; I., 107, 109 (3), 111-134.

wife of [Augusta], Princess and Dowager Princess of Wales; I., 115, 135.

—, keeper of the Privy purse to.

See Pitt, Anne.

chancellor, attorney, and solicitor of; I., 132.

minister or agent of; I., 131.

servants of; II., 122.

usher of; I., 111.

Frederick, Duke of York, 2nd son of George III.; I., 292, 293, 376, 378, 443, 462, 471, 474, 558; II., 34, 179, 249, 505, 602, 656; III., 11, 17, 24, 25, 91, 102, 148, 236, 242, 243, 257, 267, 414.

letters from; II., 133, 393, 559.

—, alluded to; II., 435, 558, 560, 606.

letter to; III., 453.

aide-de-camp of; II., 387.

debt of; II., 309, 314.

forces under; II., 386, 389, 391, 417, 442, 448, 576, 605; III., 484, 514.

friend of; II., 220.

martinetism of; II., 349.

messenger of; III., 452.

officers of; II., 605.

his visit to Berlin; II., 82 (2), 155, 167, 205.

his marriage to the Princess Frederica of Prussia; II., 131, 133 (2), 155, 156, 175, 179, 183, 188, 196-203, 205, 215, 216, 220, 227, 230, 235, 245; III., 452-458.

—, Preliminary Act for; II., 197, 245.

—, treaty of; III., 455-457.

—, —, articles of; III., 455, 456.

—, solemnization of, in England; II., 230-233; III., 457.

—, congratulations upon; III., 453.

establishment for; II., 133, 195, 198; III., 453-455.

returns to England; II., 200, 230.

goes to The Hague; II., 379-384.

with the army in Holland and Flanders; II., 389-392, 423, 455, 474 (2), 475 (2), 497 (2), 498, 502, 506, 507, 546, 603, 607, 639-641, 656; III., 509, 518-520.

dinner given by; II., 411.

complaints of the Admiralty; II., 420.

the Emperor's regard for; II., 421.

suggested recall of; II., 446.

inactivity or misconduct of; II., 491, 501; III., 518, 519.

goes over to England; II., 502, 503.

convention made with; II., 536.

Frederick, Duke of York—cont.

- “thwarted by the people whom he is trying to save”; II., 644.
 returns to England; II., 650.
 information given to the King by; II., 656.
 and the Prince of Württemberg; II., 313, 314.
 Frederick or Fredericks, Thomas; I., 37, 38, 40, 44–46, 48.
 Freeman, Mr., of Fawley Court; II., 328.
 Freiburg (Fribourg); III., 131.
 letter dated at; III., 132, 197.
 Frejus, Bay of; III., 93.
 Fremantle:

Colonel; II., 129, 344, 349, 440, 441, 501.

—, aunt of; II., 340.

John; I., 279, 310.

Stephen; I., 235.

Lieut.-Col. Stephen, dies of fever; II., 634.

Capt. W.; I., 296, 352, 354, 355, 377, 457, 461, 473–475.

W. H.; III., 285.

William; I., 211, 334, 343, 363, 406, 410, 428, 432.

French, Mr. [Irish M.P.]; I., 236, 407; —; III., 93.

French or the French, passim.

agents or spies; II., 276, 280 (2), 288, 329, 332, 341, 445, 510.

—, cost of; II., 538, 539, 542.

aristocrats; II., 80, 86, 98, 136.

— in exile; II., 164; and see French Princes and French emigrants.

“armée révolutionnaire”; III., 497, 499, 506, 507.

— commander of. See Ronsin.

army; I., 10, 310, 357.

—, Irish brigade of; I., 314.

—, regiments or corps in:—

Corps du Génie; III., 160.

de Châtre; III., 435.

Royal Allemagne; III., 450, 451.

Royal Rousillon; III., 435.

Suisse. See Swiss troops.

army or forces [Republican]; II., 268, 277, 280, 327, 392, 429, 448, 459, 544, 547; III., 18, 32, 40, 53, 66, 67, 126, 149, 160, 161, 210, 467–471, 501, 502, and passim.

—, artillery of, commander of; II., 527, 547.

— defeat of; II., 487, 549, 544, 545; III., 143, 145, 146, 149, 155.

—, demands for; II., 586, 587.

—, desertion and sickness in; III., 124, 365.

—, discontent in; II., 531, 538.

—, fresh levies for; III., 489, 490.

—, generals or commanders of; II., 339, 391, 487; III., 40, 47; and see under their names.

—, —, discontent amongst; II., 585.

—, —, Jacobins; II., 519.

French army—cont.

—, ill-behaviour of; II., 153, 267 (2); III., 468, 469.

—, losses of; II., 452.

—, march of, upon Toulon; II., 481.

—, — upon Vienna; III., 318.

—, mortality in; III., 490.

—, muskets &c. for; II., 324.

—, notes, letters or reports on; II., 518–523, 531, 585; III., 19, 66, 67, 268.

—, numbers of; III., 468 (2), 470.

—, raising of; II., 421, 422; III., 1, 5.

—, retreat of; II., 287, 391, 439, 631.

—, successes of; II., 592, 598; III., 237.

—, supplies for; III., 127, 489.

— Trésorier général des Charraix; III., 65.

—, troops of the line; II., 518, 520.

—, want of provisions and ammunition in; III., 82.

— of the Alps; II., 522, 569; III., 485.

—, —, General of. See Dumas.

— of the Ardennes; II., 584.

— of Flanders; III., 483, 518–520.

— in Germany; III., 51, 232, 255, and passim.

— in Holland; III., 6, 9, 10, 20, 23, 24, 26, 51, 55, 57, 164, 177, 180, 184, 205, and passim.

— in Italy. See Italy.

— in La Vendée. See La Vendée.

— in the Low Countries; II., 591; and see Flanders, French army in.

— of the North; II., 542, 557, 563, 567, 572, 580–582, 584, 585, 587; III., 67, 82.

— of the Pyrenees; II., 522, 537, 538, 569; III., 491.

—, —, general of. See Dugommier.

—, —, commissaries with; I., 562.

—, —, discontent in; II., 562.

—, —, representatives with; II., 576.

— of the Rhine; II., 584; III., 25, 83, 95, 130–132, 139, 148, 161, and passim.

— on the Riviera; III., 124–128.

— in Holland. See Holland.

— of the Sambre and Meuse; III., 67.

— of Savoy; III., 95.

army or armies [Royalist]; II., 469 (2), 474, 599; III., 31, 96, 101, 110–118, 123, 138, 140–142, 166, 249, 250; and see La Vendée and Brittany, armies of.

—, chiefs of, manifesto by; II., 564.

—, corps for, raised in England; III., 512, 538.

French or the French—cont.

army [Royalist], corps for, in Hanover; III., 148.
 —, generals of; III., 138; and see Charette, Puisaye, and Humbert.
 —, general officers of; II., 242.
 —, suppression of; III., 364.
 arms purchased by, in America; III., 524.
 assignats or paper money; I., 606, 608; II., 242.
 —, fall in; III., 478, 489, 538, 539, 541.
 —, forgers of; II., 154.
 Bishops, apostacy of; II., 463.
 books; I., 156, 158.
 character of; III., 7, 475.
 chargés d'Affaires; II., 186, 326, 368.
 ciphers; II., 141.
 clergy. See priests, below.
 coast, smugglers on; II., 611. colonies. See France, colonies of.
 commissaries in England; II., 117, 358; III., 276.
 consuls; II., 83; III., 128, 524, 525.
 court. See France, court of.
 democrats, passim.
 emigrés or exiles; II., 86, 117, 118, 343, 353, 357, 358, 458, 519, 520, 549, 562, 616, 629 (2); III., 5, 65, 105, 126, 169, 477, 531, 533, 534.
 —, meeting of, at Mainz; II., 118.
 —, anxiety caused in England, by the influx of; II., 314, 315.
 —, estates of, proposed restoration of; III., 84, 85.
 —, in Italy; III., 2.
 —, in Switzerland. See Switzerland.
 emigrant corps, raising of; II., 644, 645, 648; III., 512, 538.
 —, inspector general of. See Woodford, Mr.
 fisheries; I., 189.
 fleet; II., 411, 412, 584; III., 13–15, 431; and see navy and ships below; also Brest and Toulon, French fleets at.
 —, for the West Indies; II., 402.
 —, chased by Lord Howe; II., 474, 476.
 —, Dutch ships seized by; III., 35.
 —, going for Ireland; III., 293, 294.
 fortresses or garrisons; II., 122, 258; and see under their names.
 gens de robe; III., 451.
 government in India; II., 226.
 houses at Amsterdam; II., 161.
 in Africa; II., 138.
 India ships; II., 430.
 interposition in Ireland, suspected; I., 234.
 in the East Indies; II., 477.
 intrigues; II., 605; III., 55, 489. islands; I., 595, 598, 600; II., 152.
 letter, "the famous"; II., 67.
 magistrates, necessity for their destruction; II., 588.

French or the French—cont.

monarchy, prospect of the annihilation of; II., 112.
 —, chance of the restoration of. See France, chance of the restoration of monarchy in.
 mulattoes; III., 478.
 national cockade; I., 232; III., 84, 276.
 navy; II., 363; III., 160–162.
 —, commanders in; III., 67.
 —, state of; III., 13, 67, 348.
 newspapers; III., 340.
 —, named:—
Les défenseurs de la patrie; III., 268.
Gazette Nationale; III., 82.
Journal Général; III., 292.
Journal des hommes libres; III., 292.
Journal Général et Politique de l'Europe; III., 462.
Moniteur; II., 277, 278, 280, 296, 344, 357, 479, 480, 486; III., 474.
Nouveliste; II., 633.
L'Observateur sans culotte; II., 466.
Perlet's Journal; III., 361.
Le Republicain; III., 317. nobility, serving as common soldiers; III., 18.
 —, under English protection; III., 135, 140.
 opinions, prevalence of; III., 27, 28.
 —, fear of the spread of; III., 225, 466, 467.
 peace desired by; II., 80; III., 164, 339, 341, 359, 439, 532.
 ports; I., 278; II., 441, 444; and see under their names.
 priests or clergy; II., 549, 562.
 —, in England; II., 315, 318, 390, 420.
 —, —, assistance given to; III., 367.
 —, —, decree against, vetoed by the King; II., 242.
 —, renouncing their cloth, to be indemnified; II., 463.
 —, necessity for their destruction; II., 588.
 princes in exile; II., 118, 122, 148, 153, 161, 164, 193, 194, 238, 248, 267, 273, 285, 425, 447, 476, 549, 550, 568, 617; III., 116, 117, 291, 534; and see under their names.
 —, commissary of; II., 471.
 —, concert of measures with; II., 599.
 —, conduct of; III., 223.
 —, "Asiatic magnificence" of; III., 476.
 —, household trains, servants, &c., of; II., 118; III., 476, 477.
 —, ministers or agents of; III., 293, 575.

French or the French—cont.

- princes, movements of; III., 118, 192, 425; III., 477.
- , "the two," proposal for their education at Edinburgh; II., 388.
- prisoners; I., 28; II., 391, 401, 402.
- prisoners in England, treatment of; III., 276, 277.
- proverb; II., 493.
- , representative in Holland. See Alguier, Monsieur.
- Republic, passim.
- , expected downfall of; III., 80, 478.
- Revolution. See France, revolution in.
- rooms, furniture of, described; I., 150.
- , navy officers; II., 424.
- , royalist war. See Brittany and La Vendée.
- , —, end of; III., 364.
- , —, memorandum upon; III., 303, 305.
- royalists; II., 109, 113, 126, 148, 309, 417, 471, 479, 491; III., 45, 65, 128, 133, 174, 178, 193, 216, 504, 531, and passim.
- , aid for; II., 629 (2); III., 96-104, 109-124, 129, 131, 135, 137-141, 162, 166, 168, 175, 179, 193, 244, 245, 249, 251, 291, 303-305, 309, 363, 486.
- , armies of. See French armies [Royalist] above.
- , the Comte d'Artois puts himself at the head of; III., 96.
- , distrust of the British Government by; III., 223.
- , statements concerning; III., 362-368, 392-394.
- , meeting of, at Brussels; III., 451.
- , no source of fear; III., 500.
- settlements in Africa; II., 138, 430, 433, 438.
- ships; I., 28, 47; II., 424, 449, 510, 581; and see fleet, above.
- , requisition of; III., 13.
- , taken by the English; II., 586.
- , in America; II., 444; III., 524, 525.
- , names of. See Ships, named.
- , privateers; I., 28, 36, 48; III., 524, 525.
- soldiers, passim.
- , in Holland, payments by, in assignats; III., 42, 54, 56.
- stock jobbers; II., 112.
- sufferings of, from the Prussian army; III., 476.
- sugars; I., 600; II., 23, 31.
- system, imitation of, in Holland. See Holland.
- traffic in the Black Sea; III., 438.
- translation of the Rights of Man; II., 166.
- treaty (of 1787); II., 406.

French or the French—cont.

- Vainqueurs de la Bastille*; II., 262.
- vessels captured by; I., 45; II., 382; III., 14, 524, 525.
- West India fleet, rumoured capture of; II., 581.
- Frenchwomen, character of; I., 149.
- Frenson, General, victory of; III., 536.
- Fréran or Freron; II., 538; III., 85, 160.
- Frere, Mr.; I., 82.
- Freteau, Monsieur; II., 153.
- Frey, Baron; II., 551.
- Freytag, Field Marshal; II., 424, 446, 475; III., 403, 404.
- Friesland or Frieze, province of; III., 61, 151, 153, 164, 170, 171, 177, 178, 180, 182, 189-191, 201, 202, 205, 210-212, 251, 252, 409, 410, 415, 422.
- Admiralty of; II., 275.
- National Guards of; III., 164.
- old government of; III., 150, 158, 183, 207.
- , desire for the restoration of; III., 61, 152-157, 164, 171, 176.
- representatives or deputies of; III., 172, 177, 180, 188, 189, 202, 207, 211, 219, 250.
- Supreme Court of Justice in; III., 190.
- Frigeville, General; II., 528.
- Frintz, Baron de, minister of the Emperor, at Bremen; III., 80.
- Frogatt, Mr.; I., 250, 275, 332; II., 179; III., 146, 257.
- Froissart; aide de camp; II., 603.
- , brother of; II., 603.
- Front, Count; II., 322.
- Frost, Mr.; II., 316, 340.
- Frotté:
- Comte J. S. de; III., 138, 303, 304, 306, 308, 309, 363, 364, 393.
- army of; III., 304.
- letter from; III., 309.
- Fulmer, co. Bucks., resident at; I., 264.
- Funchal, Madeira, letter dated at; III., 400.
- Road, ships in; III., 403.
- Funds or stocks, the; I., 271, 274; II., 293 (2), 338; III., 442.
- speculation in; III., 334.
- part of the portion of the Princess Royal to be placed in; III., 300.

G.

- Gabbitt (army officer); I., 187.
- Gaffroy, —; III., 85.
- Galicia; II., 48; III., 231.
- Gallo, Marquis; III., 214, 215, 319, 324, 328, 331, 344, 381, 384.

Galloway, Earl of. See Stewart, John.

Galvez, Monsieur; II., 83, 98.

Galway :

Lord. See Monckton - Arundel, Robert.

Earl of [Marquis de Ruigny]; I., 28.

Galway, county; I., 166, 231, 236.

address sent to Lord Temple from; I., 203, 204.

M.P.'s for; I., 236.

Gambia, the river, French ports on; II., 430.

Gand. See Ghent.

Gaol delivery, courts of; I., 548.

Gaols, crowded state of; I., 524.

Gardiner, Gardner :

Admiral Alan; II., 402, 412.

Luke; I., 220, 227, 277, 426, 430, 468.

—, revenue office of; I., 327.

William; I., 595.

Colonel William; II., 63, 83, 99, 103, 111, 120, 163, 199, 246, 292, 295, 304, 481.

—, letter from; II., 204.

—, family of; II., 295.

Garrick :

David; I., 144, 161.

—, letters from; I., 151, 152, 156-160.

—, wife of; 152, 156 (2), 162.

—, family of; I., 152.

David, his nephew; I., 159.

George, his brother; I., 156 (2).

Garter :

the, Order of (the blue ribbon); I., 91, 182, 187, 205, 208, 239, 259, 260, 440, 449; II., 191.

chapter of; II., 396.

King-at-arms; II., 234.

Garth, General; I., 365.

Garthshore, Lord; II., 290.

Gaston; II., 404.

army of; II., 418.

Gataker, Mr.; I., 157.

Gaudin; III., 117.

Gavi; II., 576.

Geffryes, Sir Geffory; I., 20.

Gell, Rear-Admiral; II., 465.

General, the; II., 128.

Genest or Genêt, Monsieur; II., 326, 408, 444.

Geneva; I., 80, 151, 153; II., 266, 270, 330; III., 82, 84, 169, 197, 214, 295, 485, 489.

agents sent from; III., 95.

late syndic of; II., 111.

Republic of, sends a letter to the King; II., 111 (2).

residents at; II., 455, 603; III., 162.

Genevese settlement in Ireland; I., 183, 191, 200, 221, 229.

commissioners for; I., 229.

Genoa; II., 8, 424, 444, 509, 512, 573, 574, 576, 581; III., 81, 489, 491, 497.

description of; II., 4.

Genoa—cont.

French envoy at. See Tilly.

— minister at; II., 538.

letters dated at; II., 456; III., 124.

sciocco in; II., 5.

riviera of; III., 124.

Genoese; III., 491, 510.

treaty of, with the French; II., 576.

Gensonnet; II., 462.

George I., King; I., 65, 75, 91.

aide de camp of; I., 90.

audiences of; I., 50, 59.

announces to Parliament that the Pretender is in Scotland; I., 51.

news of the battle of Preston brought to; I., 55.

birthday levée of; I., 61.

and his son, the Prince of Wales; I., 62, 64.

George, Prince of Wales (afterwards Geo. II.) :

and his father. See above.

audiences of; I., 50, 51, 59.

Board of Green Cloth of; I., 51.

R. Pitt's behaviour to; I., 56, 57, 59, 60.

dines in the city; I., 61.

returns thanks to Stanhope; I., 65.

wife of [Caroline], Princess of Wales; I., 59, 62, 65.

birthday of; I., 101.

marriage of, alluded to; II., 653.

death of, alluded to; I., 365.

George III., passim.

letters from :

to W. W. (aft. Lord) Grenville; I., 480, 483, 488-490, 493, 498, 502, 517, 519, 523, 530, 532, 533, 565, 579, 580, 586, 587, 603.

(1791); II., 21, 42, 54, 55, 60, 64, 107, 109-111, 133, 166, 201, 206, 208, 216, 232, 234, 241, 243.

(1792); 267 (2), 282, 304 (2), 308-310, 317, 319, 320, 329, 341, 351.

(1793); 363, 364, 372 (2), 378, 381, 385, 387, 388, 393-395, 397, 406, 412, 424, 426 (2), 428, 441.

(1794); 497, 504, 507, 508, 534, 541, 552, 558, 593, 601, 603, 604, 606, 609, 612, 622, 625 (2), 629, 638, 639, 642, 644 (2), 645, 647-650, 652 (3).

(1795); III., 5, 6, 9, 10 (3), 12, 14, 19, 35, 43, 49 (2), 50, 52, 57 (2), 62, 77 (2), 78, 92, 93, 134, 135, 141, 143 (2), 147, 149.

(1796); III., 167, 170, 173, 174, 182, 186 (3), 214, 227, 230, 242, 255-259, 261, 264, 265 (2), 270, 275, 278, 284 (2), 290 (2).

(1797); III., 293 (3), 299, 302 (2), 304 (2), 311 (2), 313, 314, 316, 318, 327 (2), 330, 332, 333, 342, 344, 354, 368, 375-377, 391, 392, 400, 402, 404-406, 408.

George III., letters from—cont.

to William Pitt; I., 537; III., 330.
alluded to; I., 430, 490; II., 177,
178, 205, 206, 216, 281, 298,
299; III., 31, 58 (2), 402, 407.
alluded to, official or King's letters; I., 312, 313, 439, 482, 484, 486 (2), 487, 503, 536.

letters to:

from W. W. (aft. Lord) Grenville;
I., 483, 516, 518, 523, 530, 532,
558, 565, 579 (2), 586 (2), 603;
II., 21, 54, 56, 60, 107 (3),
109, 111, 132, 166, 191, 200-
202, 205, 216, 222, 232, 266, 267,
303, 304, 317, 329, 363, 372, 389,
394, 395, 397, 505, 507, 624, 625,
629, 637, 642; .

III., 6, 34, 50, 52, 77, 92,
133, 134, 169, 172, 173, 185, 227,
228, 255, 256, 261, 265, 277, 284,
301, 303, 310, 311, 316, 327, 329,
332, 342, 343, 369, 373 (2), 376,
391, 406, 407, 487.

from the Duke of York; II., 559.

alluded to; I., 204; II., 217, 266,
283, 299, 314; III., 72.

addresses to; I., 265, 266.

—, alluded to; I., 472, 611; III., 49.

agents of; III., 528.

aides-de-camp of; II., 482, 483.

audiences given by; I., 180, 205,
449; II., 215, 222, 243, 282, 299,
407, 408.

—, to Lord North; I., 200.

—, to Pitt; I., 354, 449.

—, to Lord Thurlow; I., 215.

birthday of; I., 261, 541.

—, ball in honour of; II., 277.

carriages of; III., 44.

court of. See St. James'.

"Court and cabinets of," letter printed in; II., 59.

French corps in pay of. See French armies [royalist].

friends of; I., 206, 207.

German dominions of; II., 645 (2);
III., 77, 78, 94, 225.

health, illness, or insanity of; I., 356, 360-427, 429, 431, 443, 447,
466, 476, 477, 493; II., 176, 184,
193, 195, 422, 623, 634.

house of, at Lyndhurst; III., 96.

Latin poem dedicated to; II., 436.

law officers of; II., 231-233, 235.

levées or drawing-rooms of; I., 201,
215, 219 (2), 258, 265, 356, 456,
525, 553; II., 213, 258, 297, 414,
III., 49, 317, 377.

—, postponed, on account of the
French King's death; II., 372, 373 (2).

lords of the bedchamber to; I., 201, 536.

map given to; II., 190.

master of the Horse to; II., 234.

George III.—cont.

ministers or servants of. See Government, the.

orders of; II., 52.

—, alluded to; I., 187, 197, 486;
II., 389; III., 197.

orders conferred by; the Garter; I., 239, 259; the Bath; II., 223, 425.

physicians of; I., 361, 382, 422; and see Warren, Baker, Willis, Addington, Pepys, Reynolds, Gilbourne.

portrait of; II., 653.

present from; II., 387.

presentation to; II., 211.

servants of; I., 375, 378, 401.

speeches of. See Parliament, King's speeches to.

sponsorship of; I., 392.

and foreign affairs, passim.

wishes Garrick to play "The Guardian" and "Macbeth"; I., 156, 157.

subscribes for a work by Berenger;
I., 159.

in relation to Irish affairs; I., 169, et seq., passim; II., 21, 27, 28.

opinions, wishes, or pleasure of; I., 177, 193, 310, 459-461, 469, 470,
476, 477, 482, 483, 486, 487, 508,
602; II., 37, 65, 148, 319, 438;
III., 147, 186, 195, 411, 414, 415.

favour of; I., 178, 463, 481.

and the order of St. Patrick; I., 179, 183, 190, 195, 199, 201.

matters put or to be put before; I., 187, 188, 278, 311, 319, 451, 458,
458, 462, 465, 471, 472, 486, 570,
557; II., 28, 60, 135, 191-193,
225, 299, 303, 307; III., 31, 70,
239, 404.

and Lord Temple, afterwards Lord
Buckingham; I., 201-214, 239,
240, 259, 355, 357, 358, 427, 458,
480, 531-533; II., 623, 634.

and the Coalition ministry; I., 202-208, 215-218.

looked upon as a prisoner; I., 204.

and peerages; I., 219, 460, 482, 483
(2), 485, 492, 495, 498, 500, 502,
526, 527 (2), 536, 561, 563, 565-
570; II., 55, 67, 394; III., 447.

and Parliamentary reform; I., 214, 215.

and Mr. Pitt; I., 220.

invitation from, alluded to; I., 267.

in relation to army matters; I., 291-
293, 296, 304, 336-358, 388, 437,
438, 441, 442, 444, 446-457, 461,
463, 473, 486, 489, 490, 493, 496,
512, 525, 531-534; II., 15-17, 26,
28, 36, 39, 42, 44, 55, 66, 83, 101,
123, 186-188, 208, 212, 215, 466,
475, 483-485; III., 102, 424.

and the defeat of the ministry in 1788; I., 326.

movements of; I., 350, 443, 462, 463,
471, 488, 489; II., 198, 611, 623;
III., 49.

George III.—cont.

Lord Bute, the avowed favourite of ; I., 368. messages from ; I., 428, 531, 532.
 —, to ; I., 435.
 thanks offered to, by Lord Buckingham ; I., 481.
 sends an embassy to China ; I., 484.
 warrants to be signed by ; I., 485.
 displeasure of ; I., 514 ; II., 97.
 sentences remitted by ; I., 516–523, 586 ; II., 34.
 Speech [Irish] to be laid before ; I., 559.
 and India ; I., 587, 588.
 congratulations offered to, on the negotiations with Spain ; I., 603.
 message of, to the Irish Parliament ; II., 43.
 resolves to send a minister to [the United States of] America ; II., 80.
 and King Louis XIV. ; II., 83, 107, 110 (2), 205, 206, 372 (3) ; III., 458–461. in relation to the Duke of York and his marriage ; II., 156, 195, 196, 198, 200–203, 216, 230–233, 235, 249 (2), 421, 426, 502 ; III., 452–457. information from ; II., 184, 295, 656.
 and pensions ; II., 195, 338 ; III., 514, 515, 520. comments of, on the French embassy and French troops ; II., 267. and diplomatic appointments ; II., 296, 297, 387, 398, 495.
 receives the American minister ; II., 299. invitation of, to Lord and Lady Grenville ; II., 364. disposition of, towards Spain ; II., 376.
 and the French refugee clergy ; II., 420.
 projected assassination of ; II., 445, 459, 461 ; III., 510, 511.
 commission of, to the Governor of Toulon, alluded to ; II., 517.
 fear lest he should be kidnapped ; II., 611.
 precautions for the safety of ; II., 612, 614, 623, 634.
 hopes Lord Grenville will go to Weymouth ; II., 622. dissatisfied with his naval guard ; II., 623.
 praises the army and blames the navy ; II., 634.
 is talking more incautiously than ever ; II., 634.
 assures Lord Grenville of his confidence in his diligence and exactness ; II., 643.
 as Elector of Hanover ; II., 645 ; III., 134, 148, 300, 311, 375.

George III.—cont.

refuses to allow the raising or sojourn of French recruits in Hanover ; II., 645 ; III., 148.
 paper concerning public affairs drawn up by ; II., 648.
 praises Mr. Wickham's conduct ; II., 649.
 information given to, by the Duke of York ; II., 656.
 and the Prince of Orange ; III., 14, 26, 91.
 arrangements by, for the Princess Caroline's arrival, marriage, &c. ; III., 49 (2). wishes renewed aid to be given to Prussia ; III., 50. declaration of, at Ratisbon ; III., 94.
 and the Comte d'Artois ; III., 97–101.
 and the Prince of Wales ; III., 101. refuses to let the Guards go to the West Indies ; III., 102.
 and the French royalists ; III., 109, 117.
 and the East India Company ; III., 137.
 rejoices over Clairfait's victories ; III., 143, 149.
 sends a message to the Commons ; III., 165.
 declares that he must follow the "line of morality though perhaps not of politics" ; III., 174.
 and his daughters' marriages ; III., 185, 186, 299, 300, 315, 316, 323, 332. views of, on the negotiation with France ; III., 174, 240, 275, 278, 284, 290, 311, 327, 330, 342–344, 354. hopes that France may meet her deserved fate ; III., 257.
 and the Empress of Russia ; III., 261, 262.
 and the Prince of Wales' marriage ; III., 316.
 complains of the "tame state of mind of Parliament" ; III., 327.
 style of, to be used in the treaty with France ; III., 334.
 friendly feeling towards, by the King and Queen of Prussia ; III., 402.
 the principle to which he owes his throne ; III., 465.
 affront to, by the French government ; III., 467.
 and the Comte de Provence ; III., 487. thanked by the Pope ; III., 487, 488.
 and America ; III., 522, 530, 534. wife of. See Charlotte, Queen. sons of, or the Princes ; I., 177, 365, 388 ; and see under their names.
 daughters of ; II., 232–234 ; III., 147, 186, 452, 454 ; and see Charlotte and Augusta, Princesses.

George III.—cont.

sister of. See Brunswick, Augusta, Duchess of.

aunt of. See Orange, Anne, late Princess of.

niece of. See Württemberg, Charlotte, Princess of.

family of; I., 239, 430; III., 302.

George, Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV.; I., 366, 376, 378, 379, 434, 448, 457, 465; II., 34, 372 (3), 387, 424, 449; III., 52, and passim.

letter from; III., 21.

address to, from the Irish Parliament; I., 416.

—, alluded to; I., 402, 403, 406, 407, 410–420, 428.

—, his answer to, alluded to; I., 433.

attendants of; III., 44.

equerry of; II., 349.

friends or party of; I., 362, 436, 440, 441, 457.

household or establishment of; I., 216, 362.

servants of; I., 394.

in relation to the King's illness and the Regency; I., 362–428, 433, 434, 439, 443.

influence of, in Scotland; I., 534.

turns out Lord Parker; I., 536.

to mediate for Prince Edward; I., 558.

delegate to; II., 20.

expresses a disinclination to marry; II., 133, 179.

opposition of, to his father; II., 291.

noisy banditti of; II., 370.

rumoured separation of, from Mrs. Fitzherbert; II., 599.

arrangements for the marriage of; II., 628, 629.

suggests Lord Southampton to go to Brunswick; II., 629.

directions of, in regard to the Princess of Brunswick's journey; II., 652.

wishes to see Lord Grenville; III., 21.

marriage of, to Princess Caroline of Brunswick; III., 49, 52, 72.

—, treaty of; III., 316(2).

visit of, to the Comte d'Artois; III., 101–104.

wife of, Princess of Wales, gives birth to a daughter; III., 167.

George, Prince of Denmark, death of; I., 38.

George [? Georges Cadoudal]; III., 561.

Georgia, loyalist troops in; I., 184.

Gerald, —; III., 374.

Gerard, Charles, Earl of Macclesfield; I., 318.

Gerbillon, Rev. Father, Superior of the French Jesuits, Pekin, letter to; I., 3.

Germain, Lady Betty; I., 106.

German :

armies; III., 45; and see troops below.

—, approach Paris; II., 307.

association; II., 46.

cavalry; II., 592.

colleges; III., 398.

convention; II., 162.

correspondent; III., 129.

courts, custom of; II., 653.

—, ministers or ambassadors at; II., 67.

dominions or possessions of George III. See George III.

—, of the Prince of Orange. See Orange, Prince of.

Empire; III., 230, 311.

—, anarchy in; III., 288.

—, army of; III., 32, 33, 45, 51.

—, Electors of, desire to treat with France; III., 532.

—, suggested subsidy from; II., 516.

—, integrity of; III., 374, 396, 403–407.

—, to be left to shift for itself; III., 134.

—, exists only in name; III., 224.

—, Diet of; III., 228, 532.

—, Princes of; II., 478; III., 227–229.

—, —, dominions of; III., 227.

fiefs of the Emperor; II., 248.

or high Dutch language, sermon printed in; I., 48.

politicians at the Hague; II., 271.

states; II., 333.

treaty, &c., upon the marriage of the Princess Royal; III., 304.

troops; II., 452, 492; III., 437.

— for Toulon; II., 446.

— in British pay to remain under an Imperial general; II., 648.

— in America; I., 184.

— in Italy; I., 28.

Germanic :

constitution, risk of the overturn of; III., 139, 140.

league; II., 478.

Germans; II., 491; III., 65, 510.

Germany, passim.

armies in; II. and III. passim.

bishoprics in, secularization of; III., 373–375.

defence of; II., 534; III., 29.

depôts wanted in; II., 644, 645.

Dutch officers in; III., 91.

English army or troops in, passim.

— ministers in; II., 644, 645.

estates in; III., 4, 39.

French agents in; II., 445.

— royalist troops from; III., 101.

imports from; I., 261.

military convention for defence of III., 536.

north of; III., 149, 405.

perplexed state of; III., 299, 300.

people of; II., 119.

powers of; II., 313, 534, 536, 537.

Germany—cont.

- , little hope of adequate support from; II., 639.
 praise of; II., 119.
 predicted revolution in; II., 569; III., 378. princes of; II., 85, 140, 177, 182, 424, 645. And see German Empire.
 —, think England a good milch cow; II., 497.
 —, negotiations of, with the French; III., 72.
 protestant interest in; III., 258.
 public feeling in, against the French republic; II., 543.
 retreat of the allies towards; III., 22.
 suggested congress in; II., 212.
 towns of, connivance of, with France; III., 511.
 transports from; III., 104.
 travellers to; I., 82; II., 504.
 troops from, for the West Indies. See West Indies.
 western part of; III., 50.
 Gertrudenberg or Gertruydenberg, in Holland; II., 613; III., 6 (2).
 Geuzau, General de, Governor of Breda; III., 60-62.
 Gevaudin, the; I., 147.
 Ghent or Gand; II., 386, 387.
 General Clairfait at; II., 592.
 Gibbons, Captain; I., 37.
 Gibraltar; I., 194; II., 402, 403, 431, 465.
 garrison of, or troops at or going to; I., 587, 588; II., 408, 424, 429; III., 102, 136, 266, 267.
 an everlasting bone of contention; III., 266.
 Lord G. Lenox appointed to; I., 593.
 Straits of; I., 189; II., 23, 403; III., 266.
 Gideon, Sir Sampson (Mr. Pitt's Jew); I., 302, 423; and see Eardley.
 Gifford:
 Mr.; I., 568, 570.
 Sir William; I., 62.
 Gibal or Jubal; II., 279.
 Gilliers or Giliers, Mons. de; II., 388; III., 477, 478, 484.
 Gimel, Comte de; III., 60, 61.
 Gingle, Mrs. See Pitt, Anne.
 Girod, Abbé; III., 292.
 Gisborne, Dr.; I., 398.
 Gisors, Mons. de; I., 137-139.
 Givet, in Flanders; I., 279, 285; II., 410, 620.
 French camp at; III., 414, 417, 435 (2).
 Glandore, Earl of. See Crosbie, John.
 Glasgow, Earl of. See Boyle, George.
 Glasgow; I., 604; II., 249.
 letter dated at; II., 197.
 rebels marching towards; I., 53.
 Glenorchy, Lord. See Campbell, John.
 Glerawley, Viscount. See Annesley, Francis Charles.

- Gloucester, Duke of. See William Henry.
 Gloucester:
 Bishop of (in 1715). See Willis, Richard.
 —, (in 1762). See Warburton, William.
 election at; I., 118 (2).
 Goa, arrack from; I., 6, 15.
 Gobel, intruded Bishop of Paris; II., 463.
 his vicars; II., 463.
 Gobelsoire, Monsieur. See Vandernoot.
 Goddard, Charles; I., 602; II., 109, 225, 309, 354, 359, 445, 450, 453; III., 44, 78, 159, 176, 178.
 letters from; II., 397; III., 33.
 letters to; III., 164, 201, 245, 250, 252, 253.
 Godoi, Sieur. See Alcudia, Duc de la.
 Godolphin, Sidney, Earl of Godolphin, Lord Treasurer of England; I., 27, 28, 33.
 mediates between the two East India Companies; I., 30.
 Godoni, suspected assassin; III., 510, 511.
 Goertz, Count; II., 525.
 Golconda; I., 45.
 Goldworthy, —; II., 623.
 Golofkin, General; III., 23.
 Goltz, Count, as Prussian minister at St. Petersburg; II., 66, 80, 102, 110, 156; as minister to France; III., 7, 431, 438, 439.
 Gomm, Monsieur, daughter of; III., 290.
 Good Hope, Cape of; III., 224, 241, 348, 355, 368, 369, 378, 379, 421.
 Goodman, Captain; I., 15.
 Gorcum, in Holland; II., 381.
 burgomaster of; III., 435.
 Gordon:
 Alexander, 4th Duke of Gordon; I., 596, 603; III., 421.
 [Anne] Duchess of Gordon; I., 298, 302, 332, 370, 376.
 Captain, letter to; III., 467.
 Cosmo, Baron of Exchequer, Scotland; I., 586.
 Lord W.; II., 305.
 William, Earl of Sutherland; I., 117.
 —, letters from, 118(2).
 Sir William; II., 64.
 Gore:
 Arthur Saunders, 2nd Earl of Arran I., 183, 186, 199.
 Henry; I., 426, 430, 468, 489.
 John, Baron Annaly; I., 173, 176, 191, 226.
 Sir Ralph, Earl of Ross; I., 187, 346, 420, 525.
 Gosfield, co. Essex; I., 360; II., 390.
 letters dated at; I., 232; II., 389.
 Gosport; II., 448, 526.
 Gosselies, French posts at; II., 592.
 Gothic Empire; II., 208.
 Gott, —; I., 265, 267, 268.
 Gottenburg; II., 411.
 Gouda, in Holland; III., 426.

- Gough :
 Captain; I., 60.
 —; I., 37.
- Gould, Sir Henry, Justice of Common Pleas; I., 518-520, 524.
- Goupy or Gouppy, Monsieur; I., 95, 100, 103 (2), 104.
 daughter of; I., 103.
- Gouvernet, Mons. de, French ambassador to the Hague; II., 86, 130-132.
- Gouvion, Monsieur; II., 305,
 Government or administration, the, passim; and see Ministry.
 action of, in 1761; I., 572.
 —, in 1783; I., 572, 574, 576.
 defeat of; I., 324, 325.
 money due from, to the East India Company; I., 29. reconstruction of; I., 192.
 spy of; I., 246.
 (of 1783); II., 45. change of (1782); II., 45.
 hostility to; II., 149.
 Birmingham riots attributed to; II., 166. blamed for supineness; II., 271.
 measures of, approved in the country; II., 354.
 manifesto of, alluded to; II., 450, 453.
 formation of (in July, 1794); III., 35.
 financial difficulties of; III., 267, 270, 271, 300.
- Gower, Earl. See Leveson Gower.
- Gowers, the; I., 206.
- Graaflend or Graafland, Monsieur; II., 24, 71.
- Grafton, Duke of. See Fitzroy, Augustus Henry.
- Graham :
 Colonel; III., 102.
 James, Lord Graham; I., 269(?) 525, 527.
 —, as Duke of Montrose; II., 268, 274.
 Lieut.-Colonel; I., 465.
- Grampound, Cornwall, election at; I., 107-111, 114, 119-122, 127-133.
 Mayor of; I., 110, 130 (2), 131.
- Granard :
 Earl of. See Forbes, George.
 Lady; II., 104.
- Granby, Marquis of. See Manners, John.
- Grandison, Lord and Lady. See Villiers.
- Grand-pré, Dumouriez retires from; III., 467.
- Grandville; II., 527, 581.
- Grange, the, letter dated at; II., 294.
- Grant :
 General; III., 421.
 Sir James; III., 421.
 Mr.; I., 567.
- Grantham :
 Earl of. See Nassau, Henry de.
 Lord. See Robinson, Thomas.
- Graville, Rebecca, Lady; I., 25, 26.
 letters of; I., 9, 16.
 cousins of; I., 9, 16.
- Grattan, Henry; I., 163, 164, 166, 169, 172, 173, 181, 182, 191-193, 197-199, 222, 223, 226, 251, 253, 259, 303, 305 (2), 372, 383, 397, 406, 413, 414, 417, 421, 423, 426, 428, 432(2), 434, 462, 465, 466, 492, 560 (3); II., 11, 21, 22, 35, 39, 256; III., 36.
 —, corps of, sends address to Lord Temple; I., 211.
 —, views of; I., 220.
 —, life of, threatened by the Dublin mob; I., 224.
 —, vote of; I., 225.
 —, assumes the tone of a minister; I., 409, 410.
 —, attacks W. W. Grenville; I., 425.
 —, compliments the government; I., 432.
 —, speech of, in Parliament, alluded to; I., 458.
 —, committee of; II., 36.
 —, negotiations with; III., 17.
 —, charges of, against the Irish Government; III., 314.
 Major; I., 353.
- Grave, on the Meuse; III., 517.
 capitulation of; III., 6.
- Gravelines pits, near Dunkirk; III., 296.
- Gravesend; I., 8.
- Gray or Grey, Mr., diplomatist; II., 199, 200, 214.
- Graydon, —; I., 94.
- Great Britain, connexion of, with Russia, paper on; II., 44-49.
 designs against; II., 46.
 imports to; II., 601.
- Great Seal, the; II., 201, 629; III., 457.
 Lord Keeper of (1700-1705). See Wright, Sir Nathan.
 —, (in 1789). See Thurlow, Lord.
- Great Soders. See Soders.
- Gredington, letter dated at; II., 203.
- Green, —, I., 264.
- Green Cloth, Board of, clerks of; I., 51 (2).
- Greene, Mr., translation of Greek poems by; I., 160.
- Greenhaugh, Captain; I., 10.
- Greenhill, Dr.; I., 291.
- Greenwich, landing of Princess Caroline at; III., 49.
- Gregg, Mr.; III., 385, 387.
 sisters of; III., 385, 387.
- Grégoire, associates of; III., 478.
- Gregor :
 Mr. (1747); I., 111, 114, 119, 130.
 —, wife of; I., 111, 121.
 —, Francis, son of; I., 111, 121.
 —, daughter of; I., 121.
 Mr. (1789); I., 513.
- "Gregory." See Le Tourneur, Monsieur.
- Gregory :
 Dr.; I., 143.
 Miss; I., 159.
- Greig, Admiral; I., 602.

Grenada, West Indies, Admiralty Court in; III., 69.

Grenadas, the, office in; I., 488.

Grenelle, plain of, camp in; II., 153, 154.

Grenville:

- Annette, Lady Grenville; II., 293, 295, 299, 308, 324-326, 337, 340, 432, 437, 482; III., 34, 166, 318, 368; and see Pitt, Annette.
- , invitation to, from the King; II., 364.
- , message to; II., 598.
- George, sen.; I., 149., 213, 214, 370, 371; III., 285.
- , letter of; I., 159.
- , bills of, alluded to; I., 297, 299.
- , moneys due to, and from; III., 401.
- , tribute to, from Pitt; III., 404.
- George (eldest son of George, sen.), Nugent Grenville on his marriage (1775), Lord Temple (1779), Marquis of Buckingham (1784) passim.
- , letters from; I., 165, et seq. passim; II., passim; III., 2, 11, 34, 93-103, 129, 134, 136, 142-147, 165, 256, 270, 281, 284, 285, 294, 313, 317, 368, 390, 401-404, 561.
- , letters to; I., 215, 227, 232, 240, 243, 247, 266, 316, 341 (2), 438, 482-485, 490, 498, 510, 519, 527, 530, 534; II., 427, 649, 653; III., 12, 144, 434.
- , as 2nd Earl Temple and (in 1782) Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; I., 163, 176, 225, 226-241.
- , rumour that he is made Duke of Buckingham; I., 163.
- , resignation of; I., 181, 192, 197-212.
- , addresses to; I., 211.
- , desires some mark of the King's favour; I., 205, 208, 425-427, 431, 433, 478.
- , Exchequer Office of. See Exchequer, Teller's office in.
- , in England; I., 218-292.
- , to be Marquis of Buckingham; I., 209, 240.
- , wishes to have the Garter; I., 239, 259.
- , health of; I., 239, 470, 474, 475-483, 491, 494, 496, 502, 503, 506, 525-531, 553; II., 54, 654.
- , as Marquis of Buckingham; I., 245, 256, 294, 295, 303, 329, 408, 419, 479, 491.
- , proxy of, in Irish house of Peers; I., 252 (2).
- , as Lord Lieutenant, (1787-1789); I., 287-289, 306; II., 36; III., 3, 10, 37, 544.
- , reception of, in Ireland; I., 293 (2), 294.
- , defence of; I., 306.
- , views of, on the slave trade; I., 308.

Grenville, Marquis of Buckingham—cont.

- , goes to Black Rock; I., 330, 475.
- , objects to the King's interference with his army nominations; I., 337-343, 355, 357, 437-456, 473-475.
- , reported displeasure of the King with; I., 427, 442.
- , newspaper reports concerning; I., 432.
- , threatens to resign; I., 337-343, 355, 438, 448, 452-456, 470, 471, 473.
- , speech of, to the Parliament; I., 406, 408.
- , attack upon, by Grattan; I., 409.
- , letter of resignation from; I., 411.
- , feeling against, in Ireland; I., 413.
- , Navy office accounts of; I., 414.
- , refuses to transmit the address to the Prince of Wales; I., 414.
- , firmness and temper of; I., 417.
- , proceedings of, on the King's recovery; I., 420.
- , as Lord Lieutenant of co. Bucks; I., 449.
- , dinners or fêtes given by; I., 460, 471.
- , offices desired by; I., 471, 527.
- , promises not to be discontented; I., 471.
- , leave of absence granted to; I., 480.
- , has a fall from his horse; I., 475.
- , leaves Ireland; I., 481.
- , movements of, in England; I., 481-483, 496, 502, 525, 564.
- , sees little prospect of returning to Ireland; I., 494, 502.
- , wishes a successor to be appointed; I., 502, 512.
- , sends in his resignation; I., 513.
- , complaints of neglect, by the King; I., 526, 527, 529, 537, 538.
- , retirement of; I., 526, 530, 535.
- , wishes for a Dukedom; I., 526-529.
- , message to, from the King; I., 531, 533.
- , and Mr. Pitt; II., 128, 483-485, 654; III., 3, 4.
- , urges concessions to the Catholics in Ireland; II., 237, 238.
- , criticises the appointment of the Duke of Portland; II., 597.
- , the King very civil to; II., 623.
- , wishes "the Polish wolf" were strong enough to bite; II., 634.
- , the Royal family dine with; II., 634.

Grenville, Marquis of Buckingham—cont.
 —, separation of, from government; II., 647, 655.
 —, declines intercourse with Lord Grenville; III., 12.
 —, and the militia; III., 144, 257.
 —, and elections; III., 200, 201.
 —, financial affairs of; III., 401, 403, 404.
 —, regiment of; II., 623.
 —, wife of. See Grenville, Mary Elizabeth.
 —, children of; I., 392, 414, 419, 461.
 —, son of. See Grenville, Richard, Lord Temple.
 —, second son of; II., 654, 655.
 —, daughter of; I., 330.
 —, sisters of. See Williams Wynne, Lady, and Fortescue, Lady.
 —, family of; I., 336, 476 (2); II., 350, 654.
 —, relatives of, passim.
 —, aides-de-camp of; I., 290, 432; and see Wesley, Arthur.
 —, chaplains of; I., 290, 296.
 —, chief secretary of. See Grenville, W. W.
 —, clerks of; I., 262 (2), 263.
 —, gamekeeper of; II., 133.
 —, military secretary of. See Sheridan, Charles Francis.
 —, private secretary of. See Bernard, Scrope.
 —, secretary of; I., 410.
 —, steward of; I., 263.
 James (Jemmy), son of James Grenville, senior; I., 199-202, 208, 210, 212, 351, 361, 363, 364, 380, 538, 589; II., 10, 478; III., 104.
 Kate (Lord Buckingham's sister?); I., 309.
 Mary (daughter of Lord Buckingham); I., 476.
 Mary Elizabeth, as Lady Temple; I., 226.
 —, as Marchioness of Buckingham; I., 244, 259, 274, 275 (2), 277, 279, 294, 296, 361, 303, 330, 335, 340, 341, 359, 361, 389, 414, 425, 461, 475; II., 105, 113, 164, 282; III., 93, 134, 142.
 —, letters of; I., 419, 420, 431, 433, 444, 476-479.
 —, to go to England; I., 370.
 —, decides to remain in Ireland; I., 377.
 —, birth of a son to; I., 392.
 —, leaves Ireland; I., 412.
 —, returns to Dublin; I., 476.
 —, paints Miss Pitt's portrait; II., 109.
 —, aunt of; I., 431.
 —, pages of; I., 526.
 Richard, 1st Earl Temple; I., 150, 157, 161.
 —, letters of; I., 157, 158.

Grenville—cont.

Richard, 1st Earl Temple, death of (in 1779); III., 200.
 Richard (Dick), Lord Temple (son of Lord Buckingham); I., 259, 332, 336, 341; II., 239, 339, 501; III., 3, 257.
 General R[ichard]; I., 333, 361, 363.
 Captain T.; III., 148.
 Thomas (second son of George, sen.); I., 180, 186, 198-200, 273, 278, 358, 487; II., 178, 236, 282, 285, 349, 421, 647; III., 2, 3, 134, 200, 201, 257, 380.
 —, letters from; II., 597, 605, 609, 614, 617, 626, 630, 635, 636, 640.
 —, letter to; II., 655.
 —, joined with Lord Spencer in the mission to Vienna; II., 601-603, 622, 625.
 —, fresh instructions for; II., 629 (2), 630.
 —, is returning home; II., 636, 639, 640.
 —, is going to the Hague; II., 641.
 —, offered the post of secretary to Lord Fitzwilliam; II., 642.
 —, mission of, to Paris; III., 255.
 William Wyndham, created, in 1790, Lord Grenville (3rd son of George, sen.), passim.
 —, letters from; I., 194, 240-242, 262, 279, 335, 438, 479, 482-485, 490, 494, 496, 506, et seq., passim; II. and III., passim.
 —, letters to, 162, et seq., passim; II. and III., passim.
 —, memoranda or minutes by; II., 656; III., 26, 38, 148, 149, 239, 303, 330, 375, 471, 516, 536 (2), 562.
 —, to be chief secretary to his brother in Ireland; I., 163, 289.
 —, asked to move the address approving the peace (1783); I., 193.
 —, as Paymaster; I., 250.
 —, estate purchased by; I., 271, 272, 274.
 —, suggested as Vice Treasurer for Ireland; I., 273.
 —, salary of; I., 273.
 —, new office suggested for; I., 276.
 —, visit of, to the Hague; I., 278; III., 408-417, 422, 424.
 —, goes to Paris; I., 232-284.
 —, suggested appointment of, as Master of the Rolls in Ireland, 311-328.
 —, "at issue with a drunken madman"; I., 227.
 —, as M.P. for co. Bucks; I., 333, 335, 363, 364, 590.
 —, movements of; I., 358, 489; II., 304, 306, 308, 310, 313, 318, 489.

Grenville, William Wyndham—cont.

- , as Speaker of the House of Commons; I., 396, 459-461.
- , his reversion of the Remembrancer's Office in Ireland; I., 425, 459-461.
- , may have to seek re-election; I., 459-461.
- , takes Dundas's house at Wimbledon; I., 488, 489.
- , accident to; I., 533.
- , at Cabinet meetings; I., 579; II., 373, 644, 646; III., 35, 36, 283, 310, 330.
- , created Lord Grenville; I., 611, 612.
- , congratulations to; I., 611, 612; II., 3.
- , becomes Foreign Secretary; II., 55, 56, 60 (2), 74, 119, 155.
- , his courtship of Miss Pitt; II., 105, 282.
- , announces the King's determination to observe neutrality in regard to the internal affairs of France; II., 171.
- , purchase of an estate by; II., 179, 236, 240.
- , his view of the declaration of Pillnitz; II., 192.
- , patent of, delayed by the Chancellor; II., 248.
- , deprecates a quarrel with France; II., 281.
- , congratulations to, on his marriage; II., 292-294.
- , draws up a manifesto to the French nation; II., 428, 429.
- , allusion to, in the French Comité Secret; II., 473.
- , speeches of, praised; II., 478; III., 290.
- , income and salary of; II., 511, 512 (2).
- , to be auditor of the Exchequer; II., 511-513.
- , asked by Pitt to take the Home Department; II., 595.
- , assures Pitt that he is entirely at his disposal; II., 596.
- , is to retain the Foreign Office; II., 597.
- , resignation of, dispatched to Ireland; II., 599.
- , the King hopes he will go to Weymouth; II., 622.
- , health of; II., 622, 623.
- , consults with his colleagues; II., 629, 638.
- , the King assures, of his confidence; II., 643.
- , Lord Buckingham is offended with; II., 648, 655, 656.
- , assures Lord Buckingham of his continued affection; II., 650; III., 12.
- , proposed retirement of; III., 30, 31.

Grenville, William Wyndham—cont.

- , bills to be drawn on; III., 33.
- , supports Buckingham's measures in Ireland; III., 37.
- , differs from the rest of the Cabinet; III., 50 (2).
- , and the French royalists; III., 105, 109, 112, 115, 116, 118.
- , complaints of Dundas's proceedings; III., 167.
- , regrets that his views do not accord with the King's; III., 173.
- , papers to be laid before; III., 201.
- , lays his plans for negotiating with the French government before the King; III., 227.
- , approaches the Directory through the Danish minister; III., 255.
- , private troubles of; III., 276, 279.
- , expressions of affection towards; III., 297, 300, 307, 316, 317, 321, 323, 328.
- , portrait of; III., 318.
- , has accused the Duke of Bedford of being the cause of the mutiny in the fleet; III., 323.
- , objections of, to the answer sent to France; III., 329, 330 (3).
- , reasons of, for not resigning; III., 329.
- , the King's satisfaction with, for not resigning; III., 330 (2).
- , and French affairs; III., 439, 479, 480, 488, 513.
- , offers congratulations to the Duke of York; III., 453.
- , declines to see Talleyrand; III., 477.
- , representations made to, from America; III., 521.
- , wife of. See Grenville, Annette.
- , clerks of; III., 145.
- , godson of; I., 419.
- , secretary of; I., 400, 595.
- , office of. See Secretary's office.
- , family of; III., 147, 200.
- , —, libel on; III., 146.
- General William; II., 309, 478.
- Gressen in Germany; III., 51.
- Greville (Grevill):
  - Mr. (in 1715); I., 53.
  - Robert; III., 49, 167.
- Grey:
  - General Sir Charles (aft. 1st Earl Grey); II., 431, 444, 452, 477, 623.
  - , aide-de-camp to; II., 611.
  - Charles (aft. 2nd Earl Grey); II., 10, 271, 336, 480, 514; III., 11.
  - , money sent to by the Convention; II., 538.
  - Major (Henry, 2nd son of Sir Charles); II., 623.
  - Mr. (diplomatist). See Gray.
  - ; II., 499.

Griffith :
 Mr. (of the Lord Lieutenant's household) ; I., 290, 294.
 Vicesimus ; I., 18.
 (opposition M.P.) ; I., 395.
 Grinfield, Major-General ; II., 349.
 Grisons, the ; II., 588.
 Grist, John, paper by ; I., 60.
 Grogan, Cornelius, handbill signed by ; I., 578.
 Groningen, province of ; III., 170, 171, 183, 190, 191, 205, 245, 410, 417.
 troops in ; III., 61, 205, 212, 251. dissatisfaction with the new government in ; III., 153, 155-157, 164, 176.
 representatives of ; III., 172, 205.
 departure of the French from ; III., 211, 212.
 town of ; III., 164, 170, 212, 250.
 —, riots at ; III., 172.
 Grose, Colonel, Commandant of the Swiss at Basle ; III., 292.
 Grovestein, Baron de ; II., 364.
 Grub Street lie ; I., 528.
 Guadaloupe, II., 334, 454, 613, 623. capture of ; II., 411.
 Guadichens or Guydickens, General ; II., 340, 349.
 Gubbin, Humphrey ; I., 139.
 Guelders or Guelderland ; II., 169, 636 ; III., 156, 203, 207, 409-411, 419, 422.
 States of ; III., 413.
 Prussian ; III., 224.
 Guerchy :
 Mons. de ; I., 139.
 Madame de ; I., 139.
 Guernsey, Lord. See Finch, Heneage.
 Guernsey ; II., 556, 598 ; III., 400.
 troops in ; II., 423, 436.
 Guiana, exile to ; III., 374.
 Guildford, Earl of. See North.
 Guiraudet ; III., 350.
 Gulliver, allusion to ; I., 153.
 Gunn, Major ; II., 431, 434.
 Gusman (Spaniard) ; II., 551.
 Guydickens. See Guadichens.
 Guyon, Sir, the Red Cross Knight ; I., 161.
 Gwynne, Colonel, aide-de-camp and equerry to the King ; I., 337-346, 438, 446.

H.

H., Lady ; I., 105.
 Haaffs, Commissary ; III., 536.
 Haarlem or Haerlem ; II., 280, 286 ; III., 42, 426.
 gazette ; II., 236, 284.
 pensionary of ; III., 444.
 Hackney ; III., 38.
 Haeften, Baron de, Dutch minister at Vienna ; II., 147, 223, 227, 273, 287 ; III., 73.

 Haesinguen or Hasinguen, near Basle, French camp at ; III., 130, 131.
 Hagley, co. Worcester ; I., 122.
 Park, letters dated at ; I., 157, 161.
 Hague, the ; I., 281, 541 ; II. and III., passim.
 ambassadors or ministers at ; I., 281, 424, 428, 612 ; II., 52, 94, 130, 131, 178, 251, 283, 357, 492, 495, 508, 541 ; III., 54, 428, 447.
 — from England. See Harris, Sir James, Lord Malmesbury ; Eden William, Lord Auckland ; Fitzherbert, Alleyne, Lord St. Helens.
 — from Denmark. See Schubart.
 — from Portugal. See Aranjó. assemblies at. See Holland, States General, and National Convention of. bishop episcopal at ; II., 165.
 chargé d'affaires at ; II., 284 ; and see Caillard, Monsieur. conventions or treaties at ; II., 12, 49, 97, 130, 149, 171, 172, 174, 218, 251, 377, 533, 541, 545, 546, 552, 557, 565, 567, 604 ; III., 164, 188, 189, 536.
 courts of justice at ; II., 541.
 garrison of ; III., 417.
 Greffier at ; II., 79. And see Fagel, Monsieur, Greffier of Holland.
 letters dated at ; I., 585, 588, 591, 605, 612 (2) ; II., 22-25, 31 (2), 38, 57, 59 (2), 61, 62, 65, 67, 70, 72 (2), 76, 77, 84, 86, 88, 89, 92-96, 101, 106, 112, 121, 129, 131, 137-139, 146, 150-152, 156, 178, 264, 357, 360, 555, 540, 546, 552, 591, 600, 615, 621, 640, 641 ; III., 48, 408-413, 415, 417, 422, 427, 437-443, 446. And see Eden, William, Lord Auckland, letters from.
 post office at ; II., 280, 288.
 secretary of the English embassy at ; II., 377. society of ; II., 189, 280.
 theatre at, director of ; II., 141.
 —, tragedy of Charles IX. represented at ; II., 140.
 W. W. Grenville at. See Grenville.
 Lord Auckland's presence at, importance of ; II., 135, 136.
 sympathy with the French royalists at ; II., 140.
 seditious writings at ; II., 152.
 Lord Auckland leaves ; II., 168.
 — to return to ; II., 241.
 Lord and Lady Auckland at, entertainments given by ; II., 274, 277.
 Lord Auckland's house at ; II., 284.
 English troops at ; II., 374, 381.
 embassy at, offered to Lord St. Helens ; II., 392.
 Lord St. Helens appointed to ; II., 464.

Hague, the—cont.

- risk in going to ; III., 40, 55, 58, 79.
- attachment to the house of Orange in ; III., 42, 46.
- discontent at ; III., 46, 54.
- departure of troops from ; III., 252.
- special minister proposed for, from France ; III., 350.
- government at, answer from, expected ; III., 351.
- command of, to be restored to the Prince of Orange ; III., 426.
- rejoicings at ; III., 428.
- arrival of the Prince of Orange at ; III., 427.
- travellers to and from, passim.
- Hailes or Hales, David, minister to Poland ; II., 72, 77, 80, 81 (2), 94, 216, 233, 236, 246, 388.
- as minister to Sweden ; III., 90, 333, 344.
- Hainault ; II., 449.
- Haldimand, General, governor of Quebec ; II., 191 ; III., 423.
- Halifax :
  - Lord. See Montagu, Charles.
  - Marquis of. See Savile, George and William.
- Halifax, North America ; I., 184 ; II., 402.
- Halle, Prince of Cobourg near ; II., 592.
- Haller (banker) ; II., 538.
- Hallowes, Lieut.-Colonel ; I., 486.
- Halstead, co. Essex ; II., 389.
- Ham (Hamm), house at ; I., 36.
- French princes at ; II., 425.
- Monsieur* leaves ; II., 475.
- letter dated at ; III., 487.
- Hamburg (Hamburgh, Hambourg, Ham-borough) ; I., 47 ; II., 29, 335, 540, 562, 640 ; III., 9, 55, 73, 89, 102, 158, 172, 193, 197, 222, 224, 238, 249.
- Austrian minister at ; III., 275.
- English resident at. See Fraser, Charles Henry.
- French agent at ; II., 332.
- incendiary papers from ; II., 348.
- inhabitants of (Hamburghese) ; III., 222.
- letters dated at ; III., 39, 41, 46, 52, 55, 60, 71, 73, 182, 183, 233, 243.
- merchants of ; III., 82, 191.
- travellers to and from ; III., 17, 19, 78-80, 178, 219, 250, 302.
- Hamels, letters dated at ; II., 303 (2).
- Hamilton :
  - Alexander, Secretary of State, United States ; II., 158.
  - Douglas, Duke of ; I., 357, 591 ; II., 416.
  - George, Baron of Exchequer, Ireland ; I., 309 (2), 312, 321, 460, 463, 469.
  - Gerard ; I., 264.
  - James, Lord Clanbrassil, Remembrancer of the Exchequer, Ireland ; I., 177.

Hamilton, James, Lord Clanbrassil—cont.

- , title of Limerick held by ; I., 463.
- , illness of ; I., 459-463, 465.
- , office of ; I., 321 (2), 325, 327, 328, 331 ; II., 239, 240.
- John James, Earl of Abercorn ; I., 596, 603.
- Sackville, Under Secretary, Ireland ; I., 262, 300, 303, 311, 313, 319, 321, 325, 331, 363, 369, 386, 393, 482, 544 ; III., 9.
- , dismissal of ; III., 13, 15.
- , office of ; I., 313.
- , family of ; III., 17.
- Sir William ; II., 9, 10, 19, 330.
- Colonel ; II., 582.
- Mr., consul in Virginia ; III., 535.
- Hamm. See Ham.
- Hamme, in Germany ; III., 24.
- Hammond, George ; II., 83, 98, 99 ; III., 69, 254, 294, 327, 375, 391, 401, 407.
- letters from ; II., 223, 229, 250, 254, 263, 443 ; III., 223 (2), 235, 243, 315, 322, 326.
- letters to ; II., 80, 408, 651 ; III., 238.
- offered the post of minister to America ; II., 80.
- as minister from England to the United States ; II., 228, 289 (3) ; III., 520-529, 534, 535.
- is to return home ; II., 651.
- made Under Secretary at the Foreign Office ; III., 141.
- mission of, to Berlin ; III., 227-238.
- leaves Berlin ; III., 243.
- mission of, to Vienna ; III., 311-313, 315.
- departure of, from Vienna ; III., 322, 328.
- wife of ; II., 444.
- Hampden, Lord. See Trevor.
- Hampshire ; I., 32, 41, 73, 89.
- militia in ; II., 500.
- north, regiment of ; III., 134.
- Hampton, Garrick's house at ; I., 151, 157.
- letter dated from ; I., 152.
- Hampton Court ; I., 101, 117 ; III., 10-12.
- letter addressed to ; I., 94.
- refugee princes at ; III., 129.
- Hanaper, the ; II., 338.
- clerkship of ; I., 196.
- Handasyde, General ; I., 108.
- Hankowitz, Monsieur ; III., 401.
- Hanmer & Co., house of ; III., 199.
- Hanover ; I., 105 ; II., 640 ; III., 293, 299.
- chancery of ; II., 271.
- difficulty created by, in English politics ; III., 232.
- electoral government of ; II., 645 ; III., 133.
- electorate of ; III., 24, 48, 94, 224, 300.
- , suggested sequestration of ; III., 407.

Hanover—cont.

- fear that the French will attack ;
III., 148.
- House of, succession of ; I., 13.
- letters dated at ; III., 18.
- ministers from ; II., 618 ; III., 92
(2), 94.
- neutrality of ; III., 58(2), 94, 128,
148, 149.
- regency of ; II., 643 ; III., 53 (2), 92, 148, 403.

Hanoverian :

- pest office ; III., 233.
- troops ; I., 587, 588 ; II., 381, 387-
389, 452, 507, 559, 645 ; III., 21-24, 45, 51, 196, 209, 442, 443, 518, 519.

Harburton, Lord. See Pomeroy, Arthur.

Harcourt :

- Due de ; II., 394 (2), 622 ; III., 1, 5, 89, 98-100, 117, 141, 167, 179,
180, 216, 291, 306, 364, 561.
- , letter to ; III., 512.
- Simon, Lord Harcourt ; II., 653 ;
III., 163.
- , as former Lord Lieutenant of Ireland ; I., 176, 472, 572 ; III., 544.
- , picture of ; I., 294.
- Lieut.-General ; III., 5, 6, 9, 265.
- Mrs., attendant on the Princess Caroline ; III., 21, 44, 49.

Hardenberg, Count ; II., 614, 626, 633,
639, 640 ; III., 48.

Hardie, Dr. ; II., 416.

Harding or Hardinge, George ; I., 327,
463, 465.Hardwicke, Earl of. See Yorke, Philip.Hardwicke (co. Bucks ?), resident at ; I., 264.Hardy, Sir Thomas, letters of ; I., 67, 74
-76.

Hare, Lieutenant ; I., 483.

Haren, Mons. de ; III., 158.

Harley :

- Edward, Earl of Oxford ; II., 439.
- Dr. John, bishop of Hereford ; I., 285,
288, 289 ; II., 439.

Harlingen or Harling, port of, in Friesland ;
II., 275 ; III., 202, 203.Harnikoff, Russian Admiral, to be created a Knight of the Bath ; III., 369, 374,
375.Harrington, Earl of. See Stanhope, Charles.Harris, Sir James, Lord Malmesbury, ambassador to the Hague, &c. ; I.,
257, 258, 424 ; II., 210, 220, 360,
460, 464, 470, 479, 488, 503, 541,
554 (2), 558 (2), 591, 592, 604 (2),
609, 614, 627, 636, 638-640 ; III.,
5, 9, 19, 21, 27, 163, 408-417, 426
(2), 429, 430, 433-435, 437-439,
447, 443.

- letters from ; II., 474-492, 494,
503, 533, 535 (2), 546, 552, 564-
566, 577, 592, 625, 633, 636-639,
653 ; III., 18, 259, 260 (2), 262,

Harris, Sir James—cont.

- 268, 269, 278, 279, 286, 336, 337,
344, 354, 356, 359, 360, 370, 371,
373, 376, 377 (2), 415, 422, 437-
439, 441-443, 446, 447.
- letters to ; II., 476, 496, 499,
516, 545, 566, 620, 642 ; III., 260,
276, 282, 283, 333 (2), 335, 336,
346 (2), 352, 355, 372, 416, 419,
423, 424, 431, 435, 444 (2), 447.
- , created Lord Malmesbury ; I., 356.
- , irksome position of ; II., 621.
- wishes to return home ; II., 626,
628, 640.
- , signs the military concert ; II., 628.
- mission of, to Brunswick ; II.,
642, 652, 653 ; III., 43, 44, 49, 62,
316.
- , mission of, to France ; III., 258-262, 264, 265, 268-270, 275-284.
- , —, the second ; III., 337-
361, 369, 373, 376, 377.
- , dismissal of, from Paris ; III., 292.
- , proposed renewal of negotiations by ; III., 379, 381, 382.
- , going again to the Hague ; III., 486.
- , messenger of ; III., 439.
- , servants of ; III., 356.
- Captain ; I., 253.
- Mr. ; I., 123, 124.

Harrison :

- Edward, letter from ; I., 28.
- , letter to ; I., 4.
- Captain ; I., 15, 42, 48.
- Governor ; I., 62.

Hart, — ; I., 43.

Hartley, Mr. ; I., 219 (2), 221, 222, 354.

Hartsinck, Monsieur ; III., 48.

Hartstonge, Sir H. ; I., 458.

Harver, — ; II., 98.

Harvey :

- Admiral ; II., 622 ; III., 98, 99, 102, 103 (2), 162, 165.
- , fleet of ; III., 141 (2).
- Capt. Eliab ; II., 413.
- Wm. ; I., 89.
- Mr., of Combe ; I., 8, 13, 16, 34, 38,
52 (2), 53.
- ; I., 482.

Harward, Mr., English Consul at Ostend ;
II., 426, 432, 440.

Harwich, II., 178, 211 ; III., 442.

- letter dated at ; II., 267.
- travellers to ; II., 59, 164, 394 (2) ;
III., 311, 327.

Haselwood, Captain ; I., 26.

Hastec, — ; II., 480, 481.

Hastings :

- Selina, Lady Huntingdon ; I., 150.
- Warren ; I., 240, 243.
- , impeachment and trial of ; I., 261, 262, 309, 316, 328.
- ; II., 10.

- Hatsell, Mr., member of the council of Madras; I., 1.
- Hattem, in Gueldres; III., 212.
- Haugwitz, Baron, minister of the King of Prussia; II., 493, 494, 533, 552, 565 (2), 566, 577, 592, 604, 633, 653; III., 27, 163, 225, 226, 289, 306, 325, 371, 372, 405, 406, 563. conference of, with Hammond; III., 235.
- the most capable minister at Berlin; III., 198.
- incivility of; III., 243.
- chiefly employed in foreign affairs; III., 402.
- Hauteville, Mons. de; III., 197.
- Havannah, the, treatment of slaves at; I., 308.
- Havelo, pays de; III., 477.
- Havre, Duc de; III., 96.
- Havre de Grace; II., 444, 452, 464, 468, 501; III., 244, 488.
- Hawke, Martin, Lord Hawke; II., 427; III., 486.
- son of; II., 427, 456; III., 486.
- Hawkesbury, Lord. See Jenkinson, Charles.
- Hawkestone, Shropshire, letter dated at; II., 201.
- Hawkesworth, Dr.; I., 144.
- Hawkins, C.; I., 110, 130 (2), 132. agreement by; I., 121.
- letters of; I., 107, 129-133.
- letters to; I., 107 (2), 128 (2).
- Thomas, son of; I., 107, 110, 114, 119-121, 127-132.
- Hay:
- William, Earl of Errol; I., 596, 604. Dr.; I., 80, 82.
- Hay-Drummond, Robert, Earl of Kinnoul; I., 604.
- Heyden, election at; I., 108.
- Hayes, Kent, Pitt's house at. See Hollwood.
- meeting of children at; II., 219.
- Hayman, Mr.; II., 190-193.
- Haynes:
- Isabella, letter of; I., 10.
- , brother of; I., 10.
- John; I., 32.
- , letter from; I., 4.
- , sons of; I., 32, 38, 40, 42.
- Headfort or Headford, Lord. See Taylor, Thomas.
- Hearth money, examiner of; I., 202.
- Heath, Mr.; I., 108, 120.
- Heathcote or Heathcott:
- Sir Gilbert; I., 14, 30, 40.
- , family of; I., 14.
- Heathfield, Lord. See Elliott, George Augustus.
- Heaviside, Mr.; II., 305.
- Hébert [Jacques René]; II., 456, 459-462, 466, 471, 528, 529, 531, 538, 539, 540, 542, 549-551, 553-555, 506, 561; III., 506, 507.
- Hébert [Jacques René]—cont.
- arrest of; II., 541, 550.
- faction of, or Hébertistes. See France, factions in.
- Hector, Comte; II., 425.
- Hedzar, letter dated from; I., 112.
- Heidelberg, the great tun at; II., 118.
- Helly, secretary of the Comité de Salut Public; II., 557.
- Helstone, Cornwall, charter and corporation of; I., 558.
- election at; I., 120, 128.
- mayor of; I., 558.
- Helyoet or Helvoetsluis; II., 25, 69, 158, 290, 305, 380 (2), 632, 640; III., 23.
- packet boat from; II., 67, 121.
- Hely-Hutchinson:
- John, provost of Trinity College, Dublin; I., 178, 191, 206, 235, 237, 305, 320, 321, 327, 348, 409, 420, 436, 452.
- , to be Master of the Rolls, Ireland; I., 235, 237.
- , as Secretary of State, Ireland; I., 321.
- , son of; I., 237.
- Richard, Lord Donoughmore; I., 420, 441.
- Henin, French minister at Constantinople; II., 457, 458, 472, 510, 511, 515, 581.
- Henley:
- Robert, second Earl of Northington; I., 195, 227, 232.
- , as Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland; I., 212, 220-222, 224.
- , as late Lord-Lieutenant; I., 293, 297; II., 55.
- Mr.; I., 132.
- Henniker, Captain; II., 36, 38, 55, 67.
- Henriot, Commandant of the national guard; II., 457, 458, 459, 472, 555, 556, 560, 562, 570; III., 506.
- Henry VII., King, Irish Act of; I., 366.
- Henry VIII., King, Royal Marriage Act of; II., 232.
- "Henry." See le Pein, Monsieur.
- Hepburn, Mr.; I., 258, 271, 273, 275, 277.
- Heraclitus, allusion to; I., 155.
- Heralds, college of; II., 234.
- Heras, Mons. le. See Las Heras, Monsieur de.
- Hérault de Sechelles; II., 456-461, 463, 518, 555 (2), 556, 560; III., 500.
- arrest of; II., 551.
- expulsion of, from the Comité de Salut Public; II., 561.
- character of; III., 491.
- house of, orgies at; III., 492.
- Herbert:
- Lady Betty; I., 106.
- George Augustus, 11th Earl of Pembroke; III., 361.
- Henry, Lord Portchester; II., 336.
- , as Earl of Carnarvon; II., 436, 453.
- Henry, 9th Earl of Pembroke; I., 92.

Herbert, Henry, Earl of Pembroke—cont.
 — and his wife (master and mistress of Highclere); I., 97.
 Lady Margaret; I., 93, 96, 97.
 Thomas, 8th Earl of Pembroke; I., 6, 26, 37, 42, 47, 50.
 —, letter to; I., 4.
 —, to be Lord High Admiral; I., 38.
 Mrs.; I., 104.
 Mr.; I., 105.
 "Spa"; I., 101-103.
 family of; I., 101.
 Herbois. See Collot d'Herbois.
 Hercules, pillars of; III., 233.
 Hereford, bishop of. See Harley, Dr. John.
 Herf, near Liege; III., 462, 463.
 Herne, Nathaniel; I., 37, 40.
 Hernon, Mrs.; I., 444.
 Heron, Sir R.; I., 164, 171.
 Hertford, Earl and (in 1793) Marquis of. See Seymour Conway, Francis.
 Hertford, county of; II., 809, 348. bridge; I., 489; III., 93.
 —, letter dated from; I., 354.
 Hertzberg, Count; I., 612; II., 25, 59, 61, 67, 70, 71, 73, 78, 93, 167, 172, 219, 258.
 dismissal or retirement of; II., 126, 131.
 Hervey, John Augustus, Lord Hervey, son of the Earl of Bristol; II., 121, 330, 401, 439, 605.
 Hervilly, Mons. de; III., 112.
 Hesse Cassel; II., 507.
 Charles, Landgrave of; II., 63, 68, 424, 431, 434, 474; III., 72, 73.
 —, garter given to; I., 259.
 —, subsidy to; II., 177.
 —, —, treaty for; II., 63, 68, 173; III., 134.
 Hesse Darmstadt; II., 507.
 Prince of; III., 72.
 Hessian:
 huts; II., 453.
 troops; II., 388, 389, 424, 431, 436, 439, 446, 474, 477, 507, 560, 635; III., 22, 45, 51, 72, 73, 442, 443, 470, 477.
 —, leader of. See Moira, Lord.
 Hewitt:
 James, Lord Lifford, Lord Chancellor of Ireland; I., 166, 171, 181, 184, 189, 191, 201, 206, 221, 227, 244, 290, 303, 308, 311, 320, 323, 324, 327, 331, 336, 359, 386, 388, 389, 391, 394, 396, 407, 411-413, 415, 417, 419, 422, 467.
 —, illness of; I., 312, 426, 446, 459, 460.
 —, suggested retirement of; I., 350, 352.
 —, intends to resign; I., 423, 439, 441.
 —, death of; I., 461.
 —, will of; I., 465.

Hewitt, James, Lord Lifford—cont.
 —, allusions to, as the late; I., 465, 468, 470.
 —, his family; I., 465, 470.
 James [Dean of Armagh], 2nd Viscount Lifford; I., 465, 470.
 Joseph; I., 206, 320.
 Serjeant Joseph; I., 561.
 —, letter from; I., 561.
 Colonel; II., 212, 214, 215; III., 134.
 —, regiment of; III., 134.
 —; I., 409, 459.
 the "fat," death of; I., 201, 202.
 Hewitts, the; I., 290.
 Heyden, Comte de; II., 139, 171.
 Higgins, —; I., 203.
 Higginson, —, late Governor of Madras; I., 2.
 Highclere, co. Hants; I., 93, 96, 97.
 Master and mistress of. See Herbert.
 Highlands, the, lodge in. See Donira Lodge.
 High Wycombe, co. Bucks; I., 215.
 Hildesheim, bishopric of; III., 228, 229.
 Hill:
 Arthur, Lord Kilwarlin or Lord Fairfield, son of the Earl of Hillsborough; I., 407, 409.
 Wills, Earl of Hillsborough; I., 177, 183, 288, 310, 383, 395, 399, 402, 412, 413, 432, 442, 458, 462, 494, 519; II., 55.
 —, boroughs of; I., 220.
 —, in Ireland; I., 222, 226.
 —, speech of, alluded to; I., 225.
 —, to be made a marquis; I., 424, 426, 436.
 —, as Marquis of Downshire; II., 337; III., 554.
 Hillier, William, letters of; I., 113, 115.
 Hillsborough, Earl of. See Hill, Wills.
 Hilton, co. Northampton; II., 355.
 Hipsley (Hipsley):
 Sir John; III., 265 (2), 294, 299, 311, 318.
 —, letter to; III., 265.
 Mr.; III., 12.
 Hird, William; I., 51.
 Hislop, Major; II., 652; III., 52 (2).
 Hitchin, co. Herts, letter dated from; I., 91.
 Hoare:
 Messrs. Benj. and Henry; I., 76.
 Mr.; I., 79, 80, 90, 91.
 Hoare's Bank; I., 134, 135.
 Hobart:
 John, 2nd Earl of Buckinghamshire; I., 196, 339, 340, 344.
 —, as former Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; 562.
 Major Robert, his nephew; I., 287, 288, 306, 347, 367, 401, 406, 449, 451, 452, 461, 468, 469, 471, 473-479, 482, 485, 486, 490, 491, 493, 494, 496, 502, 503, 506, 510-513, 515, 516, 520-522, 525, 531 (2), 534, Hobart, Major Robert—cont.

541, 548, 554, 560 (2), 562-564, 569, 570, 576, 578, 585; II., 16, 17, 22, 35, 37, 40, 55, 184, 214, 221, 226, 238, 239, 248, 321, 337, 482.

—, letters from; I., 474, 478, 481, 491, 498, 501, 536, 544, 549, 551, 556, 560, 561 (2), 569; II., 35, 40, 255.

—, letters to; I., 494, 542, 550, 559, 564; II., 33, 255.

—, suggested as Chief Secretary for Ireland; I., 418, 419, 422, 424, 425, 426, 428, 431, 437.

—, appointed Chief Secretary; I., 445.

—, to go to England; I., 466.

—, receives a challenge and fights; I., 569.

Mrs.; I., 93, 106.

Hoche, General; II., 519, 520, 540.

Hochet, Commissary of the Convention; II., 543.

Hockbat, John; I., 535.

Hoetz, in Alsace; III., 130.

Hoffman, Mr.; I., 172.

Hogguer, Baron, Dutch minister at Petersburg; II., 66, 89 (2), 121, 123, 131, 374, 489; III., 74.

Hoghton, Sir H.; I., 335, 336.

Hohenheim, Countess; II., 242.

Hohenloe, Prince; II., 170, 173, 182, 183, 200, 548, 557; III., 536.

—, troops of; III., 51.

hereditary prince of; III., 51.

Holderness, Lady. See Darcy.

Holland, Mr.; II., 164.

Holland, or the Dutch Republic; I., 5, 10, 13, 21, 29, 30, 41, 47, 274, 278, 279, 284, 286, 349; II. and III. passim.

Admiralties of; II., 71, 92, 367.

—, the five, abolition of; III., 42.

—, Fiscal of; III., 42.

ambassadors or ministers from at foreign courts; II., 60, 71, 94, 102, 112, 264, 294, 493, 498; III., 48, 73, 74, 432; and see under the various countries.

ambassadors to. See Hague, the, ambassadors at.

army or troops of. See Dutch army. arrests in; III., 42, 253; and see Van der Spiegel, Adrian, and Rhoon, Count.

Assembly of provisional Representatives of the people of; III., 46-48, 54, 56.

—, edict published by; III., 46.

—, President of. See Paulus, Pieter.

Attorney General of; III., 150, 418. the Cabal in; III., 39, 61, 79, 91, 164, 184, 418.

clubs in; III., 139.

colleges of; III., 423.

Holland, or the Dutch Republic—cont.

commercial treaty with; I., 349; II., 23 (2), 31, 32, 39, 41, 58, 70-72, 138, 151, 152, 161, 168, 169, 176, 178, 180, 186.

—, East India article in; II., 168.

—, projet for; I., 586, 588-591, 595, 597-602, 605, 612, 613.

—, draft of; I., 597, 598.

commissioners or commissaries of; III., 46, 47, 350, 352, 361, 435.

Committee of General Confederations in; III., 164.

— of General Welfare in; III., 39.

— of the Navy in; III., 42.

— of Reform in, overthrow of; III., 180.

Conseiller-Pensionnaire of; III., 43. Council Committee or Rada (Ge-commiteerde Raaden) of; III., 418.

constitution of, the ancient; III., 41, 48, 429.

Council of State in; III., 428.

— replaced by a committee; III., 42, 47.

Courts of Justice in; III., 418, 428. crisis in; II., 46, 334, 353, 379, 383 (2), 643.

defence of; II., 598, 599, 605, 610, 630, 637; III., 514-518.

distress and discontent in; III., 21-23, 40, 42, 54-57, 61, 203, 417, 420, 421.

eastern frontiers of; III., 172, 176.

English agent in. See Bentinck, Charles.

— army or troops in; II., 380, 384; III., 21-23, 45.

equestrian order in; III., 426, 428.

exports and imports of; I., 200, 231, 261.

finances of; III., 53, 54, 56, 71, 205.

frontiers of, emigrants assembling on the; III., 105.

fugitives from; III., 81.

Government or Court of. See Dutch government.

Grand Pensionary of. See Van der Spiegel, Adrian.

—, the late; II., 220.

Greffier of. See Fagel, Monsieur.

islands belonging to; II., 24, 31, 145.

—, proposed cession of to England; III., 187, 190.

Juges délégués in; III., 418.

letters on the affairs of; III., 21, 41, 46, 52, 55, 60, 71, 73, 78, 150-158, 164, 170, 176, 182-192, 201-205, 207-212, 217-222, 236-238, 245, 250-255, 408-415, 417, 422, 425-428, 440-442; and see Eden, William, and Harris, Sir James, letters from.

loan for; II., 383, 381.

magistrates of; III., 41.

ministers or ministry of. See Dutch government.

Holland, or the Dutch Republic—cont.

National Convention of; III., 164, 171, 176-178, 180, 188, 203-205, 211, 219, 220, 253.
 —, President of; III., 203.
 national debt of; III., 53.
 new municipalities in; III., 41, 43.
 north, discontent in; III., 203.
 paper money in; III., 212.
 party of the House of Orange in.
   See Orange, House of.
 patriots or revolutionists in; II., 277, 286, 353; III., 201 (2), 202, 212, 219, 245, 433.
 ports or harbours of; I., 595, 600; II., 24, 31, 32, 150; III., 35 (2). prisoners in; III., 171, 177, 180. provinces of or Dutch provinces; II., 1, 2, 63, 92, 615; III., 26, 39, 46, 47, 53, 61, 62, 150, 165, 415; and see under their names.
 — the States of; III., 41, 409.
 regencies of; III., 41, 42, 410, 425.
 ships of. See Dutch ships.
 south, discontent in; III., 203.
 Stadtholder or Stadthouder of. See Orange, Prince of.
 Stadtholdership, abolition and projected re-establishment of; III., 4, 39, 40, 43, 54, 55, 140, 187, 408, 409, 438, 440, 442.
 State papers of, collection of; III., 80.
 States General of; I., 349, 585, 599; II., 2, 63, 71, 114, 210, 216-218, 222, 278, 281, 296, 300, 304, 357, 364, 365, 641; III., 10, 157, 411, 415, 428, 438, 442, 515.
 —, appointment by; II., 589.
 —, documents of; II., 186.
 —, French corps raised at the expense of; II., 479.
 —, sittings of; III., 39, 43, 74.
 —, speech of the Stadtholder to; II., 382.
 —, a new Assembly is to replace; III., 39, 41.
 —, resolutions of, annulled; III., 43, 47.
 —, registers of; III., 43, 47.
 —, the new; III., 71.
 —, — plans submitted to; III., 53.
 —, — letter to; III., 43.
 towns of, government and rulers of; III., 409, 417, 418, 425-427.
 trade of; III., 154, 420, 421.
 —, stagnation of; III., 54, 56, 71.
 translations made in; I., 158.
 travellers to and from, passim.
 treaties with; II., 31, 32, 210 (2), 217-219; III., 71, 73, 443-446; and see Hague, conventions at.
 troops of. See Dutch troops.
 union of, Captain General of; III., 408, 409, 412; and see Orange, Prince of.
 West India Committee in; III., 164.

Holland, or the Dutch Republic—cont.

visit of W. W. Grenville to. See Grenville, W. W. and England; III., passim. and France; I., 282-285, 310, 357; II., 177; III., 61, 189, 413, 417, 418, 422-432, 438, 440 (2), 441; III., 46, 202, 239, 247, 250, 339, 350, 413, 423, 434, 478; and passim. See also French invasion of, below. new or republican government in; I., 349; II., 47; III., 39, 41-43, 52, 60, 61, 71, 73, 91, 94, 164, 189, 241, 417, 418, 426; and passim.
 —, dissatisfaction with; III., 56, 57, 61, 79, 150, 154, 155, 157, 159, 164, 176, 177, 212, 217, 218, 222, 252, 253.
 — military convention for defence of; III., 536.
 —, publications of; III., 42, 43. will only act in conjunction with her allies; II., 1, 2.
 will not take an active part in the war; II., 60.
 sale of war ships by; II., 71.
 Orange cockades in; II., 130.
 insults to, from France; II., 152, 346, 351.
 described as an English province; II., 186.
 English influence in; II., 287, 290, 314. threatened attack upon, by France; II., 359-363, 366, 370, 371, 377-379. need of vigorous preparation for war in; II., 360, 361, 365, 371.
 complaints in, that England has forsaken her; II., 379.
 treachery in; II., 381.
 has come into the war to preserve her existence; II., 415.
 expense of the war to; II., 434, 495-497.
 offers to purchase the contents of the French King's library; II., 461.
 financial suggestions for; II., 496.
 speech of Pitt printed in; II., 584.
 the Emperor a weak ally for; II., 598.
 is much in need of sound advice; II., 612.
 the fall of, would be an infinite calamity to Europe; II., 613.
 allied army in, command of, to be offered to the Duke of Brunswick; II., 639.
 panic in; II., 646.
 French invasion and occupation of; III., 21-26, 40, 42, 47, 54, 60, 61, 73, 74, 79-82, 91, 170, 187, 194, 207, 209, 378; and passim.
 — general in. See Bournonville, General. well-disposed party in; III., 9, 236, 237, 245; and see new government, dissatisfaction with, above.

Holland, or the Dutch Republic—cont.

- Duke of Brunswick in; III., 18.
 prejudice against the allies in; III., 21–23.
 and Prussia; III., 27, 28.
 communication with, interrupted; III., 39, 41, 54, 55.
 imitation or admiration of the French government in; III., 39, 41, 47, 58, 61.
 introduction of assignats into; III., 42, 46, 54, 56.
 prospect in, of war with England; III., 57.
 declares war “against half Europe”; III., 71.
 — against England; III., 71, 79.
 supplies from, expected in France; III., 82.
 departure of the French from; III., 91, 211, 217, 218, 252.
 hopes of securing the independence of; III., 232.
 established religion in, decree for setting aside; III., 251.
 should provide for the House of Orange; III., 375.
 alliance with, renewal of; III., 439, 441, 442.
 occupation of, by Prussian troops; III., 434, 436, 437.
 and the Algerines; III., 526.
 Holland, province of; III., 6, 10, 20, 41, 47, 53, 153, 205, 381 (2), 413, 415, 416, 612.
 —, convention or assembly of; III., 39, 41, 47, 53, 54, 56.
 —, French occupation of; III., 9, 23, 24, 26.
 —, States of; II., 285, 292, 541, 641; III., 409, 425–430.
 Hollywood or Holwood, Kent [Pitt’s house]; I., 219; II., 23, 25, 32, 57, 59, 294, 295; III., 242, 377.
 letters dated at; I., 258, 356, 523, 527; II., 60, 104, 471; III., 57, 251, 360, 368, 369, 414.
 Holstein; III., 79, 224, 225.
 Holyhead (the Head), Anglesea; I., 191, 269, 355, 387.
 postmaster of; I., 378.
 travellers to; I., 294, 379, 382, 406.
 Holy Land, the; I., 33.
 Home Office, the; II., 95, 395, 481; III., 437; and see Secretary’s Office.
 suggestion that Grenville should take; II., 595.
 Duke of Portland accepts; II., 597.
 Dundas leaves; II., 602.
 Home Secretary. See Secretaries of State.
 Home, Mr.; I., 597.
 Hon, Baron de; II., 151, 280, 304.
 Honduras; I., 528.
 Honiton, co. Devon; I., 536.
 Hood :
 — Captain Alexander; I., 151, 159.
 —, as Lord Bridport; III., 89, 293, 294.

Hood—cont.

- Alexander, wife of; I., 151, 159.
 Samuel, Lord Hood; II., 191, 407 (2), 412, 438, 440, 442, 444, 445, 449, 517, 523.
 —, letter from; II., 524.
 —, fleet of; II., 524.
 Hoogendorf, Monsieur; III., 419.
 Hope :
 — Henry, banker, of Amsterdam; II., 151, 283, 286, 287, 293, 496, 610; III., 447.
 —, letters from; II., 152, 293.
 James, 3rd Earl of Hopetown; I., 596, 597, 602, 603.
 Lieutenant; I., 357, 489.
 Mr.; I., 91.
 Messrs., of Amsterdam; II., 565, 622; III., 46.
 Hopetown, Earl of. See Hope, James.
 Hopper, —; II., 98.
 Horace, writings of, alluded to; I., 160, 228; II., 8, 119.
 Hornage, Mr.; I., 8.
 Horner, Colonel; I., 53.
 Hornwell (co. Hauts?), manor of; I., 99.
 Horsfall, Col.; I., 457.
 Horwood, Great, co. Bucks, resident at; I., 291.
 Hotham, Admiral; III., 126.
 Houat; III., 101.
 Houchard, General; II., 487.
 Houdan (Houdiac); III., 101.
 Houston, —; I., 489.
 Howard :
 — Charles, Duke of Norfolk; I., 400; II., 345, 349, 513.
 —, militia of; II., 336.
 Frederick, Earl of Carlisle; I., 162, 168, 210, 323; II., 336, 360, 369.
 —, as former Lord Lieutenant; I., 562.
 Sir G.; I., 326.
 Henrietta, Countess of Suffolk (wife of Henry, 10th Earl); I., 95, 98–104, 155.
 —, letters from, 92–94, 105, 106.
 —, family of; I., 93.
 Thomas, Earl of Effingham; I., 357, 525.
 —, made Governor of Jamaica; I., 528.
 Howe :
 — Richard, Lord Howe; I., 286, 297, 298, 300, 302, 328; II., 414, 444, 452, 474, 476, 590, 609; III., 323.
 —, retires from the Admiralty; I., 324, 326.
 —, defeat of the French fleet by; II., 590.
 —, to have command of the Portuguese squadron; II., 608, 609.
 —, money due to; III., 401.
 —, fleet of, return of; II., 418, 422, 423.
 —, —, in Torbay; II., 422, 444, 447.

Howe, Lord—cont.

—, fleet of, holds that of Brest in check; II., 581.

Sir William; I., 235; II., 446.

Colonel; III., 134.

—, regiment of; III., 134.

Hoyte or Hoyt, Mr.; I., 131–133.

Huber, Monsieur; III., 253.

Hubertsbourg, treaty of; II., 174.

Hudson's Bay, trade to; II., 22.

Hull, Comte d'Artois at; II., 394.

Hunvalda, Monsieur; III., 187, 211.

Humbert, General; III., 538, 540 (2).

aide-de camp of; III., 538.

interviews with; III., 538, 539.

Hume:

David, as Secretary to the Embassy in Paris; I., 155.

Hugh, Earl of Marchmont; I., 590, 592, 593.

Mr. (1789); I., 460.

Hungary, King of; II., 264.

Hungary; I., 10, 29, 349; II., 618, 631; III., 287.

Catholic clergy in; II., 618.

Diet of; II., 614, 618.

minister from, at Vienna; II., 618.

Huninguen or Huningue, in Alsace; II., 588, 614; III., 131, 133.

Hunt:

Mr.; I., 110, 111.

Mr.; III., 90.

Hunter, a courier; III., 344.

Huntingdon, Lady. See Hastings, Selina.

Huntingdon, county of, Lieutenantancy of; I., 357, 487.

Huntspill, co. Somerset, manor of; I., 296.

Hurd, Mr.; I., 144.

Huron, Lake; II., 611.

Huskisson, Mr.; II., 412; III., 89, 168, 179, 363.

Hussey:

Dr.; III., 315.

chaplain to the Spanish embassy; II., 323, 324, 419.

—; I., 272.

Hutchinson:

Archibald; I., 68 (2).

Hely. See Hely-Hutchinson.

Colonel; III., 134.

—, regiment of; III., 134.

Mrs.; I., 221.

Hyat, Mr.; I., 118.

Hyde:

Edward, 1st Earl of Clarendon; III., 103.

Henry, 4th Earl of Clarendon; I., 74.

Henry, Lord Cornbury [son of the 4th Earl]; I., 95–106.

—, letters from; I., 95, 97, 99, 105.

—, as Lord Hyde, letters of; I., 136 (2).

—, aunt of; I., 97.

[Major] General; I., 291, 292; II., 401, 402, 407, 654.

—; I., 275.

Hyles, Mr.; I., 72.

Hyndon, co. Wilts, election at; I., 64.

I.

I, Mr.; III., 562.

Il Penseroso, quoted; II., 33.

Imbert, Monsieur; III., 131, 213.

Imperial:

army; II., 558, 539; and see Austria, army of.

chicanes; II., 161.

courts; I., 282; II., 48, 77, 81, 92, 104, 159, 169, 211, 367; III., 28, 248, 440, 562. And see Vienna and St. Petersburg, courts of.

ministers; II., 106; III., 45.

Impey, Sir Elijah, Lord Chief Justice at Calcutta; I., 328, 587.

Inarime, island of (Italy); II., 8, 19.

Inchiquin, Earls of. See O'Brien.

India; I., 1–49 passim, 187, 240–242, 276, 281, 287, 483, 587, 588; II., 236, 321; III., 379, 400, and see East Indies, the.

appointments for; II., 321, 323.

Begum and Benares business in; I., 328.

Board of control for. See East India Company.

British Government in; I., 497, 534; II., 298, 621.

—, governors general of. See Wellesley, Richard, Lord Mornington, and Cornwallis, Lord.

—, interests in; II., 508; III., 419–421, 441–445.

castes in; I., 2, 44.

charter; II., 395.

commissioners; III., 443, 444.

convention respecting; I., 356.

European garrisons in; I., 3.

finances of; II., 185.

fleet in; II., 11; and see India ships.

merchants in; I., 268.

histories of. See Bruce, John, and Orme, Robert, histories by.

judges in; I., 510, 519, 588; II., 12; and see Calcutta.

Lascars of; III., 266.

Lord Walsingham's appointment to; I., 242.

Lord Mornington going to; III., 335, 354.

military and naval armaments of; I., 605; II., 477.

news from; I., 587; II., 290, 293 (2).

the Pittah in; II., 186.

Pitt's estate in; I., 37.

Presidencies of; III., 195; and see Bengal, Bombay, and Madras.

revenues of; I., 269; III., 369, 419, 421.

India—cont.

- Supreme Council of; III., 195.
- , judicature of; I., 607.
- tobacco farm of; I., 1.
- treasury of; II., 621; III., 419.
- troops in or for; I., 587; II., 11, 12, 430, 433, 437.
- , officers of; I., 518.
- , successes of; II., 103, 283, 286, 289.
- India House, in Leadenhall Street; I., 24, 31, 240–242, 281.
- chairman of; I., 269.
- letter dated at; II.; 185.
- records at; II., 306.
- secretaries of; I., 242, 269.
- India office; II., 450.
- Indian:
  - budget; I., 481, 497; II., 164.
  - law, digest of, preparing; I., 519.
  - seas, pirates in; I., 2, 26.
  - war; I., 501; II., 191.
  - (American) settlement on the Ohio; II., 611.
  - , war; II., 405.
- Indians, the; III., 39.
- Ingoldsby, Brigadier; I., 14.
- son of; I., 14, 16.
- Inns of Court; I., 7.
- Innsbruck; II., 118.
- Inverness; I., 556.
- Irby, Sir William; I., 108.
- as member for Bodmin; I., 119, 120.
- letters of; I., 109, 112, 113.
- chosen as member for Old Sarum; I., 122.
- Ireland, passim:
  - Accountant General for. See Burgh.
  - Accounts, Board of, in; I., 359, 569.
  - Acts in the English Parliament concerning; I., 365; III., 546, 547.
  - Admiralty Court in; I., 184.
  - , laws of; I., 184.
  - "Aggregate" body in; I., 234 (2), 236.
  - Ancient Britons in; III., 395, 388.
  - army or troops in; I., 187, 208, 231, 296, 323; II., 328, 427–429, 477, 526; III., 2, 5, 544, 548, 554, 555.
  - , Adjutant General of; I., 452; II., 187, 212, 213; and see Fawcett, Colonel.
  - , —, Deputy; I., 348.
  - , —, office of; I., 351.
  - , augmentation of; I., 286, 290, 300; II., 319, 337, 341.
  - , cavalry; I., 339, 452.
  - , Commander-in-Chief. See Pitt, General W. A.
  - , —, secretary to; II., 16.
  - , commissions or promotions in; I., 337–343, 347, 355, 357, 358, 361, 437–456, 473–475, 486, 489, 490, 493, 525; II., 15–17, 26, 28, 30, 33, 36, 39, 42, 50, 55, 212–215.
  - , deserters; I., 585.

Ireland, army in—cont.

- , Dragoons; I., 309, 310.
- , Light Dragoons, regiment of, declaration by; III., 388.
- , —, Colonel of. See Ancrem, Lord.
- , estimates, &c. of, to be presented; I., 299, 300.
- , limited by Act of Parliament; III., 542.
- , muster master general for. See Daly, Mr.
- , muster master, office of; I., 318.
- , new modelling of; I., 195, 197.
- , officers of; I., 31.
- , regiments of; I., 183, 335, 437, 438, 442; and see Army, regiments in.
- , —, serving abroad; I., 308, 314; II., 559, 560.
- , —, supposed atrocities by; III., 385–390, 394.
- assizes in; I., 211, 343, 428.
- association to protect those who voted for the Address to the Prince of Wales; I., 420.
- Attorney General of; III., 37, 542, 553; and see
  - Yelverton, Barry (1782–1783).
  - Fitzgibbon, John (1783–1789).
  - Wolfe, Arthur (1789–1798).
- Bank of; I., 169, 172 (2), 186.
- , governors and directors of; I., 172.
- Barrack Board for; I., 174, 180, 182.
- Bishops in; I., 177, 299, 467, 480; III., 553, 559; and see under their names.
- , conferring of peerages upon; I., 561–565.
- bishoprics in; I., 576, 577.
- Black rod, Usher of. See Bernard, Scrope.
- Board of green cloth in; I., 211.
- Cabinet of; I., 365, 368, 381.
- , chosen by the Lord Lieutenant; III., 553.
- Catholic counties of; I., 582.
- Chancery Court of; I., 313, 366, 369.
- , causes accumulated in; I., 468.
- , clerk of recognizances in; I., 313.
- , decrees given in; I., 468.
- , examiners in; I., 313.
- , Master of; I., 209, 210.
- , office of Six Clerks in; I., 313.
- Charter schools in; I., 408.
- Chief Secretary of; see Lord Lieutenant of, Chief Secretary of, office of; III., 36, 37.
- Church of; I., 319; III., 551, 552.
- , clergy of; I., 305, 306, 313; III., 550, 551.

Ireland, church of—cont.

- , power of, in the hands of the Crown; III., 542.
- , preferment in; I., 511.
- close boroughs in; III., 557.
- coal in, or Irish coal; I., 230, 231.
- coinage of; I., 296.
- , copper; I., 361.
- commerce of; II., 38.
- , restraints upon; III., 542.
- “commercial propositions” for. See propositions for trade in, below.
- Commission of accounts for, suggested; III., 38.
- commissioners in; I., 235, 237.
- houses built for; III., 556.
- of appeals; I., 209, 210.
- common law of; I., 166.
- Common Pleas, Lord Chief Justice of. See Wyndham, Thomas; Carleton, Hugh, and Paterson, Marcus.
- commutation of tithes in; I., 303, 305, 306.
- Comptroller of Revenue in; 386.
- concessions to; III., 546-549.
- condition of; I., 75.
- Congress in; I., 234.
- , election of delegates for; I., 234.
- convention in, suggested; I., 364.
- convicts sent back to; I., 540-555.
- Council or Privy Council of; I., 222, 249, 365, 367, 489, 578; III., 542.
- , Lord Lieutenant's declaration in; I., 295.
- , members of; I., 483.
- , President of; I., 245.
- courts of law in; II., 14.
- , judges in; III., 37.
- courts martial in; I., 182.
- Crown of, annexed to that of Great Britain; III., 554.
- Custom House in; III., 556.
- , officers of; I., 568.
- debt of; I., 301, 323.
- Dissenters in; II., 39, 214, 221, 237, 238, 323, 337; III., 551, 552.
- Duke of Portland's policy for; I., 198.
- elections in; I., 578; and see under the names of places.
- embassy from, to present the Address to the Prince of Wales; I., 407, 425, 427, 432, 433.
- Exchequer of; III., 543.
- , Baron of. See Hamilton, George.
- , —, Lord Chief. See Yelverton, Barry, and Burgh, Hussey.
- , Chancellor of; I., 174, 318, 386; and see Parnell, Sir John.
- , chancellorship of; III., 558.
- , clerk of the Hanaper; I., 318.
- , —, Pells; I., 174.
- , —, Pleas; I., 318.
- , —, Quit rents; I., 174.

Ireland—cont.

- Exchequer, Court of; I., 461.
- , —, offices in; I., 322.
- , —, usher of. See Power, Baron.
- , Remembrancers of; I., 320, 460; and see Hamilton, James, Lord Clanbrassil.
- , Tellers of; I., 318, 386.
- exports and imports; II., 29.
- Fencibles in; I., 169, 172.
- fisheries of; I., 189, 196.
- French agents or intrigues in; II., 255, 457, 472, 480, 481, 514, 538.
- expedition against; III., 361.
- government or administration of; I., passim; II., 320-323, 328, 333; III., 541-561.
- attack upon; I., 306.
- , called the Castle party; I., 224.
- , disunion in; I., 256.
- , the late or former; I., 303; III., 36, 38.
- , criticism of; III., 541-561.
- , expenses of; III., 555.
- grants to the Crown from; I., 508, 509.
- Great Seal, Commissioners for; I., 459-465, 468.
- , keeper of; I., 461; II., 84, and see Lord Chancellor, below.
- hearth money in; III., 549, 550.
- imports and exports of; I., 251, 585, 601.
- increase of population in; III., 551.
- Inns of Court in; III., 556.
- Inspector of recruits in; I., 490 (2), 531-534, 576-578.
- inspectorships in; I., 570.
- judges in; I., 382, 386, 387, 394, 462.
- junta in; III., 543.
- judicature of; I., 228.
- Keeper of the Signet in; III., 37.
- King's Bench, Lord Chief Justice of; I., 244; II., 83; and see Scott, John.
- , Chief Justiceship of; I., 208.
- , Court or judges of; I., 302, 542, 546, 548, 553, 578.
- King's Counsel in; I., 569.
- labourers in, wages of; III., 550.
- Linen Board in; I., 212, 296, 408.
- linen duties in; I., 171.
- Lord Chancellor of; III., 542, 553; and see Lifford, Lord; Fitzgibbon, John, Lord.
- , other candidates for the office of; I., 463-465, 467, 468.
- , former. See Bowes, Lord.
- , official position of, as Minister of the House of Lords; I., 468.
- , situation of; I., 467.
- Lords Commissioners for; I., 428.
- Lord Deputy suggested for; I., 199, 200, 366, 369, 375, 384, 394, 403.

Ireland—cont.

- Lord Justices in (in 1789, Fitzgibbon and Foster); I., 482, 542, 545, 550, 551.
- , as holders of the Great Seal; I., 459.
- , suggested appointment of; I., 200, 210, 211, 366, 369, 375, 379, 384, 390, 400, 405, 414, 415, 419, 473, 477, 480 (3).
- , advantage of; III., 559.
- Lords Lieutenant of; III., 543-545, 548, 553, 560, and passim.
- And see—*
- Wharton, Thomas, Earl of (1709-1710).
- Cranfield, Lionel, Duke of Dorset (1753).
- Seymour Conway, Francis, Earl of Hertford (1765).
- Townshend, George, Viscount (1767-1772).
- Harcourt, Simon, Earl (1772-1777).
- Hobart, John, Earl of Buckinghamshire (1777-1780).
- Bentinck, Wm. Henry, Duke of Portland (1782).
- Grenville, George Nugent, Earl Temple, and Marquis of Buckingham (1782-1783 and 1787-1789).
- Henley, Robert, Earl of Northington (1783).
- Manners, Charles, Duke of Rutland (1784-1787).
- Fane, John, Earl of Westmorland (1790-1795).
- Fitzwilliam, William, Earl (1795).
- Pratt, John Jeffries, 2nd Earl Camden (1795).
- , appointment of a fresh, urged; I., 502, 512.
- , aides-de-camp of; II., 16.
- , authorised to transport convicts; I., 545-547, 551.
- , patronage of; III., 553.
- , regiments under the patronage of; II., 428.
- , responsibility thrown too much upon; III., 553, 554.
- , chief secretary of. I., 386; II., 12; III., 9, 553, 554, 559; and see Grenville, W. W.; Orde, Thomas; Fitzherbert, Alleyne; and Hobart, Robert.
- , choice of; I., 525, 527.
- , expenditure of; I., 452.
- , King and Queen usually sponsors to child of; I., 392.
- , powers of, as regards the Great Seal; I., 459-462.
- , Master of the Horse to; I., 163.
- , officers in waiting on, curtailed by the King; I., 292.
- , staff of; I., 525.
- , salary of; I., 224.

Ireland—cont.

- Lords Lieutenant of, to be free from all control but that of the King, suggested; I., 207.
- , to fill the sovereign's stall in the Order of St. Patrick; I., 179.
- , (temp. Jas. I.) to be commissioner for a Spanish treaty; I., 189.
- and Council, warrants of, alluded to; I., 459.
- mails to and from; I., 197, 200 (2), 202, 380.
- military establishment of; I., 308.
- militia and volunteers of; I., 247, 580, 583; and see Monaghan Militia.
- Mint in; II., 15.
- Montagu College in; II., 481.
- National Convention of; I., 225, 232.
- navy accounts of, alluded to; I., 377, 380.
- , recruits in; I., 186.
- New Catholic association in; II., 235.
- newspapers of. See Newspapers.
- , seditious, bill against; I., 227, 228, 230.
- North of; II., 215.
- , linen manufactures of; III., 542, 550.
- , M.P.'s of; III., 546.
- , republicans in; I., 191.
- octennial law for; III., 543, 559.
- offices of State in; I., 263; III., 558, 561.
- , sinecures; III., 558.
- , suggested re-purchase of; III., 548, 558.
- Orange men in; III., 388.
- Ordnance; I., 358, 389 (2).
- Office; 352, 383.
- , dismissal of officers from; I., 352.
- , secretary of; I., 359.
- Parliament of; I., 163 et seq. passim; II., 3, 20, 248, 319, 322; III., 543, 544.
- , Acts of, alluded to; I., 407, 464, 545, 550.
- , bills in; I., 75, 221, 227, 228, 234, 299, 300, 305, 312, 315, 318, 372, 457, 562; II., 13; III., 544, 546, 547, 554.
- Also—*
- for election of a chief governor, &c.; I., 308.
- for preventing sheep stealing; I., 315.
- Compensation; I., 305.
- Militia; I., 249, 583.
- Money; I., 308, 365, 366, 384, 388, 391, 398, 410, 412, 413, 421, 427, 431, 434; II., 36, 37.
- Mutiny; I., 308, 366, 384, 388, 391, 398, 410, 412, 413.
- Pension; I., 308, 409, 410, 427, 429-430, 434, 446, 487, 567, 578.

Ireland, Parliament of, bills in—cont.

- Perpetual Revenue; I., 251.
- Place; I., 427, 462, 578.
- Police; I., 310, 320, 409, 410, 430, 432, 459, 578; III., 547.
- Post Office; I., 227, 228.
- Regency; I., 381–383, 393–419.
- Revenue Officers; 430, 457.
- , adjournment of; I., 390, 392, 397, 398, 409, 418, 438, 457, 460, 462, 465, 466.
- , committees of; I., 403, 409, 423, 429; II., 37.
- , debates in; I., 233, 247, 253–256; II., 30.
- , dissolution of; I., 195, 202, 365, 386, 390, 562, 565, 566.
- , Journals of; I., 433.
- , loan from; I., 224.
- , meeting or session of; I., 165, 166, 179, 184, 199, 218 (2), 219 (2), 246, 323, 353, 373, 375, 379, 381, 384, 385, 387, 389, 391–394, 397, 401, 406, 407, 438, 450, 552, 560, 581, 584; II., 3.
- , members of; I., 163–471, passim; III., 545, 546, 556.
- , —, plot to assassinate; I., 229.
- , —, want of honour in; I., 515.
- , the new, or future, alluded to; I., 421, 430, 436, 525, 562, 565, 567, 584.
- , opposition or aristocratic party in; I., 163–471, passim; also 246, 254, 256, 259, 294, 296, 297, 300, 308, 316, 323, 430, 449, 453, 466, 492, 513, 560, 562, 567, 583; II., 28, 30.
- , —, defeat of; I., 426, 458, 460, 470.
- , placemen and pensioners in; I., 419, 427.
- , prorogation of; I., 139, 211, 228, 261, 309, 314, 318, 323, 365, 366, 384, 388, 390–392, 395, 397, 399, 400, 406, 450, 457, 463, 465, 541, 560, 562; II., 43 (2), 66.
- , suggested title for; I., 179.
- , bill in the English Parliament, renouncing supremacy over; I., 166–212, 428; III., 546, 547.
- , business got through in; I., 299, 300, 323.
- , in relation to the King's illness and the Regency; I., 364–419.
- , address from; I., 416.
- , —, voted or alluded to; I., 402–420, 432, 433.
- , King's message to, alluded to; I., 428.
- , Government victory in; I., 462, 512; and see House of Lords and House of Commons, below.
- , tythe question moved in; I., 466.

Ireland, Parliament of—cont.

- , strength of the Government in; I., 502, 512.
- , in relation to the returned convicts; I., 545, 546, 548–552.
- , happy termination, of; I., 567.
- , attitude of (1790); I., 584.
- , Lord Lieutenant's speeches to, mentioned; II., 3, 43 (2).
- , in relation to Roman Catholics; II., 237, 337.
- , and the Duke of York's marriage; III., 454.
- , House of Lords; I., 176, 222, 225, 226, 245, 246, 249, 252 (2), 298, 307–309, 331, 375, 404–435, 450, 467, 468, 596, 597, 602; III., 399, 542, 557–559.
- , —, addresses in; I., 299, 513.
- , —, Bench of bishops in; I., 467.
- , —, bills in; I., 224, 227, 228; II., 37.
- , —, brought up from; I., 306, 312.
- , —, claim for restoration to; I., 482.
- , —, deputy usher of; I., 306.
- , —, government defeat in; I., 412.
- , —, —, victory in; I., 446, 460.
- , —, leadership of; I., 396.
- , —, awards the Ormond title to Mr. Butler; II., 41.
- , House of Commons; I., 374, 385, 394, 405–435, 450, 493, 494.
- , And 162–494, passim; III., 36, 542, 557–559.
- , —, addresses moved in; I., 298.
- , —, bills in; II., 36, 37, 39.
- , —, And see Parliament, bills in, above.
- , —, chaplain of; I., 223.
- , —, clerk of. See Cooke, E.
- , —, committees of; I., 227, 299, 300, 302.
- , —, divisions in; I., 303, 306, 307.
- , —, government defeat in; I., 409 (2), 428.
- , —, —, victories in; I., 417, 420, 425, 428, 457, 459, 569.
- , —, journals of; I., 321, 472.
- , —, leadership of; I., 440.
- , —, members of; I., 261–471, passim.
- , —, —, ordered into custody; I., 305.
- , —, —, shut out in the coffee-room; I., 303.
- , —, mob at; I., 227.
- , —, "obstinaey" of; I., 578.
- , —, officers; I., 177.

Ireland, Parliament of—cont.

- , House of Commons, proceedings or debates in; I., 224, 227, 246, 247, 299, 303, 306, 307, 321.
- , —, Speaker of (the chair); I., 167, 226, 255, 259; II., 28, 42, 66; III., 553; and see Pery, E. S.; Foster, John.
- , —, speakership of; I., 440, 571, 581 (2).
- , —, violent scenes in; I., 411, 425.
- Parliamentary reform in; I., 213, 214, 216, 217, 220–225, 244; III., 546, 557, 560.
- , convention concerning. See National Convention, above.
- , Dungannon resolutions on; I., 220.
- pay list of; I., 452.
- peerages in, granted or desired; I., 424, 426, 430, 434, 436, 441, 460–463, 468, 469, 471, 481–483, 485, 489, 492, 495, 498–503, 510, 536, 561–572, 581, 585; II., 67, 654, 655; III., 558–560.
- pensions in, granted or desired; I., 179, 187, 196, 422, 429, 430, 460, 511–516, 519–521, 561; III., 17, 552.
- people or natives of, passim.
- , loyalty of, to the King; I., 429.
- police in; III., 547.
- , bills relating to. See Parliament, above.
- political affairs of; I., 163–554, passim.
- poor in, wretched condition of; III., 549, 550.
- postal revenue from; I., 179.
- Postmaster General of. See Lees, John, and Loftus, Lord.
- , office of; I., 226, 229, 238, 435, 479.
- Post Office in; I., 231, 322, 377.
- , bill. See Parliament, above.
- Poyning's Law; III., 542, 544.
- Primacy of; I., 377, 561, 562.
- Primate of; I., 174; III., 38; and see Stone, George.
- , [the Archbishop of Dublin as]; II., 93.
- , as prelate of the Order of St. Patrick; I., 193, 199, 200.
- Prime Serjeant of. See Scott, John.
- Privy Council of. See Council of, above.
- Privy Councillors in, wine warrants of; III., 558.
- Privy Seal in, advantage of creating; III., 558.
- proclamation in; III., 387.
- propositions for trade in (1785); I., 249, 251–256; III., 546, 547, 551.
- protection duties in; I., 223, 226, 227, 230 (2), 231, 256; III., 546.

Ireland—cont.

- Protestants and Roman Catholics in, disturbances between; I., 487; III., 543, 546.
- Quartermaster-General in; I., 491, 531; and see Dundas, Colonel.
- Receiver-General for. See Vice-Treasurer.
- reform in; I., 226, 233, 234 (2).
- Regency business in; I., 492, 514, 564.
- Register of deeds in; I., 320.
- Repealists in; I., 166.
- revenues of; I., 301, 323; III., 542, 543, 545, 547–549, 552–556, 561.
- , Commissioners or Board; I., 287, 421, 427, 458, 464, 470, 474, 503; III., 13, 17, 37, 38, 423, 545, 552.
- , department of; I., 389.
- , laws of; III., 552.
- , Office in; III., 9.
- , Secretary for; I., 516.
- Rolls, the, in:
  - Deputy Clerk of; I., 313.
  - Masters of; I., 174, 206, 311–336, 333, 386, 486, 489; and see—Rigby, Richard (1759–1788).
  - Leinster, Duke of (1788–1789).
  - Glandore and Carysfort, Earls of (1789).
  - , fees of; I., 489.
  - , office of; I., 442, 445, 458, 479, 482.
- Roman Catholic regiments in; III., 388.
- Roman Catholics of; I., 224, 234, 238, 487; II., 55, 184, 235 (2), 237, 238, 318, 320–323, 333, 334, 337, 369; III., 38, 314, 542, 551.
- , Bill for relief of; II., 255.
- , business of; II., 213–215, 221, 226, 248.
- , clergy or priests; II., 248, 334; III., 551.
- , —, popular preachers amongst; III., 315.
- , Committee for; II., 40.
- , —, report of; II., 41.
- , delegates of; II., 318.
- , demands of; II., 39–42.
- , less adverse to the Church of England than the Dissenters are; III., 552.
- Round Robin in, subscribers to; I., 427, 433–435, 439, 440, 441 (2), 451.
- Secretary of State; I., 318, 320, 325, 386; II., 3; III., 9, 166; and see—
  - Bowes, Lord.
  - Hardwicke, Lord.
  - Hely Hutchinson, John.
  - Ponsonby, William Brabazon.
- , increase of salary of; I., 224.
- Secretary of State and Chief Secretary, the two offices of; III., 36.
- , amalgamated; III., 37.

Ireland—cont.

Secretaryship of State in, is a sinecure; III., 558.
 Secret Committee in; III., 388, 389.
 Sheriffs in; III., 545.
 Signet Office in, fees of; I., 320.
 —, clerk of the flants in; I., 320.
 —, smuggling in; I., 350.
 Solicitor-General of. See Carleton, Hugh (1779) Wolfe, Arthur (1787) and Toler, John (1789).
 South of, people of; I., 306.
 —, proposed college in; I., 192.
 —, provision trade of; III., 542.
 Stamp Office in; I., 383.
 Stamps, Commissioners or Board of; I., 228, 464, 470, 474, 569.
 — and Accounts, Board of; I., 359.
 State paper on; III., 541.
 Statutes of, alluded to; I., 318, 320.
 survey of; I., 297.
 Surveyor-General's office in, clerk of; I., 262 (2).
 Swiss colony in; I., 400.
 taxes in; III., 542, 552, 555, 556; and see hearth money in, above. tour in; I., 358.
 trade of; I., 179, 187-189, 200; II., 12; III., 542, 543, 545, 551, 556, 557, 560.
 travellers to and from; passim.
 Treasurer at War for. See Vice-Treasurer.
 Treasury of; I., 472; II., 39; III., 542, 547, 558.
 — Board in; III., 18.
 Treaty of Conciliation with, looked forward to; I., 170.
 tythes in; III., 550, 551.
 union of, with England; III., 36.
 Vice-Treasurers for; I., 168, 172, 174, 188, 238, 242, 323, 386; III., 554, 558; and see— Boyle, Richard, Earl of Shannon;
   Edgecumbe, George, Viscount Mount Edgumbe; Campbell, Lord Frederick.
 —, deputies and other officers of; I., 386, 472.
 —, office of, remodelling of; I., 442, 445, 458, 463, 474.
 —, to be reduced from three to two; I., 464, 469, 473.
 —, salaries of; I., 464, 469, 472, 473.
 —, Receiver-General and Treasurer at War, observations upon the office of; I., 471-473.
 —, —, grants or patents for; I., 471-473.
 volunteers in; I., 163, 166, 582, 594; II., 238; III., 546. wheat from; I., 549.
 Whig Club in; I., 609; II., 238.
 —, secretary of; I., 556.
 Whig party in; I., 389, 548.

Ireland—cont.

whiskey houses in; II., 120.
 Whiteboys, association of, in; I., 423.
 wine, beer, and spirit duties in; II., 22, 27, 29, 30, 33, 34.
 and the English Parliament. See Parliament.
 discontent or disturbances in; I., 181; III., 388, 549-554, 560.
 —, absence of; III., 546, 547, 560.
 warlike preparations in; I., 232.
 English Acts of Parliament of no force in; I., 247.
 harvest prospects in; I., 314.
 Stamp Act dispute in; I., 333.
 popular leaders in, form connexion with the English opposition; I., 443.
 in relation to the King's illness and the regency; I., 360-417, 469.
 compared with Italy; II., 5.
 fresh Commander-in-chief for; II., 212. anxiety concerning; II., 318, 320-323, 328, 330, 333, 445. governed by Mr. Ponsonby; II., 634.
 new arrangements for, condemned by Lord Buckingham; II., 647, 648.
 arrangements or changes in; III., 3, 30.
 raising of troops in; III., 5.
 critical situation of; III., 314, 315, 317, 318.
 danger of the Dutch fleet attacking; III., 329.
 murders and outrages in; III., 385-390, 399.
 and the French Republic; III., 395.
 judicature concerning, arrogated by the English House of Lords; III., 541. matters causing dislike to England in; III., 544, 546, 560.
 Irish or the Irish; passim.
 army. See Ireland, army of.
 "banditti," bad conduct of, in Flanders; II., 650.
 Channel, "hovering laws" in; I., 350.
 colonels; III., 2. convent at Liege; I., 310.
 convicts; I., 540, 555, 567.
 "easily led, hard to be driven"; I., 248.
 establishment, the, the Princess Royal to have a pension upon; III., 300.
 half-pence; I., 350.
 jealousy, concerning trade; I., 261.
 oil; I., 299, 302. priests; II., 445, 481; and see Ireland, clergy of.
 supporters of the Pretender; I., 51.
 Irishmen, the United; III., 314, 318, 385-387, 399.
 Irvine, —; I., 187.
 Isle de France. See Mauritius.
 Dieu. See Dieu, Isle.
 Noirmoutier. See Noirmoutier.

Islets, the (in Champagne); III., 475.
 Isnard [Maximin], character of; III., 65.
 Istria, Austrian troops in; III., 332.
 Isuf Bey; I., 20.
 Italian:
   courier; II., 119.
   merchants; III., 511.
   poets; II., 119. states; III., 10, 295.
   —, of the Emperor; II., 336.
 Italians; III., 2.
 Italy; I., 28; II., 1, 2, 5, 8, 9, 19, 92, 97,
   156, 330, 336, 539, 554, 555, 591,
   644; III., 2, 5, 75, 197 (2), 233,
   294, 296, 396, 488, 489.
 Austrian troops in; III., 215, 238,
   272, 297, 307.
 Buonaparte in. See Buonaparte.
 —, as the "brigand" ruling over;
   III., 396.
 courts of; II., 175.
 —, English residents at; II., 235.
 dirt of; II., 119.
 French army in; II., 522, 528, 560;
   III., 197, 205, 210, 212, 378.
 —, emigrants in; II., 118; III., 2, 78.
 —, generals refuse to enter; II., 548.
 travellers to; I., 594, 595, 608; II.,
   4-10, 127, 184.
 Ivernois, Mons. de; I., 172, 174, 183;
   III., 162.
 Itzig, Mr.; II., 309.

J.

Jackson:
 Charles, Bishop of Kildare; I., 571.
 Francis James, as secretary of legation
   at Berlin; II., 53, 64, 153-156, 161,
   173, 174, 179, 187, 188, 196 (2),
   202, 207, 212, 214.
 — as minister at Madrid; II., 257,
   297, 376, 383, 385; III., 129, 137.
 —, letters from; II., 170, 189, 194, 200.
 —, dishonourable conduct of; II., 220.
 —, father of. See Jackson, Dr.
 —, mission of, to Paris; III., 239-242.
 [William]; II., 448, 615.
 Dr.; II., 220.
 Mr.; I., 506.
 Jacob; II., 457.
 Jacobi, Baron, Prussian minister in England; II., 405, 436, 437, 470,
   488, 505, 565, 614; III., 234, 407, 536.
 instructions to; III., 516.

Jacobin emissaries; II., 326, 331, 334.
 newspapers; III., 146.
 Jacobins; II., 276, 401, 430, 445, 448,
   454-456, 480, 481, 488, 535, 561, 569,
   603, 615; III., 7, 83, 84, 86, 160, 465,
   466; and see France, factions in.
 Jacobites; I., 51-56, 105.
 Jacques Borreau, pamphlet signed; II., 165.
 Jamaica; I., 528, 593; II., 412; III., 478, 524.
 Admiralty Court at; III., 68.
 Governor of. See Dalling, John, and Howard, Lord Effingham.
 —, Thomas Pitt appointed as; I., 59.
 Prerogative Court in; I., 230.
 James I.:
   Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in time
     of; I., 189.
   treaty of, with Spain, alluded to; I., 189.
 James Edward, or the Pretender; I., 59, 69. called a "French kickshaw"; I., 39. party of. See Jacobites. rebellion of; I., 51-55.
 James:
   Alderman (Dublin); I., 577, 578.
   Mr.; I., 63.
 James' powders; II., 338.
 Jango [Indian]; I., 1.
 Janigon, commission printed in; III., 412.
 Jansen:
   Abraham; I., 65.
   Sir Theodore; I., 16.
   —, nephew of; I., 14, 16.
 Japan; I., 45; II., 269.
 Japanese manufactures; I., 15.
 Jarnac, Comte de; II., 128.
   brother of; II., 129.
 Jarry, Mons. de, or General; II., 400, 403-
   405, 407-410, 444, 454, 464, 468,
   469, 479, 490, 492, 496-498, 508,
   533, 621, 641; III., 236.
   letters from; II., 455, 469.
   papers by; II., 404, 407.
 Jarvis, Admiral. See Jervis.
 Jassy; II., 102, 213, 511.
 Jaucourt, Monsieur; II., 131.
 Jay, John, minister from the United States; II., 578, 599, 608, 629;
   III., 49, 76, 78, 87, 136, 530, 533.
   letters from; III., 34, 38, 51<sup>c</sup>, 528, 534.
   letters to; III., 68, 517, 529.
   family of; III., 68.
 Jeannot. See Joannot.
 Jefferson, Thomas, Secretary of State, in the United States of America; II., 157, 158, 223, 229, 263, 297; III., 526, 528.
   to be American minister in France;
     II., 543.
 Jemappes, action at; II., 336.

Jenkinson :

Charles ; I., 206, 296.

—, as Lord Hawkesbury ; I., 302, 519, 562, 605 ; II., 56, 161, 227, 228, 302, 360 ; III., 35.

—, as Earl of Liverpool ; III., 330.

—, present at Cabinet meetings ; II., 644, 646 ; III., 261, 283.

—, office of ; I., 322, 327.

Mr. ; II., 308.

Jennings :

Sir John, taking of Spanish fleet by ; I., 32.

Mr. ; I., 47, 108.

Jenyns [Soame], pamphlet on reform by ; I., 236.

Jephson, Mr., Master of the Horse in Ireland ; I., 163.

Jersey, Lady ; III., 49.

Jersey ; I., 551 ; II., 402, 598, 623 ; III., 138, 166, 245, 400.

proposed descent on, by France ; II., 556.

States of ; I., 550.

troops for or in ; II., 423, 431, 436.

Jervis (Jarvis), Admiral Sir John ; II., 610, 611, 623.

Jervoise, Sir Tristram Huddleston ; I., 271-274 ; II., 103, 105.

brother of. See Purefoy, G. H. J. nephew of. See Purefoy, Jervoise.

Jessonai, Monsieur ; III., 131.

Jesuits ; I., 3, 150.

Jew, "Mr. Pitt's." See Gideon, Sir Sampson.

Jews ; II., 89, 274 ; III., 202.

Joannot, Jeannot, or Johannot ; II., 573, 587 ; III., 82.

Jocelyns, the two ; I., 459.

Jockey Club ; II., 327.

publications ; II., 333.

Joderell, — ; I., 117.

Johannot. See Joannot.

Johnson, Mr. [? Abraham Jansen] ; I., 65.

Jolly, Mr. ; I., 51, 53, 54 (2), 56, 59, 61.

father of ; 61.

Jonathan, Sir ; I., 267.

Jones :

George Lewis, Bishop of Kilmore ; 571, 577.

Mr., Lord Edgecumbe's agent ; I., 130.

Todd ; I., 395.

[Sir William ?] ; I., 510, 519.

— ; I., 293.

Joubert, G. de, French agent at the Hague ; II., 288, 356, 360 (2), 377. receipt signed by ; II., 357.

Jourdan, General ; II., 519, 520, 523, 547, 585 ; III., 146, 256.

army of ; II., 521.

Juan de Fuca, Gulf of ; II., 74.

Jubal. See Gilbal.

Juliers ; II., 181 ; III., 517, 519.

Julius Cæsar's Villa at Baix ; II., 19.

Jumelière, la ; II., 544.

Jura, expected insurrection in ; III., 95.

Jusseff, Effendi ; II., 486.

K.

Kainardgi, peace of ; II., 45.

Kaiserlautern, victory of the allies at III., 536.

Kaisers, post of ; III., 520.

Kalitcheff, Count ; II., 59, 66, 70, 121, 274, 374 ; III., 226, 243, 306, 401.

Kalkreuther, General ; II., 535, 565 ; III., 48.

Käp, Captain ; III., 23.

Kaunitz :

Prince ; II., 78, 129, 130, 287.

General ; II., 559, 628.

Kay, Lient-Colonel ; II., 42, 44, 50, 83, 84, 101, 123, 186.

Kearny, Mr., regent of the Scotch College in Paris ; III., 65.

Keen, the Misses ; I., 191.

Kehl, fortress of ; III., 281, 294 (2).

Keith, Sir Robert Murray, ambassador at Vienna ; II., 52, 127, 129, 137, 166, 171, 223, 275, 282, 291, 292, 366, 371.

retirement of ; II., 296, 297, 309.

servant of ; II., 286.

Keller, Mons. de ; II., 314, 332.

Kellerman, General ; III., 467-470.

Kellington. See Callington.

Kelly :

[Thomas] Justice of Common Pleas ; I., 191, 382.

— ; and his gang (in Ireland) ; I., 172.

Kempson, —, Lord Auckland's secretary ; II., 165.

Kenfuer, Monsieur, secretary to the King of Prussia ; II., 641.

Kenmare, Lord. See Browne, Thomas.

Kennington Common ; II., 340.

Kensington ; I., 69, 105.

palace of ; III., 10.

Kent ; I., 113, 118.

Kenyon, Sir Lloyd [Master of the Rolls] ; I., 276, 277, 317, 319.

as Lord Kenyon ; I., 387, 391, 541, 586 ; II., 247, 314.

Keogh, Mr. ; II., 221, 323, 337.

Keppel, Keppell :

Augustus, Viscount ; I., 172, 189, 212 ; II., 114.

—, Board of. See Admiralty, Board of.

Brigadier ; III., 134.

—, regiment of ; III., 134.

William Anne, Earl of Albemarle ; I., 96.

—, his wife, Lady Albemarle ; I., 98.

Keppeler, Mons. de, Mayor of Strasbourg ; III., 83.

Kerambar, Comtesse de ; III., 122.
 Kerry militia ; III., 385, 388.
     Colonel of. See Glandore, Lord.
 Kettering, co. Northampton ; II., 354, 355.
 Kew :
     King or Court at ; I., 376, 404 ; III., 12, 49, 314. letters dated at (by the King) ; II., 282, 426, 428 ; III., 49, 255, 259, 261.
     the Princes and Princesses of Orange going to ; III., 12.
 Keynston ; I., 62.
 Kilcock, officer of ; III., 390.
 Kildare :
     Bishop of. See Jackson, Charles.
     bishopric of ; II., 55.
     county of ; I., 236 ; III., 338.
     Curragh of, settlers on ; I., 172, 174.
 Kildrummle, Scotland, parish of ; I., 568.
 Kilkenny, Fencible riots at ; I., 207, 208, 211 (2).
 Kilkenny, county ; I., 172, 231, 236.
 Killala, bishopric of ; I., 174.
 Killarney, visitors to ; I., 303.
 Killeen, Lord. See Plunkett, Arthur James.
 Kilmainham, house at ; I., 359.
 Kilmore, Bishop of. See Jones, George Lewis.
 Kilwarlin, Lord. See Hill, Arthur.
 King, the ; I., 508, 509 ; II., 432 ; and see George I., II., and III.
 King's Bench, Court of ; I., 132 (2), 505, 541.
     —, Judges of ; I., 542, 548.
     —, Lord Chief Justice of. See Mansfield.
     —, in Ireland. See Ireland.
 King's books, rating of livings in ; II., 432, 439.
 debts, power of suing for ; I., 359.
 letters, alluded to ; I., 359, 385, 451, 460, 463, 464, 469.
 Serjeants ; I., 462.
 King :
     John ; III., 8.
     Robert, Viscount Kingsborough ; I., 221.
     Rufus, minister from the United States, letter from ; III., 360.
     —, letter to ; III., 361.
     Mr. ; III., 136, 466.
     — ; II., 20, 105, 306.
 Kingsale. See Kinsale.
 Kingsborough, Viscount. See King, Robert.
 Kingsbrozer, Admiral ; I., 589.
 King's ferry, co. Kent ; I., 113.
 Kingston, Duke of. See Pierrepont, Evelyn.
 Kingston, Crump and Co. ; III., 400.
 Kingston Hall, co. Dorset ; I., 219.
 Kinkell, Baron ; III., 40, 52.
 Kinnoul, Earl of. See Hay-Drummond, Robert.
 Kinsale or Kingsale ; I., 41, 183, 231, 290.

Kinsberge, Mons. de ; III., 42.
 Kinsky or Kinski, General ; II., 470, 585.
 Kirkeudbright, Lord. See McLellan, John.
 Kirrell, Mr. ; I., 119-121.
 Kisa, servant of Governor Higgenson ; I., 1.
 Kloon, Count de ; I., 589.
 Knight, Lieut.-Colonel ; 347, 465.
 Knightsbridge, Middlesex, letter addressed to ; I., 158.
 Knobelsdorf, Monsieur ; II., 78, 79, 92, 93, 137.
 Knox :
     Thomas, Lord Welles ; I., 261, 525, 536 ; II., 55, 83.
     —, son of ; I., 537.
     General, secretary at war in the United States of America ; II., 157.
 Koeller's hussars ; III., 476.
 Korffe, Baronne de ; III., 448.
 Kosciusko or Kulkiusko, commander-in-chief of the Polish republic ; II., 564, 572, 631 ; III., 232.
 Kotchubey, Monsieur, recall of ; III., 371.
 Kouli Khan, history of, 263.
 Kourakin, Prince ; III., 404.
 Krai, General ; III., 519.
 Kutzleben, Baron, letters from ; II., 355 ; III., 72.

L.

Labour, restraints on ; I., 312.
 Lace trade, discontent in ; I., 265, 270.
 Lacey, Marechal ; II., 470.
 Lachen, the Emperor at ; III., 384.
 Lacheze, French Consul at Genoa ; III., 128.
 La Croix, Mons. de. See De la Croix.
 La Croix, near Besancon, fight at ; III., 476.
 La Fayette, Marquis de ; II., 128, 278, 285, 287, 288, 304, 305, 348, 392, 518, 652 ; III., 448, 449, 473. to take charge of the King and Queen ; II., 115. imprisonment of ; II., 305 ; III., 289.
     army of ; II., 304 (2).
     officers of ; II., 304.
     friends of ; II., 515, 651.
 Lafitte or La Fite ; II., 547, 569, 572, 583 ; III., 493.
 Lagarde, René de ; III., 361.
     brother of ; III., 361.
 La Harpe, General de ; II., 472 ; III., 291.
 Lahn, the river ; III., 146, 218, 257.
 Lahnebourg ; III., 139.

Lake :

General ; III., 385-387, 389.

—, I., 264, 268.

Lally Tollendal ; see Tollendal.

La Manche, department of, royalists in ; III., 309.

La Marek, Comte de (Prince Auguste d'Aremberg) ; II., 391, 605 ; III., 128, 480, 481.

Lamballe, Princesse de ; II., 356.
trial and execution of ; II., 305, 310, 311, 314 ; III., 471.

Lamballe, conference at ; III., 540.

Lambert :

Chevalier ; II., 461.

Colonel ; I., 41.

Mr. ; I., 168.

Lambertye, Monsieur ; III., 1, 5.

Lambeth, Surrey ; II., 206, 358.

Palace ; II., 250, 256.

—, letters dated at ; II., 206, 213, 251.

Lameth :

Count Alexander ; II., 275, 305.

—, secretary of ; III., 85.

Count Charles ; II., 131 ; III., 86(?).

—, letter of ; II., 132.

Lameths, the ; II., 278.

L'Amival ; II., 579.

Lancashire, rebels in ; I., 54, 55.

Lancaster, Duchy of ; I., 264.

Laudau ; II., 392, 431, 453.

relief of ; II., 491.

Landen ; III., 513.

Landeron, commune of ; II., 562.

Landon, Mr. ; I., 34.

Landrécy or Landreecies ; II., 525, 548, 599.

siege and taking of ; II., 563, 567.

Landrin, General ; III., 67.

Lane, Captain ; I., 60.

Langara, Spanish Admiral ; II., 437, 449.

fleet of ; III., 235.

Langie, Marquis de ; III., 463.

Langrishe [Sir Hercules] ; I., 229, 230, 420.

Langton, Stephen, of Great Horwood ; I., 291.

Languedoc ; II., 487, 571, 584 ; III., 508.

revolt in ; II., 397.

States of ; I., 151 ; III., 161.

Lanhydroek, co. Cornwall, minister of ; I., 111.

Lanjuinais ; III., 86.

Lansdown, near Philadelphia, letter dated from ; II., 443.

Lansdowne, Marquis of. See Petty, William.

La Planche, commissary in Normandy ; II., 530, 531.

La Poppe or Poype, General ; II., 532, 538.

La Réveillère L'Épau ; III., 340.

character of ; III., 160.

Larivière, Chevalier de ; II., 523, 547 ; III., 96.

La Roche :

Jacquelin ; II., 527, 544.

Lenoir, driven out of the ministry ; III., 341.

La Roche—cont.

St. André ; II., 527.

— (in 1747) ; I., 113, 119, 127.

—, agent of ; I., 110.

Lascarow or Lascaroff, Russian agent ; II., 87, 93.

Lascars ; III., 266.

Las Casas, Mons. de ; II., 555.

Lascelles, General ; II., 15.

Lasey, General ; I., 349 ; II., 182 ; III., 314.

Las Heras, Monsieur de ; II., 65, 86, 154, 176, 203, 297.

letter to ; II., 204.

Latin poem ; II., 432.

Latouche, D. ; I., 169, 404, 432 ; II., 36, 40.

as Governor of the Bank of Ireland ; I., 172.

La Tour, Monsieur ; II., 547 ; III., 131.

Lauderdale, Earl of. See Maitland, James.

Lauer, General ; III., 133.

Lauffen, burgh of ; II., 119.

Laumont, citizen ; II., 571, 587.

Launceston, Cornwall, M.P. for ; I., 131.

Launois, Mons. de ; II., 305.

Lauragais, Count ; I., 154, 155.

Lausanne ; II., 449, 596 ; III., 95, 149.

letters dated at ; II., 651 ; III., 168.

Lauzun ; II., 640.

Lauzun's hussars ; III., 476.

La Vendée ; II., 425, 453, 508, 525, 540, 544, 568, 614 ; III., 416, 540.

the rising in ; II., 487, 521, 530 ; III.,

13, 15, 77, 83, 96, 393, 490, 501, 503.

army of, (royalist) ; II., 463, 487,

530, 563, 567, 573, 581, 582 ; III., 105, 167, 193.

—, manifesto of ; II., 560, 564.

—, progress of ; II., 584.

—, soldiers for ; II., 563.

—, successes of ; II., 590.

army of the Convention in ; II., 530,

584, 587 ; III., 118, 489, 498.

help for ; II., 444, 479 ; III., 105, 135 ; and see French royalists, aid for.

is in ashes ; II., 469 ; III., 490.

battles in ; II., 527, 544.

reported armistice in ; III., 538.

chimera of ; II., 617.

Comte d'Artois to go to ; III., 114, 115.

Law, Mr. ; I., 250.

Lawless [Sir Nicholas] ; I., 426, 430, 468.

Leathe, Baron ; III., 304.

Leatherhead, Juniper Hall at ; II., 371.

—, letters dated at ; II., 371, 374.

Le Brun, Monsieur, French Minister for Foreign Affairs ; II., 311, 312, 324, 334, 360, 369, 370, 393, 397 ; III., 478.

character of ; III., 462.

rapport by ; III., 474.

- Leck or Lech, the river; III., 6 (2), 21, 22.
- Le Cointre, [Laurent]; II., 473.
- Ledbury, co. Hereford, letter dated at; III., 286.
- Lee:
- Captain; I., 42.
  - Colonel; I., 108.
  - Dr.; I., 108, 122.
  - Sir William; I., 294.
  - ; I., 259, 334.
- Leeds, Dukes of. See Osborne.
- Leer, in Oost-Friesland; III., 170, 176.
- letter dated at; III., 191.
- Leerdam, in Holland; III., 6, 21.
- Lees, John; I., 210, 330, 404, 422, 511.
- to be restored to the Post Office; I., 220.
- Leeward Islands, the; I., 505, 508, 509.
- Legendre; III., 85.
- Leghorn; II., 330.
- English Consul at; III., 25.
  - letters dated at; II., 509, 513, 519, 523, 526, 541, 546, 552.
  - post office in; II., 561.
- Lehrbach, Count; II., 494, 505, 525.
- Leicester, county of; I., 144.
- lieutenantcy of; I., 487.
- Leigh:
- Lady Caroline; III., 142.
  - General or Major General; II., 465, 490.
- Leillern, Madame de; I., 148.
- Leins, in Holland; III., 23.
- Leinster, Duke of. See Fitzgerald, William Robert.
- Leipzig, news from; III., 257.
- Leitrim, Lord. See Clements, Robert.
- Leitrim, county, coal in; I., 231.
- Leland, —; I., 481.
- Le Long, Monsieur [? Charles Long]; III., 482.
- Le Marchand, Monsieur; II., 278, 279, 284, 287.
- Lemon, Mr.; I., 127.
- Lenox or Lennox:
- Charles, Duke of Richmond; I., 188, 252, 296, 300, 350, 361, 368, 526, 579; II., 270, 302, 373, 407, 424, 433, 436, 443, 446, 453; III., 428.
  - , letter from; II., 384.
  - , letter to; II., 115.
  - , joins the coalition; I., 221.
  - , reported resignation of; II., 429.
  - , officers serving under; II., 437.
  - (Richemont), property of, in France; II., 544.
  - Lord George; I., 593.
  - [Mary], Countess of March; I., 94.
  - Captain; I., 442, 450.
- Lentze, Monsieur; III., 199.
- brother of; III., 199.
- Léon, Evêque de, letters from; III., 487 (2).
- Le Pein, Monsieur ("Henry"); III., 338–341, 347–352, 354, 355, 357–361, 370, 371, 373.
- letter from; III., 358.
- letter to; III., 359.
- Lepelletier; II., 445.
- Le Roi or Le Roy; III., 106.
- Lescure (Lesquir), Marquis de; II., 530.
- Leslie, Colonel; III., 385, 387, 389.
- regiment of. See Monaghan militia.
- Lestevinor or Lestevenon; III., 222, 351.
- Lestwithiel. See Lostwithiel.
- Le Tourneur, Mons. ("Gregory"), commissioner at Lille; III., 339, 340, 350, 352, 355, 370, 371, 373, 377.
- character of; III., 160.
- wife of; III., 370, 373.
- Leuschering, Mons. de; II., 276 (2), 277.
- Leuthe, Baron de; III., 403, 404.
- Leuwarden, in Friesland; III., 164, 172, 180, 202.
- clubs at; III., 152.
  - palace of; III., 156.
- Levant, the; II., 510, 573.
- Le Veneur, Monsieur; III., 106, 122, 123.
- Leveson, Mr.; I., 101–103.
- Leveson-Gower:
- Elizabeth, Countess of Sutherland; I., 489; II., 181.
  - George Granville, Earl Gower; I., 536; II., 107 (2), 114, 115, 136, 250, 281, 299, 305, 307–309, 313, 314.
  - , letters from; II., 117, 128, 176, 195, 203, 212, 242, 265, 266, 274, 288, 292.
  - , letters to; II., 181, 264, 268, 291, 294, 361; III., 461.
  - , despatches to and from, alluded to; II., 107, 300–305.
  - , messenger from; II., 109.
  - , recall of, from Paris; II., 108, 302, 305; III., 286, 461, 464–467.
  - , his house in Paris visited by the mob; II., 301.
  - , anxiety for the safety of; II., 301, 305 (2), 306.
  - , return of, to England; II., 306–308.
  - , family of; II., 301, 307.
  - , servants of; II., 305.
  - Granville, Earl Gower, and (in 1786) Marquis of Stafford; I., 214, 216, 217, 346, 352; II., 55, 272, 373.
  - as Lord Privy Seal; I., 579; II., 373.
  - , letters from; I., 524; II., 202.
  - , letter to; I., 524.
  - Lord Granville; II., 278, 367; III., 335, 336, 345, 352, 354, 372.
- Lewis:
- Major; I., 486.
  - Mr., of the War Office; II., 11, 12.
  - , brother-in-law of; I., 358.
- Lexington, Lord. See Sutton, Robert.
- Leyden, in Holland; III., 42, 54, 426.
- Gazette; II., 77, 284, 286.
- editor of; II., 286.

- Liancourt, Mons. de; II., 358.
 Liban, in Courland; III., 391.
 Lichfield (Litchfield); III., 361.
   Bishopric of; II., 105.
 Lichtenau, Madame de, betrayal of; III., 405.
 Liddell, Sir Henry, Baron Ravensworth; I., 141.
 Lige; I., 282, 594; II., 356, 421, 536; III., 411, 433, 451, 462, 463, 510, 511.
   Bishop and Bishopric of; II., 410; III., 279, 463.
   co-adjutorship of; II., 96.
   English nuns from; II., 600.
   French envoy at. See Ste. Croix, Monsieur.
   Irish convent at; I., 310.
   letters dated at; 434, 435.
   Princes going to; III., 477.
   the scum of; III., 497.
   pays de; I., 594.
 Liffey, the river; I., 413.
 Lifford, Lord. See Hewitt, James.
 Liffenshoeck; II., 415.
 Ligne:
   Prince de, killed; III., 467.
   — aides-de-camp of; III., 467.
   Princess de; I., 153.
 Ligonier, Lady; I., 187.
   declines a pension; I., 195.
 Lill, [Godfrey, Judge of Common Pleas in Ireland] death of; I., 222.
 Lille or Lisle; I., 349; II., 389, 391, 392, 407, 419; III., 338, 378.
   letters dated at; III., 336 (2), 337, 344, 346, 354, 356, 359 (2), 360, 370, 371, 373.
   negotiations at; III., 336-362, 365, 368-371, 373, 377-381, 396.
   —, French plenipotentiaries at; III., 339-362, 370, 373, 376, 377, 381; and see Maret, Le Tourneur and Pleville.
   siege of; II., 322, 584.
 Lillebonne, Mons. de; I., 155.
 Lillingstone [Dayrell], co. Bucks; I., 315; II., 437.
 — Lovel, co. Bucks, living of; III., 103.
 Lillo; II., 415.
 Liman, the, in Russia; II., 169.
 Limbourgeois; II., 305.
 Limburgh, Austrian; III., 462.
 Limerick, Ireland; I., 189, 192, 231, 458, 585.
   Bishop of. See Pery, William Cecil.
   bishopric of; I., 172, 174.
   election at; I., 563.
 Limerick, county, estates in; I., 463.
 Limerick, title of; I., 463.
 Limoges, intendance of; III., 160.
   mint at; II., 153.
 Limosin, the; II., 539, 540.
 Lineelles, attack upon; II., 559.
 Lincoln, Bishops of. See Wake, William and Tomline, George Prettyman.
   bishopric of; II., 105.
 Lincoln Cathedral, prebend in. See Aylesbury, prebend of.
 Lincolnshire case; I., 539.
 Lindenau, Count; II., 300.
 Lindet; II., 560, 563, 569, 574, 579, 580, 582, 584, 585, 587, 616; III., 491.
   character of; III., 492.
 Lindsay:
   James, Earl of Balcarres; I., 592.
   William; II., 144, 162-164, 166, 167, 199, 202, 206 (2), 221, 225-227, 268, 274, 307, 309-311, 315.
   —, letters from; II., 215, 219, 224; III., 472.
   —, letters to; II., 212, 226, 229.
   —, goes as chargé d'affaires to Berlin; II., 207 (2).
   —, to be recalled from Paris; II., 303 (2).
 Lippe, the river; III., 24.
 Lipscomb, Mr.; III., 134.
 Liris, the river, in Italy; II., 8.
 Lisbon; I., 28; II., 257, 387, 409, 414, 422, 437; III., 236, 374.
   Court of. See Portugal, court of.
   despatches received from; III., 373.
 Lisburn, borough of; I., 571.
 Lisle, Mons. de; III., 309.
 Lisle. See Lille.
 Lismore, deanery of; II., 41.
 Liston, Mr.; II., 87; III., 360-362, 440.
 Lithuania; II., 572.
 Little:
   Dr.; I., 415; II., 11.
   Mr.; III., 530.
 Little Ann, Hants, manor of; I., 89 (2).
 Liverpool, Earl of. See Jenkinson.
 Liverpool; I., 391; II., 405.
   prisoners at; II., 414, 416.
 Livonia; II., 49.
   and Esthonia, governor-general of; II., 256.
 Llandaff, Bishop of. See Watson, Richard.
 Llantrythd [co. Glamorgan?]; I., 561.
 Lloyd:
   Mr.; III., 404.
   (of Queenborough). See Floyd.
 Lobositz, letter dated at; III., 326.
 Loch Tay, Camp on, letter dated from; I., 494.
 Locke, John, writings of, alluded to; I., 222.
 Loeben, in Styria, treaty between the Emperor and France, at; III., 318, 319.
 Loftus:
   Lord. See Tottenham, Charles.
   Henry, Earl of Ely; I., 177.
   Captain William; I., 193, 201, 235, 291.
   —, letter of; I., 237.
   Lieut.-colonel; I., 345.
   Major-General; III., 388.
   —; paymaster; I., 250.
 Loire, the river; II., 486, 545; III., 96, 108, 111, 115, 116, 120. country house on; III., 108.

Loire, the river—cont.

pont St. Martin, over; III., 108.

the Upper, Chouans upon; III., 108.

Lomagne, Comtes de; II., 589.

Lombard, of Frankfort; II., 85.

Lombardy; II., 5, 539; III., 210, 491. offered to Sardinia by France; III., 502.

Lomellinos, Doge; II., 4.

London, or the town, passim.

bankers of; I., 76; III., 515.

Bishop of [Dr. Porteous]; II., 504.

City or Corporation of, address from;
I., 265.

—, and Parliament; III., 144.

—, favourites in; I., 30.

—, loan from; I., 28.

—, dinner given to the Prince by;
I., 61.

—, good dispositions of, II., 349.

Commissioners from Holland to;
III., 47.

court of. See St. James', court of.
diocese of, Chancellor of, see Scott,
Sir William.

emigrants in; II., 314, 315, 429.

foreign princes in; III., 23.

insurances in; I., 582.

Irish embassy in; I., 433.

letters to and from, passim.

Lord Mayor and Recorder of, anecdote of; I., 106.

magistrates of; III., 104.

port of, pressing of mariners in; I., 580.

printers of, trial of; II., 128.

Recorder of; I., 522; and see Rose,
Sir John.

reform association in; II., 268.

seditious meetings in; III., 144.

sheriffs of; I., 518, 522, 523, 586.

travellers to or from, passim.

watchmen; I., 594.

and Westminster, buildings, streets,
&c., in:

Adelphi, letters dated from; I., 159, 162.

—, George Street in, letters dated from; II., 145, 157, 160, 228.

Aldermanbury; II., 10, 32.

Arlington Street; I., 158.

—, letters dated from; I., 135, 138, 145.

Berkeley Square; I., 155, 336.

Billingsgate, language of; I., 148.

Bloomsbury; I., 160, 604.

Bolton Street, Lord Buckingham's house in; 298, 301, 302, 332, 404.

Bond Street, letter dated from;
I., 113.

Bridewell; I., 556.

Broad Street, letter dated from;
III., 530.

Buckingham House. See Queen's House.

London, or the town—cont.

Burlington House; I., 406, 410;
II., 593, 607; III., 31.

—, letter dated at; III., 144.

Bury Street, letter dated from;
I., 134.

Camden Place; II., 55.

Carleton House; II., 237.

—, letters dated from; I., 109; III., 21.

Cavendish Square, letter dated from; III., 472.

Charing Cross; III., 104.

Charles Street, letters dated from;
II., 503, 536, 601, 606, 643.

Cleveland Row, letters dated from; III., passim.

Coco-tree, the; I., 61.

Copenhagen House; III., 145.

Covent Garden, Grand Hotel in;
III., 78.

Dartmouth Street, letters dated from; II., 331, 445.

Dover Street; III., 19, 21, 196.

—, letters dated from; II., 374, 375, 642, 649; III., 5, 6, 12-14, 21, 30, 31, 33, 35, 45, 50, 52, 58.

Downing Street; I., 257; II., 650; III., 381.

—, letters dated from; I., 193, 194, 353 (2), 356, 411, 474, 488 (2), 528, 558, 567, 591, 592; II. and III. passim.

East Street, letter dated from;
I., 130.

Fleet Street, Golden Bottle in;
I., 76.

80, Gerard Street; II., 326.

Golden Square; I., 10, 19.

Gravel Pit, the, letter dated from;
I., 64.

Great Cumberland Place, letter dated from; III., 360.

Great Russel Street, letter dated from; I., 604.

Grenier's hotel; II., 395.

Guildhall; II., 464; III., 144.

—, captured standards in; I., 28.

Harley Street, letters dated from;
III., 78, 308, 318, 320, 323.

Hill Street; I., 140 (2), 142;
III., 25.

—, letters dated from; I., 159; II., 267; III., 18, 98, 374.

Holborn; I., 158.

Hyde Park; II., 55, 64.

Jermyn (Jarman) Street; I., 50.

—, Conest's Hotel in; II., 404.

King's Bench prison; I., 55.

King Street, Nerot's Hotel in;
I., 164.

Leadenhall Street; I., 281.

—, India House in. See
India House.

London, buildings, streets, &c., in—cont.

- Leicester Fields, court (of the Prince) at; I., 64.
 —, Gerrard Street in; I., 108, 117.
 —, letters addressed to; I., 113, 118, 119, 126.
 —, letter dated from; I., 122.
 —, Lime Street in; I., 135.
 Leicester House, letter dated from; I., 122.
 Lincoln's Inn; I., 199, 201.
 Lisle Street, letters dated from; III., 481, 482, 487.
 Lombard Street; I., 43.
 London Tavern; II., 443.
 Lower Grosvenor Street, letters dated from; III., 34, 45.
 Ludgate Hill, Fountain tavern on; I., 118.
 Mansion House, picture at; I., 294.
 Montague House, Great, museum at; I., 143.
 —, Little; I., 143.
 New Bond Street; I., 118, 452.
 New Broad Street; III., 400.
 Norfolk Street; letter dated from; I., 129.
 Old Bailey, Court of; I., 522, 523.
 — Sessions; I., 516, 523 (2).
 Ormond Street; I., 219.
 Oxford Street; II., 285.
 Paddington; I., 279.
 —, Lord Buckingham's villa at; II., 59, 598.
 Palace Yard, letters dated at; II., 498, 508, 516, 535.
 Pall Mall, the; I., 35, 160, 301.
 —, letters dated from; I., 50, 78, 161.
 —, letters addressed to; I., 78, 80, 81 (2), 90, 91.
 —, the Gentleman's Hotel in; I., 164.
 —, Governor Pitt's house in; I., 85.
 —, Royal Hotel in, letters dated at; III., 34, 38, 516, 528, 534.
 Parade (? at the Horse Guards); III., 270.
 Park Lane; II., 285.
 —, —, letters dated from; II., 270, 479, 480, 486.
 — Place; III., 377.
 — Street, letter dated from; III., 294.
 Parks, the profits of; II., 237.
 Parliament Street:
 —, letter dated from; II., 170.
 —, No. 6, office of the Grand Junction Canal at; II., 499.
 Piccadilly; I., 144.
 —, letters dated from; II., 399, 479–653

London, buildings, streets, &c., in—cont.

- Portland Place, letters dated from; II., 603; III., 17.
 Portman Square, letters dated from; III., 460 (2).
 Portugal Street, letters dated from; III., 16, 19.
 Queen's House, or Buckingham House; I., 205, 580(2); III., 311.
 —, letters dated at (by the King); I., 586, 587; II., 21, 55, 64, 232, 234, 363, 372 (2), 381, 387, 388, 394, 497, 504, 508, 534; III., 19, 35, 43, 49, 50, 57 (2).
 Queen's Walk; II., 64.
 — Square; I., 160.
 —, —, letter addressed to; I., 91.
 St. George's Church; Prince Augustus' banns read in; II., 477.
 St. James' or St. James' Palace; I., 278, 353, 354, 541, 542; II., 198, 299, 372; III., 44, 49, 293.
 —, apartments at; III., 316, 323 (2).
 —, the Court at or to; I., 102, 104; and see St. James'.
 —, the King at; I., 220.
 —, letters dated from; I., 9; III., 258.
 St. James' evening paper; II., 284.
 — Place; III., 16, 49.
 —, —, letters dated from; I., 565; III., 49.
 — Park, ranger of; II., 237.
 — Square; II., 206, 218, 258, 397, 405, 408, 409.
 —, —, letters dated from; I., 530 et seq. passim; II., passim; III., 136, 477, 479, 486, 488, 508, 512, 517.
 —, Street, new club in; II., 267.
 —, —, Upper Terrace in; I., 38.
 St. Paul's, prebendary [? prebend] of; I., 285.
 St. Sepulchre's parish; I., 586.
 Saville Row; I., 94, 106.
 — Street, letters dated from; I., 214, 215.
 Soho Square; I., 13.
 — letter dated from; II., 259.
 Somerset House; III., 278.
 —, turned into public offices; III., 290.
 — Place; II., 450.
 —, —, letters dated from; I., 570, 573; II., 146; III., 194, 205.
 Southampton Street; I., 156, 160.
 Spring Garden or Gardens, letters dated from; III., 337, 338, 377.

- London, buildings, streets, &c., in—cont.
 Strand, new church in; I., 160.
 —Surrey Street in; I., 160.
 Temple, the, students at; I., 18.
 —, Inner; I., 109.
 Tower, the. See Tower.
 Upper Grosvenor Street:
 letter dated from; I., 107.
 letter addressed to; I., 107.
 Warwick Street; I., 183.
 Welbeck Street, letter dated from; III., 531.
- Londonderry, Earls of. See Pitt, Thomas and Ridgway.
- Long, Charles, Under-Secretary of State; II., 215, 324, 351, 432; III., 141, 401, 403.
- Longchamps, Monsieur; III., 482.
- Longfield, Mr., of co. Cork; I., 221, 297, 303, 330, 399, 402, 458.
- Longford, Lord. See Pakenham, Edward Michael.
- Longford county; I., 166; II., 318.
- Longleat, co. Wilts; I., 354.
 letter dated at; II., 11.
- Longnion; III., 476.
- Longwy; II., 313; III., 476.
 French king reported to have reached; II., 111.
- Lonsdale:
 Earl of. See Lowther, Sir James.
 Viscount. See Lowther, Henry.
- Loo; III., 156.
 treaty of; III., 204.
- Lord Chamberlain; III., 111.
- Lord Chancellor; I., 523, and see Parker, Viscount; Somers, Lord; Thurlow, Lord; and Loughborough, Lord.
 —, church patronage of; II., 432, 439 (2).
- Lord Keeper. See Great Seal, Lord Keeper of.
- Lord President of the Council. See Privy Council.
- Lord Privy Seal; I., 538; and see Leveson-Gower, Granville, Lord Gower; and Pitt, John, 2nd Earl of Chatham.
- Lord Steward; I., 526, 527, 529; and see Brydges, Duke of Chandos.
 department of; III., 11.
- Lord Treasurer (in 1714). See Talbot, Charles, Duke of Shrewsbury.
- Lords, House of. See Parliament.
- L'Orient, in Brittany; II., 449; III., 14, 162, 166.
- Lorraine; II., 429, 603; III., 448.
 insurrection in; II., 532.
- Lostwithiel or Lestwithiel, co. Cornwall:
 election at; I., 108, 110, 111, 114, 119, 122, 127.
 letter dated at; I., 72.
- Loughborough, Lord. See Wedderburn, Alexander.
- Lough Erne, Ireland; I., 231.
 —Swilly, fisheries of; I., 189.
- Louis d'or, coining of; III., 193 (2).
- Louth, county; I., 236.
- Louvain, battle near; II., 391.
- Louvet; III., 367.
 character of; III., 65.
- Lovat, Lord. See Fraser, Simon.
- Lovett, Sir J.; I., 264-266, 268; III., 147.
 children of; I., 190.
- Low Countries. See Netherlands.
- Lowndes, Mr.; II., 499.
- Lowther:
 Henry, 3rd Viscount Lonsdale; I., 105.
 —, brother of; I., 105.
 Sir James; I., 190.
 —, as Earl of Lonsdale; I., 230, 289, 389, 490.
- Lowtherstown volunteers; I., 224.
- Loyalty Loan, the, allusions to; III., 281, 282.
- Lozère, Pelet de la; III., 86.
- Lubeck, III., 224.
- Luc, Mons. de; III., 214, 293, 391 (2), 393, 403, 404, 406-408.
- Lucas:
 Captain; III., 389.
 —, squadron of, capture of; III., 276.
 Mr.; I., 12.
 and Spenser, Messrs.; II., 98.
- Lucchesini:
 Count; II., 78, 93, 396, 398, 406, 492-494, 500, 604, 627; III., 27.
 —, demand made by, on behalf of the King of Prussia; III., 430, 431.
 433, 436, 437, 441, 451.
 Madame de, his wife; II., 246, 493.
- Luckner, General or Maréchal; II., 194, 242, 292, 518; III., 469, 473.
- Lucrine Lake, Italy; II., 19.
- Ludgershall, co. Wilts, election at; I., 118 (2).
 letter dated at; I., 118.
- Luiller; II., 560.
- Luisnes, George Ernest, letter from; II., 85.
- Lumley:
 Richard, 1st Earl of Scarborough; I., 6, 26, 34, 41.
 —, letter to; I., 4.
 Richard, 2nd Earl of Scarborough; I., 106.
- Lumley Castle, co. Durham; I., 143.
- Luneville, Duke and Duchess of; I., 81.
- Luneville, academy of; I., 81 (2).
 letters dated at; I., 81-83, 90, 91.
 letters directed to; I., 81, 83, 90.
- Lusatia; II., 170, 174.
- Lower; III., 232.
- Luttrell:
 Henry Lawes, Earl of Carhampton; I., 309 (2), 310, 336-341, 412, 491 (2), 493, 498-502, 510, 515, 525, 569.
 —, attempt to murder; III., 383, 386, 389.
 Lieut.-Colonel, Adjutant-General for Ireland [1772]; I., 348.
 —; I., 201, 224.
- Luttrellstown, Ireland, duel near; I., 569.

Luxembourg, or Luxemburgh; I., 279; II., 107, 116, 547, 603; III., 45, 451.
siege and surrender of; III., 51, 78, 79.

Duchy of; II., 333.
palace of. See Paris.

Luxmore:

John; I., 110, 111, 114, 119-121, 123, 124, 128, 132.

William; I., 121, 128, 132.

Luynes, Madame de; II., 305.

Luzerne, Chevalier de la, French ambassador in England; II., 83, 108.

Lydiard [Tregoze], co. Wilts, letter dated at; I., 117.

park of; I., 117.

Lynden de Blytterswyk, Mons. G. H. C. de; III., 443 (2), 444.

Lyndhurst, New Forest, the King's house at; III., 96.

Lyon or Lyons, Major-General; I., 446, 525.

Lyons; I., 610; II., 400, 473, 532, 539, 582, 604; III., 82-84, 95, 102, 131, 133, 224, 484, 485, 490, 505.

municipality of; III., 84.

national guard at; III., 84.

prison of; II., 584.

theatre or play at; III., 160, 494.

siege of [by the army of the Convention]; II., 445.

taken by the Convention forces; II., 449.

commissioners of the Convention at; II., 487; III., 494, 495.

—, ferocity of; III., 494, 495, 498, 531.

Du Bois marches upon; III., 485.

executions at; III., 491.

armée révolutionnaire at; III., 497.

Lyttcott, Mr.; I., 63.

Lyttelton or Littleton:

Charles, bishop of Carlisle; I., 158 (2).

George; I., 95, 117, 119, 128.

—, letter to; I., 122.

— as Lord Lyttelton; I., 161.

—, letters from; I., 157, 161, 162.

—, Dialogues of the Dead by; I., 142, 158.

—, father of, [Sir Thomas Lyttelton]; I., 125.

—, son of. See Lyttelton, Thomas. [George Fulke]; I., 295.

—, father of. See Lyttelton, William Henry.

Thomas [2nd Lord Lyttelton in 1773]; I., 162.

—, his wife [Apphia]; I., 162.

William Henry, Lord Westcote [cr. Lord Lyttelton in 1794]; I., 295.

M.

M., A., French aide-de-camp; III., 471.

M., canton of (in Brittany?); III., 538.

Maas, Maes, Meuse, the river; II., 31, 370, 536, 565, 602, 605, 606, 610; III., 184, 518.

Macartney:

Mrs. C.; I., 295.

George, Lord, and (in 1792) Earl; I., 494, 519; II., 44.

Governor Generalship of India offered to; I., 258.

mission of, to China; II., 269, 286, 294.

Macbride, Admiral; II., 423, 431, 444.

squadron under; II., 623.

Macclesfield, Earls of. See Gerard, Charles, and Parker, Thomas.

Macdonald, Archibald or Sir Archibald, Solicitor General; I., 315, 318.

as Attorney General (1788-1793);

I., 457, 465, 468, 510, 608; II., 198, 213, 230-233, 235 (2), 245.

—; I., 206.

McDonnell, Randal William, Earl of Antrim; I., 177, 199.

to be made a marquis; I., 424, 426, 436.

Mack, General; II., 470, 497 (2), 501-503, 505, 508, 516, 525, 533, 557-559, 584, 585, 594, 603, 614; III., 91, 314.

letters from; II., 534; III., 509.

letter to; III., 508.

Mackaroff, Russian Rear-Admiral and Commander in Chief; III., 374, 375.

McKay, General; I., 473.

Macke, Quarter-master General; II., 391.

McKenna, Dr.; II., 323.

McKensie, Mackenzie:

Betty; I., 253.

—; II., 215.

Mackintosh:

Mr.; II., 309.

—; son of; I., 55.

Maclean, —; II., 298.

MacLellan, John, Lord Kircudbright; I., 603.

McNamara [John]; I., 277, 357, 358, 467, 588.

Macon, in France; III., 131.

McPherson:

Sir John; II., 73, 297.

Mr.; I., 257.

McTavish, Mr.; III., 76.

Madalinski, Lieutenant-General in Poland; II., 564.

Madan or Maden:

J., letter of; I., 118.

M.; I., 108, 117, 118.

—, letter of; I., 113.

Maddock, Mr.; I., 128, 131.
 letter to; I., 130.
 Madeira, island of; III., 400.
 wine; III., 400.
 Madeiras, Governor General of the; III., 400.
 Madison, Mr.; II., 157, 543; III., 526.
 Madras; I., 3, 4, 8, 10, 25, 26, 45, 46, 356, 481, 557; II., 11, 185, 226, 285, 298. hospital at; I., 14.
 mint at; I., 45.
 the Mount at; I., 43, 44.
 papers; II., 236.
 road of, ships in; I., 45.
 treasury of; II., 185.
 Madras Presidency; I., 257, 353.
 Council of; I., 42-45.
 —, members of; I., 1.
 —, secretary of; I., 47.
 Fort St. George in. See Fort St. George.
 Governors or Presidents of. See Pitt, Thomas, and Addison, Mr.
 —, former. See Yale and Higginson.
 Nabob of; I., 2.
 Madrid; II., 99, 109, 262, 348, 367, 368, 376, 383 (2), 392, 467; III., 167.
 court of. See Spain, court of.
 letters dated at; II., 134, 203, 256, 275, 368, 406, 409.
 post office of; II., 406.
 English army to march on; I., 28.
 difficulty of educating English children at; II., 595.
 Maes, the. See Maas.
 Maeskel, letter dated at; II., 609.
 Maestricht; I., 349; II., 409, 410, 415, 421, 425, 546, 598, 605; III., 514. committee at; II., 584.
 defence of; II., 464, 637; III., 515-519.
 letters dated from; II., 564-566.
 cession of, to the French; III., 279.
 Magdeburg (Magdebourg); II., 269, 276, 290; III., 199.
 Maghadosh Bay; II., 611.
 Magrath, Captain; I., 346, 347, 349, 350, 457.
 Mahratta cavalry; II., 226.
 politics; III., 194.
 Mahrattas (Morattoes), the; I., 2.
 Maidenhead, co. Berks; II., 209.
 Maillard, [Stanislas]; III., 490, 496, 498, 503.
 Main (Mayn), the river; III., 51, 139.
 Maine, province of, Chouans in; III., 115.
 Mainz, Mentz or Mayence; II., 118, 400, 422, 424, 464, 536, 543; III., 51.
 blockade or siege of; II., 392, 402, 405-407, 536.
 Dutch chargé d'affaires at; II., 85, 189.
 Elector of; II., 85, 86, 118, 639, 645.
 —, army of; II., 118.

Mainz, Mentz or Mayence—cont.
 Elector of, minister of; II., 639.
 letters dated at; II., 85, 86, 577.
 meeting of French exiles at; II., 118.
 surrender of; II., 409.
 invested by the French; III., 139, 145, 146.
 garrison of; III., 181.
 department of, in insurrection; III., 540.
 Maitland, James, Lord; I., 316.
 as Earl of Lauderdale; 315, 316, 360, 514.
 money sent to, by the Convention; II., 538.
 Maizière, rector of; III., 539.
 Majent, Mr.; III., 136.
 Major, a messenger; II., 180.
 Makan; II., 457.
 Malabar coast; II., 103, 190, 191, 193.
 Malaccas, the, or Molucca Isles; II., 71, 145, 150, 168.
 Malacowski, Maréchal; II., 73.
 Malaga, battle of; I., 28.
 consulship of; II., 303, 304.
 Malays, the; I., 591.
 Malsherbes, heroism and execution of; II., 564.
 his daughter, son-in-law, and grand-daughter executed with him; II., 564.
 suggested as regent; II., 617.
 Malet, Charles W.; I., 607.
 as Sir Charles; III., 146, 194-196.
 letter from; III., 195.
 Mallet du Pan [Jacques]; II., 555, 616, 638, 649, 652; III., 44, 64, 182, 217, 483, 485, 487, 531.
 character of; III., 484.
 letters from; II., 591, 616; III., 484, 489, 491, 531.
 “Des considérations sur la durée de la révolution,” by; III., 497.
 Mallet, Mr., of co. Bucks.; II., 328.
 Malmesbury, Lord. See Harris, Sir James.
 Malmesbury, co. Wilts, election at; I., 113.
 Malouet, Baron; II., 388; III., 484, 487.
 letters from; III., 477 (2), 478, 483, 485, 531.
 wife and son of; III., 484.
 Malta; II., 573; III., 16, 295.
 order of, keeper of the records of; II., 581.
 —, Grand Master of; III., 16.
 —, knights of; III., 16.
 Man, Isle of; I., 308, 350, 589.
 Governor of; II., 146.
 Lieut.-Governorship of; I., 489, 589.
 Manatten, Mr.; I., 132.
 Manbourg:
 “l'ainé”; II., 305.
 Charles; II., 305.
 Victor; II., 305.
 Manchester, Duke of. See Montagu, William.

- Manchester; II., 309.
 disaffection at; II., 328.
 dissenters; III., 466.
 rendezvous at; I., 55.
 society of, deputation from; II., 266.
- Maue, Mors. le; III., 121.
- Manfredini, Mons. de; II., 275.
- Manheim or Mannheim; II., 85, 118, 392, 577; III., 139, 146, 213.
 Dutch minister at; II., 264.
 garrison of; III., 257.
 letters dated at; II., 451, 453, 592.
 surrender of; III., 149.
- Mann, Admiral; III., 235.
- Manners:
 Charles, 4th Duke of Rutland; I., 205.
 —, as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; I., 227, 229, 232-238, 241, 244-246, 249, 252, 254, 255, 262, 263 (2); III., 546, 547.
 —, letters of; I., 241, 242.
 —, arrival of, in Ireland; I., 226.
 —, illness of; I., 244.
 —, death of; I., 287, 288.
 —, funeral of; I., 292.
 —, allusions to, after his death; I., 293, 297-300, 309 (2), 310 (2), 329, 331, 340, 348, 352, 385, 421, 426, 430, 436, 458, 468, 495, 499, 501, 503.
 John, Marquis of Granby; II., 446.
 [Mary] Duchess of Rutland, wife of the 4th Duke; I., 244, 406.
 Lieut.-Colonel; I., 235.
 Major-General; III., 265.
- Manoir, Monsieur; II., 391.
- Mansfield, Earl of. See Murray, William.
- Manstein, Colonel or General (Prussian Minister); II., 493, 494, 535; III., 470, 471.
- Mantua; III., 396.
 siege of; III., 238, 294.
- Marat, Jean Paul; II., 397, 401, 405, 412, 445; III., 473.
 death of; III., 492.
 bust of; III., 64, 65.
 corpse of, turned out of the Pantheon; III., 64. party of; II., 405.
- Marazion, Cornwall; I., 107 (2).
- Marble Hill; I., 93, 94, 99, 100, 106.
- March:
 Countess of (1736). See Lennox, Mary.
 Lord (1760); I., 142.
- Marche en Famine; II., 410.
- Marchmont, Earl of. See Hume, Hugh.
- Mark, Count de la. See La Marek.
- Marcoff or Markow, Monsieur; II., 111, 114, 144, 160.
- Maréchal, the; III., 440.
- Maressé, General; II., 379.
- Maret, Monsieur, ("William"); II., 375.
 as Commissioner to Lille; III., 338-340, 345-348, 352, 354, 355, 360, 361, 370, 373, 377.
- Maret, Monsieur—cont.
 letters from; III., 336, 346.
 letter to; III., 337.
- Margate; II., 303.
 letters dated from; I., 252-256.
 "refined elegancies of"; I., 253.
- Margerot or Margot; II., 514, 543, 544.
- Margou, Bailli de; II., 581.
- Margraviates; II., 170.
- Mariette, Monsieur; I., 153, 154.
- Mariners or seamen; I., 19.
 pressing of; I., 579, 580.
- Marines, the, commission in; I., 36.
- Maritime Powers; II., 627, 656.
- Mark, the new [of Brandenburg]; III., 232.
- Markham, Mr.; II., 278.
- Marlborough, Dukes of. See Churchill, John, and Spencer, George.
- Marlborough, co. Wilts; I., 98, 261.
- Marmora, sea of; II., 169.
- Marsan, Marquis de; III., 125.
- Marseillais, the; III., 469. arrival of, at Paris; II., 159.
- Marseillaise, the, singing of, forbidden; III., 63.
- Marseilles; II., 431, 481, 576; III., 83, 127, 485, 525.
armée révolutionnaire at; III., 497.
 Commissioners at; II., 487.
 executions at; III., 491, 505.
galériens of; III., 497.
 Jacobins at; III., 84.
 the scum of; III., 497.
- Marshall, Mr.; I., 47.
- Marsh Gibbon or Gibwen, co. Bucks living of; I., 291.
- Marsin, Marshal, (1706); I., 28.
- Martanges, Monsieur; III., 534.
- Martin or Martyn:
 Sam.; I., 108, 120.
 —, letter of; I., 109.
- Madame; I., 46.
- Monsieur; II., 420; III., 483
- Martinez, Mr. de; I., 579.
- Martinique or Martinico; II., 29, 405, 407, 412, 454, 477, 611; III., 14.
 Admiralty Court in; III., 69.
- Marville, prisoners put to death at; II., 563.
- Mary II., Queen of England, at Windsor; I., 8; and see William and Mary.
- Maryland, U.S.A.; III., 525.
- Marylebone, Middlesex, living of; I., 285, 287.
- Marzon, —; I., 527.
- Masham, S., letter of; I., 119.
- Mason:
 J., letters from; II., 315, 316.
 (Irish M.P.); I., 229, 230.
 messenger; II., 302, 315, 326.
- Masserano, Madame; I., 148.
- Masserin, Captain; II., 442.
- Massey (army officer); I., 187.
- Masson, Monsieur; II., 305.
- Masterton, Mr.; III., 400.
- Mastowski, Monsieur; II., 300.
- Matthews, —; I., 489.

- Maty, Dr. ; I., 142.
- Maubeuge or Meaubouge [fortress of] ;
 II., 435, 439, 440, 444, 445, 548, 557, 569, 637.
 repulse of the allies from ; II., 449.
 siege of ; II., 584 ; III., 484.
 —, raising of ; III., 493.
- Maudesley, Ensign ; I., 335, 336, 349.
- Maulde, Mons. de ; II., 274, 278–281,
 283, 284, 286–288, 296, 324, 325,
 334, 335, 353, 356, 357, 360 (2),
 377, 378.
 note from ; II., 275.
 secretary of ; II., 279, 353, 357.
- Maurépas, Mons. de ; III., 160.
- Mauritius or Isle de France ; II., 226, 395, 430, 477.
- Maury, Abbé ; I., 609, 610.
- Maxwell :
 Barry, Earl of Farnham ; I., 327,
 412, 466.
 Mr. ; I., 298.
- Mayence. See Mainz.
- Mayo, Viscount. See Bourke, John.
- Mayo ; I., 204, 206.
- Mayor, Mr., of High Wycombe ; I., 271.
- Mayring, Major ; III., 51.
- Meadows, Meadows :
 General ; II., 57, 164, 186, 191–193, 298.
 — ; III., 422.
- Mears, Meares :
 Lieutenant ; I., 605.
 Mr. ; I., 579 ; II., 189.
- Meath, Lord. See Brabazon, Anthony.
- Meath, county ; I., 236, 237.
- Meaux, granary at ; II., 531.
- Mecklenburg ; III., 224.
- Medemblick, in Holland ; III., 426.
- Mederzier, near Juliers, letter dated at ;
 III., 517.
- Mediterranean, the ; I., 585 ; II., 334, 490,
 533, 560, 573 ; III., 233, 295.
 fleet in, or to ; II., 92, 396, 399, 402,
 408, 419, 455, 533 ; III., 93, 141,
 236, 261 (2), 287.
- Medows. See Meadows.
- Meerfeldt (Merfeld) Count and General ;
 III., 91, 319, 324, 332.
- Megent, commissary to the army of the Pyrenees ; II., 569.
- Méhée, one ; III., 161.
- Melford, Lord. See Drummond, John.
- Mello, Mons. de ; II., 414.
- Melville :
 Admiral ; II., 382.
 or Melvil, Mr., of Boston ; III., 356– 358, 360 (2), 368, 369, 371.
- Melville Castle, letters dated at ; I., 518,
 519, 534, 535, 555, 557, 589, 591.
- Memel, timber from ; II., 64.
- Mentz. See Mainz.
- Meppen, in Germany ; III., 24.
- Meraeldt, Count ; II., 505.
- Merci. See Mercy.
- Mercier, character of ; III., 65.
- Mercy or Merci Argenteau, Comte de,
 Imperial minister at Brussels ;
 I., 612 ; II., 62, 63, 72, 84, 114,
 149, 151, 158, 163, 173, 180, 259,
 262, 269, 275, 384, 401, 409, 415,
 421, 469, 473, 474, 476, 497 (3),
 498, 503, 508, 516, 535, 605–607,
 610, 614, 618, 621, 622, 641 ; III., 450, 480, 481.
 letters from ; III., 510, 511.
 letters to ; III., 510, 511, 513.
 mission of, to London ; II., 605, 617, 624, 626.
 —, notes on ; III., 516.
 illness and death of ; II., 625 (2).
 secretary of ; III., 603.
- Merioneth, county of, lieutenancy of ; I., 487, 489.
- Merlin, Monsieur ; II., 153 ; III., 341.
- Merry, Mr., Consul General at Aranjuez ;
 II., 99, 225 (2), 263.
- Mertanges, General Comte de ; II., 425, 468.
- Metchlepatam, merchants of ; I., 14.
 President of the East India Company at. See Tillard, Mr.
- Metge, Peter, Baron of Exchequer ; I., 382.
- Methodists, body of ; I., 150.
- Metternich, Comte de, consultation with ;
 III., 510.
- Metz ; II., 242 ; III., 475.
 garrison of ; II., 110 ; III., 451.
 —, commandant of. See Bonillé,
 Mons. de.
- Meudon ; II., 563, 564, 583.
 Robespierre takes the young King to ;
 II., 576.
 park of artillery at ; 576.
- Meure, Mr., Academy of ; I., 13.
- Meuse, the. See Maas.
- Mew, Dr. Peter, Bishop of Winchester ;
 I., 19.
- Mexico ; III., 266.
- Meyners, Monsieur, Dutch Commissioner ;
 III., 46.
- Mezières, (Meziers) ; III., 475.
- Miami rapids, U.S.A. ; II., 527, 529.
- Michault, Monsieur ; II., 360.
- Michillmachinach, Old ; II., 611.
- Middelburg ; III., 443, 447.
- Middlesex, Lord. See Sackville.
- Middlesex, county of ; I., 117 ; II., 348 ;
 III., 513.
- Middleton :
 [Captain ?] ; II., 98.
 Mrs. ; I., 4.
 Sieur ; II., 236.
 — ; II., 10.
- Miel, Mons. de, Hanoverian minister at Vienna ; II., 618.
- Milan ; II., 125, 471 ; III., 279, 332.
 letters dated at ; II., 111, 553, 566, 574, 578.
- Milanese, the ; II., 631 ; III., 125, 207, 224.
- Milbanke, Admiral, Governor of Newfoundland ; I., 539–550, 552, 554.

- Miles, Augustus William ; I., 282.
 letters from ; III., 434, 462.
 letter to ; III., 435.
- Miles' Club ; I., 273.
- Millford Haven, co. Pembroke, traveller to ; I., 355.
- Militia, the ; II., 336, 344-346, 349, 352 (2), 353, 382, 423, 500-502.
 Act or Bill ; III., 143-145.
 calling out of ; I., 593 ; II., 447, 453.
 the supplemental ; III., 400.
- Miller, Thomas, President of the Court of Session, Scotland, death of ; I., 524.
- Millfield House, letter dated at ; III., 145.
- Millot, Commissary ; II., 576, 580, 583, 586.
- Milton :
 John, quotations from ; I., 145, 159.
 Lady (1768) ; I., 158.
 Lord, office of ; III., 13.
- Milton, co. Northampton, letter dated at ; II., 630.
- Minden ; III., 233, 235, 238.
 letter dated at ; III., 233.
- Minerva, allusion to ; I., 143.
- Ministry, the ; passim.
 (in 1720), Prince of Wales' advances to ; I., 64.
 Lord Shelburne's, fall of ; I., 191-197.
 the Coalition. See Coalition ; and see Government.
 never interferes in the affairs of Hanover ; III., 403.
- Minshull, Mr., Treasurer for co. Bucks ; I., 250.
- Mint, the ; I., 302 ; II., 234.
- Minx, Monsieur, surgeon ; III., 108.
- Mirabeau, Comte de ; I., 609, 610 ; II., 276.
 assassin employed by ; II., 633.
 secretary to ; II., 603 ; III., 481.
- Miran, Marquis de ; III., 1, 5, 25, 31.
- Miranda ; II., 310, 459.
- Mirepoix :
 Mons. de ; I., 140.
 Madame de ; I., 147, 151, 153.
- Misanthrope*, le, quotation from ; II., 181.
- Misenus, cape, Italy ; II., 19.
- Missenden, co. Bucks ; I., 270, 282, 285, 538, 539.
- Mississippi, the ; II., 254.
 Company ; I., 65.
- Mitford, John, afterwards Sir John, Solicitor-General ; III., 533.
 Bill of, in favour of Roman Catholics ; See Roman Catholics.
- Modena, House of ; III., 396.
- Moellendorff. See Möllendorff.
- Moerdyc, the, defence of ; II., 464.
- Mogul, the Great ; I., 36.
 Bahader Shah, formerly Shah Aulm, (q. v.) ; I., 45.
 Court of ; I., 3.
- Moguls, history of ; I., 263.
- Mohun [Elizabeth], Lady ; I., 62, 69, 88.
- Moir, Earl of. See Rawdon, Francis.
- Mola di Gaeta, alias Formiæ, in Italy ; II., 8.
- Moldavia ; II., 102, 127.
- Möllendorff, Moellendorff, Mollendorff, Count de, Prussian General and Marshal ; II., 82, 182, 264, 491, 493-496, 500, 535, 543, 565, 577, 591, 592, 603, 604, 606, 636, 637, 656 ; III., 27, 230, 232, 520, 536.
 army of ; II., 536, 600, 628.
 aides-de-camp of ; II., 603.
- Mollesoi, — ; II., 607.
- Molleson, William, letter from ; III., 530.
- Molly (servant of Robert Pitt ?) ; I., 78.
- Molucca Islands. See Malaccas, the.
- Momoro, President du Club des Cordeliers ; II., 550.
- Mompesson, Mr. ; I., 8, 13, 16, 17, 34.
- Monaghan county ; I., 166 ; III., 388.
 militia ; III., 385, 387, 389.
- Moubret, Monsieur ; II., 83.
- Monciel, Monsieur de ; III., 97, 477, 485, 486.
 letter from ; III., 487.
- Monck, George, allusion to ; III., 532.
- Monckton—Arundel, Robert, Lord Galway ; II., 274.
 servants of ; II., 275.
- Moncontour, royalist chiefs at ; III., 538, 539.
- Monet, an usher ; II., 571.
- Money, General ; III., 467, 469.
 letters from ; III., 467-470.
 sister of ; III., 469.
- Mongaiillard. See Montgaiillard.
- Monk, Mr. ; I., 261.
- Monneront, Monsienn ; III., 136, 148.
- Monro, Munro :
 Capt. George ; II., 302 (2), 315 ; III., 285.
 —, letters from ; III., 286, 472.
 —, children of ; III., 286.
 George, junr., his eldest son ; III., 286.
- Mons ; II., 390, 391, 449 ; III., 449.
 the Emperor's garrison at ; II., 108.
 French Royal family reported to be at ; II., 120. defeat of the Austrians at ; II., 287.
- Monsey, Dr. ; I., 140.
- Monsieur. See Provence, Comte de, and Artois, Comte de.
- Montagu, Montague, Mountague :
 Charles, Lord Halifax ; I., 33.
 Charles ; I., 114, 122-126.
 —, letter of ; I., 117.
 Mrs. (Elizabeth) ; I., 141, 158.
 —, letters from ; I., 140-143, 159, 160.
 —, husband of. See Montagu, Mr.
 —, father of ; I., 140.
 —, nephew of ; I., 159.
 George Brudenel, Duke of Montagu ; I., 526.
- Sir James ; I., 62.
- John, 4th Earl of Sandwich ; I., 148, 149 ; II., 186, 237, 369.
- Mary, Duchess of Montague ; I. 99.

- Montagu, Montague, Mountague—cont.
 William, 2nd Duke of Manchester;
 I., 103.
 Mr.; I., 108.
 Mr.; I., 140, 144.
 Montalt; I., 406.
 Montauban, Calvinist president of; III., 494. massacre of Catholics at; III., 494.
 Mont Brison, in France; III., 131. prison of; II., 584.
 Mont Cenis; II., 4.
 Monté, Mons. de; III., 108.
 sister of; III., 108.
 Montebello, negotiations at; III., 384.
 Monte Nuovo, Italy; II., 19.
 Montesquien, Montesquieu:
 General; III., 473.
 Mons. de; II., 195, 203, 206, 208,
 212, 217.
 Montgaillard, Mongaillard, Monsieur de;
 III., 292.
 house of; III., 64.
 Montgometry:
 Archibald, Earl of Eglinton; I., 360.
 James, Chief Baron of Exchequer,
 Scotland; I., 586.
 Major; II., 42, 44, 83, 84, 186.
 Sir W., death of; I., 395.
 (of Cavan); I., 395.
 (of Donegal); I., 395, 404.
 Montiago, in France; III., 117.
 Montlosier, Monsieur; III., 484, 533.
 Montmedi or Montmedy; II., 115-117,
 122; III., 448, 450, 475.
 Montmelian [? Montmeliart] in Savoy;
 III., 473.
 Montmorency, Mons. Mathieu de; II., 242.
 Montmorin, Comte de; I., 278, 483; II.,
 83, 108, 131, 176, 186, 204; III., 409, 410, 414, 424, 426-428, 430-434, 436, 440, 441.
 letter from; III., 436.
 letter to; II., 152.
 Montmorins, the; II., 314.
 Montpensier, Duc de, son of the Duke of Orleans; II., 462; III., 78.
 Montreal, in Canada; II., 254.
 Montreuil; II., 545.
 Montrevault, magazine of arms at; II., 527.
 Montrose, Duke of. See Graham, James.
 Moore:
 Charles, 6th Earl of Drogheda; I., 177, 180, 210, 314, 420, 427, 571, 572.
 —, as Lord Justice; I., 480 (2).
 —, to be made a marquis; II., 55, 83.
 —, wife of; I., 210.
 —, family of; I., 477.
 Charles, Lord, his son; I., 314, 571.
 Dr.; II., 315.
 Francis; II., 128.
 —, letter from; II., 153.
 Moore—cont.
 Dr. John, Archbishop of Canterbury;
 II., 225, 228, 230-233, 235; III., 91.
 Major; I., 272, 275, 357, 360.
 —, sons of; I., 275.
 Mr., of the East India Company;
 I., 30, 37, 40.
 Mr., of Cornwall, death of; I., 131,
 132.
 Mr., at the Hague; II., 278.
 —; I., 299.
 Moorhouse, —, killed in India; II., 186.
 Moors, the; I., 42.
 ships of; I., 43.
 Moravia, troops on the frontiers of; II., 48.
 Moray, Earl of. See Stuart.
 Morbihan; II., 527; III., 537, 540, 541.
 Mordaunt, Charles, 3rd Earl of Peterborough; I., 26.
 More, Hannah, letters of; I., 160, 162.
 Morea, the, corn from; II., 573.
 Moreau, French General on the Rhine;
 III., 257, 258, 319.
 Morellet, Abbé, mémoire by; III., 439.
 Moreton, Mr.; I., 108, 122.
 Morgan:
 J., book compiled by; II., 419.
 Major-General; II., 417, 419.
 Morillon, letter dated at; III., 513.
 Morley, a messenger; II., 301, 309.
 Mornington, Earl of. See Wellesley,
 Richard.
 Morpeth, Lord; III., 336.
 Morque, [? Mourgues], Monsieur; II., 355, 356.
 brother of; II., 355.
 Morres, Hervy Redmond, Viscount
 Mountmorres; I., 413.
 Morres Lodge; I., 451, 453.
 Morris:
 the Hon. Robert (Gouverneur); II., 37, 197; III., 226, 238.
 —, as minister from the United States to Paris; II., 480, 510, 537, 543, 580.
 —, introduced to the Comité de Salut Public; II., 526, 527.
 —, leaves France; III., 78.
 —, arrival of, in England; III., 87.
 —, letters from; II., 197, 228;
 III., 563.
 —, —, anonymous; III., 222,
 224, 230, 258, 266.
 Sir William; I., 132.
 Morshead, Sir John; II., 620; III., 77, 90.
 Mortagne; II., 544, 577.
 Mortimart, regiment of; III., 250.
 Morton, Earl of. See Douglas, George.
 Morveaux; II., 545.
 Moscow, the Russian court goes to; III., 292, 298.
 Moselle, the; II., 536, 614.
 troops on or near; II., 491, 636,
 637; III., 518, 520.
 Mosquito shore, the, settlers on; I., 559,
 571-577, 582 (2).

Mouchy :

Maréchal de ; III., 512.

Maréchale de ; III., 512.

Moulins ; II., 532, 539.

Mounier, Mons. de, English agent in Switzerland ; II., 427, 436, 449, 456, 503, 596, 638, 649, 652 ; III., 6, 486, 488, 512.

letter from ; III., 513.

Mountague. See Montagu.

Mounterkenney, co. Leitrim ; I., 231.

Mountmorres, Viscount. See Morres, Hervey Redmond.

Mounthorris, Lord. See Annesley, Arthur.

Moustier, Comte de ; III., 98, 99, 162, 166, 363.

Mudge, Mr. ; II., 511.

Muiden, in Holland ; III., 426.

Muir, — ; III., 374.

Mulgrave, Lord. See Phipps.

Mulheim ; III., 133, 198.

letters dated at ; II., 21, 70, 95, 97, 129, 519.

Mull ; III., 78.

Muller, Baron de ; III., 208, 263, 273.

letter to ; III., 263.

Munich ; II., 118, 525 ; III., 257.

ministers or envoys at ; II., 189, 206, 208.

Munro. See Monro.

Munster, Earl of. See William Henry, Prince.

Munster, in Germany ; III., 24.

Munsterland ; III., 194.

Muraglia or Muraggia, M., Turkish minister ; II., 510, 511.

Murcia, province of, in Spain ; II., 257.

Murray :

Augusta [morganatic wife of the Duke of Sussex] ; II., 504.

Commodore ; II., 370.

David, Viscount Stormont and (in 1793) 2nd Earl of Mansfield ; I., 210, 387, 474 (2), 590 ; II., 643, 644 ; III., 31.

—, letter from ; II., 603.

—, as Lord President of the Council ; III., 35.

General ; I., 304.

Sir James ; II., 295, 310, 314, 319, 363 (2), 371, 389, 390, 409–411, 431, 435, 439, 442, 448, 475, 491.

—, letter to ; II., 313.

John, Duke of Athole ; I., 490, 589, 604 ; II., 146.

Sir John ; II., 433.

Mr. (at Stowe) ; II., 420.

William, Baron, and (in 1776) Earl of Mansfield, Lord Chief Justice of King's Bench ; I., 166, 168, 171, 172, 182, 250, 572, 574.

—, letter from ; I., 139.

—, resignation of ; I., 276, 277.

Muskerry, Lord. See Deane, Robert Tilson.

Muswell Hill, letter dated at ; III., 72.

Myers, Colonel ; III., 134.

regiment of ; III., 134.

Mysore country ; II., 190.

N.

Naarden ; III., 426.

Naas ; III., 390.

Nagel, Nagell, Baron A. W. C. de ; I., 590 ; II., 1, 78, 160, 222, 282, 325, 328, 364, 467, 489 ; III., 47, 182, 293, 423.

letter from ; III., 17.

Namur ; II., 503, 547, 548 ; III., 513.

Namurais, le ; II., 547.

Nance, James, J. P. ; I., 131.

Nancy ; III., 84, 435.

Nantes ; II., 429, 452, 530, 532, 544, 563, 577, 581, 584 ; III., 83, 105–124, 539 (2).

armée révolutionnaire at ; III., 497.

chateau de ; III., 116.

Comité de Surveillance at ; III., 106.

executions at ; III., 505.

le Cours at ; III., 120.

Les Capucins at ; III., 120.

Maison Babu at ; III., 110, 119.

Municipality of ; III., 106.

pont Rousseau at ; III., 105, 119.

porte de Paris at ; III., 121.

Nantiat, Baron de ; III., 363.

account of a mission to the Count of Charette, by ; III., 105–124.

Nanticoke, in Maryland ; III., 525.

Naples ; II., 5, 7–10, 19, 119, 330, 602 ; III., 94, 257, 261, 287, 297, 357.

Bay of ; II., 20.

King of ; II., 73 ; III., 297.

—, army of ; III., 297.

letters dated at ; II., 3, 17, 32.

Queen of ; III., 451.

Virgil's tomb at ; II., 9.

Napoleon. See Buonaparte.

Narbonne, Mons. de ; II., 242, 305, 358.

aide-de-camp of ; III., 471.

Narva, in Russia ; II., 80.

Nassau :

Colonel ; I., 55.

Henry de, Earl of Grantham ; I. 62.

Prince of ; I., 156 ; II., 103, 194, 431, 491, 493, 495, 505.

Weilburg, Prince of ; II., 283.

—, his Chambellan ; II., 283.

National Debt, the ; III., 383.

Commissioners of ; III., 382.

Nauendorft, General ; III., 519.

Navarre, army of ; II., 587.

College, emeritus Professor of ; II., 481.

Navigation Act or Laws, alluded to ; I., 179, 247, 254.

Navy or the navy :

- augmenting of; II., 43.
- Board; I., 302, 342.
- Captains; I., 299, 300.
- Commissioners; I., 299.
- department of; III., 168.
- desertion from; III., 74.
- Office Accounts, alluded to; I., 414.
- , certificates of, alluded to; I., 297.
- officers, suggestions concerning; I., 324.
- Pay bill. See Seamen, families of, Bill for.
- Pay Office, clerks of; III., 401.
- pressing for; II., 423.
- recruiting for; I., 163.
- ships of, to be lent, if needed, to Russia; III., 75.

Neal, —; I., 117.

Neapolitan :

- Administration; III., 287.
  - minister; II., 317 (2).
  - peace, the; III., 215, 280, 283.
  - troops; II., 449; III., 257.
- Neapolitans; II., 429; III., 283.
- Neave and Willett, Messrs.; II., 409.
- Neckar, the river; II., 547; III., 139.
- Necker, Monsieur, recall of; I., 353.
- dismissal of; I., 483, 485.
  - bust of; III., 497.
  - daughter of. See Stael, Madame de.

Needham, —; III., 431.

Negapatnam; I., 281, 518, 590, 591, 606; II., 32.

proposed cession of, to the Dutch; II., 508 (2); III., 348, 421, 441, 443, 447.

Negro slaves; I., 524.

Nellakunttee (Hindoo); I., 2.

Nelson :

- Captain Horatio; III., 126-128.
- , ships under; III., 127.
- Colonel; I., 243.

Nepean, Evan; I., 353, 355, 394, 400, 442, 461, 473, 482, 540, 568, 576; II., 11, 29, 34, 35, 40, 56, 190, 193, 215, 303, 306, 323, 407, 438, 481, 508, 607; III., 375.

Nero, Collet d'Herbois compared to; III., 494.

Nesbitt and Stewart, Messrs., bankers; II., 10, 32.

Nesselrode, Count; II., 59, 74.

Netagne, men of, join the army of La Vendée; II., 463.

Netherlands or Low Countries, the; II., 1, 46, 49, 62, 63, 72, 117, 151, 163, 171, 174, 177, 336, 343, 371, 429, 482, 558, 630, 635; III., 263, 487, 509, 516; and see Flanders.

and Austria. See Austria.

the French in; I., 310; II., 177, 255, 387, 391, 468; III., 73, 232, 378, 490.

troops of the Allies in; II., 60, 107; III., 517, 518, 547, 625.

Netherlands, the—cont.

English agent in; II., 83.

inauguration of the Emperor in; II., 130.

revenues of, offered as security; II., 626.

proposed restoration of, to Austria; II., 627; III., 241, 258, 263, 279 (2), 282.

suppression of the clergy in; III., 263, 264.

Governor-General of; III., 264.

the Austrian, or Austrian Flanders; I., 357, 612; II., 171, 177 (2), 180, 186, 217 (2), 252, 273, 329, 335, 350, 386, 391, 548, 626-630, 635; III., 73, 210, 227-229.

—, government of; II., 49, 80, 86, 145, 151, 180, 250, 251, 338, 481, 482.

the French; II., 350; III., 414.

the Spanish; I., 27.

Neufchateau, François; III., 371.

Neufchatel, banker at; II., 562.

county of; II., 169.

Supreme Council of; II., 562.

Neusvinger, General; II., 392.

Nevers, waters of; I., 137.

Neville :

Richard; I., 203, 209, 265, 303, 349.

—; II., 179.

Newberry's Mappe-monde; I., 572.

Newbigging, James; I., 535.

Newborough, Lord and Lady. See Wynne.

Newcastle-on-Tyne; I., 47.

"aldermanesses" of; I., 140.

letters dated; I., 140-143.

mayor and corporation of; I., 141, 144.

sheriff of; I., 144.

Newcastle, Duke of. See Pelham Holles and Pelham Clinton.

New England; I., 276.

Newenham, Sir Edward; I., 516.

Newfoundland; I., 540-555, 560; II., 56; III., 379.

fisheries; I., 549, 553, 554.

Governor of. See Milbanke, Admiral.

Newhaven; II., 394.

Newmarket, co. Cambridge; I., 268.

races at, alluded to; I., 155.

Newnham, co. Oxford; I., 118.

Newport, Simon; I., 225.

Newport :

[co. Devon?], estates at; I., 132.

(Pagnell, co. Bucks); I., 252, 270, 503; II., 654, 656.

(Rhode Island), insult offered to the British flag at; III., 528.

Newry, in Ireland; I., 230.

New South Wales, convicts to be sent to; I., 483, 543.

troops in; 543.

Newspapers; I., 200; II., 284, 590.

the London; I., 193, 426, 458; II., 337; III., 385.

Newspapers—cont.

- named :
Buckinghamshire Herald ; II., 337.
Dayley Courant ; I., 54.
Dublin Evening Post ; I., 197, 208.
Freeman's Journal ; I., 409, 428.
Gazette ; I., 197, 265, 491, 611 ; II., 222, 246, 349, 395, 424, 483 ; III., 96, 267.
—, writer in ; I., 195.
—, Dublin ; I., 293.
—, Leyden. See Leyden.
Hibernian ; I., 406.
London Chronicle ; II., 19.
Morning Herald ; I., 260, 432.
— Post ; I., 608.
Northern Star ; III., 385-387.
—, editor of ; III., 387.
Public Advertizer ; I., 432.
Star ; II., 284.
Times ; III., 255.
True Briton ; III., 317.
—, forgery and libel in ; III., 146.
—, printer of ; III., 146.
Union Star ; III., 389.
French. See French Newspapers.
Newtown, estate of ; I., 274 (?), 276.
New York ; I., 177, 276 ; II., 145, 160 ; III., 34, 523, 524, 528, 529.
English and German troops at ; I., 184.
French war ships at ; II., 444 ; III., 524.
Governor of ; III., 529.
letter dated at ; II., 228.
Lieut.-Governor of ; II., 578.
New York State ; III., 529.
Niagara ; II., 611 ; III., 529.
Nice ; II., 412, 419, 528, 576, 631 ; III., 125, 241, 491.
army of ; II., 538.
French commissioners at ; II., 472, 581.
comté de ; III., 124.
Nicholas, John ; I., 19.
Nicholls, Mr. ; I., 37.
Nicholson, Margaret ; I., 540.
Nienberg ; III., 233.
post office at ; III., 233 (2).
Nieuport ; II., 455, 547, 548.
siege of ; II., 452.
Nieuwe-Schantz or Nieuwe Schans, the, in Holland ; III., 212, 253. garrison at ; III., 164.
Nile, the ; I., 143.
Nimeguen ; I., 279 ; III., 410-413, 416, 520. bridge at ; III., 519.
peace of ; III., 533.
Nisita, island of ; II., 19.
Nivelles : fight near ; II., 592, 593.
letter dated at ; II., 592.
Nivernois, Duc de ; I., 137, 146, 147, 149, 151, 157.
Nizam, the ; I., 557.
court of ; II., 285.
Nizapatnam [Nizampatam] ; II., 415.
Noailles, Louis, Vicomte de ; II., 305, 358, 408.
—, letters from ; III., 479, 480.
—, letter to ; III., 479.
Marquis de ; II., 176, 305, 358, 408.
Noel :
Abbé ; II., 331, 362, 457.
Thomas, Viscount Wentworth ; I., 536.
— ; III., 222, 347-352.
Noirmoutier, Isle de ; II., 455, 464, 468, 469 (2) ; III., 97, 104, 142.
Nokes, John a, and Stokes, John a, imaginary conversation between ; I., 306.
Noleken, Baron, Swedish ambassador ; II., 93, 319.
Nootka :
furs ; II., 287, 289 (2), 299.
Sound ; I., 579 (2), 611.
—, business of ; II., 3, 14, 15, 20, 30, 204, 268, 275, 297, 307, 368.
—, Bill concerning ; II., 27.
Spanish officer at ; II., 511.
Norfolk, Duke of. See Howard, Charles.
Norfolk, resident in ; II., 150.
Norfolk Court ; I., 101.
Normands, in la Vendée ; II., 563.
Normandy ; II., 315, 510, 521, 523 ; III., 2, 309, 482.
Chouans in ; III., 115.
Corps législatif of ; III., 308. emigrants from ; II., 402. reported rising in ; II., 302.
royalists in ; III., 166, 303, 306, 308, 309. troops in ; II., 491, 598 ; III., 161, 303.
North :
Frank ; II., 165.
Frederick, Lord North ; I., 188, 192, 210, 247, 261, 271 ; II., 29 ; III., 545.
—, coalition of, with Fox ; I., 195, 197, 198, 206, 207 ; II., 598.
—, suggested junction of, with Lord Shelburne ; I., 195-197.
—, goes to the King ; I., 200.
—, the King implacable towards ; I., 207.
—, as Secretary of State ; I., 210, 212 (2), 214, 217, 222, 247.
—, in connexion with the American war ; I., 220, 249.
—, as Earl of Guildford ; II., 294, 296.
Frederick ; III., 2, 5, 12.
George Augustus, Earl of Guildford ; II., 360.
Northampton ; I., 488.
newspaper ; II., 284.
Northampton, county of ; I., 102, 103 ; II., 354.
justices and sheriffs of ; I., 505.
magistrates of ; II., 355.

Northington, Earl of. See Henley, Robert.

North Sea, the; III., 57, 77, 92, 381.

Northumberland, Duke of. See Percy, Hugh.

Northumberland, county of:

ladies of; I., 141.

nobility and gentry of; I., 140.

rebels in; I., 53, 54.

Norton, Fletcher, Baron of Exchequer, Scotland; I., 586.

Norway; I., 43, 49; III., 224.

Norwich, reform association in; II., 268.

Nottingham, Lord. See Finch, Daniel.

Nottingham:

ale; I., 32.

militia; II., 337, 345.

outrages at; II., 327.

Nottingham, county of, association in; I., 54.

Nourse,—; I., 265.

Noyes, in France; I., 484.

Nugent:

Edmund; I., 351, 363, 364.

Capt. Edward; I., 383, 482; II., 611, 613, 647.

Lieut.-Colonel or Colonel George; I., 337, 344, 347, 348, 351, 357, 358, 360, 363, 364, 437, 442, 444, 447, 449, 452, 453, 455-457, 473, 474; II., 344, 422, 441, 446, 450, 453, 465, 469, 482-485, 489, 490, 526, 613, 634, 647, 649; III., 134, 136.

—, as General; III., 387.

—, brothers of. See Nugent, Captain Edward and Edmund.

—, regiment of; II., 501, 526; III., 134.

George Frederick, Lord Delvin; I., 229, 256, 298 (2).

Oliver; I., 335, 336 (?)

—, wife of; I., 335.

Robert, Earl Nugent; I., 174, 177, 186, 203, 207, 259, 275, 277, 330, 357, 360, 361, 472.

—, death of; I., 358.

—, executors of; I., 357, 358, 360.

—, estates of; I., 358 (2).

Thomas, 6th Earl of Westmeath; I., 177.

or Newgent, Mr.; I., 105, 121.

Mrs.; I., 358.

"a poor"; I., 277.

Nugent-Grenville. See Grenville, George (aft. Marquis of Buckingham).

Nugent's pocket dictionary (to be used for a cipher); II., 435.

Nundernik, the, troops in; III., 520.

Nuremberg; I., 82.

Nütt (Nüt), John; II., 607.

letter from; III., 530.

Nyslot, cession of; II., 102.

O.

Oakes, Mr.; I., 89.

Oazy, Mr.; I., 54, 55.

O'Beirne, Abbé; I., 368, 377.

Obourne, Cousin; I., 26, 32.

O'Brien:

Sir Lucius; I., 230, 253.

Murrough, 5th Earl of Inchiquin; I., 177; II., 285.

William, 4th Earl of Inchiquin; I., 92, 108.

Mr. (in 1728); I., 91, 92.

O'Byrne, Captain; II., 165.

Obsent, de, President of the Revolutionary Tribunal; II., 160, 466.

Ocaris, M., Spanish Consul General at Paris; II., 154.

Ochiltree, Lord. See Stuart, Andrew Thomas.

Ockzakow, Ockzelow or Oczakow, fortress of, claimed by Russia; II., 22, 23, 25, 26, 31, 39, 49, 50, 52, 53, 64-66, 77, 79, 91, 92, 111, 122.

Oder, the river; III., 232.

Offenbach; II., 403, 405.

Ogilvy, Ogilvie:

James, 7th Earl of Findlater; I., 570, 597.

Mr.; I., 230, 396, 406.

Ogle:

[George]; I., 166, 168, 169, 174, 225 (2), 253, 254, 259.

and Company, Messrs.; II., 98.

O'Hara, General; II., 295, 444, 446, 447, 449.

capture of; II., 486, 517, 518.

surgeon and servant of; II., 517.

Ohio river, the; II., 611.

Indians upon; II., 611.

Oise, Bourdon de l'; III., 86.

Okehampton, co. Rutland; I., 66.

corporation of; I., 124.

elections at; I., 67-69, 110, 111, 114, 117, 119-127.

letters dated from; I., 113, 115.

O'Kelly, Monsieur; II., 85.

Oldenburgh, Oldenbourg; III., 39, 40, 58.

Oldham, James Oldham; II., 328.

Old Town, Ireland, resident at; I., 303.

Olney, co. Bucks; II., 349.

Olonne, Sables de; II., 455, 468; III., 97, 118.

Ommelanden, the, in Holland; III., 183.

Ompeda, Mons. de; III., 78, 405.

O'Neill, of Shanes Castle; I., 419, 466, 492; II., 20, 27, 37, 42.

Onslow, Sir Richard; I., 52.

to be Speaker of the House of Commons; I., 38.

Ontario, U.S.A., county of; 529.

Lake; II., 611; III., 529.

Oost Friesland; III., 176, 178, 190, 220.

Oppenheim; II., 392.

Opposition, the; passim.

envoys from, to foreign courts; II., 144, 149.

influence of Fox over; II., 344.

alluded to, in the French Comité des Neuf; 458, 473.

and the mutiny in the fleet; III., 324.

Orange:

William Henry, Prince of, Stadtholder of Holland; I., 264, 279, 349; II., 59, 92, 106, 124, 131, 140, 141, 219, 240-243, 252, 269-271, 278, 286-288, 291, 325, 367, 370, 378, 380, 382, 392, 435, 605, 606, 610, 612, 641, 645, 646 (2); III., 6, 23, 153, 164, 172, 182, 189, 224, 228, 251, 409, 411, 415, 418, 432.

—, letters from; II., 272; III., 91.

—, letters to; III., 94, 139.

—, character of; II., 644; III., 188, 440.

—, court of; II., 274.

—, estates, palaces, and property of; III., 94, 156.

—, wife of. See Princess of, below.

—, sons of, or the young princes; II., 286, 380; III., 11, 12; and see Hereditary Prince, and Prince Frederick, below.

—, daughter of. See Brunswick, Princess of.

—, family of; II., 152, 216; and see Orange, House of, below.

—, —, suggested murder of; II., 326.

—, friends of. See Orange, House of, friends of, below.

—, marriage of, alluded to; II., 183, 216 (2).

—, described as a commis of Lord Auckland's; II., 186.

—, puts an end to the negotiations with the Emperor; II., 251, 270.

—, ball given to; II., 277.

—, suggested murder of; II., 326.

—, comes to England; III., 10, 11.

—, George III.'s opinion of; III., 14.

—, proposals or intentions of; III., 17, 22, 91, 94.

—, fortresses of, to be put under the protection of England; III., 26.

—, restoration of, desired; III., 163, 227, 228, 425-429.

—, is a favourite with the people; III., 188.

—, charges brought against; III., 238.

—, indemnification proposed for; III., 242, 373-375, 418.

—, movements of; III., 292, 427.

—, troops going over to; III., 413.

—, as Captain General; III., 418, 425.

Orange, Prince of—cont.

—, deputations to; III., 428.

[William] late Prince of; III., 278.

Wilhelmina, Princess of; I., 279; II., 25, 59, 66, 114, 132, 168, 216, 233, 241, 243 (2), 250, 256, 269, 280, 283, 288, 290 (2), 292, 294, 296, 335, 347, 365, 367; III., 11, 14, 171, 178, 182, 189, 409, 411-413, 415, 418.

—, letters or notes from; II., 130, 217, 268, 335, 366.

—, letter to; III., 139.

—, visits Lord Auckland; II., 286.

—, in England; III., 129 (2), 134, 141.

—, writes to the Duke of Brunswick; III., 403.

—, assurances given by; III., 422.

—, arrest of; III., 424, 435.

—, brother of. See Prussia, King of.

—, family of; II., 217.

the late Princess of [Anne], aunt of George III.; III., 302, 303.

Hereditary Prince of [William Frederick; I., 277, 426, 503; III., 139 (2), 151, 156, 171, 184, 188, 189, 209, 251.

—, marriage of; II., 139, 216; III., 450, 454.

—, wife of. See Prussia, Princess Wilhelmina of.

—, troops under, III., 515.

Prince Frederick of; II., 217, 269, 286, 290 (2), 291; III., 6, 78, 91, 94, 139, 141, 150, 153, 159, 171, 184, 188, 209, 292, 293.

the Princesses of; II., 286; III., 10, 12.

House of; III., 150, 157, 185, 218, 219, 228, 440.

—, party of, or attachment to; II., 650; III., 4, 20, 42, 46, 56, 90, 94, 151, 153, 155-158, 178, 184, 202, 209, 217, 219, 221, 252, 264, 409, 430.

—, restoration of, desired; III., 79, 152, 178, 184, 188, 191, 247, 255, 396.

Orange tree, an, substituted for a tree of liberty; III., 165.

Oranjewoud, in Holland; III., 156.

Orde, Thomas, Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1784-1787); I., 222, 229, 231, 233, 234, 236, 237 (2), 245, 246, 248, 262, 290, 300, 310, 313, 325, 331, 336, 431, 436, 458, 503; III., 546, 547.

letter from, extract from; I., 263.

letter to; I., 262.

in connexion with the Propositions for trade; I., 253, 254.

illness of; I., 261.

promises made by; I., 297, 298.

expenditure of; I., 300, 301.

ordered into custody; I., 305.

Orde, Thomas—cont.
 apartments of, at Carisbrooke Castle; III., 96.
 [Jean Mary], his wife; I., 310.
 Ordnance, Board of; I., 326.
 department of; III., 168.
 Lieut.-General of; I., 206.
 Office; I., 356, 358; III., 270.
 —, complaints of; II., 420.
 —, refuses horses for Buckingham's guns; II., 623.
 O'Reilly, Monsieur; II., 262.
 Orford, Earl of. See Walpole.
 Orford, co. Suffolk; II., 635.
 Orkney, letter from, alluded to; I., 483.
 Orleans:
 Duc de [Philippe Egalité]; II., 311; III., 86, 103, 441.
 —, agents of; III., 494, 497.
 —, character of; III., 481.
 —, son of. See Montpensier, Duc de.
 —, sister-in-law of. See Lamballe, Madame de.
 —, rage of the populace against; II., 462.
 —, assassin employed by; II., 633.
 —, project for placing, upon the throne; III., 136.
 —, troops at the disposition of; III., 497.
 —, execution of; II., 462.
 Duchess of, to be executed; II., 570.
 party of; II., 462; III., 480.
 Orleans, municipality of; II., 590. want of bread at; II., 590.
 trees of liberty cut down at; III., 83.
 Orloff, Prince Alexis; II., 181, 224.
 Orly, commune of; II., 540.
 Orme, Robert, History of India by; I., 263.
 Ormea, taking of; III., 124, 125.
 Ormesson, family of; II., 540.
 Ormond, Duke of. See Butler, James.
 peerage; I., 584.
 title, claimant of. See Butler, John.
 Ormsby, Captain; I., 196.
 Orsova; II., 92 (2), 124.
 Ortugal, Cape; II., 402.
 Osborne:
 Francis Godolphin, Marquis of Carmarthen, Secretary of State (foreign department); I., 257, 258, 267, 282, 324, 353; III., 431, 432, 435, 438, 521.
 —, letters from; III., 408, 427.
 —, letters to; III., 433, 436.
 —, despatches of, alluded to; III., 408, 423, 424, 432, 437.
 — as 5th Duke of Leeds; I., 526, 555 (2), 579; II., 12, 52–54, 156, 162, 187 (2), 220, 258; III., 462.
 — wishes to resign; I., 526.
 —, office of. See Secretary's office.
 —, letter to; II., 34.
 —, resignation of; II., 55, 56 (2), 58, 60.
 —, —, allusions to; II., 155, 159.

Osborne—cont.
 Thomas, 4th Duke of Leeds, death of; I., 526.
 Major; II., 500.
 Osnaburgh, or Osnabruck; II., 640; III., 5, 9, 58, 148.
 bishopric of; III., 94, 454.
 rendezvous at; III., 91, 94, 148.
 Ossory, Bishop of. See Pocock, Richard.
 Ostend; II., 11, 282, 340, 384, 386, 390, 415, 429, 433, 436, 441, 443, 444, 455, 481, 503, 593; III., 511.
 English consul at. See Harward, Mr.
 travellers to; II., 315, 394 (2), 452; III., 510, 511.
 Osterman, Count; II., 121, 141, 362, 374.
 Osterwald, Mr.; II., 387.
 Ostragothia, Duke of; III., 290, 333, 344.
 Oswald, Mr.; II., 309.
 Oswego, on Lake Ontario; II., 611; III., 529, 530.
 Otaheité; II., 382.
 Ottoman Empire. See Turkey.
 Otway, Colonel; I., 63.
 Oudenarde; II., 559.
 Oundle, co. Northampton; II., 354, 355.
 Outkirk, in Friezland; III., 164.
 Overysse, province of; II., 156, 191 (2), 211, 251, 409, 410, 417.
 Oving, co. Bucks; I., 271.
 Oxenden, Henry; I., 108, 118.
 Oxford:
 Bishop of. See Butler, John.
 Earl of. See Harley, Edward.
 Oxford; I., 267; II., 5.
 letter dated at; II., 238.
 newspapers; II., 284.
 William Pitt at; I., 79, 84.
 travellers to or from; I., 215, 263, 553; II., 238.
 University; I., 7, 18.
 —, Brasenose College at; II., 239.
 —, Chancellorship of; II., 300.
 —, prize essay at, alluded to; I., 162.
 Oxford, county of; I., 118.
 Ozinski, Monsieur; I., 613.

P.

Pache, [Jean Nicholas] Mayor of Paris; II., 456, 459–462, 466, 471, 514, 528, 542, 548, 560–562, 571, 575; III., 498, 503, 506, 507.
 Packenham, Captain; I., 298 (2), 352, 389, 466.
 Padbury, co. Bucks, living of; I., 252, 256.
 Padua, letter from; II., 126.

Paget :

Henry Bayley, Earl of Uxbridge ; I., 269, 483 ; II., 212.
Mr. ; II., 132, 212, 215, 216, 226, 255, 641, 653.

Paimbœuf. See Pimbœuf.

Paine or Payne, Thomas ; II., 128, 266, 271, 309, 316, 317, 333, 480.
honours paid to, in France ; III., 472. writings of ; II., 120, 223, 285, 308, 327.
his "Rights of Man" ; II., 83.
—, French translation of ; II., 166.

Pakenham :

Captain ; II., 413.
Edward Michael, Lord Longford ; I., 326, 407, 411, 466.
—, followers of ; I., 466.
Thomas, brother of Lord Longford ; I., 466.

Palatinate, the ; II., 504.

suggested restitution of, to Bavaria ; III., 229. treaty of neutrality for ; III., 139.

Palatine :

Elector ; II., 525 ; III., 516.
—, garrison, government, &c. of, flies from Dusseldorf ; III., 519.
—, palace of ; III., 519.
President ; II., 525. troops ; II., 503, 504.

Palmer, Mr. ; I., 282.

Pamiers, Bishop of ; III., 459 (2), 460.

Pandern, in Holland ; III., 22, 23.

Pandora, allusion to ; I., 158.

Panin, Count ; II., 44 ; III., 371, 372 (2), 401, 404.

Paoli, [Pascal] ; II., 525.

Paper Office. See State Paper Office.

Paphos, allusion to ; I., 149.

Papists, insolence of, complained of ; I., 55.

Paré, Ministre de l'Intérieur ; II., 531, 538, 544.

Paris, passim.

Archbishopric of ; II., 531.
aristocrats in ; I., 608, 609.
army of ; II., 569, 571.
—, the revolutionary ; III., 497.
Assemblies, Conventions and Committees at. See under France.
bulletins from ; II., 456, 462, 466, 471, 480, 486, 510 (2), 514, 517, 518, 526, 528, 529, 537, 541, 546, 548, 553, 555, 560, 563, 567, 570, 574, 579, 582, 585, 588.
chargés d'affaires at ; II., 204, 365.
clubs of ; II., 531, 532, 547, 587 ; III., 506.
— named :
    Cordeliers ; II., 518, 531, 532, 538, 540, 542, 544, 549-551, 560 ; III., 493, 498, 503, 505, 506, 508.
—, chiefs of, arrest of ; II., 541, 550.
—, president of ; II., 550.

Paris clubs—cont.

✓ Enragés ; I., 609 ; II., 131.
Jacobin ; II., 69, 305, 538, 550, 551, 553, 567, 569 ; III., 463, 490, 491, 495.
—, shutting up of, decreed by the Convention ; II., 650.
—, secretary of ; II., 326.
Propagande ; II., 68, 69.
Quatre-vingt-neuf ; I., 609.
comedian from ; II., 140.
Comité Diplomatique of ; II., 112.
— des Medecins in ; II., 537.
— des Recherches in ; II., 140, 141.
Commissary of the Convention in ; II., 543.
Commissioners from Holland to. See Holland. corps diplomatique at ; II., 130.
couriers or messengers to ; III., 437, 438, 477, 482.
democratic papers printing at ; II., 309.
deputies of ; III., 473.
English in ; II., 211.
—, leaving ; II., 302, 303, 305, 309-311, 315, 316.
—, minister at. See Gower, Earl. environs of ; II., 567.
factions in. See France, factions in.
fashions in ; I., 153.
gendarme of ; II., 590.
horse-racing at ; I., 154.
Imperial agent to ; II., 106.
inflammatory placards in ; III., 505. inscription in ; II., 7.
la jeunesse de, description of ; III., 63, 64.
letters dated at ; I., 136, 146-155, 607 ; II., 115, 117, 128, 132, 153, 176, 195, 203, 212, 242, 265, 266, 274, 288, 292 ; III., 262, 268, 269, 278, 279, 286, 431, 433-435, 482, 483, 488 ; and see bulletins from, above. letter addressed to ; II., 181.
markets of, price of provisions in ; II., 539.
Mayor of ; II., 585 ; III., 458 ; and see Pache and Pétion.
Ministère Feuillant, roi de ; II., 288. mob of ; II., 300, 301, 307, 310, 311.
—, hatred of, to the Queen ; III., 480.
Municipal Council of ; III., 506.
Municipality of ; II., 466, 471, 472, 487, 488, 510, 514, 531, 532, 538, 540, 542, 549, 556, 562, 567, 575, 585, 589, 590.
—, pretended petition of, for the King's death ; III., 458.
—, request to, from Madame Elizabeth ; II., 528.
National guard of ; I., 608 ; III., 464.
news or reports from ; II., 112, 238, 346 ; III., 214, 216, 217, 252, 253, 347, 483.

Paris—cont.

- newspapers of; II., 65; III., 323;
and see French newspapers.
- opera at; III., 63.
- parliament at; I., 154.
- patriots at, ambassador for; II., 377.
- people of; passim.
- , cowardice of; II., 532, 550,
551, 564.
- , the two great needs of, "le pain et la Comédie"; III., 63.
- ✓ "Petits Maîtres" in; I., 608.
- ✓ plays and actors in; I., 608.
- , in the hands of la jeunesse; III., 64.
- Peace of, (1783). See Peace.
- police of; I., 608.
- revolution in; passim.
- royalist agents in; II., 462, 463; III., 223, 291, 305.
- royalists in; II., 457, 458, 527, 529,
530, 553; and passim.
- Scotch College in; III., 65.
- Secretary of the English Embassy at;
II., 265, 268.
- sections of; III., 505, 506, 532.
- society in; I., 608; III., 197.
- Spanish consul general at; II., 154.
- theatres, riots in; I., 608.
- , Comédie Française, called
Théâtre de la Nation, I., 608.
- travellers to or from; I., 84, 105,
136, 137, 490, 595, 607; II., 4,
154, 163, 216, 331, 351 (2), 355;
III., 7, 62, 82, 105, 114, 222, 250,
255, 261, 305, 351, 356, 357, 429–
431.
- Trésor National* of; II., 540.
- Tribunaux* of; III., 66.
- troops in or near; I., 484; III., 67;
and see army of, above.
- women of, orator of; III., 498.
- workmen of; II., 539.
- works round; III., 473.
- events in; passim.
- departure of the Duke of Ormond
from; I., 53.
- W. W. Grenville going to; I., 282.
- violence of the mob in; I., 484.
- deputation from the States General
to; I., 485.
- state of; I., 608; II., 302, 582, 583;
III., 335.
- , reports on; II., 531, 538, 544;
III., 62–67.
- escape of the royal family from. See under France.
- behaviour of the people of, on return of the King and Queen; II., 115.
- failure of a commercial house at; II., 283.
- tranquillity at; II., 292.
- advance of the allied armies towards;
II., 301, 525.
- massacres and executions in; II., 301, 305, 307, 309, 312, 389, 394,
589–591; and see massacres of September, below.

Paris—cont.

- insurrection (of August 10, 1792)
in; II., 301, 309, 312; III., 471, 497.
- English (private) agent sent to; II., 302.
- English embassy to leave; II., 303,
361; and see Gower, Lord.
- massacres (of September, 1792) in;
II., 310, 311, 314, 318; III., 471,
497, 498.
- does not wish for war; II., 375.
- insurrection in (June, 1793); II., 397
(2).
- association of the people of, in 1780,
mentioned; II., 458.
- demand for money from the rich;
citizens of; II., 459, 461.
- scarcity of provisions in; II., 463,
531, 539, 541, 544, 564, 575, 583.
- war against religion in; II., 487.
- is the paladium of liberty; II., 521.
- popular orators in; II., 529.
- measures taken to prevent news from the Departments being known in;
II., 532.
- prisoners in, proposed slaughter of;
II., 532, 538, 568, 570.
- supply of provisions for; II., 540,
562, 568.
- prisoners in, distribution of the property of; II., 540.
- fermentation in; II., 563, 567.
- fugitives and wounded arriving in;
II., 567.
- people of, desire to pillage; II., 576.
- speech of Pitt's printed in, "chez Garnier et Baudoin"; II., 585.
- spread of news in; II., 586.
- , placard forbidding; II., 589.
- forced loan in; II., 590.
- announcement of victories not believed in; II., 590.
- scenes of horror in; II., 591.
- prevailing party at, overture from,
to England; II., 638.
- confusion, tumults, or alarm in; III., 51, 57, 62, 473, 483.
- negotiations at; III., 60, 164.
- famine and misery in; III., 62, 63,
82, 482.
- religious ceremonies in; III., 66, 84,
85.
- public opinion in; III., 83, 282.
- crisis in; III., 140.
- the Marseillais at; III., 159.
- wearing of the national cockade in;
III., 262.
- elections in; III., 291.
- "struggle" in; III., 342, 343, 345.
- armed force surrounding; III., 346.
- "last great event" at; III., 373 (2).
- defence of; III., 473.
- dominated by the armée révolutionnaire; III., 497.
- buildings, streets, &c., in:
Abbaye, prison of; II., 510.
- , prisoner at; II., 307.

Paris, buildings, &c. in—cont.

- Barrière du Trône, executions at; II., 589.
- Barrière St. Martin; III., 449.
- rue Bergère; II., 459.
- Bois de Boulogne; III., 63.
- Bonnes Nouvelles, section of; II., 567.
- Boulevards; I., 608.
- Bureau de l'Agence de Guerre; III., 67.
- Café de Chartre; III., 63.
- Café de Foy; II., 583.
- Champ de Mars, executions at; II., 466.
- Conciergerie, prison of; II., 412, 462.
- , prisoners sent to; II., 550.
- , Madame Elizabeth at; II., 571.
- Cours de la reine; I., 147.
- Faubourgs, clubs of; II., 457.
- Faubourg St. Antoine, people of; II., 633.
- rue Grange Battelière; II., 531.
- la Halle; II., 466, 544, 568; III., 63.
- les Halles; II., 309.
- hospitals; II., 567.
- Hotel de Brancas; I., 150.
- de la Force; II., 570.
- de la Guerre; II., 531; III., 503.
- de Marat; III., 64.
- , de Maurepas; I., 150.
- , des Monnaies or Monnoyes; II., 153, 473.
- de Richelieu; I., 150.
- de Soubise; I., 150.
- de Ville; II., 585.
- les Invalides, Governor of; II., 103.
- , salle du Conseil des; II., 526.
- , meeting of the Comité de Salut Public at; II., 542, 560.
- Isle d'Adam, prisoners at; II., 459.
- Louvre, the old, treasure in the cellars of; II., 583.
- , as the Palais National; II., 579, 582.
- Luxembourg, palace of the; I., 146, 148 (2), 150 (2), 151, 153, 154; III., 448.
- Magasin Nationale; III., 63.
- Maison d'Arrêt; III., 67.
- Marseilles, section of; III., 493.
- Palais Royal; I., 608; II., 311, 462, 544, 633; III., 63.
- , Cafés of; II., 529.
- , Clubs of; II., 457.
- Panthéon; III., 64.
- Petit Carrousel; III., 449.
- Pont Neuf, statue of Henri IV. on; I., 153.

Paris, buildings, &c. in—cont.

- prisons; II., 518; and see Abbaye, Conciergerie and Temple.
- la Salle, inspectors of; II., 550.
- the Temple; I., 151, 153; II., 310, 311; III., 504.
- , gaoler of, and his family; II., 571.
- , guard at; II., 528, 556.
- , prisoners in, proposed massacre of; II., 538, 550, 551, 570.
- , the royal family at; II., 311, 529, 554, 571; III., 481-483.
- , the young King brought back to; II., 577, 582.
- , la vieille rue du; II., 590.
- Temple of Reason; III., 66.
- Tuilleries (Thuileries); II., 294; III., 449, 497.
- , the court at; I., 610.
- , royal prisoners at; II., 115.
- , attack upon; II., 301; 463, 471, 472.
- , burning of; III., 460.
- , the royal family fly from; III., 448, 449.
- , avenues of; III., 63.

Parker:

- George, Lord Parker; I., 536.
- John, Lord Boringdon; II., 278, 367.
- Sir Peter; I., 351; II., 464.
- Thomas, Viscount Parker, Lord Chancellor (in 1720); I., 65.
- Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield; I., 536.

Park Gate, co. Chester; I., 421, 481 (2).
Parliament; passim.

Acts of or Bills in:

- Alien; II., 609; III., 479.
- Civil List; III., 193.
- Commutation; II., 261.
- Donation; I., 266.
- for grant to the Duke of Marlborough; I., 28.
- Election; I., 351.
- Exchequer Offices, regulation of; I., 213.
- Hovering; I., 351.
- for Ireland; I., 166-212, 428; III., 546-547.
- , suggested title of; I., 179.
- Militia. See Militia.
- Money; I., 563, 564.
- Navigation; II., 488.
- [Occasional] Conformity; I., 10.
- Parliamentary Committees, regulation of; I., 248.
- Post Office; I., 204.
- Præmunire; I., 169.
- Prohibitory (concerning foreign ships); I., 193.
- Reform; I., 250.
- Reform of Trials; II., 91.
- Regency; I., 135.
- (of 1765); I., 371.

Parliament, Acts of or Bills in—cont.

- Regency (of 1788); I, 380, 382, 383, 390-419, 466.
- Roman Catholic toleration. See Roman Catholics.
- [Royal] Marriage; II., 199.
- settling the incomes of the Princesses; III., 454.
- concerning sheriffs; I., 17.
- Sinking Fund; I., 261.
- Slave Trade; I., 342.
- Tobacco; I., 487.
- Triennial Act suspension; I., 58.
- concerning women convicted of treason; I., 586 (2).
- Committees of; I., 382; II., 89.
- Medical; I., 391.
- Precedent; I., 391.
- Secret; II., 362.
- for Supply; I., 301.
- Members of, passim.
- the Opposition in; I., 434, 590.
- , Irish connexion with; I., 443.
- , the old, Lord Shelburne's attitude towards; I., 196.
- Opposition benches, the; II., 272.
- in relation to Ireland; III., 541, 547, 548; and see under Acts or Bills above.

Parliament:

- of Queen Anne:
  - , and the East India Company; I., 9, 10.
  - , expected dissolution of; I., 10.
  - , supplies voted by; I., 28.
  - , rising of; I., 30.
  - , meeting of; I., 38.
  - , intentions of; I., 34.
  - , Governor Pitt wishes to enter; I., 46.
- of George I.:
  - , called the Rump; I., 51.
  - , King's speech to, mentioned; I., 51.
  - , meetings of; I., 56, 90.
  - , "is irrecoverable"; I., 63.
  - , elections and candidates for; I., 64-68.
  - , declaration of the Pretender brought to; I., 69.
  - , supplies voted by; I., 75.
- of George II.:
  - , elections and candidates for; I., 107-128.
  - , dissolution of; I., 110, 112.
  - , returns of newly elected members to; I., 120.
  - , adjournment of; I., 145.
  - , meeting of, I., 157, 176.
  - , matters to be brought before; I., 185, 187.
- of George III.:
  - (1784) elections and candidates for; I., 227, 229.
  - , meeting of; I., 232, 243 (2).
  - , and Ireland; I., 232.
  - (1786) elections and candidates for; I., 270, 272.

Parliament of George III.—cont.

- (1787), meeting of; I., 285, 287, 294.
- (1788), meeting of; I., 296.
- , debates in; I., 309.
- , seat in, tenable with offices in Ireland; I., 327.
- , land bought to secure votes in; I., 355.
- , in relation to the King's illness and the regency; I., 364, 369-392.
- , and Ireland; 391.
- (1789), and the King's illness; I., 393-419.
- , King's speeches to, mentioned; I., 428, 488.
- , prorogation of; I., 488 (2), 489, 541.
- , —, Lords Commissioners for; I., 489.
- , and the crown revenues; I., 508, 509.
- (1790), meeting of; I., 559, 592, 593.
- , Irishmen in; I., 561.
- , in relation to Florida; I., 574.
- , dissolution of; 578.
- , members of, admitted to the 1789 Club in Paris; I., 609.
- (1791), meeting of; II., 11, 234.
- , end of session of; II., 95.
- , and the Duke of York's marriage; II., 198, 202 (2); III., 453, 454.
- (1792), meeting of; II., 352, 359, 388.
- , reform of, proposed; II., 339, 401.
- , King's speech to, mentioned; II., 350, 353.
- , members of, privileges of; II., 354, 355.
- (1794), opening of; II., 495.
- , debates in; II., 500.
- , King's speech to, mentioned; II., 514.
- , to be further prorogued; II., 646, 647.
- , and the colonies; III., 533.
- (1795), and the war; III., 30.
- , meeting of; III., 148.
- (1796), dissolution of; III., 206.
- , proposed meeting of; III., 214.
- , subjects to be laid before; III., 256, 257.
- , King's speech to, mentioned; III., 266.
- (1797), announcement of the Princess Royal's marriage to; III., 304, 315, 316.
- , matters to be laid before; III., 308.
- , "tame state of mind" of; III., 327.
- , and Ireland; III., 386, 395, 399.
- House of Lords, or the Upper House; I., 171, 283, 348, 474, 572; II., 89, 165, 272, 513; III., 11, 146, 317.
- at variance with the Commons; I., 10 (2).
- Conformity bill thrown out in; I., 19.
- bills in; I., 58; III., 143.

Parliament, House of Lords—cont.

opposition in, to Pitt's Slave Trade bill; I., 342.

letters dated at; I., 541, 582.

vote concerning the Navy in; II., 42.

discussion on the Militia in; II., 345.

moving of the Address in; II., 234, 495, 496; III., 259.

addresses to be presented by; III., 49.

Committee of; III., 143.

judicature claimed by; III., 541.

"an assembly devoted to the Crown"; III., 545.

House of Commons; passim:

bills in; I., 571; and see Parliament,

Acts of or Bills in, above.

habits of; III., 465.

members of or M.P.'s; passim.

—, arrest of; I., 52.

—, promotion of; I., 190, 277.

—, Scotch; I., 33.

parties in; I., 33.

secret committee of; I., 51.

Speaker of; I., 382, 391; and see Onslow, Sir Richard; Grenville, W. W.; and Addington, Henry.

tickets for; I., 134.

Tories in; I., 51.

votes of; I., 91.

witnesses before; I., 120 (2).

at variance with the Lords; I., 10 (2).

advice concerning behaviour in; I., 18.

breach of privilege towards; I., 62.

numbers in; I., 122.

compared to a quarter sessions; I., 139.

speakers in, commended; I., 163.

in connexion with Irish affairs; I., 173, 175, 181, 190, 209–212.

Address in favour of peace to be moved in; I., 193.

declaration concerning Mrs. Fitzherbert in; I., 362.

retirement from; I., 535.

debates in; II., 73.

addresses to be presented by; III., 49.

suggested address to; III., 147.

message sent to, from the King; III., 165.

division in; III., 368.

supports the policy of aid to Austria; III., 368.

return of Fox to; III., 404.

address moved in; III., 547.

Parliament of tinnets; I., 114, 116, 127.

Parliamentary reform, Pitt's pamphlet on, alluded to; I., 222.

Parma, Duke of; I., 155.

Parma, pictures at; II., 5.

press, poem published at; II., 436.

Parnassus, allusion to; I., 149.

Parnell, Sir John, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Ireland; I., 229, 230, 299 (2), 301, 306, 383, 388, 389, 391, 399, 402, 409, 410 (2), 418; II., 13, 15 (2), 29, 30, 36, 37, 184, 213, 214, 328; III., 18, 549.

—, as Chief of the Board of Accounts; I., 359.

Parrott, [Lord Buckingham's steward?]; I., 271 (2), 272, 274, 275, 360, 434; II., 179.

Parry:

Mr.; I., 327, 332, 334.

—; (in 1716); I., 60.

Parsons, Mr.; I., 298, 299, 306, 425, 428.

Partridge (astrologer?); I., 239.

Passy, near Paris; II., 576.

Pasteur, Monsieur; III., 222.

Patagonia. Port Desire in; II., 98, 99.

Paterson, Marcus, Lord Chief Justice of Common Pleas, Ireland; I., 191, 313.

letter from; I., 313.

Patterson, Colonel, Deputy Adjutant-General for Ireland [in 1772]; I., 348.

as Major General, death of; I., 481.

"Paul." See Rewbell, Monsieur; III., 358.

Paulet:

Charles, 2nd Duke of Bolton; I., 53.

Charles, 3rd Duke of Bolton; I., 72.

Harry, 4th Duke of Bolton; I., 310.

Paulus, Pieter; III., 285; III., 39, 40, 42, 53, 54.

as President of the Assembly at the Hague, speech of; III., 48.

Pausilypo or Pausilype, promontory of, near Naples; II., 8, 29.

Paymasterships; I., 277.

Pay Office, the; I., 271, 356; II., 353; III., 286.

Payne:

Captain; II., 413.

Commodore; II., 652; III., 5.

J.; I., 362.

Sir Ralph; II., 233.

Thomas. See Paine.

Peace of Paris (1763); I., 508; II., 44. (1783); I., 572, 573; II., 45.

—, address in approbation of, alluded to; I., 193, 194.

—, convention explanatory of; I., 573, 574.

—, debate on, alluded to; I., 196.

—, terms of, objected to; I., 194.

Pearcock, Captain; I., 39.

Pearce, —, J. P.; I., 131, 133.

Pearson, —; I., 252, 610.

Peckover, —; II., 127.

Peers, arrest of; I., 52.

House of. See Parliament.

restrictions on creation of; I., 371, 372, 374.

Pelenc, Monsieur; III., 481.

Pellet, speech of, quoted; III., 80.

Pelham:

Henry; I., 125.

Thomas; I., 305, 406.

Henry, as chief secretary to Lord Camden; III., 43, 206, 389.

—, as chief secretary to Lord Northampton; I., 220, 222, 224.

— letters from; III., 385, 390.

— proposed mission of, to Vienna; III., 135, 136.

Pelham-Clinton, Henry, Duke of New-castle; II., 337.
 — expected death of; II., 515.
 Pelham-Holles, Thomas, Duke of New-castle, K.G.; letter to; I., 91.
 Pelier, Monsieur; III., 21.
 Pelin, Monsieur; III., 181.
 letter from; III., 182.
 Pelletier:
 Monsieur; III., 492.
 St. Fargeau, his brother; III., 492.
 Pellew, Sir Edward; II., 474; III., 364.
 Pelport, secretary to General Schneider; II., 603.
 Pelve, Monsieur; II., 641.
 Pemberton, Handy; I., 232.
 Pembroke, Earls of. See Herbert.
 Penang, traveller to; I., 605.
 Pengelly, Serjeant; I., 66.
 Peninsula, the [Spanish]; I., 28.
 English army in; I., 28.
 English fleet to; I., 28.
 Pennant, Mr.; I., 489.
 Pennington, Mr.; I., 489.
 Penryn, Cornwall; I., 119.
 Pension list, intended reform of; I., 174, 187.
 Pensions. See George III., and pensions. for Lord Thurlow; I., 205. for Lord Grantham; I., 205.
 in Ireland. See Ireland.
 Pepper Arden. See Arden.
 Pepys, Dr.; I., 398.
 Pera, letter dated from; I., 20.
 Perceval, Charles George, Baron Arden; II., 41, 55.
 Pery:
 Anthony; I., 487.
 [Smithson] Hugh, Duke of Northumberland; I., 227, 229.
 Hugh, Duke of Northumberland (son of the above); I., 310, 386, 389, 526.
 Thomas, Bishop of Dromore; I., 487.
 Pery's Coffee House; II., 340.
 Périgord, Monsieur. See Talleyrand-Périgord.
 Peronne; II., 525; III., 484.
 Perpignan; II., 419.
 Perregaux (banker at Neufchatel); II., 256, 562; III., 222, 356, 358.
 Perrego Haller; II., 554.
 Perronet, Mons. du; II., 326.
 Pery. See Pery.
 Perschaze; III., 539.
 Persia; I., 32, 45.
 Perthshire, county meeting and ball in; I., 604.
 election contests in; I., 604.
 Peru; III., 266.
 Pery (Perry):
 [Edmund Henry] son of the Bishop of Limerick and nephew of Edmund Sexton Pery; I., 427, 446, 469, 567.
 [Edmund Sexton] Speaker of the Irish House of Commons (1771-1785); I., 167-169, 174-176, 192, 193, 197, 251, 254, 412.

Pery—cont.

— resignation of; I., 255.
 — as Viscount Pery; I., 427, 446, 563, 565 (2), 566 (2).
 — brother of; I., 172, 174.
 — nephew of. See Pery, Edmund Henry.
 William Cecil, Bishop of Limerick; I., 563, 565-567.
 — son of. See Pery, Edmund Henry.
 Pet or Pitt, Mons. Finearse; II., 165.
 "Peter." See Barras.
 Peter the Hermit; III., 258.
 Peterborough, Earl of. See Mordaunt, Charles.
 Peterborough, co. Northampton; I., 510; II., 355.
 election at; I., 112.
 Peterhoff; II., 129.
 Peters, Hugh, mentioned by Burke; II., 19.
 Petersburg. See St. Petersburg.
 Petersham, Surrey; I., 100, 194.
 letter written from; I., 194.
 Pitt goes to; I., 219.
 Pethion or Pétiou, [Jerome], mayor of Paris; II., 307, 309, 633; III., 472.
 in England; III., 466.
 Petrie, J., letter from; II., 259.
 Petty:
 John Henry, Earl of Wycombe, son of the Marquis of Lansdowne; III., 292.
 William, 2nd Earl of Shelburne, as Prime Minister; I., 162-201 passim.
 —, proposed junction of, with Lord North; I., 196, 198.
 —, resignation of, alluded to; I., 202.
 —, the garter given to; I., 205.
 —, negotiation of, with Rockingham, alluded to; I., 218.
 —, as Marquis of Lansdowne; II., 19, 282, 350.
 —, "nonsense talked by"; II., 73.
 Mr.; I., 15.
 Petworth, Sussex, letter dated at; I., 130.
 Peyponnell, book of, Sur le commerce de la Mer Noire; III., 438.
 Peyrouse, Mons. de la; II., 265.
 Phidias, allusion to; I., 142.
 statue by; II., 7.
 Philadelphia, U.S.A.; I., 177, 276; II., 145 (2), 160, 228, 443; III., 39, 360, 527, 528.
 emigration to; I., 191.
 epidemic in; II., 443.
 letters dated at; II., 37, 145, 197, 223, 228, 229, 250, 254, 263; III., 243, 256.
 Philipburgh, Philipsbourgh; II., 410.
 garrison of; III., 257.
 Philippeaux; III., 496, 498, 499, 504.
 adherents of. See Philippotins.
 Philipps:
 Charles; I., 110, 120, 127, 132.
 John, Governor Pitt's steward; I., 66-69, 73.

Phillipps—cont.

John, letters of; I., 72 (2). or Phillips, of co. Wilts; I., 8, 17, 50.

Phipps:

Constantine John, Lord Mulgrave; I., 256, 297, 466, 611.
Henry, Lord Mulgrave; II., 425, 437, 448, 449, 456, 471; III., 374.
Thomas, jun.; I., 502.

Piattoli, Abbé; II., 300.

Piave, the river; III., 319.

Picards, in la Vendée; II., 563.

Picardy, emigration from; II., 471.

Pichégrou, General; II., 519, 532, 540, 548, 554, 570, 585, 591; III., 40, 51, 55, 60, 67, 198, 370.

character of; III., 42, 61.

retreat or defeat of; III., 146, 149.

mediates between the two parties in the Council; III., 340.

Pickering, Colonel; III., 362.

Pietet, Monsieur; II., 431, 435, 438, 455, 456; III., 162.

character of; II., 596.

Piedmont; II., 429, 576.

army to act in; II., 487.

Austrian soldiers in; II., 591.

dearness of grain in; III., 491.

French intrigues in; III., 489.

scenery in; II., 4.

Piedmontese, the; II., 407, 429, 576; III., 197, 485.

officer; III., 125.

troops; III., 124.

Pierpoint, Evelyn, Duke of Kingston; I., 526.

Pierrot, letter from, notes of; III., 538.

Pignatelli, Monsieur; III., 280.

Pigott:

Lieut.-Colonel or Colonel; I., 348, 352, 413.

Lieutenant; I., 352, 355.

—, father of; I., 352.

Capt. W.; II., 128.

Cornet; II., 469.

Mr.; II., 284, 333.

young; II., 489.

Pillory, printer sentenced to; II., 34.

Pillnitz, Pillnitz, or Poelnitz; II., 125, 155, 164.

conference at; II., 171, 174, 181–183, 194.

declaration signed at; II., 186, 192.

Pimbeuf or Paimbœuf, in Brittany; II., 468; III., 105, 116.

commandant of; III., 106.

Pimper, co. Dorset, living of; I., 76.

Pinckney, Pinkney, Thomas, minister from the United States to England; II., 250, 488; III., 69, 78, 87.

arrival of, in England; II., 297, 299.

Pinthus, allusion to; I., 141.

Pinet, Commissary; II., 586.

Pinto:

Monsieur de; III., 373.

Madame de; II., 246.

Piquet; II., 573.

Pirmasens, Prussian King at; II., 431.

Pitt:

Ann, Anne or Nanny (daughter of Robert), Maid of Honour to Queen Caroline; I., 78.

—, letters to; I., 92–106, 135–158.

—, addressed as Mrs. Gingle; I., 94, 107.

—, as Keeper of the Privy Purse to the Princess Dowager; I., 135.

Anne, Lady Camelford; I., 611.

Annette, daughter of Lord Camelford; II., 105, 109, 113; and see Grenville, Annette, Lady.

Christopher; I., 76.

Elizabeth, letter of; I., 76.

Essex (daughter of Governor Thomas); I., 12, 16, 35.

—, letters from; I., 50 (4).

—, letter to; I., 49; and see Cholmondeley, Essex.

Lady Frances (wife of Captain Thomas Pitt); I., 62.

George, of Stratfieldsaye; I., 21, 22, 23, 26, 31, 33, 34, 40, 41, 43 (2), 46, 47, 56, 57, 61–64, 78, 79, 86.

—, letters from; I., 49, 57, 58.

—, son of; I., 56.

George, "old cousin"; I., 42.

Harriet, the Honourable or Lady (wife of Robert Pitt and daughter of Lord Grandison); I., 7–14, 17, 19, 21–23, 26, 31, 33, 35, 38, 41, 42, 53, 60, 74, 78, 84, 91.

—, letters to; I., 49, 50 (5), 56, 58, 59, 62, 64, 65, 91, 92 (2).

—, step-father of. See Stewart, Lieut.-General William.

—, mother of. See Villiers, Mary, Lady Grandison.

Harriot or Heriot (daughter of Robert); I., 13, 68, 74, 77, 78.

Lady Hester, (wife of William, 1st Earl of Chatham); I., 161.

—, as Dowager Lady Chatham; I., 530; II., 299.

Jane (wife of Governor Thomas); I., 5–16, 21, 23, 25, 31, 38, 39, 43, 50, 86, 88–90.

—, letters from; I., 35, 64, 65, 69.

—, letters to; I., 2–4.

John (youngest son of Governor Thomas); I., 3, 7, 33, 38, 41, 63.

—, education of; I., 31.

—, stands for Parliament; I., 64.

—, as Colonel John; 70–73, 75, 77, 86–90.

—, as aide-de-camp to the King; 90.

John (nephew of Governor Thomas); I., 3, 8.

—, death of; I., 7, 13.

—, widow of; I., 7, 13.

—, an uncle of; I., 7.

John, Lord Pitt (eldest son of William, 1st Earl of Chatham); I., 161.

Pitt—cont.

- John, as 2nd Earl of Chatham; I., 194, 218, 351, 389, 466, 488, 576, 578, 579, 591, 611; II., 127, 128, 191, 265, 299 (2), 302, 373, 383.
 —, illness of; I., 336, 354.
 —, suggested as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; I., 418, 421.
 —, as First Lord of the Admiralty; II., 407, 408, 412, 413, 416, 440, 465, 610, 613, 623.
 —, as President of the Council; III., 283, 316, 330.
 —, as Lord Privy Seal; III., 35.
 —, letter from; II., 608.
 —, letters to; II., 608, 609.
 —, ill humour of; II., 418.
 —, clamour against; II., 420, 424, 429.
 Kitty or Katy (daughter of Robert); I., 66, 78.
 Lucy (daughter of Governor Thomas); I., 35.
 —, letter to; I., 49; and see Stanhope, Lucy.
 Ridgway, 3rd Earl of Londonderry, election of, for Parliament; I., 108, 110, 114, 120, 127.
 —, letter to; I., 115.
 Robert or Robin (eldest son of Governor Thomas); I., 7-91, passim.
 —, letters from and to; I., 2-91, passim.
 —, election of, for Old Sarum; I., 13, 16.
 —, marriage of; I., 7.
 —, as member of the Board of Green Cloth to the Prince; I., 51.
 —, petitions of; I., 85 (2).
 —, wife of. See Pitt, Harriet. Also wife and children of; I., 21-91, passim.
 —, eldest son of. See Pitt, Thomas.
 —, second son of. See Pitt, William (1st Earl of Chatham).
 —, daughters of. See Pitt, Harriet, Ann, and Kitty.
 Thomas, Governor of Madras for the East India Company; I., 2-76, passim.
 —, letters from and to; I., 5-76, passim.
 —, arrival of, in Madras, alluded to; I., 48.
 —, recall of; I., 37, 40.
 —, return of, to England; I., 43.
 —, wishes to enter Parliament; I., 46.
 —, servants for; I., 46.
 —, militia regiment of; I., 53.
 —, appointed governor of Jamaica; I., 59.
 —, illness of; I., 69, 76.
 —, death of; I., 76, 77.
 —, will of, alluded to; I., 77, 78.
 —, as "the late"; I., 82-90.

Pitt—cont.

- Thomas, executors of; I., 85-88, 135.
 —, wife of. See Pitt, Jane; also wife and children of; 5-69, passim.
 —, sons of. See Pitt, Robert, Thomas, William, John.
 —, daughters of. See Pitt, Essex, and Lucy.
 —, children of, letter from; I., 35.
 —, mother of; I., 63.
 —, godchildren of; I., 32, 42.
 Thomas (2nd son of Governor Pitt); I., 5, 22, 23, 27, 35, 36, 54, 55 (3), 63.
 —, as captain of horse; I., 31 (2), 32, 37, 38, 41.
 —, as colonel; I., 61, 62.
 —, as Lord, and (in 1726) Earl of Londonderry; I., 64, 65, 67, 74, 75, 77, 84-87, 92.
 —, letters from; I., 75, 79 (2).
 —, letter to; I., 83.
 Thomas, 2nd Earl of Londonderry, as the late Lord; I., 133.
 Thomas, of Bococonoc (eldest son of Robert); I., 50, 60, 63, 66, 73, 74, 112, 123, 130-135.
 —, letters from; I., 77-83, 90, 91, 107-115, 119-121, 126-135.
 —, letters to; I., 76-83, 90, 107, 112, 121, 122, 129, 130.
 —, agreements by; I., 119, 121.
 —, elected M.P. for Okehampton; I., 120.
 —, — for Old Sarum; I., 122.
 —, steward of; I., 130.
 Thomas (son of Thomas of Bococonoc); I., 206, 210.
 —, letters to; I., 219, 558, 567, 591, 592.
 —, as 1st Lord Camelford; I., 226, 252; II., 104, 105, 109, 113, 127, 161, 184, 237, 282, 297, 298, 324, 336.
 —, returns to England; II., 598.
 —, death of, alluded to; II., 621.
 —, steward of; I., 263.
 —, wife of. See Pitt, Anne.
 —, son of. See Pitt, Thomas, 2nd Lord Camelford.
 —, daughter of. See Pitt, Annette.
 Thomas (son of above), 2nd Lord Camelford; I., 611; II., 620; III., 76, 77, 165, 166.
 Thomas, master in Chancery, a cousin; I., 12, 14, 39.
 William (3rd son of Governor Thomas); I., 5.
 —, death and funeral of; I., 21, 23, 25, 31, 32.
 William (2nd son of Robert), afterwards Earl of Chatham; I., 63, 64, 66, 73 (3), 74, 76, 78, 98, 101, 105, 125, 135.
 —, birth of; I., 38.
 —, goes to Oxford; I., 79, 84.
 —, returns to office (in 1666); I., 157.

Pitt, William—cont.

- , as Earl of Chatham; I., 368.
- , letter of; I., 161.
- , wife of. See Pitt, Lady Hester, above.
- William, the younger, Prime Minister, and Chancellor of the Exchequer; passim.
- , letters from; I., 193, 194, 214, 215, 218, 219 (3), 246, 256-259, 278, 342, 345, 353-356, 361, 376, 411, 446, 447, 453, 456, 474 (2), 488 (2), 528 (2), 535, 558, 567, 591, 592, 597.
- , II., 12 (2), 13, 88, 104, 130, 146, 148, 195, 203, 214, 249, 294, 299 (2), 300, 302, 303 (2), 305, 306, 310, 322, 328, 335, 360, 371, 383, 388 (2), 390, 394, 402, 415, 417, 422, 427, 431-436, 438-443, 447, 464, 471, 475, 483, 485 (2), 486, 502, 503, 508, 511, 515, 533, 552, 560, 592, 595, 597, 604, 607 (2), 610, 653.
- , III., 17, 25, 30, 31, 57, 89, 90, 93, 129, 140, 141, 166, 214, 235, 242 (2), 251, 290, 360, 368, 369, 377, 380, 381, 407, 410, 414, 416, 426 (2), 428-430, 433, 436, 454, 456, 534.
- , letters from, alluded to; I., 214, 215, 357, 592, 596; II., 103, 198, 302, 303, 323, 428, 448, 621; III., 419, 422, 437.
- , letters to; I., 194, 216, 242, 335, 453, 494, 537, 610; II., 13, 22, 23, 44, 51, 61, 249, 399, 428, 447, 482, 484, 485, 494, 512, 513, 596; III., 11, 30, 167, 278, 330, 362, 378, 392, 408-413, 430, 431, 434, 455, 456, 458.
- , letters to, alluded to; I., 25, 76, 197, 243, 564, 620; III., 437, 438, 446.
- , eloquence of; II., 34.
- , friendship, affection or admiration for; I., 448, 466, 471, 478; II., 35, 36, 57, 156, 163, 345, 437.
- , house of, meetings at; III., 13, 36.
- , interviews of, with the King. See George III., audiences given by.
- , matters to be laid before; passim.
- , office of. See Treasury.
- , pamphlets of, alluded to; I., 222.
- , patronage or influence of; I., 264 (4), 273, 274, 277 (2), 285-291, 309-311, 327, 332, 334, 346, 348, 385, 446, 460, 487; II., 195, 205, 418.
- , presents sent to; II., 10, 32.
- , secretary of; I., 487.
- , reported to be Secretary of State (1782); I., 162.

Pitt, William—cont.

- , intended reform of the pension list by; I., 174.
- , and Ireland; I., 181, 191, 232 et seq., passim; II., 13, 15, 39, 320; III., 3, 13, 18, 36.
- , in connexion with the change of ministry (April 1783); I., 198, 202, 204, 205, 207.
- , the Treasury offered to and refused; I., 202, 205.
- , and Lord Buckingham; I., 202, 204-206, 214, 293, 296, 305, 336 et seq., passim; II., 10, 11, 128, 397, 492; III., 284, 285, 401, 403, 404.
- , movements of; I., 215, 218-220, 257, 354, 356, 361, 444, 446, 489; II., 11, 12, 182, 303, 307, 309, 315, 483; III., 378, 379, 391.
- , report of his intended marriage; I., 226.
- , "great power and obsequious parliament" of; I., 230.
- , and Lord Mornington; I., 238, 241, 242, 244, 245, 270.
- , message from, to Lord Temple; I., 240.
- , downfall of, predicted; I., 249.
- , recommends a member for Bridgewater; I., 252.
- , in relation to the bestowal of the Garter; I., 259, 260.
- , his Sinking Fund bill; I., 261.
- , his health drunk; I., 264.
- , loses his sister, Lady H. Eliot; I., 269.
- , kindly feeling of, towards W. Grenville; I., 278.
- , and foreign affairs; I., 278, 285, 349; II., 636; III., 228-236, 259 (2), 293, 294, 301, 308, 309, 321, 422, 439, and passim.
- , is left without any "colleague of confidence"; I., 283.
- , attack upon; I., 309.
- , speech of, concerning the East India Company; I., 310.
- , difficult situation of; I., 326.
- , "at issue with a drunken madman"; I., 326.
- , freedom of Cork presented to; I., 330.
- , new colleagues of; I., 330.
- , his Slave Trade bill; I., 342.
- , engrosses all the business of Government; I., 350.
- , in relation to Fitzgibbon; I., 350.
- , and the King's illness; I., 360-415, passim.
- , goes to Windsor; I., 361, 444, 446.
- , and the army; I., 361; II., 55, 441, 446, 450, 453, 469, 482-485.
- , Prince of Wales' opinion of; I., 362.

Pitt, William—cont.

- is reported to have concealed the King's insanity; I., 377.
- , letter to, from the Prince of Wales, alluded to; I., 406.
- , mediation of, with the King, concerning army commissions; I., 449–456.
- is to lay matters before the King; I., 458, 459, 462.
- , and the Lord Chancellorship in Ireland; I., 459–463.
- , his triumphant management of the House of Commons; I., 465.
- , requests to; I., 466, 589.
- , absent from the House; I., 485.
- , ill-humour of Lord Thurlow towards; I., 487.
- , goes to Weymouth; I., 489.
- , reconciliation of, with Thurlow hinted at; I., 524 (2).
- , settles the Lord Lieutenant's speech; I., 559.
- at cabinet councils; I., 579; II., 213, 373, 644, 646; III., 35, 261, 283, 310, 330.
- , opinions or wishes of; I., 592; II., 36, 247, 251, 263, 313, 315, 323, 372, 437, 448, 549, 597, 609, 629; III., 45.
- , opinion concerning, abroad; II., 19, 480.
- , plan of, concerning the East India Company; II., 35.
- , congratulations sent to; I., 103, 289; II., 143.
- , represented as unpopular; II., 114.
- , sentiments of, towards Russia; II., 144.
- , account given in to; II., 155.
- , and Mrs. Ewart's pension; II., 156, 174.
- , to dine with Grenville; II., 192.
- , conversation of, with Lord Auckland; II., 213.
- , the Lord Chancellor's "control over"; II., 248.
- , difficulties of; II., 272.
- , dines in the City; II., 283.
- , made Warden of the Cinque Ports; II., 298, 299.
- follows the hounds; II., 324.
- , re-election of; II., 350.
- , prudence of, praised by the King; II., 351.
- , the Empress of Russia expresses admiration for; II., 364.
- , to attend on the Prince of Wales; II., 372 (3).
- , says he has nothing to do; II., 436.
- , alluded to, in the French Convention; II., 458.
- , suggested assassination of; II., 461; III., 510, 511.
- , raises people's spirits; II., 478.

Pitt, William—cont.

- , his work as Chancellor of the Exchequer; II., 499.
- , at a conference on foreign affairs; II., 505, 506.
- , the Club des Cordeliers accused of corresponding with; II., 541.
- , supposed design of, to put Danton at the head of affairs in France; II., 555.
- , a Frenchman declares himself in the confidence of; II., 555.
- , proposes to form a corps of French deserters for La Vendée; II., 562.
- , mention of, in the Committee of Safety; II., 579, 580.
- , speech of, printed abroad; II., 585.
- , adverse criticism of; II., 598.
- , minute of, in reference to military operations; II., 599, 600.
- , has had "a long prose" with his new colleagues; II., 608.
- , assists at the conference with Count Starhemberg; II., 625.
- , Lord Grenville consults with; II., 629, 638, 643.
- , to decide concerning Col. Nugent; II., 647.
- , Lord Buckingham writes to; II., 648.
- , and the loan to Austria; II., 650; III., 192, 268.
- on arrangements in Ireland; II., 653, 654.
- supports Buckingham's measures in Ireland; II., 654; III., 37.
- , Buckingham makes a final proposition to; II., 655, 656.
- , thinks that the Comte d'Artois should be sent for; III., 89.
- determines to recall the English forces from the Isle Dieu; III., 141.
- and the Militia bill; III., 143, 144.
- and the treaty with France; III., 150.
- , gives a message from the King to the Commons; III., 165.
- , and the French royalists; III., 179, 249, 303.
- , desires "some decent plan of pacification"; III., 214.
- , communications with, about India; I., 243, 497, 498, 510, 519, 557; III., 421.
- to be consulted about the Princess Royal's marriage treaty; III., 302.
- , leaning of, upon the commercial men; III., 317.
- and the negotiations with France; III., 337, 342–344, 354, 360.
- , financial minute by; III., 382–384.

Pitt, William—cont.
 —, and taxation; III., 404.
 — and Sir James Harris' peerage;
 III., 447.
 — and the Duke of York's marriage; III., 454, 457, 458.
 —, abuse of, by Lebrun; III., 462.
 Sir William; III., 100.
 General William Augustus, commander-in-chief in Ireland; I., 176, 300, 304, 310, 339, 346, 351, 359, 389, 465, 525, 526, 531; II., 15-17, 21 (2), 23, 38, 214, 215.
 Captain, "a kinsman," as aide-de-camp to the Duke of Marlborough; I., 27.
 Mr.; II., 127.
 Mr. [in 1771]; I., 161.
 Pitt club; I., 272.
 — diamond; I., 5-64, passim.
 —, narrative concerning its purchase; I., 48.
 —, sold to the Crown; I., 62.
 Pittsburg, Miss Anne Pitt's house at; I., 147, 148.
 Pittman, R., letter to; III., 13.
 Placentia, in Italy; II., 5.
 Plas Newydd, Anglesey, letter dated from; I., 269.
 Plassey, battle of; I., 263.
 Plays:
   The Guardian; I., 156.
   Leary; I., 156.
   Macbeth; I., 157.
 Pleville, Monsieur, Commissioner to Lille; III., 339, 340. made minister of the Marine; III., 339.
 Plumiers, Comte de; II., 461.
 Plunkett:
   Arthur James, 7th Earl of Fingal; II., 40, 235, 236, 238.
   Arthur James, Lord Killeen (son of the Earl of Fingal); II., 235, 236.
   — his wife [Frances]; II., 235.
 Plymmer, —; I., 20.
 Plymouth; I., 156; II., 465.
   the king to visit; I., 488.
   [titular] King of Spain at; I., 10.
   ships of, or at; I., 213, 589; II., 474, 476, 623.
 Plympton, co. Devon, M.P. for; 127.
 Pocock, Richard, bishop of Ossory; I., 143.
 Poelnitz. See Pilitz.
 Poitiers, battle of, mentioned; III., 451.
 Poirier, of Paris; I., 155.
 Pois, Prince de. See Poix.
 Poitou; II., 469.
   regiment of; II., 510.
   royalists of; II., 404, 483; III., 166.
 Poix:
   Prince de; II., 305 (2); III., 478.
   Princesse de; III., 488, 512.
   father-in-law of. See Mouchy, Maréchal de.

Poland, King of:
   Augustus the Strong; I., 29.
   Stanislas; I., 29.
   — funeral oration for, alluded to; I., 155.
   [Stanislas Augustus] king of; II., 94, 126, 243, 244, 300.
 Poland; II., 13, 48, 67, 71, 74-76, 79, 81, 125, 126, 141, 142, 150, 155, 156, 253, 273, 442, 516, 562, 577, 633; III., 29, 225.
   church property in; II., 572.
   crown of; II., 174.
   Diet of; II., 48, 190.
   government of; II., 190, 236.
   Infanta of; II., 82.
   Lieutenant-General in; II., 564.
   ministers of:—
   for Foreign Affairs; II., 244.
   chief secretary of the Council de Surveillance; II., 244.
   Postmaster-General; II., 244. minister from, in London. See Bukaty; II., 244. states of; II., 75.
   negotiations concerning; I., 612, 613.
   suggested alliance with; II., 25, 279.
   alliance of, with Prussia; II., 48, 182.
   new constitution of; II., 74, 77, 142, 155, 264, 292. revolution in, or the Polish event; II., 76, 80, 81 (2), 86, 94, 281, 564, 569, 572. proposed hereditary monarchy for; II., 81.
   mission to; II., 100.
   agents from; II., 169, 581.
   integrity of; II., 170, 174.
   information from; II., 190.
   Russian interference with, feared; II., 225.
   report of intended attack on; II., 274.
   acquisitions of Prussia in; II., 341, 399, 400, 430; III., 228.
   Jacobins in; II., 430.
   under the yoke of Russia; II., 510.
   French plans concerning; II., 554, 556.
   articles of, with Sweden; II., 572. desires an alliance with France; II., 572.
   the King of Prussia wishes to conquer, without loss of a man; II., 635. possible re-establishment of; III., 231, 232. partition of; III., 232.
   designs of the European powers concerning; III., 288.
   subjugated state of; III., 475. designs of Austria upon; III., 516.
   the horrible business of; III., 532.
 Pole, William Wellesley, brother of Lord Mornington; I., 253, 305, 564; II., 18, 35, 120.
 Poles, the; I., 613; II., 61, 66; III., 232.
 Polignac, Duc de; II., 614.

Polish :

commerce or produce ; II., 66, 72, 162.
 generals ; II., 572. incident ; II., 367.
 loan ; II., 287.
 papers ; II., 13.
 republic, commander-in-chief of.
See Kosciusko.

war ; II., 451.
 wolf ; II., 634.

Pollicherry ; I., 45.

Polus, Monsieur ; II., 326.

Pomerania ; III., 232.

Pomeroy :

Arthur, Lord Harburton, raising of,
 to the peerage ; I., 489.

— to be a viscount ; II., 55, 83.

“old general” ; I., 244.

Mr., of Cornwall ; I., 131.

Pondicherry ; I., 353 (2) ; II., 226, 227.

capture of, by the English ; II., 477, 621.

Poniatowski, Prince Joseph ; II., 281,
 530.

Pons, Mr. ; II., 99.

Ponsonby :

George ; I., 182, 205, 206, 210, 212,
 406 ; II., 37, 40 (3), 238.

— dismissal of ; I., 447.

—, suggested as Attorney-General for Ireland ; III., 37.

[John] or “Old Ponsonby,” late Speaker of the Irish House of Commons ; I., 166, 168, 169, 172,
 174, 191, 203, 205, 210, 236, 254.

—, sons of. See Ponsonby, William Brabazon and George.

—, nephew of. See Burton, Mr.

William Brabazon, Postmaster-General
 for Ireland (1784-1789) ; I., 182,
 255, 256, 331, 336, 368, 372, 376,
 377, 379, 381-383, 389, 395, 399,
 400, 402, 407, 416, 414, 418, 420,
 421, 425, 427, 429, 435, 436, 439,
 441, 443, 445, 454, 492, 493, 568,
 584 ; II., 637.

— to have the Irish post office ; I., 229.

— promised the Irish Speakership
 by the Prince of Wales ; I., 440.

— dismissal of ; I., 439-441, 445,
 454, 458, 460.

—, suggested as Speaker ; I., 571,
 581 ; III., 554.

—, Ireland under the government
 of ; II., 634.

—, friends of ; II., 637.

—, to be Secretary of State for Ireland ; III., 9, 36.

—, to be Keeper of the Signet ;
 III., 37.

William, Earl of Bessborough ; I., 212.

Ponsonbys, the ; I., 226, 249, 250, 251 ;
 II., 21.

Ponsonby connexions, Ponsonbyites, or members returned by Mr. Ponsonby ;
 I., 203, 378, 409, 451, 460, 466.

Pont Beauvoisin ; II., 4.

Pontine (Pomptine) marshes, road over ;
 II., 7.

Pontoix, Monsieur, Dutch commissioner ;
 III., 46.

Poonah, Bombay Presidency ; III., 194.
 court of ; I., 607.

Pope, the [Pius VI.] ; II., 6-8, 19, 90, 336.

suggested letters to ; III., 2.

complaint made to ; III., 145.

reported intention of, to declare a holy war against France ; III., 266.

views of ; III., 287.

desirability of helping to obtain arms ;
 III., 295.

authority of, “no longer what it was” III., 552.

sends thanks to England for the kindness shown to the French clergy ; III., 487, 488.

states of ; III., 2, 491.

Pope, Alexander ; I., 76, 100.

Popes, the ; II., 6.

Popish priests ; I., 230.

—, supporters of the Pretender ; I., 55.

Porentui, in Alsace ; III., 130.

Portarlington, Earl of. See Dawson-Damer, John.

Portchester, Lord. See Herbert, Henry.

Porte, the. See Turkey.

Portici, in Italy ; II., 9, 19.

Portland, Duke of. See Bentinck, William Henry Cavendish.

Portland cabinet, the ; I., 220.

Portland, co. Dorset ; II., 152, 422.

Portpatrick, Ireland ; I., 350.

Portsmouth, Earl of. See Wallop, John.

Portsmouth ; I., 59, 60, 542, 544, 570 ; II.,
 382, 418, 453 ; III., 98.

French prisoners at ; II., 401.

[titular] King of Spain's landing at ;
 I., 8.

letters dated at ; II., 412 ; III., 105, 309.

mutiny at ; III., 323(2).

ships at, to or from ; I., 573, 589 ;
 II., 419, 420, 422, 474, 623.

ships of ; II., 465.

stores at ; III., 99, 138.

Portugal ; I., 179, 188, 296 ; II., 365 ;
 III., 10, 75, 368, 379.

army of ; III., 249.

Court of, or Court of Lisbon ; I., 171 ;
 II., 357, 413, 414, 426, 427, 534 ;
 III., 302(2), 355, 359, 379.

—, and the Directory ; III., 345.

—, English minister at. See Walpole, Robert.

—, —, envoy to. See Ramsey,
 Mr.

—, ministers from ; II., 357, 413,

—, —, to Holland. See Aranjó,
 Mons. de.

—, negotiations with ; I., 273, 276 ;
 III., 282.

government of ; III., 282.

Portugal—cont.

- possessions of; III., 350.
- expeditions in concert with [during the war of the Spanish succession]; I., 8,
- action of, in Africa; II., 137.
- English troops in or for; III., 17, 249, 250, 266, 267, 295.
- officers to serve in; III., 236.
- preparations in; III., 284.
- treaty of, with France; III., 355(2), 356.
- difficulties caused by; III., 359.
- treaties with; III., 373.
- and Algiers; III., 526.

Portuguese :

- Admiral; II., 413, 609.
- book of rates, alluded to; I., 171(2).
- officers; II., 413.
- ports and trade; I., 187, 261; III., 236, 373.
- sailors, destitute condition of; II., 413.
- ships; II., 408.
- squadron at Spithead; II., 412-414, 416, 418, 422.
- , to be sent home again; II., 414.
- , to be under the command of Lord Howe; II., 608, 609.
- troops in Toulon; II., 449.
- wines; I., 261.

Postmaster-General; I., 406.

Post Office, the; I., 368, 377.

- Act for; I., 188.
- profits of, grant from; I., 28.
- mails shipped by; III., 69.
- official letters charged for by; I., 188.
- opening or interception of letters at; I., 295; II., 140, 305.
- revenue of, from Ireland; I., 179.
- secretary of, see Todd, Anthony.
- vacancy at; I., 277.
- of Ireland. See Ireland.

Potemkin, Prince, Russian General; I., 281, 612; II., 23, 31, 66, 74, 87, 102, 103, 107, 125, 181, 226.

death of; II., 224.

Poterat, Mons. de; III., 181.

Potocki, Marshal; II., 190.

Potonier; II., 573.

Potsdam; II., 190, 291, 296, 533, 556; III., 226.

letter dated at; II., 535.

resident at; II., 493.

Potter, Mr. (1747); I., 108.

Mr.; III., 356, 357, 360.

Poulett, Vere, Earl Poulett; I., 252.

Pourra; III., 510.

Power, Baron, Usber of the Exchequer, Ireland; I., 206, 327.

Powys, Mr.; II., 273, 354, 355.

Pozenbrug, in Alsace; III., 133.

Pozzuoli, Italy; II., 9, 19, 20.

bay of; II., 19.

Praed, Mr.; II., 656.

Prague, embassy to; II., 200.

the young Archdukes taken to; III., 324.

Praile [Presle], Duvergne du; III., 213.

Prancer, —; I., 221.

young; I., 221.

Pratt:

Charles, 1st Lord and (in 1786) Earl Camden, President of the Council [1784-1794]; I., 179, 181, 183, 184, 290, 291, 308, 320, 331, 350, 352, 363, 388, 391, 463, 465, 488 (2); II., 28, 36, 55, 56, 195.

John Jeffreys, Viscount Bayham, his son; II., 464.

— as 2nd Earl Camden; III., 205, 400.

—, made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; II., 34.

—, letters from; III., 206, 314, 386, 399.

—, letters to; III., 43, 394.

—, nephew of. See Stewart, Major.

Praxitiles, statue by; II., 7.

Précý, General or Mons. de; II., 539, 540; III., 84, 169, 197, 213, 223, 224, 291.

Presteign, co. Radnor, living of; II., 439.

Preston:

Bishop; I., 297.

Major-General; I., 481.

Preston, co. Lancaster, defeat of the Pretender at; I., 55(2).

Pretender, the. See James Edward.Prettyman, Dr. George. See Tomline.

Prevost, Monsieur; III., 423.

Price's tables; II., 240.

Priestley [Dr. Joseph]; II., 133, 309; III., 466.

Prieur de la Marne; II., 518, 527, 542, 543, 568, 589, 590; III., 491.

character of; III., 493.

note signed by; II., 588.

Prigent or Prigeant, Monsieur; III., 139, 536.

capture of; III., 539, 540.

Prime Minister or Premier; see Petty, William, Lord Shelburne, and Pitt, William.

hopes of Fox being; I., 182.

Primrose, Neil, Lord Rosebery; I., 592.

Prince of Wales Island; I., 590, 591.

Princes, the three, loan for; II., 25.

Princess Royal. See Charlotte.

Pringlé, Admiral; III., 96.

Prior Park, letter dated from; I., 144.

Priory, the, letter dated at; II., 239.

Privy Council:

of Queen Anne, alluded to; I., 364.

of George III.; I., 173, 315, 382, 391, 489, 540, 579, 580(2); II., 629; III., 457.

Committee of; I., 276; II., 55.

meetings of; II., 55, 56, 213, 372 (4); III., 317.

members of, or Privy Counsellors; I., 489, 541.

Privy Council—cont.

- Lord President of. See Somers, Lord; Pratt, Charles, Lord Camden; Fitzwilliam, Earl; Murray David, Lord Mansfield, and Pitt, John, Earl of Chatham.
- persons to be examined before; I., 265.
- sheriffs proposed in; I., 291, 293.
- report from, alluded to; I., 397.
- refusal to attend; II., 271.
- membership of, desired; II., 595.
- business before; III., 77.
- declaration of the Princess Royal's marriage to; III., 315, 316.
- and* Prince of Wales' marriage; III., 316.
- alteration of Irish bills by; III., 544, 545.
- , no longer allowed; III., 554.
- Privy Seal, the; III., 242.
- Lord; I., 338; and see Leveson-
Gower, Granville, Earl Gower;
Spencer, George, Earl; and Pitt,
John, Earl of Chatham.
- Proby, John Joshua, Lord and (in 1789)
Earl of Carysfort; I., 225, 227,
281, 396, 405, 408, 424, 461, 478-
482, 499-503.
- as (part) Master of the Rolls in Ireland; I., 482.
- made an earl; I., 491, 495.
- letter from; II., 354.
- Prochyta, island of, in Italy; II., 8, 19.
- Provence, Comte de, or Monsieur (Louis Stanislas Xavier), afterwards Louis
XVIII.; II., 117, 122, 173, 212,
357, 362, 475, 476, 553, 567.
- letter from; III., 487.
- flight of, from Paris; III., 448-450.
- named Lieutenant Général du Royaume by the King, in case of need; III., 451.
- with the King of Prussia; III., 470.
- household of; III., 476.
- is going to Toulon; III., 487.
- recognised as Regent by the Royalists; II., 563, 599, 614, 617.
- as Louis XVIII. See under France.
- Provence; II., 400, 560; III., 126, 127, 160.
- commander in; III., 1.
- inhabitants of, or Provençals; III., 126, 159.
- rising in; III., 501.
- scarcity in; III., 490.
- Prussia, King of:
- [Frederick I.]; I., 8, 12.
- [Frederick the Great] as the late King, or "old Frederick"; II., 44-50, 126, 131; III., 231, 232,
258.
- , supposed letter from; I., 153.
- [Frederick William II.]; I., 278, 281, 353, 606, 612; II., passim;
III., 1-400, passim.
- , audiences of; II., 61, 68, 491.

Prussia, King of—cont.

- , character and conduct of; II.,
147, 167, 494, 592; III., 26-30,
225, 232, 474.
- , domestic establishment of; II., 194.
- , favour or confidence shown by;
II., 493, 533, 535, 604.
- , favourite of. See Bishoff-werder, Colonel.
- , household of:
- chaplain; III., 455.
- deputy-steward; III., 199.
- private treasurer; III., 199.
- secretary; II., 641.
- valet; II., 199.
- , influence over; II., 155, 167,
190, 400, 494; III., 27, 199.
- , intrigues for; III., 563.
- , letter from; III., 94.
- , letters from, alluded to; II., 156, 159, 220, 505, 535, 641, 656;
III., 182.
- , letter to; III., 91.
- , letters to, alluded to; II., 314,
491; III., 68.
- , ministers of. See Prussia,
Court of, below.
- , officers of; II., 543.
- , sayings of, mentioned; II., 174,
194, 330.
- , treasury of; III., 27.
- , —, low state of; II., 494.
- , views or intentions of; II., 57,
432; III., 163, 234, 373, 422, 425,
426, 430, 437, 438, 475, 516.
- , wives of; II., 182; and see Prussia, Queen of, below.
- , mistresses of; II., 245, 246, 276,
277, 280, 291, 292, 325, 492, 493,
535.
- , children of; II., 277.
- , eldest son of. See Prince Royal, below.
- , elder daughters of. See Wilhelmina and Frederique, Princesses, below.
- , youngest daughter of; II., 276.
- , —, governess of; II., 276.
- , sister of. See Orange, Princess of.
- , uncle of. See Prussia, Prince
Henry of, below.
- , proceedings of, in 1787; III., 408-414, 417, 422.
- , satisfaction to be given to, by Holland; III., 426 (2), 428 (2).
- , proceedings of, on behalf of Turkey (1788-1790); II., 48, 49.
- , averse to war with Russia; II., 22.
- , desires war with Austria; II., 22, 106, 121.
- , position of; II., 57.
- , appoints a fresh ministry; II., 70.
- , desires an interview with the Emperor; II., 81.

Prussia, King of—cont.

- , resolves to support the Polish revolution; II., 81.
- , behaviour of, to the Duke of York; II., 82.
- , receives a letter from the King of Sweden; II., 87.
- , demands of; II., 104.
- , note of, alluded to; II., 112, 113, 124.
- , desires Austria to join the Alliance; II., 130, 139.
- , alliance of, with the Emperor (in 1791); II., 139, 141, 153, 155, 164, 167-174, 180-183, 188, 257, 262. And see Vienna, convention at, and Pilnitz, conference at.
- , —, ratification of; II., 177.
- , and his son's marriage; III., 452.
- , married a princess whom he had never seen; III., 452.
- , desires to support the Royal cause in France; II., 148.
- , arrangement of, with the Emperor relative to French affairs; II., 153.
- , is going to Pilnitz; II., 164, 182, 183.
- , project of, with the Emperor, for a crusade against France; II., 164, 171, 177.
- , is the dupe of Austria; II., 168, 170, 172.
- , grant by; II., 170.
- , contradictory letters of; II., 172.
- , is plunging himself into difficulties; II., 177.
- , alliances of, witty saying concerning; II., 182.
- , in relation to his daughter's marriage; II., 183, 202, 232; III., 452-458.
- , will not interfere in France; II., 193, 194, 264.
- , immersed in pleasure; II., 246.
- , warnings addressed to; II., 264.
- , reported deposition of; II., 280.
- , goes to Coblenz; II., 283, 335.
- , secret negotiations of, with France; II., 331; III., 473-475.
- , military movements of; II., 341; III., 467, 469.
- , demands a conference between the generals of the French and his own armies; III., 470.
- , French princes and emigrants with; III., 470.
- , plot against; II., 348.
- , with the army; II., 363, 397, 398, 419, 536.
- , successes of; II., 392.
- , siege of Mayence by; II., 392, 402, 536.

Prussia, King of—cont.

- , inducements to, to prosecute the war; II., 399.
- , ambassador extraordinary to; II., 400.
- , grows cooler regarding the war; II., 425, 430.
- , subsidy or payments to; II., 430, 433, 434, 442, 470, 488, 494-498, 534, 552, 565, 566, 609, 614, 619, 625, 631; III., 247, 515, 536.
- , —, proposed withdrawal of; II., 604, 629, 639.
- , —, suspension of; II., 639, 640.
- , —, proposed renewal of; III., 50 (2).
- , expenses incurred by, in the war; II., 430.
- , is bound to furnish troops; II., 434.
- , probable withdrawal of, from the army; II., 431, 433, 437, 441, 446, 447, 451, 454, 470, 488, 543.
- , leaves the army; II., 446.
- , proposal made by; III., 470.
- , wishes to continue the war; II., 491, 494, 495.
- , need for the co-operation of; III., 494.
- , upon the Rhine; II., 500.
- , negotiations with; II., 500, 503-505, 516, 525, 533, 534, 541, 565.
- , proposed concert of, with the Emperor (in 1794); II., 500, 545, 627.
- , at Potsdam; II., 533.
- , conditions of, declined by Austria (1794); III., 509.
- , and the French commissioners for exchange of prisoners; II., 543.
- , Lord Malmesbury to remain with; II., 546.
- , and the treaty of the Hague; II., 599, 604.
- , failure of all military operations of; II., 633.
- , wishes to conquer Poland without the loss of a man; II., 635.
- , tells Möllendorff that he has no orders to give him; II., 656.
- , negotiations of, with France; III., 26-30.
- , treaty of, with France; III., 48, 51, 57, 58 (2), 62, 72, 82; III., 532; and see Basle, treaty of.
- , sends for the Duke of Brunswick; III., 68.
- , secession of, from the allies; III., 79.
- , claim of, upon estates of the Prince of Orange; III., 156.
- , proposed arrangements with; III., 227-230.
- , movements of; III., 233.

Prussia, King of—cont.

- , "contrariety of sentiment" between, and his ministers; III., 243.
- , pretended penury of; III., 271.
- , views of the Emperor of Russia concerning; III., 292.
- , aid to be offered to; III., 293.
- [Frederick William III.]; III., 400, 402-407.
- George III. writes to; III., 403.
- , wife of; III., 402, 406.
- Queen of (wife of Frederick William II.); II., 276.
- , maids of honour of; II., 220, 291.
- Queen Dowager; II., 291.
- Frederick William, Prince Royal of; II., 70, 82, 246, 291; III., 453.
- marriage projects for; III., 452.
- , as king. See Frederick William III. above.
- Prince Ferdinand of; II., 82.
- , his son; II., 82.
- Prince Henry of; II., 130; III., 27, 405, 437.
- Princess Frederique or Frederica of; II., 179, 201 (2); III., 452.
- , dowry and jointure of; II., 203, 249, 257; III., 453-456.
- , marriage of. See York, Duke of, marriage of.
- , as Duchess of York; 232-234, 245, 246, 250; III., 332.
- Princess Wilhelmina of; III., 455.
- marriage of. See Orange, Hereditary Prince of, marriage of.
- , as Hereditary Princess of Orange; II., 168, 277; III., 182, 278.
- , her child; III., 182.

Prussia; I., 47, 360; II. and III., passim.

- army or forces of (in 1787); III., 411, 414, 417.
- (1791-3); 68, 106, 122, 302, 308, 327, 338, 363, 365, 410, 467.
- (1794); II., 494-498, 504, 505, 508, 536, 546, 552, 558 (2), 565 (2), 578, 593, 607, 626, 628, 633, 635; III., 536.
- (1795-6); III., 25-30, 50, 55, 61, 196, 209, 218.
- , Generals of; III., 470, 471, 591; and see under their names.
- hussars in; III., 476.
- , major in; III., 51.
- , officers of; II., 91, 626.
- , occupation of Holland by. See Holland, occupation of.
- , evacuation of Holland by (in 1787); III., 439-442.
- on the frontiers of Russia; II., 62.
- , dissatisfaction in; II., 104.
- , recall of; II., 165.
- , artillery of; II., 173.
- , movements of (in 1792); III., 467-471, 476, 477.

Prussia, army or forces of—cont.

- , pillage by; III., 468, 476, 477.
  - , victory of, over Dumouriez; III., 472.
  - , retreat of; III., 474, 475.
  - , distress in; III., 475, 476.
  - , detachment of, for Poland; II., 341.
  - , Sir James Murray to go to; II., 363.
  - , distribution or proceedings of (in 1793); II., 371, 388, 391, 392, 406, 419, 431.
  - , head-quarters of; II., 398, 439, 591.
  - , the King of Prussia's promise to furnish; II., 434-436.
  - , proposed withdrawal of; II., 453, 534, 642; III., 532.
  - , command of; II., 493.
  - on the Rhine; II., 535, 566, 591, 592, 606, 636, 640; III., 50, 509.
  - , English officer to serve with; II., 546.
  - , minister with; II., 621.
  - , numbers to be stipulated for; II., 600.
  - , ill conduct of; II., 636.
  - , inactivity of; III., 518.
  - , movements of (in 1794); III., 24.
  - in Westphalia; III., 51.
  - , admiration of; III., 292.
- Court or Government of (Court of Berlin); II. and III., passim.
- , ambassadors or ministers from, to foreign courts; II., 73, 77, 87, 88, 111, 161, 164, 173, 180, 498, 500; III., 148, 282; and see under the several countries.
  - to England. See Redern, Count; and Jacobi, Baron.
  - , ambassadors or ministers to; II., 53, 78, 94, 111, 112, 167, 184, 189, 251, 470, 475, 476, 493, 503, 621; III., 172, 213.
  - from England. See Ewart, Joseph; Eden, Sir Morton; Spencer, Lord Henry, and Bruce, Earl of Elgin. See also Hammond, George, mission of.
  - successor to Mr. Ewart required; II., 178, 190, 195, 196, 205.
  - from Austria. See Reuss, Prince.
  - from Holland. See Reede, Monsieur de.
  - from Russia. See Alopleus, Monsieur.
  - , ministers, ministry or cabinet of; II., passim; III., 226, 326, 371, 484; and see Alvensleben, Bischoffswerder, Finkenstein, Haugwitz, Hertsberg, Schulenberg, and Struensee.
  - , —, change of; II., 70, 73, 78.

Prussia, Court of—cont.

- , ministers of, cipher used by; II., 141, 149, 161.
- , —, note to; II., 147.
- , —, humiliating position or impotence of; II., 245, 262, 347 (2).
- , —, reserve of; II., 257.
- , —, corruption of; II., 498.
- , —, order Möllendorff not to march; II., 656.
- , —, and the Duke of York's marriage; III., 455, 456.
- , —, prime minister; II., 535.
- , —, Minister of Finance. See Struensee, Count.
- , foreign affairs, department of; II., 70, 493, 535; III., 198.
- , England and Holland, treaty between. See Hague, treaty at.
- , position of, in 1787; I., 281-286.
- , negotiations of, with France (in 1787); III., 408, 413, 417, 436.
- , and England (in 1787); III., 434, 437, 438, 452.
- , and Russia; I., 613; II., 45, 60; III., 288, 396.
- , alliance of, with Poland; II., 48.
- , places ceded to; II., 48.
- , situation or state of; II., 96, 135, 257, 500, 535, 633; III., 27, 402.
- , and Turkey; II., 148, 166.
- , friendship of, with Austria; II., 166.
- , Duke of York's influence with; II., 167.
- , confidential communication from; II., 171.
- , Illuminés at; II., 173, 245, 347, 493.
- , ill humour of, towards England; II., 181, 202, 219, 224, 225, 314.
- , intrigues at; II., 245, 246, 280, 296, 347, 492; III., 322.
- , ladies of; II., 276.
- , negotiation of, with France (1792). See Prussia, King of, secret negotiations of, above.
- , fear of the defection of; II., 326, 408; III., 214, 215.
- , jealousy or hatred of; II., 442, 619, 627, 635.
- , description of; II., 492-494.
- , negotiations with (in 1794); II., 552, 557, 565, 600, 609, 633; and see Hague, the, Convention at.
- , subsidy for. See King of, subsidy for, above.
- , duplicity or unprincipled conduct of; II., 620, 633, 653; III., 77, 79, 306-308, 325.
- , refusal of, to fulfil the stipulations of the treaty; II., 639, 640.
- , decision of, to withdraw the army; II., 642, 648.
- , Convention between England and, project for; III., 26-30.

Prussia, Court of—cont.

- , views or intentions of; III., 26-29, 48, 88, 163, 173, 174, 213, 214, 218, 219, 223-232, 243, 253.
  - , correspondence with, précis of; III., 148, 149.
  - , and Holland; III., 150-158, 185-192, 203-205, 209.
  - , haughty tone of England towards; III., 140.
  - , libels against; III., 156.
  - , and France; III., 191, 192, 218, 251, 253, 371; III., 561.
  - , —, secret treaty between (1797); III., 304, 306, 308, 331, 373.
  - , and Austria; III., 192, 288, 292, 325.
  - , grand directory at; III., 199.
  - , holds the fate of Europe; III., 224.
  - , reported acknowledgment of the Batavian Republic by; III., 245, 250.
  - , fresh negotiations with, proposed; III., 298 (2).
  - , wishes to fish in the troubled waters; III., 325.
  - , small hopes of help from; III., 406-408.
  - , cultivation of silk in; II., 126.
  - , export of corn from; III., 199.
  - , frontiers of; II., 602.
  - , lieutenant of police in; II., 276.
  - , possessions of, in Poland; II., 399, 430, 433.
  - , rapacious Princes of; III., 232.
  - , state papers of; II., 126.
  - , territories of; II., 637.
  - , respected by the French; III., 149.
  - , suggested re-arrangement of; III., 224, 227, 229.
  - , Vice Chancellor of. See Colorado, Prince.
- Prussian :
- , baron; III., 435.
  - , case, the, as regards the military convention; III., 536.
  - , chargé d'Affaires; I., 122, 141.
  - , councils; II., 160.
  - , Gueldres. See Gueldres, Prussian.
  - , plenipotentiaries; II., 164.
  - , postillion; III., 253.
  - , Silesia. See Silesia, Prussian.
- Prussians, the character of; III., 232.
- Pryce, Mrs.; I., 106.
- Ptolomies, the, mentioned; I., 143.
- Pugh, Mr.; I., 275.
- Puisaye, General de; III., 93, 112, 113, 138, 139, 216, 249, 251, 363-367, 561.
- , letters to, notes of; III., 537-540.
  - , forces of; III., 138.
  - , money for; III., 365, 393.
- Pulteney or Poultney :
- , Mr. and Mrs.; I., 105.
  - , Mr.; II., 621.
  - , family of; II., 621.
- Purcell, Mr.; II., 41, 55.

Purefoy :

Rev. George Huddleston Jervoise ;
I., 271-274 ; II., 104, 105.

—, brother of ; I., 271.

—, nephew of. See Purefoy, Jervoise.

Jervoise ; I., 271, 272.

—, and his "mad brother" ; II., 129.

Mr. ; II., 481, 654.

—, his uncle ; II., 654.

family, the ; I., 271.

Pusy, Bureaux de ; II., 305.

Puteoli, Cicero's villa at ; II., 19.

Pybus, Mr. ; II., 267.

Pygmalion, King of Tyre ; III., 492.

Pyramids, the, mentioned ; I., 143.

Pyrenees, French army of. See France, armies of.

Pymont ; II., 359.

King of Prussia's excursion to ;
III., 225, 226.

Q.

Quarantine proclamations, alluded to ; I., 382.

Quebec, province of, government of ; I., 496, 503, 530.

governor of. See Haldimand, General.

papers relating to, mentioned ; II., 13.

Queenborough, Kent, election at ; I., 108, 109, 112, 113, 115.

letter dated from ; I., 115.

mayor of ; I., 113.

Queensberry, Duke and Duchess of. See
Douglas.

Queen's County, Ireland ; I., 241 ; II., 35.
election in ; I., 554, 571.

Queen's House. See London.

Quefdville, Mons. de ; III., 113.

Quentin, ferment at ; II., 540.

Quesnoy (Quinault) ; II., 107, 109, 544, 599.

blockade of ; II., 407, 424 (2).

Quiberon, in Brittany ; III., 101, 108, 138, 162.

expedition to ; III., 89, 90, 98, 110, 112, 115, 362, 366.

surrender of (business or calamity
of) ; III., 90, 93, 97, 119.

Bay ; III., 89, 116, 166.

Quimper, in Brittany ; III., 15.

Quin, Dr. ; I., 460.

R.

Radclyffe, James, 3rd Earl of Derwent-water, taken prisoner ; I., 55.

Radnor, Earl of. See Robartes, John.

Radnor, county of, living in ; II., 439.

Radstadt or Rastadt, congress of ; III., 384, 396, 404, 406, 407.

Raigersfeld, Lieutenant ; III., 332.

Raimond, a mulatto ; III., 478.

Rainsford, General, letters to ; III., 468, 470.

Rambouillet ; II., 154.

Ramchund, diamond merchant ; I., 48, 49.

Ramel. See Rammel.

Ramilies, battle of ; I., 27.

Rammel or Ramel, Monsieur, French Minister of Finance under the Directory ;
III., 187, 189, 219.

Ramsey, Mr., mission of, to Portugal ;
III., 249, 250.

Ramsgate, letter dated at ; II., 324.

Ramus, Mr. ; I., 156.

Randolph, Edmund, American Secretary of State ; III., 528.

letter from ; III., 529.

letter to ; III., 529.

Ranelagh, allusion to ; I., 433.

Ransom, Morland and Hamersley, Messrs. ;
III., 105.

Raschid, Reis Effendi ; II., 137, 510.

Rashleigh or Rashly, Mr. ; I., 114, 127.

Rastadt. See Radstadt.

Ratisbon ; II., 605, 645 ; III., 462.

diet at ; III., 92, 94.

ministers at ; II., 294.

minister from Hanover at ; III., 92
(2), 403.

—, declaration by ; III., 94.

Rattew or Ruttew, Edward ; I., 66, 72.

letter from ; I., 71.

Ravensworth, Lord. See Liddell, Sir
Henry.

Rawdon-Hastings, Francis, Lord Rawdon ;
I., 386, 390 ; II., 234, 360.

regiment of ; I., 183.

as Earl of Moira ; II., 499, 593, 598 ;
III., 90, 93 (2), 96, 98, 100-104,

112, 115, 129, 387, 399.

expedition of, to Brittany ; II., 431,

452, 474, 476 (2), 477, 490-492.

seems disposed to dash ; II., 607.

forces of ; II., 501, 552 ; III., 95.

—, want of discipline in ; II., 650.

Raworth, Robert ; I., 39, 42, 47.

letter from ; I., 27.

father of ; I., 39.

Raynal, Abbé ; II., 92, 98.

Rayneval, Mons. de ; III., 409, 440.

Rays, Captain ; III., 389.

Razoumousskoi, Count, Russian minister at Vienna; III., 318, 320, 323, 326, 331.
 letters from; III., 318, 395.
 Reading, co. Berks, innkeepers at; I., 261. place near. See Swallowfield.
 Redding, Mr., of Hardwicke; I., 264.
 Redern, Count, Prussian Minister in England; II., 67, 78, 97, 124, 136, 141, 149, 160, 164, 178, 180, 207 (2), 241, 242.
 Redon, or Rhedon, rising at; II., 452, 487.
 Reede:
 (Reeden), de, Van, Monsieur or Baron A. W., Dutch Minister at Berlin; I., 613; II., 73, 112, 131, 164, 167, 171-173, 180, 182, 224, 264, 284, 291, 334, 347, 493; III., 48, 79.
 —, letters of; II., 72, 95, 170, 174, 181, 182.
 —, —, extract from; II., 156.
 Major; II., 15, 16.
 Reformation, the, mentioned; I., 143; II., 89.
 Regency:
 Bills. See Parliament, bills in the, and the Prince of Wales. See George, Prince of Wales.
 suggested Council of; II., 549.
 Regnier, Monsieur, letter from; III., 159.
 Reichenbach, convention of; II., 49, 84, 92, 113, 114, 156.
 Reiger or Rieger, Baron; III., 265 (2), 277, 290, 299, 303, 304, 311.
 Reis Effendi. See Raschid.
 Rendorp, Mons. de; I., 606; II., 71.
 Renfner, Monsieur; II., 70, 122, 173, 290.
 Renier, Monsieur; I., 257.
 Rennes; II., 429, 432, 463, 577, 584; III., 245.
 arrests at; III., 122.
 Repaire, Comte de; II., 85.
 Repuin, Prince; III., 289.
 Retrie, merchant at Cadiz; II., 539.
 Reuss, Prince, Austrian Minister at Berlin; II., 113, 124, 129, 148, 493; III., 163, 226, 406.
Réveil du peuple (song) replaces the Marseillaise in France; III., 63.
 Revel, Chevalier de; II., 275, 278, 281.
 Revel, in Russia; III., 391.
 Reventlau, Count; III., 398.
 Revenue Board or Commissioners; I., 196, 251, 582.
 counsel to the; II., 83.
 Reviczky, —; I., 267.
 Revolution [of 1688]; I., 472.
 Revolution society in England; III., 466.
 Rewbell, Monsieur ("Paul"); III., 358.
 character of; III., 160.
 Reynell's map; II., 190.
 Reynolds, Dr.; I., 398.
 Rheinsberg; II., 130.
 Rhine, the River; II., 118; III., 164, 233, 396, 406, 407, 536.

Rhine, the—cont.
 action upon; II., 491 (2), 566; III., 224.
 forces on, allied; II., 370, 610, 625; III., 520; and passim.
 — Imperial or Austrian; II., 365, 371, 495, 648; III., 50, 130, 213-215, 297, 519.
 — Prussian; II., 365, 371, 392, 534, 566, 591, 614, 640; III., 509.
 —, French; II., 522, 547, 548, 584, 592; III., 51, 109, 143, 146, 148, 161, 232, 257, 319; and passim. See also Rhine, army of, under France, armies of.
 — chased into; II., 357.
 difficulties in the passage of; III., 130-132.
 French possessions or conquests on; III., 224, 241.
 islands in; II., 405.
 King of Prussia on; II., 500.
 the war drawing towards; II., 288, 292.
 Rhio, in India; I., 588, 590, 591; III., 443.
 Rhode Island, U.S.A., Governor and Council of; III., 528.
 Rhominagrobis, the philosopher, allusion to; I., 147.
 Rhone, the, corpses thrown into; III., 490.
 Rhoon (Roon) Count, [William Gustavus Frederic Bentinck]; III., 40, 189, 210, 211, 237, 238, 417-419.
 arrest and imprisonment of; III., 40, 42, 43, 55, 58, 62, 79, 151 (2), 157, 158, 172, 221.
 letter from; III., 419.
 estates of; III., 4, 39, 221.
 brother of. See Bentinck, Count Charles.
 Madame de, his wife; III., 79.
 —, father of. See Reede, Mons. de.
 Ricé, Comte de; II., 131.
 letter to; II., 132.
 wife of; II., 131, 132.
 uncle of; II., 131.
 Rich:
 Henry (?) letter from; II., 25.
 Mr.; II., 329; III., 447.
 Richard; II., 576.
 Richards:
 Mr.; I., 308, 310.
 Monsieur, a Swiss; II., 290.
 Richardson, —; I., 258.
 Richelieu, Duc de; I., 147; II., 471.
 Richéry, fleet of; III., 235.
 Richmond, Duke of. See Lenox, Charles.
 Richmond, Surrey; I., 94, 98, 136.
 letters dated at; III., 292, 381, 391, 395, 401, 403, 478.
 Hill, Surrey, letter dated from; I., 237.
 Park, Surrey; I., 162.
 Ricketts [George Poyntz], Governor of Barbadoes; III., 166.
 Rickmansworth, co. Herts; II., 209.
 Riegel; III., 198, 223.

Rieger. See Reiger.

Rietz (Ritz) :

Mons. de ; III., 199, 226.

—, mistress of ; III., 226.

Madame de ; II., 291 ; III., 226.

Riga ; II., 29, 31, 80, 385 ; III., 87, 391.

Rigaud, Monsieur ; II., 111 (2).

Rigby :

George ; I., 149.

Richard, Master of the Rolls, Ireland ; I., 206, 299, 311-320, 323, 535.

—, death of ; I., 321.

Rights of man, declaration of, alluded to ; III., 202.

Riou, — ; II., 127, 128, 161.

Risdon, — ; I., 69.

Rivers, Earl. See Savage, Richard.

Riversdale, Lord. See Tonson, William.

Rivet, James ; III., 196.

Riviera, the ; III., 124, 127.

Rivière, Chevalier de. See Larivière.

Robartes, John, Earl of Radnor ; I., 116.

Robbery or burglary, persons convicted of ; I., 517.

Robelin ; II., 514.

Roberie :

Mons. de la, commandant of the royalist cavalry ; III., 25, 108, 116, 123.

—, house of ; III., 108, 109.

Mons. de la, chef de division ; III., 123.

—, their brother, killed ; III., 123.

Robespierre. See Robespierre.

"Robert," arrest of ; III., 371.

Robertson :

Dr. ; II., 416.

Mr. ; II., 313.

Robespierre, Robespierre, Robertspierre :

[Augustin], "le jeune" ; II., 511, 515, 528.

[Maximilien] ; II., 457-590 passim ; III., 64, 491, 493, 495, 498, 587.

—, adversaries of or opposition to ; II., 575 ; III., 473, 492, 495, 504, 505.

—, anecdote of ; III., 496.

—, character of ; II., 553 ; III., 492.

—, conduct and aims of ; III., 499, 500.

—, government or ascendancy of ; III., 277, 490, 503-505.

—, janissaries of ; III., 490.

—, party of ; II., 541 ; III., 492, 493, 495, 507, 531.

—, sayings of ; III., 500, 506.

—, speeches of, alluded to ; II., 357, 588 ; III., 501.

—, wishes to escape to America ; II., 549.

—, raccommodement of, with St. Just ; II., 571.

—, takes the young king to Meudon ; II., 576.

—, attempt to assassinate ; II., 579.

Robespierre—cont.

—, inauguration of a new religion by ; II., 586.

—, suspected of intriguing with the allied powers ; II., 587.

—, persons proscribed by ; III., 160, 498.

—, command of, over the armée révolutionnaire ; III., 497.

—, alarm of ; II., 539, 541, 542, 568, 582.

—, fall and death of ; II., 616, 649 ; III., 83-86, 160, 505, 531.

—, Danton, &c., dictatorship of ; III., 499, 500.

Robinson :

Col. Colyear ; III., 444.

Mr. ; II., 348.

Thomas, 2nd Lord Grantham, pension given to ; I., 205.

— ; I., 541.

Robuerge, Mons. de ; II., 563.

Rochambeau, Maréchal de, commander of the army of the North ; II., 242.

Roche Bernard, in Brittany ; II., 487.

Roche foucault, Mons. de ; II., 69.

Roche Jaquelin, Mons. de ; II., 267, 463, 530.

Rochfort, Madame de ; I., 146-150, 155.

Rochfort, in Brittany ; II., 417, 418, 449.

Rochler ; II., 439.

Rockingham, Earl of. See Watson, Edward.

Rock Savage, Ireland, letter dated at ; I., 65.

Rodney :

Captain ; II., 413.

George, Lord ; I., 508.

Roe, the river, in Germany ; III., 51, 519.

Roger ; I., 47.

Rohan, Cardinal de ; II., 85.

Rohilla country, the ; I., 594.

Roland, Colonel ; III., 168.

Rolle (Roll), Baron de ; II., 170, 174, 200, 276, 651 ; III., 96, 98-100, 103, 104.

regiment or corps of ; III., 17, 25, 102.

Rolleston, Stephen, letter from ; III., 473.

Rollin ; II., 578, 603.

his father, a barber in Lorraine ; II., 603.

Roman Catholic :

Church ; II., 420.

priests ; II., 294.

—, demanded, in Brittany ; II., 540.

Roman Catholics or Catholics ; II., 6, 13, 39, 40, 42, 89 ; and see Ireland, Roman Catholics of.

Bill of Toleration for (Mitford's Bill) ; II., 13 (2), 41, 42, 55, 89 (2), 90, 238.

Rome ; I., 137 ; II., 5-8, 10, 19, 20, 119 ; III., 2, 5, 12.

agents at ; III., 264.

ambassador to ; II., 242.

ancient ; II., 6 ; III., 230.

Rome—cont.

- Court of, proposed minister to; III., 12. buildings, places, &c., in:—
   Capitol; II., 6.
   Colosseum or Amphitheatre of Vespasian; II., 7.
   Egyptian obelisk; II., 6, 7.
   Forum; II., 6, 7.
   Jupiter Capitolinus, statue of, called St. Peter; II., 6.
   Mausoleum of Augustus; II., 7.
   Mons Palatinus; II., 7.
   Mons Quirinalis or Monte Cavallo; II., 7.
   Palace of the Cæsars; II., 7.
   Pantheon; II., 7.
   Pons Emilius; II., 5.
   Porta del Popolo; II., 5, 6.
   Porta Angelica; II., 5, 6.
   St. Peter's, description of; II., 6.
   Triumphal Arch; II., 7.
   Vatican, bulls and "such-like ammunition" from; III., 266.
   Vatican hill; II., 5.
 dirt of; II., 119.
 French emigrants in; II., 118.
 Governor of; II., 119.
 murder at; II., 119.
 scirocco in; II., 5.
 travellers to; II., 117, 336.
 Romans, the two; II., 305.
 Ronsin or Ronzin, General; III., 490, 496, 503.
   as commander of the armée révolutionnaire; III., 498. goes to la Vendée; III., 498. sent to Lyons; III., 498.
 Roon. See Rhoon.
 Roper, Colonel; II., 481, 482.
   murder of; II., 654.
 Roscommon, co., Ireland, estates in; II., 337.
 Rose:
   Captain, of the Trinity House; II., 509.
   George, secretary of the Treasury; I., 252, 257, 296, 300, 327, 334, 380, 414, 488, 562; II., 30, 36, 55, 309, 354, 488, 499.
   Sir John, Recorder of London; I., 517-520, 586.
   "young" Mr.; II., 290.
 Rosenblad (Swedish officer); II., 88.
 Rosières, Mons. des, General of France; III., 32-34, 493. plan of campaign of; III., 45.
 Ross:
   Earl of. See Gore, Sir Ralph.
   Mr.; II., 299; III., 336, 361.
 Rosses, the (Ireland), fisheries off; I., 189.
 Rossignol, brigand and general; III., 498, 503.
 Rosting, General; II., 548.
 Rotterdam; I., 76, 264; II., 280, 381, 616, 621; III., 426, 518. change of government in; III., 410.

Rotterdam—cont.

- émigrés at; II., 358.
 letter dated at; II., 356.
 Rouen (Ryone), armament for the Pretender at; I., 51.
   trees of liberty cut down at; III., 83.
   depot at; III., 291.
   maintains its independence; III., 498.
   municipality of; II., 590.
   scarcity of bread at; II., 590.
 Rousillon, Major; III., 168, 169.
 Rousseau, Jean Jacques; I., 151.
   letter to; I., 153.
 Roussillon, le; II., 487.
   army of; II., 586, 587.
   commander in; II., 529.
   Spanish army in; III., 128.
 Roveray, Mons. du; II., 255, 266, 267.
 Rowe, Mr.; I., 92.
 Rowley, —; I., 190.
   "old"; I., 222, 233.
 Royal family, the; I., 52 (2), 177; II., 370. maintenance or pensions of; I., 429, 430, 508; and see George III., family of.
   order of precedence in; II., 232-234.
   at Weymouth; II., 623.
   insecurity of; II., 623.
   dine with Lord Buckingham; II., 634.
 Royal Marriage Act; II., 477; III., 457.
 Royerant, royalist commander at Morbihan; II., 527.
 Royoz, Mons. de; II., 117.
 Rubi, Monsieur; II., 262.
 Ruelle; III., 117.
 Ruremond; II., 333; III., 518.
 Russell:
   John, 4th Duke of Bedford; I., 132.
   —; I., 242.
   Francis, 5th Duke of Bedford; I., 275; III., 11, 323.
 Russia:
   Czarina or Empress [Catherine]; I., 147, 154, 602; II., 38, 42-52, 57, 60-62, 65, 66, 73-75, 81, 83, 102, 103, 181, 384, 404, 425, 498, 516; III., 74, 128, 163, 230, 234, 243, 262, 462.
   —, war of, with Turkey; I., 606, 613.
   —, agrees to restore her acquisitions to Turkey; II., 22, 49, 142.
   —, excepts certain portions; II., 22, 25, 49, 52, 77, 91, 92, 95, 111; and see Oczakow and Dniester.
   —, former alliance of, with Prussia; II., 44.
   —, cabal governing her councils; II., 46.
   —, makes peace with Sweden; II., 49.
   —, will endeavour to make herself a party in England; II., 61.
   —, refuses to accept the status quo ante; II., 47, 48, 79, 92.

Russia, Empress of—cont.

- , will try to gain time; II., 87, 88, 127, 143.
  - , negotiations with; II., 88, 96, 100, 115, 121, 134, 143, 148, 156; and see Petersburg, treaty of.
  - , and Mr. Adair; II., 100, 114, 129, 144, 149.
  - , anecdote of; II., 106, 107.
  - , confidential correspondence of, with the Emperor; II., 125, 127.
  - , will not molest the freedom of the Dniester; II., 134.
  - , men and fleet to be furnished by, for the "crusade" against France; II., 170, 177.
  - , grants an armistice to Turkey; II., 182.
  - , manifesto of Pilnitz sent to; II., 194.
  - , persons in favour with; II., 221, 224, 256.
  - , maxim of; II., 224.
  - , alliance of, with Sweden; II., 227.
  - , is uneasy about her situation; II., 262.
  - , designs of, regarding Poland; II., 273, 292.
  - , is in want of money; II., 287, 489.
  - , intrigues of, with the English opposition; II., 362-364.
  - , and the Comte D'Artois; II., 358; III., 393.
  - , George III., writes to; II., 397.
  - , writes to the King of Prussia; II., 491.
  - , determines to strike a fresh blow at the Turks; II., 489.
  - , dissimulation of; II., 495.
  - , agrees to furnish troops against France; III., 246.
  - , demands of; III., 246, 248.
  - , peace offering for; III., 224.
  - , proposed cession of Corsica to; III., 261 (2).
  - , death of; III., 281, 287, 288, 292.
  - Emperor of [Paul I.]; III., 281, 288, 289, 292, 326, 329, 335, 381, 391, 403, 406.
  - , advisers of; III., 371.
  - , character of; III., 288, 298.
  - , coronation of; III., 290, 298.
- Russia; I., 276, 281, 325; II., 29, 51, 63, 71-79, 91, 95, 96, 124-126, 135, 140-144, 148, 155, 180, 436, 446, 451, 516, 615; III., 155, 156, 225, 299, 307, 312.
- army or troops of; II., 281, 404, 322, 385; III., 246, 248.
  - , with Sweden; II., 47.
  - Court of, or Court of St. Petersburg; II., 50, 53, 73, 75, 89, 91, 102, 111, 115, 121, 141, 143, 164, 217, 226, 261, 425, 505, 614; III., 30, 60, 173, 246-248, 400, 431, 516, 562.

Russia, Court of—cont.

- , ambassadors or ministers from, to foreign courts; II., 46, 53, 66, 93, 98, 100, 180, 182, 221, 493; III., 163, 401, 402; and see under the several countries.
- , —, to England. See Woronzow, Count.
- ambassadors or ministers to; II., 45, 53, 60, 70, 88, 102, 110, 114, 129, 148, 164, 172, 221, 406.
- , —, from England. See Whitworth, Charles, and Faukenner, William.
- , —, from Holland. See Hogguer, Monsieur.
- , —, from Prussia. See Goltz, Count.
- , department of Foreign Affairs at; III., 404.
- , ministers or ministry of; II., 137, 144, 385; III. 137.
- , dependence of the King of Sweden on; I., 353.
- , negotiations with; I., 612; II., 31, 45, 52, 106, 109, 112, 114, 122, 123, 146, 150, 156, 160, 162, 165, 166.
- , —, satisfactory conclusion of; II., 142-145, 162, 164, 167-169.
- , in relation to the business of Ockzakow. See Ockzakow.
- , war with Prussia, danger of; II., 32, 60.
- , Danish ministry devoted to; II., 38, 61.
- , relations of, with England (1791) sketch of; II., 44.
- , refuses the mediation of the allies; II., 48.
- , and Poland; II., 48, 67, 71, 75, 94, 190; III., 231.
- , newspaper in the pay of; II., 59.
- , Prussia has nothing to fear from; II., 104.
- , messenger from; II., 111, 121, 123.
- , malevolence of; II., 138.
- , to join the alliance against France; II., 155, 170, 181, 182, 209.
- , terms offered by, to Turkey; II., 166 (2).
- , peace of, with Turkey; II., 177.
- , leading men at; II., 224.
- , Irishman in the service of; II., 256.
- , alliance of, with France, suggested; II., 259.
- , alliance of, with Prussia; II., 292 (2).
- , overtures from; II., 361.
- , convention of, with England; II., 384, 385.
- , to keep Prussia quiet; II., 625.
- , fear of, in Prussia; III., 27, 28.

Russia, Court of—cont.

- , danger of alienating; III., 29.
- , alliance of, with England; III., 50, 73.
- , loans to; III., 71.
- , treaty of neutrality with; III., 191.
- , proceedings of; III., 234.
- , hopes of help from; III., 246, 247.
- , proposed subsidy to; III., 246, 247, 271, 274.
- , activity of; III., 271.
- , and Prussia; III., 306, 308, 396, 400, 402.
- , and Austria; III., 325, 326.
- , Order of St. Alexander sent from; III., 369.
- , proposals to be made to; III., 406–408, 563.
- duties in; II., 44.
- England and Austria, Triple Alliance of; III., 76, 148; and see Triple Alliance.
- exhaustion of; II., 62.
- fleet or ships of; I., 314, 315, 318, 354, 613; II., 87, 88, 385; III., 75, 77 (2), 128, 246, 381.
- , to co-operate with that of England; III., 292, 293, 328, 329, 335.
- , Admiral of; III., 234, 328, 329; and see Harnikoff.
- , Rear Admirals of; III., 374.
- , officers of; III., 369.
- frontiers of; II., 62.
- la secte pieuse* in; III., 289.
- messengers from; II., 280, 394.
- native of, III., 448.
- naval power of, helped by England; II., 45.
- provinces of, visit of the Emperor to; III., 326.
- treaty of, with England. See St. Petersburg, treaty of.
- Vice Chancellor of; II., 80, 103, 114, 129, 144.
- war of, with Turkey; I., 282, 606, 612, 613; II., 25, 45–50, 77, 100, 166.

Russian:

- agents; II., 87, 95, 103.
- commerce; II., 51, 67, 174.
- company; II., 46.
- declaration; II., 76.
- emissary; II., 87, 95.
- Empire in the North; II., 75.
- language, treatise translated into; I., 602.
- merchant; II., 219.
- order of St. Alexander; III., 369.
- of St. Catherine; III., 323 (2).
- party in Poland; II., 75.
- province, chance of Sweden becoming; I., 360.

Rust, Mr.; I., 152, 159.

Rutland, Duke of. See Manners.Ruttew, Edward. See Rattew.

Ruzé, in Brittany; III., 108, 118.

Ryder, [Dudley]; II., 165.

Ryone. See Rouen.

Ryves, "Cousin"; I., 56.

S.

Saar, the; II. 536.

Sables, port of; II. 417.

Sables d'Olonne. See Olonne.

Sablon, plain of; I., 154.

Sacheverell, Dr.; I., 48.

Sackville:

Charles, Earl of Middlesex, (son of the 1st Duke of Dorset); I., 108.

—, letter from; I., 117.

Lord George; II., 446.

Germain, Charles, Lord Sackville, under secretary of; II., 118.

John Frederick, 3rd Duke of Dorset, ambassador to France; I., 483, 485, 490, 525–527, 529; III., 409, 413, 414, 439 (2).

—, solicits an audience from the President des Etats; I., 490.

—, letter from, alluded to; II., 204.

—, courier of; I., 485.

Lionel Cranfield, 1st Duke of Dorset, as Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland; I., 139.

Sadlier, Mr.; II., 437.

St. Alban's Head; II., 611.

St. Amand; II., 391.

St. André, Jean Bon; II., 457, 459, 518, 532, 542, 556, 560, 563, 584, 590; III., 491.

—, character of; III., 494.

St. Brieune, in Brittany; III., 536, 537.

St. Christopher's, island of; III., 526.

—, Lieut.-Governor of; II., 190.

St. Cloud; II., 567.

St. Denys or Denis; II., 567; III., 429.

—, deanery of; I., 71.

St. Dominique or Domingo, island of; II., 29, 176, 181, 267, 268, 399, 402, 433, 438, 455, 477, 654; III., 97, 102, 128, 166, 241, 390.

—, armament for; III., 142.

—, deputies from; I., 490.

—, French fleet at; II., 411.

—, revolt in; III., 478.

—, Spanish part of; III., 167.

Ste. Croix, Mons. de; II., 320; III., 462.

—, speech of, to the French King; III., 472.

Ste. Genevieve, la chasse de; II., 463.

Saintes, deputy of; II., 587.

St. Etienne, Rabaud; II., 480.

St. Eustatius, island of; II., 23, 152.

Saintex, —; III., 505.

St. Fief; III., 493.

St. Florent, near Saumur; II., 527, 545.

St. George, Lieut.-Colonel; I., 455, 463, 489, 490 (3), 493, 506, 521, 531–534, 576.

- St. Germain, troops at; III., 67.
 — l'Auxerrois; II., 583.
 St. Gilles; III., 97, 118.
 St. Gudule, canon of. See Vandorselaer.
 St. Helena, island of; I., 13, 45.
   travellers to; I., 5.
 St. Helens, Lord. See Fitzherbert, Alleyne.
 St. Helens, Isle of Wight; III., 103.
 St. Huruge, "that mad incendiary"; II., 358.
 St. Ildefonso, letter dated at; II., 204.
 St. James, Court of; II., 49, 156, 176, 217, 252, 278, 399, 537, 539, and passim.
   —, action of; II., 46, 47.
   —, insinuations or declamations against; II., 147; III., 45.
   —, presentations at; II., 320, 411.
   —, supposed agents of; III., 160.
   —, ambassadors to and from. See Ambassadors.
 St. Jean de Brie, Monsieur; II., 326.
 St. Jean de Mont, in France; III., 118.
 St. John:
   Henry, Viscount Bolingbroke; I., 52; II., 6.
   John, Viscount St. John, letter of; I., 117.
 St. John's, Newfoundland; I., 546, 548.
 St. Just [Louis Antoine de]; II., 487, 520, 526, 538, 542, 548, 550-557, 561-563, 568, 570-576, 579, 580, 582, 584-589, 633; III., 508.
   assassin employed by; II., 633.
   friend of; II., 587.
   movements of; II., 563, 584, 585, 587.
   speech by; II., 555.
 St. Laurent de Mauge; II., 580.
 St. Leger:
   Anthony; I., 362, 374.
   Captain; I., 357, 360, 489.
 St. Leonard's Hill, letter dated at; II., 166.
 St. Malo, St. Malo's or St. Maloes; II., 402, 429, 431, 436, 441, 463, 464, 468, 581, 584; III., 14, 536, 537. fear of an English descent upon; II., 487. defeat of the Convention troops at; II., 540.
 St. Marcouf (Marcout), island of; III., 138, 309 (2).
 St. Martins, island of; II., 152.
 St. Mary Blandford. See Blandford St. Mary.
 St. Mathieu, French fleet at; II., 590.
 St. Maurice, Isle de; II., 454.
 St. Mawes, Cornwall, M.P. for; I., 121, 334, 363, 364.
 St. Maxence, pont; II., 548.
 St. Ménéhould, Menehoulte or Ménéhoute; III., 469, 471.
   the French king stopped at; II., 110.
   postmaster of; II., 116.
   conferences at; II., 331.
   revolt at; II., 466.
   French forces at; III., 468, 469.
 St. Michel, (French Commissary); II., 517.
 St. Michel:
   Fort; evacuation of; II., 527.
   Mont; II., 528.
 St. Patrick, order of, institution of; I., 172, 177-201, 208.
   chapter of; I., 189.
   insignia of; I., 183, 187, 190.
   knights of, dinner to; I., 226.
   —, installation of; I., 189, 190, 193, 201 (2).
   —, list of; I., 177.
   secretary and other officers of; I., 177.
 St. Patrick's Day; I., 177, 226.
 St. Petersburg or Petersburg; I., 589;
   II., 22, 23, 44, 45, 47, 54, 59, 66, 69, 77, 82, 84, 93, 102, 106, 107, 112, 132, 137, 141, 145, 149, 150, 156, 160, 162, 194, 225, 226, 255, 268, 362, 363, 374, 401; III., 208, 234, 292, 326, 395, 400.
 Ambassadors to, and Court of. See Russia.
 English merchants at; II., 44.
 English secretary of Legation at; II., 207, 212, 226, 255.
 letters dated at; II., 80, 102, 114, 129, 134, 142, 143, 181, 221, 226, 364, 393; III., 281, 298.
 naval commissaries at; II., 489.
 travellers to; II., 62, 70, 76, 88, 100, 215; III., 307.
 treaty of; III., 74-77.
 Vice Chancellor at. See Russia, Vice-Chancellor of.
 Mr. Fawkenor arrives at; II., 80.
Te Deum at, after a victory; II., 143.
 St. Philibert, in Brittany; III., 108.
 St. Pierre d'Arona or d'Arena; magazines at; II., 574, 576, 581.
 St. Pol, Bishop of; II., 420; III., 98, 100, 561.
 St. Prie, Madame de; I., 148.
 St. Priest, Mons. de; II., 224.
 St. Simon; III., 354, 361.
   character of; III., 354.
   family of; III., 354.
 St. Spirito, cape; III., 124.
 St. Stephens, Cornwall, letters dated at; I., 70, 72.
 St. Vallery, emigrants from; II., 315.
 St. Vallier, Capitaine; II., 581.
 Saladin, Monsieur; III., 16, 213.
   character of; III., 65.
 Salgas, Mons. de; III., 197.
 Salicetti; II., 584.
 Salisbury, Earl and Marquis of. See Cecil.
   family, the; I., 519.
 Salisbury or Sarum; I., 10, 32; II., 263, 401.
 Bishops of. See Burnet, Dr. Gilbert and Barrington, Shute.
 Bishopric of; II., 105.
 Dean of; I., 11.

Salisbury or Sarum—cont.

- Dean and Chapter of; I., 8.
 elections at; I., 108, 272.
 free school at; I., 42.
 rebels at; I., 55.
 stage coach to; I., 102.
 Salm, Rheingrave de; III., 212.
 Salme, Prince de; III., 23.
 Saltash, co. Cornwall, election at; I., 108, 127, 270.
 Salter, young; I., 265.
 Salthill, innkeepers at; I., 261.
 Saltram, letter from the King dated at; I., 493.
 Sambre, the river:
   French forces at; II., 559.
   victory of the Emperor near; II., 583, 584.
 Sampson, Sir. See Gideon, Sir Sampson.
 Sandomir, palatinate of; III., 562.
 Sandwich, Earl of. See Montagu.
 Sandwich Islands; I., 605.
 Sandys, Mr.; I., 119.
 Sans-Culotterie, "le petit maître de"; III., 493.
 Sansom, Mr.; II., 607, 608.
 Santa Cruz, Spanish Governor of; III., 375.
 Santa Lucia, island of; I., 184, 490.
 Santerre, a brewer, commander of the National Guard; II., 307, 309, 570; III., 466, 481.
   distilleries of; II., 538.
 Sapineau, General; III., 96, 113, 114, 122, 123, 363, 561.
   character of; III., 114.
   army of; III., 111, 114.
 Saralier; II., 571.
 Sardinia, [Victor Amadeus III.] King of; II., 122, 169, 400, 429, 449, 598; III., 1, 125, 142, 224.
   army of; II., 536.
 Sardinia; II., 209, 318, 602, 649; III., 10, 94.
   court or cabinet of, or Court of Turin; II., 523; III., 485.
   —, English minister at, see Trevor, John.
   —, minister of, in Switzerland; II., 596.
   —, —, at Vienna; III., 125.
   —, proposals to, from France; III., 502.
   grain from; III., 127.
   troops of; II., 449, 523; III., 485.
   French retiring from; II., 631.
 Sardinians, the; II., 419.
 Sarjent, Mrs.; I., 156.
 Sarsfield, Vicomte; I., 349.
 Sarum, Old; I., 11, 24.
   castle of; I., 89.
   elections at; I., 8, 12, 21, 24, 34, 38, 78, 108, 109, 111, 112, 114, 115, 120, 122.
   —, future, nominations for, to be given to the Prince of Wales; I., 134 (2).
   letters addressed to; I., 71, 72.

Sarum, Old—cont.

- members for; I., 13.
 Saubardiere, Madame de; II., 326.
 Saumaise, Colonel; II., 381.
 Saumur, letter dated at; II., 544.
   patriots at; II., 544.
 Saunders:
   Captain; II., 16.
   —; I., 273.
 Savage:
   Richard, 4th Earl Rivers; I., 28.
   Mr.; I., 113.
 Savannah, expedition against; III., 423.
 Savile:
   George, 1st Marquis of Halifax, Miscellanies of; I., 27.
   William, 2nd Marquis of Halifax; I., 16.
 Savonne; II., 576, 581.
 Savoy, [Victor Amadeus II.] Duke of; I., 28.
 Savoy; II., 177, 322, 400, 429, 449; III., 485.
   the Alps of; II., 4, 118.
   expected insurrection in; III., 95.
   French intrigues in; II., 255.
   — troops in; III., 241, 473, 485, 491; and see French armies.
 Saxe, Marshal; II., 410.
   aide de camp of; II., 410.
   mémoire of; II., 410.
 Saxe-Coburg. See Coburg.
 Saxe-Meiningen, Duke of; II., 431.
   troops of; II., 431, 434.
 Saxe Teschen, Duke of; II., 336.
   army under; II., 534.
 Saxony; II., 74, 76, 155, 182, 194, 208; III., 230.
   Court of; II., 75.
   [Frederic Augustus] Elector of; II., 75, 94, 126, 252, 264.
   envoy to. See Eden, Morton.
   House of; II., 174.
   King of Sweden in; I., 29.
   ministers of; II., 75, 94, 493.
   Lower; III., 223.
   — circle of; III., 48.
 Sayn, county of; III., 227.
 Scarborough, Earls of. See Lumley.
 Scarborough, election at; I., 108.
 Scépeaux or Scepeau, General de; III., 115, 363, 561.
   army of; III., 138, 362, 364, 394.
   surrender of; III., 364.
 Schac, Mr.; II., 220.
 Schaw, a messenger; II., 347, 546; III., 198, 326.
 Scheldt or Escaut, the river; II., 362, 363, 370, 384, 559, 602.
   opening or free navigation of II., 46, 344, 346, 351, 352.
 Scheltinger, Monsieur; III., 207.
 Schermonnik-Oog or Schiermonnik-Oog, island of; III., 187, 190, 191.
 Schlestat in Alsace; III., 133.
 Schlieffre, —; II., 23.
 Schneider, General; II., 603.
   secretary of; II., 603.

Schombergh, Sir A.; I., 298.

Schroeder, —; I., 544.

Schubart :

Monsieur de, Danish Minister at the Hague; II., 541, 615, 622; III., 207.

Madame de; III., 207.

— father of; III., 207.

Schulemberg or Schulenburg, Count, Prussian minister; II., 61, 70, 71, 126, 147, 149, 155, 163, 170, 172, 173, 177, 178, 180, 182, 183, 230, 245, 258, 276, 348, 535, 565, 577, 604; III., 452.

Scilly, ships off; II., 465.

Scotch or the Scotch; I., 465, 468, 567; II., 309.

desire to be independent of England; I., 13.

suggested as members of the Ministry; I., 206.

supporters of the Pretender; I., 51.

brigade in Flanders. See Flanders.

coal; I., 230.

“job”; I., 485.

law case, quoted; I., 523.

officers; III., 444.

peers; III., 206.

— representative; I., 590, 592, 596, 597, 602, 607; III., 206.

physician; I., 143.

politics; I., 357.

Scotland; I., 534, 586; II., 215, 303, 423, 538; III., 265, 421, 440.

Board of Police in; I., 560.

— secretary to; I., 560.

clergy in; II., 416.

Clerk of the Mint in; I., 535.

Clerk of the Register in; I., 535.

convention of, member of; II., 582.

Crown presentations in; I., 568.

election in; I., 108.

employment of convicts in; I., 555-557.

Exchequer of, Chief baron of. See Montgomery, James.

— Barons of; I., 586.

fishery bill for, suggested; I., 196.

forts in; I., 555, 556.

French correspondents or emissaries in; II., 326, 480, 514.

Independents (political) in; I., 591, 593.

Lord Advocate of. See Campbell, Ilay.

Lord President of the Court of Session in. See Miller, Thomas, and Campbell, Ilay.

making of a canal in; I., 555, 556, 560.

members sent from, to Parliament, or union members; I., 33.

opposition party in; I., 596.

parliament of. See Edinburgh, parliament at.

plots or troubles in; I., 8, 13.

peerage of; I., 596.

President's Chair in; I., 534, 535.

the Pretender in; I., 51, 55.

Scotland—cont.

rebels in; I., 53.

Regency question in; I., 535.

Solicitors-General of. See Campbell, Ilay, (1783), Dundas, Robert, (1784), Blair, Robert (1789).

union with; I., 29.

Scott:

Charles William Henry, Earl of Dalkeith; II., 290.

D., letter from; III., 195.

David; II., 11.

Francis, Earl of Dalkeith; I., 74.

Henry, Duke of Buccleuch; I., 570, 590, 592(2), 602, 603, 607; II., 290, 367.

— son of; II., 290.

John; I., 172, 174, 178, 182, 191, 208, 222, 226, 244.

— as Prime Serjeant of Ireland; I., 173; III., 553.

— made Lord Chief Justice of Ireland; I., 229.

— as Lord Earlsfort; I., 302, 311, 313, 316, 317, 319-321, 324, 365, 366, 369, 375, 379, 381, 382, 385, 387, 388, 391, 400, 407, 411-413, 461, 468, 469, 481-483, 485, 491, 494, 495, 499-502, 519.

—, letter from; I., 316.

—, letter to; I., 313.

— defection of; I., 396.

— renewed support of; I., 397.

— office of, reversion of; I., 325, 327.

— as Viscount Clonmel; I., 531, 542, 545-547, 551(2), 554, 557; II., 11.

Sir John, Solicitor-General (1788-1793); I., 510; II., 198, 213, 230-233, 235(2), 245.

—, as Attorney-General; II., 403; III., 76, 533.

Sir William, Chancellor of the diocese of London; II., 230, 504.

General; I., 461.

Mr.; I., 108.

Mr.; II., 225; III., 194.

a messenger; III., 326.

—; I., 498.

Scylla and Charybdis, allusion to; I., 144.

Sealey, Joseph; I., 262 (2), 263; III., 285.

Seal-skins; II., 99.

Seamen, families of, Bill for payments to, alluded to; I., 297, 299, 302, 309.

Scare, —; I., 268.

Seaton, —; I., 42, 45, 46.

Seckendorf, General, Quartermaster-General to Duke Albert; II., 626.

Secretary of State; III., 62, 193.

Pitt reported to be; I., 162.

Department or Office of; I., 290, 368, 369, 482, 535 (2), 536, 555, 575, 586, 604; II., 231, 237, 306-308, 344, 432, 440, 514; III., 286. salary of; II., 512, 513.

Secretary of State—cont.

- for the Home Department (including Ireland and the Colonies); III., 167, 560, and see— North, Lord (1783).
 Townshend, Thomas, Lord Sydney (1783).
 Grenville, W. W. (1789).
 Dundas, Henry, (1791).
 Portland, Duke of, (1794).
 —, Office of, or Lord Sydney's office; I., 301, 313, 352, 375, 390, 391, 401, 412.
 —, —, clerks in; I., 475.
 for the Foreign Department; II., 134; III., 167; and see— Fox, Charles James (1783).
 Osborne, Lord Carnarthen and Duke of Leeds (1783).
 Grenville, Lord (1791).
 —, office of, see Foreign Office.
 a third; see War, Secretary at.
 Under, Mr. Hammond succeeds Mr. Burges as; III., 141.
 —, Office of; III., 70, 95.
 Secret service money; III. 369.
 Sédan; II., 525, 620; III. 475.
 municipality of; II., 304 (2).
 Ségur, Comte de; I. 281; III., 440.
 embassies of, to Rome and Berlin; II., 242.
 Seine, the, persons drowned in; II., 517.
 Selkirk;
 Earl of. See Douglas.
 Alexander, Ode of, quoted; III., 400.
 Selwin, Colonel; I., 51.
 Selwyn, Mr.; I., 118, 145.
 Sémonville, Marquis de; II., 275, 355; III., 350.
 Madame de; II., 587, 588.
 Sempill, Hugh, Lord; II., 340, 349.
 Senegal; II., 430, 437.
 Serens, Serent, or Serrant, Comte de; III., 105, 117, 129, 179, 365, 561.
 Seringapatam; II. 185. capture of; II., 192, 209.
 Serrant. See Serent.
 Serrurier; II., 582.
 Settlement, Act of; III., 423.
 Seven Years War, the; III., 258.
 Severn, —, death of; I., 209.
 Severn, the river, cruisers guarding; I., 351.
 Sévres (Seve, Sèves); II., 567; III., 429.
 letters dated at; III., 429–431, 437–440.
 Sevrigh, Mr.; III., 369, 384.
 Seymour;
 Charles, Duke of Somerset; I., 53, 54.
 Sir E.; I., 53.
 Seymour Conway;
 Francis, Earl of Hertford; I., 145, 146, 480, 571.
 —, as former Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland; I., 572.

Seymour Conway, Francis—cont.

- , as 1st Marquis of Hertford; II., 478.
 —, death of; II., 595.
 —, his wife [Isabella]; I., 145.
 Francis, Viscount Beauchamp, his son; I., 173, 175, 179, 208; II., 397, 398.
 —, as Earl of Yarmouth; II., 406, 407, 410, 426, 430–432, 434, 436, 437, 475, 478, 497, 500, 503, 509, 594.
 —, as 2nd Marquis of Hertford; II., 593, 595, 636, 643, 653.
 —, letters from; II., 399, 451, 453, 470, 479, 503, 536, 592, 601, 606, 635, 643, 653.
 —, letters to; II., 446, 451, 467, 476, 601, 606.
 —, brother of; II., 452.
 General Henry. See Conway.
 Shaftesbury, Earl of. See Cooper, Anthony Ashley.
 Shah Aulm, Shaalum or Bahader Shah, King, son of Aurungzebe (1709); I., 42.
 as the Great Mogul. See Mogul, the Great.
 Shah Allum, restoration of, alluded to (1784); I., 243.
 son of; I., 243.
 Shakespeare, William. inscription in honour of, wanted; I., 160.
 monument of, in Westminster Abbey; I., 160. plays of. See Plays.
 Shanes Castle, Ireland; II., 20.
 Shannon, Earl of. See Boyle.
 Shannon, the river; I., 231.
 Shaw;
 Captain; I., 610, 611.
 a messenger. See Schaw.
 Sheaffe, Lieut. R. H.; III., 529, 530.
 letter from; III., 530.
 Sheerness, Kent, Master attendant of the dockyard at; I. 113.
 mutiny in the fleet at; III., 328 (2).
 Sheffield, John, Duke of Buckingham, works of; I., 76.
 Sheffield, "little books" got from; II., 345.
 men; II., 345.
 outrages at; II., 327.
 reform association in; II., 268.
 Shelburne, Earl of. See Petty, William.
 Shenberg, Dr.; I., 156.
 Shene, Mr.; I., 568.
 Shepherd;
 of the East India Company; I., 29, 30.
 of co. Bucks; I., 264.
 Sherbourne, co. Dorset; I., 3.
 Sheridan;
 [Charles Francis] Military Secretary to Lord Buckingham; I., 198, 205, 208, 345, 365, 386, 391, 418, 422, 439, 440.

Sheridan, Charles Francis—cont.

- , dismissal of; I., 440, 441, 444, 445.
- , wife and children of; I., 440, 441, 444.
- , sisters of; I., 440.
- Richard Brinsley; I., 198, 202, 205, 252, 287, 374, 388, 434, 439; II., 458, 480.
- , speech of, alluded to; I., 412.
- , and the French revolution; I., 561.
- , writing of, in the Morning Post; I., 608.
- , motion of, in the Commons; III., 308.
- , brother of. See Sheridan, Charles Francis.

Sheriffs, powers of; I., 17.

Sherley, Mr.; I., 15.

Shetland islands; I., 47.

Shipman, Mr.; I., 39.

Ships, English:

- captured; III., 524, 525.
- , release of; III., 87.
- capture of American vessels by. See American ships.
- commanders of, instructions to; III., 526.
- cruisers to guard the coasts; I., 350.
- for the South seas; II., 74.
- gun ships; I., 582.
- prize; I., 183.
- of the line, to be fitted out; I., 579 (2), 580.
- transports; I., 587, 588.
- wrecked; III., 164.

Ships named:

- Africa*; III., 423.
- Agamemnon*; III., 126.
- Albion*; II., 623; III., 87.
- Ambuscade*, French; III., 524.
- Anna*; I., 14.
- Asia*; III., 95.
- Assemblée Nationale*, French; II., 586.
- Astrea*; II., 98, 99.
- Barfleur*; II., 422.
- Bedford*; I., 4, 11.
- Bellerophon*; II., 474.
- Canada*; III., 142.
- Canterbury*; I., 14.
- Carmagnole*, French; II., 465.
- Catherine*; III., 524.
- Chambers*, frigate; I., 14, 44.
- Charles*; III., 525.
- Colopus*; III., 98.
- Conway*; II., 396.
- Cunberland*; II., 423.
- Delight*; III., 525.
- Diamond*; I., 20.
- Duchess*; I., 7, 32.
- Edgar*; II., 402.
- Elizabeth and Margaret*; II., 98, 99.
- Foulis*; I., 573.
- Galatée*, French; II., 465.
- Ganges*; I., 247.
- , officers of; I., 248.

Ships named—cont.

- Grange*; III., 524.
- Hampshire*; I., 4.
- Hawke*; II., 185.
- Heathcote*; I., 43 (2), 44.
- Herne*; I., 60.
- Hinchinbroke*; I., 257.
- Horsham*; I., 14.
- Industry*, French; III., 525.
- Jason*; III., 98, 100, 101, 103.
- Jupiter*, brings Princess Caroline to England; III., 49.
- Litchfield*; I., 42.
- Loyal Cooke*; I., 11, 20, 21, 26.
- Marie Elizabeth*, Danish; III., 105.
- Martha*; I., 14.
- Narcissus*; II., 419.
- Nautilus*; III., 528.
- , officers of, seized; III., 528.
- Nonsuch*; II., 623.
- Orion*; III., 98.
- Phœnix*; I., 8.
- Pilgrim*; III., 525.
- Pomona*; III., 93.
- Prince*; III., 98.
- Prince George*, Danish; I., 36.
- Prince of Wales*; III., 98.
- Queen Charlotte*; III., 98.
- Ranger*, packet boat; III., 416, 422.
- Républicaine*, French; III., 15.
- Robusta*; III., 138.
- Roehampton*; III., 525.
- Royal William*; III., 96.
- Russia Merchant*; III., 14.
- St. Esprit (St. Espre)*, French, III., 14.
- Sans-Culotte*, French; III., 525.
- Sappho*; II., 91, 99.
- Sémillante*, French; II., 465.
- Somers*; I., 19 (2).
- Southampton*; II., 623.
- , captain of; II., 623.
- Strutham*; I., 60.
- Swallow*; I., 573.
- Tankerville*; I., 21, 25, 26.
- , loss of; III., 69.
- Thames*; II., 465.
- Vanguard*; II., 474.
- Vengeance*; II., 613.
- Venus*; II., 399, 406.
- Veteran*; II., 613.
- William Tell*; III., 524.
- Shirley, Sir Thomas; I., 567.
- Shooter's Hill, Kent, Prince Edward at; I., 558.
- Shore, Mr., or Sir John; I., 557; II., 307, 308, 321, 323, 324.
- Shoreham, Sussex, election at; I., 108.
- Short, Mr.; II., 283.
- Shovell, Sir Cloudesley; I., 26, 28.
- Shrewsbury, Duke of (in 1714). See Talbot, Charles.
- Shropshire, places in; II., 201.
- Siam, King of; I., 45.
- Sicignano, Duke of; II., 395 (2).
- Sicilian treaty; II., 411.
- Sicily, grain from; III., 127.
- Sidmouth, letter dated at; II., 194.

- Sidney, Sir ; I., 152.
 Sieg, the river ; III., 51, 218.
 Sierra Leone, Bill concerning ; II., 105.
 Sieveking, Mr. ; III., 222.
 Siéyès, Abbé ; II., 69, 462, 463, 471, 541 (2), 542, 548-550, 553, 555-557, 560-562, 564, 567-569, 571, 573-575, 586-589 ; III., 219.
 character of ; III., 64, 86.
 Silesia ; II., 170, 269.
 Prussian ; III., 232.
 Upper ; II., 96.
 Silius Italicus, Addison's translations of, mentioned ; II., 9.
 Sillery ; II., 462.
 Silvester ; III., 49, 52.
 Simcoe, Colonel or General ; II., 188, 234, 405, 602, 611 ; III., 534.
 as Lieut.-Governor of Upper Canada ; III., 69.
 proceedings of ; III., 527-530.
 Simcoe, Lake ; II., 611.
 Simolin, Mons. de, Russian Ambassador at Paris ; III., 448.
 Simon, his account of the French royal family ; II., 528, 529.
 arrest of ; II., 551.
 Sinclair, Sir John ; I., 591.
 Sinclair, Lake ; II., 611.
 Sinking Fund ; I., 213 ; III., 383.
 bill ; I., 261.
 Sionville, Monsieur ; II., 305.
 Sistova, Sistove or Sistovo, negotiations at ; II., 63, 64, 71, 73, 93, 96, 102, 106, 111, 121, 137, 156, 160, 163 (2), 165, 166.
 peace of ; II., 129, 167, 171, 182.
 Sittingbourne, Kent, letters dated at ; III., 140, 377.
 Skiddaw ; II., 4.
 Skipworth or Scipworth, Sir Thomas ; I., 36.
 Slater, a messenger ; II., 65, 132, 268, 426, 495.
 Slave trade or African slave trade, the ; I., 308, 353 ; III., 442-443, 446.
 bill ; I., 342.
 Slaves or Slavery ; II., 104.
 Sloane, Mr. ; II., 437, 453.
 Sloper, General ; I., 241, 525.
 Smalls, the, the lights of ; I., 351.
 Smalridge, George, Bishop of Bristol ; I., 55.
 Smith, Smyth :
 Mr., Secretary of the Ordnance in Ireland ; I., 359.
 —, family of ; I., 359.
 Mr., of Queenborough ; I., 115.
 Mr., of Thame ; III., 102-104.
 — son-in-law of ; III., 103.
 Robert, clerk of the Treasury ; I., 483 ; II., 12, 303, 310.
 Sir Robert ; III., 472.
 Sir Skeffington ; I., 487, 511, 516.
 Sir Sydney ; II., 605 ; III., 101, 276, 280, 283, 287.
 —, letter to ; III., 276.
 Capt. Sydney ; II., 169, 213.
 Smith, Smyth—cont.
 Col. William Stephen, late secretary of Legation from the United States ; II., 145, 157, 158, 160, 264.
 —, letter from ; II., 145.
 General ; II., 165.
 —, clerk to Lord Buckingham, death of ; I., 262.
 —, an American at Basle ; II., 554, 555.
 Smythe :
 Lionel, Viscount Strangford ; I., 511-515, 519, 521, 525.
 —, wife of ; I., 514.
 Sir Sydney Stafford, Lord Chief Baron of Exchequer ; I., 523.
 Sneyd, Mr. ; I., 314, 335, 336.
 brother of ; I., 335.
 Snodlands, Kent, living of ; II., 432, 439.
 Snowdon ; II., 4.
 Soders or Great Soders, Ontario, American settlement at ; III., 528-530.
 letter dated at ; III., 530.
 Soestdyk, in Holland ; III., 156.
 Soissons, France ; I., 484.
 Solano, fleet of ; III., 235.
 Solden (Cornwall?) ; I., 70.
 Soldiers or troops, raising of ; I., 286. to go to Jamaica ; I., 582.
 asked for in Holland ; II., 374.
 with the fleet ; III., 423, 424.
 at Toulon. See Toulon.
 to be lent, if needed, to Austria ; III., 75.
 for Quiberon. See Quiberon, expedition to.
 Solerne, Swiss canton of ; II., 313.
 Soleure ; II., 449 ; III., 451.
 Solhilac ; III., 538, 540.
 letters from, notes of ; III., 541.
 Solicitor-General ; I., 541 ;
 and see Macdonald, Sir Archibald ;
 Scott, Sir John, and Mitford, Sir John.
 Solomon, commandant of the guard at the Temple ; II., 556.
 Solyma, nymphs of ; I., 141.
 Sombreuil, Comte Charles de ; II., 103.
 Somers, John, Lord Somers ; I., 541.
 —, as President of the Council ; I., 38.
 —, as former Lord Chancellor ; I., 319 ;
 —, II., 467, 468.
 Somerset :
 Earl of. See Carr, Robert.
 Duke of. See Seymour, Charles.
 Henry, Duke of Beaufort ; II., 300.
 Henry Charles, Marquess of Worcester ; II., 300.
 Somerset, county of ; I., 270, 356, 370 ;
 II., 12, 240, 247, 416 ; III., 147.
 copper in ; I., 259, 261, 274.
 Somerville, James, Lord ; I., 592 (2), 602.
 Somme, the river ; II., 547.
 Soracte, in Italy ; II., 5.
 Sorrento (Surrentum) ; II., 9, 20.
 Sorville, Mons. de, letter from, notes of ; III., 540.
 Soubejirans, — ; II., 305.

Soubrani, Commissary ; II., 576, 580, 586.
 Soulavie ; II., 457.
 Souriceau, a mason ; III., 107, 108, 120-123.
 South, Captain ; I., 14, 22.
 Southampton, Lord. See Fitzroy, Charles.
 Southampton ; I., 65 ; II., 401, 437 ; III., 93, 98, 102, 104.
     Frenchmen at ; II., 448 ; III., 100.
     Prince of Orange goes to ; III., 134.
 Southsea, camp at, letter dated at ; III., 93, 95, 96, 98, 99, 102, 103, 134, 136.
 South Sea Company, collapse of, alluded to ; I., 65 (2).
 South seas, the ; II., 22, 74.
 South Shields ; II., 328.
 Southwark, address from ; I., 265.
 Spa ; II., 120, 359.
     Geronsière and Sauveniere springs at ; I., 595.
     Convent of Capuchin friars at ; I., 594.
     description of ; I., 594, 595.
     letters dated at ; I., 105, 593 ; II., 117, 165, 184.
     magistrates of ; I., 595.
     visitors to ; I., 103, 105, 164, 218, 261, 356, 607 ; II., 18, 118-120.
 Spain, King of :
     "Charles III." [titular], Archduke of Austria ; I., 6, 12, 26, 28, 33, 34.
     —, arrival of, in England ; I., 8, 10.
     Charles III. [Bourbon] as "the late King" ; II., 368.
     Charles IV. ; II., 109, 122, 131, 203, 204 (2), 365, 368, 374, 580, 598 ; III., 258, 464.
     —, steps taken by, in favour of the French King ; II., 376.
     —, suggested assassination of ; II., 459.
     —, declaration of war against England by ; III., 284, 287.
     —, fleet of. See Spanish fleet.
     —, second son of ; III., 287.
     Queen of ; II., 368, 369, 386.
     —, her lover ; II., 369.
 Spain ; I., 36, 189, 285 ; II., 22, 46, 47, 61, 62, 65, 133, 138, 181, 189, 209, 213, 578, 584 ; III., 10, 75, 96, 127, 175, 382, 431, 440, 441. colonies of ; I., 605 ; II., 74.
     —, contraband trade with ; II., 3.
     commissions in ; II., 203.
     court of, Spanish Court, Court of Madrid ; I., 603 ; II., 52-54, 83, 98, 134, 189, 263, 267, 297, 373, 399, 406, 449, 475, 511, 533, 537, 584 ; III., 10.
     —, ambassadors or ministers to, from England. See Fitzherbert, Alleyne, Lord St. Helens ; Jackson, F. J. ; and Stuart, John, Earl of Bute.

Spain, Court of—cont.

—, ambassadors or ministers from, to foreign Courts ; II., 53, 97, 368 ; III., 428 ; and see under the several countries.
 —, English embassy to ; II., 190, 359, 447, 453, 476, 478, 492, 493, 498, 503, 509.
 —, —, Morton Eden withdraws his acceptance of ; II., 594, 595.
 —, —, Lord Hertford declines ; II., 653.
 —, —, Secretary of ; II., 204.
 —, envoy extraordinary to, from Holland ; III., 73.
 —, ministers or ministry of ; I., 606, II., 176, and see Florida Blanca, Count.
 —, —, change of ; II., 261, 367, 386.
 —, —, the new Prime Minister of. See Alcadia, duc de la.
 —, Minister of Finance ; II., 369.
 —, treaty or convention with ; I., 194, 273, 276 ; II., 21, 386, 398.
 —, satisfaction demanded from ; I., 579 (2), 580, 596.
 —, negotiations with ; I., 606, 607 ; II., 22, 31, 134, 162, 175, 254, 284 (2), 373, 375, 376, 383, 433, 438, 447 ; and see Nootka Sound.
 —, relations of, with France ; II., 83, 135, 177, 318, 368, 648.
 —, negotiations and treaty of, with France ; III., 57, 73, 93, 96, 100, 104, 127, 213, 222, 302, 339, 533.
 —, danger of a rupture with ; III., 127, 128, 148, 246.
 —, probable future action of ; III., 214, 233, 266, 350, 353, 355.
 —, compensation expected from ; III., 379.
 fleet of. See Spanish fleet.
 imports, exports, and duties of ; I., 171, 179, 188, 200, 261, 582, 585.
 Junta de Estado ; II., 368.
 —, replaced by new Council of State ; II., 369.
 order of the Golden Fleece in ; II., 204.
 ports of ; I., 585, 588 ; II., 71 ; III., 127.
 possessions of, in America. See America, Spanish settlements in.
 —, in the West Indies ; II., 409 ; III., 241.
 trade with ; I., 187, 189.
 travellers to ; I., 606 ; III., 69.
 revolt in ; I., 264.
 in relation to America ; I., 264.
 territorial claims of ; I., 572-575.
 difficulties or possible war with ; I., 573, 580, 587, 589 ; II., 51.
 preparations in ; I., 585.
 instructions sent to ; I., 596.

Spain—cont.

- suggested invasion of, by France; II., 569. predicted revolution in; II., 569. defence of the frontiers of; II., 602.
 seizure of Dutch vessels by; III., 71.
 New; II., 511.
 Spaniards or the Spaniards; II., 42, 429, 437, 522, 551, 580; III., 368. to be forced to accept King Charles; I., 33.
 repulse of; II., 419.
 General Dugommier ordered to attack; II., 528.
 Spanish:
   armaments; I., 315.
   army or troops; II., 422, 448; III., 128.
   —, at Toulon; II., 449.
   —, desertions from; III., 250.
   —, officers of, at Nootka; II., 511.
   chargé d'affaires; II., 204, 365.
   commercial treaty; I., 349.
   consul generals; II., 86, 154.
   courier; I., 603.
   cruisers; II., 98.
   —, captain of; II., 99.
   declaration; I., 603 (2), 606; II., 131.
   embassy in England, chaplain to; II., 323, 419.
   fleet or ships; I., 54, 585, 613; III., 251, 348, 487.
   —, West Indian. See West Indian fleet.
   general; II., 448.
   governor; III., 375.
   main, British establishments on; I., 572.
   packet boats; II., 409.
   proverb quoted; I., 145.
   rupture; II., 437.
   settlements in the South Seas; II., 74, 82.
   Succession, the, war of; I., 8, 9, 28; II., 49.
   sugars; II., 31.
   wines, duty on; I., 171.
 Spanish Town, Jamaica, Governor's house at; I., 232.
 Sparrow, Colonel, High Sheriff of co. Armagh; III., 389.
 Sparte, Cape; II., 403.
 Spencer:
   Charles, 3rd Earl of Sunderland, death of; I., 67.
   George, 4th Duke of Marlborough; I., 267; II., 165, 279; III., 91.
   George, Marquis of Blandford, his eldest son; I., 334.
   George John, Earl Spencer; II., 464; III., 479.
   —, as first Lord of the Admiralty; III., 14, 19, 89, 91, 182, 234, 236, 362.
   —, letters from; II., 624, 632; III., 87, 91, 296, 328, 374, 380.
   —, letters to; II., 643; III., 562.

Spencer, Earl—cont.

- , mission of, to Vienna; II., 601 (3), 602, 606, 607, 609, 614, 620, 622, 624–626, 629, 630, 632, 636, 639, 640, 641, 643.
 —, at Cabinet meetings, as Lord Privy Seal; II., 644, 646.
 —, at Cabinet meetings, as first Lord of the Admiralty; III., 35, 36, 261, 283, 310.
 —, house of, Cabinet meeting held at; III., 261.
 Lord Henry John; II., 165, 188, 189, 217, 219, 223, 225, 227, 233, 240–243, 246, 247, 251, 265, 270, 279, 287, 292, 295, 384, 409.
 —, letters from; II., 88, 264, 290.
 —, appointment of, to Berlin; II., 621, 651.
 —, letter from; III., 561.
 —, death of; III., 90.
 Lord R[obert]; I., 180.
 Mr.; I., 102.
 Spenser, Edmund, allusion to; I., 141.
 Spice Islands; I., 591; II., 32.
 — (Dutch); III., 241.
 trade; I., 588.
 Spielmann or Spielman; II., 194; III., 331.
 Spinola, Marquis; III., 306.
 Spires, bishop of; II., 85.
 Spithead; II., 277, 634; III., 103, 104, 142, 328, 329. convicts at; I., 542, 546.
   fleet at; II., 45.
   Portuguese ships at; II., 412.
   Lord Howe at; II., 608.
 Sporek, General; III., 133.
 Staal, a Friesland patriot; III., 252.
 Stade, on the Elbe; III., 9.
 Stadion, Count, ambassador from the Emperor to England; II., 72, 78, 85, 92, 98, 113, 136, 158, 168, 171, 270, 285, 365.
 Stadt, troops embarked from; III., 142.
 Stael, (Stahl) Mons. de, Swedish Ambassador to France; II., 242, 371; III., 7, 60.
 Madame de; II., 242; III., 479.
 —, father of. See Necker.
 Stafford:
   Marquis of. See Leveson-Gower, Granville.
   Mr.; I., 37.
 Stafford, gaols at; I., 524.
 Staffordshire manufacturers and ware; II., 252.
 Stair, Earl of. See Dalrymple, John.
 Stakelberg, Count; II., 87, 88, 102.
 Stalden, Mr.; I., 108.
 Stamford, Colonel; II., 291.
 Stamford, General [de]; III., 293, 403.
 Stamp office; I., 383.
 Stamps, board of; II., 493.
 Stanhope:
   [Caroline?], Lady Harrington; I., 148.
   Charles, Earl of Harrington; I., 525.
   Charles, 3rd Earl Stanhope; I., 351, 564; II., 445.

Stanhope, Charles, Earl—cont.

—, "nonsense talked by"; II., 73.
—, in relation to the French revolution; II., 570, 582.

Charles; I., 89, 90.

[General] James, Secretary of State; I., 51–53, 56, 57, 65.

—, letter of; I., 51.

—, as 1st Earl Stanhope; I., 85.

Lucy, his wife [daughter of Governor Pitt]; I., 68, 70.

—, letter of; I., 50.

—, death of; I., 69 (2).

—, children of; I., 58, 66, 70 (2); and see Stanhope, Philip, and Lady Lucy.

—, mother of. See Pitt, Jane.

Lady Lucy; I., 70, 77.

Philip, 2nd Earl Stanhope; I., 70, 76, 85, 87 (2).

Philip, 4th Earl of Chesterfield; I., 155.

—, letters of; I., 137, 139.

Philip; I., 137.

—, as 5th Earl of Chesterfield; I., 264, 265, 267 (2), 268, 276; II., 284, 307, 614.

—, letter of; I., 266.

Captain; II., 613.

Stanley, Edward, Earl of Derby; I., 206.

Stannaries; I., 114, 129.

warden of; I., 115, 116.

vice-warden of; I., 128, 129 (2), 130.

Stannary or coinage towns; I., 116, 127.

laws; I., 127.

Stapleton, Mrs.; II., 300.

Starhemberg or Stahrenberg, Comte de, ambassador from the Emperor to England; II., 283, 292, 295, 365, 379, 401, 403–405, 414, 416, 432, 469, 473, 505, 608, 625 (2), 631, 641; III., 34, 43, 47, 68, 92, 133, 134, 163, 179, 180, 234, 298, 306, 308, 486.

letters from; III., 31, 45, 145, 165 (2), 192, 200, 234, 259, 263, 267, 268 (2), 270, 272, 274, 275 (2), 280, 296, 297, 300, 301, 307 (2), 313, 316, 317, 321, 324, 326, 328, 331 (2), 343, 376 (2).

letters to; III., 21, 45, 50, 70, 144, 197, 235, 246, 267, 301, 309, 315, 317, 327, 332, 344, 375, 381, 404, 517, 519.

to negotiate in Count Merci's place; II., 625 (2).

Lord Grenville holds conference with; II., 645.

distress of, at the peace between Austria and France; III., 316–318, 324, 331, 332, 344, 395.

proposal to supersede; III., 206, 208. charged with a new proposal; III., 396.

wife and children of; III., 344.

father of; II., 365; III., 206, 207, 324. family of; II., 365; III., 68.

Starke, Captain; III., 212.

Stayley, Mr. III., 439.

Steele [Thomas]; I., 296, 535, 563; II., 12.

Steengragl, M.; II., 24.

Steigner, Avoyer de; III., 168, 169.

Stein, General; II., 471.

Steinberg (Steenberg), Baron de; III., 58, 92, 148, 149, 293, 402, 405–407.

Stenay, in France; III., 450, 475, 477.

Stephens, Mrs.; I., 98, 102, 103.

Stephenson, Captain; II., 405.

Stetin; III., 199.

Stevens, James; III., 196.

Stewart:

[David] Baron of Exchequer, Scotland; I., 586.

John, Earl of Galloway; I., 592, 593, 596, 602, 603.

[Robert, afterwards Lord Stewart, Viscount Castlereagh and Earl and Marquis of Londonderry]; I., 426, 430, 468, 581.

Lieut.-General William; I., 9, 13, 41, 49, 74 (2), 75.

—, letters from; I., 56–58, 61.

—, wife of. See Villiers, Mary, Lady Grandison.

Brigadier (his son); I., 74.

Lieut.-General; II., 285.

Major; III., 205, 206.

Mr. (son of Lord Londonderry, afterwards Lord Castlereagh); II., 28, 33 (2), 35, 36, 38, 40.

Mr. (artist); I., 140, 142.

or Stuart, Mr. (surgeon); I., 477, 478.

Stewart Hall, near Dungannon; I., 592.

Stewart's town, co. Tyrone; III., 387.

Stirling, letter dated at; II., 212.

Stockbridge, co. Hants; I., 53.

election at; I., 113.

letter dated at; I., 115.

Stockdale, Mr.; I., 263.

Stockholm; II., 47, 87, 102, 242, 290, 518, 581.

letters from, read in Paris; II., 581.

negotiations at; II., 22, 170.

Prussian minister at; II., 87.

Stockport, co. Chester, manufacturers of; I., 177.

Stocks or stock; III., 383. And see Funds.

East India. See East India stock.

Stofflet or Stoffel, General; III., 96, 113, 114, 122, 123, 561.

army of; III., 108, 111, 114, 362–364, 394.

character of; III., 114.

"fights like a devil"; III., 540.

death of; III., 364.

Stoke Mandeville, co. Bucks; I., 271; II., 247.

Stokes' Bay; II., 526.

Stone:

George, dean of Derry (in 1737); 96–98.

—, as primate [Archbishop of Armagh]; I., 365.

Mr.; II., 309, 448.

Stony Stratford, co. Bucks; I., 253.
 Stolford, James, 2nd Earl of Courtown; I., 177, 180, 183, 406.
 Stormont, Lord. See Murray, David.
 Stourton, Edward, 12th Lord Stourton; I., 62.
 Stowe, co. Bucks (residence of Lord Buckingham); I., 262, 486, 525; II., 282, 294, 297, 300, 419, 441, 465; III., 103, 136; and passim.
 Cobham Arms at; I., 590.
 festivities at; I., 433.
 letters dated at; I., 157, 158, 213, 214, 216, 230-291 passim, 419, 420, 431, 444, 482, 531 (2), 537-539, 543, 553, 560, 562, 564, 589, 593, 611; II., passim; III., 2, 11, 142-147, 256, 270, 281, 284, 285, 294, 313, 317, 368, 390, 401, 403, 404.
 letter addressed to; I., 240.
 Lord Buckingham returns to; I., 481, 483, 529, 530.
 venison from; II., 418.
 visitors to; I., 105, 558; II., 10.
 Stowey, co. Somerset; I., 179.
 Stracey, Mr.; I., 63.
 Strachan, Sir Richard; III., 193.
 Strangford, Viscount. See Smythe, Lionel.
 Strasburg or Strasbourg; II., 452, 488; III., 132, 257.
 magazines at; III., 83.
 mayor of. See Keppeler.
 municipality of; III., 83.
 General Pichegru at; III., 198.
 Stratfieldsaye or Stratfelsea, co. Hants.
 letter dated from; I., 49.
 resident at. See Pitt, George.
 Stratford, Edward, 2nd Earl of Aldborough; I., 186, 212.
 Stratford-on-Avon, co. Warwick; I., 160.
 Stratford-near-Sarum, co. Wilts; I., 13, 19, 53, 78, 89.
 church at; I., 13.
 letters dated at; I., 35, 64.
 letters addressed to; I., 49 (2), 56-73.
 Robert Pitt's house at; I., 34, 38, 69, 86.
 Stratton, Mr.; II., 347, 640.
 Stratton, General; I., 335, 526.
 Strawberry Hill; I., 155.
 letters dated from; I., 146, 158.
 Struensee, Count, Prussian Minister of Finance; II., 493, 565; III., 163.
 Stuart:
 Andrew Thomas, Lord Castlestewart and Lord Ochiltree; I., 590, 592 (2), 597.
 General Charles; III., 267.
 Francis, Earl of Moray; III., 206.
 Gabriel; I., 488.
 Sir J.; II., 214.
 Sir James; I., 519.
 John, 3rd Earl of Bute; I., 152, 368, 590, 592, 593.
 —, [Mary], his wife; I., 146, 147, 149.

Stuart—cont.

John, 4th Earl of Bute; II., 360.
 —, as ambassador to Spain; III., 57, 92.
 —, as Marquis of Bute; III., 284 (2).
 —; III., 374.
 Stukeley [co. Hunts?], living of; I., 293.
 Sturgeon, Major; II., 441.
 Sturges, Abraham; I., 95.
 Stuttgart (Stutgard); III., 299, 303.
 Styleman:
 John, letter of; I., 12.
 Thomas, letter of; I., 7.
 Styria; III., 313, 318.
 Suabia. See Swabia.
 Succession, war of the. See Spanish Succession.
 Sudbourn, co. Suffolk, letter dated at; II., 635.
 Sudbury (?), election at; I., 198.
 Sudbury Green, Middlesex, letter dated from; I., 263.
 Suffolk, Duchess of. See Howard, Henrietta.
 Suffolk, militia of; I., 498.
 Sugar trade; II., 29.
 Sullivan:
 J.; I., 518, 567.
 Mr.; I., 334.
 Sunderland, Earl of. See Spencer, Charles.
 Surapa, "a black merchant"; I., 44, 46, 48.
 Surat; I., 2, 5, 231.
 chiefship of; III., 195.
 Surgere, Madame de; I., 150.
 Surinam, Dutch colony at; III., 46, 74.
 Surrentum. See Sorrento.
 Surrey; I., 51, 237; II., 348.
 election for; I., 108.
 Sussex, Duke of. See Augustus Frederick, Prince.
 Sussex militia; II., 453.
 Sutherland, Earl of (in 1747). See Gordon, William.
 Countess of. See Leveson Gower, Elizabeth.
 Suthwall [Southwell?], Lady Betty; I., 35.
 Sutton:
 Harry; I., 71, 72.
 —, letters of; I., 70, 72.
 John, his brother, Governor Pitt's secretary; I., 72, 75, 88 (3), 90.
 —, letters of; I., 72, 73, 79, 83.
 Robert, 2nd Lord Lexington; I., 62.
 Sir Robert, ambassador at Constantinople, letter of; I., 20.
 Mr.; I., 415.
 — (clerk); I., 63 (2).
 Sutton [co. Berks?]; I., 74.
 Suvarow, General; II., 87.
 Suzanet, Mons. de; III., 394.
 Swabia or Suabia; III., 131, 146.
 Swallowfield, co. Berks; I., 63, 66, 78.
 letters addressed to; I., 86-90.
 letters dated at; I., 73, 74, 79-90.

Swallowfield—cont.

Governor Pitt's house and estate at; I., 68, 70 (2), 72, 73, 75, 89, 133, 135.

— his death at; I., 76.

Sweden, King of:

(Charles XII.); I., 29.

(Gustavus III.); I., 353, 596, 606; II., 49, 57, 87, 112, 144, 170, 177, 178, 227.

—, letter from; II., 88.

—, minister of, at Copenhagen; I., 353.

—, declares war against Russia; II., 47.

—, visit of, to Germany; II., 87.

—, at Aix la Chapelle; III., 450.

—, peace made with, by the Empress of Russia; II., 143.

—, to join the crusade against France; II., 177.

—, attack upon; II., 264.

(Gustavus IV.); III., 333.

—, uncle of, wishes to marry an English princess; III., 332.

—, —, sister of; III., 332.

Sweden; II., 22, 47–49, 61, 62, 95, 142, 209, 224, 512, 550, 554, 556, 561, 564, 569, 573; III., 60, 224, 225.

Court of, inclinations of; II., 38, 389.

—, minister from, to England; II., 615; III., 78. And see Noleken, Baron.

—, —, to France. See Stael, Monsieur de.

mission from, at the Porte; III., 148.

regent of; II., 556, 581.

wars of; I., 47, 606.

Danish invasion of; I., 360; II., 48.

Russia makes peace with; II., 49, 227.

alliance of, with Prussia; II., 49, 182.

treaty of, with the French; II., 515, 518.

articles of, with Poland; II., 572.

supply of corn from; III., 59.

trade of, with the East; III., 420.

Swedes; II., 211, 385.

naval battle fought by; I., 490.

called les Français du Nord; III., 78.

Swedish messengers or couriers; III., 52, 55, 57.

officers; II., 87.

—, naval; III., 67.

ships of Swedes; I., 48, 354; III., 92.

Swinburne, Mr.; III., 276, 280.

Swiss or the Swiss; II., 290; III., 7, 213, 485, 510.

aristocrats; II., 457.

colony in Ireland. See Ireland.

Diet, meeting of; II., 312.

government, proceedings of; II., 404.

guards, in Holland; II., 381.

—, in Paris, defence of the King by; III., 181.

a 94090.

Swiss or the Swiss—cont.

guards, massacre of; II., 301, 312; III., 472.

policy of; II., 587.

proposed subsidy for; III., 295.

regiment of Chateau Vieux; II., 312.

troops; II., 436, 445; III., 435.

Switzerland or the Swiss cantons; II., 177, 259, 276, 359, 457, 467, 512, 539, 635; III., 131, 132, 182, 485, 487.

agents to; II., 258, 427, 638 (2).

asylum in; II., 592.

Comité des Etrangers in; III., 197.

French emigrants in; III., 169.

— faction in; III., 292, 485.

Jacobins in; III., 531.

mercenary troops of; II., 122, 270.

ministers or chargés d'affaires to; II., 503, 596, 651; III., 6. And see Wickham, William and Fitzgerald, Lord Robert.

regiments of; III., 61.

seum of; III., 497.

Secret Council and Senate of; III., 197.

travellers to; II., 265, 456; III., 182, 488.

Rousseau banished from; I., 153.

indignation against France in; II., 312, 318.

raising of men in; II., 425.

speech of Pitt, printed in; II., 584.

support given by, to France; II., 597; III., 511.

critical state of affairs in; I., 632.

troops going to; III., 17.

Sydney, Lord. See Townshend, Thomas.

T.

Taafe, Count; I., 349.

Tachy-graphs, or shorthand; II., 588.

Tacitus, writings of, alluded to; III., 494.

Tagliamento, the river; III., 319.

Tainville, Monsieur; II., 360.

Taitt, Russian Rear Admiral; III., 374.

Talbot:

Charles, Duke of Shrewsbury, Lord Treasurer (in 1714); I., 364.

Charles, afterwards Sir Charles; I., 566, 581; II., 333 (?).

James; III., 143, 262, 276, 293, 294.

—, letter from; III., 397.

John; I., 389.

—, family of; I., 389.

Lieutenant; II., 418 (2), 425, 427, 428, 441, 446, 450, 453.

Mr., secretary of presentations to Lord Thurlow; II., 439.

:

Z Z

Talbot—cont.

Miss; II., 390.

"young"; II., 402.

—, soldiers under; I., 172.

Talleyrand-Périgord, Charles Maurice de, ("Edward"), Bishop of Autun, as envoy in England; II., 252, 259, 260, 266 (2), 267, 280, 281, 302, 403, 473, 480, 514; III., 477 (2), 478.

letter from; II., 374.

letter to; III., 477.

as Minister for Foreign Affairs in France; III., 335, 339, 348, 350, 352, 355, 360, 373.

information from; III., 471.

private secretary of; III., 361.

Tallien, [Jean Lambert]; II., 632; III., 160.

—, character of; III., 85.

—, friends or party of; II., 633, 638; III., 161, 216.

Madame; II., 351.

Talmond:

Prince de; II., 518.

Princess of; I., 153.

Tamar, the, bridge over; I., 116.

Tamerlane, history of; I., 263.

Tandy, James Napper; I., 233; II., 238, 330.

Tarleton, Colonel; II., 315.

Tarpeian rock, the; III., 492.

Tartars, the, ravages of; III., 476.

Tasso; II., 119.

Taubman, Mr.; I., 489.

Taunton, co. Somerset; I., 355.

letter dated at; I., 529.

Taunzin, Tauenzlein, Tauenzien, Count; II., 401, 407, 408.

Tavernier (author); I., 6.

Tavistock, co. Devon; I., 116.

Taxation; I., 231, 500.

Taxes:

land; I., 28.

malt; I., 28.

repeal of; II., 327.

revenue from; I., 257, 258.

Taylor:

Thomas, 1st Earl of Bective; I., 190, 233, 236, 352.

—, to be a knight of St. Patrick; I., 177.

—, sons of; I., 190, 352.

—, brother-in-law of; I., 190.

Thomas, Lord Headfort (son of the Earl of Bective); I., 298.

Captain; I., 352, 354, 355.

Major (of the Queen's Regiment of Dragoons); I., 438, 442, 446 (2), 449, 457.

Mr.; III., 296.

—; II., 133.

Tea, importation of; I., 247.

sales of; III., 445, 447.

Teignmouth (Tinnmouth), co. Devon; I., 502.

letters dated at; I., 502, 503, 506, 512, 513, 521, 525-527, 529.

Tellicherry; I., 601.

Telligoll, Lake; II., 73.

Temple:

1st Earl. See Grenville, Richard.

2nd Earl. See Grenville, George Nugent.

Lord; III., 402.

John or Sir John; I., 264, 275; III., 535.

Tenedos, island of; II., 581.

Teneriffe; III., 368.

Terracina, alias Auxur, in Italy; II., 8.

Ter Schelling, island of; III., 187, 190.

Teschen, treaty of; II., 174, 504.

Tessier & Co., bills on; III., 510.

Tessonnet; III., 95.

Test Act, the; II., 237.

Texel, the river; II., 31, 279, 652; III., 5, 190, 327, 380.

Admiral Duncan off; III., 328.

lack of shipping in; III., 56.

Thame, co. Oxford; I., 267; III., 102, 103.

Thames, the river; I., 152, 302.

— or La Tranche, river of, North America; II., 611.

Thanet, Earl of. See Tufton, Sackville.

Thelusson, Mr.; II., 306.

"Theobalde." See Cormartin.

Théos, Catherine; II., 588, 589.

believes herself to be the Virgin Mary; II., 589.

Theseus, temple of, allusion to; I., 140.

Thezi, alias "Elie Tommin"; II., 510.

Thionville; II., 470; III., 475.

siege of; II., 322.

Tholey, Abbé de; II., 504.

Thomas, Mr.; I., 588.

Thompson:

Sir C.; I., 187.

Mr., Deputy Governor of the Bank of Ireland; I., 172.

Sir Sodom; II., 118.

—; I., 275.

Thorn, Polish town of; II., 48; III., 475.

Thorne, "cousin"; I., 26, 32.

Thorne (? Thorpe); I., 273.

Thornton, Mr.; I., 252, 310.

Thorpe, of Oving; I., 270, 271, 273 (?), 275.

Three per Cents, redemption of; III., 382.

Thugut, Baron, Imperial Chancellor; II., 106, 384, 403, 415, 426, 440, 603, 606, 614, 617, 620, 626-628, 631, 640; III., 32, 44, 50, 67, 68, 70, 104, 105, 125, 126, 128, 137, 179, 192, 207, 208, 234, 266, 272-275, 280, 287-289, 296, 298, 299, 322, 369, 395, 396, 406.

letters from; III., 246, 513.

character or conduct of; III., 312, 315, 324, 331.

appointed to the foreign department; II., 605.

Merci's death throws the whole direction of affairs into his hands; II., 625.

- Thugut, Baron—cont.
 the only efficient minister at Vienna ;
 II., 628.
 defines the King of Prussia's wishes ;
 II., 635.
 and the peace with France ; III., 319, 323, 324, 328.
 proposed retirement of ; III., 325, 384. remains minister ; III., 331.
- Thuleymeer, Mons. de ; III., 403.
- Thurlow, Edward, Lord Thuriow, Lord
 Chancellor ; I., 171, 173, 175, 178,
 206, 207, 214-221, 250, 252, 256,
 277, 283, 293, 331, 346, 352, 376,
 387, 390, 391, 398, 427, 435, 446,
 462, 463, 467, 468, 474 (3), 488
 (2), 494, 519, 524 (2), 528, 530,
 543, 579, 602 ; II., 12(2), 105, 195,
 200-202, 215, 233, 237, 247, 249,
 272, 439 ; III., 270, 415, 428,
 457.
 letters from ; I., 503, 505, 522, 539-
 542, 551, 555, 563, 572, 575, 582,
 588, 611 ; II., 56, 89, 137, 198,
 201, 202, 230, 231, 235.
 letters from, alluded to ; II., 200, 201.
 letters to ; I., 482, 484, 496, 506, 520,
 539, 540, 555, 559, 564, 571, 573,
 577, 582, 587, 611 ; II., 89, 136,
 197, 200, 230, 231, 234, 235.
 ill-humour of, towards Pitt ; I., 487. matters referred to ; I., 518, 521.
 opinions of ; I., 522, 542, 548.
 patronage of ; I., 285, 286, 334.
 pension for ; I., 205.
 called "this bear" ; II., 248.
 secretary of Presentations to ; II., 439.
- Thynne, Thomas, Viscount Weymouth ;
 I., 214, 216, 217, 342.
 as Earl of Bath ; II., 272.
- Tiber (Tyber), the river ; II., 5-8.
- Tiberius, the Emperor, Collot d'Herbois compared to ; III., 494.
- Tichfield or Titchfield, Lord. See Bentinck.
- Tiernay, Mr. ; III., 285, 402, 403.
- Tighe, Mr. ; I., 168.
- Tillard, Mr., President of the East India Company at Metchlepatam ; I., 14, 17, 20, 22.
- Tilly or Tilli, French envoy at Genoa ;
 II., 457, 538, 539, 574, 576, 581.
- Tilson, James ; I., 108, 117.
- Timmapa (Hindoo) ; I., 32.
- Timms, a messenger ; II., 123, 134, 505, 592.
- Tintagel (Tentagel), co. Cornwall, election at ; I., 108, 111, 113, 119, 120.
 mayor of ; I., 112, 130.
- Tintiniac, Tinteniach, Tintinnac, Mons. de ;
 II., 508 ; III., 25, 179.
- Tippary : committee ; II., 66.
 election ; II., 66.
- Tippoo Sultan ; I., 587 ; II., 11, 185, 226. country of ; II., 103.
- Tirlemont, abandonment of ; III., 513.
- Tirol. See Tyrol.
- Tirrell, Mr. ; I., 111.
- Tisdall, — ; I., 365.
- Tivoli, Lord Mornington at ; II., 118.
- Tobago, island of ; I., 490 ; II., 203.
 cession of ; II., 260, 261.
 planters ; II., 443.
- Todd, Anthony, Secretary of the Post Office ; I., 188, 195, 239.
- Toler, John, Solicitor General for Ireland ;
 I., 409 ; III., 37.
 suggested as Attorney General ; III., 37.
- Toll, Mr. ; I., 102.
- Tollendal, Count Lally ; II., 118, 307, 413 ;
 III., 484.
 letters from ; III., 478, 481, 482, 488, 512.
 letters to ; III., 488, 513.
 daughter of ; III., 488.
- Tomkins, "little" ; I., 377.
- Tomline, George Prettyman, Bishop of Lincoln ; I., 285, 287-289 ; III., 17.
- Tompkins :
 Lieut.-Colonel ; II., 501.
 Mr. ; I., 266.
 —, death of ; I., 330.
 Mr. ; I., 349.
- Tone, [Theodore Wolfe] ; II., 615.
- Tonson, Col. William [Lord Riversdale in
 1783] ; I., 189, 221, 489.
- Torbay, fleet in ; II., 422, 444, 447, 623.
- Torey, M. de ; II., 347.
- Tories, or Tory party, the ; I., 28, 114, 124. in the House of Commons ; I., 51. principles of, abused ; I., 52.
- Toronto, or York, in Canada ; II., 611.
- Torriano, Mr. ; I., 142.
- Torrington, Lord. See Byng, George.
- Tottenham, Charles, Lord Loftus ; I., 253-
 255, 311, 383, 395, 399, 400, 405,
 407, 409 (2), 418, 420, 421, 425,
 427, 434, 441, 443, 445, 450, 458,
 491-503, 510, 511, 516, 536.
 as Viscount Loftus ; I., 581 ; II., 482 ;
 III., 554.
 appointed to the Post Office, in Ireland ;
 I., 402.
 to resign the Post Office ; I., 435.
 "corruptly steady" to Lord Buckingham ; I., 441.
 "members" or followers of ; I., 521.
- Toul ; III., 475.
- Toulon ; II., 419, 429, 438, 448, 449, 456,
 464, 471-473 ; III., 102, 487.
 surrender of, to Lord Hood ; II., 422, 424.
 Commissioners at ; II., 429, 448.
 English fleet at ; II., 407, 424, 425,
 437, 439, 440, 448 ; III., 126, 487.
 — General at. See O'Hara,
 General.
 — Governor for ; II., 437, 447 (2), 448.

Toulon.—cont.

- English possession of; II., 445, 460.
- troops for, or at; II., 424, 425, 429, 431, 436, 446 (2), 448, 449.
- French fleet at; II., 440, 584.
- commander of; II., 584.
- inspector of Posts at; II., 468.
- Jacobins at; III., 84.
- magazines at; III., 82, 127.
- march of the Convention troops upon; II., 481, 533; III., 160.
- re-taking of; II., 487, 488, 490, 491; III., 136.
- projected visit of the Comte de Provence to; II., 475, 476.
- ships, business of; III., 333, 334, 382.

Toulouse; II., 586, 587.

Archbishop of. See Brienne.

Tournay or Tournai; II., 391, 559, 598.

letter dated at; II., 559.

Tours; III., 85.

bridge at; II., 479.

possible removal of the Convention to; III., 472.

Toursel or Tourzelle, Madame de; II., 305; III., 449.

Tourton and Ravel, failure of; II., 283.

Tower, the; I., 302; II., 344, 349.

prisoners at; II., 593.

Townshend:

[Audrey] Lady (wife of Charles, 3rd Viscount Townshend); I., 64, 135.

George, 4th Viscount Townshend; I., 240.

—, as former Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; I., 163, 296, 452; III., 544, 545, 553, 559.

—, as Marquess of Townshend; I., 239, 435, 516.

Thomas; I., 164 (2), 168 (2), 170–173, 175–191, 193, 195, 196, 206.

—, raising of, to the peerage; I., 205.

—, —, congratulations upon; I., 202.

— (as Lord Sydney and Secretary of State for the Home Department; I., 208–210, 252, 290, 297–391, 394, 395, 405, 442, 450, 454, 457, 463–466, 473–475.

—, as late Secretary; I., 486, 489, 505, 510, 527, 529.

—, letters from; I., 341 (2), 438.

—, alluded to; I., 339–341, 363, 392, 397, 401, 428, 431, 433, 437, 438, 444, 446 (2), 448, 449, 462, 467, 475.

—, letters to; I., 323, 415.

—, —, alluded to; I., 207, 410, 412, 414, 415, 424, 425, 427, 433, 435, 438, 452, 465, 474, 475, 536.

—, house of; II., 64.

—, office of. See Secretary of State, Home Department, office of.

Traboulsky, Prince; III., 289.

family of; III., 289.

Trade, Board of, Vicetreasureships of; I., 245, 246.

Propositions for (in 1785). See Ireland.

Transportation. See Convicts, Act concerning.

Trautsmendorff, or Trautmansdorf, Count; II., 578, 603.

Treason, women burnt for; I., 586.

Treasury or the Treasury; I., 128, 179, 342, 370, 535 (2), 585; II., 34, 647; III., 49, 286 (2).

agent of; III., 87.

appointment; II., 515.

Board, or Lords Commissioners of; I., 213, 245, 246, 264, 269, 311, 536; III., 62, 424.

—, letter to; I., 213.

clerk of, see Smith, Robert.

First Lord of. See

North, Frederick, Lord,

Watson, Charles, Marquis of Rockingham,

Petty, William, Earl of Shelbourne.

Bentinck, William Henry Cavendish, Earl of Portland,

Pitt, William.

holidays at; II., 165.

office of; I., 486, 487.

officers of; I., 117.

secretary to, see Rose, George.

solicitor to; I., 505.

to suspend payment of the subsidy to the Landgrave of Hesse; III., 134.

issue of secret service money by; III., 193.

orders from; III., 251, 401, 545.

and the Comte d'Artois; III., 368.

Treaties. See under their names.

Trebia, the river; II., 5.

Treby, "young"; I., 127.

Tregony, co. Cornwall; I., 119.

election at; I., 111, 114, 119–121, 127, 128.

mayor of; I., 119–121, 127.

Tregothnan family, see Boscawen.

Treilhard, Monsieur; II., 632; III., 377.

Trelawny [Sir Jonathan], made Bishop of Winchester; I., 33.

Trenchard, Mr.; I., 53.

Trente, Buonaparte at; III., 313.

Trentham, co. Stafford, letter dated at; I., 524.

Trettau; III., 561.

Trevanion, Mr.; I., 119, 120 (2).

Treves; II., 107.

letter dated at; III., 475.

Trevor:

John, brother of Lord Hampden; I., 334.

—, as English minister at Turin; II., 275, 330, 378, 425, 436, 524, 555; III., 25, 129, 132, 149, 197.

—, reports received from; III., 82–85.

Trewarthenick, co. Cornwall, letters dated at; I., 120, 121.

Trewinnard, Cornwall:

letters addressed to; I., 107 (2).
letters dated at; I., 107, 129, 131,
133 (2).

Trewithin, co. Cornwall; I., 110.

Triennial Act, bill for suspending; I., 58.

Trieste; II., 126, 573; III., 287.

Trim, in Ireland; I., 221, 235, 239, 286, 287, 343, 346.

—, races at; I., 165.

—, residents at, or "Trimmers"; I., 286,
288; II., 5.

Trimlestown, Lord. See Barnewall,
Thomas.Trincomalee, Trincomalé, or Trinquemalé;
I., 280, 353, 356, 589-591, 601,
606; II., 180; III., 224.

—, desired cession of, to England; III., 421, 443, 446, 447.

Trinidad; III., 369, 379.

—, Governor of; II., 409.

—, possible cession of; II., 353.

Trinity House, the; II., 599.

Trip, corps of, chasseurs of; III., 205,
212.Triple Alliance, the (Great Britain, Russia, and Austria); III., 148, 395, 397, 440.

Troyes, treaty of; III., 451.

Truguet, Comte; III., 297, 341.

—, character of; III., 161.

Truro, co. Cornwall, election at; I., 114, 127.

—, letter dated from; I., 109.

Trussler's Chronology; I., 572.

Tryon, —; I., 277; III., 244, 245, 252.

Tufton, Sackville, Earl of Thanet; I., 536.

Tuisaye, Mons. de, knight of Malta; III., 16.Tunbridge Wells, Kent, letters dated at;
II., 408, 416, 439.Tunnadine, Mr., Master in Chancery, Ireland; I., 209, 210.

Tupin; II., 571-573.

Turgot, Comte de; III., 160, 309.

Turin; I., 23; II., 4, 330, 432, 436, 475;
III., 1, 25.

—, court or cabinet of, see Sardinia.

—, letter dated at; II., 560.

Turkey, the Turk, the Porte, or the Ottoman Empire; II., 22, 23, 25, 61, 65,
134, 142, 164, 231, 373, 516; III., 74, 225, 434, 462.

—, ambassador to; III., 148.

—, ambassador from, to France; III., 350.

—, armies of; I., 612.

—, —, camp of; II., 87.

—, —, defeat of; II., 71.

—, Beys or Beigs of; I., 20.

—, Capitaine Pacha of; II., 510, 511, 515.

—, Divan of; I., 613.

—, Grand Vizir of; II., 77, 79, 91, 92, 272, 581.

—, —, camp of; II., 95.

—, Janissaries of; I., 20; II., 458.

—, ministers of; I., 20; II., 144.

Turkey--cont.

—, mission to; II., 100.

—, Reis Effendi; II., 458, 511, 581.

—, Sultan or Grand Seigneur of; I., 20;
II., 70, 472.

—, —, comparison with; III.; 494.

—, Topgis, corps of; II., 458.

—, Ulema of; II., 458.

—, and the Hungarian insurgents; I., 29.
—, the Holy Land in the power of; I., 33.

—, war of, with Russia. See Russia.

—, negotiations with or on behalf of; I.,
612; II., 31, 52, 65, 79, 87, 88, 91, 134, 150, 164, 166, 177, 215. And see Sistova, negotiations at.

—, restoration of territory to; II., 22,
48-50, 92, 142.

—, —, exceptions stipulated for. See Russia, Empress of. See also Oekzakow and Dniester.

—, previous wars of, with Russia, alluded to; II., 25, 45.

—, and the Emperor; II., 45-50, 65, 96, 97, 112-114, 122, 132.

—, cession of the Crimea by; II., 45.

—, and France; II., 46; III., 287-436.

—, great preparations made by; II., 57, 62.

—, purchase of ships by; II., 71.

—, terms of, to the Poles; II., 72.

—, treaty of Prussia with; II., 88, 148, 172, 182.

—, report that the Emperor means to renew the war with; II., 132.

—, France desires an alliance with; II., 472, 554, 561, 572, 581.

—, or Sublime Porte, "bribe from," to Lady Grenville; II., 486.

Turkish Empire; II., 510.

—, in Europe, threatened destruction of;
I., 613; II., 45, 59, 88, 169.

—, language; II., 458.

—, subsidies; II., 38.

—, territories, post in; III., 475.

Turks or the Turks:

—, character or conduct of; II., 65, 123,
162, 166; III., 288.

—, —, defeat of; II., 71.

—, —, taken prisoner; I., 2.

Turk's island, office in; I., 488.

Turreau, General; II., 530, 544 (2).

Tuscany; II., 426.

—, Grand Duke of; I., 41; II., 275, 426, 453, 554.

—, government or ministry of; II., 401, 552.

—, grain from; III., 491.

—, scenery of; II., 5.

Twickenham (Twitnam), Middlesex; I.,
36; III., 513.

—, letter dated at; III., 483, 488.

Tykime, mountains of, in Corsica; II., 524.

Tyler, Wat, allusion to; II., 91.

Tyringham, co. Bucks; II., 656.

Tyrol or Tirol; III., 297, 309, 313. journey through; II., 118.
 Buonaparte in; III., 319.
 Tyrolian troops; III., 476.
 Tyrone, Earl of. See Beresford, George de la Poer.
 Tyrone, county, disturbances in; III., 388.
 Tyrrwhit, Tom; I., 594.
 Tysson, Mr.; I., 108.

U.

Udine, [Campo Formio] negotiations at; III., 356, 389, 381, 384, 396, 406.
 Ufens, a river in Italy; II., 8.
 Uhlands; II., 274.
 Ukraine, the; III., 287, 289, 476.
 Ulm, traveller to; II., 118.
 Ulster King at Arms; I., 183, 190.
 Ulster, province of; III., 385.
 United Provinces. See Holland.
 Unne or Unna, the river; II., 124.
 district of; II., 92.
 Urquhart, Captain; II., 16.
 Ushant; II., 474, 476.
 Usez, town of, deputy of; II., 582.
 Utrecht; I., 79, 82; II., 279, 640, 643, 652 (2). letters addressed to; 76-78.
 — dated at; I., 77, 78.
 burgomaster of; III., 435.
 clubs of; III., 207. conference at; III., 22.
 the French at; III., 23.
 government of; III., 172.
 —, the old; III., 157, 207.
 municipality of; III., 54.
 peace of, mentioned; I., 277; II., 49; III., 334.
 troops at; III., 413.
 Utrecht, province of; III., 207, 409, 410.
 representatives or deputies of; III., 207, 411.
 States of; III., 178.
 Uxbridge, Earl of. See Paget, Henry Bayley.

V.

Vadier; II., 633; III., 495.
 Vado, near Genoa; II., 576; III., 124, 127, 128.
 Bay; III., 127.
 Valence, Comte de; II., 401.
 Valenciennes; II., 108, 389, 391, 392, 402, 405, 407, 534, 599; III., 484, 490.

Valenciennes—cont.

commandant of; III., 517.
 letters dated at; II., 558; III., 509.
 surrender of; II., 409-412, 557, 629 (2), 631, 632.
 Valentia, Viscount. See Annesley, Arthur.
 Vale Royal, co. Chester; I., 52, 55.
 Valkenaar, Monsieur; III., 172, 238.
 Vallancy:
 Captain; II., 15-17.
 Colonel; I., 297.
 Valle de St. Jean, Marquis de; II., 268.
 Valliant, —; I., 160.
 Van Berkell; II., 284.
 Vancitters, Mr.; III., 424.
 Vancouver, Captain; I., 332. proposed work of; III., 380.
 Vandamme, General; III., 371.
 Van de Pol, Jan, Burgomaster at Amsterdam; II., 24, 71.
 letter from; II.,
 Van der Goes, Monsieur, Dutch envoy to Madrid; III., 73.
 Van der Haer (Van Campen van Nieu-land), Monsieur; III., 150-159, 170-172, 176-178, 182-189, 194, 209-211, 217-221, 237, 238.
 letters from; III., 154, 189.
 pamphlets by; III., 238.
 Van der Hoop, Monsieur, Fiscal of the Admiralty in Holland; III., 42.
 Vandernoolistes; II., 371.
 Vandernoot, alias Gobelsoire, Monsieur; II., 331, 332; III., 463.
 Van or de Reede. See Reede.
 Van der Spiegel, Adrian, Grand Pensionary of Holland; II., 23, 24, 32, 63, 67, 70, 77, 78, 124, 130, 131, 144, 146-148, 159, 171, 180, 287, 351, 377, 380, 382, 489, 496 (2), 516, 533, 540, 546, 615, 646.
 letters from; II., 23, 66, 72, 89, 96, 112, 138, 151, 178, 270, 286, 343, 357, 360, 363, 403.
 —, alluded to, or quoted; II., 25, 31, 65, 71, 86, 138, 150, 173, 177, 186, 189, 216, 217, 227, 240, 250, 269, 272, 277, 278, 283, 285, 286, 288, 291, 300, 342, 343, 348, 362.
 letters to; II., 85, 95, 174, 181, 182.
 —, alluded to; II., 173, 182, 240, 367, 498.
 character of; II., 270, 272.
 opinions, views or intentions of; II., 38, 59, 60, 137, 141, 151, 164, 168, 186, 218, 240, 241, 250, 251, 274, 353, 378, 622. interviews with or visits to; II., 59, 61, 140, 278, 292, 351; III., 441, 443.
 communications with; II., 68, 121, 152, 177, 243 (2), 269, 275, 280, 325, 329, 341, 360, 370, 374, 610. intelligence received by; II., 161. request from; II., 167.
 orders of, alluded to; II., 293.

Van der Spiegel—cont.

- secret correspondence or negotiations of; II., 296, 334, 335, 350.
 memorandum by; II., 375.
 lethargy of; II., 591.
 refuses gift of a snuffbox, as contrary to law; II., 601.
 arrest of; III., 42, 43.
 praise of; III., 444.
 family of; II., 273.
- Van der Steeg; III., 164.
- Vandorselaer, Canon of St. Gudule; III., 263, 264.
- Van Ensen; III., 463.
- Van Harem, Monsieur; II., 24.
- Vanloo, paintings by; I., 150.
- Vanneck, house of; III., 296.
- Vannes, in Brittany; II., 487; III., 536, 538.
- Van Notten, Messieurs; III., 72.
- Van Viersen, Monsieur; III., 190.
- Van Zon, attorney; III., 203.
- Var, the river; III., 126.
 army of; II., 519, 537, 538.
- Varel, in Oldenburgh; III., 40, 182, 183, 189, 222.
 letters dated at; III., 78, 150-152, 155, 164, 170, 176, 180, 186, 189, 194, 196, 201, 203, 207, 208, 217, 236, 245, 250, 252, 253.
- Varenne, the French Royal family go to, and are stopped at; II., 115, 116; III., 450 (2), 513.
- Varennés, Billaut de; II., 517, 532.
- Varsovie. See Warsaw.
- Vaublanc; III., 355.
- Vaud, canton or pays de; II., 539, 588; III., 83, 168, 169, 197.
- Vaughan:
 Mr.; III., 38.
 "old", of co. Merioneth; I., 487.
- Vauguyon or Vaugyon, Duc de la; I., 484; II., 278, 284; III., 216.
- Vauxhall; I., 116.
- Vendée, la. See La Vendée.
- Vendéens, the; III., 108.
- Venetian:
 Ambassador; II., 306, 307.
 islands, held by the French; III., 396.
- Venice; II., 96, 268.
 ceded to the Emperor; III., 396.
 heat at; II., 118.
 mission to; II., 212, 216.
 resident at; II., 364.
 republic of, spoliation of; III., 331 (2), 396.
- Venlo; III., 518.
 cession of, to France; III., 279.
- Ventimiglia; III., 126.
- Verac, Mons. de; I., 281.
- Verdun; II., 322; III., 453, 469-471, 475.
- Verela, peace of; II., 87.
- Vergennes, Mons. de; II., 46; III., 432, 462.
- Vergniaud, Monsieur; II., 445.
- Vermont, U.S.A.; III., 527.
- Verneck, Lieut.-General; II., 470; III., 519.

Verney:

- Ralph, Earl of Verney; I., 250, 265, 266, 273, 275, 334, 351, 356, 363, 561, 590; II., 128.
 —, as Viscount Fermanagh; I., 536.
 Miss; II., 103.
- Vernon, Mr.; II., 105.
- Verona; II., 118; III., 132.
 letter dated at; III., 181.
 Louis XVIII. at; III., 102.
- Versailles; II., 164; III., 181, 438.
 Château or Palace of; I., 147.
 —, sale of the furniture at; III., 161.
 Court of. See France, Court of.
 hunt at; I., 610.
 letter dated from; III., 436.
 mob at; III., 471, 497.
 the public treasure to be taken to; II., 473.
 troops at; I., 484; III., 67.
- Versailles, department of; III., 161.
- Vesuvius, Mount; II., 9.
- Via Appia, near Rome; II., 7.
- Vic, the river; III., 118.
- Vice-treasurerships; I., 463, 464, 469.
- Vienna; II., 95, 121, 127, 129, 135-137, 264, 270, 273, 330, 332, 335, 459, 578, 605-608, 631; III., 135, 181, 380, 462. And passim.
- Bank of; III., 105.
 confusion or dismay at; II., 593; III., 224, 313, 319. council of war at; II., 470.
 Court of. See Austria, Court of.
 defence of; III., 324.
 expense of living at; II., 366, 371.
 French army marching towards; III., 318.
 letters dated at; II., 426, 498, 525, 614, 617, 624, 626, 630, 632, 635, 636; III., 67, 104, 182, 208, 233, 246, 258, 266, 287, 318, 322, 384, 395, 513.
- ministers at. See Austria, Court of, ambassadors to.
 —, English, going to or from; II., 601, 635, 636; III., 639. negotiations or convention at; II., 98, 155, 166, 167 (2), 170, 171, 174, 177 (2), 421, 467, 630, 632, 635, 636.
 travellers to or from; II., 78, 173, 192, 287, 292, 382, 505, 605, 639, 643, 644; III., 91, 184, 293, 294, 315, 322.
 treasury of; II., 619.
 treaty of, (May 1795), conditions of; III., 74-76.
- Vienne de Chateau, cannonading at; III., 468.
- Vierac or Viereck, Mademoiselle de; II., 292, 314, 325, 492.
- Vieuville, Mons. de la; III., 138.
- Vignet des Etoiles, Baron de, Sardinian minister in Switzerland; II., 596.
- Vihiers, royalist victory at; II., 544, 545.
- Ville Hamin, Monsieur; III., 216.

Villequier, Mons. de ; III., 449.
 Villers (uncle to R. Pitt) ; I., 64.
 Villette, Major ; II., 17.
 Villiers :
   George, Duke of Buckingham, allusion to ; II., 386.
   George, 4th Viscount Grandison ; —, daughter of. See Pitt, Lady Harriet.
   —, [Mary], his widow ; I., 9, 41, 50, 57, 59.
   —, —, letters of ; I., 49, 62.
   —, —, funeral of ; I., 74 (2).
   —, —, second husband of. See Stewart, Lieut.-General.
   John, 5th Viscount Grandison (1st Earl in 1721) ; I., 16, 17, 74, 75 (2).
   —, letters of ; I., 91, 92 (2).
 Vincaly :
   Chittee (Hindoo) ; I., 48, 49.
   Putty (Hindoo) ; I., 1.
 Vincent :
   Chevalier ; II., 469.
   Sir F., death of ; II., 190.
   Mr. ; III., 95.
 Vincent, secrétaire-général du département de la guerre ; III., 490, 496, 498, 503.
 Ving, Count ; I., 508.
 Vins, General de ; II., 560 ; III., 68, 124-128.
 Virgil ; II., 5, 119.
   Æneid of, allusions to ; II., 8, 19, 20.
   villa and tomb of ; II., 9, 32.
 "Virgilian race" of vines ; II., 5.
 Virginia, U.S.A. :
   capes of ; III., 525.
   consul in. See Hamilton, Mr.
   county courts of, British claims in ; III., 522.
 Virginian perfumes ; I., 100.
 Vistula, the river ; I., 612, 613.
 Vitriarius, Sieur ; III., 74.
 Vitriol, letter to be written in ; II., 467.
 Vity ; III., 469, 470.
 Vivian, Sir Richard ; I., 66, 67.
 Vladerff in Flanders, French forces at ; III., 519.
 Vlie, island of ; III., 187, 190, 191.
 Voidel, Monsieur ; II., 154.
 Voltaire ; I., 150.
 Voorda, Monsieur ; 172, 238.
 Voulard or Veulland, le Sieur ; II., 582 ; III., 495.
 Vyse, Colonel ; II., 446, 448.

W.

W. L. ; I., 232.
 Waal, the river. See Wahl.
 Wadden, the strait of ; III., 110, 191.

Wadham, — ; I., 33.
 Wageuingen, in Holland ; III., 21.
 Wager, Admiral ; I., 76.
 Wages, question of ; II., 327.
 Wahl, Waal, the river ; III., 5, 6 (2), 21-23, 26.
   the Duke of York retreats behind ; II., 641.
 Wake, William, Bishop of Lincoln, translated to Canterbury ; I., 56.
 Walcot, Mr. ; I., 363 ; II., 354, 355.
 Waldeck, Prince of ; II., 470, 617. arrival of, in England ; III., 307.
 Waldegrave, Sir Henry, Lord Waldegrave, death of ; I., 535.
 Wales, Princes of. See Frederick and George, Princes of Wales.
   Princesses of. See Frederick and George, Princes, wives of.
 Wales ; I., 274, 315, 334, 401.
   rumour that the Duke of Ormond is in ; I., 53.
 Walker, libellous speech by ; II., 327.
 Walkiers :
   Monsieur ; II., 311.
   Mr., banker ; III., 193 (2).
 Wallace :
   Mr. ; II., 119.
   Lady ; II., 120.
 Wallachia ; II., 91.
 Waller :
   Mr. ; I., 361.
   sen. and jun. ; I., 334.
 Wallingford, co. Berks, election at ; I., 108.
 Walloon troops ; III., 250.
 Wallop, John, Earl of Portsmouth ; I., 490, 491, 564, 578.
 Walmer ; II., 436, 441, 443 ; III., 141, 149.
   Castle, letters dated at ; II., 322, 432, 552 ; III., 129, 141, 214, 380, 381.
   —, Mr. Pitt at ; II., 324 ; III., 378, 379, 391, 474.
 Walmoden or Walmoeden, Count or General ; II., 558, 559, 605 ; III., 5, 6 (2), 21-25.
   army of ; III., 45.
 Walpole :
   George, Earl of Orford ; II., 64.
   Horace ; I., 144.
   —, letters of ; I., 135, 138, 145-155, 158.
   [Robert], English minister at Lisbon ; II., 136, 138, 393, 437 ; III., 249, 250, 302 (2), 373.
   Major ; II., 214.
 Walsingham, Lord. See De Gray, Thomas.
 Walstein, Count ; II., 578.
 Walter (printer) ; II., 34.
 Waltham, co. Hants, French prisoners at ; II., 401, 430, 448.
 War, the, passim.
 War Office ; I., 292 ; II., 185, 441.
   —, commissions made out at ; III., 286.

War Office—cont.

- , letter dated at; III., 192.
- , official of; II., 11.
- , disposition of; II., 595–597.
- War, Secretary at. See Yonge, Sir George, and Windham, William.
- , and the Colonies, Secretary for. See Dundas, Henry.
- Warburton :
  - William, Bishop of Gloucester, letter from; I., 144.
  - ; I., 564.
- Ward :
  - John; I., 30.
  - Lieut.-General or General; I., 446, 452, 525; II., 15, 16, 213.
  - Mr.; I., 356, 358.
- Wardrobe-Keeper, office of; I., 277.
- Waring, Mr.; I., 498.
- Warkvill, Count; III., 293.
- Warminster; II., 402.
- Warne, Captain; II., 412–414, 416.
- Warre, William; I., 9, 16, 47.
- Warren :
  - Commodore Sir James; III., 89, 116, 166.
  - John, Bishop of Bangor; I., 376.
  - Sir S. [? Sir James]; III., 175, 362.
  - Dr.; I., 361, 366, 376, 380, 398; II., 349.
  - , son of; II., 349.
- Warsaw or Varsovie; II., 73, 76, 77, 82, 95, 216, 217, 224, 236, 246, 280, 281, 572.
- letters dated at; II., 72, 243, 481.
- Wartensleben (Warslensleben), General; II., 565, 566.
- Warwick militia; II., 336, 345.
- Washington, George, President of the United States of America; II., 158, 160, 197 (2), 223, 229, 263, 527; III., 525, 528.
- message of, to Congress; II., 157.
- speech of, alluded to; II., 526.
- proclamation of, mentioned; III., 524.
- policy of; III., 529.
- retirement of; III., 256.
- Waterford, Marquis of. See Beresford.
- Waterford; I., 231, 355, 411, 585.
- freemen and corporation of; III., 557.
- Hook Tower, near; I., 351.
- proposed college near; I., 191.
- Waterford, county; I., 236, 383.
- Genevese settlers in; I., 229.
- Waterford river, Ireland; I., 172.
- Waters, Mr.; I., 73.
- Watson :
  - Brook; III., 25.
  - Edward, Lord Rockingham, negotiation of, with Lord Shelburne, alluded to; I., 218.
  - Richard, Bishop of Llandaff; II., 236.
- Watson's Almanack; III., 554.
- Watt or Watts, Mr.; II., 266; III., 466.
- Watteville, regiment at; III., 212.

Weber, Mr.; I., 95, 99–102.

- Wedderburn, Alexander, Lord Loughborough [Attorney General, 1778–1790]; I., 182, 250, 372, 379, 388, 413; II., 285, 299, 314, 328, 335, 349, 360, 369.
- as Lord Chancellor; II., 438, 440, 464; III., 35, 102, 103, 242 (2), 317, 481, 487, 517, 629.
- present at Cabinet meetings; II., 644; III., 261, 283, 310, 330.
- letter from; II., 504.
- letters to; II., 413, 628.
- marriage treaty of the Prince to be laid before; II., 642.
- and the marriage of the Princess Royal; III., 302.
- Wedel-Jarlsberg, Count, Danish minister in England; II., 615, 616, 622; III., 92, 239, 242 (2), 255.
- conference with, minutes of; III., 58.
- Weigh-Hill Fair; I., 99.
- Weimar, Prince of; II., 277.
- Weissenau, capture of; II., 405.
- Weissenbergh or Weisseburg, victory at; II., 452.
- Welbeck [Abbey]; II., 464.
- letter dated at; III., 135.
- Welderen, Mons. de; II., 219, 241–243, 274, 295.
- Welin, Mademoiselle; II., 290.
- Welles, Lord. See Knox.
- Wellesley or Wesley, Richard, Earl of Mornington; I., 177, 180, 191, 205, 242, 254, 256, 258, 265, 267, 268, 277, 290, 326, 343, 351, 406, 408, 424, 463, 530, 554; II., 11, 169, 209, 219, 236, 442; III., 336, 338.
- letters from; I., 162, 163 (2), 220–229, 233–238, 241, 243–255, 263, 269, 270, 286–288, 343, 346, 593, 607; II., 3, 17, 32, 117, 165, 184, 324, 359, 411, 479, 480, 486, 599; III., 149, 400.
- letter to; I., 241.
- as English M.P.; I., 227, 245, 343, 363, 364.
- goes to Ireland; I., 200, 269, 270.
- journey of, to Spa; I., 593.
- , to Italy; I., 608; II., 3, 17, 32, 117.
- illness of; II., 119–121.
- return of, to India; III., 335, 354, 360.
- wife of; III., 400.
- , before her marriage; II., 18.
- children of; II., 18; III., 149, 400.
- mother of; I., 286–289; II., 10, 165.
- brothers of; I., 225, 244; and see Wesley, Arthur, Gerald, and Henry.
- sister of; II., 599.
- agent of; I., 270.
- Welling, resident at; I., 141.
- Welsh :
  - coal; I., 230.
  - circuit, the Attorney General on the; I., 315.

- Welsh judgeship, appointment to; I., 327, 334.
- Weltze or Weltzie, —; I., 223, 428.
- Wenman, Philip, Viscount Wenman; I., 590.
- Wentworth, Viscount. See Noel, Thomas.
- Wesel, on the Rhine; III., 139, 410.
troops at; II., 371; III., 417, 519, 520.
- Wesel, the river; III., 24, 60.
- Weser, the lower, preparations on; III., 148.
- Wesley:
Arthur, afterwards Duke of Wellington, brother of the Earl of Mornington; I., 286-288, 296; II., 18.
—, as aide de camp to Lord Buckingham; I., 287-289, 530.
—, is angry with the Lord Lieutenant; II., 11.
Gerald, brother of Lord Mornington; I., 593; II., 20.
Henry, brother of Lord Mornington; II., 10, 120, 165, 168, 184, 189, 219, 319, 411, 479, 480, 486; III., 342-346, 360, 361.
—, memorandum by; III., 338-341.
—, a prisoner in France; II., 599.
—, movements of; III., 335-338, 341, 352, 354, 360.
- West:
John Richard, 4th Earl Delawarr; I., 536.
John, 6th Baron Delawarr, letter from; I., 18.
Captain; III., 13.
- Westbury, co. Bucks, estate at; I., 250.
- Westcote, Lord. See Lyttelton, William Henry.
- Westerman; III., 497.
- Westerwolde, the, in Holland; III., 212.
- West India:
Colonies; I., 543.
conquests; II., 606. expedition; II., 395, 438, 443, 444, 464; III., 166, 243. fleet, French; II., 402.
—, Spanish; I., 32.
—, taking of, by the English; II., 586.
islands; II., 147, 181.
—, Leeward and Windward islands; II., 477.
—, English; III., 526, 527; and see under their names.
—, French; I., 490; II., 489; III., 224, 526.
judges; III., 39.
merchants; I., 275.
—, clerk of; I., 127.
privateers; III., 39, 533.
produce; II., 150.
rum; II., 29.
- West Indians; I., 119.
- West Indies, the; I., 189, 335, 512; II., 211, 364, 429, 430, 481, 611; III., 102.
Admiralty Courts in; III., 69.
the Dutch in; I., 47; II., 409; III., 218, 241.
the English in; II., 258, 528; III., 19.
English conquests in; II., 599, 626, 649. expedition to. See West India Expedition. fleet for; II., 334, 408.
forces in, or for; I., 286, 290, 302, 303, 338; II., 405, 408, 431, 439, 443, 454, 501, 634, 649; III., 95, 97-103, 134, 136, 142.
French possessions in. See West India islands, French. planters in; I., 309.
ports in; I., 599-601.
prize courts in; III., 533.
siege of three islands in; II., 613.
Spanish settlements in, governors of; II., 409.
- Westmeath, Earl of. See Nugent, Thomas.
- Westmeath, county, Roman Catholic delegates in; II., 318.
- Westminster; I., 542.
business; I., 360.
member for; I., 68.
militia; II., 336, 345.
- Westminster, places in; (see also London, buildings, streets, &c. in):
Abbey, Duke of Buckingham's vault in; I., 74.
—, Lady Grandison's funeral at; I., 74.
—, prebend or prebendal stall in; I., 286 (2), 287; II., 105.
—, prebendary of. See Cleaver, Dr. William.
—, Shakespeare monument in; I., 160.
Charles Street; I., 120.
Hall; I., 131, 133, 548, 558; III., 270.
—, captured standards in; I., 28.
—, Courts of Law at; I., 539.
—, Gate; I., 116.
—, [lawyers of]; I., 446.
—, letter dated from; II., 235.
—, managers (of Lord Lovat's trial) in; I., 125.
House of Lords, room behind; II., 56.
Park Street, letters dated from; III., 244, 249.
School; I., 33, 137.
—, scholar of; II., 250.
Whitehall, letters dated at, passim.
—, letters addressed to; I., 258, 264, 304, 307, 324.
- Westmorland, Earl of. See Fane, John.
- Westphalia; III., 29, 48.
the Allies in; III., 23-25, 29, 51.
bishopsrics in; III., 173.
peace of; III., 229.

- Wetzlaar; II., 640.
Wexford; I., 231.
    assizes at; I., 445, 450.
Wexford, county; I., 564, 578.
Weymouth, Viscount. See Thynne, Thomas.
Weymouth; I., 487, 488; II., 198, 200, 240, 303, 453, 623; III., 135, 373.
    Bay; II., 611.
    camp at, letters dated from; II., 593, 597.
    letters dated at; II., 188, 195 (2), 421, 602, 610, 613, 622, 633, 637, 642; III., 242.
    —, by the King; I., 483, 488–490, 498, 502; II., 201, 206, 208, 304 (2), 308–310, 317, 319, 622, 625 (2), 629; III., 134, 135, 242, 342, 344, 354, 368, 375. travellers or visitors to; II., 178, 179, 180, 190, 306–310, 315, 613; III., 456.
Whalley (? Mrs. Montague's maid); I., 140.
Wharton, Thomas, Lord Wharton, to be Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; I., 38.
Wheler, Mr.; II., 432, 436.
Whig:
    Club, the; III., 554.
    party, as courtiers; I., 28.
Whitechurch, Salop, letter dated at; I., 481.
White, George, letters of; I., 7, 10.
    —, J.P.; I., 131.
    Mr. (Mosquito shore); I., 575.
White's Club; I., 342.
Whitehaven coal; I., 230.
Whitelocke:
    Captain; I., 358.
    Colonel; III., 134.
    —, regiment of; III., 134.
Whitford, Thomas; I., 72.
    letter from; I., 72.
Whitleys, John; I., 71, 73.
Whitworth:
    Charles, English minister at St. Petersburg; II., 53, 68, 72, 80, 83, 98, 102, 103, 137, 144, 149, 160, 163, 166 (2), 212, 215, 224, 233, 276, 280, 361, 385, 610.
    —, as Sir Charles; III., 137, 173, 292, 293, 308, 335, 391, 406, 408.
    —, letters from; II., 100, 134, 142, 221, 226, 256, 364, 393; III., 281, 298.
    —, letters to; II., 222, 255, 387, 425; III., 262, 311.
    Mr.; I., 557 (2).
Wickham, William, English Chargé d'Affaires in Switzerland; II., 604, 649, 651; III., 6, 7, 25, 68, 125, 172, 173, 186, 296, 362, 363, 370, 371, 485, 531.
    letters from; III., 8, 30, 44, 70, 95, 97, 129, 132, 168, 180, 181 (3), 197, 212, 216, 223, 291.
    letters to; III., 21, 33, 68, 194, 293.
Wickham, William—cont.
    published correspondence of, letters printed in; III., 21, 68, 194.
    reports from, notes of; III., 81–84. wife and child of; III., 8.
Wicklow, county; I., 237.
Widdrington, William, Lord Widdrington; I., 55.
Widmore, Richard, opinion of; I., 59.
Wiel or Well, troops at; III., 518, 519.
Wiffin or Wyffin, a messenger; II., 577; III., 384.
Wilberforce, William; I., 383; II., 308. and the slave trade; III., 443.
    rumoured marriage of; I., 288.
    sister of; I., 288.
Wilderness, the, letter dated at; II., 416.
Wilford, Major; I., 490 (2).
Wilkes:
    [John]; I., 149.
    —; I., 285.
Willaume, Edward, prebendary of Aylesbury; I., 285.
Willemstadt; II., 380, 384.
William III., King of England; I., 3, 29, 472, 541; III., 409.
    last illness of; I., 364.
William and Mary, Acts of, alluded to; I., 553, 554.
"William." See Maret, Monsieur.
William Henry, Duke of Gloucester, brother of George III.; I., 291, 292, 296, 415, 508, 509; II., 349, 486; III., 278, 290, 299.
    as Earl of Munster; I., 475.
    as Chancellor of Trinity College, Dublin; II., 77, 84, 93. pension of; I., 430.
    family of; I., 508.
William [Henry], Prince, Duke of Clarence, son of George III.; II., 34. regiment of; III., 102.
Williams:
    Lady Frances; I., 142.
    Capt. R.; II., 55, 251, 465, 469.
    Robert (brother of Lord Bulkeley); I., 291, 292.
    William; I., 223.
Williams-Wynne, Charlotte, Lady, wife of Sir Watkin; I., 487 (2), 553.
    Robert; I., 477, 530, 553.
    Sir Watkin, Bart.; I., 203.
    —, death of; I., 487.
    Sir Watkin, Bart., jun.; I., 487, 489, 553; II., 258; III., 388.
Williamson, Captain; III., 529.
    letter from; III., 529.
    letter to; III., 530.
    agent of; III., 529, 530.
Willis:
    Richard, Bishop of Gloucester; I., 55.
    Robert; I., 63 (2), 76.
    Dr.; I., 383, 398.
    Mr. and Mrs. (sister of Governor Pitt); I., 35.
    —, youngest son of; I., 40.
Wills, General; I., 54, 55.

Wilseck, Comte de; III., 491.

Wilson:

Mr.; II., 111, 309.

—; I., 289, 468.

Wilts, county of; I., 14, 32 (2), 41, 57, 64, 86.

association for; I., 54.

Pitt Club in; I., 272.

sheriffs of; I., 38.

Wimbledon, (Dundas's house at); II., 146, 314, 436, 439, 502.

letters dated at; I., 254, 447, 490,

496, 506, 510 (2), 516, 520, 586,

588; II., 148, 184, 297-299, 305,

310, 431, 447, 448, 485 (2), 486,

499, 610, 621, 643, 645, 649; III.,

58, 102, 104, 128, 166, 235, 242,

257, 266, 362, 390, 399, 534.

visitors to; I., 570; II., 184, 471,

552, 593, 596; III., 93, 342, 360.

Wimburn, co. Dorset, Kington Hall at.
See Kington Hall.

Wimpfen, (Whymphen), Baron de; III., 147, 299, 302, 303.

Winchester; I., 53 (2), 98; II., 526.

bishops of. See Mew, Dr., and Trelawny, Sir Jonathan.

bishopric of; I., 19.

[diocese], Channel islands within;
II., 423.

French priests or clergy at; II., 390, 401, 420.

letters dated from; II., 396, 398, 401,

405, 410, 417, 418, 420 (2), 422-

424, 428, 429, 436, 440, 445, 447,

449, 452, 464, 465; III., 129.

Winchelsea, Earl of. See Finch, George.

Windham:

William; I., 221; II., 150, 336, 451,
631, 643, 649; III., 17 (2), 89, 141, 330.

—, letters from; III., 1, 16, 18, 25,
98, 137, 162, 174, 179, 192, 215,

244, 249, 285, 291, 294, 362, 374, 392.

—, letters to; III., 5, 31, 178, 193, 249.

—, resignation of the chief secretaryship in Ireland, by; I., 218.

—, to be Secretary at War; II., 597.

—, at Cabinet meetings; II., 644,
646; III., 35, 36, 261.

—, and the French royalists; III., 105, 107, 109, 110, 112, 113, 115,

166, 175, 216, 244, 251, 291, 362-367.

—, statements by; III., 392, 394.

Windsor; I., 267, 286, 361, 438; II., 64,
209, 323; III., 49, 414.

address from, mentioned; I., 265.

Castle, ball at; II., 364.

—, letters dated at; I., 376, 480,
517, 519, 523, 530, 532, 533, 537,
565; II. and III., passim.

electors of; I., 594.

festival at; I., 356.

King of Spain at; I., 8.

Windsor—cont.

King George III. at, passim.

Pitt goes to; I., 361, 376, 444; II., 509.

Wines:

brewing of; I., 261.

excise or duty on; I., 261.

Canary; I., 32.

French claret; I., 32.

Wing, co. Bucks, meeting at; I., 266.

Winnington, Mr.; I., 119.

Winter, de, Adjutant-General of the Dutch
Navy; III., 53.

Witcher, Mr.; I., 108.

Witgrinstein, Comte de; II., 295.

Wodley or Woodley, Mr.; I., 291, 293, 361.
son of; I., 293.

Wolfe, Arthur, Solicitor-General for Ireland [1787-1789]; I., 375, 376,

382, 387, 390, 391, 393, 394, 396

(2), 402, 407, 409, 410, 412, 414,

419, 461.

as Attorney-General; I., 545, 569,
577; II., 55, 83, 333; III., 37.

Wolfrath's hussars; III., 476.

Wolverhampton, disturbance at; II., 133.

Wood, Mr.; I., 253, 255.

father, wife and children of; I., 253.

Woodfall, Mr.; 609; II., 19.

his paper; II., 3.

Woodford:

Sir Ralph [Sir Robert]; II., 107,
109, 287, 297.

Captain; II., 305.

Mr., Inspector-General of the French emigrant corps; II., 644, 645; III., 193.

Woodley. See Wodley.

Woodstock, co. Oxford; I., 482; II., 178.
Duke of Marlborough's palace at. See Blenheim.

Woodward:

R.; III., 285.

"old"; I., 434.

—; II., 320, 322.

Worcester, Marquis of. See Somerset,
Henry Charles.

Worcester, bishopric of; II., 105.

Worms; II., 85, 86, 118, 161, 392.

Woronow, Count, Russian minister in England; II., 59, 103, 111, 114,

121, 124, 134, 136, 141, 144, 149,

150, 362, 374, 384, 385, 394; III.,

87, 163, 248, 328, 331, 369, 375.

letters from; 78, 252, 306, 308, 318,

320, 323, 381, 391, 395, 401, 403.

letters to; III., 306, 318, 320, 323,

328, 331, 335 (2), 380, 381, 395.

views of; III., 234.

family of; II., 280.

Worpoole [Walpole?], Mrs.; I., 64.

Worsley, Sir Richard; II., 509.

Wortley, Edward; I., 110, 112, 114, 127, 134.

letters of; I., 112 (2).

Wotton, co. Bucks; I., 291; III., 368.

election breakfast at; I., 590.

Wotton—cont.

- letters dated at; I., 159, 161; II., 178.
- Wotton [Wotten] Basset, co. Wilts; I., 117.
- election at; I., 108, 118.
- Wright, Sir Nathan, Lord Keeper (1700–1705); I., 12, 17.
- Wurmser, General; II., 392, 451, 454, 536; III., 133, 146, 149, 257.
- Württemberg (Wurtemberg, Wirtemberg); I., 185, 293, 311.
- Duke of; II., 112, 113, 129, 165, 242; III., 72, 185, 299, 302.
- Duchess of, his wife [Countess Hohenheim]; II., 242; III., 185.
- Prince of; I., 279.
- Hereditary Prince of [Frederic Charles William]:
- , letter from; III., 265.
- , character of; III., 318.
- , servants and baggage of; III., 327.
- , proposed marriage of, to the Princess Royal; III., 185, 186, 265 (2), 277, 278, 290, 299, 302, 304, 315.
- , —, treaty of; III., 299, 302–304, 316.
- , —, —, signing of; III., 317.
- , his journey to England; III., 265 (2), 277, 278, 290, 299, 302–304.
- , in England; III., 311, 313, 314, 316, 318, 327.
- , his first wife (Charlotte, niece of George III.); III., 147, 185.
- , —, children by; III., 299.
- Court of; III., 299.
- Duchy of; III., 265, 299.
- House or family of; III., 300, 302.
- Wycombe, Lord. See Petty, John Henry.
- Wycombe, High, co. Bucks; I., 271; II., 432.
- mayor of; I., 271.
- Wyffin. See Wiffen.
- Wyndham:
- George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont; II., 336.
- Col. John, letters from; I., 19, 33.
- , brother of; I., 33.
- Thomas, Lord Chief Justice of Common Pleas, Ireland, letter from; I., 75.
- Sir William; I., 53, 95, 99.
- William (1715); I., 55.
- William Frederick, minister at Florence; III., 1, 25, 167.
- Miss; I., 95.
- Wynne:
- Sir Thomas, Lord Newborough; II., 279.
- , [2nd] wife of; II., 279.
- Sir Watkin Williams. See Williams Wynne.
- Mr.; II., 225.

Y.

- Yale, Mr., late Governor of Madras; I., 2, 30.
- , daughters of; I., 30.
- Mr; II., 15, 17.
- Yarlington, co. Somerset, letter dated at; II., 200.
- Yarmouth, Earl of. See Seymour-Conway, Francis.
- Yarmouth; III., 19, 41.
- princesses of Orange at; III., 10.
- Road, ships in; III., 328 (2).
- Yassy, traveller from; II., 224.
- Yelverton, Barry, Attorney-General for Ireland; I., 166, 169, 173, 182, 191, 192, 198, 205, 208, 224, 225, 227, 247.
- as Lord Chief Baron for Ireland; I., 377, 381–383, 387, 469, 578.
- , appointment of; I., 222.
- , as Lord Yelverton; III., 389.
- Yelverton's Law; I., 365, 393, 407; II., 35–37, 41.
- Yeu, Isle de. See Dien, Isle.
- Yonge or Young, Sir George, Secretary at War; I., 193, 286, 287, 296, 298, 335, 358, 360, 536, 576, 577; II., 28, 185, 188, 214, 352, 418; III., 417.
- letter to; II., 185.
- York, Duke of. See Frederick.
- Duchess of. See Prussia, Princess Frederica of.
- York, Lieut.-Colonel; I., 348.
- York; I., 103, 141.
- Archbishop of (in 1715). See Dawes, Sir William.
- York, county of; I., 112.
- militia of; II., 345.
- Ridings of, inspectors for; I., 539.
- York, in Canada. See Toronto.
- York Farm, letters dated at; III., 234, 263, 267, 268, 270, 272, 275, 324, 326, 328, 331 (2), 343, 376 (2).
- Yorke:
- Sir Joseph; I., 599; II., 32.
- Philip, Earl of Hardwicke; II., 165.
- , as Secretary of State; I., 319.
- Young:
- [Arthur?]; I., 261, 274, 275, 294, 303, 334; II., 11, 29.
- , pamphlet of, alluded to; I., 312.
- Sir George. See Yonge.
- Sir William; I., 363, 364; II., 382, 390, 649; III., 402.
- Dr. (of Welling); I., 141.
- Mr. (in 1736); I., 95, 99, 161.
- ; I., 411, 593.
- Yprès, taking of; II., 590.
- Yssell, the river; III., 21–24, 26.
- Yucatan, promontory of; I., 575.

Z.

Zarsko-Zeloe. See Czarsko Zelo.

Zeduleski, a Polish officer; II., 572.

Zeeland, Zeland, Zealand, province of;
II., 351, 370; III., 9, 20, 171, 191,
443.

Admiralty of; II., 275.

Chamber of; I., 280; III., 419, 421, 444 (2), 446.

discontent in; III., 46, 55.

in the hands of France; III., 62.

Zeeland—cont.

ships of, or to; II., 381, 612, 616.

slave trade of; III., 442, 443.

States of, resolutions of; III., 411, 415.

travellers to; II., 198; III., 9.

Zelada, Cardinal; III., 5.

Zeppelin, Count de (envoy from Würtemberg); III., 185, 186, 313, 314.

letter to; III., 315.

Zinzendorff, Count, Saxon minister at Berlin; II., 75 (2), 81, 94, 493.

Zival or Zivel, in Holland; III., 23, 24.

Zout Kamp, in Holland; III., 212.

Zuidlaasen, in Holland; III., 245.

Zurich, canton of; II., 539.

Zutphen; III., 24.

camp or troops at; III., 205, 212, 245.

ERRATA.

---

VOLUME I.

Page 55, line 13, for "Mills" read "Wills."

- ,, 105. The Countess of Suffolk's letter should probably be dated 1735.
  - ,, 139, line 9 from bottom, for "Earl of" read "Lord."
  - ,, 161. George Nugent Grenville's letter. The date should probably be 1777.
  - ,, 162. For "The Same to the Same," read "Thomas, Lord Lyttelton, to R. Berenger."
  - ,, 287, line 41, for "except" read "accept."
  - ,, 529, line 1, for "1780" read "1789."
-

VOLUME II.

Page 34, line 31, for "Napean" read "Nepean."

- ,, 61, line 23, for "Granville" read "Grenville."
  - ,, 88. W. Pitt to Lord Grenville [1791, May-July]; printed also on p. 148, with more probable date.
  - ,, 130. W. Pitt to Lord Grenville [1791, July]; printed also on p. 146.
  - ,, 203. W. Pitt to Lord Grenville [1791, October]; printed also on p. 249, with proper date.
  - ,, 208, line 21, for "Thomas Elliot" read "Hugh Elliot."
  - ,, 248, line 44, for "1792" read "1793."
  - ,, 290, line 35, for "Lord H. R. Spencer" read "Lord H. J. Spencer."
  - ,, 331, line 3, for "1782" read "1792."
  - ,, 335, line 18, for "1791" read "1792."
  - ,, 402, line 21, dele July.
  - ,, 414, line 5, for "Warre" read "Warne."
  - ,, 421, line 36, for "1793" read "1794."
  - ,, 508, line 33, for "February" read "August 6."
  - ,, 574, line 17, for "17" read "1794."
  - ,, 604, line 16, for "[1794]" read "[1795]."
  - ,, 654, line 13 from the bottom, for "[1794]" read "[1793]."
-

VOLUME III.

Page 17, line 23, for "1795" read "1794."

- ,, 21, last line, for "Seerdam" read "Leerdam"; for "Kuitenburg" read "Kuilenburg."
- ,, 26, line 11, before "tiendra" insert "ne."
- ,, 34, line 29, for "Lord" read "Lower."
- ,, 51, line 15, from bottom, for "Lieg" read "Sieg."
- ,, 57, line 36, for "1735" read "1795."
- ,, 122, lines 2, 3, for "Bruc" read "Brue."
- ,, 143, 144, transfer the letters of Lords Buckingham and Portland to p. 265.
- ,, 195, last line but one, for "2796" read "1796."

Page 199, line 13 from the bottom, for "we" read "he."

„ 290, line 6 from the bottom, for "[1796-1797]" read "[1797, December]."

„ 307, line 2, for "1897" read "1797."

„ 403, line 15, for "[1797]" read "[1796]."

„ 404. The Marquis of Buckingham to Lord Grenville; already printed on p. 295 under its proper date.

„ 434, 435, 462, for "W. W." or "J. W. Miles" read "A. W. Miles."

„ 478, line 19, for "Malet" read "Maret."

„ 487, line 15, for "Stanislas" read "Stanislas."

„ 509. Mack's letter already printed in Vol. II., p. 534, but without the preceding letter from Lord Grenville, which had not come to light when Vol. II. was published.

„ 530, line 14, for "1795" read "1794."

CIRCULAR OF THE COMMISSION.

Public Record Office, Chancery Lane,
London, W.C.

HER MAJESTY has been pleased to appoint under Her Sign Manual certain Commissioners to ascertain what unpublished MSS. are extant in the collections of private persons and in institutions which are calculated to throw light upon subjects connected with the civil, ecclesiastical, literary, or scientific history of this country. The present Commissioners are:—

Sir Nathaniel Lindley, Master of the Rolls, the Marquess of Lothian, K.T., the Marquess of Salisbury, K.G., the Marquess of Ripon, K.G., the Earl of Crawford, the Earl of Rosebery, K.G., Viscount Esher, Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice, M.P., the Bishop of Oxford, Lord Acton, Sir Edward Fry, Mr. W. E. H. Lecky, M.P., Sir H. C. Maxwell-Lyte, K.C.B., and Dr. S. R. Gardiner.

The Commissioners think it probable that you may feel an interest in this object and be willing to assist in the attainment of it; and with that view they desire to lay before you an outline of the course which they usually follow.

If any nobleman or gentleman express his willingness to submit any unprinted book, or collection of documents in his possession or custody to the examination of the Commissioners, they will cause an inspection to be made by some competent person, and should the MSS. appear to come within the scope of their enquiry, a report containing copies or abstracts of them will be drawn up, printed, and submitted to the owner, with a view to obtaining his consent to the publication of the whole, or of such part of it as he may think fit, among the proceedings of the Commission, which are presented to Parliament every Session.

To avoid any possible apprehension that the examination of papers by the Commissioners may extend to title-deeds or documents of present legal value, positive instructions are given to every person who inspects MSS. on their behalf that nothing relating to the titles of existing owners is to be divulged, and that if in the course of his work any modern title-deeds or papers of a private character chance to come before him, they are to be instantly put aside, and are not to be examined or calendared under any pretence whatever.

The object of the Commission is solely the discovery of unknown historical and literary materials, and in all their proceedings the Commissioners will direct their attention to that object exclusively.

In practice it has been found more satisfactory, when the collection of manuscripts is a large one, for the inspector to make a selection therefrom at the place of deposit and to obtain the owner's consent to remove the selected papers to the Public Record Office in London, where they can be more fully dealt with, and where they are preserved with the same care as if they formed part of the muniments of the realm, during the term of their examination. Among the numerous owners of MSS. who have allowed their family papers of historical interest to be temporarily removed from their muniment rooms and lent to the Commissioners to facilitate the preparation of a report may be named: The Duke of Rutland, the Duke of Portland, the Marquess of Salisbury, the Marquess Townshend, the Marquess of Ailesbury, the Earl of Dartmouth, the Earl of Carlisle, the Earl of Lindsey, the Earl of Ancaster, the Earl of Lonsdale, Lord Braye, Lord Hothfield, Lord Kenyon, Mrs. Stopford Sackville, the Right Hon. F. J. Savile Foljambe, Mr. le Fleming, of Rydal, Mr. Leyborne Popham, of Littlecote, and Mr. Fortescue, of Dropmore.

The costs of inspections, reports and calendars, and the conveyance of documents, will be defrayed at the public expense, without any charge to owners.

The Commissioners will also, if so requested, give their advice as to the best means of repairing and preserving any papers or MSS. which may be in a state of decay, and are of historical or literary value.

The Commissioners will feel much obliged if you will communicate to them the names of any gentlemen who may be able and willing to assist in obtaining the objects for which this Commission has been issued.

J. J. CARTWRIGHT,
Secretary.

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1870 (Re- printed 1874.)	FIRST REPORT, WITH APPENDIX - - Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Cambridge Colleges; Abingdon, and other Corporations, &c. SCOTLAND. Advocates' Library, Glasgow Corporation, &c. IRELAND. Dublin, Cork, and other Corporations, &c.	f'cap.	[C. 55]	s. d. 1 6
1871	SECOND REPORT, WITH APPENDIX, AND INDEX TO THE FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS - - - - Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Cambridge Colleges; Oxford Colleges; Monastery of Dominican Friars at Woodchester, Duke of Bedford, Earl Spencer, &c. SCOTLAND. Aberdeen and St. Andrew's Universities, &c. IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde; Dr. Lyons, &c.	"	[C. 441]	3 10
1872 (Re- printed 1895.)	THIRD REPORT, WITH APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Cambridge Colleges; Stonyhurst College; Bridgewater and other Corporations; Duke of Northumberland, Marquis of Lansdowne, Marquis of Bath, &c. SCOTLAND. University of Glasgow; Duke of Montrose, &c. IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde; Black Book of Limerick, &c.	"	[C. 673]	6 6
1873	FOURTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX. PART I. - - - - Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Westminster Abbey; Cambridge and Oxford Colleges; Cinque Ports, Hythe, and other Corporations, Marquis of Bath, Earl of Denbigh, &c. SCOTLAND. Duke of Argyll, &c. IRELAND. Trinity College, Dublin; Marquis of Ormonde.	"	[C. 857]	6 8
1873	DITTO. PART II. INDEX - - -	"	[C. 857i.]	2 6

Date.	---	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1876	FIFTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX. PART I. - Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Oxford and Cambridge Colleges; Dean and Chapter of Canterbury; Rye, Lydd, and other Corporations, Duke of Sutherland, Marquis of Lansdowne, Reginald Cholmondeley, Esq., &c. SCOTLAND. Earl of Aberdeen, &c.	f'cap.	[C.1432]	s. d. 7 0
„	DITTO. PART II. INDEX - - -	„	[C.1432 i.]	3 6
1877	SIXTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX. PART I. - Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Oxford and Cambridge Colleges; Lambeth Palace; Black Book of the Archdeacon of Canterbury; Bridport, Wallingford, and other Corporations; Lord Leconfield, Sir Reginald Graham, Sir Henry Ingilby, &c. SCOTLAND. Duke of Argyll, Earl of Moray, &c. IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde.	„	[C.1745]	8 6
(Re-printed 1893.)	DITTO. PART II. INDEX - - -	„	[C.2102]	1 10
1879 (Re-printed 1895.)	SEVENTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX. PART I. - - - - Contents :— House of Lords; County of Somerset; Earl of Egmont, Sir Frederick Graham, Sir Harry Verney, &c.	„	[C.2340]	7 6
(Re-printed 1895.)	DITTO. PART II. APPENDIX AND INDEX - Contents :— Duke of Atholl, Marquis of Ormonde, S. F. Livingstone, Esq., &c.	„	[C. 2340 i.]	3 6
1881	EIGHTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX AND INDEX. PART I. - - - Contents :— List of collections examined, 1869-1880. ENGLAND. House of Lords; Duke of Marlborough; Magdalen College, Oxford; Royal College of Physicians; Queen Anne's Bounty Office; Corporations of Chester, Leicester, &c. IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde, Lord Emly, The O'Connor Dou, Trinity College, Dublin, &c.	„	[C.3040]	[Out of print.]
1881	DITTO. PART II. APPENDIX AND INDEX - Contents :— The Duke of Manchester.	„	[C.3040 i.]	[Out of print.]

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1881	EIGHTH REPORT. PART III. APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Contents :— The Earl of Ashburnham.	fcap.	[C. 3940 ii.]	s. d. [Out of print.]
1883 (Re- printed 1895.)	NINTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX AND INDEX. PART I. - - - - - Contents :— St. Paul's and Canterbury Cathedrals; Eton College; Carlisle, Yarmouth, Canterbury, and Barnstaple Corpora- tions, &c.	„	[C.3773]	5 2
1884 (Re- printed 1895.)	DITTO. PART II. APPENDIX AND INDEX - Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords, Earl of Leicester; C. Pole Gell, Alfred Mor- rison, Esqs., &c. SCOTLAND. Lord Elphinstone, H. C. Maxwell Stuart, Esq., &c. IRELAND. Duke of Leinster, Marquis of Drogheda, &c.	„	[C.3773 i.]	6 3
1884	DITTO. PART III. APPENDIX AND INDEX - Contents :— Mrs. Stopford Sackville	„	[C.3773 ii.]	[Out of print.]
1883 (Re- printed 1895.)	CALENDAR OF THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE MARQUIS OF SALISBURY, K.G. (or CECIL MSS.). PART I. - - - - -	8vo.	[C.3777]	3 5
1888	DITTO. PART II. - - - - -	„	[C.5463]	3 5
1889	DITTO. PART III. - - - - -	„	[C. 5889 v.]	2 1
1892	DITTO. PART IV. - - - - -	„	[C.6823]	2 11
1894	DITTO. PART V. - - - - -	„	[C.7574]	2 6
1896	DITTO. PART VI. - - - - -	„	[C.7884]	2 8
1899	DITTO. PART VII. - - - - -	„	[C.9246]	2 8
1900	DITTO. PART VIII. - - - - -	„	[C.9467]	2 8
1835	TENTH REPORT - - - - - This is introductory to the following :—	„	[C.4548]	[Out of print.]
1885 (Re- printed 1895.)	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - The Earl of Eglinton, Sir J. S. Max- well, Bart., and C. S. H. D. Moray, C. F. Weston Underwood, G. W. Digby, Esqs.	„	[C.4575]	3 7
1885	(2.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - The Family of Gawdy.	„	[C. 4576 iii.]	1 4
1885	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Wells Cathedral.	„	[C. 4576 ii.]	[Out of print.]

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1885	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Earl of Westmorland; Capt. Stewart; Lord Stafford; Sir N. W. Throckmorton, Stonyhurst College; Sir P. T. Mainwaring, Misses Boycott, Lord Muncaster, M.P., Capt. J. F. Bagot, Earl of Kilmorey, Earl of Powis, Rev. T. S. Hill and others, the Corporations of Kendal, Wenlock, Bridgnorth, Eye, Plymouth, and the County of Essex.	8vo.	[C.4576]	s. d. [Out of print.]
1885 (Re-printed 1895.)	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Marquis of Ormonde, Earl of Fingall, Corporations of Galway, Waterford, the Sees of Dublin and Ossory, the Jesuits in Ireland.	"	[C. 4576 i.]	2 10
1887	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Marquis of Abergavenny, Lord Braye, G. F. Luttrell, P. P. Bouverie, W. Bromley Davenport, M.P., R. T. Balfour, Esquires.	"	[C.5242]	1 7
1887	ELEVENTH REPORT - - - This is introductory to the following:—	"	[C. 5060 vi.]	0 3
1887	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - H. D. Skrine, Esq., Salvetti Correspondence.	"	[C.5060]	1 1
1887	(2.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - House of Lords. 1678-1688.	"	[C. 5060 i.]	2 0
1887	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Corporations of Southampton and Lyne.	"	[C. 5060 ii.]	1 8
1887	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Marquis Townshend.	"	[C. 5060 iii.]	2 6
1887	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Earl of Dartmouth.	"	[C. 5060 iv.]	2 8
1887	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Duke of Hamilton.	"	[C. 5060 v.]	1 6
1888	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Duke of Leeds, Marchioness of Waterford, Lord Hothfield, &c.; Bridgwater Trust Office, Reading Corporation, Inner Temple Library.	"	[C.5612]	2 0
1890	TWELFTH REPORT - - - This is introductory to the following:—	"	[C.5889]	0 3
1888	(1.) APPENDIX - - - The Earl Cowper K.G. (Coke MSS., at Melbourne Hall, Derby). Vol. I.	"	[C.5472]	2 7
1888	(2.) APPENDIX - - - Ditto. Vol. II.	"	[C.5613]	2 5

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1889	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Earl Cowper, K.G. (Coke MSS., at Melbourne Hall, Derby). Vol. III.	8vo.	[C. 5889 i.]	s. d. 1 4
1888	(4.) APPENDIX - - - The Duke of Rutland, G.C.B. Vol. I.	"	[C. 5614]	3 2
1891	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Ditto. Vol. II.	"	[C. 5889 ii.]	2 0
1889	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - House of Lords, 1689-1690.	"	[C. 5889 iii.]	2 1
1890	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - S. H. le Fleming, Esq., of Rydal.	"	[C. 5889 iv.]	1 11
1891	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Duke of Athole, K.T., and the Earl of Home.	"	[C. 6338]	1 0
1891	(9.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Duke of Beaufort, K.G., the Earl of Donoughmore, J. H. Gurney, W. W. B. Hulton, R. W. Ketton, G. A. Aitken, P. V. Smith, Esqs.; Bishop of Ely; Cathedrals of Ely, Gloucester, Lincoln, and Peterborough; Corporations of Gloucester, Higham Ferrers, and Newark; Southwell Minster; Lincoln District Registry.	"	[C. 6338 i.]	2 6
1891	(10.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The First Earl of Charlemont. Vol. I. 1745-1783.	"	[C. 6338 ii.]	1 11
1892	THIRTEENTH REPORT - - - This is introductory to the following :—	"	[C. 6827]	0 3
1891	(1.) APPENDIX - - - The Duke of Portland. Vol. I.	"	[C. 6474]	3 0
	(2.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Ditto. Vol. II.	"	[C. 6827 i.]	2 0
1892	(3.) APPENDIX - - - J. B. Fortescue, Esq. Vol. I.	"	[C. 6660]	2 7
1892	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Corporations of Rye, Hastings, and Hereford. Capt. F. C. Loder- Symonds, E. R. Wodehouse, M.P., J. Dovaston, Esqs., Sir T. Barrett Lennard, Bart., Rev. W. D. Macray, and Earl of Dartmouth (Supple- mentary Report).	"	[C. 6810]	2 4
1892	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - House of Lords, 1690-1691.	"	[C. 6822]	2 4
1893	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Sir William Fitzherbert, Bart.; Earl of Ancaster, &c.	"	[C. 7166]	1 4

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1893	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX The Earl of Lonsdale. - -	8vo.	[C.7241]	s. d. 1 3
1893	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX The First Earl of Charlemont. Vol. II. 1784-1799. - -	„	[C.7424]	1 11
1896	FOURTEENTH REPORT - - This is introductory to the following :—	„	[C.7983]	0 3
1894	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX The Duke of Rutland, G.C.B. Vol. III. - -	„	[C.7476]	1 11
1894	(2.) APPENDIX - - The Duke of Portland. Vol. III. - -	„	[C.7569]	2 8
1894	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - The Duke of Roxburghe; Sir H. H. Campbell; the Earl of Strathmore; and the Countess Dowager of Seafield. - -	„	[C.7570]	1 2
1894	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - Lord Kenyon. - -	„	[C.7571]	2 10
1896	(5.) APPENDIX - - J. B. Fortescue, Esq. Vol. II. - -	„	[C.7572]	2 8
1895	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - House of Lords, 1692-1693. - -	„	[C.7573]	1 11
1895	(7.) APPENDIX - - The Marquess of Ormonde. - -	„	[C.7678]	1 10
1895	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - Lincoln, Bury St. Edmunds, Hertford, and Great Grimsby Corporations; The Dean and Chapter of Wor- cester, and of Lichfield; The Bishop's Registry of Worcester. - -	„	[C.7881]	1 5
1896	(9.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - Earl of Buckinghamshire; Earl of Lindsey; Earl of Onslow; Lord Emly; T. J. Hare, Esq.; and J. Round, Esq., M.P. - -	„	[C.7882]	2 6
1895	(10.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - The Earl of Dartmouth. Vol. II. American Papers. - -	„	[C.7883]	2 9
1899	FIFTEENTH REPORT - - This is introductory to the following :—	„	[C.9295]	0 4
1896	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - The Earl of Dartmouth. Vol. III. - -	„	[C.8156]	1 5
1897	(2.) APPENDIX - - J. Eliot Hodgkin, Esq., of Richmond, Surrey. - -	„	[C.8327]	1 8
1897	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - Charles Haliday, Esq., of Dublin; Acts of the Privy Council in Ireland, 1556-1571; Sir William Ussher's Table to the Council Book; Table to the Red Council Book. - -	„	[C.8364]	1 4

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1897	(4.) APPENDIX - - - The Duke of Portland. Vol. IV.	8vo.	[C.8497]	s. d. 2 11
1897	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Right Hon. F. J. Savile Foljambe	„	[C.8550]	0 10
1897	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Earl of Carlisle, Castle Howard.	„	[C.8551]	3 6
1897	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Duke of Somerset, the Marquis of Ailesbury, and Sir F. G. Puleston, Bart.	„	[C.8552]	1 9
1897	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Duke of Buccleuch and Queens- berry, at Drumlanrig.	„	[C.8553]	1 4
1897	(9.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - J. J. Hope Johnstone, Esq., of Annan- dale.	„	[C.8554]	1 0
1899	(10.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - -	„	[C.9472]	1 0
1898	MANUSCRIPTS IN THE WELSH LANGUAGE - Vol. I. Lord Mostyn at Mostyn Hall, co. Flint.	„	[C.8829]	1 4
1899	MANUSCRIPTS OF THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH AND QUEENSBURY, AT MONTAGUE HOUSE, WHITEHALL. VOL. I. - - -	„	[C.9244]	2 7
1899	MANUSCRIPTS OF THE MARQUIS OF OR- MONDE, K.P., AT THE CASTLE, KILKENNY. VOL. II. - - -	„	[C.9245]	2 0
1900	HOUSE OF LORDS MANUSCRIPTS. VOL. I. - (In continuation of C.-7573.)	„	H.L. Paper.	2 9

Stationery Office, February 1900.

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.

---

(REPORT) (ON THE) MANUSCRIPTS OF
J. B. FORTESCUE, ESQ., PRESERVED AT DROMORE.
VOL. IV.

---

Presented to Parliament by Command of His Majesty.

---

LONDON :

PRINTED FOR HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE

BY MACKIE & CO. LD., 59, FLEET STREET, E.C.

And to be purchased, either directly or through any Bookseller, from WYMAN AND SONS, LTD., FETTER LANE, E.C.; and 32, ABINGDON STREET, WESTMINSTER, S.W.; or OLIVER AND BOYD, EDINBURGH; or E. PONSONBY, 116, GRAFTON STREET, DUBLIN.

1905.

[Cd. 2233.] Price 2s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION.

---

THE confidential letters and documents composing Volume IV. of the Dropmore Correspondence relate chiefly to two subjects, one foreign and one domestic, of great historical interest. Those belonging to the series which comes first in point of date are concerned with the political and military projects and the secret negotiations that led up to the third coalition against France in 1799. The second series deals with the outbreak of civil war in Ireland in 1798, and the abortive attempt of Pitt's Government to pass an Act of Legislative Union through the Irish Parliament in January, 1799. The correspondence on both subjects is so voluminous that the volume embraces a period of little more than sixteen months; extending from the middle of November, 1797, to the renewal of hostilities between Austria and France towards the end of March, 1799.

The close of Volume III. left the British monarchy in a situation as dangerous as it was humiliating. Strenuous national efforts continued without intermission for five years, to maintain European settlements of vital importance to Great Britain, had resulted in military defeat, an enormous burden of debt, financial embarrassment, impaired credit, political isolation, and popular discontent. The coalition of all the great monarchical powers, formed at the beginning of 1793 to dismember France, had been itself dismembered. Catherine II. of Russia gave little help from the beginning, and her successor Paul I. had hitherto, in this respect, followed in her footsteps. Frederick William II., King of Prussia, made peace with the French Republic in April, 1795, on terms which saved Northern Germany from the ravages of war, but surrendered the Netherlands and the left bank of the Rhine to the common enemy. His defection set the seal of failure on the coalition. A Prussian alliance was that in which Pitt put his chief trust for the accomplishing of British objects on the Continent ; that which he had made the greatest pecuniary sacrifices to retain, and showed himself most solicitous to recover. But repeated appeals to his fears and his cupidity had failed to draw the Prussian monarch from the attitude of neutrality to which he bound himself by the treaty of Basle.

Austria struggled on for two years more with the help of British loans, supplied by Pitt in the confident belief that financial ruin would compel the French Government to sue for peace. Unfortunately British credit collapsed at the end of 1796. And Austria, beaten in the field and unable to pay her armies, accepted terms dictated by Bonaparte at Leoben in April, 1797. This preliminary treaty provided for the meeting of two congresses within three months ; one at Berne, to which England and Russia were invited, to settle the conditions of a general pacification ; the other at Rastadt for the conclusion of peace between France and the German Confederation. But the British Government, dissatisfied with the conduct of Austria, sent Lord Malmesbury to Lille to treat on its own account with the French Directory. If France was everywhere victorious on land, Great Britain was mistress of the seas, and had enlarged her colonial empire, and her commerce. It seemed, therefore, that agreement, ardently desired by both nations, might easily be obtained by mutual concessions. But while negotiation still proceeded, a successful coup d'état at Paris lodged dictatorial powers in the hands of three Directors representing a small but ruling Jacobin faction, that owed its supremacy to war, and the support of armies living on the plunder of conquered countries. These Directors broke up the Conference at Lille in September, 1797, by putting forward extravagant demands. Bonaparte dissociating himself from Jacobin policy, in disregard of instructions from Paris signed the definite treaty of Campo Formio with Count Cobentzl on behalf of the Emperor, in the following October. The Directory did not venture to repudiate an act which nearly all France applauded. But they announced for the coming year the assembling of a great armament for the invasion of England, under the command of the conqueror of Austria. During the course of 1797, British Consols had fallen to 48 ; and public confidence had sunk to a point unknown in England since the end of the War of American Independence. Pitt's Budget at the opening of the Session of Parliament in November showed a deficit of 22,000,000*l.* He trebled the assessed taxes ; an unproductive measure which deepened the ill-humour of the people. But national spirit rose to repel invasion. Voluntary subscriptions, initiated by the King and his ministers, flowed in freely from all ranks and parties to supply the wants of the Exchequer, and arm the country for defence.

The political situation wore its gloomiest aspect when news reached George III. in October, 1797 of the approaching death of Frederick William II., King of Prussia. The Prince Royal, heir to the Prussian throne, had been carefully educated in orthodox principles. His wife, a beautiful and talented princess of Mecklinburg Strelitz, who exercised great influence over him, was a niece of Queen Charlotte. He had always listened with great deference to the political counsels of George's brother-in-law, the Duke of Brunswick, who saw with unconcealed dismay the progress of French arms and opinions in Germany. On these circumstances the English monarch founded a belief, which Pitt and Grenville seem to have shared, that if Brunswick could be persuaded to exert his influence at Berlin at the opening of a new reign for the overthrow of Count de Haugwitz, to whose ascendancy the treaty of Basle and the subsequent inaction of Prussia were ascribed, the young sovereign might be made the chief instrument in forming a Quadruple Alliance of Russia, Austria, Great Britain and Prussia, to accomplish aims for the salvation of Europe, which the defection of his father in 1795 had, in their opinion, done so much to wreck. In the beginning of November they sent M. de Luc, a trusted member of Queen Charlotte's household, on a secret mission to Brunswick, to lay the scheme before the Duke, and enlist his aid.<sup>1</sup>

De Luc was the son of a leading citizen of Geneva, a member of the governing Council of that city. He had, himself, in early life, been engaged in public affairs. But, following the natural bent of his genius, he abandoned diplomacy in order to devote his whole time to scientific research. His labours and discoveries in various branches of natural philosophy won for him high rank in the world of science. And he distinguished himself also in the arena of letters, by the zeal and ability with which he defended Christian revelation and monarchy against the assaults of the Encyclopædists and the Jacobin propagandism. His controversial essays commended him, during a sojourn in London, to the favour of George III., who conferred on him the post of reader to Queen Charlotte. In the opportunities of familiar intercourse thus opened to him he seems to have acquired the regard and entire confidence of the whole royal family. The King, in order more effectually to cloak his political mission to Germany, appointed him Professor of Natural History in the University of Gottingen. Travelling in this capacity, but accredited by a letter from his royal master, and instructions from Lord Grenville, he reached Brunswick late in November, a few days after the arrival of news of the King of Prussia's death; and took counsel with General de Stamford, a soldier and politician of merit, closely bound to him by private friendship and unity of political purpose, who played a still more prominent part than his own in the negotiations now set on foot.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Page 8.

De Stamford, although of uncertain parentage, seems to have been a Frenchman by birth. In early youth he served through the 'Seven Years' War as Lieutenant in the army of Brunswick; and during the years of peace that followed he rose to some degree of celebrity in Germany as a poet, a writer of military treatises, and a teacher of science. Frederick the Great called him to Potsdam and made him Major in a Prussian Corps of Engineers. After that monarch's death the Prince of Orange invited him to the Hague to take charge of the military education of his sons. He served with the Dutch army in the campaigns of 1793 and 1794 and rose to the rank of Lieutenant-General. When the French conquered Holland, he followed Orange to England, but, after a little, took up his abode at Brunswick as confidential adviser of the Duke. The anxiety shown by statesmen of all nations to avail themselves of his services in the conflict of interests and opinions recorded in this correspondence, testify to a general sense of his uncommon merit.

The friends joined in urging the Duke of Brunswick to go at once to Berlin and rescue from the malign guidance of Count Haugwitz a young prince of good principles indeed, but utterly without experience in the business of government. The Duke appears to have been a man of unusual ability both for war and politics, but in temper cautious even to timidity. In any important crisis he saw the difficulties besetting every line of action so clearly as often to lose the power of deciding how to act. He desired strongly to stand well with George III.; but he knew that there were well-nigh insuperable difficulties in the rôle proposed to him, of which the English Government seemed to have no conception. While still debating the subject with Stamford, an invitation came to him to attend the funeral obsequies of the deceased King; and he deferred an answer to his brother-in-law until he should have conversed with the leading personages of the Prussian Court, and thus obtained a more exact knowledge of the political situation at Berlin.<sup>1</sup>

In this interval of silence reports received by George III. from his Hanoverian envoys at Berlin of the Duke's timid bearing there, and careful avoidance of political discussion, completely dispelled the hopes entertained in England of good effects to be produced by his personal influence over Frederick William III. He told D'Ompsteda, one of those envoys, that he regarded Haugwitz as his personal enemy, and a man unworthy of trust, with whom he held no communication; but he made no effort to drive the minister from power.<sup>2</sup> Shortly afterwards, however, Haugwitz in an interview he asked of the Duke succeeded in altering this unfavourable opinion; and the latter having conferred again with the young King, despatched a messenger to De Luc with a mémoire for George III. The circumstances and motives, it declared, which had led the late King of Prussia to conclude the treaty of Basle, still operated at Berlin with undiminished force. The Treasury was empty. Mutual hatred and distrust, generated by past injuries and conflicting interests, forbade all hope of voluntary co-operation on the part of Austria and Prussia. Discontent smouldering in Poland might at any moment burst forth in insurrection. An English alliance against France would be very unpopular in Prussia; and the British Government, having failed in endeavours to come to terms with France, lay open to the imputation of selfish motives in attempting to draw other powers into war. Above all, the French were now masters of both banks of the Rhine and of the fortresses guarding the passages of that river. Having no enemy in the field, it was in their power, if Prussia showed any signs of hostility, to fall on her with all their forces and crush her, while isolated and unprepared. The peace party represented at Court by Prince Henry of Prussia, brother of Frederick the Great, and famous for his exploits during the Seven Years' War, and by the military members of the King's household, was now all-powerful at Berlin. And although the principles and views of Frederick William III. were all that could be wished, he could not at once emancipate himself from the influences and conditions that environed him. The urgent need of the present moment was to deliver the Empire from the French armies now living on it and propagating anarchical opinions, by concluding peace with France on the best terms that could be obtained at Rastadt. When this settlement had been effected, a Quadruple Alliance as proposed by Lord Grenville might be formed to defend it. But for the formation of such a league it was necessary that the Czar should take the initiative, and guarantee Austria and Prussia against the hostility of each other. By his intervention only could the two great German powers be brought to act in concert, and British diplomacy should begin its efforts at the Court of St. Petersburg. There would be no change of ministers for the present at Berlin, but the King was deeply impressed by the danger to Germany and all Europe from the growing predominance of France. He would enter into no alliance with a government professing Jacobin principles, and his ministers would act in conformity to his wishes.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> M. de Luc to George III., November 28, 1797. Page 21.

<sup>2</sup> George III. to Lord Grenville, December 23 and 24, 1797. Pages 405-6, Vol. 3.

On returning to Brunswick the Duke spoke freely to De Luc and de Stamford about the incidents of his visit to Berlin. He accounted for the cautious attitude criticized by D'Ompsteda by stating that he had been closely watched and cross-questioned by Prince Henry, who was in league with the resident minister of France. Count Haugwitz, he said, had during their interview expressed disapproval of the policy of the late reign, and shifted responsibility for it to the male and female favourites by whom Frederick William II. had been governed. It was impossible, the minister declared, to break the agreement with France entered into at Basle ; but he wished to put an end to the isolation of Prussia, by coming to an understanding with other powers for common defence. He sent the Duke a written statement of his political views, of which the latter gave a copy to De Luc for transmission to Lord Grenville. This paper<sup>1</sup> reaffirmed the position that the King of Prussia would not for any consideration violate existing engagements between Prussia and France so long as the French Government observed them faithfully. But, it continued, there were rumours in the air of an intention on the part of the Directory to occupy Hanover and Hamburg. Should they prove founded, Prussia would resist the aggression with all her might. The neutrality of North Germany had been of great advantage to Great Britain in the protection it afforded Hanover, and British trade to the Elbe and the Weser ; and it thus formed common ground of interest, for the defence of which the Prussian Government was willing to enter into concert with that of Great Britain.

---

<sup>1</sup> Pages 25 and 27.

The Duke also suggested to De Stamford and De Luc that they should go to Berlin ; the former in the capacity of agent for the Prince of Orange, with the purpose of using the opportunities the appointment would give him of easy access to the King, whose military tutor he had been, to confirm Frederick William in his good dispositions ; the latter in the character of a scientific explorer to confer secretly with Count Haugwitz.

Lord Grenville's answer<sup>2</sup> dealt with the various suggestions contained in the Duke's mémoire for George III., or thrown out in his conversation with De Luc. The British Government, it said, had made repeated attempts to rouse the Czar from his apathy, and would renew those exertions whenever a favourable opportunity presented itself. But they placed their chief hopes of success in the good effect on Paul's mind which a friendly overture from the young King of Prussia could not fail to produce. It cordially adopted the idea of sending General de Stamford to the Prussian Court, for the purpose of persuading his old pupil to enter into closer relations with the sovereigns of Austria and Russia ; gave a colder approval to the mission assigned to De Luc, and earnestly besought the Duke not to relax his own efforts at Berlin for the salvation of Europe. A political memorandum<sup>3</sup> in answer to that of Count Haugwitz

---

<sup>1</sup> Page 41.

<sup>2</sup> Page 56.

<sup>3</sup> Page 58.

accompanied this letter. In that paper Lord Grenville for the British Government disclaimed any intention of drawing Prussia into war. They desired only to form a Quadruple Alliance, which should settle the conditions of a general peace, and maintain them. They were willing also to enter into a concert with the King of Prussia for the defence of Northern Germany from French aggression; and, if necessary, to grant a subsidy for the purpose. After receiving these communications at the beginning of February, 1798, De Luc, carrying with him a letter of introduction from the Duke of Brunswick, set out for Berlin, ostensibly to collect materials for a scientific treatise, and secretly to present the English memorandum to Count Haugwitz. De Stamford awaited at Brunswick his credentials from the Prince of Orange.

The Duke of Brunswick had prepared the way for De Luc's reception at Berlin by informing the King and Count Haugwitz of his position at the English Court and his informal mission.<sup>1</sup> The Count gave him a warm welcome, expressed great satisfaction on reading Lord Grenville's memorandum; and discussed the situation of Prussia and of Europe with a frankness and unreserve which had all the appearance of sincerity. An attack of measles disabled Frederick William from transacting business, and Haugwitz requested De Luc to conceal his arrival even from the British Minister, Lord Elgin, till the King's approval could be obtained to a confidential reply to Lord Grenville. During the following ten days, De Luc lived in complete seclusion, only stealing out at dusk to hold long conferences with the Prussian Minister. The mystery in which he shrouded himself excited the suspicions of the Berlin police; and Haugwitz, in answer to an appeal for protection, paid him a secret visit to instruct him how to rid himself of their importunity. Of the conversations that passed at these and many subsequent interviews between himself and the Prussian statesman, De Luc sent detailed statements either to George III. or to Lord Grenville. His long letters, diffuse in style, and written with pale ink, in a very small but clear hand, appear to have severely tried Lord Grenville's patience, and his eye-sight; and the more so, as the views expressed in them were often unwelcome.<sup>1</sup> De Luc's conscientious efforts to do justice to an adversary, to weigh contrary opinions in an even balance, and penetrate to the truth, could hardly be appreciated by a Minister hurried along by the stress of a conflict on which such tremendous issues depended. But they enhance the value of his reports as historical material. In fact, his letters are the only confidential communications from Berlin in Lord Grenville's correspondence which clearly reveal forces and motives underlying Prussian policy, apart from private influences and personal rivalries. They have particular interest on account of the light they throw on the character and conduct of a statesman who acted a leading part on the political stage of Europe from the beginning of the Revolutionary Wars in 1792 to the battle of Jena in 1806. De Luc can hardly have met Count Haugwitz for the first time with favourable dispositions. He must have seen in a Minister who had been notoriously a member of one or more of the secret societies which laboured so effectually to destroy established beliefs, if not an enemy, at best an untrustworthy guardian of the conservative principles of which he had proved himself a zealous champion. In England, where the Swiss philosopher had lived of late years, Haugwitz's political conduct immediately before, and since, the treaty of Basle, of which he was the reputed author, had made the worst impression. Lord Grenville, Lord Malmesbury, Lord Cornwallis, every Englishman who had had public dealings with him, and George III. himself seem to have regarded him as a profligate intriguer, a politician without faith or moral principle. But De Luc's accounts, written with a candour that never failed amid much wavering of personal opinion, warrant a less unfavourable judgment. We gather from them that neither the original bent of his mind, nor early training, designed Haugwitz for an official career. Inheriting large estates he passed his youth in the management of his property, in travel, and philosophical speculation; making powerful friends, among whom he was able to count the Prince Royal of Prussia, afterwards King Frederick William II., and Leopold Archduke of Tuscany. When Leopold succeeded his brother Joseph II. as Emperor, and found it expedient to bring Austria and Prussia to a good understanding, he requested Frederick William to send Count

---

<sup>1</sup> M. de Luc to Lord Grenville, February 6, 1798. Page 71.

---

<sup>1</sup> Thomas Grenville to Lord Grenville, April 3, 1799. Page 514.

Haugwitz as his resident minister to Vienna. In this situation Haugwitz became a chief instrument in forming the alliance between the German sovereigns concluded at Vienna early in 1792, and cemented by their conference at Pilnitz in the following August. When Leopold died, Frederick William recalled Haugwitz to Berlin; and, after a little, made him Minister for Foreign Affairs instead of Count Schulemburg. Once placed in high office, a love of power and political management seems to have developed rapidly in Haugwitz till it became an over-mastering passion. It was not a sordid passion; he served the state without accepting the emoluments of office, and his personal integrity was above suspicion. But having few strong convictions, and being gifted with an intellect astute and versatile rather than commanding, he shaped his conduct more readily by the capricious moods of a despotic Sovereign than might have been possible for a statesman of firmer principles and less ambition. In the strife of politics he used duplicity and finesse without scruple as legitimate weapons; and defeated antagonists or rivals, often not more nice than himself in the choice of means, naturally blackened his reputation. Although unwilling to sacrifice place to consistency, he seems always to have given his sovereign honest advice, according to his lights. These led him to regard the safety and the material advantage of Prussia as the proper objects of Prussian statesmanship, which he seems to have pursued steadily, if timidly, to the exclusion of higher and wider aims.

When Frederick William had recovered sufficiently to attend again to business, Haugwitz sent De Luc his reply to Lord Grenville.<sup>1</sup> Besides expressing the King's satisfaction at the English promise to aid him in defending the neutrality of North Germany, it merely enlarged on the review of the situation of Prussia contained in the Duke of Brunswick's mémoire for George III. De Luc being now released from restraint was writing a report for the information of Lord Elgin, then confined to his house by illness, when he was interrupted by a visit from Mr. Garlike, British Secretary of Legation. Elgin had just seen an announcement in the official Gazette of the arrival at Berlin, some days before, of the Professor of Natural History at Gottingen. At once suspecting some secret practice on the part of Haugwitz, whom he thoroughly distrusted, he sent to ask De Luc to call on him on the following day. The interview seems to have been stormy. Elgin wrote to Lord Grenville complaining of De Luc's secret negotiation as an insult to himself as British Minister. And De Luc having despatched Haugwitz's letter to Grenville, returned to Brunswick to report his proceedings to the Duke, who gave them unqualified approval. Haugwitz had been right, Brunswick said, to enjoin complete secrecy, as he was closely watched by Prince Henry and by the Minister of the French Republic. He had gone as far to meet the proposals of the British Government as the circumstances of the Prussian monarchy permitted; and his language seemed to be straightforward and sincere. The Duke repeated the same views in a letter to George III. But Lord Grenville supported Elgin, and refused to countenance anything that bore the semblance of double negotiation. He returned Count Haugwitz's letter in order that it might be sent to him through the regular official channel. At the same time he asked De Luc to go back to Berlin to co-operate with General de Stamford in an effort to win the adhesion of the King of Prussia to a Quadruple Alliance.

---

<sup>1</sup> Page 89.

While De Luc was still at Brunswick, dissension had broken out between Austria and Prussia at the Congress of Rastadt. By a convention signed in August, 1796, France and Prussia had agreed to support a proposal emanating from the Director Rewbel, that sovereign Princes on the left bank of the Rhine, and the Prince of Orange, dispossessed by French conquest, should be compensated for their losses by the secularization of ecclesiastical property in Germany. In March, 1798, the German delegates at Rastadt formally ceded the left bank of the Rhine to France, and accepted the arrangement brought forward by France and Prussia in favour of the expelled princes. But Austria protested against a confiscation of church lands; and insisted that if the Prince of Orange were indemnified in Germany for the loss of Holland, the Duke of Modena, an Austrian Archduke, should also receive compensation in Germany for having been stripped of his Italian dominion.

De Luc, on returning to Berlin in the character of a vagrant philosopher, found De Stamford about to relinquish his mission in despair. His political sentiments and objects had naturally thrown him into association with Lord Elgin, Prince de Reuss, and Count Panin, representing Great Britain, Austria, and Russia at the Prussian Court, who all, though on the best terms with each other, held aloof from Count Haugwitz so far as official duty allowed. De Stamford, relying probably on his old relations with the King, followed their example. Lord Elgin, in accordance with instructions from Lord Grenville, presented his credentials and asked audience for him of the King; but Frederick William allowed weeks to pass without granting the request. Disheartened by this unlooked for neglect, De Stamford had decided to return to Brunswick. The favour of the Queen of England and the introductions she gave him to members of the House of Mecklinburg Strelitz, placed De Luc on an intimate footing at the Prussian Court.<sup>1</sup> At his solicitation Queen Louise induced her husband to receive De Stamford; Colonel de Kökeritz, the King's favourite aide-de-camp and confidential adviser, and a determined foe of an English alliance, being present at the interview, and occasionally joining in the conversation. Frederick William welcomed his old tutor with affection and listened with approval to an eloquent exposition of the dangers impending over continental Europe from the growing preponderance of France. But when the General went on to advocate a Quadruple Alliance as the only safeguard against those dangers, the King said that he found it impossible to come to an agreement with the Austrian Government. It refused to disclose the secret articles of its treaties with France. He was willing to renounce compensation for his own lost territory beyond the Rhine; but felt bound to maintain the claim of the Prince of Orange, which Austria opposed. He had asked the Emperor to send a confidential Minister to Berlin to discuss in a friendly spirit the questions that divided them, but nothing had come of the proposal. De Stamford in reply denounced secularization as a French snare, and suggested other means of compensating the Prince of Orange. But the interview from which so much had been expected, produced no perceptible result. De Stamford, looking at the matter through the glasses of Prince de Reuss, saw in the policy of Count Haugwitz, compounded of fear of France and distrust of Austria, the evil influence that counteracted his efforts. He impressed this view on the mind of De Luc; who in a special audience, at which Queen Louise was also present, implored the King, as he valued the safety of his kingdom and of Europe, not to be guided by the counsels of any single minister, but to form a Council of Ministers to advise him on questions of foreign policy.<sup>1</sup> Frederick William listened patiently to his long harangue, praised his honesty and good intentions, and dismissed him with gracious words. Then seeing that the question of an indemnity for the Prince of Orange, and the estrangement of their envoys from Count Haugwitz, prevented any approach to an agreement of the other conservative powers with Prussia, as desired by the British Government, De Luc returned to London at the end of March, 1798, to explain to George III. the causes of the political deadlock at Berlin.

<sup>1</sup> Pages 133-139.

De Luc's zeal for religion and established order had been stimulated of late by the aggressions of the French Directory, which excited alarm throughout Europe and brought his native land under Jacobin rule. One French army invaded Switzerland and, after a prolonged struggle, abolished its ancient constitution, and substituted another of the latest Parisian pattern. With the support of a second French army a democratic system of the same character was established in Holland. A third army entered Rome, dragged the Pope from the Vatican to a French prison, and converted the Ecclesiastical States into the Roman Republic. By these acts of violence Austria saw the balance of interests lately established by the treaty of Campo Formio overthrown to her great disadvantage. The King of Naples and the Grand Duke of Tuscany, near relatives of the Emperor, fearing to be overwhelmed in the revolutionary torrent, appealed to him for protection. Baron Thugut, Imperial Chancellor and Minister for Foreign Affairs, was an implacable foe of the French Revolution. He had disapproved of the treaty of Campo Formio concluded by Count Cobentzl, and had only remained in office at the urgent entreaty of the Emperor, and with the purpose of renewing the war in circumstances more favourable to Austria. Unfortunately provocation came from France before the condition of Austria had much improved. The resources of the Austrian monarchy had long been exhausted, and its relations with the only power able to supply its needs had become strained to the point of breaking. At the very time when Lord Grenville urged the King of Prussia to enter into an alliance with the Emperor, it appears from a letter written to him by Count Starhemberg on February 18, 1798,<sup>1</sup> that he meditated withdrawing the British Minister from Vienna. The cause of complaint was twofold: concealment by the Austrian Government of certain articles in her late treaties with France, thought to be prejudicial to British interests; and refusal to fulfil a financial engagement. In the course of the year 1796 Pitt advanced £1,600,000 to the Imperial Government, on the understanding that the money should be repaid from an Austrian loan to be raised in London on the guarantee of the British Government. Public credit fell so low in the winter of 1796-7, and his own exigencies were so pressing, that Pitt could not float an Austrian loan. The preliminary treaty of Leoben was signed in April, 1797. In May, the condition of the British money market having somewhat improved, Lord Grenville embodied the agreement between the British and Imperial Governments in a financial convention, which Count Starhemberg signed on behalf of the latter. Baron Thugut, however, refused to ratify this instrument, alleging the danger of giving umbrage to France, and a prospect of raising the money required to repay British advances on less onerous terms in Germany. Moreover, the Imperial Government had allowed payment of interest on a loan of £4,600,000, raised in London on British credit in 1795, to fall into arrear. And, as we gather from Count Starhemberg's private correspondence with Lord Grenville, the imperious tone of British despatches, and scornful comments on the bad faith of a defaulting ally, had deeply wounded Austrian pride and exasperated the quarrel. It was under these unpromising circumstances that in the beginning of April, Count Starhemberg communicated to Grenville the substance of a despatch he had just received from the Imperial Chancellor. The overtures of the King of Prussia to the Emperor, Thugut wrote, were a perfidious manœuvre of Count Haugwitz. The Austrian Government had declined discussion with that of Prussia, and had referred all matters in dispute between them to the arbitration of the Czar. It was still doubtful whether peace would be made between Germany and France at Rastadt. Even if it were made, the treaty would be worthless, as the aggressions of the Directory could only be restrained by superior force. Such being the case, Thugut suggested that the British and Imperial Governments, having first come to an understanding with each other on certain essential points, should fix the basis of a Quadruple Alliance against France, and propose it for acceptance to the Czar and the King of Prussia. The points to be first settled were : (1) financial aid to Austria, which must be subsidy not loan, and liberal, particularly in money for preparation ; (2) Great Britain's ability to continue this aid during the year 1799 ; (3) the despatch of a British fleet to the Mediterranean for the protection of the King of Naples. Pitt eagerly welcomed the prospect of a new coalition, but he and Grenville doubted if Parliament could be brought to grant a subsidy to Austria. Lord Spencer, First Lord of the Admiralty, on being consulted, could not see his way to the providing of a naval squadron for the Mediterranean. After the proposal had been considered in all its bearings for a fortnight, Grenville replied that the British Government concurred as to the importance of forming a Quadruple Alliance ; was in a condition to sustain a prolonged conflict ; and would send a fleet to the Mediterranean if the King of Naples would open his ports to it, and the Emperor would undertake to defend him against France. But it declined to discuss the question of a subsidy until the Emperor had ratified the convention of May, 1797 ; and it declared that confidence could only be restored between the two Governments by a frank disclosure of the secret articles of the treaty of Campo Formio. While this reply was still on its way the situation of Austria had become exceedingly critical. A Viennese mob assailed the French Embassy and hauled down the tricolor flag ; and the satisfaction he demanded being refused, General Bernadotte, the French resident Minister, quitted Vienna. War being now imminent, Thugut again pressed Grenville for a subsidy ; but the British Government would not move from the ground it had taken up. And although the Austrian Chancellor sent an agent named Ransonet to London to try and arrange for the paying of arrears of interest on the Austrian loan of 1795, he flatly refused to ratify the convention of May, 1797. A confidential letter of Starhemberg to Grenville dated July 8, 1798, throws light on this attitude of Baron Thugut.<sup>1</sup> It was due, Starhemberg explained, to irritation caused by the peremptory tone of the British Government ; to doubt as to the sufficiency of the supplies England would agree to furnish ; to fear of provoking France without adequate means of resistance ; to a still greater fear that the British Government might insist on a right to control the movements of Austrian armies. If the British Government would only state the amount of subsidy it was prepared to grant, and would pledge itself not to meddle with Austrian military plans, his sovereign, Starhemberg said, would ratify the convention. Grenville in reply merely availed himself of the freedom of a private letter to point another denial by contrasting British honour with Austrian bad faith.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> M. de Luc to George III. April 4, 1799. Page 160.

In the meantime George III. had induced the Prince of Orange to renounce all claim to compensation for his losses in Holland, out of secularized domains in Germany. De Luc returned to Brunswick at the end of April, bringing a commission from the Prince to General de Stamford to announce this renunciation to the King of Prussia and to the Emperor. He also gave Stamford a letter of instructions from Lord Grenville to endeavour, in discharging his new mission, to bring the great German sovereigns into direct communication with each other, so as to get rid of the rivalry of Haugwitz and Thugut, who represented national animosities and distrust. When De Luc, after a short stay at Brunswick, found himself again at Berlin, everything promised well for the success of English policy. The Czar at the request of the Emperor had intervened with great effect. In deference to a direct proposal from St Petersburg the King of Prussia had consented to a conference at Berlin of ministers of the four great monarchical powers, to discuss the question of a defensive alliance ; and Prince de Repnin had come to represent Russia. Frederick William had given De Stamford a very cordial reception ; and the General had found useful allies against Count Haugwitz in the Barons de Reske, two brothers, one Royal Chamberlain and the other Minister of Justice, who stood high in the King's favour and confidence. Prince de Reuss also opened a mode of compensation for the Prince of Orange by promising the Emperor's aid in obtaining the restitution of territory severed at some former period from the Principality of Nassau. But a change for which the British Government was in some degree responsible suddenly clouded the prospect. The Austrian Government, on failing to obtain a subsidy from England, had found it necessary, in order to avert war which it could not support, to concede most of the demands made by Bernadotte at Vienna; and to undertake besides to send Count Cobentzl to Rastadt for the purpose of settling with a special envoy of the Directory the more complicated questions at issue between the two powers. Events soon indicated clearly the existence of this secret arrangement. The Directory ordered Bernadotte to halt at Rastadt; and having already alarmed Prussia by requesting a large loan from the city of Hamburg, instructed its ministers at the Congress of Rastadt to claim all the islands of the Rhine, the control of the commerce of that river, the possession of Cassel and Kehl in its right bank, and the demolition of Ehrenbreitstein. And as Count Haugwitz complained loudly, the Austrian Ministers at the Congress refused to join with those of Prussia in repelling those demands. Next came an announcement from Vienna of Baron Thugut's retirement from the Ministry for Foreign Affairs in favour of Count Cobentzl, and of the dismissal of the Minister of Police; acts of reparation which had been refused to Bernadotte. Prince de Reuss on being anxiously questioned by De Stamford in regard to the latest developments of Imperial policy, merely answered that he had received no instructions on the subject. The Duke of Brunswick who had come to Potsdam for the army manœuvres, the Barons de Reske, and everyone in Berlin most in favour of a Quadruple Alliance, declared that these circumstances fully justified Count Haugwitz's distrust of Austria. And neither De Stamford nor De Luc had anything to say in reply. The Conference of the Four Powers opened on May 28, with unfavourable auspices. At the first sitting the question of compensating the Prince of Orange by enlarging his Principality of Nassau came up for discussion. Prince de Reuss unexpectedly opposed the suggestion, and debate on it was adjourned. De Stamford started at once for Vienna to ask an audience of the Emperor. Lord Elgin went in search of health to the baths of Töplitz; and soon after returned to England. The King of Prussia, accompanied by Count Haugwitz, set out on a tour through his provinces. The Duke of Brunswick returned to his capital; and De Luc made an excursion into Saxony for geological investigation, and in the hope of persuading the Elector to invite the Emperor and the King of Prussia to another conference at Pilnitz. Before leaving Berlin Haugwitz drew up and despatched a protest against the recent demands of France at Rastadt, which, as he declared, endangered the safety of Northern Germany, and must, if persisted in, impair the friendly relations of the Republic and Prussia.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Page 250.

<sup>2</sup> Page 252.

During the winter and spring Dundas, as Minister for War, had been strenuously engaged in organizing the national forces to repel invasion. The only enemies, however, he had had to encounter were those of his own political household. He wrote to Grenville on February 12 that if relieved by Pitt from the meddling obstruction of the Duke of Portland's office, "I will in three months hold an invasion in derision; or rather, I shall devoutly pray for the attempt being made."<sup>2</sup> Pitt, who sometimes interfered to restrain the Duke's querulous ineptitude, seems to have found a remedy for this clashing of authority in a better arrangement of public business. Later on, a plan for making the militia more serviceable brought the whole Government into conflict with the Marquis of Buckingham. The Duke of York, Lord Cornwallis, and Sir William Howe, ex-officio military advisers of the Crown, agreed as to the necessity of detaching the grenadier or light companies of militia from their respective regiments, and forming them into separate battalions, commanded by officers of the Line. The great majority of the militia colonels cheerfully assented to this arrangement, to which the Law Officers saw no legal objection. But Lord Buckingham, supported by Lords Berkeley and Caernarvon, vehemently opposed it, as insulting to commanding officers of militia, and a breach of the Militia Act.<sup>3</sup> It was proposed to pass a short Bill through Parliament to remove all doubt as to the legality of the measure. Thereupon Lord Buckingham<sup>4</sup> sent Lord Grenville a letter for Pitt, announcing

<sup>1</sup> M. de Luc to Lord Grenville, May 4, 7, 8, 9, 12, 15, 19, 22, 28, 1798. Pages 185-221.

<sup>2</sup> Page 79.

<sup>3</sup> Henry Dundas to Lord Grenville, April 17, 1798.

<sup>4</sup> Marquis of Buckingham to Lord Grenville, April 25, 1798.

his intention to oppose this "silly German project" in the House of Lords, and to resign his command if it were carried. Pitt and he, Dundas wrote, were at their wits' end what to do. Some way seems to have been discovered of pacifying Lord Buckingham, as the crisis passed without further recrimination.

All Dundas's colleagues in the Cabinet did not share his own sanguine views as to the efficiency of his defensive measures. Windham wrote to Grenville on May 17,<sup>1</sup> "Less than 500,000*l.*, which the charge of maintaining that valuable corps the Provisional Cavalry amounts to, would have sustained the war in Brittany and La Vendée in a manner, at least, to have saved us the necessity of standing on the defensive here." Lord Cornwallis also, in a letter to General Ross, expressed little confidence in plans of defence adopted solely on the advice of the War Minister's kinsman, General David Dundas. Long before these letters were penned, however, all danger of invasion had passed away. Bonaparte had reported to the Directory before the close of February that the miserable condition of the French navy made any attempt of the kind impracticable; and had turned his whole attention to preparations for a magnificent scheme of conquest in the East. Two interesting letters from M. Dolomieu, one of the most distinguished savans of the age, sent to De Luc from Switzerland, and forwarded by him to Lord Grenville, give us some idea of the vast range of scientific research comprehended in the aims of the expedition. Dundas alone of the leading members of the British Cabinet seems to have divined its destination; and he did not feel at liberty to act on what was only sagacious surmise. Pitt wrote to Grenville early in June, announcing its departure from Toulon on May 19, in the evident belief that it had sailed for Ireland. Later on, we have a long narrative, dated October 10, by Chevalier de Thuisy, one of the expelled knights, of the capture of Malta by Bonaparte. De Thuisy deals leniently with the Grand Master, Ferdinand de Hompesch, accusing him only of weakness; but French accounts leave no doubt that he betrayed his Order for a large bribe. The fortress of Valetta was so strong that General Caffarelli, commanding the French artillery, exclaimed on entering it, "How lucky for us we had a friend inside to open the gates." That the British Admiralty had to overcome immense difficulties in manning additional ships, before they could so re-inforce Lord St. Vincent's fleet as to enable him to detach Nelson with a naval squadron to scour the Mediterranean, is abundantly evident from letters of Pitt and Lord Spencer. A still greater impediment in the way of maintaining a British fleet in the Mediterranean was the want of access to a friendly port for needful supplies and repairs. But a letter from the Queen of Naples to Lady Hamilton, dated June 11, forwarded to Grenville by Sir William Hamilton,<sup>1</sup> gave assurance of covert help. And soon afterwards a defensive treaty concluded with Austria encouraged the King of Naples to open his harbour to the British navy in defiance of France.

---

<sup>1</sup> Page 207.

A letter, dated July 31, to Grenville from Rufus King, Minister of the American Republic in London, gives some particulars of a rupture of friendly relations between France and the United States.<sup>2</sup> The quarrel was not made up until Bonaparte became First Consul.

The conference of the four Great Powers at Berlin dragged on through the whole summer. General de Stamford, having been well received at Vienna by the Emperor and Baron Thugut, returned to the Prussian capital in July with a renewed conviction that Count Haugwitz was the main obstacle to a Quadruple Alliance. But secret negotiations carried on at Seltze, near Rastadt, by Count Cobentzl with Francois de Neufchateau on behalf of the Directory, at the very time when Prince de Reuss pressed Count Haugwitz at the Berlin Conference to guarantee South Germany against a French invasion, gave an air of insincerity to Austrian policy which strongly impressed even Prince de Repnin, the Russian representative, and intensified the general repugnance felt in Prussia to union with a detested rival.

The meeting at Seltze, however, ended without result. France would make no concession to Austria in Italy; the Emperor would go no further in the way of reparation for the outrage at Vienna. Yet the negotiators parted with mutual civilities. Neither of the parties represented was ready to begin war. Austrian preparations halted for want of money. The French Government was bankrupt, and what crippled it more, its aggressions in Switzerland and Italy had disorganized and almost ruined its victorious armies. All the great generals who led them in the late war had already vanished from the scene. Bonaparte was in Egypt; Hoche was dead; Pichégru was in exile; Moreau had been deprived of his command for concealing Pichégru's treason. The vacancies were filled by Jacobin officers of an inferior stamp, who, in corrupt league with army contractors and with the Director Barras, plundered the occupied countries without mercy, embezzled military funds, and left their troops without pay or necessary supplies, to find subsistence as best they could. The soldiers became demoralized by license, and deserted in crowds. To fill the gaps in the military ranks the French Directory, after the failure of negotiations at Seltze, passed the law of conscription, making every Frenchman between the ages of twenty and twenty-five years liable for active service in the army or navy. But the levy of 200,000 men decreed by this enactment could not, in the penury of the French exchequer, be trained, armed, and equipped as effectives for several months. The Directory also sent orders to its Ministers at Rastadt to withdraw the exorbitant demands on Germany which gave umbrage to the King of Prussia. Count Cobentzl went from Seltze to Berlin, and thence, after a few days of fruitless discussion with Count Haugwitz, set out for St. Petersburg, accompanied by Prince de Repnin.

The expulsion from Malta of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, of which he was Protector, had inflamed the anger of the Czar, already kindled against France by earlier aggressions. Towards the end of July he instructed Count Woronzow to make an overture to the British Government for an offensive treaty on the lines of that almost concluded by his mother when she died in October, 1796. Pitt, in a letter to Grenville, dated August 16, eagerly welcomed this proposal.<sup>1</sup> He undertook to provide £300,000 as preparation money, £100,000 a month for pay and subsistence, and, at the end of the war, an additional allowance of £50,000 or even £70,000 for each month of the period during which the agreement should have been in operation, on the condition of Russia furnishing 60,000 troops, to be employed as the contracting powers might determine. It appears, however, from a letter of Dundas to Grenville, dated August 19, that doubts, probably suggested by Dundas himself, subsequently arose in Pitt's mind as to whether a return to the system of subsidizing foreign powers would be tolerated by the country.<sup>1</sup> The undated letter addressed to Pitt which Dundas sent Grenville, with Pitt's concurrence, as expressing his own sentiments on the subject, has been postponed by an oversight to December 1798.<sup>2</sup> It gives us a striking picture of a rapid recovery of national prosperity and public spirit in the course of a single year. But however Pitt may have wavered for a moment, Lord Grenville's policy prevailed in the British Cabinet, only to meet with an unexpected obstacle at St. Petersburg. Within a few days after his arrival at the Russian Court, Count Cobentzl had so worked on the mind of the Czar as to win his support for the two main objects of Austrian diplomacy, in anticipation of war with France ; (1) to prevail on the King of Prussia to guarantee the neutrality of all Germany, so as to leave the Emperor free to employ his own forces in Italy and Switzerland ; (2) to obtain a promise of an adequate subsidy from England, before ratifying the financial convention of May, 1797. In a letter dated August 30, Paul instructed Count Woronzow to offer his mediation on the points at issue between Austria and Great Britain, in order that the two powers might act in concert against the common foe.<sup>3</sup> Lord Grenville stated the case of the British Government in a conference with the Russian Minister, on whose friendship he could rely to place it in the most favourable light before his Sovereign. A letter from Woronzow, dated July 6,<sup>4</sup> besides giving us an interesting sketch of the character of the Czar, traces the origin and growth of this friendship, now firmly established on common ground of patriotic motive and personal esteem. Pitt, Grenville explained,<sup>5</sup> could only spare £2,000,000 for foreign subsidies in the ensuing year. £200,000 would go to Portugal ; £500,000 to Switzerland ; and £100,000 a month to Russia. These grants exhausted the supply. By maintaining a fleet in the Mediterranean at a cost of £1,500,000, the British Government materially aided Austria and Naples ; but Parliament would not sanction any concert with the former power, while it refused to discharge its pecuniary obligations. If the Czar could induce the Emperor to ratify the convention of May, 1797, the British Government would enter into agreement with that of Austria as to military operations in Switzerland, naval operations in the Mediterranean, and the mode of employing a subsidized Russian army. The line taken by Pitt and Grenville in this business had not the unanimous approval of their colleagues. Lord Loughborough, then in attendance on the King at Weymouth, wrote to the former on October 4, urging him to waive the point of ratification in deference to the Czar. George III. also seems to have written to the Prime Minister in much the same sense. But Pitt, when forwarding the Lord Chancellor's letter to Grenville on October 6, showed no disposition to give way.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Page 283.

<sup>1</sup> Page 284.<sup>2</sup> Page 433.<sup>3</sup> Page 293.<sup>4</sup> Page 246.<sup>5</sup> Page 297.

Count Cobentzl's influence being still in the ascendent at the Court of St. Petersburg, the British answer to his offer of mediation did not please the Czar. Sir Charles Whitworth, the English resident Minister, reported that Paul postponed co-operation with the British Government until it was prepared to enter into concert with that of Austria.<sup>2</sup> And Whitworth took on himself the responsibility of signing a new convention, drawn up by Cobentzl, which deferred discussion as to the mode of repaying old debts, until the question of a subsidy had been settled. This turn of affairs at St. Petersburg, as appears clearly from their letters of October 28 and 29, placed Pitt and Grenville in a most embarrassing situation. Want of money made only a small part of the trouble; as the national revenue had recovered its elasticity. "Our revenue," Pitt had written on the 16th, "for the year to the 10th of October, surpasses all expectation," and shortly afterwards he found himself able to add £500,000 to the £2,000,000 originally destined for foreign subsidies. But neither of them would give way to Austrian demands. On the other hand the Czar did not easily suffer a check; and without his support the whole project of a new coalition must fall to the ground. From this strait they were rescued by the good offices of Count Woronzow who, in despatches revised by Grenville, assured his master that the British Parliament, which made and unmade Ministries at its pleasure, would not permit any new dealings with Austria until old engagements had been fulfilled. Woronzow also saved Whitworth from being recalled, in addition to being disavowed, by warning Grenville that his own recall from London would inevitably follow.<sup>3</sup> And the storm blew over without leaving any worse effect than a little soreness of feeling at St. Petersburg.

<sup>1</sup> Pages 335, 337.

<sup>2</sup> Lord Grenville to W. Pitt, October 28. Page 354.

<sup>3</sup> Count Woronzow to Lord Grenville, January 22, 1799. Page 447.

In the meantime news had arrived of the landing of Bonaparte in Egypt. The Porte declared war against France in the beginning of September; the Czar sent a fleet and army to the Sultan's aid; and Lord Grenville took measures for despatching Sir Sidney Smith and Colonel Koehler, an artillery officer of repute who had served in the East, to help the Turks on sea and land. Intelligence of Nelson's great victory at Aboukir encouraged a spirit of resistance in countries over-run or threatened by French armies; and desponding letters, intercepted at sea, from officers of Bonaparte's army, seemed to presage the entire destruction of his expedition. Lord Grenville wrote to Rufus King on October 4, "I really think that, without being sanguine, we may consider that business as over." The Maltese rose against their French garrison, and shut it up in the fortress of Valetta, which a British fleet blockaded by sea. The Czar, having entered into an agreement with the British Government that the island when recovered should be defended by a mixed body of Russian, English and Neapolitan troops, assumed the office of Grand Master of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem. Naples began to arm openly; General Mack having come from Vienna to organize and lead the levies. A party of Dutch Republicans attached to the old Federal Constitution, which had been lately abolished, applied to the British Government through Rufus King for aid in freeing Holland from a French occupation. But as they insisted on excluding the Prince of Orange from the country, a condition which Lord Grenville would not accept, the negotiation fell through.<sup>1</sup> About the same time hopes inspired by disaffection to the French Government in Belgium were also doomed to disappointment; an appeal from Count Starhemberg to his brother-in-law, the Duke d'Ursel, to organize an insurrection with the support of Great Britain, meeting with no response.<sup>2</sup>

In September, 1798, however, a change that seemed big with the most important consequences came over the policy of Prussia. We have numerous indications of it in letters from M. de Luc and Mr. Garlike to Lord Grenville,<sup>3</sup> from Count Panin to Count Woronzow<sup>4</sup> and in reports from Brunswick to the Count d'Artois at Holyrood House, communicated to Lord Grenville through the agency of Lord Minto.<sup>5</sup> The aggressions of the French Directory had thrown the King of Prussia, the Duke of Brunswick and Count Haugwitz into a state of profound alarm for the safety of North Germany. When the conference at Seltze terminated without result, war between Austria and France seemed to be inevitable. And during the Duke of Brunswick's visit to Potsdam in September for the military reviews, he and Haugwitz succeeded in persuading Frederick William that the course of events might soon enable him, without much risk, to take a bolder line for the assertion of Prussian interests. In order to pave the way for the movement contemplated, they had recourse to the resident minister of Russia, Count Panin. The Duke cautiously inquired of Panin whether in the negotiations for a coalition, the question of new territorial arrangements at the conclusion of peace had been considered. Haugwitz opened his mind more freely in several unofficial conversations. The only object, he said, that could induce Prussia, in the absence of direct provocation from France, to depart from an attitude of neutrality, was the expulsion of French troops from Holland. But even for this object, Prussia would not move until hostilities had actually begun between Austria and France. "It remains to know," he invariably concluded, "what price England attaches to this work; what help she would give to facilitate it." Panin enclosed a note of these remarks in a letter to Count Woronzow, dated October 18, for the consideration of Lord Grenville. Following close on Panin's letter we have a scheme of operations in Holland for the restoration of the Prince of Orange by the combined action of Great Britain and Prussia, drawn up by the Duke of Brunswick. This plan, dated October 22, is prefaced by a declaration that Prussia would not abandon its system of neutrality until Austria and her allies had declared war against France; and then only as intervening for the restoration of general peace, on terms previously agreed on by England, Prussia, Russia and Austria.<sup>1</sup> It did not, however, suit British purposes in the existing posture of affairs to enter into any separate engagement with Prussia. Lord Grenville wrote to Count Woronzow on November 2 that it was only by joining to form a Quadruple Alliance that Prussia could derive benefit from the £2,000,000, which was all Great Britain had to give to foreign powers.<sup>2</sup> But he used the information supplied by Panin in drafting new proposals which Sir Charles Whitworth was instructed in a most secret letter, dated November 16, to submit to the Czar.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Pages 365-367. <sup>2</sup>Pages 370, 376. <sup>3</sup>Pages 321, 332, 349. <sup>4</sup>Page 346. <sup>5</sup>Pages 352, 368.

---

<sup>1</sup> Page 350.

<sup>2</sup> Page 358.

A continental war being now imminent, these instructions ran, the King of Prussia showed an inclination to intervene, but not till after hostilities had begun, for the purpose of expelling the French from Holland. England would aid him in this work to the utmost of her power. He wished, however, to have the general aims of the coalition, and the particular aims of each member of it, ascertained and agreed on beforehand. The British Government therefore requested the Czar to formulate the articles of a Quadruple Alliance, and present them in a complete shape for acceptance at Vienna and Berlin. Grenville suggested as leading provisions of this treaty, the reduction of France to her limits before the Revolution; the independence of Switzerland; union of Holland and Belgium under the Prince of Orange; the restoration of the kingdom of Sardinia and of Germanic integrity. Austria should, he thought, be content with the recovery of Lombardy, and the King of Prussia should be asked to state what acquisitions he had in view. The co-operation of Austria and Prussia could only be secured by the Czar guaranteeing to each the observance by the other of the conditions agreed upon; and the British Government would send a special envoy to Germany to support his proposals. Before, however, this communication reached the Czar, news received at Berlin that Austria had opened fresh negotiations with France, through the mediation of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, and had stopped the Russian army advancing to aid her, checked a growing inclination in the King of Prussia to quit the safe ground of neutrality.

British interests at Constantinople had been hitherto so insignificant as only to require a diplomatic mission of the lowest rank. But Turkey's quarrel with France and alliance with England opened such a prospect of political influence, and expanded trade to the Levant, that in November Lord Grenville sent Lord Elgin, at his own request, as British Minister to the Sublime Porte, with the rank and appointments he had held at Berlin. Some weeks later Sir Sidney Smith, after many objections had been overcome, started for the Turkish capital in order to concert operations with the Porte and M. Tomara, the Russian resident minister, before proceeding to take command of a naval squadron then blockading the Nile. His letters to Grenville in January-March, 1799, contain interesting accounts of his reception by the Sultan and other incidents arising out of his mission to the East.<sup>1</sup> Colonel Kœhler's departure was delayed still longer, partly by obstruction at the Horse Guards,<sup>2</sup> and partly by sanguine anticipations, nourished by rumours of Bonaparte's death, of the ruin of the French expedition. Dundas wrote to Grenville on December 13 to remonstrate against the folly of accepting mere conjecture for ascertained fact.<sup>3</sup> His letter announced an intention of sending Colonel Maitland to Suez to report on the feasibility of despatching British troops from India to Egypt by the Red Sea; a project afterwards accomplished with splendid results.

At Naples the presence of Nelson's fleet had thrown the direction of affairs into the hands of the war party, led by the Queen. General Mack taking advantage of the enfeebled and dispersed state of the French army in the ecclesiastical States, crossed the border in November, at the head 40,000 men, and occupied Rome. The enemy, hastily concentrating under Generals Championnet and Macdonald, drove back the Neapolitans to the line of the Volturno. Though this position was very strong, Mack, losing heart, gave it up on ignominious conditions, and had to fly to the French camp from the fury of his troops. The King and Queen of the Two Sicilies embarked by night on Nelson's flagship, and were carried over to Sicily. The Neapolitan army disbanded. The lazzaroni defended Naples with splendid valour; but though they saved the city from being plundered, they could not save the monarchy; and Naples became the capital of the Parthenopian Republic. Austria, in spite of the Czar's remonstrances, looked on while the Kings of Sardinia and the Two Sicilies were stripped of all their Italian dominions. Baron Thugut, not being as yet ready for war, would not allow his hand to be forced.

On December 30 the Czar replied to Lord Grenville's last proposals.<sup>4</sup> He had spared no effort, he said, to form a strong

<sup>1</sup> Pages 437, 443, 476, 480, 491.

<sup>2</sup> George Canning to Lord Grenville, November, 1798. Page 356.

<sup>3</sup> Page 413.

<sup>4</sup> Page 427.

coalition against France. (1) By offering to mediate between Great Britain and Austria. He still hoped the British Government would not reject his friendly suggestions for an accommodation of its differences with the Emperor, whose aid could not be dispensed with. (2) By sending an army to support the King of Naples. (3) By asking the King of Prussia to join in forming a Quadruple Alliance, on the following conditions. That, in consideration of his acting against the French in Holland, he should have the aid of 45,000 Russian infantry, besides cavalry and artillery, for the support of which force Great Britain would advance £900,000, namely £225,000 for preparation and the remainder at the rate of £37,000 a month; that Holland and Belgium should be united under the rule of the Prince of Orange; that the King should be at liberty to enlarge his dominions by acquisitions from France. Austria had consented to these last articles. For the rest, the Czar approved generally of the territorial settlement recommended by Lord Grenville, but would not limit the Emperor to the recovery of Lombardy lest he should find it more for his interest to come to terms with France. The Pope also, he said, must be restored. He had pressed Austria to defer hostilities no longer; and he declared himself ready to take any further step for the advancement of their common aims the British Government might suggest.

Lord Grenville had already despatched his brother, Mr. Thomas Grenville, as Minister Plenipotentiary to Berlin to support the Russian proposals. But this mission was much impeded by contrary winds, and weather of extraordinary severity. At a first attempt in December to reach Cuxhaven, Mr. Grenville found the German coast completely ice-bound, and the ship, after beating about for nine days on a stormy sea, returned to Yarmouth.<sup>1</sup> A second voyage in the beginning of February proved still more perilous. Floating blocks of ice, swept down the current of the Elbe, caught the vessel and wrecked it on a sand-bank. The passengers and crew made their way over a frozen sea to the little island of Nework; and thence, by walking for six hours, in intense frost, through water which gradually rose above their waists, reached Cuxhaven with little loss of life. Mr. Grenville managed to save most of his official papers, but recovered none of his personal effects for some weeks afterwards.<sup>1</sup> When he arrived at Berlin on February 17, the Czar's proposals were still under the consideration of the Prussian Government ; Count Panin having orders to quit that capital if they were not accepted. Count Haugwitz and Count Finchenstein, feebly sustained by the Duke of Brunswick, supported them against the opposition of the King's family and the majority of his advisers, of his personal scruples, and of national sentiment.<sup>2</sup> It will be remembered that they carried Prussia much farther and faster on the road to hostilities with France, than Frederick William had consented to go in the overtures made to the British Government through Count Panin. They meant a repudiation by Prussia of the treaty of Basle, without any preliminary explanation with the French Directory ; and concert with Austria for the indefinite aggrandizement of that power, Prussia's rival and natural enemy in Germany. During the struggle of parties Haugwitz's supremacy in the department of foreign affairs had been severely shaken. When it became known that he inclined towards a breach with France, the peace party, headed by Prince Henry, which had hitherto given him his staunchest adherents, conspired to overthrow him. A charge of encouraging the patriotic aspirations of Poland brought against Prince Radzivil, who had married into the Royal family of Prussia, afforded a pretext to the Prince's relatives for accusing Haugwitz of misconduct in office. Count Schulemberg also, an old and able antagonist, whom Haugwitz had supplanted in the post of Foreign Secretary by advocating peace when Schulemberg advocated war, now turned his successful tactics against himself. Haugwitz, however, found no difficulty in exculpating himself to the King ; but though still able to rely on his sovereign's favour, the unsteady sympathy of the Duke of Brunswick, and the fear inspired by the Czar, as sustaining forces, he had forfeited the confidence of powerful classes.<sup>3</sup> And the equivocal conduct of the Austrian Government, which had abandoned the Kings of Sardinia and Naples to their fate, and had renewed secret negotiations with the French Directory through the Minister of the Cisalpine Republic at Vienna, while openly urging the King of Prussia to join with it in breaking up the Congress of Rastadt, strengthened the arguments of the peace party, incessantly poured into Frederick William's ear by Colonel Kökeritz, its mouthpiece in the Royal household. Panin, Grenville, Stamford and De Luc earnestly besought the Duke of Brunswick to cast the weight of his influence into the scale of a Quadruple Alliance. But the Duke after several interviews with the King relapsed into a state of doubt; and then Haugwitz, being of pliant disposition and tenacious of office, gave way to please his sovereign. In reply to the Czar's proposal of an offensive concert against France, he brought forward the counter-project of a defensive concert for the protection of North Germany, Sweden, and Denmark. By this scheme the King of Prussia undertook, in consideration of a subsidy from England, and of a pledge of armed aid from Russia in the event of his becoming involved in war with France, to raise the Prussian troops guarding the line of demarcation to such a degree of strength as would enable him agir au besoin. And Haugwitz assured Panin verbally that the slightest change of circumstances, such as Austrian victory or Austrian defeat, must inevitably bring Prussia into the field, either to free Holland or to defend Germany. The discussions that followed turned chiefly on the significance of the phrase agir au besoin. In the Prussian proposal the casus fœderis was a violation by France of the line of neutrality. Count Panin and Mr. Grenville contended that as the dangers arising from French aggression, and the necessity of delivering Holland from a French occupation were fully admitted by all parties, these should also be expressed in the compact as governing motives of Prussian action. After conferring with Frederick William, Haugwitz declared that he could go no farther. And as Mr. Grenville rejected the idea of paying for such limited co-operation, the negotiation came to an end.<sup>1</sup> In a subsequent conversation with De Luc, Haugwitz explained more fully his view of the political situation.<sup>2</sup> The common interests of the monarchical powers, and a mobilization of Prussian troops, would, he declared, have been in themselves a sufficient pledge of Prussian intervention when the fitting time arrived. He had, himself, been in favour of accepting the Russian proposals, but the King absolutely refused. And he considered an English alliance on the terms he had formulated, but failed to carry, essential to the safety of the Prussian Monarchy.

---

<sup>1</sup> Thomas Grenville to Lord Grenville, December 29. Page 426.

<sup>1</sup> Thomas Grenville to Lord Grenville, December 29, 1798 ; January 27. February 3, 7, 19, 23, 1799.

<sup>2</sup> Thomas Grenville to Lord Grenville, February 28, 1799.

<sup>3</sup> Prince of Orange to Lord Grenville, December 7 and 10, 1798.

<sup>1</sup> Thomas Grenville to Lord Grenville, March 4, 10, 18, and April 3, 1799. General de Stamford to the Duke of Brunswick, p. 520.

<sup>2</sup> Confidential notes, by M. de Luc, p. 524.

Mr. Grenville seems at first to have found consolation for the failure of his negotiation in a belief that the loss of Prussian aid would make Austria more tractable to British demands. But the political attitude of Count Dietrechstein, who came from Vienna as successor of Prince de Reuss, quickly dispelled this illusion. Baron Thugut seized the occasion of a new diplomatic appointment to write to Mr. Grenville in the style of old friendship.<sup>1</sup> The letter stated that Dietrechstein was charged to give and ask for such explanations as might clear away the doubts of each other's good faith which now separated Austria and Prussia, and asked Grenville to aid him with advice. But Grenville intimated to Dietrechstein, through Count Panin, that his instructions forbade co-operation with an Austrian envoy until the financial convention of May, 1795, had been ratified.<sup>2</sup> And as no answer was returned to this communication, the official relations of the two ministers assumed a merely formal character. It would appear, however, that the real purpose of Dietrechstein's mission had been to patch up a working agreement between Great Britain and Prussia. His tone and manner in intercourse with Count Haugwitz showed no disposition to conciliate. General de Stamford inferred from this unfriendly bearing of the Austrian envoy that Baron Thugut thought it good policy to exclude Prussia from the coalition. The King of Prussia, so Stamford argued, taking part in a war with France as leader of North Germany, would be in a position to hold Austria in check; isolated, under the jealous supervision of the Czar, he would be a nullity.<sup>3</sup> If this was the aim of the Imperial Chancellor, Mr. Grenville and Count Panin laboured together to defeat it, by forcing Prussia, in spite of herself, into war.

Napper Tandy had arrived at Hamburg in November, 1798; and although a French general, and on neutral ground, had been arrested by order of the Senate and handed over to the British Government. As the Directory threatened vengeance for this insult, the Czar, apparently at Panin's instigation, sent a proposal to Berlin that an army composed of Russian, Prussian, British, and Danish troops should assemble in the vicinity of the menaced city for its defence. And Mr. Grenville instructed Sir James Craufurd, the resident British Minister, secretly to persuade the principal inhabitants to receive a part of this composite force within their walls.<sup>1</sup> Hamburg being within the line of territory allowed to remain neutral by France on the guarantee of Prussia, the success of this intrigue would have served the double purpose of embroiling these two powers, and providing an advantageous starting point for an expedition to Holland. But while Haugwitz gained time by an evasive answer to the Czar's proposal, the citizens of Hamburg spoiled the project by refusing to admit a garrison.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Baron de Thugut to Thomas Grenville. p. 516.

<sup>2</sup> Thomas Grenville to Lord Grenville, March 23, p. 504.

<sup>3</sup> General de Stamford to the Duke of Brunswick, p. 520.

Mr. Grenville could no longer hope to accomplish the principal objects of his mission to Germany. In announcing it to the Marquis of Buckingham, Lord Grenville had written: "He (Thomas Grenville) will have, if I mistake not, very much the glory of signing the overthrow of Jacobin France."<sup>3</sup> He had signed nothing at Berlin; and he saw no prospect of advantage from a journey to Vienna. Instead of a Quadruple Alliance of powers acting in concert to achieve objects determined beforehand, there was only a disjointed sort of Triple Alliance, of which two of the partners were mutually estranged, and shaped their plans in entire independence of each other. Under these circumstances Mr. Grenville decided to remain at Berlin to watch and, as far as possible, influence the course of events. He vented his chagrin freely, if not altogether justly, in bitter reproaches against Sir Morton Eden, his colleague at Vienna. Sir Morton, he complained to his brother, sent only very short answers, and these merely echoes of Baron Thugut's opinions, to his own voluminous epistles; and, by servility to the Imperial Chancellor, had spoiled Grenville's game of playing off Austria and Prussia against each other, and thus making both or either pliant instruments of British policy.<sup>4</sup> The correspondence hardly supports this severe impeachment. Thugut during the whole course of negotiations at Berlin appears to have been well informed from Russian sources of King Frederick William's

<sup>1</sup> Thomas Grenville to Sir James Craufurd, p. 516.

<sup>2</sup> Thomas Grenville to Sir Charles Whitworth, p. 522.

<sup>3</sup> Lord Grenville to the Marquis of Buckingham, Court and Cabinets of George III

<sup>4</sup> Thomas Grenville to Lord Grenville, April 3, 1799.

indisposition to accept the Czar's proposals. And he had no longer the same pressing need as formerly of a British subsidy. He had gained time for Austrian preparation. And it appears from a letter of Count Woronzow to Lord Grenville, dated March 24, 1799, that the British Cabinet had now arranged to pay 90,000 Russian and 20,000 Swiss troops, at the rate of £181,000 a month, to act against the French; of which expenditure, as Mr. Grenville sorrowfully confessed, Austria necessarily would reap the benefit, without making the slightest concession to Great Britain. Sir Morton Eden's letters, no doubt, show that he shared Thugut's distrust of Prussia; but this was the view expressed also by Lord Elgin, and by Lord Grenville himself.

In the meantime hostilities had begun between France and Austria. Baron Thugut's dilatory tactics at length wore out the patience of the Czar, who threatened to withhold his aid if they were persisted in further.<sup>1</sup> And the march of Russian troops into Germany drew a declaration of war from the Directory. Throughout the country which bore the first brunt of the conflict, it seems to have been unpopular. The delegates of the German Confederation at Rastadt had come to an agreement with those of France on every disputed point of much importance. The minor States of Southern Germany appealed in vain to the King of Prussia to include them in the neutral zone protected by his guarantee. A French army commanded by General Jourdan over-ran them early in March, while another under General Massena invaded the Grisons. But though the French pursued the same system of incessant attack which had carried them everywhere to victory in the last war, it was no longer with the same superiority of numbers and of military skill. The defeat of Jourdan by the Archduke Charles at Stockach on March 25, followed by the retreat of the beaten army in confusion across the Rhine, was only the first of a series of Republican reverses which signalized the opening of the campaign, and promised a rapid accomplishment of the aims of the coalition.

The Editor has thought it right to give a rather full account of the secret negotiations for the formation of a third coalition against Revolutionary government in France, because the papers relating to them, now printed for the first time, illustrate a somewhat obscure chapter of modern history. The second long series of letters contained in this volume, concerning the state of Ireland at the close of the 18th century, and the Act of Union, add little of importance to what has been told already in the Cornwallis, Castlereagh, Auckland, Pelham, Wolfe Tone, and other contemporary records, and call for comparatively brief notice. The great majority of them were written by the Marquis of Buckingham to Lord Grenville. Grenville's letters to the Marquis during the same period are sparingly given in the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos's work, Memoirs of the Court and Cabinets of George III.

---

<sup>1</sup> Count Woronzow to Lord Grenville, March 24, 1799, p. 504.

When Bonaparte turned his mind, at the end of February, 1798, from an invasion of England to conquest in the East, the French Directory pledged itself to Wolfe Tone and Lewins, agents at Paris of the Society of United Irishmen, to equip and despatch simultaneously to convenient points of the Irish coast, several small expeditions in aid of a national insurrection. In France, however, performance lagged a long way behind promise. And the arrest of Lord Edward FitzGerald and Messrs. Sheares at Dublin in May disconcerted the plans of the Governing Council of United Irishmen. A few partial outbreaks of civil war within the confines of the old English Pale, and in one or two counties of Ulster, gave little cause of apprehension. But the burnings and other outrages of bodies of yeomanry, living at free quarters among a Catholic population, provoked a semi-religious conflict in Wexford, which proved truly formidable, and threw the Irish Government into a state of panic. Lord Camden, the Viceroy, sent pressing demands to London for English troops<sup>1</sup>; and followed them up by a personal request to Pitt that Lord Cornwallis should be despatched to Ireland to replace or assist him, as Governor-General or Commander-in-Chief.<sup>2</sup> The British Government had but few troops to send. As appears from a memorandum of Lord Grenville, dated June 18, besides the Guards, 4,500 strong, the number of regular infantry in Great Britain fell short of 4,000, many of these being raw recruits.<sup>3</sup> In this dilemma the Cabinet, acting on a suggestion of Lord Buckingham, passed a Bill enabling English militia regiments to serve in Ireland for a limited time at their own request.<sup>1</sup> And Lord Cornwallis, yielding to the solicitations of his colleagues, assumed the offices of Lord Lieutenant and Commander-in-Chief in succession to Lord Camden. Before either he or the English reinforcements could reach the scene of conflict, rebellion had been crushed in Wexford, and resistance elsewhere had sunk down to guerilla warfare. But on June 8, while the issue still hung in doubt, Pitt had written in confidence to Lord Auckland that he and Grenville had for some time past been discussing a plan of Legislative Union with Ireland, to be introduced after the suppression of the rebellion; that they saw their way on all points except those of trade and revenue, regarding which they wished to consult him. A statistical statement, prepared by Grenville, accompanied this letter.<sup>2</sup> At the end of the same month Lord Buckingham went to Dublin in command of the Bucks militia, mainly for the purpose of co-operating with Pitt and his brother to frame and pass a political measure which he advocated with all the authority of a Lord Lieutenant who had borne the brunt of the struggle on the Regency question in 1789. On August 6, in answer to Grenville's inquiries, Pitt wrote that he had urged Cornwallis "to bring forward the great work of Union, which can never be so well accomplished as now."<sup>3</sup> From the letters quoted, and from those of Lord Buckingham to his brother of later date, it may be inferred that the plan of the Ministry was to carry an Act of Union through the Irish Parliament while national opposition was paralyzed by terror; dominant Protestantism, a small minority armed to the teeth, being scared almost out of its wits by rebellion, invasion, and tales of "Popish massacre"; Catholics and Presbyterians, a large but disarmed majority, being thoroughly cowed by military outrage, "vigour beyond the law," and savage threats of extermination.

<sup>1</sup> Marquis of Buckingham to Lord Grenville, May 29, 1798.

<sup>2</sup> W. Pitt to Lord Grenville, June 11 and 12, 1798.

<sup>3</sup> Page 237.

Lord Cornwallis on arriving at Dublin on June 20, 1798, found the minds of men, and particularly of men in power, so swayed by the fiercest religious and political passion that he took the resolution of studying the situation for himself, and acting on his own informed judgment.<sup>4</sup> This independent attitude, his putting a stop to military license and the abuse of martial law, and his proclaiming an amnesty, drew on him the

<sup>1</sup> Buckingham to Grenville, May 29, June 3, 10, 12, 1798.

<sup>2</sup> Diary and Correspondence of Lord Auckland.

<sup>3</sup> Page 275.

<sup>4</sup> Cornwallis Correspondence.

bitter censure of the Protestant Ascendency party, with the exception of Lord Clare, which filled the high offices of State, and had governed the country under Lord Camden. Lord Buckingham at first gave the Lord Lieutenant zealous support. In a letter to Lord Grenville, dated July 23, he depicted the effects of Lord Camden's system in the darkest colours; the "atrocious rapine and cruelties" of the yeomanry and militia; the state of utter disorganization and lawlessness into which these bodies had fallen under the inefficient command of forty-three generals, "I believe the worst in Europe"; the anarchical influence of the Orange societies, "a loyal association on Jacobin principles," which provoked civil war wherever it found a footing, and had become a danger to the State. He associated himself with the "very meritorious conduct" of Cornwallis; and declared that the question of Union must be postponed until the Irish army had been thoroughly reformed.<sup>1</sup> Lord Carysfort also, Grenville's brother-in-law, in a letter dated August 15, expressed approval of the Viceroy's merciful policy. The clamour against him, Carysfort thought, "proceeded in a great measure from certain political intriguers, who are apprehensive that he means to rely upon his own judgment more than theirs."<sup>2</sup> On August 22 General Humbert landed in Mayo with a small French force, and a few days afterwards defeated General Lake in an action known as the "race of Castlebar." Lord Cornwallis moved westward to meet the enemy, taking with him a detachment of the Bucks militia, but leaving the Colonel with the rest of the regiment in Dublin. By this arrangement, and perhaps still more by his explanation that it had been made for the benefit of the public service, he grievously wounded Lord Buckingham's self-esteem, and converted a useful adherent into a furious and unrelenting assailant.<sup>3</sup> Humbert surrendered at Ballinamuck on September 8. A few days afterwards Napper Tandy, in command of another small French armament, touched at Port Rutland in Donegal, and hearing of Humbert's fate fled to Norway. Then the question of union came to the front again. On September 26 Lord Buckingham sent his brother a report of a conference he had held on that subject with Lord Chancellor Clare. Clare was the Irish statesman in whom Pitt and Grenville placed their chief trust.

<sup>1</sup> Page 264.

<sup>2</sup> Page 280.

<sup>3</sup> Marquis of Buckingham to Lord Grenville, August 26, 30, 31, September 1-30,

They regarded him as the back-bone of what was termed the English interest in Ireland. He and Buckingham found themselves in general agreement except as to the expediency of granting equality of civil rights to Irish Catholics, a concession to which he declared himself absolutely opposed. The Marquis on the contrary insisted that without it and a juster system of levying tithes, a Bill of Union would not be worth the trouble of passing. But no Act of Union, he informed his brother, would or could be carried by the present Viceroy. Cornwallis, he asserted, showed no zeal in the cause, and had sunk too low in public opinion. The forty-three Generals, or some of them, no longer seemingly the "worst in Europe," made a jest of his military capacity since General Humbert had out-manceuvred him in the field; the official class, incensed by his not consulting them, betrayed him at the Castle.<sup>1</sup> About a fortnight later Lord Clare went over to London at Pitt's request. On October 16 Pitt wrote to Grenville "I have had two very full conversations with Lord Clare. What he says is very encouraging with a view to the great question of the Union. . . . I endeavoured to learn what he really thought about the general state of things in Ireland. He seems to believe that the want of that communication which had formerly been made even too much a matter of course, had produced some dissatisfaction, but that the ill-humour does not go far; and that everything may be set right if a Secretary who can speak with the authority belonging to his station is sent over immediately." This letter, for some reason or other, is silent in regard to the change of ministerial policy which gave real significance to the conversations to which it referred. Up to this time the leading members of the Cabinet had professed the opinion that Legislative Union would afford a safe and suitable occasion for emancipating the Irish Catholics. But Lord Clare, as we know from his own letters and from other sources, persuaded Pitt that the Irish Parliament could only be brought to accept an Act of Union which afforded an additional guarantee for the maintenance of Protestant ascendancy.<sup>2</sup> The Prime Minister was too anxious to secure his object to reject the means offered. Lord Grenville acquiesced in the exclusion of the Catholics, in order to teach them, as he explained to his brother, that they could gain nothing by rebellion.<sup>1</sup> And Dundas, their staunchest friend in the Cabinet, was absent in Scotland. Grenville seems to have thought Clare's statement to Pitt in regard to Irish clamour against the Viceroy wanting in candour, it tallied so little with the invective of Lord Buckingham, who appealed to the Chancellor's testimony as being in "exact agreement" with his own.<sup>2</sup> He invited Clare to meet Pitt at Dropmore for further discussion, but Clare, at the last moment, sent the excuse of urgent business in Ireland.<sup>3</sup> Mr. Pelham, Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, who had been for some months in England, being now pressed to return to his post, sent in his resignation; and Cornwallis chose Lord Castlereagh to fill the vacancy.

---

<sup>1</sup> Page 322.

<sup>2</sup> Diary and Correspondence of Lord Auckland—Castlereagh Correspondence.

In the meantime two other expeditions from France had reached the Irish coast. One carrying nearly 3,000 troops, with Wolfe Tone as Adjutant General, was defeated, and for the greater part captured, by Admiral Warren at Lough Swilly on October 10. A few days later Admiral Savary, who had conveyed Humbert to Killala, returned with a re-inforcement of 2,000 men, but on hearing of the disaster at Lough Swilly he carried them back to France. This was the last attempt of the French Directory to revolutionize Ireland. Interesting particulars of the trial and death of Wolfe Tone are given in Lord Buckingham's letters dated November 10, 12, and 13.

Early in November Lord Grenville sent to his brother, for criticism and emendation, a draft of the ministerial Bill of Union, which seems to have been mainly his own work.<sup>4</sup> It excluded everything savouring of reform, as leading to revolution in England. The 300 members of the Irish House of Commons were reduced to 100, the number allowed to Ireland in the United Parliament, by taking away one from each county, and grouping the boroughs as in Scotland. The Bill departed from Scottish precedent by providing that Irish representative peers should be elected for life; and making the electing peers eligible to sit for British constituencies in the United House of Commons. Lord Buckingham had also framed a Bill partly on the same

<sup>1</sup> Court and Cabinets of George III. Lord Grenville to Marquis of Buckingham, November 5, 1795.

<sup>2</sup> Buckingham to Grenville, October 18 and 23.

<sup>3</sup> Grenville to Buckingham, November 5, 1798, Court and Cabinets of

<sup>4</sup> George III.

lines. By depriving every county and borough of one representative this scheme reduced the 300 Irish members to 150. 100 of these, chosen by ballot at the beginning of every session, were to sit in Parliament; the 50 others remaining in Dublin to form committees for taking and reporting evidence in cases of contested elections and private Acts. The Bill also proposed to establish a Board of Lords Triers in the Irish capital, to hear appeals from Irish Courts of Justice to the House of Lords.<sup>1</sup> Buckingham insisted much and often that his suggestion of Irish Parliamentary Committees should be adopted, as otherwise the cost of sending witnesses from Ireland to London would, in many cases, operate as a denial of justice. But Grenville answered that no political body could be suffered to sit in Dublin which might keep alive the memory of the Irish Legislature, or be a germ from which a national Parliament might some day spring into existence.

Lord Buckingham's letters throw a good deal of light on the difficulties and discomfort of Lord Cornwallis's position, to which the writer materially contributed. No member of the British Cabinet appears to have been more firmly convinced than the Lord Lieutenant that an independent Irish Parliament was a perpetual danger to the British Monarchy. But he felt that an Act of Union forced through a Legislature that did not really represent them, against the wishes of the people, or as a compact with a small ruling minority, would be calamitous for Ireland, and of very doubtful advantage to Great Britain.<sup>2</sup> The Irish Catholics regarded him as a friend; and, so far as their opinion on the subject could be ascertained, seemed disposed to welcome, or at least acquiesce in, closer connexion with England, if accompanied by a removal of their civil disabilities, freedom of trade, and a more equitable system of levying tithes. Considering their claims equitable, and their assent essential to the success of the policy of Government, he sent an Under-Secretary in whom he confided, William Elliott, to England to remonstrate with Pitt against his sudden change of attitude towards them. The Prime Minister replied that in his opinion an establishment for their clergy and a better tithing system would satisfy the requirements of the case. Cornwallis's sense of duty forbade him either to desert from a post of danger, or to resort to what he thought an abuse of his powers in order to accomplish, and at the same time vitiate, a political object. He therefore continued to govern, so far as might be possible, according to ordinary law, and to temper justice with mercy. But this line of conduct which Lord Buckingham had at first extolled as "highly meritorious," he now denounced almost daily to his brother as criminal "imbecility." The Lord-Lieutenant, the letters complained,<sup>1</sup> allowed Civil Courts to over-ride Military Courts; tolerated free expression of opinion on the question of Union at public meetings, and in pamphlets and ballads; transported rebels instead of putting them to the sword or hanging them. By this fatal leniency he defeated the main purpose he had been sent to Ireland to serve, and displayed absolute inefficiency in the office of Lord Lieutenant. The opportunity of carrying an Act of Union which he neglected to seize was fast passing away; and unless he were at once recalled, and a more capable successor appointed, it might never be recovered. These complaints, to which Lord Clare now lent countenance, were addressed to ears only too open to receive them. Lord Grenville had, more emphatically perhaps than any of his colleagues, identified himself officially with the system of repression that had been pursued by Lord Camden; and had wished to maintain it under Lord Cornwallis, even when his brother had so forcibly condemned it, as well to punish rebellion, as to accomplish the prime object of English policy in Ireland.<sup>2</sup> This view also appears to have been that of Pitt, and to have prevailed in the Cabinet. The Ministry did not venture to recall Lord Cornwallis because, as Grenville wrote to his brother, they had no other general, capable of coping with a French invasion, to send to Ireland.<sup>3</sup> But, with the exception of Dundas, they gave him no support.<sup>4</sup> To add to the Viceroy's embarrassments, no sooner was the question of a Union publicly mooted, than it became apparent that Pitt had been misled in his conferences with Lord Clare with regard to the political sentiments of the party of Protestant Ascendancy. Mr. Foster, the Irish Speaker, its most influential leader, notwithstanding

---

<sup>1</sup> Buckingham to Grenville, November 5, 10, 26, and December 25, 1798.

<sup>2</sup> Lord Cornwallis to Mr. Pelham—Pelham Papers.

<sup>1</sup> Buckingham to Grenville, October 23, 1798, and afterwards.

<sup>2</sup> Grenville to Buckingham, July and September, 1798, Court and Cabinets of George III.

<sup>3</sup> Grenville to Buckingham, January 28, 1799, Court and Cabinets of George III.

<sup>4</sup> Cornwallis Correspondence; Castlereagh Correspondence.

“the very desperate state of his private affairs,”<sup>1</sup> could not be brought to support an Act of Union by Pitt’s personal solicitations and splendid offers of recompense. Sir John Parnell and other leading officials, the Archbishop of Cashel, the Orange Society, the Bar, the bankers and merchants of Dublin, followed Foster. The country gentlemen generally, as represented in the House of Commons, took the same side. And the forces of Protestant Ascendency openly coalesced with the Whig Opposition to maintain an Irish Parliament. Being thus reduced to dependence on the good will of borough mongers and political jobbers, who returned a large majority of the Irish House of Commons, for the means of passing a measure framed in England without his concurrence, Cornwallis found it absolutely necessary to retain the English regiments, which had volunteered in June for six months’ service in Ireland, until the close of the session of Parliament opening in January, 1799. Here again Lord Buckingham was a sharp thorn in his side. Several of those regiments, on being sounded, declined to remain beyond the term originally fixed; and further inquiry convinced the Lord Lieutenant that their discontent had originated with the Colonel of the Royal Bucks.<sup>2</sup> Lord Buckingham also, on being officially interrogated by Lord Castlereagh as to the disposition of his men, replied that the question should be addressed to him by the British not the Irish Government; and he wrote in similar terms to Mr. Dundas. Cornwallis reported the circumstance to the Duke of Portland, declining further communication with a commanding officer who disowned his authority; and Dundas wrote on the subject to Grenville, “I can see nothing likely to arise but infinite mischief.”<sup>3</sup> When at length Lord Buckingham, probably under instructions from Dundas, reported to the Lord Lieutenant that his regiment wished to return to England, he, as he wrote to Lord Grenville on December 11, “received an official copy of a letter written by the Adjutant General . . . charging me in most distinct terms with disobedience of orders, and with having ‘occasioned this disease’ among my men. . . . I have, as you will believe, written to Lord Cornwallis in the style that becomes me.” It may safely be inferred from the rest of this

---

<sup>1</sup> Buckingham to Grenville, January 19, 1799.

<sup>2</sup> Cornwallis Correspondence.

<sup>3</sup> Grenville to Dundas, December 4, 1798. Dundas to Grenville, December 5, 1798.

letter to his brother that the Marquis's epistle to the Lord Lieutenant was characteristic rather than edifying. On the following day he informed Grenville that he had closed his correspondence with the Viceroy "with the insolent submissiveness in language of the very strongest sort that I could put together." Lord Grenville who, earlier in the year, had remonstrated strongly with Lord Buckingham for opposing, as a Colonel of Militia, military arrangements made by the Duke of York,<sup>1</sup> does not appear to have expressed disapproval of insubordination, so much more flagrant and dangerous, to the authority of Lord Cornwallis.

At the end of December Lord Castlereagh, who had been summoned to London to confer with Lord Grenville, returned to Dublin with the Bill of Union which he was to lay before the Irish Parliament at its meeting in January. He announced that the removal of Catholic disabilities was not to be considered in connexion with the measure. Lord Buckingham warned his brother that if Government persisted in this resolution, in the vain hope of conciliating the Orange Societies, the Bill would not pass.<sup>2</sup> Castlereagh spoke confidently of carrying it through the House of Commons by 140 votes to 80. But his Under Secretary Cooke, whose long experience made him a much safer guide in the crooked ways of Irish politics, in a most secret letter to Grenville, dated January 15, made success depend on their securing the doubtful support of three great borough proprietors. "My particular reason for writing to your Lordship," he continued, "is that I conceive the question will be decided by the Catholics." Lord Shannon and many others, he said, who had been hostile to their claims hitherto, would concede them under the altered conditions of Legislative Union. "If it were possible," the letter concluded, "that the Catholics should be admitted to equality on a peace, provided they acted heartily in this question, and through the war, it might be of great use." To this appeal Lord Grenville seems to have made no reply. There were difficulties in England of which the Irish Government knew nothing. As January 22, the day fixed for the meeting of Parliament drew near, the tide of national opposition rose stronger and higher against the Bill. The dismissal of Sir John Parnell and other high officials quelled a revolt of placemen in the House of Commons. But Lord Castlereagh's "cold shoulder" effectually repelled Catholic support; and certain borough-mongers seized the opportunity of extorting by a display of power better terms for themselves than Pitt was disposed to grant. On January 23, after one of the longest and most passionate debates on record, Castlereagh, to his great mortification, carried an almost colourless address in favour of Union by a single vote. At the next stage of proceedings, he suffered a defeat which decided the fate of the Bill for that session. Two imperfect reports of the debate, written for Grenville by Lords Carysfort and Buckingham on January 23, are published in this volume; the former a sober review of the political situation, the latter an indictment of the Lord Lieutenant. Cornwallis's own explanation of the failure was that the Bill had been opposed by private interests, and not supported by the public. And this view is in some measure confirmed by Lord Carysfort's statement, in a letter dated February 5, that several borough-owners had combined for the protection of their interests, which accounted for the defection of some of the members on whose votes Lord Castlereagh had confidently reckoned. Pitt's great speech at the end of January in the British House of Commons, on the subject of Legislative Union, announced the resolution of the Ministry to persevere with their measure in Ireland. There are, however, indications in Lord Grenville's correspondence that although the check Ministers had met with did not divert them from a cherished purpose, it taught them the necessity of enlarging their methods. On February 7, Pitt wrote to Grenville, "I will write to him (the King) to remonstrate a little against the notion which he seems forming every day, more and more, of excluding the Catholics in case of an Union." Already on January 28, Lord Carysfort had intimated to Grenville that the only sure way of passing an Act of Union through the Irish Parliament was to compensate owners of the boroughs which the measure would disfranchise. In March, Lord Castlereagh found occasion in an outbreak of lawlessness, originating chiefly as would appear in social causes, to pass most drastic Coercion Acts, indemnifying magistrates and others for recent abuses of authority which the Civil Courts condemned; and enabling the Lord Lieutenant, by his mere proclamation, to place the kingdom, or any part of it, under martial law. These three circumstances suggest the lines which Government now intended to adopt for the accomplishing of its great object.

<sup>1</sup> Grenville to Buckingham, April, and May 1, 1798, Court and Cabinets of George III.

<sup>2</sup> Buckingham to Grenville, January 2 and 14, 1799.

The defeat of the Irish Government, which he attributed solely to official mismanagement, furnished Lord Buckingham with new arguments for the recall of Lord Cornwallis. As they did not prevail, he turned his attention to the arrangements involved in the removal of his own and other militia regiments to England at the beginning of April. By these he found himself exposed to a fresh "outrage," which filled the cup of his sorrows to overflowing. The offender was the Duke of York. And the offence is set forth with all its aggravating circumstances, in three letters to Lord Grenville dated March 11, 13, and 23. Having, for some reasons not stated, laid his plans to pass the summer months of 1799 at Gosfield in Essex, a country house inherited by his wife from Lord Nugent, he "entreated" the Commander-in-Chief to send the Bucks militia to Chelmsford barracks, "stating expressly the personal convenience which I propose to myself from this arrangement." Lord Euston, commanding the Essex militia, and crossing over from Ireland at the same time, also applied to the Duke to allow his regiment to return to its native county. This request finding more favour at the Horse Guards, Ashford barracks were assigned to the Royal Bucks. Lord Buckingham protested to his brother against a decision breaking in "so essentially and so unhandsomely on my individual and private comfort" as "very wanton oppression;" and Dundas, apparently the most good-natured of Ministers, at Grenville's request, used his influence at the Horse Guards to have it revoked. He seems to have found it a matter not easy to accomplish. On March 23, Lord Buckingham wrote "I shall wait most impatiently for the return of the post that shall untie my tongue, and enable me to explain to my officers how my wishes and theirs have been received by H.R.H., in return for my having led the way on this most thankless duty, which every hour makes me regret the having undertaken." This was the last letter of the Marquis from Ireland to Lord Grenville.

The other papers comprised in this Volume which claim particular attention are :—

- (1) Reports, dated March, 1798, by M. Bornes, a member of the Council of Five Hundred, of conversations in Switzerland with General Carnot, after the revolution of the 18th Fructidor in France.
  - (2) A letter from Mr. Dundas to Lord Grenville, dated July 21, 1798, relating to the establishment of a military college for the education of British officers under the superintendence of General de Jarry, a distinguished French strategist, of whose services mention is made in the Introduction to Volume III.
  - (3) Letters from Lord Mornington, dated November 18, 1798, and February 21, 1799, discoursing familiarly to Grenville of his conduct and policy during the first year of his term of office as Viceroy of India.
-

This Report has been prepared by Mr. Walter Fitzpatrick, who has also written the introduction and compiled the index.

---

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF
J. B. FORTESCUE, ESQUIRE, PRESERVED AT DROPMORE.

---

VOL. IV.

---

CAPTAIN SIR W. SIDNEY SMITH TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Secret.

1792, June 21. Walmer House, Deal.—“I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th instant, together with my instructions transmitted to me by Mr. Burges, which I shall return as directed before I leave England.

“I beg leave also to make my acknowledgments for the liberal manner in which your Lordship has considered my request for a change in the mode of my receiving the further supply of money, and to express myself satisfied with the propriety of your Lordship’s decision, and, in short, with the arrangement as it now stands. I have no doubt but that the addition your Lordship has been so good as to make to the sum will be adequate to the attainment of the objects at present before me; it shall be my constant care and study to make it hold out, and I hope I need not add my assurances that it shall be faithfully applied to the purposes for which it is destined. I wish clearly to be understood not to look to any surplus or balance left in my hands as repayment to me for my personal services in this business. Nothing of that kind can bear any proportion to the certain labour and probable risk before me, which cannot be estimated arithmetically, or compared with any sum whatever. Your Lordship’s approbation, which I hope to obtain as it shall be my study to deserve it, will go farther towards balancing that account than any sum that could be named; and I cannot but feel the more secure of it, as my communications are allowed to be direct with yourself, and as I am rendered less dependent on the assistance, and less subject to the interference, of any other person. I should be sorry my tenacity on that subject should bear the imputation of caprice or an ungenerous want of confidence. I must therefore say plainly that the cause of it was not only my general experience in parallel cases, but my absolute knowledge of a jealousy existing, and of its operation and effect, by cramping the means of obtaining information, and suppressing or misrepresenting communications in a case exactly similar to mine. Your Lordship will easily perceive what I allude to, even if you do not already know it in the full extent which I mean it. Common prudence dictated that I should go over the whole of my ground in idea before I stirred a step, and that I should examine the characters of those with whom I am to have dealings; this is the result of my enquiries, and I am induced to give it your Lordship thus early in order to secure myself against the effects of this same jealousy by awakening your attention to its existence. I have only further to assure your Lordship that I shall pay strict attention to the purport of your letter, and my general instructions, governing myself in all cases not specified by what I shall judge to be conformable to your Lordship's wishes and intentions, and by the dictates of that gratitude I cannot but feel for the confidence that is placed in me."

CAPTAIN SIR W. SIDNEY SMITH to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private and Secret.

1795, January 13. Diamond, off Brest.—"The subject of Turkey will of course plead my excuse for troubling you, it being my duty to communicate any information I obtain from that quarter. My late letters from Constantinople contain some which I think your Lordship ought to be acquainted with. I have thought it indelicate to anticipate the correspondence of my friend Mr. Liston on the current events of that country, but in this case what I have to tell you cannot come through a regular channel, and it is of such moment that I think you ought not to be ignorant of it, nor would it be right for me to act in it without your knowledge, considering some collateral circumstances which raise a question on the propriety and policy of it, which you alone can decide for me. Sultan Selim, whose characteristic is timidity, and whose most energetic measures are dictated by his apprehensions, being convinced that nothing can secure his throne on the European side of the Bosphorous but the adoption of the same military system which has been so successfully employed against him by his dreaded rival Russia, has turned his thoughts seriously to the new modelling his army and navy; their arms, discipline, are to be European, but every step he takes in this reform shows him he cannot proceed without European instructors in the several branches.

"Having been consulted on these points during my stay at Constantinople, I, of course, did all in my power to influence principals rather to look to the English for these sort of improvements than any other nation, conceiving that we might be benefited thereby in a commercial point of view by our exports, and politically by not allowing any other nation to acquire that sort of influence in their councils which must follow from its subjects being placed at the heads of the several military departments.

"The French aimed at this influence, and as we did not step forward in competition, they obtained some advantages. I endeavoured to undermine them as long as I stayed there, for which I became so obnoxious to the Jacobins as to be put on their proscribed list and was very near having my throat cut at Smyrna accordingly. It seems, however, that the Sultan's eyes begin to be opened as to the impolicy of nourishing such a nest of vipers as the Jacobins in the bosom of his capital, and has rather taken the alarm at the progress of their system so near his palace gates ; he is afraid to look to Russia for protection, but I am sure he does to England in his own individual sentiments. He is, however, surrounded by those whom the crown jewels and Versailles furniture sent by the Convention have bribed to their service if not to their system.

"The Sultan is chiefly occupied by his fears of Russia, and feels most sensibly his inability to answer the threats which occasionally come from that quarter, impeding him in his projects of finance, and the internal regulations of the bordering provinces. He feels himself unarmed till his forces are organised and equipped in the European mode. Beginning himself to despise those unwieldy cannon which have hitherto encumbered his armies, he secretly writes, through an agent whom he has supplied with the necessary sum, for me to send him a bombardier, a cannon-founder, and a tactician. The question is, then, is it politic to send him these three people (who, by the bye, cannot do much to reorganise that empire in their lifetime). The reasoning on it is, simply, if he does not get them from England (being determined to have them) he will obtain them elsewhere ; and it might be as well to have three persons in those situations, on whom we have a hold, as three from the enemy, who are now labouring with astonishing indefatigability to obtain an exclusive influence in that quarter ; and which may become sufficient to produce an inundation of barbarians from the south, while those of France do their part to destroy civilized Europe in the north.

"I ground my alarm on this subject as well on what I was witness to on the spot as on the uniform tenor of the information I have received from thence since. I will transcribe a paragraph in the last letter I received from my brother Spencer, who is secretary to the ambassador. He begins thus : 'I feel that the increased malignity and activity of our enemies demand that one should not neglect the slightest chance of contributing to their discomfiture, by exertion and efforts however humble and obscure. The reverberative shock, or counterstroke from Bedlam broke loose, is more sensibly and seriously felt here every day (dated Constantinople, 10th November,) without any rational prospect of our present discouraging position being mended. The most urgent necessity exists for taking measures to support the national interests and dignity in this part of the world ; if something is not done, I am firmly persuaded that, independent of immediate loss and humiliation, you will feel the reaction of this same shock that you all seem to suppose is exhausting itself, and it will be felt where least expected, and of most importance. All that human prudence could devise, in the stage and condition in which our interests were transferred to Mr. Liston, has been done, but every day offers fresh instances of the impossibility of effecting anything here without support, to oppose the want of earnestness in the chiefs, and the marked disinclination among the subalterns of this government. Prevention may still be efficacious, when I fear that remedies cannot be found hereafter.'

"Now you will naturally ask me what harm can they do us. I answer, that if the French, by influence on the rabble, or by alliance with Turkey, usurp the empire of the Levant, the first inconvenience will be that a diversion will be made to draw off the attention and forces of our ally the Emperor. Secondly, our Turkey trade, already at its last effort, will be totally transferred to the hands of the French. A consequence of which will be, that they will be enabled to realize the project of diverting the India trade (so far as regards the south of Europe) into the old channel of the desert and the Red Sea, reducing ours to our own immediate consumption; for it must be recollected that many of those articles which are now imported by us from Bombay will not find their way thither to our hands when the straight way from the gulf of Persia to the Marseilles market is again opened. It was not the greatest facility of the conveyance by the Cape of Good Hope which turned the commerce originally to that circuitous route, for it required the force of the Portuguese, successfully employed by Albuquerque, to destroy the coasting trade then carried on by the Arabian Moors; nothing but the want of policy in the Turks, and the unsettled state of the government in Egypt has prevented this trade from naturally reverting into the old channel, the practicability of which is proved by the very considerable imports of Turkey for its own consumption.

"The French have long had their eye on Egypt; its military force consisting entirely of cavalry without artillery, and this divided into two distinct and opposite bodies, leaves the country an easy prey to any European invasion. Indeed such is the nature of the contest between the rival Beys, that a European nation siding with the fugitive party (whichever it may happen to be at the time) can replace them in the seat of government at Cairo, and maintain them there in its interest, so long as it finds it convenient, to the exclusion of all others. The French know the state of Egypt well, having the most flourishing factory there, and are likely to profit by this knowledge if we allow them to realize their projects in Turkey.

"Having now, as I hope, awakened your attention to the possibility of such an evil happening to us, it may be as well to see if we cannot avert it.

"The Turkish government, ignorant, indolent, interested and apprehensive as they are, must be under the influence of some European nation; neighbours being rivals are out of the question; they therefore naturally fall under that of France unless we think it worth while to exert ours, which is far from inconsiderable, though much impaired by our not having kept the command of the Archipelago. A French squadron has ridden, and now rides, master of that sea, to the great prejudice of our trade and our political consequence in the eyes of the Turks. The first step of the new vizier is to talk very high language about the violation of the Turkish neutrality in the capture of the Sibylle at Miconi; the best way of silencing him (in my opinion) would be to send a proper squadron to take all the rest of the French frigates in the Archipelago, wherever they might be; and if after this the French intrigues should produce any more manifestoes from the Porte in a style our ambassador ought to resent, the presence of that same English squadron under the mouldering walls of the Seraglio would ensure the dismissal of the vizier, prevent an actual treaty of alliance with France, and obtain the thanks of Sultan Selim for having relieved him from the impulse of a faction which he well knows will otherwise depose him.

"If things should take a turn to make an appearance of hostility necessary, I am sufficiently well acquainted with all the vulnerable parts of the empire (having been consulted as to their defence) to know how to place a force in such a situation as to ensure that supplications should come without the necessity of burning a grain of powder; a menacing position being quite sufficient to convince the fears of the multitude, if reasoning should fail of reaching their understandings.

"Whenever your Lordship may call on me for this service I am ready; the only obstacles are the famed castles of the Dardanelles, whose fire I consider so little formidable that I assure you it would not even be necessary to return it. It is to be remembered, however, that, if a measure of this kind is intended, it must be done in the spring, when the wind is south-west, or else the summer north-east wind will come on and render the forcing the passage impracticable. The question of the force necessary for such an expedition can be examined at a proper time. I consider it as premature to open the subject to my friend Lord Spencer, with whom I am in correspondence, conceiving it should more properly come from your Lordship. Suffice it to say, I despise eight sail of nominal line-of-battle ships, two of which only are at all arranged; and I have no reason in my intercourse with that false creature the Capitan Pasha to respect his nautic abilities. A very small force would convince him and the Turkish government that France was not mistress of the Mediterranean; and that they were supreme in their part only so long as we chose they should be so. Our strength in the Mediterranean has hitherto been otherwise employed, but a detachment would be sufficient, if applied in the way which the local pilotage of those seas admits."

H. A. DE ZINCKEL to LORD GRENVILLE.

1795, December 24. Manheim.—"Je ne me suis pas cru justifié en dernier lieu d'importuner votre Excellence avec les rapports de ce qui s'est passé aux armées, convaincu comme je l'étais qu'elle en recevait tous les détails par d'autres mains, et je me suis borné à réunir à la même source tous les objets qui ont pu venir à ma connaissance particulière. N'ayant pas reçu vos commandements à cet égard, j'ai dû espérer que cette conduite, ainsi que les raisons qui m'y ont déterminé, avoient obtenu l'approbation de votre Excellence. Cependant à mesure que l'époque qui doit par un développement d'opérations vigoureuses amener la crise par laquelle la tranquillité sera rendue à l'Europe, et son sort assuré contre les maux d'un bouleversement général dont elle était menacée, je sens qu'il est de mon devoir indispensable de présenter à votre Excellence, dans une lettre toute particulière, quelques observations sur les moyens de rendre l'ouverture de la campagne aussi propice que décisive : elles portent sur le commandement et l'approvisionnement des armées Impériales et Royales. L'on n'a pas cessé depuis le commencement de la guerre de se récrier sur la nécessité d'établir une parfaite unité dans les plans des campagnes, et l'accord entre les généraux qui devoient concourir à leur exécution, et ce fut avec raison que tous les malheurs arrivés ont été attribués au défaut d'harmonie dans l'une et l'autre partie. Le remède à cet inconvénient était, ou le choix d'un chef éminent et expérimenté auquel la conduite de toute la guerre dans cette partie seroit soumise, ou l'établissement d'un comité suprême dont dépendroient tous les généraux. La rivalité des puissances du continent, la différence de leurs vues, et un nombre d'autres obstacles n'ont pas permis d'atteindre ce but salulaire, mais il paroît qu'actuellement tous ces obstacles sont levés depuis que les armées sont uniquement subordonnées à sa Majesté Impériale, soit comme chef de l'Empire, soit comme souverain héréditaire ; cependant le même mal existe et acquiert chaque jour un degré plus allarmant. Votre excellence a été informée en son tems combien M. le Maréchal de Clerfayt fut blessé de la nomination du Général Wurmser ; et de la préférence qui lui a été accordée en le destinant à la guerre offensive. Les circonstances qui offrirent depuis au Maréchal l'occasion de tous les succès qu'il a obtenu avec autant de bonheur que de gloire, ont à leur tour excité les passions du Comte de Wurmser. L'animosité est arrivée à son comble, et la jalousie s'est communiquée aux officiers et même aux troupes des deux armées. Il en résulte déjà, et il résultera avec bien plus danger, que les chefs, au lieu de se soutenir et de se secourir, se traverseront et s'empêcheront par inimitié personnelle, autant que les généraux Prussiens l'ont fait, naguères, par inimitié politique.

“ Dès la prise de Manheim le Maréchal a insisté sur les opérations vers la Moselle ; M. de Wurmser sur celles vers l'Alsace ; il en arrive que ni l'un ni l'autre n'ont pu obtenir de grands succès ; les armées seront harrassées et fatiguées à pure perte, et l'on sera peut-être contraint de consentir à un armistice pour leur procurer quelque relâche. A l'ouverture de la campagne cette divergence sera plus sensible. Le général Wurmser ne détourne pas les regards de l'Alsace, et ne fera rien en faveur des opérations vers le bas-Rhin. Il est probable que chacun agira de son côté, et qu'un grand intervalle de terrain offrira à l'ennemi le moyen de faire une de ces diversions dont la fatale experience a déjà été éprouvée. Après avoir été assez osé pour présenter à votre Excellence ces vérités, je n'hésiterai pas de lui communiquer avec la même liberté mes notions sur les généraux eux-mêmes. M. le Maréchal est certainement irrésolu, indécis, effrayé de la responsabilité à un point qui ne sauroit se concilier avec un grand commandement. Les plus belles occasions lui échappent des mains, et s'il y a beaucoup fait, il n'en sera pas moins aisé à un spectateur de prouver qu'il auroit pu faire infiniment davantage, et peut-être décider le sort de la guerre. Le général Wurmser possède toujours l'entreprise et la hardiesse, mais ses facultés intellectuelles sont tellement affaiblies par la vieillesse que son état approche d'une incapacité totale. L'on a sans doute cru obvier à cet inconvénient en lui donnant le Comte de Bellegarde muni de la confiance de la cour, mais ce remède est devenu pire que le mal, puisque la jalousie des autres officiers donne toute espèce de jeu à l'intrigue. Feu le roi de Prusse, convaincu qu'il était d'un bon gouvernement de s'astreindre dans le choix des généraux à l'ancienneté et quelques fois à la haute naissance, se servoit souvent du moyen de supplier à leurs talents par ceux d'un officier inférieur, mais il savoit si sévèrement leur imposer la plus parfaite docilité, que ses armées ont souvent obtenu les plus brillants succès de cette manière. Je ne me dissimule pas l'impossibilité de devancer par ces observations la pénétration de votre Excellence. Mon unique but est de prouver l'urgence et la nécessité d'un prompt remède avant la fin de l'hiver. Il n'est pas moins essentiel que le vice qui régné dans le payement et l'approvisionnement de l'armée soit promptement corrigé. Votre Excellence se rappelle que l'incompréhensible inactivité pendant l'été passé qui a perdu Luxembourg, qui auroit presque perdu Mayence, qui enleva à la cour de Vienne toute son influence dans l'Empire, en abandonnant les états aux intrigues de la Prusse et de l'ennemi, fut attribuée par les généraux au défaut d'argent, de vivres, et même de vêtements. Le désordre régné encore de la manière la plus alarmante, et au moment où j'ai l'honneur d'écrire à votre Excellence, l'armée subsiste au jour la journée, et, pour ainsi dire, de réquisitions, ce qui aliène extrêmement les gens du pays. L'on pourroit même dire que sans le prétexte sur lequel le Palatinat est traité en pays conquis, elle ne subsisterait pas du tout. Les généraux ont été souvent obligés de commettre leur crédit personnel pour payer la solde des troupes. Le Commissariat fait les payements au moyen d'une usure qui coute 20 ou 25 pour cent. à la Cour. Les généraux affectent de dire que le désordre est causé par le retard des remises sur l'emprunt, et comme il est aisé de leur prouver la fausseté de cette assertion, ils déclarent qu'ils ignorent dans quel gouffre ces moyens sont engloutis. Le commissaire dirigeant est depuis deux mois à Vienne pour discuter les remèdes. Aucun magasin considérable n'est encore formé, et cet état de choses pénètre les personnes instruites des plus justes frayeurs à l'approche de la campagne. Je n'ai pas négligé de faire passer à Vienne par le moyen du Comte de Lehrbach ces informations, et j'ai recueilli les espérances les plus fondées que l'on s'y occupe à remédier; cependant je juge que votre Excellence pourra efficacement contribuer à presser l'application des remèdes. La question si le chef de l'Empire a le droit de faire arrêter et juger les ministres coupables de la reddition de Manheim occupe toutes les plumes. Il est à croire que la déférence que la Cour de Munic continue d'avoir pour celle de Vienne, offrira des moyens de conciliation. Si ce fut la peur de l'ennemi qui opéra la défection des états de l'Empire dans les cercles antérieurs, c'est encore la même affection relativement aux armées victorieuses de l'Empereur qui les a fait revenir; mais il seroit à souhaiter que des ministres habiles profitassent sur les lieux de la circonstance, pour ajouter à ce motif chancelant, le motif plus solide de la conviction et de l'inclination. Le Duc de Deux Ponts est le seul Prince dont l'animosité contre la Cour de Vienne ne peut être pliée. L'on continue de le travailler depuis Berlin, et il est convaincu que la Bavière est toujours, en dernière analyse, l'objet qui fait agir la Cour de Vienne. Il se méfie de son oncle, en lui attribuant des négociations secrètes, et je ne crois pas qu'une entrevue qu'il vient d'avoir à Stouccard avec le ministre Hardenberg, ait diminué ces impressions. Il est très contraire à un traité de subside, dont il m'a dit que le projet existoit; et ce serait un incident fâcheux si l'Electeur, qui a toujours des habitudes apoplectiques, venait à manquer dans la circonstance actuelle."

LORD GRENVILLE to M. DE LUC.

1797, November 10. London.

Mémoire for the Duke of Brunswick.

"La personne qui aura l'honneur de remettre ce mémoire à s'altresse sérénissime Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick, est chargé de lui communiquer, dans la confiance la plus illimitée, les idées du gouvernement Britannique sur les mesures à adopter dans le moment actuel, pour parer à tous les dangers dont l'Europe est plus que jamais menacée par les progrès de la Révolution Française. La manière dont s'a[ltresse] s[érénissime] s'est expliquée envers cette personne ne laisse aucun lieu de douter qu'elle ne soit pénétrée de toute l'étendue de ce danger; et on se persuade qu'elle ne refusera pas de coopérer aux seuls moyens qui donnent quelque espérance de pouvoir encore l'arrêter.

"Ces moyens ne peuvent se trouver que dans l'union des grandes puissances. La probabilité d'un nouveau règne en Prusse présente à cet égard un espoir que l'expérience du passé ne permettroit point d'entretenir, tant que le Cabinet de Berlin seroit composé comme il l'est actuellement.

"Les lumières, les talens, le caractère et les relations en tout genre de Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick lui donneroient des moyens que nulle autre personne ne pourroit avoir pour faire sentir au nouveau roi de Prusse toute l'étendue du danger qui le menace, et pour lui indiquer la seule marche convenable, celle dont seule il pourroit espérer sa sûreté même présente.

“Ce ne peut être qu'en fondant son gouvernement sur les principes de moralité et de justice, si longtems méconnus à Berlin, et en renonçant absolument et pour toujours aux idées de chercher à s'aggrandir, en contribuant aux progrès d'un danger qui le menace déjà de si près, et de tous les cotés. En prenant pour base de son système politique l'intégrité constitutionnelle et territoriale de l'Empire, et la conservation de l'état actuel des possessions respectives, on ne doute nullement qu'il ne lui seroit facile d'y faire entrer, pleinement et sans reserve, l'Empereur de Russie, qui déjà, depuis quelques semaines, s'est prononcé fortement, par son ministre à Berlin, en faveur de ces principes, et qui a conçu des vives alarmes sur le progrès d'un mal qui, gagnant de près en près, ne seroit pas longtems à l'atteindre dans ses nouvelles possessions Polonoises, et delà dans les anciennes provinces de son empire. Présenté à la cour de Vienne par l'Angleterre, la Russie, et la Prusse, ce système y sera très probablement adopté avec reconnaissance et empressement, comme offrant la meilleure garantie de ses possessions actuelles. Et il est même évident que l'Autriche n'auroit aucun moyen de s'y opposer, à moins de se jeter dans les bras du gouvernement Jacobin en France; résolution bien difficile à exécuter tant qu'il restera tant de sujets de jalousie et de haine en Italie, en Allemagne, sur les confins du Tyrol, et partout où les possessions Autrichiennes se trouvent en point de contact avec la République Française, et ses alliés. Pour la sûreté permanente de l'empire, et surtout des provinces Prussiennes, il est sans doute absolument nécessaire de mettre les provinces Hollandoises hors de leur dépendance et asservissement actuel aux volontés de la France. Mais ce point, tout important qu'il est, et digne de toute l'attention d'un roi de Prusse, pourroit ne pas également intéresser les autres puissances Continentales; et l'on devroit peut-être l'écarter pour le moment d'un concert général, dont l'établissement et le succès amèneraient nécessairement et en tout cas des mesures tendantes à ce but particulier. Mais il seroit de la dernière conséquence de ne pas perdre un instant pour donner au nouveau roi de Prusse des sentimens justes à cet égard; et pour lui montrer par combien de liens cette affaire tient à ses intérêts les plus immédiats, et à la sûreté permanente de ses états. C'est des premières impressions que ce prince recevra en montant au trône que tout dépendra. On l'a déjà dit, personne ne peut lui donner ces impressions si ce n'est le Duc de Brunswick. Il ne refusera donc sûrement pas d'y mettre un zèle et un intérêt proportionnés à l'importance de l'objet. Les momens seront précieux. En se trouvant sur les lieux, il seroit en mesure d'écarter bien de faux conseils, de rompre bien d'intrigues. Là il jugeroit lui-même mieux des démarches qu'il pourroit et devoit faire à cet effet; mais le point principal seroit de saisir les premiers momens et d'en profiter, pour écarter les fauteurs du système jacobin qui domine aujourd'hui à Berlin.

“S’il y avoit quelque apparence de succès, il seroit facile que le nouveau Roi de Prusse envoyât ici, pour le compliment de notification, une personne de confiance auquel on pourroit s’ouvrir ; celui qui est ici n’étant nullement propre à suivre une pareille discussion. Mais il seroit extrêmement intéressant de recevoir de la part du Duc de Brunswick toutes les informations qui seroient nécessaires, avant que l’on puisse juger à quel point on pourroit s’ouvrir avec la personne chargée d’une pareille commission.”

M. DE LUC to GEORGE III.

1797, November 21. Brunswick.—“Votre Majesté ayant eu pour moi la grande bonté de me permettre de lui adresser directement mes premières observations ici, je ne dois pas tarder à le faire.

“Malgré la précaution que j’avois prise d’annoncer ici ma venue, j’y suis arrivé inattendu ; parceque la malle qui portoit ma lettre n’a passé la mer qu’en même temps que moi, et que m’étant déterminé à profiter du vent favorable pour remonter l’Elbe jusqu’ à Hambourg, pendant la nuit du jour de mon arrivée à Cuxhaven, je suis arrivé ici le 19, avant les lettres, qui avoient passé la mer avec moi. Mais la mort du Roi de Prusse avoit déjà précédé de trois jours, et le Duc n’avoit rien fait encore, persistant, malgré les instances de M. de Stamford, à ne se plus mêler des affaires ; parce, disoit-il, que rien ne l’y autorisoit. Malheureusement M. de Stamford étoit, et est encore malade ; ce qui seul l’auroit retenu ici ; mais il en auroit eu une autre raison que votre Majesté verra dans le cours du récit que je vais avoir l’honneur de lui faire.

“Je ne tardai pas un moment à me faire annoncer à Monseigneur le Duc, qui, témoignant sa surprise de mon arrivée, ne laissa pas de me faire dire qu’il m’attendroit avec impatience le lendemain matin. J’avois déjà instruit M. de Stamford du titre que je prendrois en public, et de son but, par l’honneur que m’avoit fait votre Majesté de me conférer dans cette vue, et j’avois prié M. de Stamford de le communiquer au Duc, pour prévenir sa crainte. Ce fut là aussi le premier objet de notre entretien, et quand je lui eus expliqué tout mon plan, je vis que cela le mettoit fort à l’aise.

“La conversation ayant alors commencé sur l’objet de la mission dont votre Majesté a daigné m’honorer, je tâchai, en entrant tout de suite en matière, et ne laissant aucun intervalle entre la lecture qu’il fit de la lettre de votre Majesté et la continuation de mon exposition, de prévenir une première réponse, dans les dispositions que je lui connoissois ; afin d’avoir le temps d’accumuler un nombre de choses qui prévinsent une décision trop prompte. Par là, en effet, j’eus au moins cette première lueur d’espérance, qu’il témoigna la plus grande satisfaction de tout ce que j’avois eu l’honneur de lui dire de la part de votre Majesté et de ses ministres, et qu’il m’assura de son concours dans toute l’étendue de son pouvoir. Mais ce pouvoir que sera-t-il ? C'est ce dont votre Majesté jugera elle-même, par la suite des choses que je vais avoir l'honneur de lui exposer.

“En général, je vis s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] vraiment touchée de la confiance de votre Majesté, et il est impossible de douter de sa sincérité dans le désir de voir réussir le plan qu'elle et ses ministres proposent. Mais sa timidité va au-delà de tout ce qu'on pourroit imaginer dans un personnage de son rang, de ses talens, et de son courage personnel à la tête d'une armée. Il a la modestie de dire qu'il n'est propre, en aucune manière, aux démarches politiques. Il craint d'y trouver des oppositions dont il n'ait pas l'habilité de se tirer ; parceque tout entier à l'étude des affaires militaires, il ne connoit point la tactique de celle des cabinets ; il auroit voulu que M. de Stamford allât à Berlin, mais il redoutoit de l'autoriser à parler en son nom, et Monsieur de Stamford insistoit toujours sur ce que, sans son concours, personne ne pourroit prévenir ce qui, en effet, est arrivé, que les ministres du Roi mourant cherchoient à se rendre nécessaire à son successeur.

“Le Duc prévoyoit déjà que ce mal étoit très avancé, et pour le porter à en prévenir les suites, il falloit opposer crainte à crainte ; de sorte que je tâchai d'abord de lui faire entrevoir qu'être accusé de foiblesse étoit pire que de l'être d'avoir fait une entreprise sans succès ; ce qui je crois fit d'abord quelque impression sur lui, parceque, dès à présent, votre Majesté sera toujours présente à sa pensée ; et qu'elle lui a fourni tout ce qui pouvoit venir de sa part pour l'engager à agir.

“C'est à ce sentiment, sans doute, qu'est due la communication que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] me fit l'honneur de me faire de quelques notes qu'il avoit prises de ce que le présent Roi lui avoit dit dans leurs entretiens, à son retour de Pymont ; où se trouvoit surtout cette circonstance bien remarquable. ‘Ne croyez-vous pas (dit-il au Duc) qu'il faudroit se porter en force du côté du Weser, pour se garantir de quelque mauvais dessein de ce Directoire ?’ Le Duc marquant son approbation de cette idée, le Prince-royal ajouta : ‘mais l'Angleterre ne se laisse point pénétrer ; on ne sait sur quoi compter de ce côté-la.’ Le Duc se tut à cet égard, ne sachant, me dit-il, que répondre ; mais ce fut le principal motif des entretiens qu'il désira d'avoir avec moi, dans lesquels, pourtant, il ne parla point de cette circonstance. Il me semble donc que voilà un changement qui marque celui de ses idées, et je le crois très sincère dans ce qu'il dit qu'il fera tout ce qu'il pourra ; mais il falloit lui montrer la nécessité d'agir avec force.

“Dans ce but il falloit porter ses craintes plus loin qu'il ne me paroissoit les avoir, quoique, dans la lettre qu'il m'avoit fait l'honneur de m'écrire à Londres, il se montrât en général instruit des dangers qui menaçoient toute l'Europe ; mais il lui échappoit des circonstances caractéristiques d'un danger prochain et toujours croissant, qu'il ne lioit point assez les unes aux autres et à un tout, malgré les représentations de M. de Stamford qu'il étoit disposé à croire exagérées, à cause de bien des gens qui, soit manque d'attention soit à dessein, prétendent toujours qu'on se fait des craintes chimériques, que les peuples de ces contrées sont encore étrangers à toute idée de révolution. Mais je lui ai cité tant de faits, et des liaisons si claires entre ces faits et un plan général, que je l'ai persuadé enfin du danger éminent de l'inaction dans tous ceux qui devroient agir.

“Entre les faits nombreux qui m'étoient déjà connus, et que j'ai encore appris depuis que je suis de retour en Allemagne, je n'en citerai qu'un à votre Majesté, qui en sentira mieux toute la grandeur que le Duc ne l'avoit sentie, quoiqu'il lui fût connu ; ce fait regarde la décadence de la religion, dont s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m'avoit déjà parlé avec beaucoup de peine dans mon autre voyage, mais sans y entrevoir de remède, ni sentir aussi profondément qu'il auroit été nécessaire la liaison des conjurations contre le Christianisme et contre les gouvernemens. Dans son Académie même où s'élève une nombreuse jeunesse, le professeur en histoire, ouvrant son cours pour cette année par l'histoire générale, dit à ses élèves ; ‘Il est d'usage de commencer ce cours par la fable de Moÿse ; mais comme aujourd'hui personne n'y croit plus, je me bornerai à vous en donner une idée en abrégé.’ Rappellant entr'autres cette circonstance au Duc, et lui faisant voir comment elle se lioit avec le plan d'une entière subversion de l'ordre civil, qui n'a d'autre base dans les coeurs que la Révélation, il me demanda comment donc on pourroit remédier à cette source de mal public. Ce sera, Monseigneur, lui répondis-je, quand les souverains imiteront le Roi d'Angleterre, vrai Defenseur de la Foi, en encourageant, soutenant, aidant ceux qui ont le dessein et les talens nécessaires pour résister au torrent, en montrant l'ignorance de ceux qui prétendent éclairer les hommes. Ce qui me conduisit à lui expliquer mon but, et en particulier contre les hommes audacieux semblables au professeur d'histoire dans son Académie. Alors il attachait plus de prix à mon but ostensible dans ces contrées, et me témoigna l'obligation qu'il m'auroit en particulier de le montrer bien ouvertement à Brunswick ; ce que j'ai déjà fait.

“Il s'agissoit enfin de conclure quelque chose dans ce premier entretien, et la première idée qui vint au Duc, fondée sur la persuasion que je pouvois me présenter partout comme acteur dans une cause qui ne pourroit qu'intéresser les honnêtes gens, et les savans restés fidèles à la révélation, fut que j'allasse à ce titre à Berlin ; persuadé qu'ayant l'honneur d'appartenir à l'auguste tante de la présente reine, qui possède toute la tendresse et la confiance du roi, je pourrais avoir avec sa Majesté des entretiens privés, dans lesquels il ne doutoit pas que je ne produisisse plus d'effet que dans toute démarche ouvertement politique. Mais je lui représentai très fortement que c'étoit-là un moyen incertain et beaucoup trop foible ; et que nul homme ne pouvoit espérer une pareille influence que lui-même, attaché depuis si longtemps à la maison de Brandebourg sous des relations d'intérêt commun.

“Alors il ajouta à son premier plan, qu'il m'autoriseroit à parler en son nom. Je resistai encore, mais d'une manière moins décidée, parceque M. de Stamford m'avoit recommandé de lui laisser former tout plan où il interviendrait en quelque chose ; dans l'espérance de l'amener par là à agir plus directement.

“ Laissant donc entrevoir à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] que, votre Majesté ayant en lui la plus grande confiance, je croyais pouvoir me conformer finalement à ce qu'il jugerait absolument nécessaire que je fisse, je le priai néanmoins de considérer que dans une telle crise à Berlin c'étoit encore un moyen trop foible, et que j'espérais qu'il en emploierât de plus efficaces. Alors il m'assura que, dès ce moment, il n'auroit rien de caché pour votre Majesté ; qu'il me communiqueroit pour elle tous les avis qu'il recevrait de Berlin, et toutes les idées qu'ils pourroient lui faire naître sur la manière d'y opérer dans les vues de votre Majesté.

“ Dès le soir même s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] accomplit sa promesse, en m'envoyant, dans une lettre à Monsieur de Stamford, les informations et remarques dont j'ai l'honneur de joindre ici copie ; et il annonça même temps à Monsieur de Stamford, chez qui je suis logé, qu'il viendrait le voir ce matin. Il est venu en effet, et il a d'abord eu un entretien particulier avec M. de S[tamford] sur un objet dont il l'a laissé le maître de m'instruire, et qui je crois intéressera votre Majesté.

“ J'ai été porteur d'un paquet de Madame la Princesse d'Orange pour Madame la Princesse Héréditaire de Brunswick, dans lequel étoit une lettre pour Monseigneur le Duc, qu'il a communiquée à Monsieur de Stamford, avec le projet de sa réponse, pour lui en demander son avis. J'ai lu cette lettre ; elle étoit toute entière destinée à solliciter le Duc de se rapprocher du futur roi pour lui donner des conseils. Mais c'est peu que ce but en comparaison de l'exécution, qui m'a donné une haute idée de Madame la Princesse d'Orange, bien supérieure à l'impression que j'avois déjà reçue à cet égard dans les conversations que j'ai eu l'honneur d'avoir avec elle. Si je voyois dans la conversation que M. de S[tamford] n'auroit pas de repugnance à me donner copie de cette lettre, qui est encore dans ses mains, je croirois faire plaisir à votre Majesté en la lui envoyant, pour qu'elle connoisse d'autant mieux cette personne distinguée. A l'égard de la réponse du Duc, M. de Stamford m'a dit qu'elle étoit très bien, mais qu'elle ne laissoit rien entrevoir de ce qui nous occupe.

“ Après cette conversation je fus appelé ; et Monseigneur le Duc m'ayant dit en peu de mots quel en avoit été le sujet, il me fit l'honneur de m'apprendre que le Prince Héréditaire d'Orange, arrivé ici pour accompagner le Prince Frédéric (qui dans une huitaine de jours partira pour l'Angleterre) lui avoit dit de la part du nouveau roi que, dans peu de jours, il le prieroit de venir à Berlin. Votre Majesté peut se représenter tout ce que Monsieur de Stamford et moi avons dit à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] à cette occasion ; surtout M. de Stamford, qui est un des hommes les plus essentiels en tout ceci ; et il en est résulté que le Duc s'est déterminé à écrire un mémoire renfermant toutes ses idées, dont il me fera l'honneur de me charger pour votre Majesté; mais qu'il souhaite auparavant de nous communiquer à Monsieur de Stamford et à moi, avec toute liberté de lui faire part de nos remarques avant qu'il le mette au net.

“Tel est, Sire, l'état actuel des choses. Votre Majesté peut bien être assurée qu'aussi loin que mes lumières et mes forces pourront me conduire, elles seront entièrement dévouées à ce grand but; heureux si mes efforts pouvoient répondre à la confiance dont votre Majesté a daigné m'honorer.”

Enclosure.

THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK TO M. DE LUC.

“Voici le précis de mes lettres de Berlin. M. de Bischoffwerder a reçu le cordon de l'ordre de l'aigle noir. M. de Zaunzein est nommé pour se rendre à Londres, porter au roi la nouvelle du décès de Frédéric Guillaume second; c'est le beau-frère de M. de Haugwitz, et nullement l'homme avec lequel il seroit prudent de s'ouvrir confidentiellement; c'est une tête au vent, panier percé, et sans caractère. M. le Comte de Schulenburg Rehmer doit avoir été rappelé; on lui destine les finances, mais c'est un bruit vague. Une lettre officielle, signée par le roi, me répond à d'anciennes lettres que j'avois adressées au feu roi, dans le courant des dernières semaines. L'on me marque que le feu roi a marqué beaucoup de fermeté dans ses derniers momens. Je ne vous parle pas de l'arrestation de la Liechtenaw. M. d'Haugwitz et le Maréchal de Mollendorff sont nommés, dit-on, pour examiner les papiers de cette femme. Vous voudrez bien informer M. De Luc de ces détails, qui ne sont pas bien satisfaisans, mais qui ne doivent pas être ignorés.”

Copy.

M. DE LUC TO GEORGE III.

1797, November 24. Brunswick.—“Si dans les circonstances présentes où le changement de règne en Prusse bande les ressorts opposés pour influencer sur le nouveau roi, la confiance dont votre Majesté et ses ministres m'ont honoré peut faire quelque bien, je crois qu'il aura principalement sa source dans des informations que je prendrai tout le soin possible de rendre sûres. C'est pourquoi je vais continuer de rendre compte à votre Majesté de mes observations.

“Plus je suis instruit des détails de la conduite de M. le Général de Stamford, avant et depuis le commencement de cette guerre; plus j'étudie les moyens que ses dispositions naturelles, ses talens, et son expérience ont accumulés chez lui, l'usage qu'il en a toujours fait, et la nature des obstacles qu'il a rencontrés auprès du Duc, malgré la confiance entière et la vraie estime qu'il lui accorde dès longtemps ; plus que je sens d'un côté, que sans lui je serois dans un vraie labyrinthe ; et en général, que son coup d'oeil est le plus sûr qu'on pût obtenir sur les points essentiels de l'état des choses ; ayant toujours eu quelque part aux affaires par cette confiance du Duc, mais sans cesse traversé par ceux qui les ont menées au point où elles sont, et dont les manoeuvres lui sont parfaitement connues. C'est donc d'après ses avis que je tâche de me conduire auprès du Duc, et que je cherche à bien connoître ce qu'on peut sûrement attendre de sa part.

“ Par là il ne me reste aucun doute que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ne voye la nécessité indispensable du plan proposé par votre Majesté ; qu'il ne soit convaincu que sans son succès tout l'édifice de la société s'écroulera ; qu'ainsi, il ne souhaite ardemment ce succès, et qu'il ne soit déterminé à agir de tout son pouvoir. Mais c'est ce pouvoir qu'il importe de bien connoître, non en le jugeant d'après ce qu'il pourroit réellement, mais en connoissant bien sa propre opinion de ce qu'il peut, afin de prendre des tournures qui s'y conforment. Car, sans cela, on perdrait peut-être un temps précieux, en travaillant à le déterminer à ce qu'enfin on ne pourroit obtenir.

“ On connoît à Berlin le caractère du Duc, et on commence à se servir de cette connoissance pour tâcher de l'écarter. On sait, en particulier, qu'il suffit de dire de lui qu'il cherche à influencer pour le décourager de l'entreprendre, et l'on employe déjà ce moyen. C'est le Prince Henri qui le met en oeuvre ; il a fait insinuer, puis écrit au Roi, qu'il prit garde au Duc ; qu'on savoit qu'il vouloit entreprendre de lui faire abandonner le plan du Roi défunt, dont on fait à Berlin de pompeux éloges. Cela n'auroit en soi aucune conséquence, car on sait que le Roi n'a tenu aucun compte de cet avis ; mais le Duc en est très affecté, et voilà une nouvelle difficulté en notre chemin, quoique cette même information semble renfermer un présage favorable sur les dispositions du Roi lui-même.

“ Nous n'avons pas encore le mémoire que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] se propose de nous remettre, mais nous croyons prévoir la tournure qu'il y donnera. Dans le plan de votre Majesté, et d'après les développemens et instructions de my Lord Grenville, l'empereur de Russie est présenté comme disposé à l'appuyer ; disposition que le Cabinet de votre Majesté se chargeoit d'entretenir. Mais le Duc proposera probablement de rendre la Russie premier mobile, en l'engageant à proposer le plan elle-même. Ce changement seroit fâcheux ; car ce seroit allonger la marche et la rendre moins sûre ; aussi nous proposons nous bien de faire tout ce qui dépendra de nous pour le prévenir ; mais nous craignons de n'en pas venir à bout.

“ Loin d'avoir l'ambition d'être premier agent en politique, le Duc redoute ce rôle plus qu'une batterie de canons ; au lieu que si le plan étoit proposé par la Russie, n'ayant alors qu'à l'appuyer de ses conseils, il entreprendroit avec zèle de le faire, et, en attendant, il travailleroit à s'en assurer les moyens. C'est là une perspective que je ne devois pas tarder de présenter à votre Majesté, afin qu'elle soit préparée à la tournure que le Duc pourroit donner finalement à son mémoire, et qu'elle voie à l'avance dans sa sagesse quel parti on peut tirer d'une influence qui, d'après tout ce que j'aperçois, seroit très essentielle pour inspirer de la confiance au Roi de Prusse ; mais qui ne peut être mise en action qu'en se prêtant le plus qu'il est possible au caractère foncier du Duc. Peut-être pourroit-on prendre une route moyenne, en travaillant d'abord à faire sentir par la Russie la nécessité du plan qu'elle proposeroit elle-même, sans perdre de vue ce qui pourroit engager plus tôt le Duc à agir directement.

“Le Duc vient de me donner une nouvelle preuve du désir qu'il a de co-opérer avec votre Majesté et sur un objet qui pourroit l'acheminer plus tôt à agir ; c'est en m'envoyant par M. de Stamford pour votre Majesté l'information que j'ai l'honneur de joindre ici, avec le billet du Duc qui l'accompagnait. Je suis bien sûr que cette information n'apprendra rien à votre Majesté ; ce qui importe donc c'est que le Duc regarde la chose comme très sérieuse, comme étant déjà depuis quelque temps sa plus grande crainte de la part des François, quant aux révolutions.

“M. de Stamford, qui y a beaucoup réfléchi, a conçu une idée qu'il me semble essentiel de considérer le plus tôt possible, vu la rapidité avec laquelle ces Directoires exécutent ce qu'ils ont une fois résolu. C'est que Londres, Berlin, et Petersbourg se concertent le plus tôt possible, pour négocier avec les magistrats de Hambourg la remise de la défense de leur ville à une garnison Prussienne et Hanovrienne ; sous la garantie de votre Majesté, du Roi de Prusse, et si l'on a le temps, de l'Empereur de Russie, de n'interrompre à aucun égard ni leur gouvernement, ni leurs affaires intérieures, et de retirer ces troupes dès que le danger cesseroit.

“Hambourg, laissé à lui-même, ne pourroit se défendre ; et quand on rassembleroit des troupes de ce côté-là, il ne faudroit qu'un échec pour que cette ville, si remplie de révolutionnaires, tombât entre les mains des François ; or on connoît leur habileté à conserver tout ce qu'ils possèdent une fois. Ce porte-là est depuis longtemps leur grand but ; ne fût-ce que pour rendre inutile la marine Anglaise. Le Duc est très inquiet de cette circonstance ; et c'est un objet sur lequel sa position le mettriot en état d'agir directement pour presser la réunion des grandes Puissances. M. de Stamford n'a pas eu encore le moment de lui faire part de son idée relativement à Hambourg ; il le fera incessamment, et j'aurai l'honneur de faire part à votre Majesté de ce qu'il en pensera ; mais j'ai cru devoir prendre la liberté de lui en faire mention dès à présent ; parce qu'il me semble que des mesures éventuelles peuvent être préparées ; et que si votre Majesté le trouvoit convenable, elle pourroit déjà les faire concerter avec la Russie. Je prends la liberté de dire ceci, parce que le malheureux sort de la ville de Dantzic pourroit ôter aux Hambourgeois la confiance en la cour de Berlin ; et qu'en ce cas, malgré celle qu'ils auroient en votre Majesté, ils pourroient ne pas considérer son appui comme suffisant sur le Continent. Or, comme il ne faudroit pas qu'ils balançassent au moment du danger, ni laisser même des tentations aux intrigans de Berlin, le concours immédiat de la Russie me paroîtroit être nécessaire.

"Il est bien important aux Puissances du Nord de considérer sérieusement que les François, songeant moins aujourd'hui à étendre leurs conquêtes que les révolutions, Hambourg ne peut être par là pour eux qu'un objet d'ardent désir. Ils ont déjà semé l'esprit révolutionnaire dans le Holstein, le Danemarc, et sur les autres bords de la Baltique; et postés à Hambourg, puis à Lubeck, ils y joueroient le même rôle qu'en Hollande, en Italie, et sur la rive gauche du Rhin, pour y pousser la formation de républiques, esclaves de la leur. C'est la sécurité qu'ils ont eu l'adresse d'inspirer aux souverains du continent avec qui ils ont traité de neutralité ou de paix qui prépare leur ruine; et il est bien à souhaiter qu'on réussisse enfin à parvenir aux souverains eux-mêmes, pour faire tomber le bandeau qui a couvert leurs yeux.

"Il seroit bien nécessaire, aussi, d'agir de la même manière sur l'empereur d'Allemagne; et c'est parceque votre Majesté le pense elle-même, ainsi que ses ministres, que je prends la liberté de lui ouvrir une idée, mais qui demande quelques détails.

"En faissant mention à votre Majesté, le courrier passé, d'une lettre de Madame la Princesse d'Orange au Duc de Brunswick, je n'avois encore en vue que de lui faire connoître la manière de penser et d'agir de cette princesse; qu'elle verra par la copie de cette lettre que j'ai l'honneur de lui envoyer. Mais depuis l'arrivée des Princes d'Orange, qui m'a fait naître quelques idées, je dois ajouter maintenant que M. de Stamford, qui a vu agir depuis longtemps s'a[ltesse] r[oyale], en a la plus haute opinion; et il m'a assuré avec bien des détails qu'un des plus pernecieux artifices employés par ceux qui vouloient mener le feu roi, avoit été de détruire auprès de lui son influence, en le persuadant, qu'attachée à son rang en Hollande, elle s'étoit liée avec le cabinet d'Angleterre, et n'avoit plus que des idées angloises.

"Les princes, ses fils, ont beaucoup de bonté pour moi, parceque je les ai vu jeunes, et qu'ils savent que Madame la Princesse me conserve celle dont elle m'honnoit dès ce temps-là; ainsi ils ont conversé très librement avec M. de Stamford en ma présence, et m'ont permis de prendre part à la conversation. J'ai remarqué entr'eux beaucoup d'amitié et beaucoup de confiance, de l'un et de l'autre, en M. de Stamford; ils sont tous deux également pénétrés des dangers de l'Europe, et ils ont le même désir qu'on puisse y apporter du remède; mais il y a quelques différences dans leurs idées des moyens, et aussi dans leurs caractères. Le Prince Frédéric est plus ouvert, plus prononcé dans ses opinions; et la différence de leur position, l'un attaché à Berlin et l'autre à Vienne, détermine, peut-être sans qu'ils s'en apperçoivent, leurs idées générales sur la position des choses, et sur les remèdes. Il seroit inutile que j'occupasse le temps précieux de votre Majesté de détails à cet égard, parceque je n'ai en vue qu'un objet particulier.

“ J'ai été frappé du degré d'attention que le Prince Frédéric a portée aux détails, non seulement de tactique, mais de politique des campagnes aux quelles il a assisté ; et j'ai jugé de la justesse de ses remarques par l'approbation de M. de Stamford. Quant à la politique générale, je l'ai vu fortement pénétré de l'idée que l'empire d'Allemagne est perdu, si les vues de Berlin pour le diviser, et former une puissance à part, étoient suivies par le nouveau Roi. Enfin, il connoit les hommes qui, à Vienne, ont favorisé l'idée de la désorganisation de l'empire, sous prétexte de la conduite de la Prusse, et ceux qui jusqu'ici ont lutté inutilement contre ce système Jacobin.

“ Ces remarques sur le Prince Frédéric m'avoient fait naître une idée que j'avois communiquée à M. de Stamford. Je pensois que lorsque la réunion des cours de Londres, Berlin et Petersbourg commenceroit à paroître probable, on pourroit inspirer au Prince Frédéric de témoigner à M. de Stamford, comme à son premier maître dans l'art militaire, de l'accompagner pour quelque temps à son retour à Vienne ; afin que là, recevant du Prince de premiers fils sur les personnes d'importance à qui l'on pourroit s'ouvrir, il tachât de pénétrer jusqu'à l'Empereur. M. de Stamford ne m'avoit opposé que sa santé qui, Dieu merci, se remet pourtant à son état précédent, toujours très foible ; cependant, comme il sentoit l'utilité du plan, il m'avoit assuré que, s'il étoit trouvé convenable, il s'y prêteroit de tout son pouvoir. Mais une circonstance vint bientôt écarter cette idée ; car Madame le Duchesse m'ayant fait l'honneur de m'inviter à dîner, dans la conversation de la table j'entendis le Duc dire au Prince Frédéric, qui se plaignoit de l'état de son bras blessé, que puisqu'il se proposoit de faire quelque séjour en Angleterre, il conviendrait peut-être qu'il allât à Bath.

“ Tel est, Sire, l'ensemble de cet objet ; j'ai cru qu'il ne seroit pas sans intérêt pour votre Majesté, ne fût-ce que par les informations sur les personnes qui s'y trouvent liées. Mais il pourroit aussi arriver que, dans le cours que prendront les affaires, il devint utile d'avoir à Vienne quelqu'un de sûr, sans caractère public, mais ayant un caractère personnel et le pouvoir d'agir ; et, en ce cas, il pourroit n'être pas inutile que j'eusse pris la liberté d'ouvrir cette idée à votre Majesté. Alors, si votre Majesté tournoit les yeux sur M. de Stamford, j'ai lieu de croire que Madame la Princess d'Orange deviendrait une personne essentielle, et c'est pour cela que je devois à votre Majesté les traits qui pouvoient la caractériser.

“ Je dis Madame la Princesse, car c'est aussi une confidence de M. de Stamford que celui qui doit le plus à cette princesse, et qui devoit avoir le plus d'intérêt personnel à suivre de vrais principes, est malheureusement celui qui en a le moins. Je ne mériterois pas la confiance dont votre Majesté m'honore si, dans un temps aussi critique, je lui dissimulois rien de ce que j'apprends ici, qui est pour ainsi dire un point central.

“ Enfin, je dois encore informer votre Majesté que, dans les instances de M. de Stamford auprès du Duc pour qu’il se présentât à temps au futur roi, la personne qu’il souhaitoit lui voir conseiller au Prince royal, comme méritant le plus sa confiance, étoit M. le Baron de Reck, actuellement Ministre de Justice. Le Duc acquiesca entièrement à cette idée, connoissant M. de Reck pour un homme éclairé, droit, et qui s’étoit fortement prononcé contre la paix de Bâle.

“ M. de Stamford parla aussi de Comte de Brühl comme d’une personne de toute confiance pour les principes, familier avec le Prince, et qui a une raison particulière de ressentiment honnête contre les gens qui veulent conserver leur influence; en ce que ces gens-là, profitant de sa mission auprès de l’Empereur de Russie à son avènement au trône, l’avoient fait porteur d’un mensonge à ce monarque au sujet des articles secrets du traité de Bâle; ce que l’Empereur lui reprocha d’abord, mais qu’il fit retomber avec indignation sur les auteurs, en assurant l’Empereur qu’on ne l’avoit instruit de rien.

“ M. de Stamford avoit fait aussi connoître au Duc des personnes de vrai mérite d’un ordre inférieur, pour remplir les places de confiance sous le ministère, auxquelles encore le Duc avoit acquiescé ; mais il avoit toujours résisté à des démarches formelles, aussi longtemps qu’il ne verroit pas d’avis précis à donner au Prince sur les affaires mêmes. Aujourd’hui cet obstacle est levé ; mais le Prince est Roi, et il reste environné des personnes mêmes dont le Duc redoutoit les insinuations. M. de Stamford ne se laisse point décourager, et sûrement j’aiderai de l’influence que pourra me donner l’accès que m’accorde son altesse sérénissime, et la confiance dont votre Majesté m’a honoré auprès d’elle.”

Postscript. “ Pendant que j’écrivois cette lettre, M. de Stamford a communiqué son idée pour Hambourg au Duc, qui non seulement l’approuve, mais la regarderoit comme indispensable, quoique difficile.”

3 enclosures.

Enclosure 1.

The PRINCESS OF ORANGE to the DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.

1797, November 2. Hampton Court.—“ Les marques du souvenir de votre altesse et de la continuation de son amitié que je viens de recevoir tant par M. Tollins, que par M. de Luc (qui est revenu très reconnoissant de la manière distinguée et gracieuse dont votre altesse a daigné l’accueillir) m’engagent en ce moment de profiter d’une occasion favorable pour lui adresser ces lignes, avec l’hommage de tous les sentimens que je lui ai voué, et que ni le tems ni l’éloignement ne sauroient altérer.

“ Votre altesse est plus à portée que moi d’être parfaitement instruit de la triste situation où se trouve le roi mon frère. Elle comprendra aisément combien ce que j’en apprends me navre ; toutes les nouvelles se réunissent à me faire envisager sa mort comme prochaine, et d'après les dernières, on ôse même à peine souhaiter que ses jours soient prolongés, puisqu'on paroît craindre que la diminution de ses facultés intellectuelles, que l'on apperçoit sensiblement, ne lui laisseroit qu'une existence pire que la mort. De ce déchirant tableau il n'y a qu'un côté qui offre quelque espèce de consolation, c'est la manière dont se montre le Pr[ince] Royal dans ces tristes circonstances. Il paroît le modèle des fils par ses sentimens pour le roi son père, et, en même tems, profondément pénétré de l'importance et des difficultés des grands devoirs qui reposeront sur lui. Plus ce jeune prince se montre digne du sang dont il est issu, plus il seroit douloureux que ses bonnes intentions restassent sans effet, ou qu'elles fussent altérées par de pernicieux conseils ; et vû son peu d'expérience, et le grand nombre d'intrigants dont il sera entouré dans les premiers moments, cela me paroîtroit fort à craindre, si je ne conservois l'espoir que v[otre] a[ltesse] voudra lui tendre une main bienfaisante, l'éclairer de ses lumières, et lui indiquer le fil capable de le guider au travers de ce labyrinthe, en lui faisant éviter les différens écueils qui l'environneront. Au moment du décès du roi, toutes les espérances non seulement de la monarchie Prussienne, mais celles de l'Europe entière (c'est à dire, de la saine partie de ses habitants) se fixeront sur son successeur ; du système qu'il adoptera, de la conduite qu'il tiendra tout peut dépendre. Votre a[ltesse] voudroit-elle dans un moment si critique lui refuser son assistance et ses conseils ? Ne les lui accorderoit-elle pas également dans le cas plus embarrassant, et peut-être plus critique encore, où le roi resteroit en vie, mais ne pouvant s'occuper des affaires, le prince royal seroit forcé par les circonstances, et peut-être par la volonté du roi lui-même, d'accepter la régence ? Non, sans doute que v[otre] a[ltesse] ne les lui refuseroit pas si ce prince les lui demandoit directement, et j'ai trop bonne opinion du prince royal pour douter qu'il ne les apprécie comme il le doit ; mais j'avoue franchement que je crains d'un côté l'excès de modestie (qu'elle me pardonne cette expression) de v[otre] a[ltesse] ; et chez mon neveu, la timidité, le manque d'usage du monde, une certaine fausse délicatesse qui proviendrait de là, et lui feroit hésiter de s'ouvrir à elle avec cette plénitude de cœur que sa position exigerait si indispensablement pour retirer tout le fruit nécessaire des sages avis que votre altesse, et elle seule, est en état de lui donner. Il seroit bien malheureux que des raisons pareilles devroient l'en priver, et favoriser des odieux projets des désorganisateur, tandis qu'il faudroit si peu de chose de la part de v[otre] a[ltesse] pour amener les choses où je les désirerois, et lui assurer pour toujours cette juste confiance que le Prince royal lui doit à tant de titres, et que son cœur est certainement très porté à lui accorder de lui-même. Que v[otre] a[ltesse] me pardonne ces reflexions, et le trop d'étendue que j'y ai donnée peut-être ; du moins ne méconnoitra-t-elle pas, j'espère, les sentimens qui me les dictent, et la pureté de mes motifs en les lui adressant.

“ Je ne puis ajouter aucune nouvelle du pays que j’habite dont v[otre] a[ltesse] ne soit informée d’ailleurs. Ce qui fixe dans ce moment le plus l’attention du public c’est l’ouverture du Parlement, qui a eû lieu aujourd’hui, et la nouvelle entrée hiér par la France que la paix de l’Empereur auroit été signée à Udine le 17 d’octobre ; pour autant que j’en sais, deux postes d’Allemagne qui viennent d’arriver ne confirment pas encore cette nouvelle. V[otre] A[ltesse] saura mieux que moi ce qu’il faut en croire, et les suites que cet événement nous pronostique, s’il est véritable, et si l’Empereur ratifie le traité.” Copy.

Enclosure 2.

THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK TO GENERAL DE STAMFORD.

[No date.]—“ Voici l’extrait d’une lettre de Paris du 13, pour M. de Luc. J’en donne incessamment part à Hannovre, ainsi qu’ à Berlin, pour où j’avois déjà mandé, lundi, les avis qui m’étoient parvenus sur des projets pour une invasion dans le pays d’Hannovre.

“ J’attens aujourd’hui la poste de Berlin, qui nous éclairera peut-être un peu d’avantage sur ses objets essentiels.”

Enclosure 3.

1797, November 13. Paris.—Extrait.—“ Le Gouvernement François declare maintenant à haute voix qu’il gardera la rive gauche du Rhin. On s’occupe déjà d’organiser les provinces situées à cette rive, et un commissaire du Directoire est parti pour mettre cette organisation en œuvre. En même tems le bruit se répand de plus en plus qu’une colonne de troupes Françaises doit se mettre en marche pour entrer dans le pays d’Hannovre. Quoique ce dernier bruit n’ait, selon moi, point de probabilité, il est pourtant très sûr qu’un projet de cette nature occupe plusieurs personnes du Gouvernement depuis la rupture des négociations avec l’Angleterre ; parcequ’on croit qu’une invasion dans la Basse Saxe pourroit seule faire fléchir le Gouvernement Anglois, et que l’époque actuelle leur paroît la plus propre pour renouveler des projets qu’on avoit abandonnés dans un tems où l’on croioit avoir besoin de la bonne volonté du roi de Prusse.”

M. DE LUC to GEORGE III.

1797, November 28. Brunswick.—“ La seconde lettre que j’ai eu l’honneur d’adresser à votre Majesté l’informoit de ce que nous pouvions prévoir, M. de Stamford et moi, sur la tournure que Monseigneur le Duc donneroit au mémoire qu’il se proposoit de faire parvenir à votre Majesté. Ce mémoire étoit esquissé, et s’a[ltesse] s[’]érénissime en avoit déjà communiqué le plan à M. de Stamford, lorsqu'elle recut une estafette du roi de Prusse pour l'inviter à venir à Berlin ; et son départ fut fixé à demain 28. Alors s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] se détermina à suspendre l'envoy de son mémoire, jusqu' à ce qu'elle eût vu ce qui se passeroit à Berlin ; en écrivant néanmoins d'abord à votre Majesté pour lui témoigner la satisfaction qu'elle éprouvoit de son intervention dans des circonstances si urgentes, et l'assurer de son zèle à seconder ses vues. Je ne sais point encore en ce moment si l'intention de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] est de me remettre sa lettre, ni si j'aurai l'honneur de le voir avant son départ ; mais pour n'être pas pressé demain par le départ du courrier, au cas que je ne fusse instruit que tard de son intention, je prends la liberté d'exposer d'avance à votre Majesté tant ce que je sais par M. de Stamford de la substance du mémoire de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], que tout l'ensemble des choses qui, d'après les entretiens que j'ai eu l'honneur d'avoir avec elle, me sembleroient pouvoir faire considérer la seule connoissance de ce mémoire comme suffisante pour conduire à une prompte détermination.

“ L'idée fondamentale du mémoire est, en effet, la même dont je crus devoir informer votre Majesté dès le courrier dernier ; celle de rendre la Russie promotrice de l'union à renouveler entre les grandes cours ; mais cette idée y est accompagnée de motifs qui me paroissent avoir beaucoup de force, et c'est aussi l'opinion de M. de Stamford, d'après tout ce qu'il connoit de Berlin. Dans l'exposition que je vais avoir l'honneur d'en faire à votre Majesté, je ne pourrai suivre le mémoire, parceque je n'en connois pas les expressions ; mais j'en connois les fondemens, ce qui me paroît plus essentiel ; et c'est sous ce point de vue que je les envisagerai.

“ Il faut imprimer chez le roi de Prusse une crainte bien forte, produite par un grand nombre de faits, et de réflexions sur l'état tout nouveau de l'Europe, pour le tirer de la sécurité sur sa paix, et lui faire connoître l'illusion de son agrandissement ; et il seroit bien difficile de rendre immédiatement cette crainte supérieure à d'autres plus immédiatement évidentes dans le plan d'une nouvelle coalition ; et dont ceux qui, ou par ignorance, ou par mauvais dessein, entreprendroient de tenir ce jeune monarque dans l'inaction, pourroient aisément se prévaloir.

“ Il seroit fâcheux d'échouer dans une première tentative, parceque l'accès deviendrait plus difficile. Or, la Russie pourroit empêcher ce mal ; d'abord, parceque sans son intervention spontanée, on pourroit la représenter elle-même comme un objet de crainte, qui par là n'existeroit pas ; mais surtout, parcequ'il n'y auroit que la certitude de son intervention auprès de l'Autriche qui pût rassurer le roi de Prusse contre la crainte que, vu les liaisons actuelles de l'Empereur avec la France, sur la connoissance d'une nouvelle liaison tentée entre l'Angleterre et la Prusse sans sa participation il ne songeât à se lier plus intimement avec les François. Cela seroit bien mal vu ; mais on doit craindre le succès de toutes les insinuations des malveillans, vu l'aveuglement qui a déjà conduit cette cour.

“La Russie, au contraire, en proposant elle-même le projet de réunion, pourroit dès l'entrée faire cesser les craintes mutuelles; en offrant sa garantie, tant à Vienne qu' à Berlin, que rien ne seroit changé dans leurs situations respectives; en déclarant positivement, qu'en cas de besoin, elle concourroit de tout son pouvoir au but de l'union qui seroit uniquement, ou du moins fondamentalement, de maintenir l'intégrité de l'Empire, tant contre l'esprit d'agrandissement, que contre les projets dés-organisateurs du Directoire de France.

“Elle seule aussi pourroit faire sentir, tant à Berlin qu' à Vienne, de quelle importance est le concours de l'Angleterre dans cette union, pour empêcher l'agrandissement des forces maritimes dans une nation si active, déjà énormément fort sur le continent, et qui porteroit alors les révolutions par mer comme par terre. Elle seule enfin, en offrant son concours, pourroit faire voir l'indispensable nécessité que toutes puissances se réunissent indissolublement pour faire échouer le projet inoui des paix particulières, inventé par le Directoire pour faire tomber successivement tous les états; ce qui feroit comprendre à ces fourbes que les yeux sont ouverts sur le but de cette nouveauté en diplomatique, et qu'on est bien résolu d'en prévenir l'effet.

“Quand j'ai eu pesé les motifs du mémoire du Duc, en les commentants par les entretiens que j' ai eu l'honneur d'avoir avec s[on] a[ltesse] s[érénissime], je n'ai pu m'empêcher d'éprouver beaucoup de satisfaction en voyant ainsi ses incertitudes expliquées par une application précise. Je craignois d'abord que l'éloignement naturel à prendre une part active dans les affaires ne fût ce qu'il y auroit à vaincre chez elle; mais les discussions particulières ont fait ressortir une crainte plus déterminée, c'est celle d'agir sans succès; et que le moyen efficace de réaliser l'intention bien prononcée de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] d'agir de tout son pouvoir est qu'elle voye une route qui promette de mener au but. C'est ainsi que s'est acheminée l'idée de rendre d'abord la Russie active pour le plan comme le proposant elle-même; et ce fut parceque je prévoyois que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] se fixeroit à cette idée, que je pris la liberté de mentionner à votre majesté dès le courrier dernier qu'il me sembloit que rien ne périliteroit quant à l'intervention d'ici, si l'objet étoit présenté sous ce point de vue à l'Empereur de Russie.

“Aujourd'hui, d'après la détermination du Duc, et les réflexions depuis longtemps entretenues par M. de Stamford lui-même sur ce qui pourroit entraîner le Prusse, en la supposant déjà déterminée à concourir au bien général, il paroît plus fortement encore que l'intervention immédiate de la Russie est l'objet le plus pressant. Les motifs de songer enfin à la sûreté commune sont sans doute si évident qu'ils devroient convaincre de quelque part qu'ils fussent présentés; mais on a à craindre les insinuations qui, jusqu' ici, ont fait tant de mal; et il y a longtemps qu'on travaille à Berlin à affaiblir l'influence de l'Angleterre, sous le prétexte spécieux qu'étant encore en guerre avec les François, il lui conviendrait beaucoup de prévenir ou de rompre les paix sur le Continent.

“Voilà ce qui me paroît au fond faire craindre au Duc d'agir dans ce moment pour le plan général, tandis qu'il ne paroît venir que de Angleterre ; et comment, avec la détermination de saisir toutes les occasions de faire connoître au Roi de Prusse que sa sûreté est liée à celle de l'Europe entière, à laquelle, par conséquent, il doit contribuer ; avec l'idée qu'il entretenoit depuis longtemps, et qu'il m'avoit si fortement exprimée, qu'il falloit que l'Angleterre s'unit de nouveau avec la Prusse pour donner de la consistance à un nouvel arrangement ; voyant avec joie que le concours de l'Angleterre est assuré, il désire pour le succès que la Russie propose le plan, avec des déterminations positives sur la manière de son concours.

“Telle étant ici la position précise des choses par des raisons qui ne paroissent pas devoir changer, à moins de nouveaux événemens, votre Majesté y verrait peut-être des raisons de ne pas attendre de nouvelles informations avant que d'agir en Russie pour que la proposition vienne de là au Roi de Prusse. C'est tout cet ensemble que j'ai cru devoir mettre au pied de votre Majesté, sans attendre ce qui se passera avant le départ du Duc ne prévoyant pas qu'il y ait de changement dans ses idées, et craignant de manquer ensuite de temps.

“Ayant appris que M. de Steinberg devoit partir aujourd'hui pour Berlin sans passer par ici, j'ai cru devoir l'informer de tout ce qui s'est passé, et des dispositions du Duc ; et que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] est informée de la confiance dont votre Majesté l'honore ; afin que, si l'occasion s'en présente à Berlin, il puisse parler ouvertement à s'altesse sérénissime, juger lui-même de ses dispositions, et les entretenir d'après qu'ils observeront en commun.

Le 28.—“Tout est maintenant terminé ici pour le présent. Le Duc m'envoya hier, par M. de Stamford, la lettre incluse pour votre Majesté, en l'informant qu'il partiroit ce matin à 4 heures, et ajoutant seulement que s'il lui étoit possible, il passeroit un moment sur le tard ; mais il ne vint pas. Il finissoit en assurant qu'il profiteroit de son séjour à Berlin pour avancer autant qu'il lui seroit possible le bien des choses dont nous nous étions tant entretenus. C'est ce dont je ne saurois douter ; et comme des circonstances accidentelles prouvent souvent mieux les dispositions et les idées que les choses formelles, je prends la liberté d'envoyer à votre Majesté un billet que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] écrivit vers les 10 heures à M. de Stamford en réponse à la communication qu'il lui avoit faite d'un avis que je venois de recevoir, que les François insistent sur le passage de leurs troupes en Suisse, et demandent de l'argent, et que les Bernois arment déjà. Ce billet peint tout-à-fait l'ensemble des dispositions du Duc : une pleine connoissance du danger, et du vrai mal des puissances qui ont à s'en défendre ; il est outré de leur insouciance, il voudrait la surmonter, mais il a besoin de quelque espérance de succès pour se livrer à l'action, et c'est la vraie raison de son désir que la Russie s'avance le plus tôt possible.

“M. de Stamford désire que nous ne nous séparions pas encore, afin de voir ensemble les avis qu'il pourra recevoir ; je me conformerai à son intention, mais je sens qu'étant maintenant arrivé jusqu'au bout de ce que pouvoient me permettre les instructions que j'avois eu l'honneur de recevoir de votre Majesté et de my Lord Grenville, si votre Majesté pensoit que je pusse être encore utile à quelque chose, il me semble que ce ne pourroit être que par de nouvelles instructions relatives tant aux idées du Duc, qu'à tout ce que j'ai eu l'honneur d'exposer successivement à votre Majesté. C'est ce dont je prends encore la liberté de faire mention, afin qu'elle décide suivant sa sagesse.”

Two Enclosures.

Enclosure 1.

THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK TO GEORGE III.

1797, November 27. Brunswick.—“Je m'estime heureux de ce que, par un concours de circonstances favorables, j'ai pu ouvrir mon cœur et prononcer mes sentimens à Monsieur de Luc, et de ce qu'il a bien voulu me nommer à votre Majesté, en lui faisant un tableau de la situation où se trouve l'Allemagne. Cette dernière est plus critique et plus allarmante qu'on ne le pense généralement, et la France va s'élever à un degré de puissance dont les conséquences, plus encore par l'esprit qui la conduit que par les acquisitions territoriales, sont incalculables pour le reste de l'Europe, qui, pour comble de malheur, se trouve divisée par des raisons secondaires, au moment où tout devoit conseiller l'union la plus parfaite. La lettre dont votre Majesté m'a honoré m'est parvenue après la signature de la paix d'Udine, et peu de jours après le décès du Roi de Prusse. Le congrès de Rastadt n'est point assemblé encore, mais tout annonce que nous touchons à des changemens, ou à des tentatives de changemens très essentiels dans la constitution Germanique. C'est sous ces rapports, et en conséquence de ce que votre Majesté m'a fait la grace de m'écrire, que j'avois commencé à rédiger un mémoire relatif à la position de la monarchie Prussienne, lorsque j'ai reçu hier une invitation du Roi de Prusse de me rendre auprès de sa personne à Berlin. J'ai donc cru devoir suspendre pour quelques jours l'envoi de ce mémoire, afin de juger par moi-même, et sur les lieux, l'état des choses, ainsi que la disposition des esprits ; ce qui me mettra en état de donner plus de précision aux idées que j'aurai l'honneur, Sire, de vous présenter très humblement. Votre Majesté daignera cependant recevoir d'avance l'assurance de ma bonne volonté, et de mon zèle dans la recherche des moyens capables de produire un rapprochement entre les quatre grandes puissances, qui peuvent sauver l'Europe ; mais que votre Majesté daigne, en même tems, se persuader que ce n'est pas moi qui pourrai rendre sur ce point à la cour de Berlin les services les plus essentiels. Comme je vois les choses dans le moment présent, ce n'est que par la cour de St. Petersbourg qu'il paroît possible que l'Angleterre ramène et l'Autriche, et la Prusse, à ce degré d'union qui puisse prévenir encore à tems les effets destructeurs de cette malheureuse division qui a fait triompher le crime, et que le gouvernement François, implacable dans sa haine, et couvert de sang et de dépouilles, sait entretenir. Il faudroit pour cet effet que la Russie peut être persuadée de ce que les gens à portée voient évidemment, que ce n'est pas à l'extension du territoire de France vers elle qu'elle doit juger de son propre danger, mais à la nécessité où le Directoire s'est mis d'étendre sans cesse l'exécution de son système de désorganisation, par l'appui des armes ; et que partout ils sont précédés par les dispositions qu'ils font semer de plus en plus parmi les sujets des autres souverains ; qu'il suffit qu'ils puissent s'approcher pour que leurs mineurs jouent, et que si, par exemple, on ne les empêchait pas, par une union parfaite dans le nord d'approcher de Hambourg, les conséquences en seroient incalculables."

Enclosure 2.

THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK TO M. DE STAMFORD.

1797, November 27. Brunswick.—“Je vous suis très obligé de l'extrait que vous venez de me communiquer. Je le prendrai avec moi à Berlin. Peut-être que ces projets sur la Suisse tiennent ensemble avec la lenteur que Buonaparte met à son arrivée à Rastad. Il vient de faire dire aux négociateurs de l'Empereur et de l'Empire, qu'il est retenu par des affaires à Milan. Je n'ai aucun doute que nous verrons la Suisse révolutionnée. Le mal se voit, mais le remède est bien difficile ; nous n'agissons, et nous ne pouvons plus agir qu'après coup, de sorte que nous sommes toujours aux ordres du Directoire. De Berlin il n'y a rien d'intéressant ; le public paroît content du jeune monarque. Je vous prie de lire le passage que je viens de marquer dans la gazette de Hambourg ; cela peint bien combien l'on s'attache à cacher la mollesse la plus lâche sous le titre d'amour de la paix. Mes hommages à M. de Luc ; je partis dans quelques heures d'ici.”

M. DE LUC TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1797, December 12. Brunswick.—“Je ne doute point que votre Excellence n'ait été informée par le roi du résultat des entretiens que j'ai eu l'honneur d'avoir avec Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick, avant son départ pour Berlin, en conséquence de la lettre dont sa Majesté avoit daigné me faire porteur, et du mémoire que votre Excellence m'avoit fait l'honneur de me remettre.

“Pour obvier aux craintes de s'altresse sérénissime qu'on ne soupçonnât ma mission, peu après son départ, et n'attendant pas bientôt des nouvelles essentielles de Berlin, je partis d'ici pour une tournée de Professeur en Géologie ; à mon retour aujourd'hui, M. le Général de Stamford m'a remis de la part de s'altresse sérénissime le mémoire que j'ai l'honneur de joindre ici, en me communiquant la lettre qui le renfermoit.

“Cette lettre porte principalement sur ce que M. de Haugwitz conservant son ascendant, et M. le Général Ruchel (dont s’a[ltesse] s[érénissime] n’a pas lieu d’être contente) ayant la plus grande part aux affaires militaires, on ne sauroit compter sur aucun changement immédiat de système, et qu’il faut tourner toutes ses vues sur l’avenir.

“C’est-là le motif du mémoire qui demeure ainsi dans le plan que nous avons prévu, Monsieur de Stamford et moi, et à l’égard duquel j’avois eu l’honneur de présenter à sa Majesté les raisons qui semblent indiquer qu’il ne faudroit pas perdre de temps pour tâcher d’engager l’Empereur de Russie à intervenir lui-même, pour sa propre sûreté, pour produire une nouvelle union; sur quoi s’altesse sérénissime insiste de plus fort, après ses observations à Berlin.

“Quant aux demarches que s’altesse sérénissime indique comme nécessaires de la part de l’Angleterre auprès de Berlin et de Vienne, il ne paroît pas bien clairement si elles devroient être immédiates, ou subordonnées au consentement de la Russie; ce qui s’expliquera, j’espère, au retour de s’altesse sérénissime, qui est annoncé pour le 16. Dès que je serai plus instruit à cet égard, j’aurai l’honneur d’écrire de nouveau à votre Excellence.”

Enclosure.

MÉMOIRE OF THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK ON THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

1797, December 5. Berlin.—“Si la cour de Berlin ne déploie pas dans ce moment-ci par une position imposante son influence à la pacification de l’empire Germanique c’est parceque les mêmes raisons qui l’ont forcé à adopter sous le règne précédent le système de neutralité existent encore, et que de nouveaux motifs s’y joignent. Les raisons qui lui dictoient la nécessité de se circonscrire dans les bornes étroites de la neutralité sont le dérangment des finances, les dispositions inquiétantes dans les esprits des provinces nouvellement acquises, l’incertitude des vues de la cour de Vienne, et la différence totale entre les assertions de Catherine II, et le peu d’effet qui en est résulté.

“A cela se joint le secret impénétrable que la cour de Vienne observe sur les articles de la paix signée à Campo Formio, et les insinuations que la France répand que la cession de Mayence, et d’une grande partie de la rive gauche du Rhin sera le prix de la cession faite à l’Empereur de la ville de Venise, et de la majeure partie du territoire Venitien. Buonaparte a dit au négociateurs de la paix de la part de l’Empereur que c’étoit la cour de Berlin qui insistoit sur ce que la France conservât la majeure partie de la rive gauche du Rhin, tandis que le Directoire François a fait insinuer au Cabinet de Berlin qu’il espéroit que l’on ne s’opposeroit pas de la part de la Prusse aux arrangemens que la France alloit prendre avec l’Empereur touchant la rive gauche du Rhin. C’est dans cet état d’incertitude et de fluctuation que le députés de la cour de Berlin sont partis le 4 Decembre pour Rastadt.

“ Il est impossible de prévoir les résultats de cet état de choses ; mais il est fort à craindre, et même à présumer que l'intégrité ainsi que la constitution de l'empire Germanique ne soient ébranlés dans leurs fondemens, quoiqu'il soit positif que les députés de la Prusse sont chargés d'insister sur l'intégrité constitutionnelle de l'Empire. Il est à prévoir que la cour de Vienne s'est engagée par des articles secrets à favoriser les démembrements projetés par la France, et dès lors il reste à voir jusqu'où l'on pourra parvenir à les modifier. Toutes les mesures à prendre dans ce moment seroient trop tardives pour remédier aux maux présents. Il paroît par conséquent qu'il devient urgent de chercher à dévancer les événemens, et de former un plan d'union adoptable après la paix, entre l'Angleterre, l'Autriche, la Russie, et la Prusse, dont la base seroit la conservation et le maintien des gouvernemens existans, et leur garantie réciproque, ainsi qu'un accord commun pour la défense contre quiconque attaqueroit ce principe. Les païs qui formeront à l'avenir l'Empire Germanique seroient compris dans cette union, et l'on s'accorderoit sur un plan général de défense contre cette puissance monstrueuse qui les ébranlera toutes, si elles ne s'entendent enfin entre eux. Cette mesure est à considérer comme une dernière ressource qui reste dans le moment actuel ; si on ne la prend pas, si on tarde encore à s'unir, les maux à craindre sont incalculables. Il n'y a que l'Angleterre qui peut faire accepter cette mesure, et prévenir par là que la France, à force de manœuvres obliques qu'elle emploie tantôt vis-à-vis de la cour de Vienne, et tantôt vis-à-vis de celle de Berlin, ne fasse tomber enfin l'une ou l'autre dans les embûches qu'elle leur tend. Il ne faudroit point, s'il est possible, tarder à faire aux cours respectives les ouvertures nécessaires, cependant avec le plus de secret que possible. Le moindre soupçon que le Directoire prendroit sur l'objet d'une pareille négociation la porteroit à des extrémités très dangereuses ; aucune puissance n'étant préparée à une défense vigoureuse, et les armées Françaises se trouvant les maîtres des deux rives du Rhin.

“ En omettant les intérêts de la Hollande dans ce mémoire, ce n'est certainement point manque de sentir l'importance de la délivrance de ce païs infortuné, mais il est fort à craindre qu'une telle proposition donneroit facilement ombrage par la nécessité où l'on est d'éviter la guerre aussi longtems que possible.

“ L'union établie sur des bases solides, la tranquillité de l'Europe une fois assurée, il se présenteront par la suite des circonstances favorables, qui pourront être saisies ; mais il seroit dangereux, peut-être, de les établir dès les commencement pour condition expresse.

“ Il y a toute raison de croire que dans les premiers tems du nouveau règne il n'y aura aucun changement dans le ministère ; mais il n'y a aucun doute que les anciens ministres ne s'empressent à suivre les indications du jeune monarque qui voit les choses très bien, qui sent les dangers de l'Europe, et qui emploiera vraisemblablement tous les moyens pour développer aux yeux de l'Europe ses principes de justice et d'équité.

“ L’auteur de ce mémoire ne peut indiquer que des aperçus. Comme il n’est aucunement dans les affaires, comme il n’y a aucune part, il ne parle que d’après ses sentimens, et d’après ce qu’il voit. Il doit le répéter qu’il ne peut point agir ; et avec le plus grand zèle pour le bien général, son intervention pourroit devenir plus nuisible qu’utile. Mais il a tout lieu de croire qu’avec les bonnes dispositions qu’il remarque, il pourra s’opérer un bien infini si l’Angleterre trouve de son intérêt de former sous ses auspices une union de puissances capables de résister à la France, même après les acquisitions immenses qu’elle a faites, et qu’elle va probablement faire encore au moment de la paix.”

Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to M. DE LUC.

1797, December 14. Cleveland Row.—“ Sa Majesté ayant daigné me communiquer les lettres que vous lui avez adressées depuis votre arrivée en Allemagne, m’a aussi chargé de vous écrire le peu de choses qu’il y a dans les circonstances actuelles à répondre sur leur contenu.

“ Le roi n’a pû manquer d’être extrêmement sensible à la confiance avec laquelle s’a[ltesse] s[érénissime] le Duc de Brunswick s’est ouvert vis-à-vis de vous, et sa Majesté a vu avec le plus grand plaisir les nouvelles preuves que cette occasion lui a fourni de la manière de penser de ce prince éclairé. Dès le moment que la perspective de l’événement qui a eu lieu à Berlin a offert celle de la possibilité de s’entendre avec cette cour pour amener une union générale des grandes puissances, dont l’union peut seule sauver l’Europe, sa Majesté a bien pensé que la concurrence de l’Empereur de Russie seroit du plus grand poids pour la réussite d’une pareille proposition à Berlin. Elle n’a rien négligé de ce qui lui a paru le plus propre pour préparer et obtenir cette concurrence, et nous avons même quelque lieu de croire que ces efforts ne seront pas absolument sans succès.

“ Mais, il faut le dire, si pour agir à Berlin, et même pour les premiers pas, il faudra attendre que la proposition en soit faite par la cour de Petersbourg, il paroîtroit que nous sommes encore bien éloignés du but que nous nous proposons ; et cela non seulement à cause des distances, mais aussi parcequ’il seroit peut-être bien plus difficile de déterminer l’Empereur de Russie à devenir lui-même le premier moteur d’un pareil projet, que d’y entrer lorsqu’il paroîtroit que les voies eussent été, du moins en partie, préparées par une intelligence entre sa Majesté et le Roi de Prusse.

“ Voilà tout ce qu’il est possible de vous dire dans le moment. Beaucoup doit résulter du voyage de Monseigneur le Duc à Berlin. Il y jugera sur les lieux de ce qu’il y a à faire, et si, par hasard, il y trouvoit des dispositions favorables, tout doit faire présumer que son zèle pour la bonne cause ne lui permettroit de rien omettre pour les mettre à profit. J’attends avec impatience les nouvelles que vous pourrez me transmettre à cet égard.”

Postscript.—“ Vous recevrez, ci-jointe, la copie d'une information qui m'est parvenu relativement aux desseins des François sur Hambourg. Je ne puis pas en garantir l'authenticité, quoique bien des circonstances paroissent la confirmer. Vous en ferez l'usage convenable auprès du Duc de Brunswick, même qu'il puisse la communiquer à Berlin, s'il le juge utile.”

Copy.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1797, December 21. Brunswick.—“ J'ai eu l'honneur d'écrire à votre Excellence le 12 de ce mois, pour lui envoyer un mémoire que Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick m'avoit fait parvenir de Berlin par M. le Général de Stamford, destiné pour votre Excellence, et exprimant ses idées pour arriver au but de celui dont j'avois eu l'honneur d'être le porteur. Je pris la liberté de faire remarquer en même temps à votre Excellence, que l'idée du Duc dans ce mémoire étoit toujours au fond celle que nous avions prévue, M. de Stamford et moi, et dont pour gagner du temps, j'avois eu l'honneur de faire déjà mention à sa Majesté ; savoir, qu'il falloit se hâter de faire exprimer par la Russie sa persuasion de la nécessité d'une réunion sincère et étroite entre les grandes puissances, et l'assurance de son concours ; mais que je trouvois dans ce mémoire l'idée ultérieure d'une intervention de l'Angleterre auprès des cours de Berlin et de Vienne, présentée comme devant avoir lieu dès à présent ; ce qui me sembloit contraster avec la première idée. Sur quoi j'avois l'honneur de dire à votre Excellence que, comme s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] étoit attendue le 16, dès que je serois éclairée sur ce point j'aurois l'honneur de l'en instruire. Je le suis maintenant ; c'est parceque de nouvelles circonstances ont été amenées par le séjour de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] à Berlin. Mais, pour n'avoir pas à interrompre le fil de cet important rapport, où chacune des circonstances qui le composeront est essentielle à l'ensemble, je crois devoir le faire précéder de ce qui regarde l'un des papiers que votre Excellence trouvera ci-joint, que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m'a remis, pensant qu'il convenoit de le lui faire passer.

“Ce papier est la copie d'un mémoire reçu par Louis XVIII, communiqué au Duc. M. de Stamford en avoit déjà eu connoissance avant l'arrivée de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], et on lui avoit appris qu'il étoit venu en Angleterre au Duc d'Harcourt, ce qui me fait presumer qu'il n'a pas passé en Angleterre sans que les ministres de sa Majesté en aient eu connoissance. Toutefois je ne dois pas manquer de l'envoyer à votre Excellence, qui jugera de l'importance de son contenu ; non quant aux intentions du Directoire, qui ne paroissent pas douteuses, mais quant à ce qui est dit du manque de moyens ; sur quoi le passé doit montrer que la plupart des informations de ce genre ont été trompeuses ; parceque, très souvent, lorsque ces gens-là se plaignoient eux-mêmes ouvertement de pénurie, c'étoit pour le faire répéter par les donneurs de avis, afin d'endormir ceux contre qui ils se prepaioient.

“ Le second mémoire que j'ai l'honneur d'envoyer à votre Excellence va faire maintenant l'objet de mon rapport ; il sera long, mais je dois tâcher de placer votre Excellence au point où je me trouve ; afin qu'elle puisse bien connoître tout ce qui a acheminé ce mémoire, qui est de M. de Haugwitz.

“ Une connoissance précise du Duc, personnage que nous avons toujours plus lieu de considérer comme étant de très grande importance, me paraît d'abord ici très essentielle. Il pourroit sans doute beaucoup plus s'il ajoutoit à ses moyens un caractère ferme et décidé ; mais on s'exposeroit à perdre ce qu'il peut si l'on exigeoit au-delà de ce que comporte son excessive timidité en politique. Depuis l'arrivée de s'a[ltesse] s[éréniissime] nous avons resté, M. de Stamford et moi, trois jours sans qu'il eût cherché à nous voir ; ce qui se joignant à des informations particulières que M. de Stamford avoit recues de Berlin, et au laconisme décourageant de s'a[ltesse] s[éréniissime] dans deux lettres qu'il lui avoit écrites, nous ôtoit presque toute espérance. Nous savions, dis-je, que le Roi de Prusse avoit pressé le Duc de s'ouvrir entièrement à lui, et que même le comte de Pannin (qui devoit lui paroître un homme essentiel dans ses vues sur la Russie) avoit taché de l'engager à agir ; et l'on ajoutoit qu'il avoit décliné ces ouvertures, et qu'il étoit fort bien avec M. de Haugwitz ; ce qui, dans les idées précédentes, paroissoit de mauvaise augure. Mais enfin, le 19 de ce mois, s'a[ltesse] s[éréniissime] désira de nous voir, et vint pour cet effet chez M. de Stamford. Nous avons bien eu lieu de comprendre dans cet entretien que le Duc n'a pas tiré parti des circonstances comme l'aura fait un homme qui, avec les mêmes intentions, auroit eu un caractère plus décidé ; mais il a fait tout ce qui étoit en son pouvoir ; et votre Excellence jugera mieux que nous de l'importance de ce qu'il a opéré au-travers de ses craintes, que je dois toutes expliquer, ainsi que ce qui paroît de leur influence.

“ Une première chose que nous avons remarquée d'après son récit, quoiqu'il n'y ait pas lié lui-même des choses qui, rapprochées, nous paroissent importantes, c'est qu'à la date où il écrivit le mémoire que j'ai eu l'honneur d'envoyer à votre Excellence, il avoit déjà eu des entretiens avec le Roi ; ce qu'il n'avoit pas même laissé entrevoir à M. de Stamford en le lui envoyant. Or, il est trop circonspect pour l'avoir écrit sans savoir, ou prévoir du moins, qu'il étoit d'accord avec les idées de sa Majesté. C'est probablement de là qu'est venu le changement à sa première idée, en conseillant d'agir à Berlin et à Vienne en même temp qu'en Russie ; ce que la suite fortifiera.

“ Sa timidité se montre bien dans une autre circonstance, qui expliquera les avis venus de Berlin à M. de Stamford. Le Prince Héréditaire d'Orange, qui pense très sainement, ayant fait ici un petit séjour avec le Prince Frédéric, M. de Stamford en prit occasion de la mettre en état de profiter autant qu'il le pourroit de l'amitié que le roi (alors encore Prince royal) lui témoignoit, pour lui inspirer des idées salutaires. Dans ce séjour, j'eus aussi l'honneur de voir souvent ce prince. Il ne fut pas instruit de ma mission ; mais il put bien appercevoir qu'il y avoit quelque raison de rapprochement entre le Duc et moi ; et M. de Stamford lui a fait comprendre depuis que, si le roi parloit de l'Angleterre, il pouvoit lui insinuer que, très probablement, le Duc avoit quelque connoissance des intentions de ce cabinet.

“ Il faut bien que le Roi ait témoigné ce désir au Prince, et il paroît même qu'il l'a exprimé à M. de Haugwitz ; car ce ministre, parlant à M. Tollius, venu depuis peu d'Angleterre, et envoyé par le Prince d'Orange à l'occasion du congrès de Rastadt, lui demanda s'il ne savoit rien des idées du cabinet Anglois. Sur quoi M. Tollius, instruit par le Prince Héréditaire et par M. de Stamford, en répondant au ministre qu'il n'en étoit pas instruit, ajouta qu'il pensoit que si quelqu'un en étoit informé, ce seroit peut-être le Duc de Brunswick.

“ Il paroît que c'est ainsi que le Duc a été acheminé par le Roi même et son ministre à agir comme il desiroit lui-même le pouvoir ; et si votre Excellence y voit combien il est difficile à engager s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] à l'action, j'espère qu'elle trouvera cette facheuse circonstance compensée en voyant, par là, qu'il y a été acheminé par le désir même du Roi de se lier avec l'Angleterre, et en général de suivre les conseils du Duc. Or, comme M. de Stamford avoit pris soin d'informer le Prince héréditaire d'Orange de tout ce que pensoit s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] sur les dangers actuels, et le seul moyen de s'en garantir, il est probable que sa M[ajesté] l'a engagé à expliquer tout son plan ; et que c'est de là qu'est résultée enfin une longue et très intéressante conférence du Duc avec M. de Haugwitz ; conférence dont s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], en nous faisant l'honneur de nous réciter quelques circonstances, nous a dit qu'elle étoit demeurée absolument secrète entr'eux et le Roi. De sorte que le Prince héréditaire d'Orange, et à plus forte raison M. Tollius, n'en ayant rien appris, ils ont cru que le voyage du Duc à Berlin n'avoit eu aucun effet.

“ Dans cette conférence, M. de Haugwitz se prononça très fortement contre les actes du précédent règne, qu'il rejetta sur ceux qui s'étoient saisis de l'esprit du Roi. Il posa, néanmoins, pour principe actuel qu'on ne pouvoit revenir de la paix de Bâle, quoiqu'il la déplorât, ni rien faire de la part de la Prusse qui l'enfreignît, aujourd'hui qu'elle étoit isolée. Mais il exprima lui-même ses craintes de cet isolement, non seulement pour la Prusse, mais pour tous les états de l'Europe ; et son désir de voir renaître une union sur le plan de sûreté ; et ce fut après cela que l'entretien tourna sur l'Angleterre.

“ Continuant son récit, s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ajouta ; que voyant M. de Haugwitz disposé à ce que la Prusse rentrât dans les liaisons avec l'Angleterre, et voulant l'engager à se prononcer de quelque manière à cet égard, il lui avoit proposé de mettre par écrit quelques idées sur ce sujet, pour voir ce qu'on pourroit faire à cet égard, et de les lui envoyer à Brunswick ; ce qu'il avoit promis. 'Or voici,' a-t-il ajouté, 'ce que j'ai reçu cette nuit par un exprès, écrit de la main même de M. de Haugwitz.' C'est-là le mémoire dont j'ai l'honneur d'envoyer copie à votre Excellence. L'original est resté entre les mains du Duc, mais il a voulu que je pusse dire en l'envoyant que je l'avois copié moi-même sur cet original. Or il est très naturel de conclure d'un tel envoy ici, que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] s'est expliquée, au moins jusqu'à un certain point, sur ma mission. Nous n'avons pas, cependant, jugé qu'il convînt de le faire expliquer là-dessus, puisqu'il n'en disoit rien lui-même ; mais une autre circonstance fortifiera bientôt cette idée.

"Le Duc lut lui-même ce mémoire, et comme c'étoit la fin d'un récit, très circonstancié, qui avoit duré assez longtemps sans interruption de notre part, il le termina par ce mot, Diri.

"Je pris alors la liberté de lui dire, 'Monseigneur, le récit que v[otre] a[ltesse] s[érénissime] a daigné nous faire, avec de si intéressans détails, est sans doute beaucoup, et peut-être en est-elle fatiguée ; cependant j'ose lui représenter qu'elle n'a pas tout dit ; et j'espère qu'elle voudra bien y ajouter ce qu'elle pense elle-même de cette première ouverture. Il y a sans doute là un commencement ; et s'il ne s'agissoit que d'intérêts particuliers, communs sur un point à l'Angleterre et à la Prusse, vis-à-vis d'une puissance telle qu'elles étoient autrefois, avec des moyens bornés, et certaines règles du droit-des-gens, il y auroit de quoi entamer une négociation. Mais comment la Prusse et l'Angleterre se garantiroient-elles seules contre une puissance qui embrasse aujourd'hui toutes les autres ; qui a travaillé et travaille à les désunir pour les détruire en détail, ou renverser au moins leurs constitutions ; qui, au sud, dans sa République Cisalpine, fait jurer ouvertement haine aux Rois, et qui déclare, quant au nord, que la constitution d'Angleterre ne doit pas co-exister avec celle de la France ? L'ouverture de M. de Haugwitz, répond-elle à l'étendue d'un tel mal ?' 'Non (m'a répondu s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime]) je pense à cet égard comme vous ; le Roi et M. de Haugwitz le voyent de même ; mais c'est un acheminement, et mon idée seroit que vous allassiez à Berlin ; parceque vous pourriez juger mieux que moi de ce qu'on pourroit proposer de part et d'autre.'

"Votre Excellence comprend bien que je ne m'arrêtai pas à cette idée, le roi ayant là un ministre ; et c'étoit à tous égards une ressource trop faible, surtout à cause du temps qui s'est écoulé depuis que j'ai eu l'honneur de recevoir de premières instructions ; et quant à celles-là, que pourrais-je presser auprès du roi de Prusse et M. d'Haugwitz que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] n'eût déjà dans la lettre du Roi, et le mémoire de votre Excellence ? Il s'agissoit donc de tâcher de pénétrer pourquoi il ne paroissoit pas être allé aussi loin lui-même, et voici ce que nous avons pu conjecturer.

"J'ai déjà fait mention dans le premier rapport que j'ai eu l'honneur de faire à sa Majesté, d'une des modifications du caractère timide du Duc dont le Prince Henri s'étoit déjà prévalu; c'est qu'il suffit de répandre qu'il cherche à influencer, pour lui faire craindre de le tenter. Or le Prince Henri s'étoit établi son surveillant à Berlin, et le lui a fait comprendre par des questions indiscrètes. Heureusement pourtant ce Prince n'a que de la hardiesse, mais point de crédit auprès du Roi; ce qui probablement l'empêche d'en avoir sur M. d'Haugwitz. C'est le Duc lui-même qui nous a rapporté ces circonstances, ajoutant que cela l'avoit obligé à de grands ménagemens.

"Cependant il paroît, comme j'ai eu l'honneur de le faire remarquer plus haut à Votre Excellence, que M. d'Haugwitz sait plus de ce qui est connu au Duc par rapport à l'Angleterre qu'il ne nous a dit lui-même; et M. de Stamford, qui connoît ce Ministre, avoit fort à coeur de savoir surquoi le Duc fondeoit la confiance qu'il paroîssoit lui accorder dans cette négociation; et voici ce que nous avons pu en juger.

"Ce Ministre rejetant tout le mal passé, qu'il ne dissimule point, sur des personnes aujourd'hui écartées des affaires, c'est du moins une preuve qu'il ne s'associeroit pas à ce parti; et l'on peut en trouver la raison dans les dispositions du Roi car, quoique jeune et sans expérience dans les affaires, on peut prévoir qu'il ne se laissera pas circonvenir comme le Roi défunt. Soit par ses propres observations, soit par les soins assidus de M. de Stamford auprès du Prince héréditaire d'Orange, et l'intimité de celui-ci avec le futur roi dans la vie ordinaire, ce prince est arrivé au trône avec l'intime persuasion du danger de toute l'Europe par la faction Française et ses associés secrets; et sa conduite morale ayant toujours été telle qu'on ne peut espérer de le séduire par les plaisirs, on doit s'attendre qu'il restera toujours attentif aux principes d'après lesquelles on dirigera les affaires dans ces dangereuses circonstances. On n'oseroit entreprendre d'effacer de son esprit l'idée trop claire de ce danger, de peur de devenir suspect; et il a déjà exprimé en plusieurs occasions particulières une telle aversion pour les voies obliques, qu'on n'a pas à craindre, tant qu'il sera instruit, qu'on puisse le conduire à rien qui puisse blesser la probité ni l'honneur. Voilà donc une boussole pour M. d'Haugwitz, puisqu'il veut conserver sa place; et l'on voit au moins ces derniers sentimens fortement exprimés dans son mémoire, qui ne peut qu'être connu du Roi. Ainsi, pourvu qu'on puisse tenir ce monarque constamment attentif à toutes les faces des grandes affaires actuelles, M. d'Haugwitz devra continuer en particulier de suivre la route qu'il vient d'entamer vis-à-vis de l'Angleterre; trop liée déjà dans son mémoire même, et très probablement par les entretiens du Duc avec lui en présence du Roi, avec l'ensemble de l'état de l'Europe pour qu'il pût, aujourd'hui, les séparer.

"C'est donc essentiellement vers le Roi qu'il faut tourner ses vues pour être sûr de la conduite de M. d'Haugwitz; il faudroit tâcher, dans des conversations particulières, de partir avec lui du mémoire dont l'intérêt de la Prusse doit être la base pour sa M[ajesté], afin d'examiner s'il y pourvoit suffisamment. Les objets de ce mémoire semblent d'abord très simples; il s'agit de garantir le nord de l'Allemagne, et ce but importe à l'Angleterre pour sauver son commerce, et ainsi la source de sa richesse. 'Voilà (dit le mémoire) l'objet qui pour la Prusse et l'Angleterre est également sacré, le point où leurs politiques se touchent.'— Mais est-ce là le seul point, même le point le plus essentiel?— S'il n'y avoit rien à craindre en ce moment pour le nord de l'Allemagne, la Prusse n'auroit-elle aucun intérêt au sort de l'Angleterre?

"Voilà sur quoi il faudroit porter fortement l'attention du Roi lui-même, car M. d'Haugwitz ne semble pas pouvoir s'y méprendre comme un jeune monarque qui n'est pas encore accoutumé à embrasser beaucoup d'objets à la fois. Laisser sur l'Angleterre seule le poids énorme de la puissance Française au risque du renversement de sa constitution, c'est perdre de vue, comme toutes les autres puissances du continent semblent le faire, que la Grande Bretagne ne se trouve une grande puissance maritime qu'à cause de sa position; et que si, en l'abandonnant aujourd'hui à ses seules ressources, elle venoit à succomber à ses ennemis extérieurs et intérieurs, et se trouvoit révolutionnée comme la Hollande, tout ce que cette puissance seule a fait jusqu'ici de contrepoids à la puissance croissante de la nation la plus ambitieuse, seroit jetté tout-à-coup et pour toujours de son côté; et ce monstrueux pouvoir, dirigé par des maximes plus monstrueuses encore, commanderoit alors à son gré tous les états de l'Europe, comme il a l'audace de le faire chez tous ceux qu'il a déjà réussi à soumettre ou à intimider, les uns par les autres.

"Il faudroit, dans de telles conversations, et d'après un principe si évident, faire en sorte que le Roi de Prusse lui-même se pénétrât profondément de cette vérité, qu'aucune des puissances encore existantes ne peut se sauver seule de cette hydre; et qu'ainsi, pour rendre efficace un traité entre la Prusse et l'Angleterre dans le but particulier, sans doute indispensable, de défendre les embouchures des deux rivières qui ouvrent l'entrée de l'Allemagne, il faut d'abord examiner sincèrement à quel point chacune des deux puissances peut y concourir dans sa situation actuelle. Mais que de plus il faut essentiellement s'employer à faire sentir à la Russie et à l'Autriche, de manière à attirer leur confiance, que le danger s'étend jusqu'à elles, afin que la dernière concoure elle-même à réveiller l'empire d'Allemagne sur son danger, et à le réunir pour sa défense, avec l'appui et la garantie de la Russie et de l'Angleterre.

"Telles étant aussi les vues de Monseigneur le Duc, et la raison de son désir que j'allasse à Berlin, mes raisons de le décliner, du moins quant à présent, dirigèrent ses idées sur un plan plus lié. Vienne est maintenant un point de plus grande importance que Berlin; parceque l'Empereur, à qui il faudroit aussi parvenir directement pour lui faire comprendre ses vrais intérêts, est bien plus environné d'illusions, en même temps que de craintes. Mais s'il étoit quelque moyen de parvenir jusqu'à lui, en feroit-on un objet préliminaire, tandis qu'il est si pressant d'acheminer des négociations formelles ? Il seroit donc à souhaiter qu'on pût faire marcher de concert ces négociations et les moyens indirects d'empêcher que les souverains eux-mêmes ne perdent de vue la seule base de leur sûreté, en étant entraînés par des craintes, les uns des autres, qu'on ne peut que trop aisément exciter ; et voici l'idée à laquelle s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] se fixa, pour que j'eusse l'honneur de la proposer à votre Excellence, et par elle à sa Majesté.

" Dans la supposition que la négociation pour le concours de la Russie est assez avancée pour y compter dans les démarches de l'Angleterre auprès de Berlin et Vienne, s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] pense qu'elles devroient commencer à la fois. Et quant aux bases de la négociation, instruite sans doute des intentions de Berlin, s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] suppose qu'on y partirait du statu-quo avec les engagements précis et ouvertement déclarés ; 1° que les puissances contractantes ne permettraient pas que leur indépendance, ni celle d'aucun des états leurs voisins, fût violée, ni même insultée en aucune manière ; et que ce qui pourroit être tenté à cet égard contr'elles, ou aucun de ces états encore indépendans, deviendrait la cause de toutes, pour s'employer de tout leur pouvoir à l'empêcher. 2° Que comme tout dicte qu'il est de l'intérêt des souverains, et de l'humanité entière, de donner enfin la paix à l'Europe sur une base solide, elles concourront toutes pour cet effet à une paix générale et concertée entre toutes les puissances, dont elles se deviendront mutuellement garantes ; spécifiant notamment la paix à faire de la France avec l'Angleterre sur des bases justes ; objets sur lesquels l'Angleterre donneroit dès à présent des instructions déterminées à ses ministres aux trois cours.

" Mais que pour séconder les démarches officielles, et établir un concert prompt avec le Duc, et rendre ainsi son influence plus efficace à Berlin, M. le Général Stamford seroit envoyé à Vienne, parcequ'il possède au plus haut degré tout l'ensemble du passé, et la perspective de l'avenir ; et qu'ayant la confiance personnelle du Roi de Prusse, il ne pourroit que contribuer beaucoup au rapprochement de ce monarque avec l'Empereur. Quant à lui fournir le moyen plausible de se présenter à Vienne, s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] le Prince d'Orange, qui a déjà envoyé M. Tollius à Rastadt, pourroit aussi envoyer M. de Stamford à Vienne dans le même but. Un homme comme lui, placé seulement à ce poste, se frayeroit sûrement une route ; pourvu seulement que sa santé ne vienne y mettre aucun obstacle.

" Quant à Berlin s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] a toujours des vues sur moi ; elle le croit nécessaire pour la correspondance avec M. de Haugwitz, et là aussi je serois à portée de son appui et de ses directions. Dans ce plan, nous serions introduits, M. de Stamford et moi, par votre Excellence auprès des ministres respectifs de sa Majesté, comme des personnes en qui ils pourroient prendre confiance ; pour servir, par nos relations privées, à leur faire parvenir des informations plus immédiates, et les remarques qu'elles occasionneroient.

" Il est une circonstance, liée à l'ensemble des affaires, qui fait ici autant de peine que de bruit ; c'est le renvoy par le Duc, sur l'avis du Roi de Prusse, de l'infortuné Louis XVIII. et des autres émigrés ; ce qu'on interprète assez naturellement comme un symptôme de faiblesse du Roi et du Duc lui-même ; mais voici ce que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] a bien voulu nous en dire.

“Le Directoire a fait déclarer à Berlin qu'entretenir dans ces contrées le plus grand ennemi de la république Française, et le foyer de toutes les conspirations qu'il dit exister dans l'intérieur, ne pouvoit être considéré que comme une conduite contraire à la neutralité ; et qu'ainsi il attendoit qu'ils seroient renvoyés. Or on a cru que dans les circonstances actuelles, où rien encore n'est prêt pour une résistance efficace, il falloit ôter prétexte ; en attendant qu'on se soit mis en position de n'en plus souffrir.

S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] nous a fait part ensuite des dispositions dont elle s'occupe, de concert avec Berlin, pour les points avancés de la ligne de démarcation ; en préparant d'autres forces sur les derrières, s'il en étoit besoin ; auquel cas on croit pouvoir compter sur la Saxe. Mais sur ce point, je ne doute pas que votre Excellence n'ait des informations précises par d'autres canaux.

“Je crois que voilà où se termine pour le présent ce qui pouvoit rendre mon séjour de quelque utilité à Brunswick, où j'ai dû employer toutes sortes de moyens durant le temps où je ne pouvois m'absenter, pour soutenir le caractère de ma vocation ostensible ; maintenant il faut que j'aille en faire autant à Hanovre, où l'on s'étonne de ne me pas voir encore, et je songe à y aller dans quelques jours. Je ne perdrai point cependant le fil d'ici, ni M. de Stamford celui de Berlin ; et s'il se passoit quelque chose d'importance, j'aurois l'honneur d'informer votre Excellence. Peut-être que sur les premières informations que j'ai eu l'honneur de faire parvenir à sa Majesté, votre Excellence m'aura envoyé de nouveaux ordres ; qu'en ce cas je suivrai de tout mon pouvoir. Mais voilà une nouvelle scène qui s'ouvre, sur laquelle je ne puis avoir aucune lumière jusqu'à ce que votre Excellence l'ait considérée elle-même, et m'ait fait l'honneur de m'informer du jugement qu'elle en porte ; de même que de la conduite que je dois tenir à cet égard ; et ce sera probablement à Hanovre (sans aller encore à Gottingue) que j'attendrai ses ordres ; prêt à les exécuter autant qu'il me sera possible.” Two Enclosures.

Enclosure 1.

Secret report from France to Louis XVIII. (Count de Provence).

Extract. “On a des données certaines sur la vie politique et la vie privée des Directeurs.

“En politique, ils continuent d'annoncer ostensiblement le projet de faire des descentes en Angleterre, d'y transporter le théâtre de la guerre.

“ Ils tiennent des Comités secrets, où les idées de chacun sur cet objet sont présentées et discutées, ainsi que les plans que chacun dit avoir reçus, soit des particuliers qui paroissent s’y intéresser, soit des officiers qui s’y destinent.

“ Le résultat des ces dispositions étoit, il y a quelques jours, de réunir 200,000 hommes sur les côtes de Brest et de Bretagne, de faire construire dans chaque port, ou réparer, le plus grand nombre de batteaux plats possible . . . . . de tenter une première descente en Irlande où on se dit sûr du succès . . . . . puis une descente générale, en partant de tous les points de la France, lorsque la guerre seroit établie en Irlande.

“ Forcer l’Espagne et la Hollande à seconder de tous leurs moyens. Ce vaste projet est loin de l’exécution ; nullité presque absolue en finances ; et en marine vains efforts pour les réparer.

“ Provisoirement on voudroit paralyser le commerce Anglois, exciter le mécontentement de ceux qui s’y livrent en les privant des ports qui recoivent leurs navires, notamment de celui de Hambourg ou Cuxhaven ; de là le projet d’y envoyer des troupes. On se flatte de faire taire le roi de Prusse par des actes de satisfaction, et de compensation ou indemnité.

“ Par l’un des articles secrets du traité de paix, l’Electorât de Hannovre a été réservé pour les indemnités des différents intéressés qui réclameraient au congrès de Rastadt.

“ Ce sera toujours par les préparatifs, par les mouvemens des troupes, par les dispositions qui pourront se faire dans les ports qu’on jugera de la réalité des projets, ainsi que par les ordres relatifs à ces divers objets que donnera chaque ministère.

“ Dans leur intérieur, les moeurs, les passions, les habitudes des Directeurs offrent beaucoup de variétés.

“ Merlin travaille quatorze heures par jour ; il s’occupe de tout ce qui est de détail d’exécution des loix, de gouvernement effectif. Les quatre autres, très satisfaits de son assiduité, signent avec complaisance toutes les productions de ce labeur, et se livrent à des exercices différents.

“ Rewbel agiote, boit, s’enivre souvent ; il prend intérêt dans tous les marchés des nouveaux entrepreneurs, parmi lesquels on remarque Tallien, Bentabolle.

“ François fait des vers.

“ La Reveillère herborise au jardin du roi, dit des plantes. La fille du jardinier s’est emparée de son cœur, et a au moins autant de pouvoir sur lui que la Théophilantropie.

“ Barras consacre peu de momens au Cabinet ; s’il y passe quelques heures, ses jambes s’inflent, il se croit mort. Le lendemain une partie de chasse et un dinée nombreux dissipent sa mélancolie.

“ Aucun d’eux ne pense à la constitution actuelle ; s’il y a entre eux un point d’accord à ce sujet c’est celui de la destruction, mais grande divergence sur celle qui devra succéder.

“ Merlin ne s’est chargé de tout le travail que pour disposer au retour de la terreur. Plan du Directoire ; plus de corps législatif en deux conseils ; une seule convention réunissant tous les pouvoirs, les distribuant par émanation de son centre. Des clubs partout, qui seront autant d'auxiliaires et d'instrumens.

"Tel est le plan de Merlin. Il fut d'abord combattu par Rewbel, qui craignoit que la journée de Grenelle ne lui fut jamais pardonnée ; mais Merlin a dissipé cette frayeur.

"Laclos est le principal collaborateur de Merlin ; depuis huit jours il ne le quitte pas.

"Antonelle et Felix le Pelletier vont tous les soirs chez eux entre onze heures et minuit, et y passent plusieurs heures. Ils dirigent les clubs. Antoine et Marceau rendent compte de leurs opérations, y portent les vœux de Merlin et compagnie.

"Reverchon est le second de Rewbel ; il s'est chargé des Lyonnais ; quatre des siens sont partis hier pour ce travail.

"Barras est l'ennemi déclaré de ce projet et de ses auteurs. Il a montré de l'inquiétude pendant quelques jours. Il paroît actuellement très rassuré ; il dit dans ses confidences intimes qu'il jouera avec les têtes de Merlin et de Rewbel, qu'il les laisse aller, certain de les arrêter quand il en sera tems ; et comme ces deux têtes ne suffiroient pas, il y joindra celles de leurs agens actuels, et de quarante députés des deux conseils. Les troupes sont sa force. L'armée d'Angleterre et son chef seront à sa disposition ; mais s'ils triomphent quel sera leur gouvernement ? On l'ignore. Barras est étroitement lié avec D'iesre, secrétaire d'ambassade d'Espagne.

"Talleyrand est du parti de Merlin et Rewbel ; un ami de Barras lui en a marqué de l'inquiétude, et Barras a répondu qu'il attendoit incessamment un homme qui mettroit tous ces yeux-là à la raison.

"Berthier est parti dimanche 12, à onze heures et demi du soir, non pour Rastadt, comme le disent plusieurs journaux, mais pour l'Italie.

"Le Directoire, informé des intelligences qui existent avec les isles de St. Marcou, va tenter de s'en emparer, ou de couvrir cette mer de frégates et de corsaires pour intercepter cette communication.

"Même projet sur les isles de Jersey et Guernsey, au moyen, dit-on, de quelques bateaux plats qui partiroient des côtes de Cherbourg et Coutance.

"Toujours, et plus activement que jamais, système de propagande, et porter la révolution chez nos voisins. Les agens et les instructions parlent des secrets du Directoire et des affaires étrangères. L'un des notres a reçu les propositions qui lui ont été faites à ce sujet pour la Suisse, et les instructions y relatives, et a donné ensuite un prétexte pour refuser."

"Là paix générale n'est pas faite, dit le ministre, même dans le Continent. Il craint de prouver beaucoup de résistance même au congrès. Les Cours de Berlin, Stockholm, Petersbourg et Constantinople l'inquiètent également.

"Sa correspondance avec les ministres de la République en Espagne et Hollande ne tend qu'à les engager à redoubler d'efforts pour exciter la haine des nations où ils résident, contre le gouvernement Anglois ; et employer tous les moyens pour le contraindre à signer la paix aux conditions qui lui seront imposées.

“Charretier a mission expresse de tout tenter pour soulever le peuple Anglois contre le roi et les ministres, de distribuer de l'argent à propos ; il correspond à Paris avec Vandenyver, rue Varenne.

“Quelques conférences entre le ministre et Beaumarchais, aussi secrètes que possibles, font présumer qu'il ira bientôt à Londres pour y négocier dans le parti de l'opposition les moyens de contraindre les ministres à demander la paix.

“Le Canu, m[archand] de mousselines, de bazins, et autres objets pareils, court l'Angleterre, et surtout les ports. Sa mission est de faire le relevé du nombre des matelots ; étudier leurs dispositions ; leur suggérer le désir de venger leurs camarades, victimes de leur zèle pour la liberté ; sa dernière lettre, venue par Calais, porte que l'abattement causé aux matelots par le supplice des leurs est extrême ; qu'ils tremblent à l'idée d'une cour—martiala ; qu'il croit cependant qu'avec des sommes considérables, et la médiation de quelques patriotes d'Angleterre, on parviendrait encore à les soulever.

“Canivet est un autre acteur de la propagande, et vient de partir pour l'Angleterre avec l'instruction d'usage. Il est employé depuis longtems ; il le fût par Roberspierre, comme ami de Tachereau son beau-frère.

“Il est connu sous des couleurs toutes différentes. On lui croit des principes honnêtes, il est reçu dans les meilleures maisons, voit les émigrés, leur rend des services, leur procure de l'argent. Il n'est pas méchant ; on croit qu'il n'est espion que par intérêt.

“Voici son signalement ; 32 ou 33 ans, 5 pieds 4 pouces, cheveux et sourcils châtains clair, visage plein et coloré, bel homme, toujours bien mis ; a un passeport sous son nom, fait quelques affaires de commerce.

“Houe Anglois s'occupe ici de tout ce qui peut nuire à son pays. Il réunit dans ce moment les matériaux nécessaires pour prouver que les ministres ont acquis des fortunes considérables au préjudice de la nation ; repandre avec profusion le manifeste qui contiendrait ces détails ; annoncer que le gouvernement François fera la paix avec le gouvernement Anglois dèsqu'il y aura d'autres ministres ; il correspond à Calais avec Parry de la même nation.

“Nouvelles inquiétudes des provinces méridionales. Le camp de Jallé est renouvelé ; de toutes parts des rassemblemens nombreux, des républicains mal-traités. Tout le midi va devenir Vendéens, si ces mouvemens ne sont pas réprimés dans leur naissance.

“De même en Brétagne et Normandie. On marque que deux commissaires Anglois ont débarqué à Granville pour y apporter des nouveaux fonds, et exciter les insurrections.

“On a donné au commissaire du gouvernement les pouvoirs les plus étendus pour arrêter tous les royalistes qu'il découvrirait, sans aucune formalité.

“ Le ministre prétend être assuré qu’il existe à Paris des agens de Louis XVIII., et promet au Directoire leurs prompte arrestation.

“ Depuis quelques jours on a cessé les perquisitions de Messieurs de la Trimouille et Frotté ; mais elles se continuent avec activité contre Rohecotte dit Rozette, l’abbé Desgrigny dit Prévost, Bayard, Despomelles, Beaumont, Retel Crecy dit Mallet, Dupuy.

“ Tous sont désignés et signalés par Duverne. Un Irlandais dit Sommers est en liberté, et a répondu aux divers interrogatoires, qu’il a subis avec beaucoup d’esprit et de sang-froid.

“ Dupuis et François, en ont été les principaux sujets. Le ministre croit que c’est le même individu. Il recommande à ses agens la plus grande surveillance sur lui, le désigne comme le chef des conspirateurs ; mais il résulte de tous les rapports qui lui ont été faits jusqu’à ce jour, que cet être si dangereux n’est connu de qui que ce soit, non plus que les autres qui lui ont été désignés.

“ Le ministre croit actuellement que tous sont dans l’étranger, ou dans quelques provinces éloignées de Paris.

“ Les Coryphées des Jacobins se disent certains que Barras et Buonaparte sont royalistes, et ne pensent qu’à rétablir la monarchie en France. Ils remarquent que Serrurier, aristocrate prononcé, est le confident intime et unique de Buonaparte.”
Extrait.

Enclosure 2.

MÉMOIRE by COUNT DE HAUGWITZ.

“ Il ne seroit pas impossible que l’Angleterre isolée, mais tenant dans sa lutte contre son formidable ennemi, ne désirât de se rapprocher de la Prusse. Dans la supposition qu’elle exprimât ce voeu, quel seroit l’intérêt et la marche de cette dernière puissance ?

“ Pour résoudre la question, il est nécessaire d’en poser une autre, et d’examiner dans quelle intention le cabinet de St. James rechercherait, avec celui de Prusse, des relations nouvelles.

“ L’Angleterre, en les amenant, se transporterait-elle encore à cette époque où des discussions, inutiles à rappeler, séparèrent les intérêts des deux cours ?

“ Ou bien, ayant pris son parti sur des revers irrémédiables, et occupée seulement de ses nouveaux dangers, ne désirerait-elle que d’être rassurée sur ceux-ci ?

“ C’est-à-dire, l’Angleterre, en se rapprochant de la Prusse, en exigerait-elle l’offensive contre la France ? Ou seulement la sûreté de l’électorat d’Hanovre, et de ses importans débouchés en Allemagne ?

“ Dans le premier cas, tout examen deviendrait superflu. Le système adopté par la Prusse depuis la paix de Bâle est le seul qui convienne à ses véritables intérêts. Rien au monde ne sauroit la porter à s'en écarter. Elle s'en tiendra strictement aux engagements qu'elle a contracté avec la France par la convention conclue le 5 Aoust, 1796, sur la neutralité du nord de l'Allemagne ; tant que, de son côté, celle-ci demeurera fidèle aux siens ; et dans l'hypothèse des ouvertures que lui adresseroit l'Angleterre, le Cabinet de Berlin, décidé à ne connoître jamais d'autre politique que la franchise et la loyauté, ne mettroit pas de borne à la sienne, et croiroit par là avoir plus fait pour l'amitié qu'en abusant l'Angleterre, en lui laissant le moindre doute sur le degré de coopération qu'elle devoit attendre de sa part.

“ Mais pour le second cas, ce seroit celui où un point de réunion existeroit en effet, et où l'une et l'autre puissance auroient les mêmes dangers à courir, et les mêmes mesures à prendre ; et c'est-là la seconde intention, supposée plus haut, du rapprochement de l'Angleterre.

“ La Prusse a fait la paix ; elle veut la maintenir ; mais sûre, mais conforme à sa dignité, et à ses véritables intérêts. Elle a vu de loin la France combattre les ennemis qui lui restoient après elle ; et en gémissant de voir les maux de la guerre peser encore sur d'autres peuples, elle a veillé tranquille à la sûreté des siens. C'est pour la mettre à l'abri des mêmes malheurs qu'elle a stipulée la neutralité du nord de l'Allemagne. En prenant des mesures pour elle, elle n'a pas fait moins pour l'Angleterre. Elle a sauvé l'électorat d'Hanovre ; elle a sauvé le commerce de la Grande Bretagne, et lui a rendu par là un service des plus essentiels.

“ Car si les François s'étoient emparés (et qui, hors la Prusse, leur en eût fermé le chemin) des embouchûres du Weser et de l'Elbe, quels débouchés restoit-il aux Anglois avec les nations qui surtout les enrichissent ? Quelle ressource restoit-il à leur ministère pour poursuivre la terrible lutte ?

“ Voilà l'objet qui, pour la Prusse et l'Angleterre, est également sacré ; c'est là le point où leurs politiques se touchent, et l'intérêt prépondérant pour lequel elles ne sauroient craindre sans que la nature des choses ne les rapproche incessamment.

“ Les engagements les plus formels garantissent cette neutralité importante ; et il seroit trop douloureux de supposer au Gouvernement François la volonté de les rompre, pour en croire aisément les bruits qui l'assurent. Une perfidie pareille, si jamais le Directoire pouvoit s'en rendre coupable, ne seroit guère propre à lui mériter l'assentiment de la nation ; aussi la Prusse est-elle loin d'y croire. Si, cependant, elle étoit possible ; si le Directoire se déterminoit à faire marcher ses armées sur Hanovre et sur Hambourg, la Prusse, inébranlable jusques-là dans son système de loyauté et de paix, déploieroit la même énergie dans la carrière sanglant où on la forceroit d'entrer, et ne craindroit pas de mesurer l'ancienne réputation de ses armes et l'équité de sa cause, contre la bravoure des François et les injustes prétentions de ses Directeurs.

“ Alors naitroit le moment où une politique bien vue réuniroit sans peine les cours de Londres et de Berlin. Alors l'Angleterre, considérant les dangers de la Prusse même, qui resteroit seule et exposée sur le Continent au choc réuni des armées Françaises ; l'Angleterre, instruite que la bravoure ne peut pas tout, que l'argent est le nerf de la guerre, ne voudroit pas, peut-être, par une économie mal calculée, risquer le succès de la campagne. Elle offriroit aux compagnons d'armes que la perfidie lui auroit rendus, les seuls moyens qui leur manquent ; elle s'épargneroit, en s'empressant à le faire, les regrets tardifs d'avoir exposé à succomber le seul état de la part duquel elle peut s'attendre de le voir combattre pour ses intérêts. Enfin, par le moyen des subsides, elle auroit conservé son commerce, et le superflu de ses richesses en auroit sauvé la source ; et l'empire des choses auroit rapproché deux puissances sans le concours desquels ce résultat resteroit peut-être bien précaire encore." Copy.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1797, December 25. Brunswick.—“ Le 21 de ce mois j'ai eu l'honneur d'écrire à votre Excellence pour lui communiquer ce qu'avoit produit le voyage de Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick à Berlin, quant au plan que certainement il désire lui-même ; et ayant reçu le 23 la lettre dont votre Excellence m'a honoré le 14, elle nous procura hier, à M. de Stamford et à moi, un entretien fort détaillé avec s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime]. Rien n'y fut épargné de notre part pour peindre des plus vives couleurs les circonstances présentes, et leurs suites indubitables si on ne les fait changer. S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] acquiesça entièrement tant à la vérité du tableau, qu'à ce qu'il exigeroit à Berlin ; mais les mêmes obstacles se présentent toujours. C'est-là un ensemble de choses que votre Excellence peut maintenant se représenter assez elle-même pour que je doivre lui en épargner les détails ; ainsi je me bornerai à ce qui peut conduire à l'action. Rien de plus vrai que ce que votre Excellence me fait l'honneur de me dire dans sa lettre, qu'attendre la résolution de Petersbourg, avant que d'agir à Berlin et à Vienne, est une route beaucoup trop longue dans les circonstances urgentes des affaires. Votre Excellence peut bien croire que c'est aussi ce que j'avois représenté avec toute la force dont je suis capable, dans le temps même où cela n'étoit pas aussi évident qu'il l'est devenu ; mais je m'étois cru obligé d'informer sa Majesté que cependant il étoit à craindre que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] se fixât à cette idée ; puisqu'à tout événement, des instances plus pressantes à Petersbourg ne pourroient qu'être utiles.

“ Avant le départ de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] pour Berlin, nous revinmes à la charge, M. de Stamford et moi, avec toute la force possible. Aussi votre Excellence a-t-elle pu remarquer que, dès le mémoire venu de Berlin, et que j'ai eu l'honneur de lui envoyer le 12 de ce mois, s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] modifioit déjà, quoique obscurément, sa première idée ; parlant alors d'agir à Berlin et à Vienne ; et enfin, dans ma lettre du 21 de ce mois, j'ai eu l'honneur d'exposer à votre Excellence à quoi avoit été acheminé ce plan d'accélération, en y joignant de premières idées de réunion proposées par M. d'Haugwitz. Mais les pas de l'ennemi s'accélérent, et avec eux les craintes de ce côté-ci augmentent au lieu de redoublement de vigueur ; de sorte que je dois rassembler ici tout ce qui me fait croire qu'il faut se hâter d'entamer les négociations formelles avec ce qui peut, de toute manière, aider à leur succès ; sans quoi il est à craindre qu'on ne soit plus à temps.

“Le point essentiel de cet entretien avec s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] fut la communication qu'elle nous fit de ce qu'on regardoit comme certain ; que les François exigeroient à Rastadt que le pays d'Hanovre fût remis entre leurs mains en nantissement, jusqu'à la paix avec l'Angleterre ; sur quoi s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ajouta ; ‘la Prusse s'y opposera certainement de tout son pouvoir ; mais pourra-t-elle résister seule ?’ Votre Excellence peut comprendre avec quelle chaleur je m'élevai contre ce mais : combien je le fis contraster avec les sentimens d'honneur et de probité exprimés dans le mémoire même de M. d'Haugwitz ; à quelle peinture je me livrai du sort qui attendroit certainement d'abord le pays de Brunswick, puis la Saxe, et la Prusse elle-même, quand, sous prétexte d'un simple nantissement, on révolutionneroit le pays d'Hanovre ; sur quoi je connois trop bien les faits pour qu'on puisse me les nier. ‘C'est-là,’ dis-je, ‘le piège le plus audacieux qu'aient encore tendu ces gens-là ; non seulement dans son but, qui est très évident, mais comme ne pouvant naître que d'un sentiment de mépris pour l'entendement et le caractère des souverains à qui on oseroit le proposer.’

“Tout cela fut admis par s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] comme très vrai et extrêmement allarmant. Mais que peut faire la Prusse isolée ? La Prusse ! qui voit combien l'Autriche est trompée, et qu'elle s'est mise tellement au pouvoir des François qu'au lieu d'en attendre du secours, on auroit lieu de la craindre elle-même ? Il étoit bien inutile de représenter, comme je ne manquai pas de la faire en peu de mots, que l'Autriche ne s'étoit jettée entre les bras des François que pour les arracher à la Prusse, qui s'y étoit jettée la première. Rien n'est nié, mais cela ne change pas le fait actuel ; c'est que les François ont réussi à ce que ces puissances se craignent l'une l'autre ; et qu'ils y ont réussi par la route qui les tient le plus entre leurs mains ; par cette lutte entr'elles, consolidée avant l'accession du présent roi, mais sous le même ministre, à qui les auroit plus sûrement pour amis, ou comme moins ennemis.

“Il paroît bien que le Roi de Prusse commence à voir, comme le ministre professe de voir, que le Directoire entretient celle lutte pour détruire les deux puissances par cette crainte réciproque ; mais ces craintes jusqu'ici ne sont pas moins réelles ; et comme la Prusse est arrivée à redouter qu'en se prononçant seule, elle ne fût d'abord écrasée, au lieu que les dangers futurs semblent plus susceptibles de remèdes, c'est-là une illusion entretenue par tant de gens autour du jeune Roi (dont il est inutile d'espérer que le Duc ose s'approcher d'avantage par lui-même), que je ne puis m'empêcher d'en redouter les suites, pour eux-mêmes premièrement, puis pour toute l'Europe.

"Comme nous avons tâché, M. Stamford et moi, de bien voir, de tout sonder et scruter finalement dans cet entretien, je suis conduit à penser (sauf les informations que votre Excellence peut avoir d'autre part) qu'il est dangereux de perdre du temps à combattre par des représentations des idées qui, n'ayant pas le sens commun pour des hommes fermes, n'ont leur fondement que dans la crainte; sentiment qui aveugle les plus clair-voyans d'ailleurs. En effet tout est fini lorsqu'après ces représentations, même jusqu'à celles de l'honneur et de la probité, la réponse est toujours, 'Vous avez raison, mais . . . ' et que ce mais procède toujours d'un sentiment de crainte prochaine qui cache ou affoiblit les *crain*tes plus éloignées ou contingentes. Il n'y a, dis-je, alors d'autre ressource qu'à travailler à dissiper cette crainte prochaine. Elle est toute ici dans la défiance de Vienne, et l'incertitude quant à Petersbourg; elle est réelle chez le Roi et le Duc; elle paroît l'être aussi chez le ministre; mais, quoiqu'il en soit, il n'y a pas à compter sur un changement de ministère. Cette crainte est très probablement à Vienne comme à Berlin, réciproquement; elle est plus prochaine que celle des suites, quoique très visibles et avouées, des prétendues paix individuelles; on ne dissiperoit pas ces défiances sans l'intervention bien prononcée de la Russie; et l'on ne pourroit se réunir qu'en se garantissant mutuellement, et avec elle, non le statu quo actuel qui changera irremédiablement à Rastadt, mais celui qu'on sera forcé de subir dans ce congrès, où l'on forcera, dis-je, les puissances, les unes par les autres, à recevoir les dépouilles des faibles, pour détruire toute morale politique, et rendre les souverains odieux à leurs peuples. Cela fait frémir; mais est-on en mesure pour l'empêcher?

"C'est-là un torrent qui jusqu'ici me paroît irrésistible; je veux dire qu'il me semble que ce n'est qu'en partant du statu quo, tel qu'il sera décidé alors, et montrant qu'il peut être soutenu par la réunion, qu'on peut espérer de donner du poids aux dangers d'une telle paix; et, provisionnellement, de déterminer la Prusse à refuser, quelles que pussent en être les suites, son consentement à l'objet d'Hanovre. Car autrement, quelque contraire que fût un tel consentement au traité de neutralité, et quelque menaçant que fût pour la Prusse elle-même ce nantissement insidieux, surtout vu l'information d'Hambourg (dont je n'ai pas manqué de faire usage) j'aurois peur que la crainte du présent ne l'emportât sur ces considérations.

"Si cet exposé, qui n'est que trop vrai par ce côté-ci, n'est pas contraire à d'autres informations qui peuvent être parvenues à votre Excellence, il me paroît que les négociations ne pourroient sans danger différer un moment d'être entamées à Vienne comme à Berlin; en informant aussi la Russie qu'il n'y a pas un moment à perdre pour elle à se prononcer vigoureusement, et avec résolution d'agir de tout son pouvoir ; car par Hambourg, tous les bords de la Baltique seroient menacés d'insurrection ; et tandis qu'elle ne songeroit qu'à rétablir ses finances, la Révolution s'avanceroit pour lui en enlever les sources.

“ Mais pour que ces négociations soient efficaces, il faut tâcher de parvenir aux souverains eux-mêmes. Car là où les ministres sont ou foibles, ou peu éclairés, ou suspects (et malheureusement on ne peut que ranger dans une de ces trois classes celui de Berlin) le danger est le même quant à l'effet. Le plan que j'ai eu l'honneur de communiquer, le courrier passé, à votre Excellence a été encore passé en revue dans cet entretien ; et son exécution, sous la forme indiquée, pressée avec force par s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ; car sur ce point elle en a beaucoup ; ce qui prouve bien, quant à Berlin, que malgré ce qu'elle dit du ministre, elle ne s'y fie qu'autant que quelqu'un (qu'elle ne veut pas être) aura l'oreille du Roi. Cette négociation, dit encore s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] est d'un genre si important, elle doit être si rapide, qu'il n'y faut pas des moyens communs. Un ministre qui se borneroit à delivrer des mémoires, et à recevoir des réponses pour les transmettre ne seroit rien dans ce moment. Des hydres de difficultés s'élèveront, et s'il n'avoit pas la tête assez forte pour les combattre lui-même, ni assez le zèle de la chose pour en être inspiré en toute circonstance, à chaque moment, toutes les batteries braquées contre lui dans le lieu même le mettroient bientôt hors de combat. Ainsi, indépendamment des routes subsidiaires pour s'approcher des souverains, des appuis officiels d'une grande force seroient, dit s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], très essentiels pour un tel ministre.

“ Je vais plus loin par mes propres réflexions. Dans le projet que j'eus l'honneur d'envoyer, le courrier dernier, à votre Excellence, M. de Stamford étoit proposé pour Vienne, pour le but de se rapprocher de l'Empereur ; et certainement nul homme, à ma connoissance, n'est en état de rendre à la cause générale de plus grands services de ce genre. Mais ceci étoit dans la supposition qu'il en seroit besoin à Vienne ; or, dans l'ignorance où nous sommes de ce qui se passe de ce côté-là, nous ne savons point si cela seroit nécessaire.

“ Je veux donc supposer, pour tâcher de tout prévoir, que le succès à Vienne ne dépendit que d'y faire connoître les dispositions de Berlin et de Petersbourg pour une réunion, afin de négocier sous ce point de vue, et non d'en montrer la nécessité ; alors M. de Stamford n'y seroit pas si nécessaire, et en ce cas, peut-être, si s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] n'en craignoit pas les conséquences à cause de ses relations avec lui, il conviendrait qu'il allât à Berlin, où il seroit bien plus important que moi, qui n'ai cédé à cette idée que pour ne me refuser à rien de ce qu'on croiroit utile. Mais c'est-là une chose dont s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] devant être juge, je ne fais mention que pour être considérée éventuellement ; et qui ne pourroit être déterminée ici que d'après les instructions de votre Excellence, indépendantes du mouvement à donner au grand plan. Pour montrer à votre Excellence ce qu'est M. de Stamford, il est résolu, à moins d'empêchement formel de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], au premier mot officiel qui viendrait relativement à cette indignité sur Hanovre, de partir pour Potzdam. Enfin comme les finances de Prusse sont mises aussi en avant avec beaucoup de force, quelque injuste et mal-vue que soit la base du mémoire de M. d'Haugwitz, comme il n'y a point de temps à perdre pour contester ou marchander, peut-être ne faudroit-il pas s'aheurter à la clause relative aux finances; et que d'après l'idée que M. Pitt me fit l'honneur de me confier, qu'on pourroit payer des services rendus et non à rendre; s'il étoit possible il faudroit s'expliquer d'abord sur ce point. M. d'Haugwitz s'appuie sur ce que l'argent est le nerf de la guerre; mais ce n'est pas sous ce point de vue qu'il faut considérer ici l'objet de l'argent; c'est une pierre d'achoppement; ce pourroit être un prétexte; et si l'on peut se tenir près du Roi, il ne faudroit pas laisser cette raison au ministre qui me paroît bien décidé de s'y tenir.

“Je n'attendois pour me rendre à Hanovre que les ordres qui pourroient me venir d'après les premières informations que j'avois eu l'honneur de donner à sa majesté, car je voyois la convenance de ce changement de lieu. Je crois avoir tout fait ici pour le présent, pouvant d'ailleurs en recevoir des nouvelles; ainsi je compte d'être à Hanovre le 30<sup>e</sup>. de ce mois.”

HENRY DUNDAS TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, January 5. Wimbledon.—“I shall attend to what you state respecting the French calumnies, as to the treatment of prisoners, and in some shape it shall be put in a proper state for explanation. I had it under view at the same time that I directed Huskisson to make up the statement for the Antejacobin, but Huskisson then mentioned to me that you had it in contemplation to form an official paper on the subject.

“The reason why the French employ such a large proportion of officers is for the double purpose of preventing desertion naturally resulting from a plan of requisition, and in order that there might not be a deficiency of officers to command and discipline the succession of the force en masse which they poured into their ranks as fast as the previous mass was destroyed or much thinned by the desperate service they employed them upon. The same reasons don't apply to our regular force acting in the defence of their own country. You are perfectly right in the observation you make with regard to other corps upon which we must in a great measure rely, not excepting the militia. I believe the Duke of York has had reason given to him to believe that some of the most respectable militia officers would be glad to have experienced regular officers in some shape connected with them. I have encouraged the Duke to favour the idea, and I think it is possible to do it without creating any jealousy or umbrage. This would clearly be the best way of employing them. Most of the other kinds of irregular corps have old officers connected with them, as there was no limitation by law against it, and of course when they agreed to associate, they were naturally induced to entrust their discipline to such old officers as they were, from near neighbourhood or otherwise, acquainted with. At the same time the number of half-pay serviceable officers is much fewer than you would imagine. Most of what is worth taking have been brought into service since the Duke of York came into his present situation.

“Nothing is more certain than that the provisional cavalry must undergo a new arrangement, and such as it is proper to preserve may be most beneficially employed. I have had various suggestions laid before me on the subject; none of them exactly correspond with what has occurred to myself. Yours is nearer than [any] of them, only I think you suggest too few when you talk of a tenth part, because in those districts where there are not a sufficiency of yeomanry cavalry, a body of them must be substituted for driving the country and other operations of that kind. A sufficiency of cavalry against an invading enemy in [is?] incalculable in point of advantage. The regular cavalry should be reserved for regular attack upon the enemy. The yeomanry cavalry should have their chief attention directed to preserve the internal quiet of the country. The provisional cavalry should be employed in driving the cattle, and such other business of a Hussar nature as may occur in each district. That I conceive to be outlines of the respective services, subject of course to such modifications and deviations as circumstances and the discretion of the commanding officers of districts may suggest. Sir Charles Grey has sent me a most admirable statement of what has been settled in his district, in concert with the Lord Lieutenant and his Deputies.

“I don’t like to gasconade on the subject, but I am confident, if the different departments of Government do their duty, and we don’t sleep over the business of the country, an attempt to invade us two months hence is an event devoutly to be wished. Without such an attempt the relative strength of the two countries, and the independence and invulnerability of Britain never will be sufficiently ascertained either to our own satisfaction, or to that of the enemy, and the rest of the world.”

M. DE LUC to GEORGE III.

1798, January 6. Hanover.—“La poste dernière j’eus l’honneur d’écrire deux lettres à votre Majesté; une, partie par le courrier ordinaire sous couvert de M. de Steinberg, fût finie ici le 30 Decembre, et se terminoit par le compte que j’avois l’honneur de rendre à votre Majesté du projet de Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick pour commencer, le plutôt possible, les négociations à Berlin et à Vienne; et l’autre, partie par estaffette pour Cuxhaven sous couvert de M. le Comte de Wallmoden, renfermoit des informations de s’a[ltesse] s[érénissime] d'après lesquelles, malgré les assurances flatteuses du Directoire à Berlin, loin d'y être tranquille, on songe à la frontière ; ce qui devoit amener ici hier s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], qui arriva en effet, et me fit l'honneur de m'envoyer chercher sur le soir. Je dois y aller ce soir encore, si rien ne s'y oppose par les occupations de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime]. Mais comme c'est jour de courrier, et que je pourrais manquer de temps au retour, je crois devoir rendre compte à l'avance à votre Majesté de ce qui fit les objets de ce nouvel entretien.

“ S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] me demanda d'abord si j'étois arrivé ici à temps pour avoir l'honneur d'informer votre Majesté par le dernier courrier de ses idées pour accélérer la négociation à Berlin, et la séconder à Vienne ; et de faire encore parvenir à Cuxhaven par estafette les informations de Berlin ; et lorsque j'eus informé s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] que tout avoit été exécuté, elle en témoigna beaucoup de satisfaction.

“ S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] me demanda encore si je m'étois entretenu avec M. de Steinberg, et s'il avoit été content à Berlin. J'eus l'honneur de lui répondre que le Roi lui-même avoit donné à M. de Steinberg les assurances les plus fortes qu'il ne permettroit rien contre la pays d'Hanovre ; et qu'il lui avoit témoigné la plus grande considération personnelle pour votre Majesté ; ce dont s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] témoigna encore beaucoup de satisfaction.

“ Ces dernières questions m'auroient paru étranges, vu que Monseigneur le Duc avoit été à Berlin avec M. de Steinberg, si je n'avois sçu par ce dernier que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] y avoit semblé éviter tout entretien particulier avec lui ; ce que je pus aisément lui expliquer d'après ses craintes ; mais comme ce ne peut être le cas ici, je crus devoir répéter à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ce que j'avois déjà eu l'honneur de lui dire à Brunswick, que votre Majesté a une confiance personnelle en M. de Steinberg, en conséquence de laquelle il est informé de ma mission et de ses suites.

“ Je venois de recevoir, par Londres, une lettre de mon frère, contenant le récit de quelques circonstances frappantes du passage de Buonaparte à Genève, dont j'ai lieu de croire que votre Majesté a été informée. J'eus l'honneur de lire cette lettre à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], et quand je vins à cette expression de B[uonapar]te au Syndic, la Ré[publique] Française voudroit être environnée de cinquante républiques comme la vôtre, je pris la liberté de rappeler à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] que c'étoit-là ce que j'avois toujours dit du plan, toujours existant, des François dans ces contrées pour pousser au loin les révolutions ; plan contre lequel tous les souverains doivent se réunir s'ils veulent empêcher leur perte ; de quoi s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] convint entièrement. Quand ensuite je vins à ces mots d'un des officiers : ‘ Toutes nos vues tendent maintenant à démocratiser l'Angleterre ; car si nous ne la démocratisons pas, elle nous donnera un roi, ’ s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] en fut frappée par le rapport de ce propos avec tout ce qu'on apprend du projet des François sur l'Angleterre, et de ses motifs ; mais sa première remarque ayant été qu'il faudroit informer les membres de l'Opposition de cette anecdote, pour qu'ils vissent ce qu'ils ont à craindre, je pris la liberté de répondre que je ne doutois pas qu'on ne vit cela en Angleterre ; mais que ce qu'il importoit étoit qu'on sentit bien dans ce pays-ci que la Prusse et tout le continent avoient un aussi grand intérêt que l'Angleterre à faire échouer ce projet. Je crois que s'a[Itesse] s[érénissime] en est maintenant aussi convaincue que moi, et j'espère que cela contribuera à le persuader à Berlin.

"Je viens de recevoir une invitation de s'a[Itesse] s[érénissime] de la rencontrer ce soir à 7 heures chez M. le Comte de Wallmoden ; et ce sera après cette conversation que j'aurai l'honneur de finir, ma lettre.

9 heures et quart.—"Je sors de chez M. le Comte de Wallmoden, et je n'ai que quelques momens pour que ma lettre parte, mais à moins que de n'entrer dans les détails de ce long entretien, l'essentiel peut se réduire à peu de mots ; d'autant plus que votre Majesté verra dans le rapport de M. le Comte de Wallmoden, qui ne pourra partir que par les ordonnances pour atteindre le courrier à Brême, que les intentions de la cour de Berlin, aidée par Monseigneur le Duc, sont très sérieuses pour la conservation de ligne de démarcation, ce qui à présent renferme tout.

"S'a[Itesse] s[érénissime] s'est prononcée sans aucune réserve pour le plan d'une résistance absolue. A cet égard, tout va bien à Berlin par les sentimens décidés du Roi que, jusqu'ici, les ministres n'entreprennent pas de traverser. Mais s'a[Itesse] s[érénissime] désire ardemment la prompte action directe, explicite, et de manière à persuader de la part de l'Angleterre, avec la perspective d'une possibilité de la grande union ; car les menées pour empêcher ce retour d'harmonie avec l'Angleterre sont de la plus grande activité, ce que s'a[Itesse] s[érénissime] sait bien, puisqu'on tâche de l'attirer ou de l'intimider elle-même. S'a[Itesse] s[érénissime] nous a récité nombre de traits très récents qui l'ont poursuivie jusqu'ici, et qui lui viennent de Berlin ; et elle craint que, si les négociations ne donnent bientôt un point d'appui, les efforts du parti à qui jusqu'ici ne résiste que la probité du Roi, et ce que s'a[Itesse] s[érénissime] peut faire pour le soutenir, ne produisent de grands maux. Aussi s'a[Itesse] s[érénissime] compte-t-elle les jours jusqu'au temps où je pourrai avoir quelque réponse qui la rassure, et elle m'a fait promettre de ne pas tarder à lui communiquer ce que je pourrai recevoir.

"Voilà tout ce que le temps me permet d'avoir l'honneur de dire à votre Majesté de cet entretien, mais c'est tout l'essentiel. Si j'apprends dans la suite des choses qui me paroisse devoir lui être communiquées, j'aurai l'honneur de le faire."

M. DE LUC to GEORGE III.

1798, January 10. Hanover.—"Dans le compte que j'eus l'honneur de rendre à votre Majesté, le courrier précédent, de la dernière conversation que Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick avoit désiré d'avoir avec moi chez M. le Comte de Wallmoden, je fus obligé, faute de temps, de supprimer les détails, pour que l'essentiel au moins parvint à votre Majesté le plutôt possible. Cependant comme ce sont les détails qui assurent le jugement, et que dans des choses de cette importance je dois m'abstenir le plus qu'il est possible de juger moi-même, je crois devoir revenir aujourd'hui à cet entretien, pour avoir l'honneur d'exposer à votre Majesté les circonstances qui me firent conclure que les dispositions sont favorables à Berlin, mais qu'il est essentiel qu'on y agisse bientôt positivement.

“ C'est en général d'après un changement de timidité en confiance chez s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], changement que je commençai d'apercevoir dans le dernier entretien que j'eus l'honneur d'avoir avec elle à Brunswick, et par moins de réserve sur les détails, que j'augure ce progrès qu'elle a fait à Berlin. J'ai déjà eu l'honneur de faire remarquer à votre Majesté (ou à my Lord Grenville) d'après quelque traits que, probablement, s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] s'étoit plus ouverte avec le Roi à Berlin sur ma mission auprès d'elle qu'elle ne vouloit l'exprimer ; maintenant il est sûr qu'elle est en correspondance avec le roi ; et même M. d'Haugwitz n'a pas été nommé dans les deux entretiens ici. M. le Comte de Wallmoden avoit envoyé à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] l'avis qu'un courrier François avoit passé à Brème, qu'il avoit vu là des gens d'un club, et étoit parti pour Hambourg. S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] dit dans la conversation qu'elle avoit envoyé cet avis au roi lui-même.

“ Tout l'objet de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] en désirant ce dernier entretien avec moi, avoit été de me faire sentir le besoin pressant qu'il y eût bientôt de la part de l'Angleterre à Berlin, non seulement des propositions officielles précises, mais quelqu'un qui pût à tout moment garantir le Roi des pièges qu'on lui tendoit, en se conciliant sa confiance, et s'entretenant avec lui dans le particulier. Aujourd'hui (nous dit-il) tous les efforts se tournent à empêcher la réunion de la Prusse avec l'Angleterre, et à entretenir la jalousie et le mécontentement contre l'Autriche. On tient ouvertement dans la chambre du Roi, de manière à en être entendu, mille propos dirigés vers ces vues, et, en général, vers le plan de se tenir tranquille, sans se mêler des affaires d'autrui. ‘Qu'importeroit (dit l'un) que les François eussent Hambourg ? Ne seroit-ci pas même le bien de la Prusse ? Puisque les vaisseaux Anglois iroient alors dans les ports de la Baltique, et que leurs marchandises traverseroient notre pays ! Voila, dit s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] comment quelques uns travaillent à produire l'indifférence pour le plus grand objet présent, ce qui est fortifié par ceux qui cherchent à la produire pour l'Angleterre même, ou à montrer du danger à se lier avec elle !

“ “ Que nous importent (disent les uns) la cause de Pitt ? C'est lui qui expose l'Angleterre ; car les François ne feront jamais la paix avec lui ni son parti. ’ D'autres, plus dangereux, insinuent ‘que l'Angleterre ne pourra jamais soutenir cette guerre ;

qu'elle est dans un état forcé pour les finances; que les révoltes des matelots, que l'accroissement de dépense occasionné par ces insurrections, et les craintes de celles de l'armée, sont un fardeau qu'elle ne pourra soutenir; qu'ainsi non seulement on ne pourroit en attendre des subsides, mais qu'elle pourroit bien, en succombant, entraîner ceux qui s'y lieroient.'—'Au fond (ajoutent d'autres) c'est une querelle à qui nous vendra le sucre, le café, le thé, les mousselines; et Frédéric le grand disoit fort bien, qu'importe à la Prusse que ce soit la France ou l'Angleterre? Quant à leurs manufactures, il y aura toujours bien quelque port ouvert pour elles, quand ce ne seroit pas Hambourg.'

“A l'égard de la situation générale des affaires, dit s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], beaucoup de ceux qui accusent l'ancien règne ne sont pas les moins à craindre; parcequ'ils tendent à disculper le présent règne de ce qui peut en résulter. Ils ne feignent dont point de dire; qu'il est honteux d'avoir abandonné la Hollande, et d'avoir fait la paix de Bâle qui a entraîné celle d'Udine; mais c'est pour ajouter: Il est bien malheureux sans doute qu'on ait laissé prendre un tel empire aux François, mais il n'y a point de remède; ce seront eux qui disposeront de tout; et dans le partage, la prépondérance de l'Autriche s'augmentera au double de tout ce que la Prusse ne voudra pas recevoir. C'est donc sur cela qu'il faut avoir l'oeil, et ne pas s'exposer, pour empêcher ce partage, à une guerre ruineuse qui n'aboutiroit à rien.

“C'est ainsi, continua s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], que bien des entours du roi cherchent à le décourager, à l'intimider, à lui donner des doutes sur l'Angleterre, des craintes de l'Autriche, de fausses idées de l'état présent de la société, qui pourtant aujourd'hui devroit être le guide des souverains; et l'on n'apperçoit pas que rien contrebalance ces menées. Le roi, certainement, est bien disposé, mais il est jeune, et sans préservatifs contre ces discours insidieux, et les conseils d'une prétendue prudence, appuyée de l'apparence du bien de ses peuples; il faudroit quelqu'un dans son intimité, qui pût lui faire bien connoître l'état de l'Europe et ses causes; lui montrer les grandes bases de la conduite qu'il doit tenir pour sa conservation et cela de ses états; et être prêt à lui faire appercevoir les pièges qu'on lui tend par ces raisonnemens spécieux. Alors je crois, continua s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], qu'il ne laisseroit rien à désirer de sa part. Je ne puis influer que de loin, ajouta-t-elle; on a bien apperçu que j'y travaillois; et le Prince Henry me dit avant mon départ; 'Vous n'avez pas besoin de vous donner du mouvement pour que le roi n'accepte pas les partages; il croit que cela seroit contraire à l'honnêteté, mais vous devriez penser plus solidement, et céder aux circonstances. Quel tort vous feroit-on quand on vous agrandiroit? Mais prenez garde surtout de devenir un objet d'ombrage aux François!'

“S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] s'expliqua encore sur un point qui avoit paru, au moins, une grande foiblesse. Celui qui le représente à Rastadt, un Professeur de Droit à Helmstedt nommé Habermine, est un jacobin déclaré, dont, par conséquent, la nomination a surpris tout le monde, et M. de Stamford en particulier. Il y a eu probablement dans ce choix un sentiment de crainte ; cependant il arrive que par là le Duc apperçoit les vues des députés François, et leurs menées, par celles qu'on cherche à faire auprès de lui. Le jour même s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] avoit reçu ici une dépêche de cet envoyé, portant en substance ; 'qu'elle se roidissoit peut-être trop contre les avantages qu'on pourroit lui offrir ; qu'on ne pouvoit plus empêcher que l'Empire ne fût démembré ; et qu'il valloit mieux avoir pour amis que pour ennemis ceux qui avoient le pouvoir de faire les partages ; puis-que la Prusse, quand elle le voudroit, ne pourroit l'empêcher.'

“ Je répondrai (dit s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] avec un vif sentiment d'indignation) comme une telle insinuation le mérite ; mais je dois (me dit-elle) vous instruire de tout, afin que le Roi d'Angleterre et ses ministres soient bien informés de ce qui se trame. Les embûches sont tendues partout ; le Roi de Prusse veut s'en garantir, mais il a besoin d'avis continuels ; il veut être juste, mais il faut qu'il croie le pouvoir. Il y a longtemps qu'on travaille à Berlin contre l'Angleterre ; les préjugés de disconvenance et de défiance sont profondément enracinés. Le Roi, heureusement, a une très grande estime personnelle pour sa Majesté Britannique ; et ainsi une personne qui auroit mérité la confiance de ce monarque ; qui pourroit lui en parler comme ayant eu le bonheur de l'approcher depuis longtemps ; qui connoitroit bien les effets nécessaires de la constitution de l'Angleterre, quelle doit être sa politique, de quelle influence elle peut être pour la sûreté des états du Continent contre ce qui les menace tous, auroit une grande influence sur lui. C'est par là, aussi, qu'on donneroit le plus de confiance dans les vues relatives à la Russie ; parceque le Roi comprendroit alors que, par l'entremise sincère de l'Angleterre, elle peut devenir une puissance conservatrice en faisant au besoin contrepoids à l'Autriche ; tandis que par son concours et celui de l'Angleterre, l'Autriche elle-même pourroit acquérir assez d'assurance pour songer à se garantir contre ceux dont elle cherchoit à se faire un appui.

“ Ce fut après une conversation de près de deux heures, roulant sur les mêmes objets, et toujours mêlée de quelques traits où l'on pénétoit que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] prend soin d'entretenir le jeune monarque dans ses dispositions, qu'elle témoigna une grande impatience d'apprendre ce que votre Majesté auroit jugé de sa proposition, soit pour ce qui me regarde, soit en général pour la prompte ouverture des négociations à Berlin et à Vienne ; et qu'elle me fit même promettre de lui communiquer ce qui, dans les premières lettres que je recevrois, pourroit faire augurer le succès de celle que j'eus l'honneur d'adresser à votre Majesté le 30<sup>me</sup> Decembre ; et c'est d'après tout cela que je présume que le Roi de Prusse a connoissance de ces démarches du Duc, et y prend intérêt.

“ Une circonstance que je ne dois pas omettre, quoique votre Majesté puisse en être informée, c'est que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] nous dit qu'on préparoit le rassemblement de trois corps, chacun de 20,000 hommes, près de Magdebourg, et de Berlin, et en Silésie.

“Après avoir été si long sur les affaires provisionnelles, je ne dois dire que peu de mots sur ce qui me regarde personnellement, et ce sera pour témoigner à votre Majesté ma profonde reconnaissance de ce que, par la nature de ses ordres, dès que sous les auspices de M. de Steinberg j’ai eu l’honneur de voir M. d’Harnswald, l’objet de mon professorat a été arrangé à mon entière satisfaction, tel qu’il sera mis sous les yeux de votre Majesté.”

COUNT STARHENBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, January 11. York Farm.—“Jamais rien ne m’a autant conté à écrire que la lettre officielle que j’ai l’honneur de vous joindre ici ; j’ai néanmoins préféré ce mode de communication à tout autre, car, en vérité, je n’aurois pas pû prendre sur moi de m’acquitter de ce message désagréable en personne. Vous connoissez trop bien mon cœur et mes sentimens pour ne pas juger de tout ce que je souffre.

“Les nouvelles que j’ai reçu d’un homme à Rastatt qui m’est dévoué sont fâcheuses. Il paroît que tout en prononçant encore avec une emphase bien déplacée le mot d’intégrité de l’Empire Germanique, on va travailler à le morceler. Les François insistent sur la barrière du Rhin, et par conséquent, Mayence et Ehrenbreitstein, les deux clefs de l’Allemagne, leur seront cédées.

“On s’occupera ensuite des moyens de dédommager les perdans par des sécularisations qui ne sont pas décidées, mais sur lesquelles l’accord de Vienne, Berlin, et Paris doit prononcer. A quel excès d’humiliation le ciel nous a-t-il réduit pour nous voir associer aux Prussiens et aux Jacobins. Je sais à n’en pas douter que la Cour de Berlin joue son rôle ordinaire, et se prépare de nouveau à nous duper tous, à commencer par nous-mêmes qui sommes, je crois, tombés encore une fois dans ces filets. Elle nous exhorte sous main pour avoir sa part du gâteau, au pillage qu’on prépare, et joue en attendant le rôle de protectrice de l’empire, vis-a-vis de ceux qui se contentent de belles paroles.

“Vous savez sans doute que les François ont fait nouvellement à Hambourg et à Lubeck les protestations les plus solennelles qu’ils respecteraient la ligne de neutralité, et qu’ils n’avoient aucun projet sur le païs d’Hannovre. Puissent ces promesses ne pas ressembler à toutes les conventions que nous avons vû signer et violer presque dans le même tems. Adieu ; conservez-moi amitié et bonté. Plaignez-moi aussi. Je mérite ce sentiment dans la circonstance, et quoique je ne sais pas un Annibal, ni les François des Romains, recevez le serment que je fais solennellement dans vos mains, de leur faire toute ma vie le plus de mal qui dépendra de moi. Le serment de haine à la république est aussi méritoire que celui de haine à la royauté est atroce.” French.

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT STARHEMBERG.

Private.

1798, January 12. Cleveland Row.—“ Il m'est facile à croire combien il a dû coûter à un honnête homme de se voir chargé d'une commission comme celle dont vous venez de vous acquitter. Encore si c'était là la fin des disgrâces et des perfidies. Mais il s'en faut bien, et si je ne me trompe fort, vous vous verrez encore dans quelques jours d'ici chargé de faire valoir toutes les belles raisons qu'un swindler peut imaginer pour ne pas payer l'argent qu'il a friponné. Dans quel siècle nous vivons ! On se le répète tous les jours, et chaque fois on a de nouvelles raisons pour le dire. Après tout, je trouve que, dans la distribution des rôles, celui qui nous tombe en partage est le moins pénible à remplir ; et si ce sont des Romains que nous avons à combattre, je rends grâces aux Dieux de n'être pas Romain.

“ Comptez, je vous prie, sur mon attachement personnel, qui ne dépend pas des liaisons politiques, mais de l'estime que j'ai vouée au comte de Starhemberg.” Copy. French.

CHARLES M. WARBURTON to [the MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM].

1798, January 12. Loughgilly.—“ During my whole residence in this country, I have not known the North so perfectly tranquil as at this moment. The motive (I fear) is not conviction of error. The failure of their premature efforts last year has taught them more caution. The cunning northern is now silently enjoying the flame that has broken out in the south, and fondly hopes the grand object will be effected in that quarter. But, be the motive what it may, tranquillity is a happy circumstance for the rector of Loughgilly, as I am the only resident (and have been so for the last 18 troublesome months) between Newry and Armagh, a district of 15 miles by 10. The few gentlemen of this neighbourhood unfortunately withdrew upon the first gathering of the storm. The moment was certainly alarming ; but I did not think myself justifiable in deserting the part in which Providence had placed me, whilst there remained any chance of stemming the torrent, or of saving my parishioners from delusion and ruin. And I had the heartfelt satisfaction of seeing that my labour was not in vain ; for, whilst the neighbouring districts exhibited a scene of turbulence and insurrection, and afterwards (perhaps unavoidably) that of desolation, not a cabin was burnt, nor a life lost in the parish of Loughgilly.

“ The enclosed Proclamation is a flattering proof of our peaceable conduct, but I am sorry to observe that it is the only instance of the kind that has yet taken place in the whole kingdom ; and which, I have no scruple in telling your Lordship, is highly attributable to the shameful (and at this time) criminal neglect and non-residence of the clergy and gentry. Only look about and observe the number of Irish bishops now in England ! What can be expected from the inferior clergy when thus deserted by their guides. The consequence is, what might be expected, that the generality of the beneficed clergy have betaken themselves to Dublin, to Bath, to London, leaving their flocks to the certain seduction of revolutionary agents, who sleep not. And if a miserable curate be upon the spot, as the representative of an absent rector, the very station of this man is craftily turned by the Republican into a proof (convincing enough to the multitude) that our whole Establishment is burthensome and unnecessary, and therefore ought to be overset! These, I do assure you, are not the fancies of a frightened imagination, they are arguments now to be met with in every corner of the country, and in the mouth of every peasant; to counteract the evil effects of which (I do humbly think) that Government should (without delay) compel the residence of every description of our clergy. There may naturally be some delicacy felt in ordering the heads of our Church to do their duty, but surely this is not a time for ceremony. My constant residence, my anxious observation, and my knowledge of the people, fully convince my mind that the absence of our clergy from their respective charges creates disaffection, and is, at this moment, the strongest engine in the hands of our revolutionists to pull down the whole fabric of Church and State.

“Upon the whole, I am honestly and humbly of opinion that every minister of our Church is bound, not only by conscience but by other solemn obligations, to use his best endeavours for its defence. These endeavours are nothing more than residence, example, moderation and benevolence; and, with these universally practised, I am convinced by the best argument, experience, that the tide of prejudice against the episcopal establishment might not only be turned, but the preservation and connexion of Church and State highly strengthened and secured.

“From long and perfect knowledge of your Lordship’s earnest wish for the welfare of our ecclesiastical establishment, the foregoing circumstances are humbly and respectfully submitted to your consideration, with the hope of their being communicated to that quarter from which an adequate remedy for the evils hinted at can be expected; or by which any remedy (at this moment) can effectually be applied; and in such application, not an hour is to be lost.”

LORD GRENVILLE to M. DE LUC.

1798, January 14. London.—“J’ai bien reçu vos différentes lettres du 12 et 21 du mois passé, et j’ai lu avec le plus grand intérêt les détails importants qu’elles renferment. L’espèce d’ouverture de la part du gouvernement Prussien que Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick a eu l’obligeante bonté de me faire parvenir par votre canal a dû surtout engager mon attention particulière. Cette pièce ne répond que très imparfaitement aux espérances que les circonstances du moment auroient pu autoriser, et il est surtout à remarquer combien les vues qu’on y trouve sont partielles et bornées, pendant que la crise actuelle exigeroit un plan général de la plus grande étendue, et capable d'embrasser tous les intérêts de l'Europe. Dans la réponse ci-jointe, que je vous prie de vouloir bien communiquer à Monseigneur le Duc, j'ai tâché de tirer parti de tout ce que le mémoire de M. de Haugwitz offre d'avantageux pour la cause commune, tout en laissant entrevoir la nécessité de songer d'abord, et sans délai, aux seules mesures qui pourroient encore sauver l'Europe. Si l'on ne parvient qu'à écarter pour le moment le danger d'une attaque contre le nord de l'Allemagne on aura toujours gagné du tems ; mais à moins de mettre ce tems à profit pour s'entendre, et se réunir, le mal ne sera que suspendu, et les mêmes effets seront toujours à craindre.

“ Je me persuade que les mesures générales que je propose au Cabinet de Berlin ne pourront manquer de rencontrer l'approbation éclairée du Duc de Brunswick ; et j'ose me flatter, qu'en faisant parvenir cette piece à M. de Haugwitz, s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] voudra bien l'appuyer du témoignage de son opinion, dont le poids doit être si grand auprès de sa m[ajesté] Prussienne.

“ Le roi auroit, sans doute, souhaité que les circonstances eussent permis à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] de seconder ces plans par sa présence à Potsdam. Mais si cela ne se peut pas, sa m[ajesté] voit tout l'avantage que cette cause importante retireroit du voyage de M. de Stamford, dont vous me parlez dans votre dernière lettre, et elle vous charge en conséquence d'insister fortement auprès de M. de St[amfort] pour qu'il se rende à Berlin dans le moindre délai possible, pour y travailler sur le plan tracé dans les différens mémoires de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], et dans celui que je vous envoie aujourd'hui.

“ Il s'agiroit, 1<sup>mo</sup>, de maintenir la cour de Berlin dans la résolution qu'elle annonce de défendre à tout risque le nord de l'Allemagne, et les embouchures des fleuves, contre toute entreprise hostile des François.

2<sup>de</sup>. “ De rassurer le Roi de Prusse contre les dangers qu'on n'aura pas manqué de lui faire voir dans cette résolution ; et d'appuyer sur l'assurance provisionnelle que j'ai été autorisé de donner, d'un secours pécuniaire, au cas que ces mesures ameneroient la guerre avec les François.

3. “ De tacher par tous les moyens possibles de faire sentir la nécessité d'un rapprochement sincère et solide avec la cour de Vienne ; entreprise qui ne laisse pas d'être d'une exécution extrêmement difficile, surtout au moment où les bases de la pacification de l'Empire, arrêtées entre l'Autriche et la France, vont occasioner mille sujets nouveaux de jalousie et de contestation entre la première de ces puissances et la Prusse.

4<sup>o</sup>. “ Un point non moins important c'est de s'assurer de la co-opération de le Russie. Les tentatives du roi pour exciter la cour de Petersbourg à des mesures plus actives ont été toujours infructueuses. On ne peut plus espérer d'induire cette cour à se mettre en avant comme premier moteur d'un plan de résistance au progrès des François et de réunion entre les Grandes Puissances. Mais, une fois assurée de la bonne volonté de la Prusse, il y a lieu de croire qu'elle s'y prêteroit sans hésiter ; soit par des engagemens formels et ostensibles, ou, au moins, en influant sur le Cabinet de Vienne, et en garantissant la Prusse contre toute attaque de la part des Autrichiens—crainte que les mouvemens actuels des troupes de l'Empereur François paroissent autorizer.

“ Pour poursuivre tous ces objets à Berlin rien ne seroit plus important que de se prévaloir du zèle, et des moyens que M. de Stamford auroit pour se faire écouter. Il seroit aussi à désirer que vous puissiez le suivre ou l'accompagner dans ce voyage, afin de maintenir les communications. Peut-être que dans la suite, si ce plan réussissoit à Berlin, M. de St[amfort] pourroit être engagé à entreprendre le voyage de Vienne.

“ Je crois avoir épuisé l'objet de cette lettre. J'en écris en détail au Ministre du Roi à Berlin, Lord Elgin, pour qu'il puisse aider de ses lumières et de ses talents à l'exécution de ces mesures, mais sans paroître instruit du contenu du mémoire que vous m'avez envoyé. J'attendrai avec impatience vos lettres ultérieures.” Holograph copy.

Enclosure.

Reply by LORD GRENVILLE to the Mémoire of COUNT HAUGWITZ.

“ Désirant de rénouer ses liaisons avec la Prusse, l'Angleterre ne cherche nullement d'entraîner cette puissance dans des mesures offensives contre la France. Elle a encore moins l'intention de revenir sur les événemens passés, ou de retarder par des discussions, aujourd'hui très inutiles, le rapprochement qu'elle désire. L'Europe dans sa crise actuelle ne peut être sauvée que par une réunion des Grandes Puissances, qui auroit pour objet le rétablissement de la paix générale, et ensuite le maintien de la tranquillité commune, et la garantie des possessions et des gouvernemens respectifs. Tant que la guerre existera partiellement, les intérêts seront divisés ; tant qu'un concert général ne sera pas établi pour le maintien de la paix, rien ne pourra arrêter les desseins d'un gouvernement qui domine par la désunion.

“ C'est à la Prusse de juger combien il seroit de son intérêt de contribuer, dans cette vue, à poser les bases d'une paix qui conserveroit à l'Angleterre sa puissance maritime, seul contrepoids à celle des François, et la source principale des moyens qu'elle auroit dans la suite pour soutenir ses alliés. Cet objet ne peut être indifférent à toute puissance intéressée à s'opposer aux progrès des principes et des armes Françaises. Sans vouloir cependant appuyer plus particulièrement sur ces points, il suffit de dire que les moyens qu'on proposeroit pour y parvenir ne seroient pas, par préférence, celles de reprendre l'offensif contre les François, à moins d'une nouvelle attaque de leur part.

“ Ce ne seroit pas là non plus le meilleur moyen de pourvoir à l'objet bien plus limité (mais cependant très nécessaire aux intérêts de la Prusse aussi bien que de l'Angleterre) celui de défendre pour le moment le nord de l'Allemagne, et de protéger les débouchés des fleuves qui transportent, réciproquement, les articles du produit et de la consommation de ces pays. Une politique saine et vigoureuse, un langage ferme et décidé, des préparatifs bien suivis, et des explications franches et confidentielles avec les autres puissances du Continent y contribueroient, sans doute, mieux que des mesures offensives, adoptées à la hâte, et sans les préliminaires que la sagesse indiquerait.

“ L'Angleterre et la Prusse se concertant ensemble, et établissant (si la chose est encore possible) une intelligence réelle et sincère avec les deux autres Grandes Cours, on se mettroit tous les quatre en état de présenter à la France d'une manière imposante les bases de la tranquillité future de l'Europe, fondée sur les arrangemens quelconques qui termineront les discussions actuelles. Au contraire, en se tenant en réserve et en méfiance, les uns avec les autres, on s'expose à être toujours séparément attaqué, l'Angleterre dans sa puissance maritime, et les monarchies continentales dans toutes les occasions de dispute que les entreprises sans cesse rénaissantes d'un Gouvernement qui vise à tout bouleverser, amèneront à chaque instant. Il paroît donc que ce doit être là l'objet principal de l'attention de tous les Cabinets.

“ Si dans l'intervalle le Gouvernement hardi et remuant qui domine aujourd'hui en France, pour prévenir ces mesures, et pour empêcher la réunion projetée, porte ses armes contre le nord de l'Allemagne, il faut sans doute que la Prusse combatte alors pour son existence; il importe à sa sûreté aussi bien qu'à son honneur que, sans s'arrêter aux assurances perfides de l'ennemi, elle protège les états qui l'avoisinent, comme seul moyen de sa propre défense. Dans ce cas-là elle se trouveroit encore de toute nécessité en guerre avec la France; et l'Angleterre, qui seroit bien loin de vouloir lui offrir des subsides pour amener les choses à ce point, seroit cependant très disposée, dès quelles y seroient arrivées, à s'entendre sur les moyens d'agir de concert, et de s'entr'aider réciproquement. Le gouvernement Anglois trouveroit dans ces circonstances et le motif et les moyens de fournir des secours pécuniaires, proportionnés à l'étendue des efforts que la Prusse déploieroit dans cette nouvelle lutte, et aux sûretés que l'on pourroit se donner, de part et d'autre, pour ne pas se voir abandonné dans les suites, et pour ne conclure aucun accommodement avec l'ennemi que de l'accord commun de toutes les Puissances qui seroient entrées dans ces engagements.

“ Sur tous ces points l'intérêt commun et pressant amèneroit facilement les arrangemens de convenance mutuelle. Mais pour pouvoir profiter d'une pareille union, rien n'est plus important que de se mettre dès à présent dans un état de défense la plus respectable. C'est là le vrai moyen d'écarter le danger de loin, le seul d'y parer s'il arrive. Il n'y a pas non plus un instant à perdre pour s'assurer provisoirement du secours de la Russie, qui n'est guères moins intéressée que l'Angleterre et la Prusse à protéger le nord de l'Allemagne; et le danger seroit déjà surmonté si on pouvoit également en faire sentir l'étendue et les conséquences à la cour de Vienne, en l'invitant à se joindre à l'alliance projetée, et à concourir aux mesures à prendre pour la sûreté commune de toute l'Europe.

"C'est dans ce sens qui sont déjà rédigées toutes les instructions des ministres Anglois aux différentes cours, dont il est question dans ce mémoire." Holograph copy.

COUNT STARHENBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, January 20. York Farm.—" Quoiqu'il soit un peu long de détailler par écrit l'objet dont j'ai eu l'honneur de vous parler l'autre jour, j'y entrevois assez d'importance, et la possibilité d'une utilité future assez majeure, pour me résoudre à vous en ennuyer pendant quelque pages. Armez-vous de votre patience ordinaire et daignez me lire avec attention. Il me paroît que dans la circonstance présent ce qui doit être le plus intéressant est d'être parfaitement au fait de tout ce qui se passe en France, du caractère des différens gouvernans, des événemens qui se préparent pour pouvoir en profiter, et d'être prévenu de mesures hostiles avant qu'elles soient mises à exécution, afin de les déjouer à tems. Il est également important de se trouver en relation avec une personne qui veut le bien, et qui a les moyens, par des espèces de liaison de société, de rencontrer habituellement les principaux personnages du gouvernement Français, qui les connaît à fond, qui peut les sonder sans leur être suspecte, et qui a la tête assez froide et l'esprit assez juste pour ne point s'aventurer, mais porter des jugemens sains et non exagérés.

" Pour rencontrer tous ces avantages, il falloit les chercher dans la bonne compagnie ; tout être subalterne ou sorti de la nouvelle caste Française m'eût été suspect, aussi que tout mercenaire, toujours du plus au moins vendu au plus offrant. Il eût été également impossible de se servir d'un homme, puisque sa qualité même de noble auroit fixé sur lui les regards et les recherches vigilantes du gouvernement Français, qui auroit bientôt paralysé ses services, s'il ne les avait pas puni d'un châtimement exemplaire. Le meilleur agent m'a toujours semblé devoir être une femme sensée et honnête, plus assez jeune pour être emportée par les passions, et assez agée pour être inactive. Il falloit qu'elle fut noble et royaliste pour que notre cause fut la sienne ; il était nécessaire qu'elle n'eût pas quitté la France pendant la révolution, pour être au fait de toute son histoire, en avoir suivi toutes les périodes, et en posséder tous les ressorts. Il était, en outre, à désirer qu'elle ne fut pas dans le besoin pour qu'elle ne servit pas pour exister, ce qui est toujours dangereux. Quelque désir que j'eusse de procurer au gouvernement que j'aime et révere un instrument aussi utile, je n'osois pas y songer, ni même m'en occuper, quoique j'eusse à cet égard plus de données qu'un autre par le long séjour que j'ai fait en France, où je suis né et élevé, et par toutes les relations que j'y ai eu, mais le hasard m'ayant fait tomber sur ce que je ne cherchais pas, je croirais manquer à ce que je dois à la bonne cause, si je ne vous prévenois pas du parti que vous pouvez tirer de Madame de Rochechouart.

“ Agée d’au-delà de 40 ans, elle est restée en France et même à Paris pendant toute la révolution. Elle a été emprisonnée du tems de Robespierre, et n’a échappé à la guillotine que par une méprise qui a fait périr une autre personne à sa place. Elle s’est sauvé en Suisse pendant quelques semaines, et y a vécu momentanément du travail de ses mains. Revenu ensuite en France, elle a fait vivre des débris de sa fortune ses enfans, ses parens, et son mari. Elle n’est venu ici que pour y placer quelques fonds. Vivant au milieu de Paris, elle rencontre tous les jours dans le monde et dans les sociétés, des hommes de tout état, de tout principe, et de toute religion. Elle y professe hautement le royalisme, et n’est suspecte à aucun parti, parcequ’elle est femme, laide, agée, et qu’elle n’a besoin de rien.

“ Je connaissais depuis longtems l’esprit, et la bonne tête de la Comtesse Rochechouart. Elle a donné à l’infortunée reine des preuves du plus grand attachement, et sans un incident aussi malheureux qu’impossible à prévoir, elle serait parvenue à la sauver du Temple.

“ Hébert était déjà gagné. M. de Mercy était, je crois, au fait de ce projet.

“ Madame de Rochechouart, après avoir passé quelques semaines à Londrès sans que je susse qu’elle y fut, est venu voir Madame de Starhemberg à la campagne, et prête à retourner en France dans quelques jours, s’est adressé à moi pour avoir un passeport. C’est après quelques conversations assez longues avec elle, sur les événements du jour, sur la manière dont elle les connaît et les juge, et sur le parti que je vois qu’elle saurait en tirer, que l’idée m’est venue de tenter de lui demander si elle ne voudrait pas employer ses talents à rendre service aux ennemis de ceux qui sont nécessairement les siens. J’ai eu beaucoup de peine à la déterminer ; mais j’ai enfin obtenu sa parole de s’y prêter, au cas que le gouvernement Anglais le voulut. Elle m’a fait promettre de n’en parler qu’à vous, et à M. Windham ; et au cas qu’on se serve d’elle, elle ne veut avoir à faire qu’à nous trois, et craint surtout les subalternes de toute espèce. Elle m’a prié en outre de ne vous la nommer, que si vous vous sentiez disposé à agréer ses services. J’ai commencé par lui établir quelques points de question sur lesquelles j’ai demandé qu’elle me donnât ses réponses ad marginem, et que je vous soumettrai dès qu’elle me les renverra. Ce sera alors à vous à décider dans votre sagesse ce que vous jugerez à propos, et à vous servir de mon intervention si vous la jugez convenable, ou à traiter directement avec elle. Dans le premier cas, la probité m’engagerait à vous servir sur ce point avec zèle et fidélité ; et votre secret n’étant pas le mien, ne serait, comme de raison, connu de ma Cour qu’autant que vous l’ordonneriez expressément. J’ose dire, de vous à moi, qu’il serait essentiel que tout le monde l’ignorât, et principalement notre Cabinet.

“ Il me semble qu’indépendamment des notions certaines de pure information qu’on pourrait obtenir par ce canal, il serait d’une grande importance pour le Cabinet Anglais de parvenir à se procurer promptement une paix honorable et profitable, ou à faire rompre par les François mêmes la paix avec l'Empereur, pour obtenir par ce moyen une diversion puissante.

“Madame de Rochechouart a l'air de ne pas douter que l'on pourrait parvenir à la réalisation de l'un ou l'autre de ces objets, mais surtout à la paix. Bonaparte et Barras sont actuellement les plus forts, et le premier désire particulièrement la paix avec l'Angleterre; mais si l'on perd du tems, leur influence dominante pourrait diminuer, surtout à l'approche de la retraite de Barras de la Présidence, et peut-être bientôt après du Directoriat.

“Elle soutient, en outre, que les idées et les plans de Bonaparte ne sont pas encore arrêtés. Il s'agirait peut-être seulement de les fixer, pour en obtenir ce qu'on désirerait. Plus il viserait haut et plus nous y gagnerions; la suprême autorité même en France ne serait que hâter sa chute, et rammener le successeur légitime.

“Pardonnez tout ce radotage à un homme dévoré du désir du bien, indigné des bassesses et infamies qui se commettent partout, et attaché de cœur, d'ame, et d'affection à un pays qu'il a choisi pour sa seconde patrie. Mon dévouement à l'Angleterre diffère un peu de celui du Napolitain Gallo à l'Autriche, quoique, pour la première fois de ma vie, j'ai prononcé le mot de paix avec la France. Permettez après tout cela que je vous fasse hommage d'une estampe que je viens de faire graver ici, et qui est bien intéressante sous tous les rapports pour un Anglo-Autrichien tel que moi. Elle représente la vue de la tour où Richard Cœur de Lion a été enfermé par l'Archiduc d'Autriche Leopold, à son retour de la croisade. Le bourg et la terre de Diernstein le long du Danube, à environ 14 lieues de Vienne, où se trouve ce monument historique encore très bien conservé, appartient à mon père. J'en ai fait prendre les dimensions et la vue pour faire exécuter l'estampe qu'on vient d'achever, et dont j'aurai l'honneur de vous envoyer demain une des premières épreuves. J'en joindrai une seconde pour le cas que vous ne jugiez pas hors de propos de la présenter de ma part au Roi, n'osant pas prendre moi-même cette liberté.” French.

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

Secret intelligence from France.

1798, January 26.—“Madame la Comtesse de Rochechouart immédiatement après son arrivée en France, où ses affaires et ses intérêts personnels la rappellent, s'occupera du sens des questions ci-jointes qu'elle a signé, et dès qu'elle pourra donner quelque information essentielle sur la plus grande partie de son contenu, ou sur un autre objet important de la même nature, elle expédiera un exprès à M. de Starhemberg, qui saura son arrivée à Douvres dès qu'il lui fera demander un passeport. La nature des notions qu'il recevra par cet exprès, des moyens, des manières, et des prix, déterminera alors les résolutions des ministres. Il n'y a dans le secret que Lord Grenville, Monsieur Pitt, M. Windham, et M. de Starhemberg.” Duvey de Rochechouart.

QUESTIONS.

1<sup>o</sup>. “Quels sont les projets futurs de Bonaparte et à quoi pourrait-on les porter ?

2<sup>o</sup>. “Est-il l'homme puissant qui déterminera définitivement les résolutions du gouvernement François ?

3<sup>o</sup>. “Quelles sont ces idées sur la paix avec l'Angleterre ; et quelles seroient les personnes et les moyens à employer pour amener aussi promptement que secrètement une paix honorable et profitable à la Grande Bretagne ?

4<sup>o</sup>. “Comment et à quel prix pourroit-on gagner le commandant des François en Hollande, au point de pouvoir le déterminer à livrer les places fortes ?

5<sup>o</sup>. “Pourroit-on avoir des renseignements certains sur le caractère et les dispositions individuelles des gouvernans de toute classe en France, et sur les moyens de les gagner ; ainsi que sur l'aperçu approchant de ce qu'il en coûterait pour y parvenir ?

6<sup>o</sup>. “Quelles seroient les mesures à prendre pour être continuellement au fait des projets du Directoire, et pour pouvoir être prévenu assez à tems quand ils sont hostiles, pour pouvoir les déjouer ?

7<sup>o</sup>. “Pourroit-on, au moyen de cette nouvelle correspondance qu'on auroit en France, parvenir à connaître quelles sont les personnes et les instruments, sans doute très multipliés, que l'ennemi sait employer en Angleterre-même ?

8<sup>o</sup>. “Quelle seroit la marche à suivre dans notre correspondance ?
“Duvey de Rochechouart.”

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, January 27. Hanover.—“La lettre de votre Excellence [du 14 de ce mois] a ramené tout ma sérénité, car, quoiqu'elle réponde seulement aux lettres que j'avois eu l'honneur de lui écrire de Brunswick les 12<sup>o</sup> et 21<sup>o</sup> decembre, elle est aussi précise, et le mémoire qu'elle accompagne aussi riche en idées conformes aux intentions de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], que si votre Excellence avoit déjà eu connoissance des nouveaux détails que j'avois eu l'honneur d'adresser d'ici au Roi le 30<sup>o</sup> decembre, et le 1 janvier, et qui devoient être alors à Windsor, rien, dis-je, ne pouvoit être plus directement dans les vues de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime]. Aussi, quoique au premier moment j'eusse l'idée d'attendre à Hanovre si sa Majesté ou votre Excellence ajouteroient, en conséquence de mes dernières lettres, de nouveaux détails à ces premières instructions, les relisant attentivement, m'arrêtant à l'idée que probablement my Lord Elgin seroit déjà iustruit par le même courrier qui me les a fait parvenir dans sa route, et considérant l'incertitude du sort de la malle du 15, je me déterminai à commencer des démarches.

“Afin donc de ne perdre aucun temps, j'envoyai dès hier par estaffette à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] un extrait de cette dépêche, et à M. de Stamford les instances de votre Excellence pour que, malgré ce que je ne sais que trop de sa mauvaise santé, il ne se refuse pas à l'importante fonction qu'elle lui destine. Je connois son zèle, et ce n'est pas de là que naît chez moi quelque doute de succès, vu la saison. J'annonçai en même temps à l'un et à l'autre, que je comptois être à Brunswick le 29<sup>e</sup>, prêt à suivre les directions de s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] pour me rendre à Berlin avec M. de Stamford (comme je l'espère encore) ou seul, s'il le falloit.

“ J'ai maintenant la plus grande sécurité à l'égard de s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] qui a sûrement fait plus qu'elle ne promettoit d'abord ; sans doute pour ne pas donner des espérances qu'elle n'étoit pas sûre de réaliser. Elle sondeit cependant le terrain auprès du jeune monarque, et il s'est trouvé si solide, que je n'ai aucun doute qu'il n'y ait aujourd'hui entr'eux une correspondance directe qui redresseroit M. de H[augwitz] s'il chancelloit. Aussi voit-on la plus grande vigilance de la part de ce Cabinet ; nulle confiance aux belles paroles, et une ferme résolution de déjouer tous les projets sinistres, de bien des sortes, de ce côté-ci ; ce que j'ai lieu de croire lié à l'assurance que j'ai osé donner d'une prompte négociation de la part de l'Angleterre ; mais qui, en même temps, rendoit s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] si impatiente de la voir réaliser.

“ Il faut que je prenne la liberté d'entretenir un moment votre Excellence du petit objet de la finance relativement à ma marche (dont le grand objet est exprimé dans son mémoire, d'une manière si propre à son but, et qui m'a donné à moi-même une grande consolation). Il n'en vaudroit pas la peine pour moi, car, avec la santé que Dieu m'accorde à mon âge, et mon habitude de simplicité, je n'aurois pas eu besoin de quelque temps d'en parler à votre Excellence, n'ayant eu besoin jusqu'ici que de 50*l*. Il est vrai que dans mes séjours j'ai vécu chez des amis, et qu'à la cour où j'ai été, on a eu pour moi beaucoup de bonté et d'indulgence ; ce qui n'aura pas lieu à Berlin ; mais j'aurois attendu d'avoir besoin d'un nouveau secours.

“ L'essentiel est donc M. de Stamford, s'il se détermine à partir avec moi. Il est accoutumé à plus d'aisance que moi, parceque depuis longtemps il a une mauvaise santé ; son état actuel demanderoit de grandes précautions, et par la chute de la Hollande, sa fortune est très réduite. Je dis cela de moi-même, par délicatesse pour lui ; car il n'en a jamais dit un mot, quand il s'est prêté aux idées que j'ai suggérées à son égard. J'espère que votre Excellence ne désapprouvera pas que, si nous nous mettons en route et séjournons ensemble, je sois le caissier ; que je fisse ensorte que ce digne homme fût confortablement, et que je tirasse sur Messrs. Drummond ce qui seroit nécessaire pour cela.

“ J'aurai le temps d'informer votre Excellence de ce qui seroit nécessaire à cet égard, parceque sur les 200*l* qu'elle a eu la bonté de faire mettre chez Messrs. Drummond, j'aurois de quoi commencer. J'aurai aussi l'honneur de l'informer régulièrement de tout ce qui pourra mériter son attention ; et quant aux nouveaux ordres qu'elle pourroit avoir à me donner, je crois que jusqu' à ce qu'elle apprenne mon départ pour Berlin, la voie la plus sûre sera sous le même couvert à Hanovre, parcequ'on y saura toujours ma marche."

Private.

LORD GRENVILLE to SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON.

1798, January 27. London.—"The return of Lord Berwick's servant did not allow of my answering your letter immediately on its receipt, and the circumstances of Italy oblige me now to send this letter round to Vienna, to wait the chance of an opportunity of forwarding it to Naples. I should be very glad to promote your wishes on the subject of your retreat if it were in my power to do so; but the state of the Civil List, and the necessary expences of the present circumstances are such that I could not venture to propose to His Majesty to grant you a pension so much beyond the usual proportion of the retreat of foreign ministers to their salary. In this state of things, which it does not depend on me to alter, I perfectly understand that it may, on many accounts, be more desirable for you to remain in your present situation than to accept of a much more reduced income at home; and I certainly can have no wish to make any change in the mission at Naples other than such as would be perfectly agreeable to you. I earnestly hope that the course of events may not in this, as in so many other instances, supersede all other arrangements which I considered as most fixed. But I own I see no safety to Naples in the present moment but submission, and no man can calculate the extent or the effects of that submission."

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, January 30. Brunswick.—"Arrivé ici depuis quelques heures (le 29) je commence une lettre pour votre Excellence parceque le courrier pour Hanovre, et ainsi pour Londres, part demain matin à midi; et qu'étant trop tard pour voir ce soir Monseigneur le Duc, ce sera sans doute demain matin, et peut-être trop tard, pour que j'aie ensuite le temps d'entrer dans des détails.

"Malgré la santé, toujours très foible, de M. le Général de Stamford, je l'ai trouvé déterminé, et il a déjà écrit à s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] le Prince Héréditaire d'Orange pour le prier de l'inviter à venir le voir dans le dessein de le consulter sur un instituteur pour son fils, et d'en prévenir le Roi. C'est-là une des ressources qu'il faut employer parfois pour que les bonnes intentions de Monseigneur le Duc ne soient pas rendues inutiles par sa circonspection. S' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] étoit retombée dans ses incertitudes, et n'auroit osé avouer M. de Stamford à cause d'un nuage qui s'étoit formé à Berlin, produit par le parti qui veut renouer la Prusse avec la France, même jusqu' à un traité d'alliance; et le Roi, malgré les bonnes dispositions de son cœur, ne participe que trop aux irrésolutions de celui qui devroit être son mentor. Mais heureusement ce parti vient d'être déjoué lui-même par les François; et dans ce moment, tandis que nous déplorions, M. de Stamford et moi, ce nouvel incident, il a reçu de s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] la note suivante. ' Mes lettres de Berlin, du 27, disent que le Roi a la rougeole, mais que les médecins ont les meilleures espérances. Elles ajoutent que la prise de possession des provinces Prussiennes sur la rive gauche du Rhin a beaucoup surpris; qu'elle est diamétralement contraire aux assurances du Directoire en date du 6 de ce mois, et que l'on reconnoit qu'il n'y a pas à se fier à eux, et qu'il n'y a à se fier qu'en ses propres forces. Viennent ensuite les lamentations sur le manque de moyens. Je crois que M. De Luc arrivera dans le moment favorable. Je ne me suis pas aperçu d'un plus haut degré de défiance contre la France que dans ce moment-ci.'

" Cette conclusion m'a frappé; et (sauf quelque idée contraire de s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime]) je me suis déterminé à ne point m'arrêter ici, mais à partir dès après demain (le 31<sup>e</sup>) pour Berlin. Je trouverai bien, j'espère, quelque moyen de parvenir au roi; et, avec l'approbation de sa Majesté de remettre moi-même le mémoire à M. de H[augwitz]; car il me semble qu'il est en lui-même une introduction suffisante, dès qu'aussitôt que quelque chose auroit commencé my Lord Elgin, à qui j'aurois l'honneur de mettre en mains ce fil, est muni des instructions nécessaires pour commencer la negociation. Quant à M. de Stamford, dès qu'il auroit la réponse du Pr[ince] H[éréditaire] d'Orange il se rendroit aussi à Berlin. Il me semble même qu'il vaudra mieux, qu'ainsi nous ne paroissions pas être de la même partie."

" En ce moment s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] nous fait dire qu'elle viendra ce soir vers les six heures."

COUNT STARHEMBERG TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, January 30.—" Madame de Rochechouart part demain matin pour Paris. Elle vient d'apprendre que son fils a péri dans le massacre qui a eu lieu dernièrement au caffè de Guerchi. L'esprit de vengeance maternelle se joint encore aux autres motifs que j'avais mis en usage pour mettre en jeu ses talens et son zèle, et nous assure plus que jamais ses services. Elle recommande le silence. Je lui ai promis qu'il n'y avait dans le secret des secrets que vous, Mr. Pitt, et moi. J'ai peur, de vous à moi, que M. Windham, à qui j'en avais parlé d'abord, n'ait commis une petite indiscretion, car on est venu parler à Madame de Rochechouart et lui faire des propositions de la part du Duc de Portland. Elle a refusé, comme de raison, et m'a confié la chose avec une sorte de crainte que je crois avoir calmé. J'ai pris aujourd' hui tous les derniers arrangements de sûreté pour notre correspondance. J'ai lieu de supposer que son premier exprès nous arrivera avant quinze jours. Je puis, en attendant, vous informer avec certitude que le projet de descente en Angleterre paraît abandonné; les ouvriers de Brest n'étant pas payés, ont quitté l'ouvrage des radeaux, et le défaut d'argent est tel que l'ennemi ne se propose plus que de faire des attaques partielles en chaloupes à rames.

"Merlin triomphe pour le moment, mais sourdement encore, du parti Barras, qui, ainsi que Buonaparte, le laisse agir et gouverner, ne pouvant pas s'y opposer. Il est vraisemblable qu'à la première crise, Barras sautera. Il serait pour cela essentiel de sonder Merlin pour le casus quo. Buonaparte fait passer des fonds, et des effets, dans l'étranger, et paraît prévoir l'orage qu'il ne pourra pas prévenir selon toutes les apparences. Les généraux des armées sont dévoués au parti Merlin. Le peuple de Paris hait Buonaparte; et la paix de Campo Formio déplaît à toute le monde. On trouve qu'on a laissé l'Empereur trop puissant, et l'on désirerait rompre avec lui. Un mot à Barras; l'emporte-il, y aurait jour à une paix générale telle quelle; si c'est Merlin, on parviendra à rompre la nôtre. Hoc est in votis."

LORD GRENVILLE to RUFUS KING.

Private.

1798, January 31. Cleveland Row.—"In referring the application of Captain St. Barbe to the king's Advocate-General for his opinion upon the merits of the case, I had overlooked the circumstance of its being a petition to the king in Council. As such, it ought to be forwarded by the petitioners to the Lord President, or to one of the Clerks of the Council. The case, as stated upon that petition, appears to me to be one of singular hardship, and the conduct imputed to the captain of the privateer such as must revolt every man possessed of the commonest feelings of justice. But it is obviously not an instance in which a claim can be made as between Government and Government, the opinion of the King's Advocate being, as I think, conclusive in what he states on that point. How far as an equitable or compassionate appeal to the generosity of his majesty it may be successful, it does not belong to me to say; nor am I quite sure whether, in point of form, such application ought not rather to be made to the king, through his Lords Commissioners of Treasury, than to his Majesty in Council.

"This the petitioners may easily be informed of at the Council Office, and I was only desirous of explaining to you, in answer to your note to Mr. Hammond, that my declining any official interference, as Secretary of State, in a matter not properly coming within the business of that department of the king's government, is not at all intended to preclude such other modes of application as the petitioners may pursue." Copy.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, January 31. Brunswick.—“ Mon départ est résolu pour demain matin, car s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] désire elle-même que je ne perde point de temps, mais la conduite que j'aurois à tenir a exigé une bien longue discussion.

“ Dans ce moment, où je suis prêt à exécuter le plan auquel s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m'achemine depuis si longtemps, elle s'est ouverte à moi de la manière la plus explicite ; mais malheureusement ç'a été pour me montrer tant de difficultés, que si je les avois toutes connues, je me serois cru incapable d'entreprendre une telle tâche—‘ Mais n'y a-t-il donc point d'autre moyen, Monseigneur ? (ais-je dit enfin)—Non, je n'en connois absolument point d'autre—Eh ! bien, Monseigneur, je ferai ce que je pourrai. ’ Telle a été la fin d'une longue conversation ; et voici ce que s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] d'après les raisons qu'elle m'a fait l'honneur de me détailler, mais qu'il m'est impossible en ce moment d'exposer à votre Excellence, a trouvé le plus convenable.

“ Je dois m'adresser directement à M. de H[augwitz] avec une lettre de s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] dont voici quel doit être le texte ; car je ne l'ai pas encore, mais je dois l'avoir ce soir, quoiqu'il soit déjà tard.

“ Je suis naturaliste et professeur à Gottingue ; j'ai voyagé dans les contrées en vue d'un ouvrage que je dois publier. S' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m'a trouvé très instruit de l'état de l'Europe ; et de ce qui regarde l'Angleterre en particulier, comme ayant l'honneur d'être au service de la reine, et d'avoir ainsi l'occasion d'approcher le roi ; et ayant aussi l'avantage de jouir de la confiance personnelle de votre Excellence . . . . . Je m'arrête ; car voici la lettre elle-même qui m'arrive à minuit, avec sa copie que je transcrirai ici.

“ ‘ Votre Excellence recevra cette lettre par M. De Luc, ami de my Lord Grenville, et honoré de la confiance personnelle du Roi d'Angleterre ; il m'a fait voir le mémoire que my Lord Grenville désire faire parvenir à la connoissance de v[otre] E[xcellence] et qui, ce me semble, ne s'éloigne pas de vos idées sur l'état actuel des affaires publiques. J'ai conseillé à M. De Luc de ne pas perdre un instant à se rendre à Berlin, pour s'acquitter lui-même de la commission confidentielle dont il est chargé. Il espère avec moi que sa qualité d'homme de lettres et ses relations littéraires avec les Académiciens de Berlin, éloigneront toute conjecture sur le véritable motif de sa course. Je ne puis former que des vœux pour qu'il devienne possible qu'une digue quelconque puisse être élevée contre le torrent dévastateur qui menace de faire écrouler tout ce qu'il ne peut engloutir. ’

“ Dans un billet s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] fait des vœux pour le succès de mon entreprise, ‘ dont en vérité, (dit-elle) le secret doit être la base. ’ Ce mot aussi renferme toutes mes entraves. Je dois tâcher de m'approcher du roi, ce que j'apprends n'être pas à present aussi aisé que s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] me l'avoit fait espérer d'abord ; au moins d'une manière qui puisse être utile. Il seroit à craindre que l'on compromît le Prince Héréditaire d'Orange, en cherchant à arriver par lui. Je n'ai qu'une ressource, mais j'ose m'y confier, celle d'avoir l'honneur d'être au service de la reine; mais c'est à moi de voir comment je pourrai en faire usage. Si les lettres que j'ai eu l'honneur d'écrire au roi le 30<sup>e</sup> decembre, et le premier janvier, étoient arrivées à temps, peut-être serois-je honoré des introductions dont je sentoie déjà le besoin, et que je sens bien plus aujourd'hui. Mais le temps presse pour tâcher de profiter du moment de mécontentement contre les Francois. Peut-être recevrai-je bientôt de leurs majesté l'appui dont j'aurai grand besoin pour tenir en place.

"Il faudra ensuite que je décide, suivant les circonstances, quand je devrai instruire my Lord Elgin. Tout est si fort hérissé de difficultés, et j'ai si peu de données, qu'en faisant tout ce que mon jugement, après bien des réflexions, pourra me dicter, j'ose implorer l'indulgence de sa Majesté et de votre Excellence. J'espère que M. de Stamford ne tardera pas beaucoup à partir, ce qui me rassure un peu, mais encore nous devons user de beaucoup de ménagemens dans nos communications."

FRANCE.

Secret Intelligence from France.

Extract. 1798, January.—"The French rulers' fixed plan is:—Never to make peace with a King of England, but with an English republic.

A former plan was to make England, Scotland and Ireland a federative republic.

By an improved resolution, they are to be transformed in three distinct, separate and independent republics.

The English East and West-Indy possessions are to be divided between them, except what France takes for herself, for Spain, and for Holland.

The Navy also to be divided, after that the last mentioned powers have retaken the ships captured from them during the war, or other, in their place; agreeable to a secret article by which France has guaranteed to its allies their naval forces ante bellum.

Under the column of Grandes Mesures: The names of the K[ing] and R[oyal] F[amily] . . , the Princess of W[ales] and the Du<sup>chess</sup> of Y[ork] excepted, those of Ministers, Nobles, Clergymans, Bankers, Merchants and even Farmers.—

Under the column of Déportation, the remainder of the English nobility and rich proprietors. Manufacturers who brings their industry over to France and sells there are excepted. Amongst those condemned to transportation is even Mr. F[ox]'s name with the remark:—Faux patriot; ayant souvent insulté la Nation Francaise dans ses discours, et particulièrement en 1786. So is Lord M[oir] pour avoir porté les armes contre deux peuples combattants pour la liberté. Protecteur des émigrés.—

On the list of Contributions patriotiques are the names of Norfolk, Bedford, Bridgewater, and Marlborough each for 400,000 quinées.

They have lists of the members belonging to any society whatsoever. Also of patriotic officers in the Army, Navy and Militia. But that number is small, and to most part of their names is added: Doutoux. Truguet is to be the commander in chief of the naval expedition against England. Merlin has therefore sent him to push forward the Spanish Navy. But if the King of Spain do not agree to this measure he is instructed to produce a 10th of August at Madrid. —Merlin has said: Before the conquest of England, a 10th of August is necessary in Spain, and an 18th Fructidor in Holland: (This last step is all fulfilled:)—

The Directory in England is to consist of Paine, Tooke, Sharpe, Thelwall, Lansdown.

Ministers.—Earl, Foreign Department.—Cooper, Home Department.

Waittman. Finance.—Tierney, Justice.—Hardy, Police.—Tarletan, War.—Russell, Marine.—Combe, Maire of London.—Stanhope, Ambassador to Paris.

The Scotch Directory. Muir, Sinclair, Cameron, Simple, Lauderdale, a Sorbelloni.

Ministers. Ferguson, Foreign Dep<sup>t</sup>.—Macleod, War.—Campell, Marine.—

Irish Directory. N. Tandy, E. Fitzgerald. H. Rowan, A. O'Connor and Racorner or Ocolmer (?).

The Ministers' names were not filled up, but twenty-two proposed.

Gallais is entrusted with the French plans to their full extent. He prides himself of the friendship and assistance of an opulent man not far from B[a]th.

Gallais is destined to be the first French Ambassador to the English republic."

WILLIAM WICKHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

[1798, January.] Duke Street.—“My last letters from Berne are of the third instant. At that date the Deputies had established themselves near Constance with M. de Précý, excepting Bornes, who remained in the Valais to keep open the correspondence with Carnot who was concealed near Sion. D'André was established at Berne under the immediate protection of the Advoyer de Steiguer, and employed by him in framing a plan of co-operation with the party of the two Assemblies in the southern provinces in case the canton of Berne should be attacked; the project of the Advoyer being in that case to march directly into Franche Compté, and to endeavour to make a common cause with the discontented in the interior. Carnot is certainly engaged in a very active correspondence with Paris as well as with the army. He assured Bornes (what I do not believe) that he might have prevented the explosion on the 18th Fructidor, but that he thought it better on the whole that it should take place."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798, January —.]—"Je vous ai promis hier, de vous envoyer aujourd' hui dans notre confiance et amitié ordinaire, la lettre ci-jointe du Prince de Waldeck. Elle est assez intéressante par le nouveau jour qu'elle jette sur des atrocités passées, et elle porte l'empreinte du caractère loyal d'un guerrier pénétré de ses erreurs, qui ne sont pas portées du cœur. Exceptés quelques ames viles comme un Fischer ou un Frossard, qui n'avoient jamais assez de pouvoir pour faire un très grand mal, les trahisons n'ont jamais pris naissance dans nos armées, et le mal passé, présent, et futur, ne doit s'imputer qu' au mauvais esprit des personnes qui ont dirigé les Cabinets. Indépendamment de la mauvaise foi, sur laquelle je ne m'avise pas de prononcer, on peut avoir un faux système en politique; et je ne suis pas convaincu moi-même que le génie du père Mercy qui plane encore sur nos bureaux, soit le plus adapté aux circonstances." French.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, February 6. Berlin.—"J'ai à rendre compte à votre Excellence d'une première conversation avec M. d'H[augwitz] et je commence aujourd'hui, 5<sup>e</sup>, quoique ma lettre ne doive partir que demain; je le ferai avec autant de précision qu'il me sera possible; mais j'avoue à l'avance que je ne suis pas en état de juger de l'importance du résultat de cet entretien. L'état de l'Europe est un chaos à mes yeux, et je ne sais s'il est quelqu'un qui puisse le débrouiller, ni juger de l'avenir le plus prochain.

"J'arrivai ici le 3<sup>e</sup> à 11 heures du matin. Je me rendis aussitôt chez s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] le Prince héréditaire d'Or[ange] pour le prier de me diriger dans la manière de faire parvenir une lettre à M. d'H[augwitz]. S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] se chargea de l'envoyer par un de ses domestiques. J'écrivis donc aussitôt à M. d'H[augwitz] pour l'informer de mon arrivée; et lui envoyant la lettre de Mons[eigneur] le Duc de B[runswick], je le priai de m'indiquer l'heure à laquelle il pourroit me faire l'honneur de me recevoir. Hier matin je reçus sa réponse, que je crois devoir transcrire ici, pour que votre Excellence puisse juger par là, dès l'entrée, sur quel pied dut s'établir l'entretien que j'eus l'honneur d'avoir avec ce Ministre.

"La lettre que vous m'avez fait l'honneur de m'adresser en date d'hier, m'a été bien remise; en m'annonçant votre arrivée, elle a réveillé en moi le désir nourri depuis longtemps de faire votre connoissance. Je vous attends ce soir à six heures."

"Voilà en effet comment je fus reçu, et d'un bout à l'autre de la conversation, M. d'H[augwitz] ne cessa pas d'en agir avec moi comme s'il m'eût connu depuis vingt ans; et il ne parut pas s'apercevoir du temps qui s'écouloit mieux que moi, qui, regardant ma montre au sortir de chez lui, ne pouvois pas croire mes yeux. Il étoit 1½ heure du matin. Mais cela ne dit rien pour moi ; je ne juge pas par les apparences, il s'agit des choses. A cet égard non plus je n'ose juger, mais je tâcherai d'en faire un rapport fidèle et complet à votre Excellence.

“ J'ai lieu de croire que la mission dont j'étois chargée a été connue ici dès le voyage du Duc de Br[unswick] et y fit changer la face des affaires ; qu'elle fut regardée comme une raison d'espérance qu'on pourroit sauver le nord de l'Allemagne que tout concouroit à menacer ; qu'on en a attendu les progrès avec impatience ; que la résolution de fermeté y a été attachée par la perspective des moyens que je mis d'abord en avant, et qu'on en voit avec plaisir la réalisation. Il n'y a rien à désirer dans le coeur du Roi ; s'il commandoit l'Allemagne et qu'il eût les moyens pécuniaires, on pourroit tout attendre de lui. Mais il n'y avoit qu'un point à l'égard duquel il pût agir d'une manière indépendante, savoir, la sûreté du nord de l'Allemagne. Il auroit été profondément affligé si le manque de finances l'eût mis hors d'état de tenir cet engagement, dans le cas possible qu'il en resultât une guerre ; aussi, dès qu'il a vu la perspective que l'Angleterre y suppleroit, il s'est entièrement déterminé. Il ne s'agira donc que de conclure cet arrangement de finances pour le cas éventuel ; et, en attendant, toutes les vues de ce monarque se tournent vers une résistance absolue à toute tentative, soit sur les embouchures des deux fleuves, soit en général sur la ligne de démarcation. M<sup>r</sup> d'H[augwitz] s'est expliqué là-dessus à plusieurs fois, d'une manière si positive, que je crois que votre Excellence peut assurer sa Majesté que c'est là un point obtenu ; car je n'ai aucun doute sur l'assentiment du Roi, à qui M. d'H[augwitz] se propose de faire son rapport aujourd'hui, quoique s[a] M[ajesté] garde encore de la suite d'une rougeole dont le commencement a un peu allarmé. (La reine a pris la même maladie). Après que M. d'H[augwitz] aura reçu les ordres du Roi, il me fera avertir de me rendre chez lui ; et dès que la chose sera déterminée, j'irai chez my Lord Elgin qui ignore encore mon arrivée, suivant le désir de M. de H[augwitz] ; mais malheureusement s' Exc[ellence] m'a appris en même temps que my Lord Elgin est très malade ; il y avoit longtemps que sa poitrine étoit menacée ; elle est fortement attaquée à présent, et il y a trois semaines qu'il n'a pas paru à la cour. Étranger comme je le suis ici, où je viens pour la première fois ; devant y rester inconnu jusqu'à ce que l'affaire soit mise dans les mains de my Lord Elgin ; n'ayant pas même pris encore un domestique de place, pour rester plus sûrement ignoré, je ne puis presque bouger de chez moi ; sans quoi j'aurois taché d'avoir des informations plus précises sur l'état de my Lord Elgin. Je désirerois bien maintenant que votre exc[ellence] m'eût fait la grace de me donner quelque instruction à l'égard de my Lord Gore ; afin que je pusse juger si je devrois lui parler ouvertement, au cas que my Lord Elgin ne fût pas en état d'agir de quelque temps.

“ Je regarde donc cette partie du but de ma mission comme assurée ; et comme il ne s'agit que d'un arrangement privé entre les deux cours, si my Lord Elgin a les instructions nécessaires pour conclure le traité, que sa santé lui permette d'agir, ou que je puisse le supplier jusqu' à la signature, je crois qu'il ne rencontrera aucune difficulté. Quelles que fussent les idées de M. d'H[augwitz] (qu'à cet égard pourtant je crois très sincère) c'est si fortement la résolution du Roi que le parti François ne parviendra pas à l'ébranler ; et qu'à cet égard aussi je le crois à l'abri des suggestions de la classe de gens qui, dans l'origine, a failli à faire le plus de mal, c'est celle des égoïstes, qui veulent jouir des places, sans dangers, ni travaux, ni dérangement de leurs habitudes ; et qui, soit de leur propre mouvement, soit entraînés, n'entretenoient le Roi que du besoin de la paix, et faisoient tous leurs efforts pour le détourner de se lier de nouveau avec l'Angleterre.

“ Mais jusques là, ce n'est que le plan même de M. de H[augwitz] ; plan que j'avois moi-même, dès l'entrée, trouvé insuffisant pour la sûreté générale, et que votre Excellence a vu du même oeil. Mais peut-on espérer quelque chose au-delà ? J'avoue avec beaucoup de peine à votre Excellence que je n'y vois aucune probabilité ; non par manque de bonne volonté ici, mais par la nature des choses. C'est sur cela que je désire pouvoir rendre bien clairement à votre Excellence le résultat de ce long entretien, où toutes les faces de l'objet ont été considérées avec beaucoup de patience et de détails par M. de H[augwitz].

“ La mort de feu Roi est venu empêcher l'extrême du mal, mais elle n'a pu réparer celui qui étoit déjà fait, ni ses suites jusqu'ici. La confiance qu'inspirera le jeune monarque donnera lieu, selon toute apparence, à des arrangemens de surété après la paix ; mais elle ne peut avoir qu'une influence très bornée sur la paix elle-même ; parceque la situation des choses en Allemagne est devenue si terrible, qu'il faut conclure une paix avec les François à quelque prix que ce soit, pourvu qu'ils consentent à retourner bientôt derrière le Rhin.

“ Il n'est plus besoin de frapper ici les Cabinets sur les vues des François et leur perfidie ; ils l'ont fait eux-mêmes, mais dans la situation où s'est mis l'Empereur, et où il a mis l'Allemagne, on ne peut songer qu'à se sauver du danger présent. La Cour de Berlin peut aisément comprendre comment on a travaillé sur celle de Vienne, d'après tout ce qu'on a tanté auprès d'elle ; elle s'y est refusée, mais Vienne a cédé. Or, jusqu'ici, malgré les instances de Berlin, accompagnées des assurances les plus amicales de concourir le plus qu'il seroit possible à ses arrangemens, Vienne n'a pas voulu communiquer le traité de Campo Formio. On en est donc aux conjectures, et voici celles qu'on a formées d'après tout ce qui se passe. On aura inspiré à l'Empereur de reprendre les vues sur une partie de la Bavière, et il aura saisi cet appât. Alors on lui aura fait craindre Berlin, vu l'opposition que Frédéric II avoit déjà mis au même plan. On lui aura donc représenté que, dès que cet article seroit connu, la Prusse, soutenue peut-être par la Russie, viendrait attaquer la Bohême ; qu'ainsi il lui importoit de retirer ses troupes de ce côté-là. On doit croire que les François lui ont promis, en même temps, de ne pas passer le Rhin ; mais aussitôt que les troupes Autrichiennes ont été retirées, ils l'ont passé en divers endroits ; et non seulement un gros corps de leurs troupes vit déjà de ce côté du Rhin, et lève des contributions ; mais la partie la plus dangereuse de cette trahison est la foule d'émissaires venus de Strasbourg, pour révolutionner tant les parties qu'ils occupent que leurs voisins jusque, dit-on, à Stutgard ; plantant partout le terrible étendard de la révolte, leur arbre de liberté. Je n'apprendrois rien à votre Excellence en lui donnant des détails sur ce nouveau fléau qui devront lui parvenir d'ailleurs ; mais je devois le désigner, comme étant la cause de l'obstacle que trouve dans ce moment le reste de son projet.

“ L'Allemagne est donc dans le plus grand danger possible du côté du haut Rhin ; danger auquel il faut pourvoir sur le champ, et qui ne peut être paré que par un concert immédiat avec Vienne pour cet objet seul, sans l'entraver d'aucun autre ; il faut, dis-je, par des sacrifices, se hâter de faire retirer ces troupes de l'autre côté du Rhin. Voilà tout l'objet des négociations de Berlin aujourd'hui ; il ne peut en embrasser d'autres ; l'Angleterre ni la Russie n'y peuvent rien, cela est trop pressant. Il faut que dans un mois la rive droite du Rhin soit évacuée par la paix de l'empire, ou la contagion révolutionnaire suivra de nouveaux pas des François. Il faut pour cela acquiescer à la condition péremptoire qu'ils mettent à cette paix ; c'est que la rive gauche du Rhin soit leur limite, ce qui oblige le Roi de Prusse lui-même à y céder ses états.

“ Voilà ce que l'Autriche a rendu inévitable par la crainte qu'on lui a inspirée sur la Prusse à l'égard de son traité particulier, dont on ignore encore les clauses, secondées des François quant à des prétentions au deçà du Rhin. Quelle horrible situation ! C'est pour cela que M. d'H[augwitz] regarde comme un port de salut, qui n'est plus même certain, que le traité s'exécute bien vite ; puisque si l'on tarde d'y arriver, les François s'étendront de plus en plus de ce côté du Rhin, ce que l'Empereur ne peut plus empêcher. La révolution de tous les petits états et des cercles de Franconie et de Suabe en seroit la suite inévitable ; puis ils se moqueroient de l'Empereur ; et à l'aide de leur République Cisalpine, ils mettroient l'Allemagne en combustion.

“ Voilà donc aujourd'hui la grande sollicitude de Berlin, dans laquelle je ne pus m'empêcher d'entrer ; et sentant vivement pour l'Allemagne, je pris la liberté de dire à M. d'H[augwitz] ce qui me frappoit comme indispensable dans la forme du traité de paix ; en faisant les plus grands efforts, même des sacrifices, pour engager Vienne à y consentir. Ce seroit, que puisqu'il faut absolument céder à la condition imposée par les François d'avoir le Rhin pour limites, ce fut là le seul objet de traité avec eux par l'Empire en corps ; reservant à traiter dans l'Empire lui-même, sans leur intervention, les arrangements à prendre sur le terrible article des indemnités ; de peur que, devenant partie dans ce traité interne, ils n'eussent le droit de s'immiscer dans les affaires de l'Empire. Que pour cet effet, Berlin devroit déclarer à Vienne qu'il est prêt d'entrer même dans les espérances qu'il avoit conçues de l'appui des François; et qu'il obtiendrait plus de gré à gré que par leur entremise qui exposerait l'Empire à une ruine certaine, comme tous les états le voyoient maintenant avec évidence.

“Je dois dire que l'esprit public qui régnoit dans ce plan parut frapper M. d'Haugwitz, et que, dès ce moment, la conversation prit une tournure qui sembla fondée sur la confiance. Peu à peu il me parla de l'état des choses, sans me regarder comme spécialement occupé de l'intérêt de l'Angleterre, ni se considérer comme ministre de Prusse. Je lui fis parcourir alors un grand enchaînement de causes générales, dont il ne connoissoit que quelques parties détachées, et de son côté il me mit au fait de bien des détails, que je n'avois encore qu'entreus. Il convint de l'importance du plan que je venois de proposer, et m'assura qu'il y butteroit autant qu'il seroit possible; mais il me fit comprendre aussi que s'il y rencontroit des difficultés à cause de quelque engagement de l'Empereur avec les François, il ne faudroit pas, en cherchant à les vaincre, prolonger l'état d'angereux de l'Allemagne; puisque lors même qu'il le voudroit maintenant, avant qu'il pût être prêt à la résistance, ses propres états seroient envahis ou révolutionnés. Mais qu'il falloit sans doute dès à présent préparer les voyes à l'alliance générale et sincère, sans quoi l'Europe seroit perdue.

“Sur cela M. d'H[augwitz] me confia que depuis le retour de M. de Recke, qui avoit été notifier l'avènement du roi, on avoit tout lieu de croire que l'Empereur et son min[istre] étoient outrés de la conduite des François et très allarmés; quoique gardant encore le silence sur leur traité, qu'ils n'osent avouer surtout à cause de la défiance qui y règne contre la Prusse, qui a fait porter ailleurs les troupes Autrichiennes, sous le prétexte ostensible de les faire rentrer dans le pays, ruiné en leur faisant consommer leur paye au dehors. Qu'il falloit, en sauvant le moment, se procurer un peu de temps pour songer au passé et à l'avenir; et qu'alors il ne doutoit pas que tous les anciens gouvernemens ne sentissent le besoin absolu de se réunir sans autre vue que la conservation mutuelle; au lieu que dans ce moment où les armées en mobilité donnent de l'effroi, il n'y a peut-être que l'Angleterre et la Prusse qui soient en état de réfléchir; la première comme séparée par la mer, l'autre comme se sentant en état, avec un secours pécuniaire, et unie à la Saxe et à Hanovre, de garantir le nord de l'Allemagne, au moins pour un temps. Quant à la Hesse (ajouta-t-il) il y a peu de fond à faire sur elle, à moins de quelque événement qui puisse lui faire ouvrir les yeux.

“Considérant alors le bien de l'Angleterre avec le même intérêt (à ce qui me parut) que j'avois apporté à celui de l'Allemagne, ‘Vous voyez (me dit-il) que nous sommes bien loin d'être en état de dicter aucune loi aux François, et qu'il n'y a pas le temps d'appeler la Russie dont la voix, pût-on la faire entendre à temps, ni seroit qu'un vain son. Dans cet état des

choses, il faut espérer que l'Angleterre, avec l'assurance de la conservation du nord de l'Allemagne, pourra tenir assez longtemps pour voir changer la face des affaires. Car quoique sans doute les François, retournés de l'autre côté du Rhin par la paix de l'Empire, aient plus de forces de terre libres, ils n'auront pas plus de vaisaux ; et avant qu'ils pussent profiter à cet égard de leur nouvelle situation, la Prusse et l'Autriche, devenues libres de leur côté, et plus éclairées sur le danger général, pourroient s'offrir pour médiatrices entre l'Angleterre et les François, et le faire peut-être avec succès. Car il ne faudroit pas bien longtemps de retour des troupes Françaises sur leur territoire pour que les suites d'un gouvernement comme le leur se fissent sentir chez eux-mêmes. Ma plus grande crainte est qu'ils ne le prevoyent, et que nous ne tenions pas encore cette paix de l'Empire. En ce cas il faudroit bien, sans doute, que l'Autriche songeât à elle-même. Nous tâcherons de nous en rapprocher confidentiellement autant qu'il sera possible ; afin que dans un cas pareil on puisse songer à la sûreté commune, et y intéresser la Russie et même la Porte.

“ Je crois (continua-t-il) que vous êtes maintenant bien au fait de l'état des choses, et de ma manière de penser. Il y a deux points, le présent, et l'avenir. Il faut pourvoir comme on peut au premier, qui est urgent, sans perdre de vue le dernier, et même en le préparant dès à présent. Vous pourriez donc vous informer à l'avance de ce que l'Angleterre penseroit de la médiation dont je viens de parler, au cas qu'elle devienne possible. Mais si l'Angleterre la trouvoit convenable, il faudroit qu'elle en indiquât précisément les conditions ; car (ajouta-t-il, avec les détails de la chose) ce fut le manque de cette cause essentielle qui rendit inutile notre bonne volonté dans un temps où elle auroit peut-être prévenu bien des maux. Nous travaillerions sûrement avec zèle à la paix de l'Angleterre, par affection sincère de relations de famille, car elle existe aujourd'hui sans mélange ; et par une connoissance bien claire que c'est notre intérêt et celui de l'Europe ; et si dans la négociation de cette paix par les deux puissances, en y joignant même la Russie s'il étoit besoin, les François se refusoient à des conditions raisonnables, tous les gouvernements subsistans ouvriroient enfin les yeux, et cela pourroit amener de nouveaux événemens favorables. Enfin, si l'on parvenoit à cette paix, il n'y a pas de doute qu'il ne fallût que toutes les puissances existantes se liassent entr'elles pour la conservation de leur existence ; c'est à dire, de leurs possessions et de leurs gouvernemens.”

“ Je n'ai plus à ajouter qu'un objet particulier ; c'est qu'on croit savoir ici que la crainte est enfin passée en Danemarck et en Suède ; or ces puissances doivent maintenant sentir que l'existence de l'Angleterre est nécessaire à la leur, et la Russie même doit le sentir, comme puissance maritime ; de sorte qu'on est porté à croire que l'Angleterre pourroit en tirer quelque secours, puisque le nord de l'Allemagne étant bien gardé, elles seroient en sûreté par terre. Mais à cet égard votre Excellence est sûrement bien instruit.

“Tels sont les résultats de ce long entretien dont, je le répète votre Excellence seule peut apprécier l'importance; je souhaite ardemment qu'elle y trouve des ressources; mais je crois qu'elle verra au moins qu'il auroit été inutile que j'eusse insisté davantage sur ce qui ne s'y trouve pas conforme à son plan; puisque c'est pour l'avoir repris sous toutes les formes et par toutes les considérations qui purent me venir en pensée, que l'entretien se prolongea si avant dans la nuit.

“Lorsqu'enfin je pris congé de s' Excellence, elle me fit l'honneur de me témoigner la plus grande satisfaction de notre entretien, une confiance entière dans la droiture de mes vues, et un grand désir d'avoir d'autres entretiens avec moi, non-seulement sur l'objet de ma mission, mais sur les affaires générales.

“Je ne rapporte cela à votre Excellence qu'historiquement, et afin qu'elle puisse juger elle-même du parti qu'elle pourroit tirer de cette position; car je n'y attache jusqu'ici d'autre prix que celui d'un accès facile; il me faudra plus de temps pour juger de la réalité. Mais avant que votre Excellence puisse me faire l'honneur de me donner ses nouvelles instructions (sans doute à présent dans le paquet de my Lord Elgin) j'espère d'avoir un guide. L'invitation à M. de Stamford ne pu partir d'ici que le soir de mon arrivée, et en supposant que rien ne le retienne, ce que je désire ardemment, je pourrois le voir arriver le 10<sup>me</sup>. Alors je l'informerai de tout ce qui se sera passé, et prendrai ses avis sur ma conduite future avec M. de H[augwitz]; ce qui pourroit être devenu mon département, et nous aurons soin aussi d'informer Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick, à qui j'aurai l'honneur d'écrire demain.

Le 6, vers le soir.—“Je n'ai point encore d'ordre de M. de H[augwitz] ainsi je vais fermer ma lettre; dès que je saurai quelque chose de plus, j'aurai l'honneur d'écrire à votre Excellence. Ce seroit perdre un courrier que de faire passer ma lettre par Hanovre, ainsi je vais l'adresser à un de mes fils à la cité, sous couvert d'une maison de commerce à laquelle il appartient, sans y'être nommé; et il portera lui-même la lettre à l'office de votre Excellence.”

WILLIAM WICKHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, February 7. Cottingley.—“Your Lordship's letter of Monday evening was delivered to me by the messenger Sylvester about an hour since. I have made all my arrangements in such a way as that I shall be able to leave this place on Saturday morning, but I must necessarily pass the whole of that day at Leeds, so that I shall not be in town before Tuesday morning. I shall call at the Office immediately on my arrival to receive your Lordship's commands.

“My engagements would not allow me to set off sooner but in a case of the most urgent necessity, and I had promised the Chancellor before I left London to make some particular enquiries at Leeds after a branch of the Corresponding Society that has been lately established in the neighbourhood of that town. I have already taken the necessary steps for that purpose, but it would be impossible for me to call on the persons from whom alone I can obtain any real information without paying visits to so many others as will detain me full twenty-four hours in the place.

“It is undoubtedly to be lamented that I could not have remained in Switzerland, but the thing was really not possible. I will go further and say not only that the spirit that has now been shown in that country would never have appeared if the question had turned on my residence there only, but that it is my absenting myself, and the manner in which the whole thing was done, that has contributed more than any thing else to attach the people to their governments, and to open the eyes of their governors to the real state of the country when considered with respect to its connexions with France.

“Even now any offer of service from this country must be made with as much delicacy as secrecy. There is yet a good deal of the old leaven in the Secret Council, and the slightest appearance of any thing that should look like a preconcerted communication with the Advoyer de Steiguer would blow all into a flame that even the sense of immediate danger would hardly be able to keep under. If the whole quarrel do not evidently appear to be a Swiss one it never can be brought to any good end. I think also that the language I held on quitting the country, and particularly what I wrote to the Advoyer de Steiguer in explanation of my note, was fully sufficient for the first moment, and that more would have done harm; and it seems to me that all that is now required is to give a private communication to the Advoyer that a person is on the spot ready to make good the promises that have been given to him, leaving it entirely to the Advoyer to choose the moment at which, and the persons to whom, this communication should be extended.

“There is one thing however that I must not omit to mention as a matter of much real importance. I am very apprehensive lest the canton of Berne should be led to disarm more troops than its safety really requires, on account of the heavy expense to which the government is exposed by having so many men on foot at this season of the year. This evil might be prevented perhaps by a small secret subsidy, and your Lordship may probably think it right to give instructions to that effect to Mr. Talbot, or to any other person who may be sent there. I should think that five thousand pounds a month might make the difference between safety and danger. A subsidy of this kind would be dangerous in itself, and difficult to manage for the reasons I have already given; but the thing might be done, and I daresay the Advoyer would find means of applying the money in the way I wish without the Committee of Finance or even the bad part of the Secret Council suspecting where it came from. The Military Committee (which is well composed) must necessarily be in the secret,

"I am upon the whole well satisfied with what I have seen in this country, but great pains are taken to pervert the minds of the lower order of the manufacturers; and I am sorry to say that there seems to be a general opinion among the superior classes that Government is remiss in that article, and that, as the mischief seems to them to come always from London, so they say that there must necessarily be negligence at the fountain head. For instance, it is impossible to make a master manufacturer understand why Government cannot prevent the existence of a paper like the Courier, or why it is not stopped at the Post Office before it gets into the hands of his weavers and combers. I have said what I could on the subject, and when I return I shall give Wilberforce some hints that I think he may employ to advantage.

"The Duke of Norfolk's dismissal has given very general satisfaction, and, should his friends attempt to stir, your Lordship may be assured that their efforts would terminate in an address of thanks.

"I am truly too sorry to say that many of the soldiers of his battalion have returned here holding a language not very unlike what passed at the Crown and Anchor. I should not wish to be named as having mentioned this to your Lordship, but I rather think that Government will hear of it in a more direct way."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798,] February 12. Somerset Place.—"I wish nothing more than that all my colleagues should be in the train of knowing the steps in progress for their own and the public safety. I do wish to put on paper how much I feel crippled on land in preparatory measures from the distribution of business between the Duke of Portland's Office and mine. It can't go on as it is, and I make no doubt Mr. Pitt will take such measures as occur to him best for giving me either a great deal more or a great deal less to do.

"The papers now in circulation on the subject of naval defence and conjunct operation of land and sea force will show you my ideas on that point, and, to do Lord Spencer the justice that is due to him, I feel perfectly confident that the paper which he confidentially brought me this forenoon, and which will likewise be immediately put in circulation, will set every body's mind at ease with regard to the means belonging to the naval department, and the use intended to be made of those means. If I am enabled to act upon land as I would wish to do, if I am to act at all, in the measures requisite for the defence of Great Britain and Ireland, I will in three months hold an invasion in derision; or rather I shall devoutly pray for the attempt being made, from a conviction that, in some stage or other of the attempt, they must be devoted to destruction.

"I send you an anonymous paper I received this morning. It looks whimsical to state my idea seriously, but if the ruling power in Spain (be who they may) see that France has nothing else in view but to annihilate them and seize their navy, as I believe to be the case, is it not worth while in some shape or other to try to get their navy into our possession, under a distinct and well explained understanding that all their foreign possessions shall be left by us undisturbed, and that their fleet shall be restored to them entire at the restoration of general peace."

Enclosure. An anonymous letter suggesting that the British Government should, without delay, seize or destroy the Spanish navy.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, February 13. Berlin.—“ Je me trouve privé de lettres de votre Excellence depuis celle qu'elle me fit l'honneur de m'écrire le 14<sup>e</sup> Janvier, ensuite de celles que j'avois eu l'honneur de lui adresser les 12 et 21 Decembre ; quoiqu'il y ait des lettres de Londres du 30<sup>e</sup> Janvier qui accusent celles du 10 d'Hanovre, et qu'avant cette date j'eusse eu l'honneur d'écrire à votre Excellence le 25<sup>e</sup> Decembre, et ensuite le 30, et les 1, 6, et 10<sup>e</sup> Janvier au Roi. Dès lors j'ai eu encore l'honneur d'écrire à sa Majesté le 27<sup>e</sup>, et le même jour à votre Excellence ; puis à elle encore, de Brunswick, les 30, et 31, et enfin de Berlin le 6 de ce mois.

“ Je conçois à quel degré votre Excellence doit être occupée, ainsi je suis loin de trouver son silence extraordinaire ; mais devant néanmoins saisir les momens, je me suis vu obligé de me décider par moi-même d'abord à partir tout de suite d'Hanovre pour me rendre à Brunswick, et aussitôt après pour Berlin, avec l'approbation, il est vrai, et l'appui de s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] comme j'ai eu l'honneur d'en informer votre Excellence le 31<sup>e</sup> Janvier. Enfin ici je me trouve absolument seul, car mon ami est retombé malade, et je ne puis l'attendre de quelque temps, si même il se retablissoit assez pour entreprendre un tel voyage en cette saison. Cependant jusqu'ici, d'après les apparences, j'ai la satisfaction de penser que ma détermination a été providentielle ; car mon arrivée ici dans ce moment précis a déterminé cette cour à de nouvelles démarches auprès de celle de Vienne, pour lesquelles il n'y avoit pas un instant à perdre. Je vais avoir l'honneur d'informer votre Exc[ellence] d'une circonstance singulière qui me le fit apprendre dès hier, et sans laquelle je n'aurois peut-être pas revu M. de H[augwitz] de quelques jours. C'est pour cela que je commence cette lettre dès aujourd'hui (12), quoiqu'elle ne doive partir que demain.

“ Dans ma dernière lettre de Brunswick, j'eus l'honneur d'informer votre Excellence que Monseigneur le Duc m'avoit extrêmement recommandé le secret ; et dans celle d'ici que M. de H[augwitz] l'avoit pressé de nouveau, au point que je ne devois pas voir My Lord Elgin jusqu'à ce que tout fut déterminé avec le Roi. Il m'étoit fort aisé de me tenir chez moi, puisque j'ai de quoi m'y occuper; mais cet homme venu à Berlin pour s'y tenir dans sa chambre, qui n'en sort que pour des momens, et qui est rentré une fois à près de 2 heures du matin, a attiré l'attention de la police. J'eus donc avant hier la visite d'un commissaire, dont je me tirai fort bien pour le moment; mais je fis parvenir hier une lettre à M. de H[augwitz] dans laquelle, lui exposant le cas, je le priois, s'il étoit possible, d'abrégier mon incognito, en me mettant en état de voir my Lord Elgin, et ainsi de me produire dans le monde. Quelle ne fut pas ma surprise, le soir sur la brune, par une forte pluie, de voir M. de H[augwitz] entrer dans ma chambre, venu à pied d'une demi-lieue de distance! Le domestique auquel il s'étoit confié pour son premier message étoit malade, et il n'avoit pas voulu en envoyer un autre. Il me témoigna son chagrin de cet incident, quoiqu'il fut bien aise de voir par là, vu les temps, que la vigilance recommandée à la police étoit observée. Il me dit qu'il pourroit aisément faire cesser l'attention sur moi; mais qu'aussi il pourroit par là donner lieu à d'autres conjectures; et qu'il venoit me proposer, si du moins il ne m'étoit pas désagréable de risquer une autre visite de commissaire, de dire en pareil cas que j'avois l'honneur d'être connu de Madame la Landgrave Louise de Darmstadt, qui est ici, et que pour s'en assurer, on pouvoit s'en informer auprès de M. de H[augwitz], parcequ'alors il pourroit parler de moi sans conséquence: je n'hésitai pas.

“Je reçus comme je le devois une marque d'attention si extrêmement obligéante, et cela ayant engagé une conversation très aisée, son Excellence m'informa que la santé encore très foible de sa Majesté étoit la seule cause de ce que je n'avois pas eu de nouvelles preuves de la satisfaction qu'il avoit de ma venue; que cependant il avoit fait son rapport à sa Majesté, et reçu ses ordres; et il me demanda si je pourrois me rendre chez lui aujourd'hui à 5 heures. Ce qui fut convenu.

“Nous entrâmes cependant en conversation sur les affaires générales; et M. de H[augwitz] m'informa, que fondé sur un commencement tel que celui que promettoit ma mission, il avoit expédié un courrier à Vienne avec tout ce qui pouvoit être capable de produire aussi de ce côté-là un retour de confiance, dans le but de la sûreté commune. Il ne parla plus de la cession de la rive gauche du Rhin comme d'une affaire finale; il pourroit, dit-il, se présenter des circonstances qui fissent changer la face des choses. ‘Que seulement (ajouta-t-il) Vienne s'ouvre entièrement sur les conditions de sa paix, et sur ce qu'il paroît craindre du parti que les François en tirent déjà, et pourroient encore en tirer, dans leur but de renverser tous les états, et alors nous examinerons de concert, et avec la Russie, le parti qu'il conviendra de prendre.’ Après un long entretien sur cette situation présente des choses, s'E[xcellence] s'en retourna chez elle, à pied et par la pluie, et je ferai probablement un voyage pareil à 5 heures, car il ne cesse de pleuvoir.

Le 13<sup>me</sup>. “L’entretien que j’eus l’honneur d’avoir hier au soir avec M. de H[augwitz] ne fut pas si long que le premier, quoiqu’il eût aussi pris le train de détails qui devoit le rendre fort long. Mais malheureusement, avant qu’il fut arrivé au point où j’aurois pu le communiquer à my Lord Elgin, il survint une affaire à s’E[xcellence] qui l’obligea de l’interrompre, et de renvoyer à le reprendre après demain à la même heure. Ce qui me fâche le plus à cet égard, car je crois voir assez à quoi les choses en sont pour les anticiper à votre Excellence, est la circonstance de ne pouvoir aller encore chez my Lord Elgin, et de rester ainsi toujours isolés sous l’incognito.

“Cet entretien au fond n’eut rien de plus que la certitude plus grande de ce dont j’ai déjà eu l’honneur d’informer votre Excellence par ma lettre du 6<sup>me</sup>, M. de H[augwitz] ayant parlé cette fois au nom du Roi. Le premier objet est donc déterminé dans ces termes généraux ; que sa Majesté Prussienne donne à sa Majesté Britannique l’assurance qu’elle défendra de tout son pouvoir le nord de l’Allemagne, et ainsi l’emboûchure des deux rivières : comptant de son côté sur la promesse de sa Majesté Britannique d’un subside proportionné aux efforts qu’elle pourroit être obligée d’employer, s’il en resuloit une guerre. M. de H[augwitz] compte alors sur une armée de 147,000 hommes effectifs de la part de Prusse ; et il assure qu’en y joignant les troupes de Saxe, Hanovre, ce qui formeroit une armée de 210 à 220 mille hommes, il n’y auroit absolument rien à craindre de ce côté-ci.

“Le sens du mémoire de votre Excellence à cet égard a été parfaitement entendu ; la Prusse doit se tenir prête pour le besoin, sans attendre de l’Angleterre aucun secours pécuniaire pour cet objet. C’est pourtant une grande dépense, mais la Prusse y pourvoit, et s’occupe de ces arrangemens. Ce n’est donc que du moment où elle devoit faire marcher ce grand corps de troupes, partie de loin, pour l’amener sur la frontière, lui faire ainsi consommer sa paye en pays étranger, et s’y pourvoir de tout le nécessaire, qu’elle attendroit un subside d’Angleterre.

“À ce sujet M. de H[augwitz] m’a dit qu’il étoit informé dès longtemps que le plus grand projet des François contre l’Angleterre étoit de se rendre maîtres des côtes de la mer du Nord jusqu’à Hambourg : qu’il étoit convaincu que le même projet subsistoit malgré la réiteration de leurs assurances, et le désaveu des discours de leurs propres généraux ; et qu’il étoit bien sûr que la conviction seule chez eux d’une résistance absolue qu’on ne manqueroit pas de leur faire prévoir, pourroit les détourner de ce projet. La découverte s’en fit en 1794, tandis que les Autrichiens étoient chargés de la défense des frontières près des Provinces Unies, vers l’Ems. On fut informé alors à Berlin que les François voulusse passer cette rivière, et le Felt-maréchal Möllendorf, étant encore dans ces contrées, reçut ordre du feu Roi d’assister les Autrichiens en cas d’attaque. Ils furent attaqués, en effet, et chassés de l’Ems ; mais le Général Keuler étant venu à leur secours, on battit les François et on leur fit 1,200 prisonniers. Or on trouva dans les poches de quelques officiers les ordres et les plans pour cette invasion, jusqu' à Hambourg. Ce qui fait considérer par M. de H[augwitz] (et qui se trouve vrai par l'événement) la neutralité du nord de l'Allemagne comme une heureuse base sur laquelle, par l'arrangement d'aujourd'hui, repose la sûreté du commerce de l'Angleterre.

"M. de H[augwitz] m'ayant dit encore beaucoup de chose là-dessus, vint enfin à cette conclusion général, que le Roi de Prusse réciproquoit sincèrement le désir de sa Majesté Britannique de renouer des relations intimes ; mais que pour agir avec franchise de part et d'autre, il falloit bien entendre que chacune des deux puissances devoit songer d'abord à son avantage ; puis, et sincèrement, à celui de la puissance amie. Mais je pris la liberté de lui représenter là-dessus que ce n'étoit point ainsi que l'Angleterre envisageoit les choses dans les circonstances actuelles ni que la Prusse devoit les envisager. Que quoique sans doute il fallût bien, d'après la connoissance de la nature humaine, considérer en général les relations entre les hommes sous le point de vue de premièrement MOI, puis mes AMIS, cet intérêt personnel devoit être déterminé suivant les circonstances ; et que dans les circonstances actuelles, il y avoit un intérêt personnel absolument commun, supérieur à ceux qui étoient supposés par la thèse générale ; savoir, la défense des trônes et de tous les anciens gouvernemens : objet qu'il avoit vu votre Excellence mettre au premier rang dans son mémoire, et sur lequel il ne pouvoit y avoir de dissentiment entre ceux qui connoissoient également le danger.

"Je dois remarquer ici que, quoique M. de H[augwitz] parût dès notre premier entretien informé jusqu'à un certain point de ce danger, il l'étoit bien moins cependant qu'il ne le croyoit. Il avoit été lui-même entraîné dans des loges maçonnnes appartenants aux sociétés secrètes ; et c'étoit de là, et de quelques traits épars, qu'il se croyoit bien instruit ; mais il n'avoit vu ni assez loin dans les lieux et les temps, ni assez profondément, pour juger de toute l'étendue du danger ; desorte que c'est-là un des grands objets qui prolongent nos entretiens, par son application aux détails des circonstances présentes, et nous ne sommes pas encore au bout.

"Cette conversation ramenoit donc l'objet de la quadruple alliance ; mais il ne pouvoit pas en resulter l'évidence de son utilité actuelle, pour arrêter les mouvemens des François ; parce qu'elle emploieroit un temps considérable, et qu'il faut pouvoir au moment. Rien ne peut y pourvoir qu'un concert bien prompt avec Vienne ; et jusqu'ici, par les raisons que j'ai eu l'honneur d'exposer à votre Excellence dans ma précédente lettre (partie à droiture sous couvert de mon fils à la cité) les vues de M. de H[augwitz] dans ce concert n'étoient que d'accélérer ainsi la moins mauvaise paix à Rastadt ; sans négliger les moyens d'acheminer, pour l'avenir, cette alliance conservatrice des Gouvernemens ; et quant à l'Angleterre, le moment où les puissances du Continent, devenues indépendantes, pourroient se présenter comme médiatrices de sa paix ; en un mot, tout ce qui fut le résultat de notre premier entretien, tel que j'ai eu l'honneur de l'exposer à votre Excellence.

“ Mais il semble se préparer des choses qui pourroient changer les idées de cette cour ; et comme c'est de M. d'[Haugwitz] que j'en tiens une partie, je crois pouvoir en conclure que ce n'est plus que comme un pis-aller qu'il considère cette paix de Rastadt ; mais que s'il se présentoit des circonstances qui remissent les choses en mouvement, sans crainte de nouvelles mésintelligences ou vues particulières, il le verroit avec plaisir, dans le but d'éloigner davantage les François, et de conserver l'Empire plus entier et par là plus harmonisant ?

“ Ces circonstances pourroient provenir de l'Empereur lui-même qui, dans un entretien particulier avec M. le Baron de Reck (envoyé d'ici à l'avènement du Roi, et avec qui s[a] M[ajesté] I[mperiale] se trouvoit en connoissance personnelle) lui a parlé à cœur ouvert sur les François d'aujourd'hui, comme étant devenus sous leur gouvernement une nation traîtresse, avec laquelle il n'y avoit aucune sûreté. L'empereur ne s'ouvrit néanmoins encore sur rien relativement à sa paix, mais on croit savoir d'ailleurs qu'il n'a point consenti à ce dont ils s'emparent sur le Rhin, ni même à toute la rive gauche de ce fleuve. C'est sur ces avis, joins à la certitude actuelle d'un secours pécuniaire de l'Angleterre, et d'après l'idée résultante de notre premier entretien de ne donner aucune influence aux François sur les arrangemens dans l'Empire même, qu'a été fondée la nouvelle dépêche de cette cour à Vienne, dont j'ai fait mention au commencement de cette lettre ; et la dépêche renferme les instances les plus pressantes et les plus amicales de se confier à la Prusse, comme celle-ci veut se confier à l'Autriche, pour se garantir en commun avec l'Empire, et ce qui tient encore en Europe. M. de H[augwitz] me fit aussi l'honneur de me dire que toutes ces démarches étoient communiquées à Petersbourg, pour ouvrir dès à présent des communications confidentielles, et préparer ainsi cette réunion que votre Excellence désire. Mais l'idée de votre Excellence étoit qu'on s'en occupât d'abord, comme pouvant influer sur le présent, à quoi je dois lui dire que je ne vois encore aucune possibilité, si du moins, cette paix de Rastadt doit se faire. Il ne reste donc à cet égard que ce qui revient des dispositions de l'Empereur, qui semblent éloigner cette paix dans un sens anti-François ; et si cela venoit à produire quelque altercation, l'alliance ne seroit peut-être pas impossible. J'ai un contrôle d'informations à cet égard, parceque j'en reçois de Brunswick ; et je l'entretiendrai, en informant aussi de ce côté-là. Jusqu'ici tout est d'accord à quelques détails près ; et si je vois le moment favorable, je serai toujours prêt à remettre l'objet sur le tapis ; surtout si votre Excellence m'honore de nouvelles instructions, maintenant sans doute dans le paquet de my Lord Elgin.

“ Nous en étions encore, M. de H[augwitz] et moi, à ce point de notre entretien lorsqu'un affaire vint l'interrompre ; nous ne pûmes donc dire que quelques mots sur ce qui auroit dû être la conclusion de cette conférence, savoir les stipulations qui me paroissoient nécessaires à l'égard à l'objet provisionnel. M. de H[augwitz] me demanda à cet égard si j'avois des instructions précises; je répondis que non, mais que j'avois lieu de croire que my Lord Elgin, devant traiter l'affaire officiellement, les auroit reçues. Ce fut alors qu'il me dit que nous reprendrions l'affaire demain à la même heure, et que probablement alors je pourrais en informer my Lord Elgin, pour la suivre avec lui.

“Je languis beaucoup de voir arriver ce moment, car je suis véritablement sur les épines; seul à traiter un si grand objet, et sans avoir reçu de votre Excellence d'autres instructions que celles que renferme la lettre dont elle m'honora le 14<sup>e</sup> janvier; par laquelle j'ai bien été instruit de ce que je devois tâcher de produire; mais non de ce à quoi je pourrais me borner, s'il n'étoit pas possible d'aller au-delà. Votre Excellence comptoit, sans doute, sur les instructions qu'elle a données à my Lord Elgin; mais elle voit pourquoi jusqu'ici je ne pouvois m'en prévaloir directement; et je n'ai osé tenter de chercher à m'en procurer indirectement, ou sous main, de peur de m'exposer à perdre la confiance qu'on me témoigne. Je puis comprendre qu'on craint le parti François, toujours aux aguets, et qu'il faut, pour que cette convention demeure secrète, qu'elle soit terminée lorsque que je me présenterai dans la société comme professeur.

“Le Roi est hors de sa maladie, mais foible, et ses yeux sont encore très affectés. My Lord Elgin est mieux, à ce que j'ai appris avec bien de la satisfaction du Prince d'Or[ange], la seule personne que je voye, avec son secrétaire.”

W. WINDHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, February 14. Bath.—“If some exertion is not made, you must lay your account with the suppression of the regiment of Roll, including whatever inconvenient consequences may result from the measure, either as to the present temper, or future views of the cantons towards this country.

“The Duke of York means to put the continuance of the regiment upon the footing of the Baron de Roll's being able to induce the men to engage during the war; which, it is known beforehand, that he will not be able to do. Why it should be necessary, I am unable to conceive. The opinion that discipline cannot be maintained in a regiment unless the men are engaged for life (or to the end of a war) of which we had some talk at your house the other day, appears to me, the more I consider it or inquire about it, less founded either in fact, reason, or authority. All the former French army was upon that footing (I mean of the men being enlisted for term of years); much, if not all, of the Austrian army is upon that footing; all our own militia, and many at various times, of our marching regiments; yet in no one instance that I can find has discipline suffered. On the contrary it has, in many, been supposed to be promoted by it. If it was not so, how comes the regiment of Roll to have gone on hitherto?

Nor though the discovery was not made till lately, the men have been upon this footing from the beginning; yet no one has ever complained of the regiment, as being deficient in discipline. In short there is a most restless desire to get rid of all foreign corps, at least of those who will not serve in the West Indies. I, on the other hand, must confess a very anxious desire to preserve them; not in this instance because they furnish an honourable provision to men who have sacrificed everything to their adherence to the constitution of their country; nor with any view to the interests of the Baron de Roll, who does not appear to me to be very intent upon the object; but because I do not see the policy at this moment of getting rid of a very fine regiment; and because I can easily conceive, and understand from Wickham, that the suppression of the regiment is likely to have an ill effect in Switzerland.

"It is upon this footing that I communicate these particulars to you. The regiment, you will understand, having suffered great losses as well by the common accidents of service as by the circumstance of two detachments of it having perished by shipwreck, was reduced, at my suggestion, from two battalions to one. At this establishment the Baron de Roll thinks that he shall be able to maintain it, even cut off as it is at present from any direct communication with Switzerland. The experiment will cost nothing except the expense of the regiment in the mean time, which is no greater than that of an English battalion of equal numbers. The quality of the men and the intelligence of the officers is certainly not inferior to what is found in most English regiments. I wish we had many that were equal to them in these respects. By dismissing the regiment at present you anticipate an expense which might otherwise not come till the end of the war, namely what is to be given to the officers under the name of licenciement. His Royal Highness, however, is of opinion that its continuance should be put upon the issue which I have above stated, namely of the men's being prevailed upon to engage for the war; which may, I believe, be considered as equivalent to a dismissal.

"I have stated both to His Royal Highness, and in a short note which I added to some papers of General Stuart which were sent in circulation, the substance of the above opinion, both in what relates to our service and to effects which the measure may have in Switzerland. By a letter received just now, I find that my ideas have not so far prevailed as to prevent the intention of proceeding in the course which I have above explained to you, and which, if you wish to endeavour to prevent, you must interpose immediately.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, February 17. Berlin.—"Je commence le 15<sup>e</sup> le compte que je dois avoir l'honneur de rendre à votre Excellence de ce qui s'est passé depuis avant-hier. Hier étant le jour que j'eus l'honneur d'indiquer à votre Excellence comme celui qui avoit été fixé par M. de H[augwitz] pour une conférence finale, j'eus l'honneur de me rendre chez s'E[xcellence], et le sujet de l'entretien fut un mémoire, préparé par elle, en réponse à celui dont j'avois eu l'honneur d'être porteur. Je n'entrerai pas dans des détails sur le contenu de ce mémoire, puisque votre Excellence le recevra en même temps que cette lettre ; la seule chose donc que soit nécessaire, c'est qu'elle soit instruite de l'entretien dont il fut l'objet.

“Selon mon jugement, ce mémoire me parut tout ce qu'on pouvoit espérer dans le moment actuel ; mais je crus nécessaire de définir ce moment, pour que M. de H[augwitz] pût bien apprécier l'approbation que je ne pouvois m'empêcher d'y donner. Voici donc la substance de ce que j'eus l'honneur de lui dire dans ce sens, et qui devint l'objet du reste de l'entretien.

“Dans ce jour précis (dis-je à s'E[xcellence]) le 14<sup>e</sup> février, je ne saurois, d'après mon propre jugement, rien desirer en retour des dispositions manifestées par le Cabinet de St. James, au-delà de ce que v[otre] E[xcellence] m'a fait l'honneur de me communiquer. Je crois, dis-je, qu'on ne peut rien déterminer de plus dans ce moment, où le voile qui couvre les dispositions de la Cour de Vienne n'est pas encore tiré, où cependant la marche des François menace de grands dangers prochains, et où, par conséquent, on ne peut s'occuper encore clairement que de la sûreté provisionnelle du nord de l'Allemagne, et d'accélér[er] la retraite des François de l'autre côté du Rhin de la manière la plus prompte, qui paroît à v[otre] E[xcellence] celle d'un traité avec eux. Je conviens encore que si c'étoit-là aussi le point de vue sous lequel la cour de Vienne considère l'état des choses, il faudroit bien s'y tenir quant aux mesures du moment, et ne considérer encore la quadruple alliance que comme un moyen de sûreté pour l'avenir. Mais v[otre] E[xcellence] elle-même, avec une confiance dont je ne puis qu'être extrêmement reconnoissant, m'a fait l'honneur de me dire que si la Cour de Vienne vient à s'ouvrir enfin sans réserve, il est possible qu'on apprenne qu'elle redoute elle-même les suites de sa paix avec les François ; qu'il n'est point vrai qu'elle ait consenti à la cession de toute la rive gauche du Rhin, ni surtout à celle des places fortes sur ce fleuve, et que si elle voyoit sûreté à rentrer dans le conflit, elle y rentreroit plutôt que de rester exposée aux dangers qu'elle a produits elle-même. Or, si un tel état de chose venoit à se manifester en peu de jours, j'ose croire que v[otre] E[xcellence] y trouveroit un motif de reprendre le plan entier du Cabinet de St. James, comme s'appliquant alors à l'état des choses qui seroit redevenu tel qu'il étoit lorsque ce plan a été dressé.”

“M. de H[augwitz] convint absolument de cette distinction, et me dit dans les termes les plus forts ; que d'or-en-avant il devoit être parfaitement entendu entre les deux cours qu'un grand intérêt commun les lioit, et devoit leur réunir les deux autres puissances, celui de leur existence même. Qu'un tel intérêt ne pouvoit que produire un coup d'oeil commun sur les objets, et le concert dans les moyens. Que le plan de se réunir dès l'abord pour la défense de l'Allemagne, si, dans l'état actuel des choses, la guerre venoit à se rallumer, étoit évidemment le seul à suivre ; et qu'on ne le perdrait point de vue à Berlin ; non plus de le concert pour la sûreté future si la paix se faisoit, ni l'intérêt de l'Allemagne à promouvoir alors celle de l'Angleterre.

“ Les choses étant arrivées à ce point qui étoit final pour le présent, et devant, selon ce qui étoit convenu, communiquer alors toute l'affaire à my Lord Elgin pour être delivré aussi de l'incognito embarrassant où j'avois été tenu jusqu'alors, je pris la liberté de prier M. de H[augwitz] de m'expliquer plus particulièrement la raison pour laquelle il avoit exigé ce secret rigoureux, dont maintenant j'aurois à me justifier vis-à-vis de my Lord Elgin. Voici la substance de ce que s'E[xcellence] me dit sur ce sujet.

“ ‘ Nous n'avons aucune raison de cacher aux François des communications avec l'Angleterre ni avec aucune autre puissance ; ils savent bien que nous en avons ; ils prévoient même que ces relations se resserreront de plus en plus à cause d'eux-mêmes ; et ils vont jusqu'à dire que cela doit nécessairement arriver, et que c'est une des raisons pour lesquelles ils doivent profiter de leur avantage actuel, afin de se procurer des moyens de sûreté pour l'avenir, en demandant le Rhin pour limite, et d'en occuper les passages. Il n'y auroit donc eu aucun inconvénient à traiter à droiture entre my Lord Elgin et moi l'affaire actuelle, puisque nous en avons une autre (qu'il m'expliqua) ; parceque le secret auroit été observé, et qu'il est surtout indispensable pour cette affaire particulière, de peur que sa découverte n'ammenât quelque coup de surprise ; car les François sont en mouvement, et nous ne le sommes pas. Mais dans la manière dont l'affaire a été acheminée par vous, et l'entremise seule du duc de Br[unswick] conduit ainsi à la traiter avec vous, le danger de la découverte auroit été augmenté par des communications de votre part avec my Lord Elgin qui, sûrement, auroient été apperçues ; parcequ'il a fallu tout ce temps pour amener l'affaire où elle est. Mais à présent qu'elle est déterminée, et qu'elle sera dans les mains de my Lord Elgin, nous pourrons nous en entretenir comme de toute autre affaire. Et quant à vous, comme vous paroîtrez maintenant parmi ceux que vous vous proposez de fréquenter, et que même, quand le Roi et la Reine seront visible, ayant l'honneur d'être au service de la Reine d'Angleterre, vous devrez voir leurs Majestés comme elles s'y attendent, nous pourrons alors nous revoir, ou chez moi, ou ailleurs, seuls, ou avec my Lord Elgin, comme cela auroit lieu avec tout autre étranger.’

“ Je pris encore la liberté de demander à s'E[xcellence] si, depuis que my Lord Elgin avoit reçu des instructions sur le même objet, il ne s'étoit rien passé entr'eux qui y eût du rapport ; afin que je pusse savoir d'où je devrois partir pour l'informer. M. d' H[augwitz] me répondit que my Lord Elgin ayant été malade, ils ne s'étoient point vus durant tout le temps qui s'étoit écoulé depuis qu'on m'avoit sçu chargé de cette commission.

“Revenant alors au mémoire, sur lequel je n’avois fait qu’une remarque que s’E[xc]ellence avoit approuvée, et à laquelle elle m’avoit promis d’avoir égard, elle me fit l’honneur de me dire qu’elle avoit attendu d’en demander au Roi son approbation formelle que nous l’eussions discuté ensemble; qu’elle le mettroit maintenant sous les yeux du Roi, et en feroit faire ensuite une copie pour me la remettre demain au soir chez elle. Je laissai alors en suspens la manière de faire parvenir cette copie à votre Excellence, jusqu’ à ce que j’eusse eu l’honneur d’informer my Lord Elgin; ce que je dis à s’E[xc]ellence que je me proposois de faire ce matin. En conséquence, étant rentré chez moi, j’allois écrire à my Lord Elgin, lorsque M. Garlike y entra, venant de la part de my Lord Elgin pour me prier de passer chez lui, ayant appris par la Gazette que sous mon titre de Professeur de Gottingue, j’étois à Berlin depuis quelques jours.”

Le 17. “Etant allé ce matin chez my Lord Elgin, je l’ai trouvé encore frappé de l’idée qu’il y avoit quelque dessous de carte dans le désir de M. de H[augwitz] de traiter l’affaire avec moi avant que de la lui communiquer. Un doute de my Lord Elgin est suffisant pour que je n’épargne pas ma peine. Il est convenu avec M. de Haugwitz que my Lord Elgin ira demain à 11 heures chez lui; et alors il observera lui-même; mais, en attendant, j’ai informé M. de H[augwitz] que voulant rendre un compte exact à Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick de ce qui s’étoit passé ici, j’allois partir pour Brunswick; ce qu’il a fort approuvé.

“Ainsi je pars encore aujourd’hui, et je ne m’arrêterai pas la nuit si je le puis, afin de ne perdre aucun temps. Je me borne donc à joindre ici la mémoire de M. de H[augwitz], et quand je serai bien instruit par s’ a[ltesse] s[érénissime] je reviendrai ici pour y attendre par my Lord Elgin les instructions qu’il plaira à votre Excellence de me donner; mais auparavant j’aurai l’honneur de lui écrire de Brunswick.”

Enclosure.

Confidential Mémoire of COUNT DE HAUGWITZ in reply to that of LORD GRENVILLE.

“Le Cabinet de St. James ayant manifesté dans un mémoire confidentiel, le voeu de renouer les liaisons qui ont subsisté cidevant entre la Prusse et l’Angleterre, la cour de Berlin s’empresse de répondre à cette ouverture amicale avec une entière franchise.

“Elle s’abstiendra de son côté de toute observation sur les événemens passés. Ce n’est pas le moment où il convient d’y toucher, et il ne s’agit aujourd’hui que de s’occuper des intérêts présents et futurs des deux puissances.

“Toutefois le Roi éprouve une satisfaction secrète en se rappelant que, même après l’époque facheuse où l’intimité de leurs anciennes liaisons a souffert quelque atteinte, la Prusse, fidèle au système que la nécessité des circonstances l’obligeoit d’embrasser, n’en a pas moins continué de rendre des services essentiels à l’Angleterre, en stipulant une neutralité absolue en faveur du nord de l’Allemagne, et en soutenant cette neutralité par des mesures respectables. Elle a sauvé de cette manière l’électorat de Hannovre, si souvent menacé d'une invasion ennemie. Elle a sauvé le commerce de la Grande Bretagne en lui conservant les embouchures du Weser et de l'Elbe, c'est à dire les débouchés et les points de communication qui lui étoient indispensablement nécessaires sous tous les rapports possibles.

“La Cour de Londres ne méconnoit pas ces avantages, et après avoir consulté plus mûrement les convenances respectives des différentes puissances de l'Europe, elle s'est convaincue elle-même que la Prusse ne doit pas se charger d'un rôle offensif dans la guerre contre la France. Aussi le Roi est-il très décidé de s'en tenir scrupuleusement au système de paix et de neutralité que son auguste père avoit adopté. C'est le seul qui s'accorde dans les conjonctures présentes avec les intérêts de sa monarchie et avec intérêts de ses alliés. Rien au monde ne pourra l'engager à s'en écarter, et il saura le maintenir tant que la République Française sera exacte à observer les stipulations des traités.

“Elle vient de protester encore tout récemment à sa Majesté que les bruits d'un projet d'invasion dans l'électorat de Hannovre ne sont destitues de tout fondement, et que la ligne de démarcation ne sera point enfreinte. Il faut espérer que ces assurances ne seront pas démenties par l'événement, et que les négociations du congrès de Rastadt acheveront de rendre la paix à l'empire Germanique ; mais si l'on pouvoit supposer que le Directoire exécutif fut capable de manquer à ce point à ses engagements ; s'il étoit capable de tenter une entreprise hostile contre l'électorat de Hannovre et les villes Anséatiques, le Prusse, jusques-là inébranlable dans son système de loyauté et de paix, opposeroit aux François une défensive vigoureuse ; elle déploieroit toute son énergie dans cette nouvelle lutte, et elle ne craindrait pas de mesurer l'ancienne réputation de ses armes contre l'ennemi commun. Les mesures imposantes qu'elle a sù préparer pour la défense éventuelle du nord de l'Allemagne aux premières apparences de l'approche du danger, ont pû apprendre aux François ce qu'ils doivent attendre d'une puissance qui se fait un devoir religieux de remplir ses engagements, mais qui exige aussi à cet égard la plus stricte réciprocité. Le Roi a l'oeil ouvert sur tous les mouvemens des armées républicaines, et quels que puissent être leurs desseins, elles ne le prendront pas au dépourvu.

“Il n'en est pas moins vrai, et la cour de Londres l'a senti la première, que si la Prusse devoit rentrer en état de guerre contre la France, si elle devoit se charger efficacement de la défense du nord de l'Allemagne, il seroit injuste de rejeter sur elle tout le poids du fardeau. La sphère de son énergie dépendroit nécessairement des moyens qu'elle pourroit y apporter, et l'Angleterre auroit un intérêt prépondérant à seconder les efforts du Roi.

“Sous ce point de vue il ne se feroit aucun scrupule d'accepter, le cas échéant, les secours pécuniaires que l'Angleterre lui propose, puisque les sacrifices qu'elle s'imposeroit le mettroient en état de la préserver des dangers qui reflueront sur elle par l'invasion du nord de l'Allemagne. Indépendamment de la défense des états de sa Majesté situés dans l'enceinte de la ligne de démarcation, la défense de l'électorat de Hannovre, et celle des embouchures du Weser et de l'Elbe, feroient l'objet particulier de ses soins ; et ces principes une fois établis, les deux cours n'auroient pas beaucoup de peine à convenir des arrangemens qui détermineroient l'étendue des secours pécuniaires de la Grande Bretagne.

“En attendant, le Roi a déjà prévenu les désirs de la cour de Londres en fournissant à celle de Vienne l'occasion de s'entendre amicalement avec lui sur la pacification finale de l'empire Germanique. Il a mis dans ses explications toute la franchise imaginable, et sa Majesté Britannique pourra s'en convaincre elle-même par les informations qui lui en reviendront.

“Enfin, et pour tout épuiser, le Roi n'a pas laissé ignorer non plus à la cour de Petersbourg les démarches auxquelles il s'est porté envers celle de Vienne. Il les a participées sans délai à l'Empereur de Russie, et la réponse de ce monarque décidera, en dernier ressort, du degré d'intérêt qu'il attache au sort de l'Allemagne.

“Ce cercle de communications et les explications loyales auxquelles les cours de Berlin et de Londres en viennent à présent, suffisent pour constater l'évidence de l'union qui régne de fait entre les quatre grandes puissances de l'Europe, dont les intérêts les plus précieux se réunissent aujourd'hui dans un même centre. Elles manquoient leur but si elles vouloient s'arrêter à des rivalités et à de petites jalousies dans un tems où tous les gouvernemens monarchiques ont une cause commune à défendre ; dans un tems où ils doivent s'entre-aider et s'étayer mutuellement. Telle est la façon de penser du Roi sur la situation présente des affaires, et le Cabinet de St. James en inférera aisément que les cours amies de la Prusse peuvent compter en pleine confiance sur les principes de sa Majesté. Mais si l'Autriche, la Russie, l'Angleterre, et la Prusse parviennent à s'entendre, si elles établissent entre elles un accord sincère, seroit-ce le moment de donner à leurs liaisons une publicité qui augmenteroit infailliblement l'aigreur des François, et qui reculeroit par conséquent de nouveau l'ouvrage salutaire de la paix, dont tout le monde, et l'Allemagne en particulier, a un si grand besoin ? C'est à la cour de Londres à peser la force de ces considérations, et elle voudra bien se persuader que, quelle que soit la forme de ses engagemens futurs avec la Prusse, ils n'en seront pas moins solides quant au fond.”

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, February 18. London.—“Il m'en conte infiniment de vous entretenir aujourd'hui sur un objet aussi intéressant pour mon agrément personnel, puisque je m'étais formé le roman séduisant de passer la plus grande partie du reste de ma vie dans un pays que j'avais adopté pour le mien ; mais en considérant que je me serais fait un devoir sacré de montrer le plus grand empressement à vous donner mes conseils, si leur résultats avait été contraire à mes propres intérêts, je ne dois pas être arrêté par une fausse délicatesse en n'osant pas vous remettre mes idées, parcequ'elles sont aussi conformes à mes convenances qu'elles peuvent peut-être être utiles à l'Angleterre. J'aime à me flatter que je suis assez connu de vous et de vos collègues éclairés et respectables qui composent le Cabinet de S[a] M[ajesté] B[ritannique] pour qu'aucun de vous ne doute de mes sentimens, de la manière dont j'envisage la conduite de ma Cour depuis le 17 d'Avril jusqu'à présent, et de la douleur profonde que j'en éprouve. Tous les événemens passés, ni ceux dont nous aurons peut-être le malheur d'être encore les témoins, ne me feront jamais varier dans mes principes ; ils seront les mêmes jusqu'à mon dernier soupir. Ce n'est que dans le rétablissement de la monarchie en France que je crois que l'univers pourra retrouver le repos et la sûreté ; et je ne vois de moyen pour amener cette fin désirable que dans l'union intime de l'Angleterre et de l'Autriche, et dans la manière sage et efficace dont ces deux puissances sauront appuyer secrètement les discordes intestines de la France.

“Voilà ma profession de foi ; et c'est aussi le grand but qu'on a toujours trop négligé, dont on n'a fait d'abord qu'un plan-secondaire, et que des intérêts séparés et momentanés ont depuis fait entièrement perdre de vue, comme la paix perfide et honteuse de la Prusse, et les soumissions avilissantes de la Sardaigne, de l'Espagne, de Naples, du Pape, et de ma propre cour en ont successivement fourni le triste exemple. Je suis trop vrai et j'ai trop de confiance en vous, pour ne pas oser ajouter franchement, qu'il me semble que les tentatives réitérées et toujours sans succès que la cour de Londres a fait pour parvenir à la paix avec la soi-disante République ont beaucoup nui à la cause générale. Votre mesure en cette occasion peut avoir été d'une grande sagesse vis-à-vis de la vraiment grande nation que vous gouvernez si bien ; mais on ne peut nier qu'elle n'ait flatté l'orgueil de l'ennemi, en lui montrant le désir ou le besoin de voir finir la guerre ; et qu'en outre, cette démarche n'ait encouragé les gouvernements faibles et timides à oser à l'exemple de l'Angleterre s'accoutumer à l'idée révoltante de la possibilité d'entrer en composition avec le monstre exécrable de l'anarchie. Permettez qu'après ce préambule, qui m'a mené plus loin que je ne voulais, je vous présente ici mes réflexions sur la mesure dont vous m'avez parlé jeudi dernier. Je commencerai par examiner 1<sup>o</sup>, les raisons qui vous y détermineraient ; 2<sup>o</sup> le but auquel elle menerait ; et 3<sup>o</sup>, les conséquences qui en résulteraient. Croyez que mes observations ne seront dictées par aucun esprit de parti, mais uniquement par le désir du bien général, qui présuppose de toute nécessité dans celui qui en est animé, un dévouement entier au Cabinet sur lequel se fondent toutes les espérances qu'on puisse encore raisonnablement entretenir. Vous concevrez néanmoins aisément que celui qui n'a pas craint de déplaire à sa Cour, en lui exprimant plusieurs fois combien il blâmait sa conduite, doit dans l'occasion, ne pas hésiter de confier à un ami aussi sage, aussi sûr, et aussi éclairé que vous, ce qu'il croit pouvoir désapprouver dans les projets que vous formez actuellement. Ne voyez dans tout ceci que les épanchemens secrets de l'amitié. Ils doivent toujours être entiers, sincères, nobles et hardis. 1<sup>o</sup> La Cour de Vienne, après avoir reçu de l'amitié de l'Angleterre un million six cent mille livres sterlings d'avance, et s'être engagée à les rembourser par le moyen d'un emprunt à négocier à Londrès sous le garantie du Parlement, quand et aux conditions que le ministère Britannique indiquerait; après avoir donné à son ministre des instructions et des pouvoirs pour signer une convention à ce sujet, se refuse à la ratifier, et fait même des chicanes de prétentions tout-à-fait hors de propos sur l'entretien du corps de Condé. Je suis bien loin d'excuser ce procédé, dont personne ne souffre plus, et ne ressent plus la honte que moi; mais je ne puis m'empêcher cependant d'observer qu'on ne fait aucune difficulté de reconnaître la dette; qu'on en promet même le remboursement; et qu'on se borne seulement à s'y refuser momentanément parcequ'on veut recourir à d'autres roies que celle de l'emprunt, qu'on ne juge pas compatible avec l'état de détresse où l'on se trouve.

“Ce fait incontestable n'excuse nullement le tort réel de manquer à l'engagement pris à l'égard de l'emprunt; mais prouve, en même tems, que ma Cour est bien loin de nourrir l'idée coupable de vouloir escamoter à l'Angleterre les sommes qu'elle en a reçu, puisqu'elle s'occupe précisément des moyens d'effectuer ce remboursement. Oser dire qu'il ne se fera point, c'est parler en l'air, et calomnier sans raison une Cour respectable qui devoit être alors la première à ressentir l'injure qu'on lui ferait en osant la soupçonner et la vilipender à ce point. Je ne vous cacherai pas que mon attachement à mon pays me ferait désirer qu'on y sût au moins apprécier cet outrage, si jamais on nous le ferait. Il ne doit pas être dit, ce me semble, que pour s'être crû obligé de s'humilier une fois, on doive se résigner à recevoir la loi de tout le monde, et à des insultes d'un genre aussi sensible.

“La seule raison qui déterminerait votre ministère à une mesure aussi déplacée serait donc, non pas la crainte de perdre ce million six cent mille livres sterlings (ce qui même ne pourrait pas entrer en comparaison avec les inconvéniens qui en résulteraient) mais notre seul refus de vous faire ce remboursement d'après le mode primitivement convenu.

“Ainsi, donc, ce même gouvernement qui s'est laissé tromper par la Prusse sans lui témoigner son humeur d'une manière éclatante, quoiqu'elle lui donnât gratuitement des subsides; qui, après avoir également payé des subsides à la Cour de Sardaigne, y a laissé son ministre quoique ce pays ait fait une alliance avec les régicides; qui, si il avait voulu trouver un prétexte plausible pour nous prouver son juste mécontentement en avait un honorable au moment des préliminaires de Leoben, ce même gouvernement, dis-je, médite actuellement une démonstration presque hostile, parcequ'on veut le rembourser (d'une somme au fond peu considérable entre des grandes puissances) d'une manière différente de celle qui convient à ses formes parlementaires.

“2. En prenant la détermination de cette mesure si peu réfléchie, vous manqueriez absolument le but que vous vous proposeriez ; car, certainement, ce n'est point en vous brouillant avec nous que vous nous engageriez à vous payer de la manière que vous le désirez ; et ce ne serait point non plus, j'espère, en nous montrant une humeur insultante, que vous nous en imposeriez au point de nous faire obéir. J'avoue, de bonne foi, que si j'étais appelé aujourd'hui au timon des affaires, je remplirais immédiatement tous les engagements contractés. La probité, l'honneur, la raison, et mon sentiment me feraient une loi de rompre sur le champ la paix honteuse que nous avons conclu avec l'anarchie, à laquelle je vouerais une guerre acharnée, dont l'issue la plus malheureuse n'est point encore comparable, selon moi, aux fleaux de toutes espèces qui sont nécessairement les suites inévitables de tout accommodement quelconque avec les tirans actuels de la France, sous quelque forme qu'ils se présentent, et quelque masque qu'ils prennent. Je me lierais avec vous plus intimement que jamais par conviction, et inclination ; mais je ne me laisserais point effrayer par des menaces, de quelque côté qu'elles me viennent.

“3. Il me reste encore à vous parler d'une partie des conséquences incalculables qui résulteraient de l'exécution de la mesure que nous discutons. Elle deviendrait la base de la dissolution totale de notre alliance, et peut-être de l'inimitié future, et très prochaine, de nos deux Cours ; car les Chargés d'Affaires qui resteraient pour quelque tems à Vienne et à Londres ne pourraient pas travailler aussi efficacement que M. Eden et moi au maintien de cette bonne intelligence si indispensable. Pourraient-ils prendre la même responsabilité sur eux ? qui sait d'ailleurs si la personne qui me succéderait ne se laisserait point influencer par les préjugés que cette levée de bouclier de votre part serait faite pour inspirer contre vous. L'aigreur assez naturelle en pareille occasion, soigneusement nourrie par les bons offices François et Prussiens, amènerait bientôt une rupture entière, dont le résultat serait une alliance forcée entre nous et les régicides. Je frémis et recule à cette idée. Vous en concevez comme moi et l'horreur et les suites. Ne nous cachons cependant pas que le Cabinet Anglais seul aurait, en dernière analyse, achevé cet affreux ouvrage. Nous sommes loin jusqu'à présent d'en nourrir la pensée. Croyez qu'elle nous répugne toujours. Je le sais positivement, et je puis l'affirmer. Nous ne sommes que des dupes avides et faibles ; effrayés par la France, et trompés par la Prusse. Ne nous forcez point au désespoir, la fin en serait trop odieuse. Faudra-t-il que le sort de l'Europe dépende peut-être d'un différent sur un mode de remboursement ? Daignez vous souvenir, que lorsque vous avez donné l'ordre fatal du rappel de votre flotte de la Méditerranée, j'ai osé vous prédire que vous aviez prononcé l'arrêt de la perte de l'Italie. L'événement n'a que trop justifié mes craintes ; puisse-je me tromper aujourd'hui, mais le danger me paraît bien plus grand encore. Après vous avoir dit ici tout ce que l'honnêteté et mon attachement personnel à l'Angleterre m'ont également inspiré, il ne me reste plus qu' à soumettre mes idées à votre sagesse. Il va sans dire que ce papier très confidentiel n'est que pour vous et M. Pitt; et que je vous prie de me le renvoyer après en avoir pris connaissance. Je crains bien que ce ne soit le dernier de cette espèce que vous receviez de ma part."

THE EARL OF ELGIN TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, February 19. Berlin.—"I never was in a situation of so much delicacy as that in which M. De Luc has placed me. Your Lordship's full instructions and communications of the 14th of January, and the flattering terms in which you mention me in your letter of the same date to M. De Luc, set my personal feelings at rest. But the conduct of that gentleman, as it has defeated your Lordship's wish of engaging in our favour the influence and interposition of the Duke of Brunswick, has, at the same time, thrown a slur on this mission. And M. De Haugwitz will certainly be industrious in having it believed that, in fact, a person in the service of England has been charged by his Majesty with a secret negotiation in behalf of Great Britain, without the participation of the King's Minister. On the business itself I have no observation to offer; nor have I any reason to doubt the honesty of M. De Luc's intentions. But the service has certainly met with an insult from his conduct. And on that account and to obviate the inconveniences from the event, I address myself with confidence for your Lordship's assistance."

LORD GRENVILLE TO SIR CHARLES WHITWORTH.

1798, February 20. Cleveland Row.—"I have to acknowledge the receipt of your private letter of the 27th November, and am very sensible of the terms in which you speak of my endeavours to promote your wishes on all occasions in which it has been possible for me to do so, under all the embarrassing circumstances of the present times.

"With respect to what you say of the complaints of Mr. Eton, I know no ground which that gentleman can have to speak otherwise than with gratitude of the manner in which you have acted towards him. I never had taken any engagement with him for recommending him to the situation of Secretary of Legation at Petersburg; but, on the contrary, distinctly explained to him when he left England that his success in that object must depend on circumstances of which I could then say nothing to him. It is true that I had it then in my mind to make an arrangement for that purpose. I have since satisfied myself that the King's service—the only object I could have in view in such an appointment—will be better promoted by a different arrangement; and I have accordingly submitted to his Majesty the nomination which I officially announced to you last week.

“ When Mr. Talbot arrives, I am persuaded that you will find in him a diligent and willing assistant in such points as come within the sphere of that situation ; and his connection with a part of my family makes me desirous that you should show him such attention and kindness as I am willing to believe his character will fairly justify. Beyond that I say nothing in his favour, or that of any other person.” Copy.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, February 20. Brunswick.—“ J’eus l’honneur d’écrire à votre Excellence de Berlin, le 17<sup>e</sup> de ce mois, dans un paquet que my Lord Elgin devoit faire partir le 18<sup>e</sup> par un courrier pour Hambourg, après qu’il auroit eu ce jour-là une conférence avec M. de H[augwitz] sur le mémoire de ce ministre que j’ai eu l’honneur d’envoyer à votre Excellence dans la susdite lettre. Votre Excellence aura vu qu’elle fut commencée le 15 par le compte que j’avois l’honneur de lui rendre de ce qui s’étoit passé depuis ma lettre précédente entre M. de H[augwitz] et moi, tant avant la remise de ce mémoire que dans l’audience où il me fit l’honneur de me remettre pour le transmettre à my Lord Elgin ; qui avoit approuvé que j’arrangeasse avec M. de H[augwitz] le moment où ils pourroient en conférer, pour qu’ensuite il lui fut remis officiellement. Mais je finis cette lettre à la hâte le 17<sup>e</sup> par l’incident survenu que my Lord Elgin persistoit à trouver un dessous de cartes dans la marche qu’avoit tenue M. de H[augwitz] en voulant suivre d’abord l’affaire avec moi seul ; quoique, pour lui en indiquer la raison ainsi que les déclarations de M. de H[augwitz] au sujet de ce mémoire, je lui eusse donné, comme à votre Excellence dans la lettre que j’avois l’honneur de lui écrire, copie de la minute que j’avois faite, d’abord au sortir de cette audience, de ce qui s’y étoit passé à ces deux égards.

“ Il est souvent nécessaire d’avoir de la défiance, mais on peut la pousser trop loin ; et tel homme qui, en certaines circonstances, a donné de justes raisons de se défier de lui peut, en d’autres, mériter de la confiance ; et si alors on y manque, il peut en résulter d’aussi grands inconvéniens que de trop de confiance en d’autres temps.

“ J’avois beaucoup de raisons de faire cette distinction des temps à l’égard de M. de H[augwitz], mais je n’aurois pas voulu, pour moi-même, fixer seul mon opinion à cet égard ; et quand j’aurois été déterminé, je n’aurois pas eu assez de poids auprès de my Lord Elgin pour fixer son jugement. Je proposai donc que, puisque le mémoire de votre Excellence avoit été destiné à parvenir à M. de H[augwitz] par l’entremise de Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic, qui plus que personne se tenoit au fait des dessous de cartes, je partisse tout de suite pour venir informer s’ a[lt]esee s[érénissime] de tout ce qui s’étoit passé, et en avoir son jugement ; ce que my Lord Elgin approuva. Je partis donc dès le soir même, après m’être prouvé par lettres l’approbation de M. de H[augwitz]. J’ai marché jour et nuit, et je suis arrivé ce matin à 7 heures. J'ai eu l'honneur d'en informer aussitôt s[on] a[ltesse] s[érénissime] qui m'a fait celui de me recevoir à 10 heures et de m'accorder un long entretien.

“ Mon information a été facile ; car ayant les minutes des lettres que j'ai eu l'honneur d'écrire à votre Excellence dès mon arrivée à Berlin, il m'a suffi de les lire à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] en y ajoutant, chemin faisant, bien des détails dont les longueurs, et de quelques-uns même la nature, ne m'avoient pas permis de les insérer dans ces lettres, quoiqu'ils eussent servi à fonder mon jugement.

“ Après toute cette information s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m'a fait l'honneur de me dire que sa satisfaction alloit au delà de ce qu'elle avoit attendu ; puis qu'elle voyoit maintenant dans la cour de Berlin toutes les dispositions qu'elle y avoit désirées, sans les y avoir encore espérées jusqu'à ce point. Qu'elle n'avoit eu aucun doute sur les dispositions du Roi ; mais qu'il y avoit un grand parti à surmonter, à la tête du quel étoit le Prince Henry qui, plus ou moins, avoit eu de l'influence sur M. de H[augwitz] ; ce qu'elle avoit bien aperçu sans rien prévoir qui pût ôter à ce ministre la confiance du Roi. Que par tout ce que je venois de lui communiquer, il étoit manifeste que le mémoire de votre Excellence, et la manière dont il avoit été acheminé dans ces circonstances critiques, avoit fait reprendre le dessus à l'Angleterre, et que le ministre s'étoit par là entièrement détaché de ce parti pour suivre un chemin plus assuré.

“ ‘ Cela est très évident (a remarqué s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] par la manière ouverte avec laquelle il vous a parlé sur la situation dans laquelle il s'étoit trouvé sous le feu Roi, sur ce qu'il pense des François sous leur gouvernement actuel, sur la manière dont la Prusse devoit considérer son traité de paix avec ce gouvernement perpétuellement en révolution, et tentant de tout révolutionner, s'il y avoit lieu à former une nouvelle coalition pour la guerre ; enfin sur tout ce qui se passe maintenant entre Berlin et Vienne. S'il eût dit cela à quelque autre ministre on pourroit le soupçonner de duplicité, en le comparant aux choses passées ; mais le dire à quelqu'un qu'il a lui-même annoncé au Roi, et à qui il a rapporté que s[a] M[ajesté] le verroit avec plaisir ; à quelqu'un qu'il sait être en communication intime avec moi, et à qui il a témoigné si fortement son approbation de ce qu'il vouloit venir me faire un rapport détaillé de toutes les particularités de leurs entretiens, porte à mes yeux le caractère de la sincérité. Car il savoit bien que vous ne manqueriez pas au besoin de faire usage, tant auprès du Roi qu'après de moi, de tout ce qu'il vous auroit dit. D'ailleurs il est un des plus riches particuliers par des terres en Silésie ; et il n'avoit besoin que d'ouvrir les yeux, comme il les a maintenant ouverts, sur les plans des François, pour devenir un des plus ardens soutiens des monarchies. Et j'ajouterai que lorsque je fus à Berlin, et lui parlai du premier mémoire que vous m'aviez apporté de la part de my Lord Grenville, il fut le premier à me presser d'en faire part

au Roi ; ce qui a donné le branle à toute cette affaire. Je ne vois rien d'ailleurs que de très fondé dans tout ce qu'il vous a dit des choses actuelles. Il avoit raison de vous imposer absolument l'incognito jusqu' à ce que vous eussiez acheminé l'affaire à un point déterminé, et de demander qu'elle reste toujours secrète ; car je sais qu'il est fortement épié par le parti du Prince H[enry] qui rapporte tout aux François. Il a eu raison aussi de penser que, dans le moment présent, on ne pouvoit s'occuper définitivement que de l'article concernant la sûreté du nord de l'Allemagne ; car il est très vrai qu'on ne sait encore à quoi l'on pourra amener la cour de Vienne. Mais dès qu'il s'engage si positivement à prendre l'objet de la quadruple alliance, ou après une paix à Rastadt pour la sûreté future, ou tout de suite au cas que ces conférences se rompent, enfin quand il a approuvé votre idée de ne donner pour objet à la paix avec les François que ce que l'Empire en corps leur cederait sans les faire intervenir dans les arrangemens intérieurs, vous assurant qu'il y butteroit, je ne puis disconvenir qu'il ne voye très bien les choses, qu'il n'ait de la suite dans ses idées, et qu'elles ne tendent maintenant au bien général ; surtout puisqu'il embrasse dans ses considérations la sûreté de l'Angleterre comme essentielle à celle de l'Europe. C'est (a ajouté enfin s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime]) ce que je prendrai la liberté d'exposer, dans sa généralité, à sa majesté Britannique, dans une lettre que je vous prierai d'acheminer.'

"D'après ce jugement porté de M. de H[augwitz] par s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] (qui je l'avoue étoit déjà le mien) il se présente un objet de grande considération. On savoit à Berlin, et l'on sait ici, que l'on inspire toujours de la défiance à Vienne pour cette cour, et qu'à présent on l'appuie sur M. de Haugwitz. Or il est très possible que ce soit une nouvelle ruse pour empêcher la réunion des deux cours. Si donc ce que j'ai eu l'honneur d'exposer à votre Excellence, et le témoignage de monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic dans sa lettre au Roi (que je viens justement de recevoir, et que je prie votre Excellence de faire parvenir à sa Majesté) lui inspiroit de la confiance dans les vues actuelles de ce ministre, et leur durée, j'ose représenter à votre Excellence s'il ne conviendrait pas d'en informer le ministre de sa Majesté à Vienne, pour qu'il veille à ce qu'on n'emploie pas ce nouveau prétexte pour traverser les vues de la cour de Berlin. Ne trouveroit-elle point aussi qu'il conviendrait que les mêmes remarques fussent communiquées à my Lord Elgin ; de peur que, continuant dans sa défiance de M. de H[augwitz] quand les causes ne subsistent plus, il ne manquât peut-être les momens où une communication confidentielle pourroit amener, par le changement des circonstances, tout ce qu'on peut désirer de la cour de Berlin ; et qu'il y eût sur ce sujet une correspondance entre les ministres de sa Majesté à Berlin et à Vienne ; ce qui leur serviroit mutuellement de contrôle de la marche de M. de H[augwitz]. Cette remarque, suite naturelle de l'entretien que j'ai eu l'honneur d'avoir avec s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m'a été suggérée par M. de Stamford.

“ J’ai eu la satisfaction de trouver mon digne ami assez bien pour songer à se rendre vers la fin de la semaine à l’invitation de Monseigneur le Prince héréditaire d’Orange, ce qui sera aussi le temps où l’on pourra voir le Roi.

“ Quant à moi, n’ayant pas pris congé de M. de H[augwitz] et devant lui rapporter, ainsi qu’à my Lord Elgin, les idées de Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic, il faut aussi que j’y retourne ; et je le devois par la seule raison de ce que Leurs Majestés m’ont fait l’honneur de témoigner qu’elles désiroient me voir dès qu’elles recevraient compagnie. Mais s’ a[ltesse] s[érénissime] souhaite de plus que j’y retourne à cause de la confiance personnelle que M. de H[augwitz] m’a témoignée, et qu’il a exprimée à s’ a[ltesse] s[érénissime] dans une lettre ; afin qu’ayant de nouveaux entretiens avec lui, tandis qu’il saura que j’aurai l’honneur, de même que M. de Stamford, d’approcher le Roi dans le particulier, il soit ainsi toujours mieux persuadé que le Roi saura tous les détails de ce qui s’est passé entre nous, et que s[a] M[ajesté] est plus intimement instruit des sentimens de Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic ; ce qui lieroit de plus en plus ce ministre à la marche qu’il commence à tenir, non seulement quant aux principes, mais à leurs conséquences dans les changemens des circonstances qui pourroient être amenés par la réponse de Vienne aux dernières dépêches de Berlin.

“ Gardant la minute de celle lettre, je crois devoir, vu l’importance qu’elle pourroit avoir dans le moment présent, assurer son arrivée en envoyant un duplicata à votre Excellence par le courrier prochain ; et j’aurai l’honneur d’y ajouter ce qui pourroit s’être passé dès lors, et peut-être quelques autres détails que le temps ne me permet pas de me rappeler, ou de joindre ici.”

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT STARHEMBERG.

1798, February 22. Cleveland Row.—“ J’ai reçu comme une nouvelle preuve d’amitié et de confiance de votre part, les observations confidentielles que vous m’avez communiqué par rapport à l’intention dont je vous ai parlé jeudi dernier. Vous pensez bien que je ne me suis pas porté à une pareille idée sans y avoir songé avec toute l’attention qui j’ai pu y donner. Je ne vous en ai parlé que pour vous seul, et à cause du rapport que cette affaire aura avec vos intérêts et arrangemens personnels. Elle me feroit, sans doute, infiniment de la peine, et celle que j’éprouverais en vous perdant ne serait pas la moindre. Mais j’ai toujours eu pour principe, que pour les grandes puissances, comme celle-ci, le premier point de tous c’est de ne pas se laisser insulter ; et qu’en dernier analyse, il vaut mieux s’exposer à quelques inconvéniens, que de faire voir qu’on ne sait pas soutenir dans l’occasion le rang et la position honorable de son pays.

“ Vous vous rappelerez, s’il vous plaît, que bien loin de souffrir, comme vous le dites, sans aucun signe de mécontentement la conduite du feu roi de Prusse, nous avons d’abord déclaré le traité rompu de fait, et nous nous sommes refusés au paiement de ce qui restait du subside convenu, en sorte que, depuis ce moment jusqu'à la mort de ce monarque, il n'y a jamais eu la moindre intelligence ni confiance entre les deux Cours; et s'il eut alors retiré son ministre, comme on s'y attendait ici, nous en aurions fait de même.

“Voilà la seule remarque que je vous ferai sur l'objet des observations que je viens de lire encore, avec toute l'attention que méritent la conduite et les principes du digne ami qui me les envoie; et qui, certainement, ne doit pas être, non plus que nous, responsable de toutes les calamités que la conduite inouïe de sa Cour a déjà produite; ni de celles, selon moi encore plus grandes, qu'elle paraît devoir produire dans la suite des circonstances où l'Europe se trouve.

“Je ne garde votre papier que pour le montrer à M. Pitt; après quoi je ne manquerai pas de le renvoyer, comme vous le desirez.” Copy. French.

LORD GRENVILLE to W. WINDHAM.

Private.

1798, February 22. Cleveland Row.—“I have not written to you sooner on the subject of Baron Rolle's regiment, because I had, before I received your letter, heard from Rolle himself upon the subject, and had in consequence requested that the taking any definitive step upon it might be suspended till it could be considered in all its bearings. I have this morning seen Rolle, and have stated to him an idea which had occurred to me of employing a part of his officers to raise a second battalion in Switzerland, to act there in case of open hostilities between France and Switzerland. The uncertainty of the accounts from Paris as to what is doing in the cantons, and the long suspension of news from Germany, six mails being now due, make it very difficult to judge what is likely to happen in that quarter. If the country is completely revolutionized, the regiment will probably be compelled to leave our service. If open war takes place, a part of it at the least might be employed as I have stated above; but, in the interval, it appears clearly right not to precipitate any measure upon it. I have therefore told him he might go to Edinburgh for a fortnight, and when he returns he will probably learn the final resolution on the subject, which, I am persuaded, may in any event be easily arranged in a satisfactory manner to his wishes as far as I collected them to-day.

“I have repeated applications from the Agents of the Royalists, who seem very desirous of involving their business again in confusion, and creating fresh intricacy by mixing this department in their concerns. I have always referred them to you, and will continue to do so, as I am confident no other channel of conducting the business is so good as that in which we have now placed it.” Copy.

W. WINDHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

- 1798, February 22. Park Street, Westminster.—“I perfectly agree with you in the propriety of suspending any decision respecting the regiment of Rolle, till further accounts shall be received from the Continent. But I am afraid such suspension will not be effected by the suspension of anything to be done on your part or mine. The Duke of York’s letter is now on its way; and is conceived, I apprehend, in such terms that, combining with the ready disposition which it will meet with in General Stuart, will produce its effect, if something is not sent the next post to stay it. The Baron de Rolle has, I understand, already signified to His Royal Highness the inutility of his attempting to induce the men to re-engage upon a new term, and this, as I conceive (for I am not well informed of the state of the fact) is so stated in the Duke’s letter that, after a renewal from General Stuart of the proposal formerly made, he is very likely to proceed in reducing the regiment. I cannot but think, therefore, that you had better write a line to His Royal Highness suggesting the propriety of suspending the measure till an opportunity shall be given of considering it under all its relations. Lord Minto, to whom the Baron de Rolle has applied, has, I know, strongly enforced to Mr. Dundas the value of the regiment in a military view, and particularly the great advantages to be derived from it in such service as that of Ireland.

“I was about to write to you at the moment when your letter was brought to me, on the subject of our negotiations with the representatives of the southern armies of Royalists. It is of great consequence that they should not have the hope of playing off one department against another; the efforts of which hope I have already felt in the conversations which have lately been held with them. At first, I am persuaded, they would have taken as a boon anything that had been offered them, without an idea of any claim of right. Their pretensions afterwards rose to a very high pitch. But they are now subsiding again; and will be willing to take whatever sum shall appear to be reasonable; less than which I would not wish to propose to them. My unwillingness on the other hand to exceed in any considerable degree what is reasonable is founded, not merely on my regard to the public money, but upon a view to the future difficulty of obtaining any money for services of this sort, should such occasions ever again arise.”

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, February 23. Brunswick.—“Regardant la lettre que j’eus l’honneur d’adresser d’ici à votre Excellence le 20<sup>e</sup> de ce mois, comme importante à cause du jugement de Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic sur l’état des choses, et sur les dispositions du Cabinet de Berlin, j’exécute ce que j’eus l’honneur de dire à votre Excellence à cet égard, en lui en envoyant ci-joint une copie.

“C'est, je crois, un des points les plus importans dans ce moment que de bien juger M. de H[augwitz], aussi ai-je donné la plus grande attention à m'assurer du jugement qu'en portent s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] et M. de Stamford, d'après leurs observations et les miennes; et c'est le résumé de ce jugement que je vais prendre la liberté de présenter à votre Excellence.

“Il faudroit douter de tout, si l'on doutoit que M. de H[augwitz] ne fût sincère maintenant. Il le doit pour son intérêt particulier, dès qu'à présent il a ouvert les yeux sur la réalité et la nature des dangers; car il n'est pas dans le cas des parvenus; c'est un homme très riche en terres, qui n'avoit pas songé ci-devant à se mêler des affaires, et qui aujourd'hui sent très fortement que des particuliers tels que lui ne peuvent conserver leur état que par la conservation des trônes. Il le doit encore parceque le Roi lui-même est sincère, et qu'il voit bien aujourd' hui que Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic tant par lui-même, que par les personnes qu'il honnore de sa confiance, sera attentif à ce que s[a] Majesté voye toujours la vérité. Il le doit enfin, ou plutôt même il est évident qu'il le veut, puisqu'il s'est prononcé avec moi, qui a l'honneur d'être une de ces personnes, d'une manière trop précise et avec des détails trop particuliers pour qu'il n'ait pas pris décidément le parti d'exécuter ce qu'il professe.

“Pourquoi donc a-t-il été si différent dans les affaires passées? C'est de cet examen que dépend le jugement qu'on peut porter du degré de confiance qu'on peut prendre dans la durée de ce qu'il est à présent. C'est donc ce que j'ai cherché d'après les divers entretiens que j'ai eu l'honneur d'avoir avec lui; dans les quels dès l'abord, d'après ce qu'il avoit eu occasion d'apprendre de moi, il m'a parlé du ton de la confiance.

“Il n'auroit point songé de lui-même à entrer dans les affaires; ayant tous ce qui pouvoit satisfaire ses goûts; passant l'été dans ses terres et voyageant les hivers. Mais il avoit été personnellement lié avec le feu roi tandis qu'il étoit prince royal, et ils avoient de l'amitié l'un pour l'autre; dans un de ses voyages, il avoit eu aussi l'avantage de se lier personnellement avec l'empereur Leopold, voyageant alors; et ce fut ce monarque qui l'engagea à entrer dans les affaires, en désirant qu'il fût nommé ministre de Prusse à Vienne. Cela eut lieu, mais ne dura pas longtemps par la mort de cet empereur. Il revint alors à Berlin et le Roi le plaça dans le ministère. Voilà ce qu'il m'a fait l'honneur de me ré citer.

“A juger de la manière dont il se comporta dès lors, d'après ce qu'il a bien voulu m'en dire lui-même comparé à ce qu'on en sait, il paroît qu'il prit goût à manier les affaires et à les diriger, et que comme il avoit beaucoup vu le monde, il se flattoit de connoître les hommes; et il avoue qu'il s'étoit trompé à cet égard. Mais on peut juger que lorsqu'il l'aperçut, manquant des connoissances qu'une longue expérience seule peut fournir, il n'avoit pas non plus la fermeté qui résulte de ce qu'on se sent les moyens d'être soi-même, ni probablement cette rigidité de principes qui empêche de se laisser entraîner par les autres sans voir clair, ou de biaiser pour ne pas rompre avec eux ; enfin, sans avoir assez de connoissances du nouvel état des choses dans le monde pour n'être pas entraîné par des gens adroits dans des mesures auxquelles il n'auroit pas consenti s'il eût vu où on le menoit ; ni assez de franchise pour reconnoître ensuite qu'il avoit eu tort. Desorte qu'aujourd'hui pour se justifier des maux qu'il reconnoît bien avoir été produit par le Cabinet de Berlin, il représente fortement la manière dont il avoit été entouré, combien il a souffert, combien peu il a été maître de diriger les affaires, pour faire sentir la différence des temps à présent, qu'il a le bonheur de servir un monarque qui voit tout par lui-même, et qui voit les choses comme il auroit fallu toujours les voir. Votre Excellence aura bien apperçu cette disposition dans son mémoire, celle, veux-je dire, de justifier le passé ; et il m'a dit à cet égard que le Roi lui-même avoit une grande délicatesse sur la mémoire du roi son père. Aussi n'ai-je pas cru devoir m'aheurter à ces apologies ; d'autant plus que s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m'en avoit averti ; il s'agit des dispositions actuelles, et c'est sur cela que j'ai dirigé mon attention.

“Quant à l'Angleterre, je ne saurois rien désirer au-delà de ce que m'a dit uniformément ce ministre dans tous nos entretiens ; par opposition à ceux qui travaillent toujours à inspirer au Roi que l'Angleterre lui est inutile ; puisque les puissances ses rivales sont sur le continent ; et qu'une puissance continentale telle que les François, pouvoit seule le rassurer. ‘Cela seroit vrai,’ dit-il, ‘si la nation Françoise étoit différente, et si son esprit rémuant n'étoit mis en jeu aujourd'hui par une faction infernale. Mais un appui tel que celui-là tend à tout renverser. Il n'y a donc que l'Angleterre qui soit pour nous une relation sûre, en tant que rivale nécessaire de ce pouvoir énorme, et qui ne peut nous faire que du bien comme nous pouvons lui en faire ; ce qui produit un lien solide, comme étant fondé sur les intérêts communs.’

“‘Je vous prie’ (me dit-il, dans notre dernier entretien) ‘d'exprimer ces sentimens, aussi vrais chez moi que chez le Roi, à my Lord Grenville, puisque vous pouvez lui parler sans l'appareil diplomatique, comme je le fais ici avec vous. Il y a par exemple, (dit-il), un objet qui a déjà occasionné plusieurs fois des altercations dans le conseil, et que je désirerois bien de voir finir. Ce sont deux réclamations que nous avons à faire au gouvernement d'Angleterre ; l'une de ce qui est dû à une de nos provinces pour le passage des troupes Angloises, et dont les comptes sont arrêtés ; l'autre pour des saisies de toiles appartenantes à nos marchands Silésiens. Les intéressés nous font de vives réclamations ; nous les avons transmises plusieurs fois au gouvernement Anglois, et nous n'avons point de réponse. Je ne vous cache pas que j'ai à lutter à cet égard contre ceux qui ne sont pas portés pour l'Angleterre, et que, dans peu, je serai obligé de donner ordre à notre résident à Londres de faire une nouvelle réquisition formelle. Faites-moi le plaisir d'en prévenir my Lord Grenville afin que cette affaire particulière n'entrave pas la marche des grandes choses qui doivent maintenant occuper de concert la Prusse et l'Angleterre.'

"Je ne promis rien à cet égard, parceque ç'aurait été une trop grande présomption à ma part; cependant puisqu'il l'a énoncé avec un tel motif, je crois devoir prendre la liberté de le rapporter à votre Excellence.

"J'ai maintenant exposé à votre Excellence le jugement qu'on porte ici, d'après tout l'ensemble des circonstances, sur ce qu'on peut penser de M. de H[augwitz], et comme il est de grande importance que le cabinet de sa Majesté pénètre de plus en plus dans ce caractère, nous avons cru devoir, M. de Stamford et moi, avec l'approbation de s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] former le plan suivant. M. de Stamford ira le premier à Berlin, et cherchera d'obtenir une connoissance précise de l'état des choses, en particulier de ce qui regarde M. de H[augwitz] et il en fera part à my Lord Elgin. Je m'y rendrai donc séparément; et pour avoir un motif de mon absence auprès de ceux qui attendoient de m'y voir, j'irai passer par le Mecklenbourg jusqu' à Strelitz, pour avoir l'honneur de rendre mes hommages à monseigneur le Duc, comme j'en suis convenu par lettres avec M. de H[augwitz].

"Arrivant ainsi à Berlin quelque temps après M. de Stamford, et par cette route, nous ne paroîtrons avoir l'un avec l'autre d'autre relation que celle de l'amitié, et je profiterai de ses observations pour me diriger dans les relations de bienséance avec M. de H[augwitz]. J'espère d'être alors près de recevoir, chez my Lord Elgin, les ordres de votre Excellence, si elle juge à propos que je profite de ma position auprès de ce ministre; ce que s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] paroît désirer.

"J'avois déjà eu l'honneur de dire à votre Excellence un des motifs qui m'obligoient de retourner à Berlin; c'est que M. de H[augwitz] m'avoit informé que leurs Majestés désiroient de me voir. Ce motif est devenu plus fort par une lettre que j'ai eu l'honneur de recevoir de Mons[eigneur] le Prince hér[éditaire] d'Orange, dans laquelle s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] me fait la grace de me dire, ' . . . je crois d'autant plus former l'espoir de vous revoir ici que je puis vous informer qu'ayant communiqué au Roi votre départ et les raisons qui vous y ont déterminé, s[a] m[ajesté] m'a témoigné désirer de faire votre connoissance personnelle.'

"J'en étois ici, hier, de cette lettre lorsque s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] nous fit anoncer, à M. de H[augwitz] et à moi, qu'elle ne tarderoit pas à venir pour nous communiquer des choses importantes de Berlin; et peu après nous eumes l'honneur de la voir arriver, me disant d'abord, 'voici ce que vous trouverez, sans doute, nécessaire de communiquer en Angleterre.'

"Rien, en effet, ne sauroit me paroître plus nécessaire, puisque l'une des pièces donne à la fois et la première connoissance des dispositions de la cour de Vienne, et une plus grande certitude sur celles du cabinet de Berlin; car nous eumes lieu de juger qu'on a fait cette communication à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] pour avoir son sentiment; et en même temps, elle mit beaucoup d'intérêt à discuter avec nous la réponse qu'elle devoit faire. Quant à l'autre pièce, elle ne justifie que trop M. de Haugwitz de penser qu'il faut d'abord songer au moment présent. C'est une information venue à Berlin par le résident de Prusse à Francfort. J'ai l'honneur d'envoyer copie de ces deux pièces à votre Excellence.

" Cette information de Francfort donne un tableau aussi juste qu'effrayant de l'effet que produit sur la rive droite du Rhin la perspective de ces fatales indemnités (comme je les nommois déjà dans une de mes lettres) dont les révolutionnaires intérieurs et extérieurs se servent pour disposer à la révolution tous les peuples dont on annonce le changement de maîtres ; et qu'ils annoncent pour cet effet, même au-delà des vues les plus exagérées de la cour de Vienne et d'autres princes. Ce tableau fait frémir pour les suites ; car non seulement il fait prévoir qu'aucunes de ces compensations ne pourroient se réaliser, puisque leurs objets échapperoient des mains à mesure qu'on les découvreroit ; mais l'esprit révolutionnaire, s'étendant par là, attaqueroit sûrement les contrées voisines.

" Voilà donc à quoi buttoient les François en inspirant l'idée des indemnités, et en promettant leur appui à cet égard à l'Empereur et à d'autres princes ; comme ils l'avoient tenté auprès de la Prusse qui l'avoit refusé ; et toujours attentif aux intérêts de ma chère patrie adoptive, je sentis vivement ce qui pouvoit en refluer sur elle.

" En me pénétrant fortement de cet objet, je fus frappé de l'idée que rien ne sauroit prévenir ce coup fatal qu'une renonciation bien prompte de la cour de Vienne, comme de celle de Berlin, à toute indemnisation par laquelle des peuples changeroient de maîtres, et à une déclaration publique de cette résolution à la Diète de Rastadt ; ce que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] approuva entièrement.

" Mais où est l'homme capable de faire saisir cette vérité à Vienne, si elle est bien saisie à Berlin, comme il paroît qu'elle l'est aujourd'hui ; et de travailler à lever les obstacles imprévus, tandis qu'il y a si peu de temps ? S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] et M. de Stamford qui connoissent le min[istre] de Prusse à Vienne, le regardent comme incapable de produire un tel effet ; car, dans des temps comme ceux-ci, toutes les instructions possibles des cabinets ne sauroient pourvoir à la nonchalance, l'incapacité, ou le manque de lumière des agens ; et aujourd'hui le moment manqué ne revient plus.

" Voilà qui a rappelé à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] l'idée de M. de Stamford pour Vienne, comme étant lié avec Berlin, et qui très probablement en obtiendrait la confiance. Il ne faudroit qu'un motif de l'y faire arriver, et cela le plus tôt possible. Je prends donc la liberté d'exposer à votre Excellence ce que pense à cet égard s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] et à quoi M. de Stamford acquiesce, si son degré actuel de santé se soutient.

" Des relations de M. de Stamford avec s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] le Prince d'Orange sont connues ; et l'on soit comment les François se comportent dans le pays de Nassau. Rien donc de plus naturel que s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] le chargea d'aller à Vienne avec des lettres de créance, pour prier l'Empereur de lui accorder son intervention à cet égard. Cela suffiroit; le reste s'opéreroit sous les directions du cabinet de sa Majesté et de celui de Berlin, en l'introduisant pour cet effet, de part et d'autre, aux ministres respectifs à Vienne. Si le roi approuvoit ce plan, il me semble que sa Majesté pourroit aisément engager Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange à envoyer à M. de Stamford à Berlin cette mission, qui ne pourroit qu'être utile à s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] elle-même, et à laquelle votre Excellence joindroit ses instructions.

"On a été si souvent prévenu par les événemens, et ils ont à présent une marche si rapide, que j'ose espérer que sa Majesté et votre Excellence voudront bien pardonner à un zélé et fidèle serviteur d'ouvrir les idées qui lui sont suggérées par des personnages de confiance, ou que lui inspirent les objets qu'il voit de si près. Cependant, je l'avoue, je ne suis jamais sans un sentiment d'inquiétude en me sentant encore, dans cette rapidité de mouvemens, sous les seules instructions de votre Excellence du 14<sup>e</sup> janvier; et j'ai besoin de me rappeler toujours que je ne suis ainsi en action que par la confiance dont sa Majesté, votre Excellence, et M. Pitt, m'honorèrent dans un moment où, sans instructions, et par mon zèle seul, je tachai d'amener un fil dans leurs mains.

"Il est vrai qu'il a passé ici plusieurs paquets et lettres pour moi, tandis que j'étois prêt à partir de Berlin ou en route; et s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] est si inquiète elle-même de ce que je n'ai point de lettres d'Angleterre, qu'elle me fit la grace de m'offrir d'envoyer une estafette à Berlin, pour en rapporter ces lettres; ce que j'aurois sûrement accepté si j'avois pu présumer qu'il y en eût de votre Excellence. Mais M. de Stamford qui les a reçues et fait partir, et qui a reconnu la main et le cachet de M. le Baron de Steinberg et de M. le Comte Wallmoden, les seules personnes par lesquelles une lettre de votre Excellence auroit pu me parvenir, m'a dit que ce n'étoient que de simples lettres. D'ailleurs des lettres, qu'il auroit toujours fallu attendre un certain temps, ne pouvoient influer sur ce dont je devois avoir l'honneur d'informer votre Excellence. J'attendrai cependant ici le retour de toutes ces lettres.

"J'ose donc prier votre Excellence de me faire la grace de m'envoyer le plutôt qu'il lui sera possible ses instructions particulières et générales sur la conduite que je dois tenir dans les circonstances présentes ou qui pourroient survenir; et de vouloir bien le faire dans le paquet pour my Lord Elgin, auprès de qui je serai, j'espère, avant qu'elles puissent arriver; et M. de Stamford y attendra aussi la détermination du Cabinet de sa Majesté à son égard.

"Quant à moi, je laisserai à la décision de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] d'après ce qui pourroit venir de Berlin si, malgré les convenances qui me font désirer de n'y arriver que quelques jours après M. de Stamford, et de passer par Strelitz, pour donner une apparence plus indépendante de lui à l'honneur que j'aurai d'approcher leurs Majestés, il ne conviendrait pas que je me rendisse plus tôt auprès de my Lord Elgin et de M. de H[augwitz]. J'aurai l'honneur d'informer votre Excellence, le courrier prochain de ce que s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] aura jugé convenable; et j'y joindrai copie de tout ce paquet. Car s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] attache une importance très grande à assurer l'arrivée de toutes ces informations à sa Majesté et à son Cabinet; d'où je conclus aussi celle qu'y attache le Cabinet de Berlin; car je n'ai jamais vu encore s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] aussi fortement décidée à concourir à tout ce qui pourroit sauver l'Europe, et s'en occuper si fortement; pourvu (et c'est sur quoi il faut nécessairement se régler) qu'elle puisse se reposer sur quelqu'un qui agisse, et en qui elle ait une entière confiance pour la discrétion et la pureté des vues."

Enclosure (1).

— to the DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.

1798, February . Berlin.—“Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse a reçu une lettre de main propre de sa Majesté l'Empereur d'Allemagne dans laquelle elle déclare être toute disposée à entrer avec s[a] M[ajesté] P[russienne] dans un concert étroit, ayant pour objet de maintenir autant que possible l'empire Germanique dans son état d'intégrité, et d'écarter à cette fin toute vue d'agrandissement qui seroit trouvé y être contraire. S[a] M[ajesté] I[mpériale] décline néanmoins absolument la communication des articles secrets faisant partie de son traité de paix conclu à Campo-Formio avec le gouvernement François; alléguant pour raison ‘que s'il existoit réellement de tels articles, l'impossibilité de les communiquer en seroit une conséquence toute naturelle, et que s[a] M[ajesté] I[mpériale] prioit pour cette même raison de ne point insister sur ce point.’ Quelque inattendue que soit cette réserve, il nous semble toutefois urgent, dans l'état actuel des choses, de répondre à cette déclaration de s[a] M[ajesté] I[mpériale] dans ce sens que s[a] M[ajesté] P[russienne], d'après les ouvertures données par s[a] M[ajesté] l'Empereur, ne doute en aucune manière qu'elle n'ait sincèrement à coeur la conservation de l'empire Germanique, et que, par conséquent, s[a] M[ajesté] P[russienne] se tient fermement assurée que rien ne sauroit être contenu dans le traité de Campo-Formio qui pourroit empêcher un concert entre s[a] M[ajesté] I[mpériale] et elle, dont le but seroit la dite conservation. J'espère qu'en tenant cette marche, nous parviendrons à déjouer les projets très manifestes des François de semer partout la discorde, comme le plus sûr moyen d'accélérer l'exécution de leur plan de bouleversement général.” Copy.

Enclosure (2).

REPORT OF THE PRUSSIAN RESIDENT AT FRANKFORT ON THE MAIN.

“Je m'empresse de vous transmettre le résultat de mes recherches et de mes observations sur l'influence morale du système révolutionnaire François dans cette partie de l'Allemagne, et sur la manière dont les agens démocrates cherchent à agiter les pays de la rive droite du Rhin, et à y semer le germe de l'insurrection. Depuis longtems déjà j'ai suivi cet objet important avec attention, et ma conviction intime me porte à regarder les innovations qui se préparent comme très dangereuses. Ce ne sont plus actuellement les agens François, mais les clubistes d'Allemagne dont les efforts sont dirigés vers l'explosion d'un soulèvement dans ces contrées. Les effets en deviennent de jour en jour plus sensible, surtout depuis la reddition de Mayence. Cette ville renferme un comité révolutionnaire, présidé par le trop fameux Professeur Hoffmann, homme dangereux, qui dans l'excès de sa funeste ambition voudrait renverser tous les gouvernemens. C'est lui qui s'est mis à la tête de cette assemblée démocrate, et qui travaille à un plan étendu pour exalter l'esprit des peuples. Les motifs et les moyens ne lui manquent pas. D'abord l'incertitude qui règne sur la tournure des négociations, et sur le sort définitif des pays qui doivent servir de compensation fait naître de l'inquiétude chez les habitans, et leur fait appréhender des changemens dans la forme des gouvernemens qui leur donnent des maîtres Protestans, ou leur préparent un régime plus dur. Voilà autant de motifs qu'on fait valoir pour se lever contre des échanges et des mutations de supériorité territoriale. La longueur des négociations laisse le tems de poursuivre ce plan qui doit entraîner le bouleversement de tous les états monarchiques ; c'est l'ancien et primitif but de la révolution. Je citerai à l'appui de ce que j'avance l'exemple de Francfort sur le Mein, et de ce qui se passe sous mes yeux. Le sort futur de cette ville paroît décidé. On la croit positivement destinée au Landgrave de Hesse-Darmstadt. Cette perspective répand ici une grande fermentation parmi le peuple. Aussi on le travaille déjà dans le sens révolutionnaire ; et je sais de bonne part que les habitans de Sachsenhausen sont excités et payés pour se soulever et se déclarer libres au moment où les troupes du Landgrave de Hesse-Darmstadt voudront prendre possession de Francfort sur le Mein, et dans ce cas ils seront soutenus par les François qui systématiquement veulent et doivent donner du secours à toutes les nations qui cherchent à se rendre libres. Je crois en général qu'on ne sauroit assez faire attention aux projets ultérieurs des François qui sûrement renferment encore des vues étendues. Si pour le moment ils ont renoncé à l'invasion du nord de l'Allemagne, la prolongation du séjour de leurs troupes sur la rive droite du Rhin annonce des entreprises non moins dangereuses."

CHARLES ARBUTHNOT to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, February 27. Stuttgart.—"Although I am not desirous of troubling your Lordship on a subject which is now settled to my perfect satisfaction, yet I think it my duty to mention that on my first arrival here some difficulties arose with regard to my reception.

"In consequence of Count Zeppelin's being offended at my neither having a copy for him of the King's letter to the Duke, nor a private letter for him from your Lordship, it was intimated to me that I could not be considered at Stuttgart in any other light than that of a simple individual to whom, however, every proper civility would be shown. As there are here at present several ministers with missions of an exactly similar nature to mine, I should, if such a conduct with regard to me had been adopted, have been placed in a most awkward situation; but, what was of much greater consequence, I knew the Duke had been persuaded that, as no letters of credence had been given to me, there was a most evident design of treating him personally with disrespect. On these accounts I lost no time in writing a letter to Count Zeppelin, in which I informed him that the etiquette observed in my mission was such as was always observed in England on similar occasions; and I took care to accompany this representation with expressions which I thought would be personally most flattering to him, as, in consequence of the near connection between the two Courts, it was very much my desire that this affair should be settled amicably. Such, fortunately, was the immediate consequence of my letter, of which I have not enclosed a copy from a wish to save your Lordship the unnecessary trouble of reading it; but, however, it is my intention to preserve one in case it should hereafter be required. It may not be amiss to mention that one of the chief reasons for the difficulties started by Count Zeppelin with regard to the manner in which I have been accredited is the idea he has that he himself when in England was not treated with proper distinction; and on this account, most probably, he has made the Duke believe that the terms made use of in the King's letter to His Serene Highness were not such as his near connection with him might have given reason to expect."

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, February 27. Brunswick.—"À peine mon paquet du 23<sup>e</sup> (dont j'ai l'honneur d'envoyer ci-joint le duplicate à votre Excellence) étoit parti, et tandis que mon ame entière étoit pénétrée de la situation dangereuse où j'y avois peint les choses, que, coup sur coup, de nouvelles informations me firent comprendre que ce tableau étoit loin d'être exagéré. Tout est en mouvement pour produire quelque explosion; et l'Empereur est encore leurré par ses articles secrets qu'il se croit, sans doute, autorisé à ne pas communiquer, parceque probablement ils ne concernent que l'Italie et autres contrées hors de l'Allemagne; mais par lesquels on le mène encore, le bandeau sur les yeux, à exposer d'abord l'Allemagne elle-même, et peut-être la Suisse, pour le conduire enfin à sa propre perte.

"Les indices épars de ce projet sont sous tous les yeux, mais ils ne sont rassemblés et rapportés à leurs vraies causes que par quelques hommes clair-voyans, dont les uns désespèrent, et les autres ne sont pas écoutés. Pour eux l'Europe est certainement près d'être écrasée si marche des affaires entre les puissances qui subsistent encore ne change beaucoup ; si elle ne sort pas de la marche lente, et assujettie à des règles diplomatiques établies pour des temps bien différens.

“ Comment les François ont-ils opéré ce changement qui non seulement étonne mais étourdit presque toutes les têtes ? C’est en répandant partout des gens de génie, bien affectionnés à leurs vues, avec carte blanche pour former des projets, et les exécuter aussitôt, s’ils en voyoient les moyens. C’est ainsi que l’Italie a été conquise par Buonaparté, que la Hollande a été soumise, et que la rive droite du Rhin et la Suisse vont leur appartenir aussi par association, comme par degrés toute l’Europe, si l’on ne se hâte. Or il est impossible que la diplomatie commune, sans des aides extérieurs moins assujettis aux formes et pourtant appuyés de la confiance, non plus que les maximes militaires des anciens temps, sans un centre de confiance sur les lieux, puissent suivre cette marche-là.

“ Votre Excellence a sûrement les nouvelles de Suisse et en voit toute l’importance ; on les a de même dans ces pays-ci, mais on ne fait attention à leur caractère que lorsque le petit nombre d’hommes clairvoyans les font sentir ; et il y en a bien moins encore qui soient à portée de les faire remarquer à ceux de qui seuls peut dépendre le sort de l’Europe. Je prie votre Excellence de me permettre de lui exposer ce qui s’est passé dans le Pays-de-Vaud, que je connois depuis longtemps, et en parlant des lettres de mon frère dans ces dernières circonstances, peut-être s’y trouvera-t-il des traits qui ne lui étoient pas connus.

“ Il faut considérer d’abord qu’il n’y avoit point de pays plus heureux, ni où les gens de la campagne le sentissent si bien ; et depuis longtemps ils s’étoient prononcés contre les révolutionnaires. On comptoit encore là-dessus au commencement de janvier. On connoissoit bien les gens qui buttoient à la révolution ; mais on espéroit qu’ils n’en viendroient pas à bout, à cause du peuple ; parce qu’on ne prévoyoit pas que les choses n’étoient que suspendues ; leur tour n’étant pas venu.

“ C’est cette marche qu’il faut étudier dans l’affaire seule du Pays-de-Vaud. Tout est sûrement prêt partout pour la révolution, malgré la bonne volonté des peuples, prononcée en divers endroits, comme on vient de le voir dans le Pays-de-Vaud, et on la vu précédemment dans celui de Cologne. Mais il suffit que les François aient le temps de s’approcher, et ces dispositions des peuples ne servent à rien. Ils font prendre patience à leurs associés, en leur représentant qu’ils ne peuvent pas être partout à la fois, mais que leur tour viendra ; il est venu pour les associés Suisses, et il est important d’observer tout ce qui se découvre par là dans le Pays-de-Vaud ; ils ne le cachent pas ; ils sont si sûrs d’avoir endormi l’Empereur et d’autres puissances qu’ils parlent tout haut, pour que leurs autres associés les entendent en tout pays, et qu’ils prennent patience jusqu’à ce que leur tour vienne.

“ Voici d’abord l’adresse du commandant des troupes Françaises au premier lieu qu’il avoit choisi pour point d’appui ; ‘ le Général de Brigade Menard, commandant les troupes Françaises d’Italie sur la frontière de Suisse, au Comité chargé des pouvoirs de la ville de Nion . . . . . salut et fraternité.’

“On voit donc déjà ici que dans la petite ville de Nion il y avoit éventuellement un comité prêt à s'emparer des pouvoirs dès que les François seroient à portée; et il s'en est découvert de semblables dans toutes les petits et grandes villes du Pays-de-Vaud; tandis qu'on en étoit dans la plus profonde ignorance; n'appercevant que des mouvemens et discours séditieux, croissans à mesure que les François approchoient.

“Que nous découvrent encore les premiers mots de cette adresse! ‘Vos vœux (est-il dit) sont exaucés. La république Française vous offre sa protection, ses secours. Le Directoire exécutif m'ordonne d'employer tous nos moyens pour vous rendre libres, pour l'entier exercice de vos droits et réclamations. Vos ennemis seront les nôtres . . . . . l'armée d'Italie vous couvre; c'est à vous à vous rendre dignes de hautes destinées auxquelles le Directoire veut vous faire parvenir.’

“Ainsi le Directoire avoit déjà les vœux des associés du Pays de Vaud, comme il les a sans doute des révolutionnaires de tous les pays, et à mesure que ses troupes s'en approcheroient, ces vœux seroient exaucés.

“Les meilleurs peuples pourroient-ils rassurer les souverains contre ces associations, si l'on n'arrête pas cette marche des François? L'exemple du Pays de Vaud va encore nous montrer comment ils rendent cette bonne volonté impuissante. Voici que mon frère me marque à cet égard, dans sa dernière lettre du 13 de ce mois. ‘La crainte qu'inspiroient les habitans loyaux fit hâter l'entrée des François, à la réquisition du comité de Nion; elle eut lieu le 28 Janvier, leur première halte fut dans cette ville qui leur donna le premier baisé fraternel; et aussitôt on y rassembla toutes les barques et bateaux pour aller chercher les troupes arrivées en Chablais.’

“Voilà comment un premier point d'appui leur donne le moyen d'aller en avant, à l'aide de tout ce que le Pays peut fournir, sur quoi leurs associés ont déjà jetté les regards pour s'en saisir aussitôt, en intimidant les gens bien-intentionnés, qui étant sans concert, ne peuvent rien au premier moment.

“Dès qu'il fut connu dans le reste du Pays que des troupes étoient déjà arrivées à Nion, et qu'on alloit en avoir de Chablais, tous les comités chargés des pouvoirs dans les autres villes furent en mouvement; et avant qu'on pût y songer dans la terreur, ils envoyèrent barques et bateaux pour amener promptement ces troupes; qui arriverent à Ouchy sous Lausanne, et à Vevey. Les voilà donc aux deux extrémités et au centre du Pays-de-Vaud.

“On se berce encore communément de l'idée que les déprédations de ces brigands les rendant de plus en plus odieux aux peuples, ils seront enfin arrêtés. Mais on ne distingue pas les gens; ils sont sans doute odieux aux vrai peuple; mais que peut-il contre de tels moyens? Il n'a rien pu à Genève, en Hollande, à Cologne, à Clèves, et il n'a rien pu non plus dans le Pays de Vaud. Dès que les troupes Françaises furent arrivées, leur commandant requit de l'argent et des vivres : 700,000 de Suisse (43,750l.) et des vivres régulièrement. Or qu'importe aux comités chargés des pouvoirs que le pays soit ruiné, pourvu qu'ils triomphent ! Aussi le comité central, avec le langage hypocrite devenu commun aux démagogues, fit-il la proclamation suivante. 'Chers concitoyens, notre situation est fâcheuse, mais il ne faut pas donner à des plaintes inutiles le temps qui doit être employé à agir. L'armée protectrice doit être nourrie ; nul sacrifice ne doit nous coûter pour remplir cet objet . . . . Il faut à tout prix compléter la somme qui nous est demandée, non comme une contribution, mais comme un emprunt, ayant pour hypothèque tous les biens du ci-devant souverain, et les propriétés communales.'

" Ces gens-là ne s'embarassent pas des absurdités ; ces biens du souverain sont ces mêmes droits féodaux qu'ils veulent abolir ; et les propriétés communales sont le patrimoine sacré auquel tout enfant né dans le Pays de Vaud avoit part ; c'est-à-dire la propriété la plus sûre du peuple lui-même. Chacun voit cette horrible absurdité ; mais l'armée protectrice rend tout raisonnable, et elle saura bien soutenir les comités chargés des pouvoirs, quoique chargés dès à présent de l'exécration du peuple, comme cela revient à Genève.

" Voilà donc le système complet développé sur un pays particulier ; et si l'on n'ouvre enfin les yeux, son exécution s'avancera de proche en proche jusqu'au fond de l'Inde.

" Compteroit-on sur aucun traité, aucune bonne intelligence, aucun service même rendu à cette faction ? Je ne puis m'empêcher de copier ici à ce sujet une remarque de mon frère dans sa dernière lettre. 'Quand les François craignirent que les Autrichiens n'entrassent en Alsace par le pays de Bâle, ils crièrent aux Suisses maintenez votre neutralité !—Les Suisses la maintinrent. Les Autrichiens n'entreprirent point de la violer. Mais les François, à force de tromperies, n'ont rien à craindre maintenant de l'Empereur ; et ils ne se contentent pas de violer cette neutralité des Suisses, ils viennent porter chez eux le trouble et le malheur. Jusques à quand dormira-t-on d'un sommeil de mort ! Puisse la nation Anglaise persévérer dans son énergie ! Elle deviendra alors, je l'espère en Dieu, l'archange qui foudroyera enfin l'orgueil satanique du Directoire François.'

" Je l'espère sans doute moi-même. Je voudrois mourir le jour où je cesserois d'espérer que l'Angleterre puisse sauver le monde, et ainsi elle-même ; mais elle ne sauvera pas par son énergie seule, si elle ne vient à servir d'exemple ; et si tout tomboit autour d'elle, elle-même tomberoit enfin. Il faut donc qu'elle travaille toujours à inspirer aux puissances qui se soutiennent encore sa sagesse et son courage. Elle l'a tenté dès longtemps, elle y butte sans cesse, et pourtant l'effet n'avance qu'avec lenteur, tandis que le mal s'avance à pas de géant.

" Dans de pareilles circonstances, la crainte d'être accusé de présomption ne doit point empêcher l'homme de bien de parler de ses amis ni de lui-même. Au mois de novembre passé, il n'y avoit rien attendre du Cabinet de Berlin ; il avoit le bandeau sous les yeux, et dans cet avenglement, il se défioit de l'Angleterre ; ce mal, probablement, ne subsiste plus. Mais le Cabinet de Vienne, qui a encore le bandeau sur les yeux, poussé à la défiance contre la Prusse, s'appuie toujours sur la trappe tendue à tous les souverains ; et la Russie, avec un bandeau encore plus épais, croit à sûreté parcequ'elle est éloignée ; ne voyant pas que, même avant la dissolution de l'Allemagne, la révolution de la Turquie et celle de la Pologne pourroient la séparer de cette base encore subsistante, bien aussi essentielle pour elle qu'elle peut lui être dans son état actuel.

“Ce n'est pas la diplomatie commune qui a produit le premier effet salutaire dans cet état des choses ; c'est la confiance accordée d'abord par l'Angleterre à deux hommes, zelés pour le bien, qui depuis plusieurs années s'occupoient douloureusement entr'eux des progrès du mal ; qui en connoissent toutes les racines, en voyent toutes les branches, en prévoient toutes les conséquences si l'on n'y remédie à temps ; et qui portant partout ces documens dans leur ame, n'ont besoin que d'être autorisés à agir. Dans ma lettre précédente, je pris la liberté d'offrir à votre Excellence la continuation de la vigilance de l'un des deux, dirigée sur la cour de Vienne ; aujourd'hui, que l'horizon s'obscurcit de plus en plus, je me détermine à lui offrir humblement celle de l'autre pour Petersbourg. Oui, malgré mon âge, je ne craindrois dans de telles conjonctures ni la fatigue du corps, ni les travaux de l'esprit qu'une telle carrière présente, dès qu'on m'y croiroit utile ; terar, dum proficiam. Voilà ce que mon coeur m'a inspiré à la vue des dangers qui s'approchent ; je prendrai maintenant la liberté d'exposer à votre Excellence comment cela s'est arrangé ensuite dans mon esprit.

“Le plan entier, comme la partie qui regarderoit M. de Stamford, suppose nécessairement le concours du Cabinet de Berlin. Il faudroit, dis-je, pour le succès de ce plan, pouvoir présenter Berlin, avec l'Angleterre, comme également persuadé du danger général, et comme résolu de concourir de tout son pouvoir, pour le prévenir, aux arrangemens nécessaires à cet effet sur le continent. Ce concert avec Berlin est sans doute encore à produire ; mais nous ne désespérons pas, M. de Stamford et moi, qu'étant ensemble à Berlin, nous ne pussions amener les choses à cet égard au point qu'on y vit avec plaisir cette proposition venir d'Angleterre.

“Il faut pour cela y faire sentir, ce que je crois déjà prévoir, que les François pourroient bien dans ce moment laisser Berlin en repos ; mais que ce ne seroit qu'un nouveau leure. Ils voyent déjà les préparatifs pour la défense du nord de l'Allemagne ; et leur plan n'est point militaire uniquement, il est aussi politique. Ils soupçonnent déjà sans doute que la Prusse et l'Angleterre vont s'unir, et ils se tiendront tranquilles de ce côté pour quelque temps, afin qu'on s'y endorme dans la sécurité. Mais ils ont des associés dans ces contrées, et en particulier à Berlin, et quand ils auront révolutionné le Sud, ils n'auroient qu'à venir auprès des gens arrangés à l'avance pour se déclarer comités chargés des pouvoirs, et qui sauroient paralyser l'armée, comme ils l'ont fait en France, et probablement en bien d'autres endroits. On sentira donc probablement en général qu'il faut se hâter d'éclairer Vienne et Petersbourg, et il ne faudroit pas alors longtemps pour acheminer le plan de concert pour cet effet.

"Jusqu'ici donc, le plan n'en a été considéré qu'entre M. de Stamford et moi; et il restera dans notre esprit jusqu'à ce que nous apprenions le jugement qu'en aura porté votre Excellence. Nous n'en ferons ainsi mention jusqu'alors, ni à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ni à qui que ce soit à Berlin. Mais dans cette vue, M. de Stamford désire que je ne tarde pas à m'y rendre, afin d'être auprès de M. de H[augwitz] et de l'étudier lorsqu'on recevra de Vienne la réponse aux nouvelles dépêches, pour le juger s'il est possible dans ce moment-là; parceque très probablement M. de Stamford sera à portée d'en savoir le vrai; puisque le Roi a fait communiquer les précédentes à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], qui nous a sûrement fait l'honneur de nous les communiquer, ou par sa participation, ou sachant qu'il le pouvoit.

"J'avois compté qu'en partant tout de suite d'ici, mon détour par Strelitz ne me prendroit guère plus de temps qu'il n'en falloit pour recevoir à Berlin l'honneur d'une réponse de votre Excellence à ma lettre du 31<sup>e</sup> Janvier. Mais l'état allarmant des choses, qui affecte beaucoup s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] nous a retenus ici quelques jours, M. de Stamford et moi, pour y réfléchir avec elle et entre nous; et je me propose aussi d'avoir l'honneur d'envoyer d'ici par le courrier prochain un duplicata de cette lettre à votre Excellence; alors donc, en allant à droiture à Berlin, je n'y serai peut-être pas plus tôt que sa réponse."

"J'ai considéré d'abord, pour ma tranquillité sur l'événement de l'entreprise, que si cet effet du zèle des deux amis étoit sans succès, il ne pourroit du moins en résulter aucun autre inconvénient que celui de leur dépense, car il ne s'agiroit que de les adresser aux ministres de sa Majesté dans les Cours respectives, comme des personnes en qui elle prend confiance, pour chercher de nouveaux moyens indirects de déterminer ces Cours à entrer bien promptement en liaison avec l'Angleterre et la Prusse, et leur communiquer les informations ou les fils qu'ils pourroient découvrir pour parvenir aux traités, ou conventions provisionnelles, sur lesquelles ces ministres auroient eux-mêmes les instructions nécessaires.

"Tel seroit donc le seul branle que l'Angleterre auroit à donner à ce plan; et dès que nous l'aurions reçu, my Lord Elgin étant informé, ce seroit à nous d'abord à employer avec lui nos moyens pour que le Cabinet de Berlin se déterminât à nous accorder une même confiance, et un même appui auprès de ses ministres respectifs. C'est là, ce me semble, que peut se trouver la plus grande difficulté. Cependant nous espérons que, durant le temps qui s'écoulera jusqu'à la réponse de votre Excellence, nous pourrons avoir des occasions de faire connoître au Roi et à son ministre et l'importance d'un prompt rapprochement, et qu'ils ne risqueroient rien en nous accordant leur confiance pour l'accélérer. Si donc votre Excellence nous autorisoit à agir, et qu'alors nous parvinssions à faire approuver ce plan à Berlin, nous pourrions nous mettre aussitôt en route, chacun pour sa destination, après en avoir informé votre Excellence.

“ J’ai besoin à chaque instant de me pénétrer de la pureté de mon zèle et de l’urgence de quelque nouveau moyen, pour oser particulariser un plan sur lequel ma première espérance est seulement que votre Excellence daignera l’écouter patiemment de ma part ; mais s’il est convenable, il faut le hâter ; ainsi je continuerai à le détailler, en parlant d’abord de la partie qui m’en concerneroit, où il peut y avoir le plus de difficultés imprévues, et où l’éloignement seul en est une très grande.

“ Nulle difficulté personnelle n’ébranleroit mon zèle, s’il étoit approuvé du Roi et de votre Excellence. Je serois prêt ainsi à partir seul pour Petersbourg ; mais je ne le trouverois pas convenable ; et je désirerois, pour le bien de la chose, d’avoir un adjoint tel que je puis heureusement le proposer à votre Excellence, qui m’accompagnât dans le voyage, m’assistât dans le séjour, et pourvût aux accidens possibles. Je pourrois aisément mettre votre Excellence à portée de prendre elle-même des informations sur cet adjoint ; mais comme ce seroit ici, dans sa totalité, une commission de grande confiance, il lui suffira sans doute de comprendre que je ne puis me tromper dans mon jugement. L’adjoint que je prendrois donc la liberté de proposer à votre Excellence est un fils de mon frère, âgé de 34 à 35 ans, sans autre émolument que sa dépense. Outre l’Anglois il sait l’Allemand, que je ne sais pas, quoique je voyage ainsi en Allemagne. Mais à mesure que je m’éloignerois de ces contrées, mon embarras augmenteroit, et quand j’atteindrois la Russie, je serois helpless.

“ Je compterois que le temps que mon neveu emploiroit pour se préparer, n’excéderoit pas celui dont votre Excellence auroit besoin pour le rendre porteur de toutes ses dépêches relatives à cet objet, dans lesquelles elle voudroit bien être aussi explicite qu’il lui seroit possible, à l’égard de ses instructions tant aux ministres de sa Majesté à Berlin, Vienne, et Petersbourg, qu’à M. de Stamford et à moi. Ce qui suppose, à l’égard de M. de Stamford, que votre Excellence seroit munie de la lettre de créance de Monseigneur le Prince d’Orange, dont j’ai eu l’honneur de lui parler dans ma lettre précédente.

“ Quant à moi, surtout accompagné de mon neveu qui est éclairé dans l’histoire naturelle, je ne serois pas embarrassé d’être bientôt connu à Petersbourg comme voyageant dans ce but. Mais si cela pouvoit me servir de couverture, ce ne seroit rien si je n’avois pas le moyen d’approcher l’Empereur ; et c’est uniquement parceque cela ne me paroît pas difficile, si le plan lui-même étoit approuvé de leurs Majestés, que je me suis arrêté à cette idée. Car ayant l’honneur d’être connu depuis longtemps de s’altesse royale Madame la Duchesse de Wurtemberg, il suffiroit que sa Majesté la reine, en donnant son consentement à cette longue absence, daignât me faire la grace de témoigner à Madame la Duchesse qu’elle souhaiteroit qu’elle et Monseigneur le Duc me fissent l’honneur de m’accorder des lettres d’introduction auprès de leurs Majestés Impériales, pour que j’osasse compter sur la bonté de s’altesse royale quant à la manière pour produire la confiance personnelle en général. Il me suffiroit donc d'être informés par votre Excellence que mon auguste maitresse a eu cette bonté pour moi, pour que je partis avec tranquillité. S'altesse royale pourroit me faire la grace de m'adresser ces lettres chez le ministre de sa Majesté à Petersbourg.

"Si sa Majesté et votre Excellence trouvoient ce plan utile, et qu'il fût résolu, il suffiroit que votre Excellence voulût bien nous faire la grace, à M. de Stamford et à moi, de nous l'écrire d'abord, et de nous autoriser à travailler tout de suite, de concert avec my Lord Elgin, à y acheminer le Cabinet de Berlin; nous nous en occuperions en attendant l'arrivée de mon neveu; et si à son arrivée nous avions perdu l'espérance de réussir, il s'en retourneroit à Londres.

"M. de Stamford, vu sa foible santé, auroit aussi besoin d'un aide avec lui; mais si le plan réussissoit, il espéreroit d'en obtenir un de Berlin. Car ce seroit-là un objet commun et de confiance mutuelle; et par cette considération, la tentative même me paroîtroit très utile; car ce seroit un moyen sûr de sonder le Cabinet de Berlin; et si le plan réussissoit auprès de lui, il le lieroit avec celui d'Angleterre d'une manière bien forte, comme fondée sur un intérêt commun, alors aussi reconnu qu'il est réel.

"Votre Excellence jugeroit elle-même, en cas d'approbation de ce plan, si les ministres de Vienne et de Petersbourg à Londres pourroient être engagés à le seconder, soit directement, soit par des avis; avantage que M. de Stamford pense, d'après de premières relations, de pouvoir obtenir pour lui, comme pour moi, des ministres des deux cours à Berlin.

"Enfin, si votre Excellence me faisoit la grace de m'envoyer mon neveu, elle pourroit lui faire donner un chiffre qu'il communiqueroit aussi à M. de Stamford et qui nous serviroit, soit pour la correspondance entre nous, soit pour celle que nous aurions l'honneur d'avoir avec votre Excellence; à qui je dois avouer qu'à mon âge, et par le manque total d'habitude d'un tel moyen, je serois incapable d'en faire usage sans assistance.

"J'ai maintenant satisfait à ce que mon devoir m'a dicté: je puis voir mal; mais j'ose espérer que votre Excellence me pardonnera la liberté que j'ai prise de soumettre ce plan à sa considération. M. de Stamford ne part qu'aujourd'hui, parceque nous avons voulu considérer ensemble tous les détails que l'exécution de ce plan pourroit présenter à notre vue, et cette lettre part avec son entière approbation; mais si l'idée générale avoit celle de votre Excellence, elle la dirigerait comme elle le jugeroit à propos."

Postscript. "Comme je finissois hier fort tard cette lettre pour aujourd'hui, nous eumes l'honneur de recevoir, M. de Stamford et moi, un billet de s[a]lt[te]sse s[érénissime] contenant ce peu de mots. 'On me marque de Berlin que, depuis le dernier courrier, on n'y a point eu de nouvelles politiques. Mais de Rastadt on me mande que l'ultimatum des François y est arrivé, qu'ils insistent absolument sur toute la rive gauche du Rhin, et qu'ainsi il faudra bien en venir aux sécularisations.'

“M. de Stamford devant partir de bon matin, nous allâmes nous coucher sur cette terrible nouvelle; mais je n'ai pu fermer l'œil qu'avec des rêves agités, et je me suis levé de grand matin, pour avoir encore un entretien avec mon ami. Or j'avoue à votre Excellence que je l'ai sollicité de ne pas attendre l'autorisation de l'Angleterre pour tâcher de se rendre à Vienne, au moins sous celle de Berlin. Car ce traité placeroit toutes les mèches pour mettre le feu aux mines de l'Empire, même sous la forme que j'avois proposée de ne traiter avec les François que pour les limites, et de réserver à l'Empire seul les arrangemens intérieurs. Au point où sont arrivées leurs vues, les François jetteroient tout à la tête de l'Empereur, auroient toutes les complaisances possibles avec lui, ou son Cabinet, pour le pousser à ce traité; sûrs que dès qu'on commenceroit ces sécularisations, par l'Empire ou par eux, il y auroit des révoltes de tout part, et que le feu s'étendrait rapidement de proche en proche sans qu'on fût plus à temps de l'arrêter. M. de Stamford sentant l'urgence de ce que je proposois, m'a répondu, 'Oui, si seulement je pouvois être appuyé du Duc!' Je lui ai promis de travailler à ce que cela fut, et dans cette espérance, il tâchera de faire sentir au Roi l'importance d'un moyen prompt, et de déterminer sa Majesté à demander au Prince héréditaire d'Orange de lui donner quelque sorte de prétexte d'aller à Vienne. S'il a ce premier assentiment, il s'abouchera avec my Lord Elgin, puis il travaillera auprès de M. de H[augwitz] à quoi j'espère d'être à temps de l'aider. Mais auparavant, comme cela ne sauroit réussir sans que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ne se prononce fortement auprès du Roi en faveur de cette mesure, je vais travailler à l'y engager.

“En attendant que votre Excellence nous ait fait l'honneur de répondre à cette lettre, je tournerai toutes mes vues ici et à Berlin, de concert avec M. de Stamford, pour tâcher au moins de gagner du temps, en retardant la décision de Rastadt par la Prusse; et si à l'arrivée de la réponse de votre Excellence, M. de Stamford étoit déjà parti pour Vienne (ce que je désire extrêmement) et qu'elle eût acquiescé en tout, ou en parti au plan proposé dans cette lettre et dans la précédente, on lui enverroit tout-de-suite ce renfort. Alors il seroit à souhaiter que la lettre de créance de Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange pût arriver par le courrier. J'ai peur que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ne soit à Bath, ce qui retarderoit; mais au moins il seroit essentiel que M. de Stamford fût informé le plus tôt possible, s'il peut l'attendre.

“Je sens de plus en plus que dans un temps comme celui-ci, il faudroit qu'il y eût un Cabinet mobile pour le bien, comme les François l'ont pour le mal. Car je ne puis douter qu'ils ne fassent parler le Directoire quand ils veulent; et il y a même apparence que ce Directoire ostensible n'est rien, qu'il y en a un secret qui le fait parler et agir comme il veut.”

OFFICIAL MINUTE. FOREIGN OFFICE.

1798, February. Downing Street.—“The inclosures in Mr. Talbot's dispatch No. 7, of the 13th December, are two memoirs submitted to the consideration of Government by several of the proscribed* French assembled at Neufchatel on the — November:—the one marked A was drawn up by M. Vauvilliers, the one marked B by Mr. Camille Jordan.

“They are in substance the same, but I think the latter both more accurate in its statement of facts, and more clear and precise in its manner of specifying the demands and opinions of the meeting. M.M. de Précy and D’André were present, and are to be considered as agreeing with the Deputies in every point. It is also stated in the mémoires as a fact that the Director Carnot was of the same opinion.† It is to be observed, however, that subsequent to the date of the meeting, Carnot had connected himself with the Lameths and with the Deputies Dumolard and Portalis who refused to attend the meeting, and whose political opinions are known to be very different from those of the Deputies assembled. The mémoires contain:—1 Observations on the present state of France considered with respect to Great Britain as well as the rest of Europe, and on the danger which threatens every civilized nation, if the present usurped government be not overthrown.

2. “A summary of the reasons that should determine the British Government to take an active though secret part in the affairs of France, to make a common cause with the Moderate Party, and to support that Party with effect as before the 4th September, independently in the first instance of any question about this or that form of government. These two points are well treated, but they contain no argument materially new, the greater part of those employed having been discussed on some other occasion, and those which have not, being from their very nature almost self-evident.

3. “An assertion that notwithstanding almost the absolute power that the Government of France certainly possesses at this moment, there are yet sufficient elements to enable its enemies to bring about its destruction.

4. “A discussion of all these different elements, in which the state of the publick opinion and of the finances—the situation and spirit of the armies—the composition of the two assemblies—the division in the Directory—the connexions of Carnot in the interior—his correspondence with Buonaparté, and many other points are fully examined and considered.

“These two points are well treated—they certainly contain some new matter, and many old subjects are considered in a new point of view. The whole, however, is more fully and more clearly discussed in a series of letters from M. d’André which are delivered to Mr. Canning for your Lordship’s perusal.

5. “A plan of operations in most respects the same with that which was adopted before the 4th September, insisting particularly

---

* Deputies names: Vauvilliers, Camille Jordan, Lemérér, Polypard, Couchéry, Praire, Blain, Bornes, Andréo de la Lozère.

† It appears as well from Mr. Talbot’s dispatch as from a private letter that I have received by this last post that Carnot’s opinion had been collected by the Deputy Andrée de Lozère, who was present at the meeting.

on the necessity of supporting the Philanthropick Society, and on influencing the ensuing elections. This plan, however, is considered as consistent with a general insurrection in the southern departments which, it is said, will probably happen in case any extraordinary requisitions should be put in force for carrying on the war; and with a blow to be struck at Paris, for which the Deputies say they have a plan prepared which they are ready to submit to the British Government.

6. "A demand of funds without specifying any particular sum, only desiring that an English commissary may be sent to the frontiers of Switzerland, as well to superintend the expenditure as to judge of the necessity or expediency of employing an extraordinary sum on any particular occasion.

"A particular mémoire has been sent to me on that subject by M. D'André, which I enclose with this observation, that from the money returned from Paris after the 4th September the expenditure of the months of October, November and December had been provided for on a scale of about £3,500 a month. It is possible, and I think probable, that some part of this sum has been economized, otherwise the Deputies would be without any resource for the month of January—but this is a point that can only be ascertained on the return of Mr. Talbot. Were it not that he had been hourly expected for these last ten days, I should have submitted to your Lordship the propriety of giving a provisional credit of £3,500 for each of the two months of January and February."

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, March 3. Berlin.—"En conséquence de ce que j'ai eu l'honneur de dire à votre Excellence dans ma lettre d'hier, après avoir eu un nouvel entretien avec s'altesse sérénissime, et avant que de me mettre en route pour Berlin, je fais partir ce peu de lignes pour Hanovre, destinées pour le prochain courrier.

"Comme il s'écoulera ainsi trois jours avant que cette lettre parte, et les événemens marchans à pas accélérés, je ne doute pas que votre Excellence ne reçoive par la même malle de plus grands détails sur les objets dont s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m'a fait l'honneur de m'informer.

1° "Le projet de révolutionner la Souabe, dont j'ai déjà eu l'honneur de parler à votre Excellence, se prépare et s'annonce publiquement.

2° "On a découvert le même complot en Ost-Frise, et les troupes Françoises augmentent en Hollande.

3° "Les François exigent Manheim, Ehrenbreitstein, et Philipsbourg.

4° "Et pour faire passer ces prétentions M. Waitz, ministre du Landgrave de Hesse à Paris, qui est de retour, s'est chargé de la proposition au Roi de Prusse de prendre ce qu'il lui plairait pour indemnisation de ce côté du Rhin, avec l'appui et sous la garantie des François; ce qui a été refusé.

“ Il semble que la Providence ait permis que je pusse avoir tant d’entretiens familiers avec M. de H[augwitz] sur les vues de la faction qui conduit les troupes Françaises, et que je remisse aussi mon dernier mémoire à s[on] altesse sérénissime avant ces événemens ; car ils ne peuvent en ignorer les causes, ni le seul remède. Aussi s’a[lt]esse s[érénissime] est elle fortement de l’avis du prompt départ de M. de Stamford pour Vienne, et fera sûrement ses efforts pour qu’on en sente la nécessité à Berlin ; mais elle tourne toujours les yeux vers l’Angleterre, et m’a fait promettre de lui communiquer aussitôt ce que je pourrois recevoir de votre Excellence.”

The EARL OF CLARE [Lord Chancellor of Ireland] to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, March 6. Dublin.—“ Will you excuse the liberty that I take in addressing this packet to you, and requesting that you will have the goodness to send one of the pamphlets to the Marquis of Buckingham. I was induced, at the earnest solicitation of Lord Camden and many other of my friends, to undertake the very laborious task of revising a most inaccurate note of what fell from me in the late debate in our House of Lords. And although I found it impracticable to retrace the whole of a very detailed statement, I have been enabled to recover the outlines with tolerable accuracy. Your Lordship who heard Lord Moira on this subject, will be surprised to see that he denied in distinct and positive terms his having advanced any charge against the Irish army in his statement made in the British House of Lords, and that he asserted as positively his observations on the danger of Parliamentary Reform to have been restricted to Great Britain.”

COUNT STARTEMBERG TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, March 7. London.—“ Vous aurez demain matin ma première lettre officielle au sujet de la mission de M. Ransonet. Elle ne regarde absolument que le payement des intérêts en arriéré de l’ancien emprunt de 4,600,000*l.*, négocié en 1795 ; et prend en considération les moyens de pourvoir à ce que nous ne soyons plus dorénavant en arrière sur cet objet. Il paraît que M. Eden a plus appuyé sur ces intérêts que sur l’affaire du million six cent mille livres, le sujet de la convention non ratifiée. M. Ransonet a l’ordre de répondre au cas qu’on en fasse mention, que cet article, sur lequel on est décidé à vous satisfaire comme sur les autres quant au payement, regarde le département des Affaires Étrangères. M. de Thugut se l’est réservé, et me promet une instruction très prochaine, que sûrement l’envoi de mon dernier courrier, arrivé à Vienne le 7 de Février, aura décidé d’une manière plus positive, et plus conforme à vos désirs.”

SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, March 7. Naples.—“I profit of the opportunity of a Neapolitan messenger’s going to London to inform your Lordship that Mr. Livingston arrived here on Sunday last from Trieste by sea, and brought me your Lordship’s letters of the 22nd of December last, and your Lordship may depend on my punctual execution of the instructions therein contained. I have the satisfaction of assuring your Lordship that there is every appearance of Mr. Livingston’s succeeding in his commission both to the satisfaction of his Majesty, as to that of his Royal Highness Prince Augustus, although nothing has been finally settled except his Royal Highness having consented to leave Naples as soon as possible, which indeed is necessary at this critical juncture. I do not apprehend that this kingdom is in immediate danger of being invaded by the French, as they are not in sufficient force at Rome, where they have not more than eight thousand men, and not above twenty thousand more in all Italy. But there can be no doubt that, whenever they shall see a favourable opportunity, they mean to overturn this government, and plunder this country as they have done the rest of Italy, notwithstanding their peace, and constant professions of friendship; and this government, I am rejoiced to see, is daily and seriously occupied in putting this country in the very best state of defence.

“Your Lordship will, by the papers from Paris, have been informed of what has passed at Rome, as messengers are kept constantly going from thence to Paris. At present they are occupied in forming the new government, having quelled many little insurrections of the Romans in Rome and its neighbourhood; but the differences between the French officers and their generals and commissaries still subsist.

“Yesterday I was honoured with your Lordship’s private letter of the 27th of January through the channel of Sir Morton Eden, and am most grateful for the kind and friendly explanations you are pleased to give me relative to my plan of retreat, and for the assurance of the continuance of your Lordship’s friendly protection. I mean to profit of the very first opportunity to get to England, according to the King’s gracious permission, either by land or sea; but as I think I have little chance of a secure conveyance home by sea, I hope to be able, in the spring, to get a passage from Manfredonia to Trieste in one of his Sicilian Majesty’s armed vessels, and so on to Vienna. As I am totally ignorant of the present political state of our Court with respect to that of St. Petersburg, but see the importance of there being at this moment a perfect understanding between them, should our Government have a wish to try any new ground with the Emperor, perhaps it could not employ a person that would be more agreeable to his Imperial Majesty than me. I had the honour of attending, some years ago, the Great Duke and Duchess of Russia, by their particular desire, during their whole stay at Naples, and lived with them in the utmost confidence, since which his Majesty has several times honoured me with his correspondence, and invited me to his Court. I throw this out to your Lordship, not with any wish or view of serving myself, but out of pure zeal and earnest desire of serving my good King and country to the utmost of my ability; and it would be of little consequence to my private concerns whether I should return home a few months sooner or later, or travel some leagues more or less. If your Lordship would be so kind as to send a line in answer to this hint directed to me under cover to Sir Morton Eden, I should either receive it at Vienna, or it might be forwarded to Naples, in case I should not be able to get away as soon as I expect."

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, March 9. Berlin.—"J'arrivai ici avant hier matin, et j'ai déjà eu plusieurs entretiens avec M. de Stamford, qui me conduisent à avoir l'honneur d'écrire dès aujourd'hui à votre Excellence, quoique je n'aie pas eu encore l'avantage de voir my Lord Elgin, chez qui je me propose d'avoir l'honneur de passer ce matin pour le prier de vouloir bien envoyer dans son paquet cette lettre pour votre Excellence, dont le sujet est indépendant de l'entretien que je désire avoir avec lui.

"M. de Stamford, lié déjà avec le min[istre] de Vienne, et s'étant mis en relation avec celui de Petersbourg, a été ainsi à portée d'apprendre des choses qui nous étoient inconnues à Brunswic, et qui changent beaucoup à nos yeux la nature des difficultés, sans changer celle du danger, qui procède toujours des défiances quoiqu'elles aient changé de forme.

"J'aurois attendu de pouvoir former un jugement sur ce nouvel aspect des choses, si je ne voyois déjà très clairement l'inutilité de l'idée que j'avois eue de prendre la liberté de me proposer à votre Excellence pour aller à Petersbourg. Je sentois bien qu'il y avoit de ce côté-là quelque obstacle, puisque rien n'avançoit; mais je n'en connoissois pas la nature; puisqu'il paroît que l'Empereur connoît assez le danger pour être déterminé à agir conformément au besoin. Ainsi je dois retirer le plus tôt possible la proposition que le zèle m'avoit engagé de faire à cet égard, espérant que sa Majesté et votre Excellence voudront bien me la pardonner, vu que je ne pouvois connoître ce que je n'ai appris qu'ici par la venue de M. de Stamford.

"Je souhaite que le plan suivi par ceux qui veulent le bien, plan fort différent de celui dont j'avois pris la liberté d'ouvrir l'idée à votre Excellence dans ma lettre du 20 Février, se trouve le meilleur; quoique si même il réussissoit, ce ne pourroit être qu'avec du temps, et cependant on n'a jamais pu dire avec plus de vérité periculum in mora.

"Quant à ce qui nous regarde, M. de Stamford et moi, qui ne pouvons rien dans la diplomatie et dont l'unique objet étoit le roi, il nous paroît aussi toujours plus évident que c'est-là le point où il faut tendre, sans quoi l'on n'avancera pas; et que selon toute probabilité, on ne parviendra pas à déterminer sa Majesté sans l'influence du Duc de Brunswic, ou immédiatement, ou comme dirigeant.

“M. de Stamford a déjà eu l'honneur de voir le roi, mais en public ; il attend l'effet de la promesse de sa Majesté de le recevoir en particulier. J'espère aussi d'avoir cet honneur, et nous ferons alors l'un et l'autre tout ce qui sera en notre pouvoir. Mais le point sur lequel nous prévoyons qu'il faudra réunir nos efforts, c'est de travailler à déterminer s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] à venir ici le plus tôt possible. Car, dans l'état où nous voyons les choses, l'idée du voyage de M. de Stamford à Vienne devient aussi inutile ; c'est ici que se trouvent des difficultés imprévues ; et il n'y a qu'un personnage du rang et du caractère de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] qui puisse entreprendre de les surmonter.

“ Monseigneur le Duc voit maintenant tout le danger et son seul remède. S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] résiste à agir personnellement, par une timidité habituelle très forte ; elle s'étoit enfin confiée en notre venue ici, avec la permission de parler en son nom ; mais c'étoit la dernière ressource sur laquelle elle pût compter par des intermédiaires ; si elle étoit sans effet, ce que ne pouvons juger encore, il ne resteroit que l'intervention de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] elle-même.

“ Je ne devois pas tarder d'avoir l'honneur d'écrire à votre Excellence, soit sur l'objet précis de Petersbourg, soit sur ce premier coup d'œil d'un état de choses qu'elle pourra sans doute comprendre, en comparant les informations qu'elle reçoit d'ici avec idée que je pris la liberté de lui communiquer dans ma lettre du 20 Février. Si, en continuant d'observer ce nouvel état de choses, je venois à former quelque jugement fixe, je croirois de mon devoir de prendre la liberté de le lui présenter franchement.”

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, March 10. Berlin.—“ Quand je réfléchis que depuis la lettre que j'eus l'honneur d'écrire à votre Excellence le 21 Decembre à laquelle elle me fit l'honneur de répondre le 14<sup>e</sup> Janvier, voici la 21<sup>e</sup> que j'écris, je ne puis que me sentir extrêmement isolé ; mais je ne songe qu'à remplir mon devoir avec toute l'attention dont je suis capable.

“ Je viens de porter chez my Lord Elgin une lettre pour votre Excellence datée d'hier, mais je n'ai pu avoir l'honneur de le voir, parcequ'il étoit occupé avec quelqu'un. Au retour j'ai trouvé une occasion sûre de faire parvenir une lettre à M. le Comte de Wallmoden à Hanovre, et j'en profite pour lui envoyer celle-ci, parceque partant de là, je pourrai m'y expliquer plus ouvertement que dans celle d'hier, qui, sans être en chiffre, devoit partir d'ici. Je prends donc la liberté d'envoyer d'abord à votre Excellence un duplicata de cette lettre, et de m'expliquer plus clairement sur son objet, en remontant à celle que j'eus l'honneur de lui écrire le 20<sup>e</sup> Février.

“ Dans cette lettre, après avoir rendu compte à votre Excellence du jugement qu'avoit porté Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic sur le mémoire de M. de H[augwitz] que j'avois eu l'honneur d'envoyer d'ici à votre Excellence, et des raisons de s' a[ltesse] s[érénissime] pour penser qu'il falloit continuer de travailler avec ce ministre, j'ajoutois, d'après l'idée que m'avoit suggérée M. de Stamford, que si votre Excellence portoit le même jugement, il y auroit peut-être des precautions à prendre pour prévenir les défiances qu'on inspiroit à Vienne contre M. de H[augwitz] ; ce qui pourroit bien être une artifice pour consumer le temps ; de quoi votre Excellence pourroit prévenir les ministres de sa Majesté à Vienne et à Berlin, afin qu'ils agissent en conséquence des relations naissantes avec ce ministre.

“Mais dans les entretiens qu'a eu M. de Stamford avec my Lord Elgin et avec les ministres de Vienne et de Petersbourg, il a trouvé que ce sont ces ministres eux-mêmes qui ont de la défiance contre M. de H[augwitz] à cause de communications qu'il leur a faites ici de ses dépêches aux ministres de Prusse à leurs cours, qui ensuite s'y sont trouvées différentes.

“Nous sommes frappés, M. de Stamford et moi, que c'est-là la situation la plus allarmante où pussent se trouver les affaires dans ce moment de crise. Il ne nous appartient pas de juger si ces ministres ont raison de s'écarter de M. de H[augwitz], mais je dois exposer à votre Excellence combien une telle situation est malheureuse.

“M. de H[augwitz] ainsi délaissé par les ministres des trois cours, tombe de plus en plus entre les mains des gens qui veulent écarter la guerre, et il se tourne plus vers le ministre François, dans l'idée d'écarter le mal par négociations ; ce qui est sa pente naturelle ; car il ne peut venir à l'esprit qu'il veuille lui-même produire un mal qui retomberoit sur lui. Mais ce n'est pas un homme clair-voyant, et il se laisse séduire ; et comme ce n'est pas non plus un homme de grand génie, il regarde la finesse, quelque fois jusqu'à la duplicité, comme des moyens nécessaires aux ministres.

“Sans doute que les circonstances exigeroient un ministre bien différent ; mais réussira-t-on à le déplacer ? Le Roi, tout bon qu'il est, est bien jeune ; tous ses entours veulent prévenir la guerre, et ils approuvent le plan de négociations du ministre ; voilà un bien fort plastron contre les coups qu'on pourroit lui porter.

“En attendant, quand on approcheroit familièrement le roi (ce qui, suivant les apparences, sera difficile, d'une manière du moins suffisamment intime) on ne sauroit aujourd'hui que conseiller à sa Majesté ; car les résolutions pressantes à prendre, ne pourroient encore passer que par les mains de ce ministre ; et si les min[istres] des trois cours qu'il l'agiroid de réunir avec la Prusse ne sont pas disposés à travailler avec lui du ton de la confiance, il seroit impossible de réussir dans un tel traité.

“Conseilleroit-on au roi de renvoyer ce ministre ? Ce seroit une tentative bien hasardeuse, que nul homme, excepté le Duc de Br[unswick] s'il le vouloit, n'oseroit tenter ; et il est fort douteux qu'il le voulût.

“Quand la faction auroit amené elle-même un tel état des choses (ce dont on ne peut douter qu'elle ne soit capable) il ne seroit pas possible qu'elle en eût imaginé un plus désastreux ; car tandis qu'ainsi on ne fait rien, ni ne peut rien faire, elle prépare tout de toute part pour frapper les plus grands coups, par conquêtes et révolutions.

“Il étoit de mon devoir de représenter cet état à votre Excellence, pour qu'elle veuille bien s'en occuper dans sa sagesse ; les jours s'écoulent, et M. de Stamford n'est point invité par le Roi ; ce que nous craignons être un signe que les entours de s[a] M[ajesté] l'en éloignent, et qu'au lieu d'y être introduit par le désir de s[a] M[ajesté] elle-même, il ne faille qu'il lui soit nommé par my Lord Elgin lorsqu'il remettra ses lettres de créance. Peut-être même qu'après un seul entretien (à moins de circonstances dont on n'ose se flatter) il sera prudent qu'il retourne à Brunswic, de peur qu'un plus long séjour ne donnât lieu, à cause de lui, d'augmenter des insinuations qu'on n'a que trop commencées contre le Duc.

“Quant à moi, je puis rester sans conséquences ; parceque depuis deux jours que j'ai commencé de me produire chez les Académiciens, je suis déjà dans leur torrent, et n'y paroîtrai pas déplacé. Ainsi je me détermine à attendre ici la réponse de votre Excellence, pour y recevoir ses ordres ; à moins que quelque autre lettre que je dois naturellement attendre de sa part dans l'intervalle, ne me donne déjà des ordres.”

THE EARL OF MORNINGTON TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, March 10. Castle of Good Hope.—“Here I am in most perfectly good health after a very tedious passage to this place, and after a detention here of six weeks, occasioned by the necessity of repairing the frigate, and by the continuance of contrary winds. I am now on the point of embarking for Madras. I have left commissions with Mr. Barrow (one of Lord Macartney's private secretaries) and with Lady Anne Barnard to send you plants and seeds, and I believe you will receive one packet of them by this conveyance. Pray remember me most kindly to Lady Grenville. I shall write to you a full account of my ideas of the Cape, when I get on board the frigate.”

LORD GRENVILLE TO M. DE LUC.

1798, March 13. London.—“Par le long retard des malles toutes vos lettres, jusqu'à celle du 23 Fevrier, me sont entrées presqu'au même jour ; ce qui vous expliquera les raisons de mon silence, ne recevant rien de votre part.

“Je vous envoie celle-ci dans le paquet de Lord Elgin, rien n'étant plus important dans les circonstances actuelles que d'ôter au ministre Prussien l'espoir, s'il pourroit l'avoir formé, d'établir avec le gouvernement du Roi une négociation non-officielle, et qui ne passât pas par l'entremise du ministre de sa Majesté à Berlin. Cette remarque me paroît d'autant plus nécessaire que, sans être le moins du monde surpris que vous ayez acquiescé à la demande de M. de Haugwitz à cet egard, je dois cependant vous avouer que je n'ai rien trouvé dans les raisons alléguées par ce ministre qui dût, naturellement, le porter à désirer cette espèce de mystère ; lui-même ayant désavouée la seule valable, celle de ne pas exciter la jalousie des François par l'apparence d'une communication plus fréquente qu'à l'ordinaire entre le ministre de sa Majesté et lui.

“ Quant au fond de l'affaire, il me semble qu'elle se réduit aujourd'hui à très-peu de choses, sans, cependant, que nous devions négliger ce qu'elle nous présente de favorable aux intérêts de l'Europe. Le Cabinet de Berlin se montre persuadé du danger dont les progrès des François menacent l'Europe. Il rejette hautement toute idée d'y parer par des mesures offensives de sa part, même de concert avec les autres Cours, si cela étoit possible. Il paroît croire que le remède le plus efficace c'est de conclure la paix la plus promptement possible avec les François, pour leur faire, par ce moyen, repasser la Rhin, sans cependant expliquer de quelle manière le simple rappel des troupes fera cesser les intrigues, la circulation des libelles, la propagation du venin révolutionnaire dans les pays de la rive droite, déjà trop infectée de ce poison destructeur. C'est dans ce sens qu'il se propose de travailler à Rastadt et à Vienne, tout en donnant les plus fortes assurances de son désir d'établir entre les quatre grandes Cours l'intelligence la plus parfaite, et même de concourir à la pacification de l'Angleterre, après que celle de l'Allemagne sera terminée. C'est aussi à cette époque qu'il renvoie toute idée d'alliance ostensible, telle que nous l'avions proposée ; et ce n'est que dans le cas seul, ou par une attaque sur ses frontières, ou (ce qui revient à la même chose) sur les pays du nord de l'Allemagne, il sera de toute nécessité entraîné dans une guerre inévitable, qu'il se propose de profiter des dispositions favorables du Roi pour des secours pécuniaires.

“ C'est toujours beaucoup d'avoir au moins amené ces explications, d'avoir reçu l'assurance qu'on est enfin convaincu de l'étendue du danger, et de la nécessité de s'entendre pour l'écarter.

“ Les dispositions personnelles du Roi de Prusse semblent non seulement nous garantir la sincérité de ces aveux, mais aussi nous en promettre pour l'avenir des effets plus sensibles que les circonstances nous permettent d'en recueillir aujourd'hui.

“ Il s'agit donc de cultiver ces dispositions, tant par la teneur et la forme amicale des communications officielles qui auront lieu sur ces objets, que par l'impression que les personnes qui ont l'honneur d'approcher le Roi de Prusse pourront faire sur son esprit. Dans cette vue le voyage du Général Stamford ne pourra manquer d'être d'une grande utilité ; et persuadé, comme je le suis, du soin qu'il mettra à communiquer librement avec Lord Elgin, je sens que la cause commune en retirera des avantages de la plus haute importance. Je suis non moins convaincu qu'à votre retour à Berlin, ou cette lettre devra probablement vous trouver, vous ne manquerez pas de mettre à l'accomplissement des mêmes objets ce zèle éclairé que vous avez déjà montré, et qui vous a engagé à travailler avec tant d'ardeur, et dans une affaire si hérissée de difficultés.

“Ce sera toujours avec un vrai plaisir que je recevrai les observations que votre position vous mettra à même de me communiquer.”

Postscript. “Lord Elgin vous communiquera la lettre que sa Majesté écrit en droiture à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] le Duc de Brunswick, en réponse à celle qui lui est parvenue par la dernière malle.” Draft.

LORD GRENVILLE to the EARL OF ELGIN.

Private.

1798, March 13. Cleveland Row.—“You will see by my official papers of this date that I have very much entered into your feelings respecting the line which Count Haugwitz persuaded M. de Luc to adopt towards you. It is a very great satisfaction to me, in a situation which I had so little foreseen, to have communicated to you already in so full a manner what I had done and written on the subject, because it must have removed the possibility of your imagining that I entertained the idea of encouraging double negotiations, from which you were to be kept at a distance. I detest the system, and never have nor never will employ it; nor can I imagine what view Count Haugwitz had in it, though it is evident that it was he who overreached de Luc's caution in this instance.

“What I have now done will, I am confident, meet your wishes, and as the whole business is entirely referred to you, I trust it is impossible that any impression contrary to what you would desire can have been made at Berlin. It is with the same view that I abstain from sending any answer to Haugwitz's memorial till I receive it officially from you; but, on the other hand, I am sure you will not let any appearance of dissatisfaction on your part towards him injure the great interests which we have at stake. I greatly doubt his sincerity, but it often happens in such cases that the appearance is pursued so far that the reality is unawares produced.” Copy.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, March 13. Berlin.—“Enfin les malles sont arrivées en Angleterre. Votre Excellence a reçu les lettres que j'ai eu l'honneur de lui écrire jusqu'au 13 fev[rier] inclusivement, et elle a eu la bonté, le 2<sup>1</sup> de ce mois, de me faire dire par M. Hammond qu'elle me feroit l'honneur de m'écrire le courrier suivant. Me voilà donc près d'être sous de nouvelles directions de sa part, ce dont je sens depuis longtemps le besoin. Mais, en attendant, comme les informations sont toujours utiles à quelque degré, j'aurai l'honneur de communiquer à votre Excellence une anecdote qui prouve bien ce que Monseigneur le Duc de B[runswic] m'avoit dit si souvent, et que j'ai eu l'honneur de communiquer à votre Excellence, de la manière dont le Roi est entouré, et du besoin de s'approcher de lui pour le garantir d'illusions, “ J’ai sçu l’anecdote dont il s’agit, et peut-être en apprendrai-je d’autres, en changeant ma manière de vivre ici. J’avais appris déjà à Brunswic que M. de H[augwitz] n’avait pas eu tort de désirer, durant nos premières entrevues, que je me tinsse caché autant qu’il me seroit possible ; car, malgré cela, la faction me découvrit et me suspecta. J’ai donc pris cette fois le parti de me répandre d’abord dans le monde, et d’en informer par lettre M. de H[augwitz], en ajoutant que, dès que j’aurois été vu dans d’autres cercles, j’espérois qu’il me feroit la grâce de me recevoir ouvertement ; à quoi il répondit d’une manière fort obligeante. J’allai donc hier laisser une carte à sa porte ; mais je m’en tiendrai là jusqu’à ce que j’aie eu l’honneur de recevoir la lettre de votre Excellence. Je suis déjà assez répandu parmi diverses classes de personnes pour entendre beaucoup. Il n’est pas possible de voir un état plus déplorable des choses ; car c’est ici un des grands centres de corruption morale. On y voit la grande masse dans la torpeur, manque de tout principe et de tout caractère, excepté celui de la dissipation ; celle des gens qui agissent pour le mal, le sachant ou ne le sachant pas ; et celle de ceux qui voyent enfin le danger, mais qui en même temps désespérant d’aucun remède, se lamentent la plupart, sans rien tenter pour en arrêter les progrès, parce qu’ils le regardent comme inutile. Ah ! si l’on pouvoit y faire naître the present English spirit. J’y fais ce que je puis dans l’occasion.

“ Je vois déjà des personnes de toutes ces classes, et je n’évite point même la seconde ; mais comme c’est par la dernière qu’on apprend à mieux connoître les autres, je m’y lierai davantage, et voici ce qu’une dame de cette classe, mon ancienne connoissance, me récita avant hier. Elle étoit à la cour le jour précédent, celui de la naissance de la Reine, et y faisoit la partie du Prince Ferd[inand] avec le Ministre du commerce, et M. Waitz, envoyé de Hesse, celui dont j’ai eu l’honneur de dire à votre Excellence, dans ma dernière lettre de Brunswic, qu’il est venu ici de Paris pour proposer au Roi de prendre tout ce qu’il voudroit au delà du Rhin à l’aide des François ; mu en cela par les vues de son maître qui voudroit partager ces brigandages, comme le D[uc] de Br[unswic] le sait très bien.

“ A cette table de jeu on vint à parler des affaires ; et M. Waitz dit ; ‘ Je crains que cette descente en Angleterre n’éprouve bien des difficultés. ’ ‘ Vous craignez ! ’ (dit la dame) souhaiteriez-vous donc que ces scélérats réussissent ? ’ L’envoyé fut déconcerté par cette apostrophe, à laquelle sans doute il ne s’attendoit pas, pensant que la dame étoit de son bord ; mais le Prince répondit pour lui ; ‘ sans doute, pour abattre la morgue de ces gens-là. ’ — ‘ La morgue ! Monseigneur, est-ce ainsi qu’il faut nommer la fermeté et l’honneur ? ’ ‘ Mais (dit le Ministre du commerce) ils font le monopole de tout ! ’ ‘ Je vois donc, Monsieur (répliqua la dame) que pour avoir le thé et le sucre à un peu meilleur marché, vous ne vous embarrasseriez pas du triomphe des méchans. ’ La conversation finit-là ; c’étoit dans la chambre du Roi, et l’on parloit avec si peu de ménagement qu’hier je l’appris par un autre canal.

“J’ai cru devoir donner à votre Excellence cet exemple frappant, que j’ai de source de ce que s[on] a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m’avoit dit des discours qu’on tient autour du Roi. Or c’est la même chose que m’a dite M. de H[augwitz] en professant le plus fortement possible le système diamétralement opposé; comme j’ai eu l’honneur de la dire à votre Excellence. Il ne voit pas encore, il est vrai, dans les affaires générales tout ce qu’il faudroit qu’il y vit, et par là, il ne fait pas tout ce qu’il faudroit faire; et il l’étude aussi de manière qu’on peut aisément, je l’avoue, le soupçonner de mauvaise foi. Mais on n’a pas essayé la patience et le ton de la confiance pour l’amener à voir, si c’est (comme je le pense) qu’il ne voye pas; ou pour le voir lui-même par des caractères moins équivoques. Cependant je ne tenterai plus rien à cet égard, jusqu’à ce que j’aie de nouvelles directions de votre Excellence.

“Depuis la lettre que j’ai eu l’honneur de lui écrire par Hanovre, il y a un premier mouvement produit par l’annonce faite au roi de M. de Stamford par my Lord Elgin en remettant ses lettres de creance; ce qui étoit devenu nécessaire, parceque M. de H[augwitz] n’entendoit rien de l’audience promise; mais my Lord Elgin en informera sans doute votre Excellence par ce courrier; comme l’anecdote qui fait le principal sujet de cette lettre n’est pas très pressée, je vais la faire passer par Hanovre.”

LORD GRENVILLE TO M. DE LUC.

1798, March 16. London.—“Depuis la date de ma dernière lettre, la votre du 27 fevrier m’est entrée. Rien n’est plus juste que les réflexions que vous y faites sur l’urgence des dangers qui menacent l’Allemagne, par la suite du plan de tout céder pour le moment avec l’espoir de pouvoir alors se concerter pour arrêter le progrès ultérieur d’un mal auquel on n’ose résister aujourd’hui.

“L’expérience du passé auroit dû, ce me semble, démontrer toute l’inconséquence de ce plan, aussi bien que la nécessité de s’unir, non pas secrètement et avec toutes les reserves qui la crainte inspire, mais ouvertement, et dans la vue d’en imposer à l’ennemi par une masse apparente de résistance.

“Pour réussir à Petersbourg il faudroit absolument, dans l’état actuel des affaires, que l’impulsion vînt de Berlin, et que cette dernière Cour voulût agir, non pas en se prêtant à demi à des propositions que l’on lui fait de notre part, mais en travaillant de son propre chef, comme pénétrée de son danger, et combattante pour sa propre existence. Il n’est que trop évident combien les choses sont encore éloignées de cet état; et en souscrivant à de demi-mesures, nous ne ferions que prolonger l’illusion dont la Cour de Berlin paroît encore se bercer.

“C’est donc là qu’il faut travailler (d’après mon sentiment du moins) sans songer à aller plus loin, avant d’avoir établi notre plan sur la seule base qui pût y convenir; celle de la co-opération cordiale et entière de la Prusse. C’est pourquoi, tout en vous priant d'être persuadé combien je suis sensible aux seuls motifs qui peuvent vous avoir inspiré l'idée d'un voyage comme celui de Petersbourg, je ne puis m'empêcher de dire que ce seroit en abuser que de vouloir profiter de cette offre sans qu'il y eut plus d'apparence d'en retirer l'avantage pour la cause commune que vous vous proposez pour but de tant de fatigues.

"Par la dernière lettre qui j'ai reçu de my Lord Elgin il paroît que M. de Stamford étoit déjà arrivé à Berlin. Ce sera avec la plus grande impatience que j'attendrai l'effet que pourront produire ses efforts joints à ceux de Lord Elgin."

Postscript.—"Depuis que j'ai écrit la précédente lettre il nous est survenu un nouvel incident, qui mettra à l'épreuve, et d'une manière décisive, les vues de la Cour de Berlin; puisque si elle songe même en aucun cas à la possibilité d'une résistance aux progrès des François dans le nord de l'Allemagne, il est impossible qu'elle permette à ceux-ci d'en retirer d'avance toutes les ressources que ce pays-là pourroit, en cas de nécessité, fournir pour la cause commune. Si vous avez encore l'occasion de voir et de conférer avec M. Haugwitz, je suis bien persuadé, qu'en appuyant sur cette raison, vous parviendrez facilement à découvrir quelles sont ses véritables intentions." Draft.

LORD GRENVILLE to the EARL OF CLARE [Lord Chancellor of Ireland].

1798, March 16. Cleveland Row.—"I have many thanks to return you for the publication you have had the goodness to send me. It would be idle for me to compliment you on the ability of the speech, though it would be very difficult for me to say as much as I really think on that subject. But what is, I am sure, much more interesting to your feelings is the universal opinion of all those with whom I have conversed, in which I most cordially concur, of the infinite advantage which will be produced by that publication both here and in Ireland. In this country especially where, as you well know, the most complete ignorance of Irish affairs universally prevails, it has already had the effect of opening the eyes of many well disposed people who required no less authentic and convincing a statement than yours to persuade them that the conspiracy which is carrying on in Ireland requires to be treated in a different manner than an election mob, or a drunken riot in this country.

"If the torrent is to be stemmed in Ireland, I am firmly convinced that measures of the most determined vigour can alone be effectual for that purpose; and if they are successful, I know no individual in the two kingdoms to whom that success will be more due than to you." Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to the EARL OF ELGIN.

Private.

1798, March 17. Cleveland Row.—“I send you under flying seal the answer to the letters which I have received from M. de Luc since I last wrote to you. I leave it entirely to your judgment, but I think much advantage might be derived from your setting him to talk with M. de Haugwitz on this Hamburg business, respecting which it is plain that Haugwitz cannot refuse our request without receding from every word he has said to De Luc.

“I repeat, however, that I leave this to you, and you will see that my letter is drawn with that view.” Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT STARHEMBERG.

1798, March 17. Cleveland Row.—“Je suis affligé de devoir vous dire qu’il n’existe plus le moindre espoir d’obtenir de votre Cour la justice que nous sommes, non seulement en droit, mais dans la nécessité, d’en demander. Eden n’a point reçu de note en réponse à la sienne ; mais il a reçu des excuses et des put-offs, dont on ne peut plus se contenter.

“Quand le conseil du roi aura pris ses résolutions définitives, je vous en préviendrai dans notre amitié, qui, j’espère bien, se soutiendra parmi tous les orages politiques que je prévois.” Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, March 17. Cleveland Row.—“J’apprends par une lettre que m’est entrée ce matin, que le Directoire demande à la ville de Hambourg une contribution de 6 à 700,000 livres sterling. Comme il est impossible que nous puissions voir avec indifférence des ressources que notre commerce a produites mises à la disposition de nos ennemis, j’envoie aujourd’hui par un exprès à M. Frazer, ministre du roi à Hambourg, l’ordre (en cas que cette nouvelle se confirme) de déclarer dans les termes les plus expresses, que le fournissement d’un pareil secours à ses ennemis serait regardé par le Roi comme un acte d’hostilité envers ses états, et que s[a] M[ajesté] agirait en conséquence.

“M. Frazer a l’ordre de communiquer sa note à votre ministre ou agent, aussi bien qu’ à celui de Prusse, et de demander leur appui pour le maintien de la neutralité du nord de l’Allemagne, ouvertement violée par cette demande.

“Vous savez que je suis bien éloigné de vouloir vous compromettre, mais vous jugerez si, et de quelle manière, vous pourrez écrire à votre ministre à Hambourg en conformité de ceci.”

Postscript. “On ne le sait pas officiellement, mais les lettres particulières de Falmouth confirment la nouvelle du succès du Commodore Warren en interceptant un convoi destiné pour Brest, et de la plus grande importance à leur armement. Mon courrier ira de Hambourg à Berlin ; si vous avez quelques ordres, il s'en chargera volontiers." Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to SIR JAMES CRAUFURD.

1798, March 20. Cleveland Row.—“The circumstances which have led to my proposing you to His Majesty for the business to be executed at Hamburgh are of such a nature that your speedy arrival there may be of considerable importance. I have therefore no doubt that your zeal for the public service will induce you not only readily to undertake this commission, but also to proceed there with as little delay as German roads will allow, without too great inconvenience to yourself.” Copy.

REPORT FROM FRANCE.

1798, March 20. Paris.—“Il est difficile d'établir des points fixes dans un état de choses aussi essentiellement variables que celui-ci.

“Il y a environ trois semaines la réunion Montagnarde ditte de Flore a député sept de ses membres vers le Directoire pour lui proposer d'étendre la durée des fonctions législatives, savoir à cinq ans pour les Cinq-Cens, à dix ans pour les Anciens, et celle des fonctions Directoriales à vingt-cinq ans. On devoit faire approuver cette nouvelle disposition par les assemblées primaires. Le Directoire a fort mal accueilli la proposition et les proposans.

“Il veut décidément se délivrer des Conventionnels, and par conséquent il veut les elections et les ventrus. Les candidats Directoriaux sont ici ; Dannon, Cambacères, Garat, Lenoir-Laroche, Emery, voire même Desmeuniers. La plupart des cercles constitutionnels sont fermés ; quelques-uns des meneurs arrêtés, et les commandans militaires dans le midi ont ordre d'écarter à tout prix les Jacobins, et de tout oser pour y parvenir.

“Il resulte de là que les Jacobins sont furieux. Ils le sont au point de proposer quelquefois au parti contraire une coalition contre le Directoire, ennemi commun ; rien n'a été accepté jusqu'ici.

“Il est probable que les elections rassembleront les élémens les plus discords, et cette discorde doit produire des orages.

“Voilà ce que tout observateur peut appercevoir, et sur quoi il est aisé de bâtir mille conjectures. L'intérieur du Directoire est plus important et moins connu ; vous pouvez compter sur l'exactitude de mes renseignemens.

“Il est certain que B[arras] et M[erlin] ont réciproquement envie et besoin de se perdre—il ne s'agit point entr'eux le doctrine politique, il s'agit de régner. D'un côté M[erlin] a fait instruire contre B[arras] une procédure secrète relativement à l'affaire de l'ambassadeur de Portugal ; de l'autre côté Francois de Neufchateau, averti et appuyé par lui, refuse de sortir bénévolement, et prétend courir, et faire courir aux autres la chance du sort.

“L'inquiétude de B[arras] a été assez vive pour qu'il ait rappelé précipitamment Buonaparte de Dunkerque, et pour qu'il se soit rapproché du parti vaincu. Des ouvertures ont été faites, des conférences ont été tenues, des engagements importans ont été pris, enfin des mesures d'exécution ont été arrêtées; on a reculé au moment décisif sous différents prétextes plus ou moins fondés; le Général a accusé le Directoire de couardise.

“Cependant la cause subsiste et les effets se reproduisent. On est revenu plusieurs fois au plan abandonné et on la abandonne de nouveau pour le reprendre encore; avant hier, par exemple, on étoit de glace, hier on étoit de feu, aujourd'hui on est presque résigné à la place de Francis de Neuchateau.

“Vous concevez qu'en tout ceci ma position est très avantageuse en ce qu'elle me lie directement à la chose, mais il est plus fâcheux que je ne puis le dire, d'être privé du véhicule le plus efficace. C'est l'opinion de plusieurs personnes qu'il y a eu telle nuit où quelques centaines de mille francs eussent déterminé, et engagé l'action, et cela même à part, il est désagréable d'être arrêté à chaque pas, et forcé de renoncer à des mesures utiles. On peut être sûr au reste qu'il n'y aura ni prodigalité ni sottises.

“A cet égard la personne dont je vous ai parlé préfère, par de très bonnes raisons, papier sur Paris envoyé directement par un banquier de Basle ou de Shaffouze, avec division de la somme, si elle est considérable, au C. . . .

“Voici à présent quelques anecdotes; il y a eu en séance du Directoire une rixe très violente entre Buonaparte and Rewbell. Le premier a menacé de sa démission, et l'autre lui a, sur le champ, présenté une plume. Il a été visité, et apaisé le lendemain par deux Directeurs. On ne fait que deux sortes de dépenses; la corruption dans les cabinets, et les préparatifs de la descente, sur laquelle on ne recueille d'ailleurs que les informations les plus vagues et les plus contradictoires. On y a versé 29 millions le mois passé. On croit que le nouveau Directeur sera Treilhارد. Les concurrens annoncés sont Talleyrand, Charles Lacroix, et encore Emery.”

M. DE LUC to the QUEEN OF PRUSSIA.

1798, March 20. Berlin.—“Comme votre majesté, dans la gracieuse audience dont elle daigna m'honorer hier, ignorait encore que monseigneur le prince Ernest devoit aller à Strelitz, je m'empresse d'avoir l'honneur de lui apprendre, qu'en rentrant chez moi, j'y trouvai une lettre d'Hanovre qui m'informait de son départ le 13. Le vif intérêt que je prends à tout ce qui regarde la maison de votre majesté m'engagerait à partir d'abord pour Strelitz, afin d'avoir l'honneur de m'entretenir son altesse sérénissime d'un objet qui lui tient à coeur; mais un intérêt majeur fait céder celui-là; tandis que chacun s'occupe de ses intérêts particuliers, la base de tous les intérêts est sapée, et elle est prête à s'écrouler sans retour.

“Votre majesté me fit la grace de me dire hier, que j’étais reconnu pour un honnête homme ; c’est le seul bien que j’aie recueilli durant une vie déjà bien longue ; mais j’en suis satisfait, par celui dont j’ai le bonheur de jouir, depuis longtemps, dans la confiance de leurs majestés le roi et la reine d’Angleterre. C’est donc comme honnête homme et devant Dieu, que j’ose prier votre majesté de me mettre humblement aux pieds du roi, pour lui déclarer que je regarde comme l’intérêt le plus pressant de sa majesté d’entendre monsieur le général de Stamford, son fidèle et zélé serviteur, qui n’a d’autre vue que de lui montrer le péril dont son trône, son royaume, tous les gouvernements légitimes encore subsistants sont environnés ; péril qui s’accroît chaque jour, chaque instant, et que quelques jours de plus peut-être rendront inévitable.

“M de Stamford ni moi, ne sommes pas négociateurs ; si nous sommes autorisés à parler avec confiance des dispositions du roi d’Angleterre, c’est parceque nous sommes à portée de savoir certainement que par sa longue expérience sa majesté voit en grand le péril de tous les trônes, et de tout autre gouvernement légitime ; que toutes ses vues ne tendent qu’ à leur conservation commune ; qu’elle ne désire que de pouvoir contribuer à les maintenir, et qu’elle se déterminerait plutôt à être ensevelie sous leurs ruines, qu’à les désertier ; d’après le sentiment intime que ce ne serait pas moins désertier la cause de Dieu que celle de ses peuples, et de l’humanité.

“C’est parceque sa majesté est bien informée que nous n’avons, M. de Stamford et moi, aucun autre sentiment sur les affaires publiques, qu’elle a daigné nous accorder de la confiance ; car envisageant l’état de l’Europe sous le même point de vue général que sa majesté, nous y voyons l’Angleterre comme un point d’appui, indépendamment de son intérêt propre ; et à Berlin, c’est l’intérêt très pressant du monarque et de la monarchie qui nous y occupe, non seulement pour eux-mêmes, mais comme un autre point d’appui de l’humanité.

“Cependant, les bases de ce grand état se minent rapidement, sous lui et autour de lui ; encore quelques jours peut-être, et il n’y aura plus de remède ; tandis qu’en voyant promptement, non le danger vaguement énoncé, mais sa nature et ses causes, il est probablement des moyens d’y parer.

“J’ose donc supplier sa majesté, au nom d’elle-même, au nom de l’humanité, dont le sort de plus en plus empirant, m’a occupé toute ma vie, de vouloir écouter bientôt M. le général de Stamford ; pour qu’il puisse lui faire connaître ce qu’elle ne saurait voir par elle-même, comme le voit un observateur immédiat tel que lui, de la situation périlleuse des pays qui l’avoisinent et de ses propres états ; afin qu’ensuite elle en fasse l’usage que lui dictera sa sagesse.

“Je ne perds point de temps pour recourir humblement à votre majesté dans cette vue, parceque depuis plusieurs jours je m’efforce à retenir ici cet homme de bien, navré de n’avoir pu parvenir encore à ouvrir son ame à sa majesté pour son propre salut, et ne pensant plus qu’à porter sa douleur dans la retraite ;

et je ne l'ai retenu que par l'espérance que l'accès que monseigneur le prince Ernest avait bien voulu m'ouvrir auprès de votre majesté, pourrait me fournir l'occasion de mettre aux pieds du roi cette humble requête.

“ En n'agissant ainsi que dans les vues d'un homme de bien, zélé serviteur de Dieu, et des rois ses délégués sur la terre, j'ose espérer de votre majesté et du roi le pardon des fautes que je puis avoir commises en m'acquittant de ce devoir sacré.”
Copy.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

Précis de l'entretien du Roi avec M. de Stamford, le 21 Mars 1798, écrit par ce dernier.

“ Une lettre du prince Ernest, oncle de la reine, que M. de Luc a remise avant hier à cette princesse, m'a fait enfin parvenir à avoir un long entretien avec le roi.

“ Lorsque j'entrai chez sa majesté je trouvai avec elle le colonel de Kokeritz, son premier aide-de-camp, qui, pendant mon début, resta à quelque distance, et s'approcha insensiblement derrière moi pour écouter ce que je disais. Cela me peina à tel point, que me tournant tout-à-coup vers lui, je lui dis ; ‘approchez, M. le colonel, je ne dirai à sa majesté que ce que vos pouvez entendre, et ce que je voudrais que tous les rois puissent entendre, en même temps que vous.’ Ces paroles déconcertèrent un peu le colonel, mais parurent ne pas déplaire au roi.

“ Là-dessus j'entrai dans des détails sur la marche de la Révolution, ses progrès, les causes de sa durée, le but où elle tend, enfin sur les moyens de s'y opposer ; moyens efficaces, si les quatre grandes puissances se hâtent de les mettre en œuvre, et de se réunir à cet effet ; mais infructueux ou nuls, si chacune d'elles reste isolée. Je m'étendis beaucoup sur ce dernier point ; et évitant soigneusement de nommer M. de H[augwitz] j'accusai de cet éloignement des puissances ce que j'appelai la bête des Cabinets qui, les premiers, avaient traité avec une faction, attachant au mot France l'ancienne idée d'état, de puissance. ‘ Quel fond peut-on faire même aujourd'hui (ajoutai-je) sur des négociations et des traités avec une faction qui, depuis plus de six ans, ne fait chez elle que délivrer des constitutions, et des lois qu'elle nomme d'urgence ; qui ne subsiste plus que par le brigandage, le désordre, et les crimes, qu'elle porte partout où pénètrent ses armées ; et qui ne pouvant se nourrir que par la guerre, craint et doit nécessairement craindre une paix générale, encore plus que l'Europe n'est dans le cas de la désirer !’ “ Jusque-là je n'avais été interrompu (tantôt par sa majesté tantôt par son aide-de-camp) que par ces mots ; vous avez bien raison ; cela n'est malheureusement que trop vrai ; mais alors il s'établit un dialogue entre sa majesté, M. de Kokeritz, et moi. Cet officier m'assura que sa majesté voyait les choses telles que je venais de les présenter, et ainsi (ajouta-t-il) que j'ose dire les voir moi-même. ‘ Aussi (dit le roi) ai-je vu avec inquiétude s'approcher le moment où j' allais me voir forcé à prendre le gouvernail en main.' 'Je ne cacherai point à votre majesté (repartis-je) que je regarde sa position comme infiniment plus difficile que ne l'était celle où se trouva Frederic II, lorsque les premières puissances de l'Europe se liguerent contre lui ; mais elle ne doit point désespérer de s'en tirer ; une réunion franche, loyale, et sincère entre Berlin, Vienne, Petersbourg et Londres peut les faire triompher de toutes les difficultés.'

"Cela engagea le roi à me parler de la défiance presque invincible de la cour de Vienne. 'Cette défiance (dis-je) existe également, ainsi que j' ai pu le remarquer, quoique peut-être pas au même degré, à Petersbourg ; mais votre majesté saura trouver le moyen de la vaincre, et il est urgent qu'elle le fasse.' 'Certainement ferai-je à cet égard tous mes efforts, et tous les sacrifices qu'on pourra exiger de moi' (repartit le roi). 'Sa majesté est déterminée (continua M. Kökeritz) à renoncer au pays de Cleve, et finalement à toute indemnité, si Vienne veut user de la même modération.' 'Rien au monde, sire (repartis-je), ne saurait être plus propre à vous concilier la vénération et l'attachement de tous les princes de l'Europe, que ce désintéressement généreux. Votre majesté sauvera par là l'intégrité constitutionnelle de l'empire Germanique ; et c'est à ce point qu'il faut s'attacher surtout. Les sécularisations sont un piège des Français ; plus ils insisteront et feront d'efforts pour qu'elles se fassent à leur gré, plus il faudra s'y opposer par tous les moyens possibles.' 'Dans tout cela (reprit le roi) il n'y a que le prince d'Orange qui m'embarrasse extrêmement. Il a été question de lui donner les évêchés de Bamberg et de Würzburg ; mais la cour de Vienne s'y oppose.' 'Eh bien, sire, il ne faut pas y penser.' 'Mais quel dédommagement lui trouver ?' 'S'il n'est pas possible d'en trouver un qui puisse s'effectuer sans qu'il n'en résulte une injustice, je suis persuadé, sire, que monseigneur le prince d'Orange a l'ame trop élevée pour ne pas préférer dans ce cas à une pareille indemnité, la perte des riches domaines qui lui ont été ravis. Mais, ajoutai-je, peut-être serait-il possible de lui procurer un dédommagement en numéraire, qui le met en état de faire quelque acquisition territoriale à sa bienséance. Peut-être aussi pourrait-on faire valoir, lorsqu'il s'agira de ses intérêts, quelques prétensions ou réclamations justes de sa maison sur quelque propriété dont des princes ses voisins se sont mis jadis en possession injustement.' Le roi me parut beaucoup goûter cette idée, et s'en sentit très soulagé.

"Monseigneur le prince Henri vint enfin sur le tapis ; mais je ne rendrai pas compte ici de cette partie de l'entretien, puisqu'il suffit de dire, que le roi est aussi éloigné de sa politique Française, que le ciel l'est de la terre.

"Le roi, ou M. de Kökeritz (il ne me souvient plus lequel des deux) me dit sur la fin de cette longue conversation, que si sa majesté avait paru éviter de me parler d'affaires, c'avait été parce-qu'elle avait craint que je ne voulusse faire des instances pour qu'elle en vint avec l'Angleterre à des conclusions qui ne pouvaient avoir lieu que lorsqu' on serait sûr de la cour de Vienne.

(Je rapporterai à la fin une explication qui précéda ce que M. de Stamford dit ensuite, et qu'il a omis ici.)

“ Sire, dans ce que j'ai eu l'honneur de dire à votre majesté sur la situation infiniment critique des affaires de l'Europe, je crois avoir rencontré le point de vue sous lequel sa majesté Britannique et son ministère l'envisagent ; celui de la nécessité d'une réunion prompte et sincère entre les puissances existantes, si elles veulent se sauver. Quant à des négociations et traités, le Cabinet de Londres a ici son ministre, chargé sans doute des pouvoirs nécessaires à cet effet. Mais (poursuivis-je) qu'il me soit permis de représenter à votre majesté que la communication avec l'Angleterre court dans ce moment de grands risques, s'il est vrai, ce qu'on m'assure, que les Français cherchent à faire une révolution dans la magistrature d'Hambourg. ' Je sais,' répondit le roi, ' que les Français ont voulu y former un club, sans doute dans un très mauvais dessein ; mais j'ai exhorté les magistrats de cette ville à veiller à ce que rien de ce genre ne s'y établisse. ' ' Pourvu,' repris-je, ' qu'on puisse se reposer sûrement sur les mesures qu'ils sont en état de prendre par eux-mêmes pour l'empêcher. Mais il est à craindre que ceux que les Français savent employer pour réussir dans leurs infernales entreprises, ne trompent la vigilance des magistrats ; et que dans le cas d'une explosion soudaine, les moyens d'en arrêter les effets ne soient insuffisants. ' ' Il faudra (répondit le roi après un moment de réflexion) qu'on envoie des troupes. ' ”

“ Ici je me tus, afin de ne pas donner lieu au roi de penser que j'avais été chargé de le porter à cette mesure vigoureuse, dans le dessein de l'engager dans une première brouillerie avec les Français.

(Tandis que M. de Stamford était occupé à écrire ce précis de son entretien avec le roi, je me hâtai d'en informer monseigneur le duc de Brunswic ; et surtout de cet article, pour qu'il ne balancât pas en cas de besoin.)

“ La conversation était là, lorsque M. de Kökeritz me donna une preuve convaincante de ce qu'il n'avait rien trouvé qui lui déplût dans ce que j'avais pris la liberté de dire au roi. Il pria sa majesté de permettre qu'il me montrât la réponse qu'elle avait faite à la dernière lettre qu'elle avait reçue de l'empereur d'Allemagne ; ce que le roi accorda sur le champ. M. de Kökeritz me mena dans la cabinet de sa majesté, et me mit la minute de cette réponse entre les mains ; elle contenait en substance :—des assurances de désir très sincère du roi de s'entendre avec l'empereur sur les affaires de l'empire Germanique ; mêlées, cependant, de quelques plaintes, de ce que sa Majesté Impériale, tout en témoignant le même désir, continuait à ne pas marquer cette confiance et cette ouverture que le roi aurait souhaité de trouver, et qui aurait mis ce désir hors de toute doute. Que cependant, pour oter à sa Majesté Impériale une sorte de défiance qu'elle semblait encore nourrir dans son esprit contre les intentions loyales et franches du roi et de son ministère, le roi proposait à sa Majesté Impériale d'envoyer incessamment à Berlin un ministre chargé de plein-pouvoir pour y traiter, sous les yeux du roi, avec ses ministres, de tout ce qu'on souhaiterait de convenir, afin d'en venir à une prompte conclusion, et, de part et d'autre, à une ratification finale.

“Jusques-là cette réponse ne renfermait rien que je n'eusse voulu y trouver ; mais la fin était entièrement à la H.[augwitz]. Le moyen proposé pour accélérer la marche des délibérations amenait, si non à décliner la médiation de la Russie, du moins à l'envisager comme un obstacle à la célérité de cette marche, vu l'éloignement du Cabinet de Petersbourg. Ce qui me semblait revenir à dire, ou à faire entendre, que l'on regardait l'intervention de la Russie comme inutile.

“M. de Kökeritz me demanda ce que je pensais de cette réponse ; je me bornai à lui dire, que je souhaitais qu'elle fit à Vienne l'effet que le roi s'en promettait, mais que je ne croyais pas pouvoir m'en flatter. Comme il ne me demanda pas les raisons de ce doute, je n'eus pas occasion de lui expliquer qu'il se fondait sur ce que l'empereur de Russie ne verrait pas avec plaisir que le roi déclinât son intervention dans les affaires d'Allemagne ; ce qui ne pourrait que lui donner de l'éloignement pour la réunion si désirable des quatre puissances, de laquelle dépend leur salut commun.”

(This is the end of General Stamford's account.)

“Lorsque le roi témoigna à M. de Stamford que la raison de ce qu'il avait paru éviter de lui parler d'affaires était qu'il avait crainte qu'il ne voulut lui faire des instances pour qu'il en vint avec l'Angleterre à des conclusions qui ne pouvaient avoir lieu que lorsqu'on serait sûr de la cour de Vienne, M. de Stamford lui dit d'abord : ‘Sire, votre majesté a pu comprendre, par la lettre que M. de Luc a pris la liberté d'écrire à la reine sur ce sujet, que sa majesté Britannique ne pense pas à l'Angleterre seulement, mais à tous les souverains et gouvernements légitimes de l'Europe. ‘Oui,’ repartit le roi, ‘et c'est après avoir compris ces nobles vues du roi d'Angleterre, que je me suis fait un plaisir de vous en entendre parler.’

“Ce motif suggéré au roi de n'avoir pas d'entretien particulier avec M. de Stamford, motif que sa majesté considérait seulement comme un objet de prudence, de même que sa lettre à l'empereur dans laquelle elle pensait avoir fait tout ce qui était en son pouvoir pour amener sa Majesté Impériale à une confiance mutuelle, sans avoir besoin de l'intervention, trop lente, de la Russie, sont des traits caractéristiques de la conduite de M. de H. [augwitz], et sa majesté croit sincèrement que c'est pour le bien des choses. Cependant, si cette marche continue, rien n'avancera pour le bien, et le mal ira toujours en augmentant.

“Voulant conserver la paix, et séduit par les Français qui la lui promettent si le traité de Rastadt se fait comme ils l'entendent, M. de H.[augwitz] ne butte qu'à ce traité. Sentant bien (je le crois du moins) l'importance pour la Prusse de la conservation de l'Angleterre, il croit avoir assez fait de ce côté-là, en portant le roi à la vigilance sur l'embouchure des rivières ; à quoi ce monarque paraît bien résolu, à tout risque ; mais, en même temps, il fait craindre à sa majesté qu'une stipulation formelle ne fut dangereuse ; et il lui en donne Vienne pour prétexte, tandis que sa propre crainte est du côté des Français.

“D'un autre côté, par cette même appréhension des Français, il semble craindre une réunion entière avec Vienne, et ne diriger les négociations à cet égard que sur son traité de Rastadt, pour convenir des indemnités, ou, si l'on abandonnera ces indemnités, et conclure sur ce point ; par où il fait paraître que l'intervention de la Russie n'est pas essentielle ; et c'est pour y parvenir plus tôt sous ce point de vue, qu'il a engagé le roi à demander à l'empereur d'envoyer à Berlin un plénipotentiaire, à cet effet seulement.

“Voilà donc le moment dangereux, et ce qui paraît exiger la plus grande diligence dans la mission de M. de Stamford ; non pour déclarer seulement, au nom de s'altesse sérénissime le prince d'Orange, qu'il renonce à toute indemnité aux dépens d'autrui, mais pour négocier quelque autre genre d'indemnité ; parcequ'alors, ayant accès auprès du roi et du ministre, il pourrait veiller à ce que, par quelque combinaison soudaine (qu'on ne peut prévoir, ni tâcher de prévenir qu'étant sur les lieux) on ne termine les arrangements pour Rastadt, en renvoyant à un autre temps l'union entre les quatre puissances. Par où les Français, libres de toute autre guerre, pourraient tomber sur l'Angleterre et son commerce avec toutes leurs forces.

“Tant que ce sont des ministres Anglais seulement qui plaident pour cette cause, il est aisé à ces amateurs aveugles de la paix, poussés par la faction, de représenter aux souverains, et à ceux qui les entourent, que c'est l'intérêt de l'Allemagne qu'il faut avoir premièrement en vue ; et il n'y a que des personnes détachées des marches ministérielles, bien versées dans toutes les ruses de la faction, capables de démontrer que toutes ses paix ne sont nécessairement que des embûches ; qu'elle ne veut exterminer l'Angleterre que pour conquérir ensuite tout le globe à la révolution, malgré la paix ; et qui aient assez de courage pour franchir les obstacles qu'on oppose à la vérité, qui puissent laisser quelque espérance de la faire percer dans ces temps critiques, où la timidité aide au mal.

“Je ne puis, dis-je, que redouter l'arrivée de ce plénipotentiaire de Vienne à Berlin, sous l'influence de M. de H[augwitz] seul ; et c'est dans ce moment qu'il faudrait pouvoir porter d'autres ministres, trop timides, à se présenter au roi, pour solliciter sa majesté à se former un conseil dans un moment si important.” Copy.

R. SHEPHERD to [LORD GRENVILLE].

1798, March 21. Portland Road.—“Obscure as is my situation in life, and unconnected with politics, I have long felt reluctant to obtrude on your Lordship this address, lest it should be of less consequence than I might suspect it. But as the storm in Ireland seems thickening, and the Catholics there require a counterpoise in every accession of strength the constitution can by every means acquire; standing, as I do, in some measure pledged to a few individuals in that country, and not knowing how more indirectly to communicate to your Lordship the ideas I have to submit to you, which, if of any, are of great importance, I rather risk the danger of intrusion than incur, by longer silence and reserve, the possible charge of neglect.

“Three or four months in each of the four last years I passed in Ireland; and, having had leisure to observe many evils that existed there, I might detain your Lordship on the respective means of amelioration that my habits of intercourse with the different orders of people suggested. But I pass over the wretched state of the huddled villagers, which an Act of Parliament obliging the farmer to let to his labourer an acre, half, or quarter of acre, in proportion to his family, at the average rent he pays for his farm, would materially contribute to remove; because I suppose such a remedy attended with inconveniencies of which I am not aware, else it would be assuredly applied. I pass by the savage cruelties of the Catholics, goaded on as they are by their priests; one or two in every town and village; a vicar-general over every district consisting of seven or eight parishes; a regular prelacy; and all robbed, as they suppose themselves, of their emoluments, which, upon a revolution, they vainly hope to regain; to whom may be added a band of friars spewed out upon them from the Irish and Scotch convents since the revolution in France. I pass by the Catholics, as never to be conciliated to Government till some effectual means can be discovered to abridge the number of the priests. And I come to the immediate object of this address, the Presbyterians.

“These, of the Dissenters from the Established Church, are the most respectable in point of property and knowledge, though inferior to the Catholics in number. They talk of reform in Parliament, and repeal of Test Acts. But neither the one, nor the other would satisfy; it would increase their power, and thereby render them more formidable. Reform is on their tongue, but their views extend to revolution. On such an event, they presume on their consequence to give law to Ireland. They in the North have been trained up to the use of arms ever since the American war, and wait the moment of insurrection, in readiness to join any party, cry, or cause, and make the most of it. They want to have a full and equal share of all honours and emoluments in Church and State. The question I have to submit to your Lordship, which I do with all possible diffidence and deference, is whether it would be too great a condescension in Government to let them have it, if such a concession would most effectually contribute to tranquillize the country, and assuredly weaken the sinews of rebellion. The sure means of affecting such a purpose consist in effecting an union in religion between the Presbyterians and the Established Church. The advantages of this project were seen, and the thing itself, soon after the Restoration, was attempted in England. But many circumstances then concurred to occasion the failure of it, which do not now exist. A hundred and forty years have made a great difference in opinions, a great alteration in the humours and minds of men. Forms are softened, prejudices weakened, and the petimus damusque vicissim, is a maxim which mankind are now, much better than they were at that time, prepared to admit.

“When I last visited Ireland, impressed with this idea, I particularly associated with the Presbyterians. I found many both of the clergy and laity disposed to listen to it. Whether the minister was robed in black or white, or whether the communion table stood in this or that part of the church, were circumstances, I plainly perceived, not now likely to break off a conference, with so solid and substantial an object begun. With regard to discipline, they seemed not to object to episcopacy; nor with regard to doctrine, to except to a liturgy; the revisal of that at present established in the Church was the point for which they, of course, contended. Those with whom I have chiefly conversed on the subject, are gentlemen of Dublin, and of the counties of Roscommon, Galway, and Down. I always spoke loosely on it, and merely as matter of conversation, as an event rather to be wished than expected; except with two or three, before I last left Dublin, who seemed more particularly disposed to enter into the subject, and express their wishes that I could by any means discover how the English Government would relish such a plan. No fair occasion offering, by intermediate enquiries, to ascertain such point of doubt, before I returned thither, I have presumed to submit to your Lordship this detail, in as few words as I could find wherein to comprise it.”

PRINCE DE REUSS to GENERAL STAMFORD.

1798, March 23. Berlin.—“Je sens profondément la frappante vérité de ce que vous dites dans la lettre que vous me faites l'honneur de m'adresser en cet instant. Mais, en respectant sincèrement vos lumières et vos principes, je me reproche de ne pas vous avoir fait lire les lettres antérieures à celles que je vous montrai hier. Elles vous eussent prouvé que ma Cour a cru voir que celle-ci ne s'arrangerait que sous la condition de prendre. Voilà le mal, et voilà ce qui nous fait tenir le langage obscur, je l'avoue; mais que cette Cour-ci (si Haugw[itz] pensait comme son réellement admirable souverain) aurait pu rendre intelligible, en disant, quelles sont les circonstances qui vous forceront de prendre? si c'est le soupçon que je veux quelque chose, je le lève, en assurant que je ne veux rien, si vous ne prenez rien. Si vous me le permettez, je me rendrai chez vous, pour vous montrer ce qu'il faut, et nous entretenir sur cet objet. Je vous supplie de ne pas partir sans que vous m'ayez accordé la satisfaction de vous voir, et de vous demander votre précieux souvenir, en vous assurant du tendre dévouement que je vous ai voué pour toujours.” Copy.

PRINCE DE REUSS to GENERAL STAMFORD.

1798, March 24. Berlin.—“C’est une bien bonne nouvelle pour moi, que M. de L[uc] ait la même idée que je vous communiquai hier. Je bénirais le ciel de toute mon ame si vous alliez à Vienne. Si cela ne vous dérange point, venez manger ce midi la soupe avec moi ; nous serons seuls, sans domestiques, et nous employerons quelques heures à causer sur ce projet. Si cela ne vous arrange pas, je vous supplie de me le faire savoir verbalement ; alors je passerai demain chez vous à 11 heures du matin.” Copy.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, March 24. Berlin.—“J’ai reçu la lettre dont votre Excellence m’a honoré le 13 de ce mois ; et sensible aux marques de confiance qu’elle daigne m’y donner, je ne crois pouvoir mieux y répondre que de bouche. C’est pourquoi je me dispose à partir pour aller passer quelques jours à Londres auprès d’elle, et avoir l’honneur de mettre aussi aux pieds de sa Majesté le résultat de mes observations. Je ne puis, manque de temps, m’étendre davantage sur le motif de cette résolution ; mais j’ai prié my Lord Elgin de vouloir bien le faire par le courrier prochain, qui me précédera encore, parceque je vais passer par Strelitz.”

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT STARHEMBERG.

1798, March 29. Cleveland Row.—“Je remplis ma promesse en vous envoyant l’incluse. Vous y trouverez non pas les termes, mais les idées générales de ce que j’ai du dire sur les circonstances actuelles. Votre amitié trouvera un intérêt que cette esquisse, sans cela, ne mériterait pas.

“Je renvoye notre affaire pécuniaire à Petersbourg. Du moins cela prolongera-t-il le terme, s’il n’écarte pas finalement le mal.” Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to RUFUS KING.

1798, March 29. Cleveland Row.—“The enclosed sketch having been published this morning and containing, though not the expressions, yet the heads and substance of the speech in question, I have thought that your friendship to me would give it in your eyes more interest than it would otherwise be entitled to. I have therefore taken the liberty of sending it you.” Copy.

RUFUS KING to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, March 30.—“I return you a thousand thanks for your friendly note of yesterday, and have read with great satisfaction and pleasure the excellent speech that you were so obliging as to send me. It is only by this animated, firm and explicit manner of treating the detestable principles which threaten the existence of every society, as well as of human happiness, that we can expect to see a proportionate and successful resistance."

LORD GRENVILLE TO EARL CAMDEN, LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

1798, March 30. Cleveland Row.—"I send you a very imperfect sketch which I have allowed to be printed of the heads of a speech made in answer to a virulent invective against us all. My principal reason for consenting to the publication in this very crude and insufficient form was my strong desire to give notoriety to some of the facts which it contains, and particularly to the charge made at the close of it, and not answered, of a connection between the Opposition and the treasonable Societies here.

"I hope you do not mean to suffer your Parliament to separate without some Act of Attainder against the fugitives. I have been a little considering with myself the principle of our Constitution with respect to Bills of Pains and Penalties, particularly as it is to be collected from the proceeding against Atterbury, held in very good times, and under the direction of some of the ablest lawyers we have had.

"It seems to me that if the existence of a treasonable plot be proved by the conviction at law of some of the offenders, and if it can be shown by sufficient evidence, both that other persons were generally concerned in the practices connected with and forming a part of that conspiracy, and that unusual means have been used to deprive the public of the testimony of those witnesses by whom the particular overt acts could have been proved, such means being used either with the privy of the persons so concerned, or as a part of the general system and conspiracy in which they were engaged, that, in such case, the power of Parliament to punish by legislative Act, not going to life or limb, is unquestionable in practice, and consonant to all true principles of justice.

"The great caution which such a subject as that of legislative interference for the purpose of punishment naturally requires from honest men, has made me desirous that this proposition should be as distinctly stated as I have tried to do it above, and that it should then be weighed and considered; the present moment and circumstances in Ireland being certainly such as to require (if ever) the interposition of Parliament to check by any constitutional exercise of its authority the progress of a rebellion which is almost disputing for pre-eminence and superiority of power with the lawful Government.

"I need not observe to you that this reasoning applies only to Bills of Pains and Penalties against offenders who cannot be convicted by the ordinary course of law, and not at all to Bills of Attainder in default of surrender, the principle of which is obvious and liable to no difficulty that I am aware of. They have not been usual, as I believe, at least not so usual, in the cases where the proceedings have not been instituted against the offenders in Parliament; but I do not think that this difference at all affects the principle, or that any good reason can be assigned against enforcing by legislative proceedings the appearance of the King's subjects to answer in the Courts below to charges of treason against them.

"Excuse these suggestions, which very likely your own reflections have anticipated." Copy.

NOTE ON SWISS AFFAIRS [by Mr. Wickham].

[1798, March. London].—"I have the most horrible details from Bern, directly, of so late a date as the 11th.

"Many of the most respectable officers of the first families of the state were sacrificed as traitors by the soldiers in their retreat. Amongst others General D'Erlach; the Baron d'Erlach well known to the English by his hospitality when Bailiff of Lausanne; General de Gonmoens who commanded the regiment of that name in Holland; and a number of younger men with whom I was intimately acquainted, most of whom have left young wives and large families.

"It appears more than probable that Steigner's life was preserved by four stout peasants, who took him out of the ranks by force, threw him into a cart and led him off to the mountains. The whole country four leagues round is given up to the most horrible pillage, but the capitulation is preserved in the town, excepting that the prisons have been opened, and all the malefactors set at liberty.

"It appears, however, that a strong party has retired to the mountains; but my letter, which in that particular at least must be read with caution as written from Bern itself, gives no hope of their effecting anything.

"Clubs have been established at Bern, and a fraternization has taken place with the Pays de Vaud."

FRENCH AFFAIRS.

CARNOT; AND THE REVOLUTION OF FRUCTIDOR 18, [SEPTEMBER 4] 1795. By M. Bornes, an exiled Deputy.

1798, March —"On demeure toujours étonné comment Carnot n'a pas pris des mesures contre le Triumvirat; il pouvoit tout, s'il l'eut osé. Président du Directoire, maître encore du portefeuille de la guerre, il pouvoit d'un seul mot se rallier la majorité des deux conseils, se rendre maître de la trésorerie par le moyen des commissions des finances et des dépenses, disposer de l'armée en achetant, ou la combattre par insurrection légalement combinée dans Paris et dans les départemens. Si Carnot eut pensé pouvoir donner le mouvement, le maîtriser, et le faire tourner au profit seul de ce qu'il appelle sa république, il ne fut pas demeuré dans l'inaction; mais Carnot d'une part étoit fâché qu'on n'eut pas élevé le ministre Cochon au Directoire; son rejet, l'élévation de Barthélemy, et les petites particularités qui eurent à cette époque lui parurent tenir à un plan Royaliste, et comme un commencement de proscription contre les régicides. Dès lors il se mit en garde contre la majorité du nouveau tiers. On sait tous les changemens qui s'opérèrent dans le ministère et la naissance du Triumvirat à cette époque ; alors Carnot n'avoit plus personne dans le ministère, il ne pouvoit conspirer qu'en dehors du gouvernement, et il ne voyoit au dehors que des Royalistes. Ce parti de Deputés honnêtes du premier tiers qu'il s'étoit attaché ne lui inspiroit point assez de securité. Ils étoient pour la plus part foibles par caractère, avancés en age dans le Conseil des Anciens ; ils ne lui offrirent pas un parti sur lequel il put compter pour résister ou balancer l'action des Cinq-Cents, qu'il soupçonnoit décidés à saisir la première occasion de mouvement pour rétablir la royauté. Il fit cependant des tentatives auprès de ce parti qu'on apelloit les rallentisseurs. Il les pressa fortement de se prononcer, de se mettre au premier rang. Des démarches furent faites aux Cinq-Cents pour y former un parti mitoyen qui, paroissant tout-à-coup, se prononceroit dans un sens bien constitutionnel. Ces démarches ne furent pas sans effet, mais elles étoient tardives ; les négociations devenoient difficiles, et ce parti quoique formé ne trouva point de chefs aux Cinq-Cents qui . . . . ouvrir la campagne sous les auspices de Carnot. Les négociations de ce parti diminueoient les dangers ou les dissimuloient, afin d'accroître le nombre de leurs partisans ; mais, d'un autre côté, on sonnoit l'alarme pour tenir en activité le parti contraire, et il resulta de ces diverses négociations un état de fluctuation pour toute l'assemblée. Barthélemy étoit temporiseur par caractère ; Carnot de son côté n'osa pas prendre un parti décisif dans la crainte de ne pouvoir pas en maitriser le mouvement : il craignoit d'être l'instrument dont on se serviroit pour rétablir la royauté, et d'être brisé par les mêmes mains dont il se seroit servi pour renverser le Triumvirat. C'est ainsi qu'il justifie son inaction, et il l'appuye sur une infinité de détails. Cependant il prévoyoit les dangers, il voyoit les préparatifs, il ne se dissimuloit même pas qu'il en seroit la victime de quelque côté que tournât la victoire, d'être pendu si les conseils l'emportoient, ou d'être fusillé si Barras avoit le dessus. Il crut qu'il devoit se dévouer.

“ Arrive enfin le 17 Fructidor ; à huit heures du soir le commandant de la garde du Luxembourg, faisant sa ronde, apperçoit dans les jardins six ou sept cents hommes armés, tant militaires que bourgeois. Il en fait son rapport au President du Directoire, alors Lépeaux, et ne le trouve pas. Il se rend chez Carnot et le lui fait comme ex-Président.

“ Ce fut pour Carnot le premier avertissement. Il fait dissiper l'attroupissement au nom du Directoire ; les jardins sont évacués, mais les galeries de Barras deviennent le lieu de retraite de tous ces gens armés. Carnot fait apeler Barthélemy, l'instruit de ce qui se passe, et lui propose de fuir ; il étoit encore temps de renverser le Triumvirat, mais Carnot pensoit toujours que le royalisme triomphant le sacrifieroit. Déjà le Triumvirat étoit assemblé chez Rewbell, et les Ministres ainsi qu'Augereau venoit de s'y rendre. Carnot presse de nouveau Barthélemy de s'enfuir ; il refuse, la finit il semble une lacheté ; il se retire dans son appartement. Quelques heures s'écoulent. Carnot songe à sa fuite ; il essaye les clefs de fausses portes qu'il avoit pratiquées, il se jette ensuite sur un lit de repos. A une heure du matin le commandant de la garde se présente pour l'arrêter. Il s'adressa à son frère, général de division, et il y a, de part et d'autre, des pourparlers de convenances et d'égards. Carnot saisit ce moment, ouvre sa première porte qu'il referme sur lui, fait la même chose sur plusieurs autres, et arrive dans une petite rue d'où il se réfugie chez un ami, chez lequel il a demeuré 17 jours avec le ministre Cochon. L'officier chargé de l'arrestation, ne l'ayant pas trouvé, en fait son rapport à Barras, qui, dans son premier mouvement, renverse son bureau, s'arme, et court faire arrêter lui-même Barthélemy. Carnot part de Paris avec un passeport de négociant Francois, et, arrivé à Geneve, il y reste tranquille pendant un mois et demi ; mais l'ex-Conventionnel Duhem y arrive et le reconnoit dans une promenade publique ; une visite domicilien succède à cette découverte, et Carnot y échappe. Buonaparte arrive le même jour à Geneve ; on lui dénonce Carnot, et ceux qu'on soupçonne lui avoir asyle ; aussitôt il les fait appeler ; il leur fait un crime d'avoir sauvé Carnot ; et semble par les accents de sa colère et de sa fureur jouer le premier rôle d'un drame préparé. Un des deux prévenus répond avec calme et dignité, que sauver Carnot seroit une action qui obtiendrait l'estime du héros de l'Italie, lors même qu'il croiroit devoir le blamer ; 'que s'il étoit coupable, il ne s'en défendrait pas.' Cette réponse est presque applaudie et il est renvoyé. L'autre, moins adroit, se déconcerte, répond sans mesure ; son arrestation est demandée par le Général, et le Gouvernement de Geneve obéit. Mais Carnot croit pouvoir assurer que cela n'est qu'un jeu, et telle est aussi l'opinion du malheureux qui gemit dans les fers, se regardant comme la dupe de cette comédie. Carnot n'est pas sans espoir ; il conserve un parti auquel s'attachent les républicains régicides, et tout ce qui reste de la commission des onze qui fit la constitution de 1795."

Nota Bene. "Une seule personne connoit la retraite de Carnot, et c'est par elle que celui qui a écrit ces détails peut communiquer avec lui."

FRENCH AFFAIRS.

NOTE OF CONVERSATIONS WITH THE EX-DIRECTOR CARNOT,
by M. Bornes.

1798, March. Switzerland.—"Jusques au 1 Prairial de l'an 5, Carnot et Rewbell sembloient s'être partagé le gouvernement. Le premier avoit fait son domaine de tout ce qui avoit trait à la guerre, et le second de tout ce qui étoit relatif à la diplomatie. Les autres parties de l'administration étoient concurremment remplies par chacun des Directeurs ; mais le plus souvent elles n'étoient que des objets de ministère, sous l'influence plus ou moins immédiate de tel ou tel membre du Directoire. Jusques là, Barras s'étoit contenté de marauder dans les affaires de détail, telles que les radiations, marchés, ou nominations aux emplois. Il marchoit d'accord avec Rewbell, comme Carnot avec Letourneur. La Présidence, le suffrage toujours mobile de Larevelliere, l'influence plus mobile encore de différens partis dans le corps Législatif, et d'autres circonstances de ce genre, donnoient alternativement la prépondérance à l'un ou à l'autre de ces partis. Barthélemy, arrivant au Directoire et succédant à Letourneur, pouvoit s'attacher à Rewbell, à Carnot, ou à Barras. Dès ce moment Barras voulut être chef de parti, et il fit à Barthélemy beaucoup d'avances pour se l'attacher. Carnot et Barras étoient divisés par des haines anciennes, et quelque désir que ce dernier dût avoir de se réunir à Barthélemy il se retira pour s'isoler, ou pour se réunir à Rewbell, par cela même que le nouveau Directeur marchoit avec Carnot.

“Carnot fut le premier qui rechercha les Deputés hounêtes du premiers tiers ; il avoit même réuissi à inspirer à quelques uns une certaine confiance. Barras avoit aussi fait cette tentative ; mais les liaisons qu'il conservoit avec les anciens Jacobins, et la déconsidération où il étoit, avoient toujours éloigné de lui les hommes mêmes qui avoient commencé à se rapprocher de Carnot. Cependant quelques affaires importantes négociées au Directoire, au commencement de la session par des Députés honnêtes, telles que ceux des colonies, avoient donné lieu à des rapprochements avec Barras ; il montra le désir de marcher avec le parti constitutionnel ; mais sa haine et sa jalousie envers Carnot le tinrent indécis. On en trouve la preuve dans les paroles suivantes proférées par Barras ; ‘Monsieur Carnot qui a sué le crime pendant quinze mois à côté de Robespierre, est recherché des honnêtes gens ; et moi, pour quelques volées et coups de canon au 13 Vendémiaire et à Toulon, je suis repoussé malgré mes services au 9 Thermidor et depuis.’ Il est donc à croire que si Barthélemy se fût décidé, en homme de parti, pour Barras, Carnot se fut trouvé isolé, mais toujours maître de la majorité ; il est à croire aussi que jamais Rewbell et Lepeaux n'eussent osé tenter le 18 Fructidor.

“Les Ministres sont changés ; mais dans un sens tout contraire à l'attente des honnêtes gens, et alors éclate le Triumvirat. Ce renvoi est le gant jetté : tout ce qu'on fait pour se réserver, fait sentir aux Triumvirs la nécessité d'aller plus loin pour se maintenir. Carnot veut négocier, et l'on se dirige vers Lepeaux ; tout est mis en mouvement pour amener ce dernier à un accord ; tous ses amis et Carnot lui-même échouent, et trouvent en lui un petit Séide, un fanatique prêt à tout exterminer. On ne dit rien de l'approche des troupes, ni de la manière dont cette affaire fut traitée dans les deux conseils ; les détails en sont connus.

“La continuation de la guerre paroît aux Triumvirs le seul moyen de se maintenir ; dès ce moment les négociations dans l'Italie, qui jusques là avoient eu un caractère plus décidé que celle de Lille, éprouverent des entraves. Buonaparte en fut plus d'une fois étonné; ses dépêches étoient le plus souvent répondues par des simples lettres au nom du Directoire, et signées par le président Carnot; tandis que le Triumvirat, par des arrêtés secrets, contrarioit les dispositions de ces lettres qui dès lors ne présentoient plus au général de l'armée d'Italie que l'opinion individuelle de Carnot.

“Les relations du Directoire vis-à-vis de Letourneur et de Maret à Lille, furent encore plus singulièrement entravées. Le Triumvirat, en faisant naître des obstacles à la paix, faisoit travailler dans son sens l'armée d'Italie. L'esprit Jacobin dominoit entièrement dans certaines divisions. Les liens de la subordination se relâchoient principalement dans celles d'Augereau, Massena, et Joubert.

“Les Jacobins avoient songé de bonne heure à semer des divisions dans l'armée d'Italie. Ils avoient eu l'adresse de faire d'Augereau le héros d'Arcole, au préjudice du général-en-chef qui, au troisième jour, gagna seul la bataille et empêcha l'entière défaite d'Augereau, déjà en défection. Ils avoient même eu le soin de proclamer Massena l'enfant chéri de la victoire, et pour rendre ces généraux les ennemis de Buonaparte, ils commencèrent à en faire ses rivaux. Buonaparte voyoit tous les jours les progrès de cet esprit d'insubordination; il étoit sur le point de n'être plus maître de l'armée; il s'en plaignoit à Carnot; les émissaires du Triumvirat y souffloient la discorde; la division de Bernadotte avoit failli à en venir aux mains avec celle de Massena; alors arrivent les assassinats de Verone; ils sont l'occasion d'une sorte de révolution dans l'armée; les divisions d'Augereau et autres veulent se jeter dans Venise, et semblent vouloir tout entraîner sans attendre d'ordres; mais Buonaparte se trouve maître de son armée.

“La nouvelle de cette événement arrive au Directoire, elle est un triomphe pour le Triumvirat, un sujet d'étonnement pour quelques uns et d'indignation pour le grand nombre.

“Un mois après une disunion s'ouvre aux 500 sur cet objet; mais dans cet intervalle le Triumvirat avoit renversé par son ministre Faipoul le gouvernement de Gènes et l'avoit assimilé à Venise. Buonaparte à peine échappé aux projets des généraux de division qui se rivalisoient, se croit attaqué par le parti honnête du conseil des 500, et il commence à craindre pour lui. Il s'en plaint à Carnot, et lui donne des assurances de son estime; mais il lui montre en même temps combien il est vivement affecté des attaques qu'on semble diriger contre lui.

“Le Triumvirat et le Jacobins accreditent par mille moyens les allarmes du général: ils lui peignent Carnot comme son ennemi, et Pichégrou ainsi que Willot comme des envieux. Les Jacobins redoublent d'efforts pour travailler son armée pour le faire prononcer.

“Le général se tient en mesure; son armée délibère; Augereau est le porteur de ces délibérations. Buonaparte attend l'avènement; il ne voit aucune utilité à se prononcer; il pouvoit, en un instant, perdre toute sa popularité. Le 18 Fructidor arrive:

Buonaparte l'apprend à son armée, et n'hésite pas de lui en attribuer une partie de la gloire. Il renoue les négociations avec l'Empereur : les pousse avec activité : il les termine, et envoie le traité par son chef d'état-major.

“Ce traité n'a point rempli les vues du parti Jacobin qui domine maintenant au Directoire. Barras a emporté comme d'assaut la ratification en menaçant Lareveillere. Ce traité, et tous les actes publics postérieurs de Buonaparte l'ont placé, malgré lui, dans la nécessité de prendre un parti et d'adopter un système ; bien qu'au commencement de sa carrière il n'ait eu peut-être que l'idée de gagner des batailles. Il sait que les événements commandent aux hommes, que rarement en révolution les hommes les préparent à leur gré, et que toute leur force, comme toute leur adresse, consiste à savoir les mettre à profit.

“Carnot ajoute ; ‘Buonaparte paroît persuadé que, pour ‘maintenir son crédit, il a besoin d'être toujours en activité ; il ‘sait que sans armée il n'est rien, et qu'un simple caporal peut ‘s'emparer de sa personne ; qu'avec une armée il peut de grandes ‘choses, en agissant avec mesure, en alliant l'audace avec la ‘sagesse.’

“Jusques ici il a paru saisir l'occasion avec habilité, et sa conduite depuis trois mois dépose en faveur de sa prévoyance. Il se trouve à la fois plénipotentiaire à Rastadt, et général-en-chef d'une armée sur les côtes. On conjecture qu'il se montrera peu à Rastadt ; mais qu'il y fera de fréquents voyages, et qu'il y traitera de la paix, comme il l'a fait en Italie. Il pense, sans doute, que le héros perd de ses avantages quand, placé sur un vaste théâtre, il subit une observation prolongée. On pense encore qu'il pousse avec activité ses préparatifs contre l'Angleterre, et il se créera, pour ainsi dire, une armée par le moyen de son état-major qui l'a précédé à Paris. Déjà il est débarrassé de Masséna, de Joubert, et d'Augereau, hommes que depuis quelques tems les Jacobins ont élevés pour lui créer des rivaux. Il est à croire qu'il ne prendra point de repos, que les fêtes de Paris l'occuperont peu de tems ; qu'il n'y prendra que la part nécessaire pour soutenir l'enthousiasme en sa faveur, et qu'il quittera cette scène dès qu'il aura rempli son but. En lui supposant un système, il ne se développera qu'autant que sa carrière militaire sera terminée, à moins qu'un événement extraordinairement favorable n'en précipite l'exécution ; mais tant que dureront les combats et les dangers, il sera général ; et ce ne sera qu'après ce rôle fini qu'il se livrera entièrement à celui de politique, de législateur, et même de réformateur qu'on lui reproche d'avoir trop tôt annoncé. Le congrès de Rastadt, s'il devient un congrès de toutes les puissances, peut le mettre dans l'embarras, ou dans la nécessité de s'expliquer plutôt ; mais si ce congrès ne présente pas ce caractère, on ne seroit pas étonné qu'il voulût décider par les armes les puissances qui ne s'y rendoient point. On ne seroit pas même étonné qu'il commençât à agir sur l'électorat d'Hanovre avec les armées de Rhin et Moselle, en attendant que la descente se préparât.

“Peut-être cette descente se feroit-elle à la manière des Barbaresques, en faisant jouer auprès des soldats ces deux grands ressorts, l'espoir du butin et le fanatisme de la gloire.

“Telles sont les conjectures qu'on peut faire sur les projets de Buonaparte.

“On peut ajouter qu'il paroît être trop en mesure pour n'avoir que de la défiance, et qu'il roule un plan dans sa tête. Quel est-il ? C'est son secret, et peut-être simplement celui des événemens. Ce qui paroît certain c'est qu'il fait tout pour en profiter ; que s'il a un plan, il ne peut être qu'en opposition avec celui des Jacobins, et qu'il sera un acheminement à l'ordre s'il n'est pas l'ordre lui-même. A côté des événemens dont cet homme peut devenir la cause, on en prévoit d'autres d'un genre inférieur, auxquels vraisemblablement, il prendra peu de part ; on veut parler des intrigues plus ou moins combinées dont on peut tirer parti pour miner et renverser la puissance des Jacobins, ou des efforts partiels qu'on peut tenter à ce sujet.

“La division dans le Directoire peut se terminer de deux manières : par des intrigues qui commencent déjà et qu'il importe d'alimenter : le général ne s'en mêlera guères. Par un coup de main de Barras contre Merlin ; mais à moins qu'il ne soit décisif dans le plan ou dans les idées de Buonaparte, il ne s'en mêlera pas encore ; et ce sera un général de division qu'il fera mettre en avant, se réservant de terminer la longue tragédie de la Révolution.

“Tel est le résumé de quelques entretiens avec Carnot, et le précis de son opinion.” Copy.

Nota Bene. “In conversing with M. Bornes upon the subject of these notes he mentioned that Carnot attributed the great successes of the French armies, not to any superiority in the troops, but to the great proportion of subaltern officers attached to them, which more than counterbalanced the bad effects of the requisitions. He said it was usual to have 10,000 officers in an army of 50, or 60,000 men.

“According to this gentleman it is Carnot's opinion that 19-20ths of the population of France are royalists.”

LORD GRENVILLE to W. PITT.

Most secret.

1798, April 1. Whitehall.—“I was so unlucky as just to miss you by ten minutes. I have had Starhemberg with me to read a despatch which he has just received from his Court, dated the 18th instant [of March], and forming part, as he says, of a volume of 55 pages of cypher. What he gave me to read was not above 5 pages out of the 55, but they contain, 1st the old story of complaints against Prussia, who, in conjunction with France, is plotting the ruin of the Empire ; 2nd, that by the effect of these manœuvres, though the whole left bank of the Rhine is ceded, the issue of the Congress of Rastadt is still uncertain ; but, 3rd, that, let that business end as it will, it is evident that there can be no reliance on any peace with a Power who has decided to attempt the subversion of all Europe, and that resistance affords the only means of safety, provided that Great Britain and Austria could come to an understanding on that point; which if they could do, they might agree as to the manner of presenting the business at Berlin and at Petersburg. That the most immediate explanation was necessary, for which purpose another messenger was to be despatched in a week to bring back Starhemberg's answer to this despatch, sent him by one of his servants. The points on which the explanation is to turn are stated to be (supposant la possibilité et la convenance de l'enter prise)—1, the means de s'assurer contre la crainte de défection, a point which seems to interest us more than them: 2, pecuniary succours on our part, and particularly des avances to set the thing going: 3, an explicit declaration whether, le cas échéant, we should be able to go on for 1799; and 4, which is extremely pressed, particularly with a view to Naples, a fleet in the Mediterranean.

"I had some little discussion with him on these points, but, in order to abridge the business, he is on Tuesday morning to call upon me with a detailed plan of such engagements as might, in his idea, answer the purpose of his Court.

"I told him as to the Mediterranean fleet that we wished it ourselves, but that no minister would ever advise sending a fleet there without a port to which a ship could look in case of accident or distress of any kind; that to use the ports of Naples or Sicily, for that purpose, would only bring the thing to an issue between France and Naples, possibly before either Austria or Naples were prepared for it; but that, whenever those two Powers expressed their readiness, the one to receive and supply our ships, the other to support this resolution, there would not probably be much difficulty in our doing whatever might be found necessary to assert our naval superiority in the Mediterranean as elsewhere.

"But, as to the general question, putting by for the moment all discussion of money, I did not suppose this Government would embark again in Continental affairs without receiving some assurance or explanation on the subject of the Netherlands, so that, in case of success, that country should not remain to France. We touched a little upon the four possible arrangements on that head. 1. Austria regaining possession of them, which seems almost impossible. 2. Their falling to Prussia as an inducement and price of his concurrence. 3. Their being united with Holland. 4. Their going to some German Power, as a part of a system of arrangement in the Empire. He seems not to think that the second could be made admissible at Vienna, and indeed the whole tone of the despatch to him, as far as I read it, breathes a spirit of the most inveterate animosity against Prussia, distinguishing however the intentions and character of Haugwitz from those which are attributed to the King.

"I thought it worth sending a messenger with this that you might ruminate upon it before we meet. Let me know when and where that shall be. If you do not come to town to-morrow I could come to Holwood, but it would not quite suit me." Copy.

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, April 1. Hollwood.—“I am much obliged to you for the matter which you have given me to ruminate upon. I will not despair that it may lead to something worth trying; notwithstanding the obstacle of old jealousies towards Prussia (which seem to render any general union almost desperate) and notwithstanding the little reliance on any engagements with Austria, and the difficulty of obtaining ground enough to reconcile this country to fresh pecuniary advances. We must endeavour to overcome all these impossibilities, if, even for the present, Austria is in earnest. I return to town to-morrow morning, and shall probably be employed part at least of the time after I arrive, on the business of the land tax, which I am to move to-morrow. I could, however, easily see you, if you wish it, before the House, or in the evening, as our discussion cannot last in the House. If you see Starhemberg to-morrow it would be as well to desire the Cabinet (which Dundas has summoned) to be fixed at an hour which will not interfere with you.

“On the engagement to go on for 1799 (le cas échéant being properly defined) I see no difficulty. On a fleet in the Mediterranean, if a port can be secured, or even occasionally without it, I hope not much. The first and second points you name form the great difficulty, and the second arises chiefly out of the first, and out of the unsettled state in which they leave the former loan. I can hardly believe that they really want advances to set the thing going, and it will be difficult to persuade any one to agree to advances till they show they are in earnest by acting. A declaration from Austria of a determination to protect Switzerland would give us the best chance.”

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT STARHEMBERG.

1798, April 1. Cleveland Row.—“En songeant à notre affaire, voici une idée qui m'est survenu pour obvier à l'une de nos plus grandes difficultés. Voyez si vous pourrez en tirer quelque utilité.

“Vous concevrez facilement que ce n'est plus que par des propositions faites ouvertement et d'avance au Parlement, qu'il peut être question d'arrangemens pécuniaires quelconques. Il va aussi sans dire que nous devons nous préparer là-dessus à toutes sortes d'oppositions même de la part des personnes les mieux intentionnées. Vous voyez, cependant, l'enthousiasme pour les Suisses. En rendant une déclaration en leur faveur, votre Cour populariserait sa cause ici; et nous pourrions obtenir pour cet objet plus, et plus facilement, que pour aucun autre.

“Sans cela nous nous trouverons toujours dans ce cercle; vous, ne pouvant agir sans être assuré de notre secours, nous, ne pouvant vous assurer ce secours qu'après que vous aurez agi. Car ce serait vous tromper que de vous donner la moindre espérance d'arranger cette affaire sans l'avoir préalablement discutée au Parlement. Or quelle apparence y aurait-il d'avoir le consentement des Deux Chambres pour des avances qui n'auraient pas été précédées d'une déclaration publique de votre part.

"Songez à ceci, et soyez persuadé de tout mon désir de voir cette grande affaire terminée selon notre vœu commun, et de manière à préserver l'Europe." Copy.

MINUTE of CONFERENCE with COUNT STARHEMBERG.

1798, April 1.—"This day Count Starhemberg communicated to me the contents of a despatch which he has received from his Court, dated March 18, 1798.

"It begins with heavy complaints of the conduct of Prussia, whom it represents as forwarding the views of France in order to serve its own ambitious purposes. It states that the overtures made by Count Keller have been wholly insufficient for the establishment of confidence, and much more suited to the character of Count Haugwitz than to that which is attributed to the King of Prussia; and that no progress has been made in that negotiation. That, by the effect of the manœuvres of Prussia, the whole of the left bank [of the Rhine] is ceded to the French, contrary to the intentions of Austria. That, notwithstanding this cession the issue of the Congress of Rastadt is still uncertain. But that, whatever the event may be of that negotiation it is evident that there can be no reliance on a power decidedly bent on the subversion of every part of Europe, and totally regardless of the faith of treaties. That resistance to that power affords the only means of safety, provided Great Britain and Austria could come to an understanding for that purpose; which if they could do, they might then agree on the means of presenting the business both to the Court of Berlin and that of Petersburg. That the most immediate explanation was necessary, and that a messenger would be despatched in a week's time, to bring back Count Starhemberg's answer to this despatch, which was sent to him by one of his own servants.

"The points on which this explanation is to turn are stated to be these, supposing the possibility and expediency of the measure itself to be agreed upon.

"1. The security which each party could give to the other against the fear of separate treaties with the enemy.

"2. The pecuniary aid which Great Britain could furnish to Austria, particularly in the outset of the business.

"3. The sending a fleet into the Mediterranean, which point appears to be pressed with peculiar earnestness, and with a view to the security of Naples.

"4. An explicit declaration whether, if it should be necessary, we should be able to go on for the year 1799.

"No precise moment was mentioned for the renewal of hostilities, nor was any particular case specified as likely to lead to that event; but the proposal is rather rested on the general view of the conduct and designs of France. Great animosity is expressed throughout towards Prussia. Count Starhemberg is on Tuesday to furnish me with a sketch of his ideas of the details of these proposed engagements."

THE EARL OF CLARE TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, April 3. Dublin.—"Many thanks to you for your very excellent speech. His Grace of Bedford has, in this single instance in his political life, been of service to the State in bringing forth so explicitly the sense of the British peerage of the wickedness and folly which actuate him and his associates. I begin to entertain strong hopes that we shall soon be enabled to get to the bottom of the base conspiracy existing here."

MÉMOIRE CONFIDENTIEL.

COUNT STARHEMBERG TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, April 4.—Avant de passer aux objets sur lesquels je vous ai promis de vous communiquer mes idées particulières autant qu'elles peuvent se combiner avec celles de ma Cour et les vôtres, et avant de discuter la manière et les possibilités d'établir entre nos deux Cours ce concert si nécessaire, jettons un coup d'oeil rapide sur les trois différentes négociations dont on est occupé actuellement, pour pouvoir en appliquer les résultats aux objets que nous devons, dans tous les cas, traiter confidentiellement, et de Cour à Cour.

"Je passerai rapidement sur la première qui se traite à Vienne entre M. de Thugut et M. de Keller. Elle a été entamée par ordre du Roi de Prusse, et paraissait avoir pour but de se réunir à vous pour sauver l'empire, ou, du moins, la plus grande partie de son intégrité territoriale. J'ai lieu de supposer que les vues du jeune roi étaient justes et nobles; néanmoins, la manière astucieuse dont M. de Haugwitz les a fait présenter, a inspiré des soupçons bien fondés, dont la conduite sourdement perfide des émissaires de Berlin à Rastatt et à Paris n'a que trop vérifié la justice. Quoiqu'à la date du 18 de Mars, M. de Keller continuât de parler encore à notre ministre sur le même sujet, il est vraisemblable que les événements survenus depuis, et la manière dont l'empire a cédé, auront terminé ces conférences.

"Les deux autres négociations se traitent à Berlin. La première est celle que les circonstances ont amené à l'occasion du bouleversement de l'empire, et qui, présupposant au moins tacitement, la cession de la rive gauche du Rhin, n'a d'autre but principal que de régler le mode futur des sécularisations destinées à servir d'indemnités.

"Pour éviter toute chicane avec la Prusse, nous sommes convenus de nous en remettre à l'arbitrage de la Cour de Petersbourg, qui décidera, en dernière analyse, de toutes nos répartitions. D'après cette base connue, je me borne à désirer uniquement que l'affaire de la convention pécuniaire que vous y avez renvoyé, puisse se terminer au gré de vos désirs, au cas qu'elle ne soit pas déjà réglée auparavant, ainsique j'aime à m'en flatter. La seconde négociation consiste dans les tentatives que M. le Duc de Brunswick fait par lui-même et ses agents, d'après vos directions, pour parvenir à réaliser le projet d'une quadruple alliance, que je regarderais comme le souverain bien s'il y avait moyen de l'établir sur des bases assez sincères et assez sûres pour pouvoir se promettre qu'elle durerait autant que la guerre. Je ne crois pas fixer un terme bien long en limitant ce système à cette époque, car je ne doute pas que les quatre grandes puissances, agissant intimement ensemble, ne viennent à bout en moins d'un an non seulement de rejeter l'ennemi au-delà de ses anciennes frontières, mais même de rétablir la monarchie en France, seul et unique moyen d'assurer au repos durable à l'Europe. J'avoue que la réalisation de cette quadruple alliance, toujours difficile à amener, me paraît de toute impossibilité, tant que M. de Haugwitz jouira de la confiance exclusive du roi.

"Tout ce dont on conviendra confidentiellement entre nos deux Cours devant être également spécifié, particulièrement dans le cas heureux d'une quadruple alliance, nous pouvons passer actuellement à l'examen de ces différents points, en présupposant (comme je ne le crains que trop) qu'on ne parviendra pas à faire rentrer la Prusse en jeu. Dans cette hypothèse, le même but, ou du moins celui de dépouiller les Français de leurs conquêtes, est encore très exécutable si la Russie veut coopérer à nos efforts avec l'activité qu'il est en son pouvoir de déployer. Je crois même que pourvu qu'elle en impose à la Prusse, et qu'elle pese sur elle de manière à la neutraliser, on pourrait encore reprendre les armes avec une espérance de grands succès, quoiqu'ils deviendraient de toute nécessité beaucoup plus lents.

"Il résulte de ce que je viens de dire, 1<sup>o</sup> qu'il faut encore tout employer pour réunir les efforts puissants des trois grandes Cours, et je crois que quelques fussent les sacrifices que l'Angleterre ferait en cette occasion, ils seraient placés à un tel intérêt politique, qu'elle ne devrait pas les regretter. 2<sup>o</sup> Qu'au défaut de la Prusse, il faut au moins tâcher de s'assurer des efforts de la Russie. Ceux qui connaissent Paul I jugent qu'il suffirait pour le faire agir, de lui prouver que la paix avec l'anarchie est impossible. 3<sup>o</sup> Que si l'Empereur de Russie se refusait à agir offensivement, il faudrait le déterminer à contenir sérieusement la Prusse pour, qu'au moins, elle ne nuise pas à la cause; et qu'il soit prêt à tomber sur elle à la première perfidie.

"Sans cette assurance positive de notre allié, il est inutile de se rien promettre, et nous ne ferions que courir à une ruine certaine, qu'il faut alors tâcher d'éloigner en nous compromettant le moins que possible avec le monstre que, dans ce cas, nous abimera tôt ou tard. Je crois qu'on pourrait peut-être se flatter que le concours de la Russie, aidé de quelques démarches faites à propos par l'Angleterre, nous procurerait l'appui du Dannemarck et de la Suède, qui ne devraient pas être négligé dans la circonstance. Notre prépondérance, ou l'humeur même des Français, entraînerait également Naples et peut-être la Sardaigne, du moment où les hostilités recommenceraient en Italie. Le Roi de Naples peut fournir une armée assez considérable, qui rendrait des bons services pour éloigner l'ennemi de ses frontières, et peut-être pour reprendre les domaines de la Cour de Rome. Ses ports deviendraient également indispensables à l'Angleterre. Les troupes Piémontaises, restées fidèles à leur souverain, pourraient servir utilement pour achever de chasser les Français de l'Italie, lorsque le Roi de Sardaigne, ayant l'air d'être forcé par nos armées victorieuses à prendre notre partie, se serait déclaré contre l'ennemi. En lui rendant ainsi le service important de le délivrer du joug républicain, que pèse particulièrement sur lui, on pourrait encore lui permettre de se dédommager de ses pertes et de ses paix aux dépens de la République de Gênes, entièrement à sa convenance, et le seul pays qui mérite réellement le châtiment le plus exemplaire pour la manière perfide dont il a ouvert les portes de l'Italie aux Français, qu'il n'a pas cessé de favoriser depuis, dans tous les temps.

“ Ces principes une fois posés, il me semble que pour éviter toute perte de temps (ce que je regarde comme de la plus haute importance) il faudrait que vous me missiez, dès à présent, en état de présenter un plan tout fait à l'assentiment de ma Cour, en répondant aux ouvertures que j'ai été chargé de vous faire; de façon à éclairer tellement sur vos intentions qu'il ne reste pas le moindre doute à leur égard; et qu'on soit sûr, qu'en agissant de la manière indiquée, on pourrait compter sur l'exécution réciproque de ce qu'on se croira en droit d'attendre de vous. Je sais que les secours que vous pouvez nous donner sont toujours soumis à la sanction préalable du Parlement; mais je n'ignore pas non plus que, quand vous nous indiquez les moyens de les obtenir, c'est presque nous les assurer; et je connais trop bien par expérience le caractère honnête et les talents parlementaires du ministère avec lequel nous traitons, pour ne pas toujours engager ma Cour à se décider d'après ses conseils, avec la même confiance que d'après ses promesses.

“ En conséquence de cette conviction, je veux avoir l'honneur de vous soumettre mes idées sur les différents points des ouvertures de ma Cour, en les reprenant dans l'ordre dans lequel elles sont faites, et en vous proposant une réponse à chacune. Quand vous les aurez examiné, nous en causerons ensemble, et ce ne sera qu'après que vous m'aurez définitivement informé de votre dernière résolution, que j'en rendrai compte à Vienne.

1<sup>o</sup> L'entreprise en question est-elle possible, et est-elle convenable aux intérêts des deux Cours ?

2<sup>o</sup> Quels seraient les démarches à faire à Petersbourg, à Berlin, et auprès des différentes Cours ?

3<sup>o</sup> Quels seraient les moyens et les formes à employer entre nos deux Cours pour se rassurer mutuellement, en cas de reprise d'armes de notre côté, contre toute crainte d'une défection subite de part ou d'autre ?

4<sup>o</sup> Quels seraient les secours pécuniaires par lesquels l'Angleterre se déterminerait à subvenir aux besoins extrêmes de nos finances ?

Il faudrait une somme assez forte, fournie d'avance, ou pour le moins, au premier moment de notre explosion.

5° Le Cabinet Britannique serait-il en mesure et en volonté de continuer la guerre pendant l'année prochaine, 1799 ?

“Ad 1<sup>um</sup>. L'entreprise en question est-elle possible ?

“Il paraît que cette question n'admet aucune doute quant à l'objet des convenances. Quant à la possibilité elle en est également certaine, à moins que la Russie se refuse absolument à tout.

“Ad 2<sup>um</sup>. Quelles seraient les démarches à faire. . . . Je crois avoir déjà anticipé cette réponse au commencement de ce mémoire, mais j'ajouterai encore une seule observation ; c'est qu'il faut bien se persuader, et surtout tâcher de faire comprendre à Vienne, que le Roi de Prusse doit être payé du service qu'il rendra même par sa neutralité. Dans ce cas, à la vérité, il ne faut pas lui donner des subsides, mais lui assurer des acquisitions territoriales pour l'époque de la paix. S'il se battait, il faudrait se résigner à lui donner des subsides actuellement, et lui promettre toujours quelque possession à la fin de la guerre. Cette récompense pourrait se trouver dans quelque territoire à sa bienséance dans le voisinage des pays qu'il perd actuellement à la gauche du Rhin, et qu'il recouvrerait alors ; ou, dans le cas que nous faisons des acquisitions considérables en Italie, nous pourrions peut-être lui céder quelque chose de plus en Pologne. Il me semble que si nous écartions par cet arrangement le point de contact que nous avons maintenant avec la Russie, nous ferions une spéculation politique excellente.

“J'avoue que je ne désirerais jamais que les Pays-Bas deviennent le partage de la Prusse. Quoique je conçoive que cet arrangement serait un pis-aller moins fatal que de les voir entre les mains de la France, il me paraîtrait bien dangereux ; et l'Angleterre devrait ne pas perdre de vue que ce serait un nouveau moyen d'augmenter la puissance Française que de lui donner un tel voisin ; que la crainte qu'il aurait de perdre ses nouvelles provinces lui dévouerait entièrement. Je crois d'ailleurs que le Roi de Prusse refuserait cette possession si on la lui offrait ; et que la Cour de Vienne s'opposerait toujours à une telle disposition.

“Ad 3<sup>um</sup>. Quels seraient les moyens et les formes possibles à employer. . . . ?

“Je ne vois pas d'autre moyen de résoudre cette véritable difficulté diplomatique, tout pour la forme que pour le fond, que de convenir :—1° du but qu'on se propose, qui ne peut être que de dépouiller les Français de leurs conquêtes, en s'accordant sur le temps qu'on se propose d'y employer. 2°. De fixer l'époque à laquelle, au cas que nos nouveaux efforts fussent inutiles, on ferait de concert des ouvertures de paix à l'ennemie. Et 3°. De prévoir d'avance autant qu'il est possible les seuls cas où l'une ou l'autre des deux Cours, se trouvant dans la malheureuse nécessité de recevoir la loi de l'ennemi, se verrait forcée à une défection subite et partielle ; en stipulant néanmoins que, même alors, elle en prévientrait son allié aussi promptement que possible. Ce cas ne peut jamais être, ce me semble, que celui du danger imminent du cœur même de la monarchie, telle qu'était peut-être notre position au moment des préliminaires de Leoben. En ayant prévenu réciproquement ses alliés sur une supposition aussi malheureuse que peu vraisemblable, on pourra, je crois, se reposer avec plus de tranquillité sur la bonne foi respective qui se trouvera ainsi à l'abri de tous les événements. Il faudrait s'engager en outre à ne jamais écouter aucunes propositions de paix séparées, quelque avantageuses qu'elles puissent paraître.

“Ad 4<sup>um</sup>. Quels seraient les secours pécuniaires que l'Angleterre. . . . ?

“Ce sera à l'Angleterre à nous proposer le montant de ces secours qui ne peuvent être que des subsides. Il faudrait, comme ma Cour l'observe, une somme assez considérable pour le commencement de nos opérations. Il suffirait, que j'ai eu l'honneur de vous le dire plus haut, que vous m'articuliez ces paroles, ‘quand nous aurons appris que vous avez recommencé, nous proposerons au Parlement de vous donner autant immédiatement, et autant par mois.’”

“Je sais qu'il vous est aussi impossible de prendre un engagement à cet égard, qu'il vous est facile de le tenir sans avoir rien promis. Il serait inutile de rien demander au Parlement avant que nous ne nous soyons prononcé ; et, d'ailleurs, toute démarche sur cet objet révélerait notre projet dont, avec raison, nous voulons faire un secret pour tomber plus inopinément sur les Français.*

“Je n'ignore pas qu'en nous donnant des subsides vous acquerrez une sorte de droit sur le mode de la guerre, dont nous ferons une partie à vos fraix, et que vous pourrez en conséquence faire des conditions. Elles porteront vraisemblablement sur le recouvrement de la Hollande et de la Belgique, que vous ne pouvez pas vouloir laisser à la France. Notre but doit donc être de leur arracher ces provinces ; et c'est, en dernière analyse, à l'époque de la réalisation de ce projet, soit par la voie des armes ou des négociations, que vous renverrez la paix ; et que vous risquerez peut-être de faire la guerre, et de nous mettre en état de la continuer jusqu'à la fin de 1799. Pour y parvenir il est indispensable de presser l'ennemi sur tous les points. Il semble que l'Empire, ou du moins ses états les plus marquants, devraient y avoir un intérêt majeur ; puisque la reprise des Pays-Bas doit être précédée de celle des provinces à la gauche du Rhin. On devrait donc croire qu'ils seront prêts à faire des sacrifices momentanées pour y contribuer. Mais il faut les y forcer s'ils s'y refusent, et c'est encore un des points de vue sous lesquels, indépendamment de ses autres services, la Russie serait extrêmement utile ; puisqu'elle pourrait plus impunément, et sans en craindre autant les conséquences, exécuter militairement les états de mauvaise volonté.

* La déclaration que vous m'avez proposée en faveur des Suisses me paraît tout à fait à propos dans cette occasion. J'en ai écrit à Vienne, et j'ai insisté pour qu'on la fit aussitôt qu'on le pourrait, en tâchant d'en faire sentir l'importance.

“Il me reste à dire un mot de la manière dont, à la paix générale, on pourrait disposer des Pays-Bas. Je crois avoir allégué des raisons suffisantes pour qu'ils ne tombent pas au pouvoir de la Prusse. Mais, comme d'un autre côté il est d'un grand intérêt qu'ils soient assez forts pour se défendre par eux-mêmes, je crois qu'on pourrait les réunir à la Hollande ; ce qui formerait un état assez puissant, surtout si, avec le titre de Roi ou de Stathouder, on donnait plus d'autorité au Prince d'Orange, qui pourrait alors former une alliance avec l'Angleterre et l'Autriche ; et peut-être même faire un traité de subsides avec cette dernière, afin qu'elle laisse, pendant les premières années, un certain nombre de troupes dans ses provinces pour les garder, jusqu'à ce que le Prince d'Orange ait eu le temps de monter son militaire au point de croire pouvoir se défendre par ses propres forces.

“Ad 5<sup>um</sup>. Le Cabinet Britannique serait-il en mesure . . . ?

“On a répondu à cette question par les deux articles précédents dans lesquels celui-ci rentre absolument.

“Il serait à propos qu'après avoir discuté ces différents points, nous les envoyassions à Vienne, afin qu'en conséquence on entre en campagne aussitôt que possible ; et qu'après avoir commencé, on me donnât l'ordre de terminer sur le champ cette besogne avec vous, si on ne préférerait pas de la finir à Vienne. Comme les circonstances changent d'un instant à l'autre, je crois qu'il vaudrait mieux que nous la terminions ici, car, une fois d'accord sur les bases, nous mettrons sûrement plus de promptitude à notre ouvrage, et nous y apporterions d'ailleurs tous les deux un grand désir de nous entendre, et ces facilités que l'amour du bien, soutenu d'intentions pures, inspire toujours à ceux qui pensent comme vous et moi.”

LORD GRENVILLE to the EARL OF ELGIN.

Private.

1798, April 4. Cleveland Row.—“I was very much concerned to hear from Lord Granville Leveson that you still continue so much out of order, and that the delay of your leaving Berlin tends so much to impede your complete recovery. It is not the language of mere compliment when I assure you how much I shall regret your absence from thence in so busy and critical a period as the present ; but, upon the best judgment I can form of the present situation of affairs on the Continent, there seems very little probability that by waiting any number of weeks or even months, the circumstances would become more favourable for your journey, while, if I am rightly informed, the delay may be more prejudicial to yourself. In case of your absence, whether now or later in the year, I should feel unwilling that the King's affairs should be left solely in Mr. Garlike's hands, not from the least distrust of him, but because at Berlin, above all places, the weight and consequence attached to higher diplomatic situation, and even to higher rank in life, is likely to be important under the present circumstances.

“ What I should therefore wish to propose to you is this, that you should fix the time of your absence at as early a period as the roads and weather will make practicable, without interfering with the very consideration (that of your health) which alone could induce either yourself or me to entertain the idea of your being absent. Mr. Eliot, who is named to Ratisbon, is ready to set out very soon for his post. He may take Berlin in his way, arriving there some little time before your departure. You will acquaint him with the carte du pays, put him upon a confidential footing with Count Panin, and leave him there when you go, charged ad interim with the King's affairs, but with the rank and consideration attached to his station in life, and to his diplomatic character at Ratisbon and Munich. I have, as yet, said nothing to him of this arrangement, nor does he guess, I believe, that it is at all in my contemplation. But it has occurred to me as the best means of remedying what I so sincerely lament, and of leaving you perfectly at your liberty, in point of time, without the anxiety of being to decide upon the moment when businesses of such importance would be to be left in the hands of a Secretary of Legation, who, as such, must be unequal to the part which a British Minister would be to bear in them. You will write to me, I trust, in the same unreserved confidence as I have used on this whole subject ; and above all, believe that I shall look with real anxiety to the moment when you may be able to resume your functions.” Copy.

MONSIEUR DE LUC to GEORGE III.

1798, April 4. Rityebüttel.—“ Votre majesté aura sans doute été informée de la résolution que j'avais prise de venir moi-même apporter les informations que j'avais recueillies dans mon dernier séjour à Berlin. Ces informations sont de telle nature, qu'il était impossible de les confier à la poste ; et, surtout, trop variées pour qu'aucun mémoire pût dispenser des informations de bouche. J'ai cru cependant devoir en exposer les chefs dans un mémoire ; et comme d'ici il n'y a plus de risque que celui de voir mon travail aller, avec la malle, au fond de la mer, je crois devoir tâcher de gagner du temps, en le mettant ici humblement aux pieds de votre majesté, qui le recevra sans doute avant que je puisse avoir le bonheur de me retrouver auprès d'elle. Si votre majesté était à Londrès le jour que, s'il plaît à Dieu, j'y arriverai, j'aurai l'honneur de me rendre aussitôt à la maison de la reine ; si non, ce sera chez milord Grenville que j'irai d'abord.

“ Il faut travailler à sauver l'Europe, avant que de chercher à y relever la religion. Celle a été la règle de ma conduite depuis que votre majesté a daigné me confier ses soins pour l'un et l'autre objet. Mais, s'il plaît à Dieu de nous accorder la première de ces faveurs, nous devons songer à nous en rendre dignes, en travaillant à rappeler ses lois dans le cœur et l'esprit des hommes. Car l'abandon de la religion est porté sur le Continent à tel point, que si l'on ne parvient à y remédier, il n'y laisserait jamais rien de stable, quelsque fussent les traités entre les puissances. J'ai des espérances de pouvoir y contribuer, et, sous les auspices de votre majesté, j'y consacrerai tous mes efforts."

Enclosure.

Exposition succincte des circonstances qui m'ont déterminé à partir pour Londres.

"Dans un état plus naturel que celui où les choses se trouvent à Berlin, la lettre que le roi a écrite à monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic, et les encouragements que nous avons recus, M. de Stamford et moi, dans la dernière lettre dont milord Grenville m'a honoré, auraient probablement suffi pour accélérer la négociation de milord Elgin; mais les propres dépêches de ce ministre, et la lettre que j'eus l'honneur de lui écrire en lui annonçant mon départ, dont je le priai de transmettre une copie en chiffre à milord Grenville, auront déjà sans doute fait comprendre à sa Majesté, et à ses ministres, qu'il y a à Berlin une stagnation invincible par les moyens jusqu'ici employés, et que pourtant il faut chercher à vaincre.

"C'est parcequ'il est impossible de donner par lettres une idée suffisante tant de cet état des choses, que de la nécessité d'employer incessamment quelque nouveau moyen, que je me suis résolu à porter moi-même ces informations; et c'est à en fixer d'avance les objets généraux, afin que sa Majesté et ses ministres puissent voir d'un coup d'œil ce qu'il sera particulièrement nécessaire que j'aie l'honneur de leur exposer de bouche, que ce mémoire est destiné.

- "Lorsque j'eus l'honneur d'écrire ma dernière lettre à milord Grenville, notre espoir à Berlin, qui bientôt n'avait reposé que sur ce que le Roi avait promis à M. de Stamford de le recevoir en particulier, était déjà bien affaibli par un long délai; et il avait été trouvé nécessaire que milord Elgin, dans l'audience qu'il devait avoir de sa Majesté pour lui présenter ses lettres de créance, fit mention de M. de Stamford comme d'une personne que sa Majesté Britannique avait cru propre à représenter, d'une manière moins apparente que par les démarches ministérielles, les motifs qui devaient engager les puissances encore subsistantes à se réunir promptement pour résister à leur ennemi commun. Tel était, dis-je, l'état des choses, lorsque j'eus l'honneur d'écrire ma dernière lettre à milord Grenville.

"Milord Elgin, ayant eu son audience, fit ainsi mention au Roi de M. de Stamford; mais quoique sa Majesté parût satisfaite de cette ouverture, et que probablement elle le fût en effet elle-même, il n'en résulta rien; de sorte que M. de Stamford, entièrement découragé, et dont la santé empirait par le chagrin, était résolu de retourner à Brunswic pour peur que cet état durât encore, ne voyant aucun moyen de le faire changer. D'un côté, cependant, il n'était pas possible de douter des bonnes intentions du Roi; et d'un autre, par les communications que M. de Stamford continuait d'avoir avec les ministres des deux Empereurs, il ne pouvait y avoir non plus aucun doute que leurs Majestés Impériales ne vissent le danger de l'Europe et la nécessité d'une prompte réunion. Comment donc ces dispositions des monarques eux-mêmes pouvaient-elles rester sans effet, tandis que le torrent de la révolution s'avancait sur eux !

“Prévoyant, dès l'envoi que j'eus l'honneur de faire d'Hanovre du premier mémoire de M. de Haugwitz, seul effet du voyage de monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic à Berlin, que la timidité innée de S[on] A[ltesse] S[érénissime] mettrait bien des difficultés dans la suite de cette négociation, j'avais pris la liberté d'exposer à sa Majesté que quelque moyen subsidiaire d'arriver au Roi de Prusse me paraissait nécessaire ; et lorsque je me vis obligé d'aller à Berlin, seul, et sur une simple introduction de S[on] A[ltesse] S[érénissime] à M. de Haugwitz, ayant l'honneur d'en informer milord Grenville, j'exprimai mon regret d'être réduit à de bien petits moyens ; cependant la nécessité m'obligea d'y avoir recours.

“Informé par M. de Stamford que M. le Baron de Reck, ministre de la Justice, et son frère, chambellan du Roi, étaient deux personnes de grand mérite et bien intentionnées, j'avais employé une personne intime avec eux, et avec qui je suis lié, pour être bien introduit auprès d'eux ; et par degrés, j'avais obtenu leur confiance. D'un autre côté, j'avais écrit à monseigneur le prince Ernest de Mecklenbourg, qui sait que j'avais eu l'honneur, il y a onze ans, de voir la princesse, aujourd'hui la Reine de Prusse, à Darmstadt, pour le prier de vouloir bien, par une lettre de sa part, me procurer le bonheur de me mettre à ses pieds ; et je venais de recevoir cette lettre. Tels furent les moyens que je mis en œuvre ; sur quoi je m'abstiendrai ici des détails, me bornant aux résultats.

“Je priai d'abord monseigneur le Prince Héritaire d'Orange de vouloir bien informer sa Majesté que j'étais honoré de cette lettre, et que je désirais extrêmement de lui présenter l'humble hommage d'un fidèle serviteur de la Reine, sa tante ; ce que sa Majesté voulut bien m'accorder.

“Je n'entreprendrai pas d'exprimer la confiance que m'inspira cette princesse ; elle fut telle, par sa sensibilité à tout ce que j'avais l'honneur de lui représenter, que dans un long entretien, je lui exposai tout ce que j'aurais désiré de pouvoir dire au Roi, et que je me crus autorisé à lui prier de vouloir bien le représenter à sa Majesté, en la suppliant d'entendre M. de Stamford ; ce qu'elle eut la bonté de me promettre. Cependant deux jours se passèrent encore sans aucun effet de cette nouvelle tentative, et le départ de la Cour pour Potsdam était prochain.

“Résolu de faire un dernier effort pour percer ce mur qui semblait être élevé entre le Roi et nous, je me déterminai à écrire à la Reine, la suppliant, au nom de la sûreté de la monarchie et de l'humanité, de mettre ma lettre aux pieds du Roi ; et dans cette lettre je peignis l'état des choses avec toute la force dont je fus capable ; concluant encore par presser le Roi d'entendre un homme dont la probité et les lumières lui étaient connues ; et qui, s'il était refusé, n'aurait plus qu'à aller porter sa douleur dans la retraite. J'eus le bonheur de frapper sa Majesté par un côté qu'on n'avait pas songé à garantir en le circonvenant ; et dès le lendemain elle fit venir M. de Stamford, qui eut avec elle un long entretien. J'en ai les chefs, jetés sur le papier par M. de Stamford, et j'en sais tous les détails; mais il n'y a qu'une seule circonstance qui laisse quelque ressource; car ce moyen si désiré, le seul qui donnât encore quelque espérance, est aussi demeuré sans effet par tout ce qui entoure le Roi, et qui ne fournit que trop de motifs à la timidité du Duc; ce qui me conduit à parler de M. de Haugwitz.

“Il n'y a qu'un voix parmi les gens éclairés et bien intentionnés pour représenter ce Ministre comme menant la Prusse et l'Europe à sa perte; et cependant je n'ai entendu personne qui l'accusât de le faire, le sachant. Ce qu'en disent ces personnes, c'est qu'il est sans courage, et veut éviter la guerre; que par là il est aisé à tromper, tant qu'on lui présente la possibilité de la paix, ce que le min[istre] Français a l'art de faire; et que, croyant être dans la bonne route, il ne se fait point de scrupule de cacher sa marche par la duplicité. C'est là un fort mauvais ministre, dans des circonstances où l'erreur est fatale; mais comment parer à ce mal, quand personne n'ose s'avancer pour le prévenir! J'ai appris certainement que, pendant le séjour du Duc à Berlin, voyant bien cet état des choses, il tenta de mettre en avant les personnes qu'il aurait désiré voir à la place de M. de Haugwitz. Mais il y eut assaut de timidité; on voulait que le Duc lui-même en parlât au Roi, et, sans doute, on avait raison; mais de son côté s[on] a[lt]esse s[érénissime] opposait qu'on l'accuserait auprès du Roi de vouloir s'emparer de lui, et il insistait qu'on se présentât; et c'est par ce conflit que M. de Haugwitz est resté à sa place, comme ministre unique par le fait pour les affaires étrangères.

“Cependant, il est bien évident que, si l'on ne parvient à détruire cette oligarchie de M. de Haugwitz, toute la bonne volonté du Roi sera infructueuse. Sa Majesté ne peut qu'être entraînée par celui qui seul l'entretient ministériellement des affaires; et en qui, de plus, les entours intimes du Roi, quoiqu'aussi bien-intentionnés que sa Majesté, mais aussi peu clairvoyants par manque d'expérience, ont placé leur confiance par le même désir de la paix. Il falloit donc tâcher de former un plan tel que quelques gens de bien eussent le courage de l'entreprendre. J'y réfléchis, et je communiquai mes idées à M. le Baron de Reck, le ministre de la Justice; c'était que lui et quelques autres ministres du Roi, se réunissent pour représenter à sa Majesté que dans les circonstances alarmantes où se trouve l'Allemagne, et en même temps toute l'Europe, elle voulût bien se former un conseil devant lequel elle se fit rapporter les affaires par M. de Haugwitz, afin que le sort de monarchie et de l'humanité ne fût pas entre les mains d'un seul homme qui, avec la plus grande droiture, peut se tromper dans son jugement.

“Dès ce premier exposé de l'idée, M. de Reck la saisit comme le seul moyen de détruire l'influence de M. de Haugwitz, et de presser ainsi l'alliance des quatre puissances. Mais qui osera faire cette proposition au Roi! Voilà toujours la timidité chez les gens de bien, et comment les méchants triomphent.

“Je crus que M. de Stamford, ayant eu dès longtemps occasion de fréquenter M. de Reck, aurait plus de pouvoir que moi pour le déterminer. Je proposai donc à celui-ci de voir M. de Stamford, en lui confiant notre mission commune. Cette conférence eut lieu ; M. de Reck convint de nouveau que le moyen proposé était le seul qui présentât quelque espérance de succès. Mais qui osera faire cette démarche auprès du Roi ? On parle toujours du D[uc] de Br[unswick], qu'on accuse d'être trop timide, et l'on suit son exemple.

“J'étais alors résolu à mon départ, et j'en donnais pour motif qu'un ordre de sa majesté la Reine d'Angleterre m'obligeait d'aller à Strelitz ; après quoi, probablement, j'irais faire un voyage en Angleterre, avant que d'aller me livrer à l'objet pour lequel le Roi m'avait fait l'honneur de me nommer professeur à Gottingue. Je priai encore Monseigneur le Prince Héritaire d'Orange de vouloir bien demander pour moi à la Reine la permission d'aller recevoir ses ordres pour Strelitz ; et de témoigner à sa Majesté combien je serais heureux si je pouvais avoir, en même temps, l'honneur de me mettre aux pieds du Roi. J'obtins l'un et l'autre, et le Roi me reçut avec tant de bonté, que je me sentis dès l'abord la plus grande confiance.

“Je ne dissimulai point à sa Majesté combien j'avais désiré ce moment, pour pourvoir l'entretenir de l'état de l'Europe ; non pour l'Angleterre seulement, mais pour sa propre sûreté, à laquelle je voyais avec douleur que rien encore ne tendait. Je ne puis exprimer tout ce que je sentis pour ce jeune monarque, en le voyant se prêter à ma franchise, avec la bonté la plus naïve, et le plus grand intérêt ; en un mot, l'effet en fut tel sur moi que je me crus obligé en honnête homme, et pour lui-même, de ne pas laisser échapper ce moment de lui représenter le danger qu'il courait à n'avoir qu'un seul ministre ; et après avoir exposé à sa Majesté toutes les raisons qui devaient la déterminer à se former un conseil, je finis ainsi : ‘Enfin, Sire, le ministre qui, dans des circonstances aussi périlleuses que celles où se trouve l'Europe, circonstances telles qu'une seule faute de jugement peut devenir fatale aux trônes et aux monarques eux-mêmes, prend, néanmoins, sur lui tout le fardeau de l'événement, montre par là ou son imprudence, ou des vues obliques. Car tout homme, prudent et droit, devrait demander lui-même que la responsabilité ne reposât pas sur lui seul.’

“Durant cette effusion de cœur, le Roi m'écoutait avec la plus grande attention ; et la Reine, avec un intérêt touchant, portait ses regards tantôt sur sa Majesté, tantôt sur moi. Enfin, lorsque je me retirai, le Roi me fit l'honneur de me dire : ‘J'avais bien appris que vous étiez un honnête homme, mais vous venez de me le prouver bien fortement ; je vous reverrai avec beaucoup de plaisir à votre retour d'Angleterre.’

“Quelles heureuses dispositions chez ce jeune monarque ! Faudrait-il qu'elles fussent rendues infructueuses. J'allai aussitôt chez M. de Reck pour lui faire comprendre combien il y avait à espérer d'un Roi qui considérait les représentations franches d'un simple individu, tel que moi, comme l'acte d'un honnête homme ; et je l'animai, autant qu'il me fut possible, à s'acquitter du même devoir, lui qui était un des ministres de sa Majesté. M. de Stamford aura entretenu, jusqu'à son départ, les dispositions que cela fit naître chez M. de Reck; après quoi il aura été à Brunswic, pour tâcher de ranimer le courage de s[on] a[ltesse] s[érénissime].

“Voilà quelques préparatifs pour un changement de choses; mais nous connaissons trop bien, M. de Stamford et moi, tout ce qui peut venir le traverser, pour ne pas sentir qu'il faut de nouveau mettre quelque chose en mouvement qui entretienne celui-là. Nous avons cru en trouver le moyen dans un objet de son entretien avec le Roi; et c'est ce qui est le principal motif de mon voyage; car, s'il obtenait l'approbation de sa Majesté, il n'y aurait pas un moment à perdre pour travailler à son exécution.

“Ce sont ces malheureuses indemnités, qui préparent la ruine de l'empire et de l'Europe. Elles sont pressées pour cet effet par les Français, et M. de Haugwitz ne veut pas le voir: il y butte toujours, et c'est là la cause des mésintelligences entre Vienne et Berlin, quoiqu'en dise ce ministre; il faut passer par-dessus lui à cet égard, et chercher un moyen pour que le Roi et l'Empereur s'expliquent mutuellement par quelque autre route; car nous avons, M. de Stamford et moi, de deux côtés tout lieu de croire que l'Empereur n'attend que d'être sûr de la Prusse, pour prendre la résolution de résister aux Français. Quant au Roi de Prusse, M. de Stamford ayant pressé auprès de sa majesté la nécessité de renoncer à tout démembrement de ce qui reste de l'empire, le Roi, en acquiescant à la force de ses raisons, ajouta néanmoins: ‘Mais le sort du Prince d'Orange me tiens à cœur; nous pensions pour lui aux évêchés de Bamberg et de Würzburg, mais l'Empereur s'y oppose; que faire donc?’ ‘Sire (répondit M. de Stamford) je crois son altesse sérénissime trop juste et trop bien pensante pour vouloir des indemnités, non seulement aux dépens d'autrui, mais au risque de la chute de l'empire et de la sienne propre. Mais je croirais qu'il serait possible d'améliorer le sort de ce prince infortuné, en le mettant en état de faire quelques acquisitions territoriales autour de sa principauté de Nassau, et de la relever de l'état où les Français l'ont mise et en l'aidant à revendiquer des territoires qui ont appartenu à cette principauté.’

“Le Roi parut très soulagé de cette idée; ce qui manifesta ses dispositions propres. Nous sûmes que M. de Haugwitz devait en avoir été informé, et il était essentiel de savoir quel effet cela avait produit sur lui. J'y étais admis comme tout autre étranger, ainsi j'allai le voir. Il mit lui-même les affaires sur le tapis, et je l'amenai aux indemnités, sur quoi il me répéta encore: ‘Sans doute qu'il serait bien à souhaiter qu'on pût les éviter; mais nous ne pouvons pas abandonner le Prince d'Orange, qu'il faut soulager des grandes pertes qu'il a subies.’

“Voilà donc la pierre d'achoppement qu'on présentera sans cesse au bon cœur du Roi, et qu'il est très essentiel d'enlever. Il ne serait pas difficile, ce me semble, à sa Majesté Britannique de faire sentir à Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange, que toute poursuite d'indemnité, aux dépens de quelque autre état de l'empire, serait fatale à tout l'empire, et ainsi à lui-même; et qu'il peut, au contraire, contribuer à le sauver, en donnant l'exemple d'une renonciation formelle. Or, d'après cette idée, si son altesse sérénissime pouvait être déterminée à donner plein pouvoir à M. de Stamford de faire cette déclaration en son nom au Roi de Prusse et à l'Empereur, avec les instructions nécessaires pour négocier quelque autre manière d'améliorer sa principauté, M. de Stamford, autorisé par là à approcher le Roi et l'Empereur, aurait une force très grande pour faire le bien général.

“Le min[istre] de Vienne à Berlin ayant mérité, par ses confidences à M. de Stamford, d'être consulté sur cette idée, l'a saisie avec la plus grande avidité, comme la première lueur de sauver l'Europe; l'assurant que s'il pouvait porter à l'Empereur la certitude que le Roi de Prusse serait ferme dans une nouvelle coalition, il s'y prêterait sans balancer. Enfin, ayant cru devoir aussi aux deux Messieurs de Reck la communication de ce projet, ils m'ont parus résolus, si cette perspective s'ouvrait, de faire auprès du Roi, avec d'autres ministres, toutes les démarches nécessaires pour qu'elle ne fût pas infructueuse.

“Tels sont les textes principaux des choses que je me suis déterminé à venir humblement offrir à l'attention de sa Majesté et de ses ministres, et sur lesquels je pourrai leur donner de bouche tous les détails qu'ils me feraient l'honneur de me demander.”

LORD GRENVILLE to EARL SPENCER.

1798, April 7. Dropmore.—“I have this morning received your letter which, I need not tell you, has very much spoiled all the dreams in which I was indulging myself of Austrian succour, of France driven within her antient frontier, and of Europe saved.

“It is impossible for me to doubt that you would feel as anxious as I should to realise these dreams; or even to take the chance of their being realised, if it were possible to do so. As that cannot be, I can only lament this fresh instance of the ill fortune which pursues us, and prepare my answer accordingly.” Copy.

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798,] April 7. Downing Street.—“Lord Spencer brought me yesterday a rough statement of the naval force, which by no means satisfied me that we may not send a fleet into the Mediterranean, if the other parts of the plan can be arranged. Nor did his opinion seem to be decided upon it. I desired him to send the paper to you, that you might forward it to me with your proposed despatch. I hope you will still think it worth while to draw that despatch, as the best way of bringing the whole subject under consideration, and then fix a day for a Cabinet. I will be ready at any time; but Wednesday, not sooner than twelve nor later than one, would suit me best, if it suits you. The Duke of Portland goes to Bulstrode to-morrow, and desires you will send to him there to let him know the time. As far as I have thought since on the Austrian business, my doubts are of a very different sort from those founded on the deficiency of our naval force. I think I see many symptoms of the spirit of the country awakening so much on the idea of meeting and defeating invasion, that I doubt much whether they would like to exchange the prospect of that conflict for a remote and perhaps lingering war, supported for a longer period and without a decisive issue, at our expense. This, however, is a very nice point to judge, and on which I own my opinion is not decided ; but I wish we should fully consider it.

“ We have further accounts yesterday and to-day from Manchester, showing the activity of the societies there, and furnishing clear charges of treason against four persons for administering oaths to soldiers, binding them, among other things, to assist the French, and to endeavour to establish here a Republican Government. A person will be sent down to-morrow with warrants and proper instructions to seize these persons, and, at the same time, all the secretaries of the societies whose names we know, and all other persons on whom, from information on the spot, sufficient suspicion shall attach. Every precaution, I think, is taken to render the measure effectual, and I hope it may lead to a great deal. If the evidence turns out such as I expect, it will lay unquestionable ground for the immediate suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act, and, I think, for further and new measures. I put down very hastily yesterday evening the outline of such a Bill as I think the circumstances will require and justify. I am certainly not afraid you will think it too strong. The Attorney and Solicitor General to whom I have shown it, both approve the ideas, and are clear that some such measure is necessary. I have got from the Solicitor the Bill which we prepared four or five years ago, which I send you because the subject is connected with this, though the provisions then proposed would not reach the object we have now.

“ Macdonald's note applies to my proviso as well as to that proposed in the former Bill. I shall be at Wimbledon till two to-morrow, and return there in the evening, after dining in town. On Monday I go to Hollwood to wait your summons. Our prisoners from Manchester of course cannot be here before the end of the week.

“ I do not make out on what ground you think it clear that we must withdraw our force from Portugal.”

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798, April 7. London.]—“ Permettez à votre ami d'ajouter quelques mots à la lettre officielle très insignifiante que j'ai l'honneur de vous envoyer. Les dernières malles m'ont apporté beaucoup de détails sur ce qui se passe chez nous, et je puis vous assurer que nous nous conduisons moins mal qu'on ne le craint. Je sais que nous avons le projet de ratifier cette éternelle convention. Nous voudrions être bien avec vous. La nécessité de dégainer de nouveau commence à se faire sentir. Thugut le désire au fond, et peut-être pourriez-vous en hâter la décision.

Je vous soumettrai mes idées de vive voix sur plusieurs points la première fois que j'aurai l'honneur de vous voir, et quand vous me donnerez un rendez-vous. Vous daignerez vous souvenir alors que ce sera votre ami qui vous ouvrira son cœur, et non pas le ministre son portefeuille." French.

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, April 15. London.—" Mon dernier courier m'a apporté une continuation d'instructions, entièrement conformes à celles que j'avais reçues par le premier.

" On insiste avec raison sur une prompte décision, puisqu'en effet, l'urgence des circonstances n'admet aucune perte de tems. Quoique nos besoins soient très considérables, on me donne à entendre qu'on parviendra sans grandes difficultés à régler l'article des secours pécuniaires, parceque nous sommes constamment disposés à entrer loyalement dans la situation de nos alliés.

" On me réitère l'ordre de presser l'envoi d'une escadre dans la Méditerranée ; et, en effet, si vous ne vous déterminez pas promptement à cette mesure indispensable, les Français vont être incessamment les maîtres, non seulement de toute l'Italie, mais encore du Levant. Je dois appuyer de mon mieux M. de Circello, qui reçoit des instructions de sa Cour à ce sujet qu'il m'a communiqué en entier, quoique je ne l'ai informé des miennes, qu'en autant qu'elles concernent la seule partie de la flotte à envoyer dans la Méditerranée. On m'apprend, en outre, qu'il s'établit enfin une sorte de rapprochement entre nous et la Cour de Berlin, sous les bons offices de la Russie ; et que les événements de Rome et de la Suisse commencent à faire impression sur l'esprit du jeune Roi, dont le caractère paraît honnête ; mais on ajoute que le comte de Haugwitz ne cesse de le travailler dans le sens contraire. On désirerait que vous engageassiez le Duc de Brunswick à renforcer encore l'esprit et l'effet de ses premières insinuations, et que vous donniez l'ordre à lord Elgin de râmer continuellement dans le même sens.

" Une autre dépêche que vous lirez également comme celle-ci, puisqu'elles sont toutes les deux en chiffres François, me dit d'insinuer au P[rin]ce Frédéric d'Orange (ce que j'ai déjà fait) de revenir bientôt à Vienne, parceque l'Empereur se propose de l'employer d'une manière analogue à l'estime que sa valeur et ses éminentes qualités lui ont inspiré pour sa personne.

" Je me rendrai demain chez vous selon vos ordres à une heure, mais comme je songe précisément dans ce moment même, qu'il pourrait vous être agréable (pour éviter toujours toute perte de tems) d'avoir un abrégé succinct des ouvertures officielles que j'ai à vous faire (mon dernier mémoire n'étant que confidentiel, et renfermant beaucoup d'idées qui n'expriment que mon désir personnel) je viens de tirer une copie à la presse des deux petites feuilles ci-jointes qui contiennent la classification des objets dont j'ai à vous entretenir, et je vous en envoie l'original. Elles n'étaient faites que pour aider ma mémoire, mais peut-être trouverez-vous utile de les parcourir, ou même de les garder. Excusez leur griffonnage ; cela n'était écrit que pour moi.

“ J'ai eu un petit mot de Madame de Rochechouart par une voie indirecte. Elle m'annonce des nouvelles importantes sous très peu de jours, et renouvelle encore la parole qu'elle nous a donnée, dont elle nous promet des preuves très prochaines.”

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, April 15. Somerset Place.—“ I received your letter this evening just before I left Wimbledon. I shall be glad to speak with you on the subject as soon as you please ; indeed, I have wished to have done so for some days past in consequence of a proposition made to me by Lord Minto to put himself at the head of a corps of French emigrants ; and I am not sure if that mode of benefiting by their services would not in some views be less exceptionable than an enrolment of them in distinct corps. I have wrote to Lord Minto that I took it for granted you would be in town on Wednesday, and I should be glad to meet him along with you.”

Postscript. “ At any rate it is clear that there should be an allotment made for the aged, infirm, or infant émigrés, in some safe central places.”

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798], April 17. Somerset Place.—“ I have a summons from you last night to attend a Cabinet to-day at 12 o'clock. I am so occupied this forenoon it is impossible for me to be there. At 12 o'clock I have a meeting with all the commandants of the various corps in London and its environs in order to point out to them, in presence of the Duke of York and Lord Harrington, the various positions they are to take for the security of the cities of London and Westminster in the case of alarm ; and, after that meeting, there is another with the Duke of York and Lord Cornwallis and Mr. Pitt, with the colonels of militia regiments in town, in order to talk over the subject of flank corps, about which many difficulties are started, and much very inconvenient delay is created.”

Postscript. “ Don't mention to anybody the cause of the last meeting. It is a most unfortunate difference of opinion. Your brother, Lord Berkeley, and some more militia officers are strongly of one opinion upon the legality of separating the flank corps ; and Mr. Pitt, I think, leans to the doubt. Lord Euston and others, equally good officers, are of an opposite opinion ; and Lord Cornwallis, Sir William Howe, and Sir Charles Grey are all clamorous on the subject, and insist that if parts of the militia cannot be embodied into light corps under the commands of officers expert in light infantry service, they become comparatively of little use. Guess then in what an awkward predicament I find myself. For more than a month the business has not been, although ordered, carried into execution from this unfortunate collision of opinions. It might, no doubt, be very speedily settled by a very short Act of Parliament, but you are well aware of the disagreeable state in which Government is placed by any measure in Parliament relative to militia, when perhaps the one half of the respectable officers would hold one language, and the other half an opposite language, tending to inspire doubts in the minds of the militia privates that the faith of the law was not kept to them. My difficulties are not diminished by a long argumentative letter from your brother to Sir William Howe, with the grounds of his opinion ; and having put Lord Buckingham's letter into the hands of the Attorney and Solicitor General, they have given a positive opinion against his reasoning."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

Note of the principal points in the Instructions brought to him by two couriers from Baron de Thugut.

" 1798, April 18.

Premier courier.

1. "S[a] M[ajesté] continue à désirer d'entretenir les liaisons les plus étroites avec s[a] M[ajesté] Britannique.

2. "Jamais il n'a été question, et il ne sera jamais question (à moins que les procédés les plus ennemis de la part de l'Angleterre ne nous y forcent) d'une alliance avec les régicides. Je puis donner les assurances les plus positives à cet égard en parlant de la peine que nous avons éprouvée qu'on puisse nous soupçonner.

3. "Premières explications à obtenir sur la convenance et la possibilité des mesures à prendre pour empêcher le bouleversement général.

4. "Quelles sont les démarches faites et à faire auprès des différentes cours.

5. "Quels moyens à prendre en cas de reprise d'armes pour nous assurer réciproquement contre une défection subite de part ou d'autre.

6. "Quels seraient les secours pécuniaires que l'Angleterre pourrait fournir ; il faudrait une forte somme fournie d'avance, ou au premier moment de notre explosion.

7. "Le Cabinet Anglais voudrait-il et pourrait-il continuer, s'il le fallait, la guerre pendant l'année 1799.

8. "Armée considérable rassemblée dans le Tyrol et vers la Suisse qui donne déjà de l'humeur à la France.

9. "Escadre à envoyer sur le champ dans la Méditerranée.

10. "Secret à observer sur ces ouvertures."

Second courier.

1. "Lorsqu'on sera une fois d'accord sur un plan solide pour préparer une réunion de diverses Cours contre les projets funestes de la France, l'on parviendra à s'entendre sur les secours, parceque quelque immenses que soient nos besoins, nous sommes disposés à entrer dans les circonstances et dans la situation de nos alliés.

2. "Si l'on n'est pas décidé à Londres à voir avec indifférence les Français se rendre entièrement maîtres, non seulement de toute l'Italie mais même du Levant, il est de la plus grande urgence d'envoyer immédiatement une escadre dans la Méditerranée. Sans une pareille mesure Naples est perdue, tant la frayeur s'est emparée des esprits. Je dois appuyer M. de Circello sur ce point.

3. "Quoique nous ne soyons pas encore absolument d'accord ensemble, il y a une sorte de rapprochement entre nous et Berlin sous les bons offices de la Russie. Les événements de Rome et de la Suisse, et la perspective effrayante qu'ils offrent pour l'avenir font quelque impression sur le jeune Roi, mais le comte de Haugwitz lutte contre les dispositions vertueuses de son maître.

"L'Angleterre peut y contribuer efficacement en engageant le Duc de Brunswick, qui a déjà fait quelque insinuation utile à Berlin, d'en renforcer l'esprit et l'effet par des nouvelles représentations. Il sera bon que Lord Elgin soit muni de l'ordre de ne cesser de réveiller l'attention du Roi, et des personnes dans lesquelles il a confiance, sur le danger imminent dont l'Europe est menacée, et sur la nécessité d'un concert loyal entre tous les souverains pour subvenir la subversion totale." French.

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT STARHEMBERG.

Memorandum of answers on the points of the foregoing note.

1. "Même désir de notre part.

2. "Persuasion où l'on est ici qu'une alliance entre s[a] M[ajesté] I[mpériale] et la République Française est impossible, et que la Cour de Vienne ne peut méconnaître dans cette grande crise ni l'étendue du danger qui menace tous les états, ni le seul moyen d'y parer, celui d'une union sincère et générale entre les grandes puissances.

3. "Que les mesures à prendre pour empêcher le bouleversement général nous paraissent non seulement convenables et possibles, mais même faciles dans l'état actuel de l'Europe, si l'on parvient à s'entendre là-dessus de bonne foi.

4. "Que nous n'avons cessé de faire les plus fortes instances partout pour opérer un rapprochement entre les grandes puissances. Que nous avons lieu de nous flatter que les dispositions y sont favorables tant à Berlin qu'à Petersbourg, et que sa Majesté est prête à y concourir en tout ce qui peut dépendre de l'Angleterre.

5. "Que les mesures à prendre à cet égard dépendent en grande partie de l'étendue et de la forme qu'on donnera aux engagements pour la reprise d'armes, et que nous sommes prêts à entrer en négociation là-dessus.

6. "Quant à l'article des secours pécuniaires, la ratification de la convention de 1797 est un préliminaire indispensable à toute discussion sur cet objet. Mais le ministre du Roi à Vienne aura des instructions pour traiter là-dessus, aussitôt que cette ratification lui aura été remise.

7. "Il n'y a rien dans la situation de la Grande Bretagne qui puisse l'empêcher de continuer la guerre aussi longtemps que les engagements de sa Majesté et les intérêts de son peuple pourront l'exiger.

8. "L'affaire des Suisses est regardée ici comme étant de la plus haute importance.

9. "L'article de la flotte ne souffrira pas des difficultés, pourvu que tout le reste s'arrange. Mais le secret est indispensable sur cet objet, surtout pour la conservation de Naples.

10. "Toutes les démarches que l'on a faites prouvent combien on est scrupuleux à ne pas compromettre le secret de la Cour de Vienne. Mais il est fort à désirer que l'on puisse être autorisé de parler librement de ces ouvertures aux autres puissances qui y sont intéressées."

"Tous les points des Instructions apportées par le second courrier sont compris dans ce qui est déjà dit.

"Mais il doit y être ajouté celui des engagements secrets de la Cour de Vienne avec la France. On en a toujours fait un mystère ici. Nous les croyons en partie opposés à nos intérêts, et même contraires à nos droits. Une communication franche à cet égard est absolument nécessaire si l'on veut rétablir la confiance."

LORD GRENVILLE to the PRINCE OF ORANGE.

1798, April 18. Downing Street.—"En conséquence de la permission que votre Altesse sérénissime a bien voulu me donner ce matin, j'ai l'honneur de lui expliquer de cette manière l'objet de la communication dont Sa Majesté m'a chargé auprès de votre Altesse. La nécessité d'opérer (s'il est encore possible) une réunion entre les grandes Puissances du Continent pour s'opposer au progrès ultérieurs des Français, et les difficultés que présenteroient à cet égard les prétensions respectives de l'Autriche et de la Prusse pour s'indemniser aux dépens de l'Empire, ne sont pas inconnus à votre Altesse. Elle n'ignore pas non plus combien ces difficultés pourroient tenir à cette stipulation du traité entre le feu Roi de Prusse et le Directoire François par laquelle il était convenu que Votre Altesse sérénissime seroit compensée pour sa renonciation au Stadthoudérat par l'acquisition d'une indemnité territoriale dans l'Empire, laquelle seroit en partie le résultat des sécularisations qu'on méditoit alors.

"Sa Majesté connoissant la justice, le désintéressement, et les sentimens élevés de Votre Altesse a pensé qu'il seroit digne d'elle de déclarer formellement, tant à Vienne qu'à Berlin, qu'elle renonçoit à ces idées de dédommagement par des acquisitions territoriales aux dépens d'autrui, et rien ne pourroit plus qu'une pareille déclaration contribuer à écarter les obstacles qui s'opposent à cette réunion d'où dépend le salut du continent de l'Europe. Sa Majesté m'a donc chargé de lui en faire la proposition, en ajoutant que si elle ne voyoit aucun inconvénient de charger de cette commission si honorable M. le général de Stamford (dont personne ne connoit mieux le mérite distingué) cela pourroit encore être d'un grand avantage pour le succès des objets majeurs dont il est question.

"Les sentimens nobles et équitables que votre Altesse sérénissime a montrés dès le moment que j'ai commencé de m'acquitter des ordres du roi à cet égard, ne me laissent rien à désirer quant au rapport que je dois en faire à Sa Majesté, et n'ont pu qu'ajouter à la vénération et au profond respect qui m'ont toujours animé à son égard."

The EARL OF ELGIN to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, April 19. Berlin.—"I am totally at a loss to express to your Lordship, in terms satisfactory to my feelings, the sentiments which your private letter of the 4th instant have produced in my mind. No gratification can be greater than that of seeing your Lordship take an interest in my efforts to fulfil the duties of my situation. But I may be allowed to acknowledge that the cordiality with which you have attended to the account given by Lord Granville Leveson of my health, and the extreme delicacy with which you come to my relief by a suggestion, not only beneficial to his Majesty's service but of a nature essentially to ease the anxiety of my mind, call for the expressions of my warmest gratitude. I should, however, be very unworthy of this testimony (may I call it?) of your Lordship's friendship, were I, on that account, to moderate that zeal which I am thus doubly called upon to exert.

"At the time of Lord Leveson's departure I was indeed very much out of order. It was during the continuation of unusual bad weather which greatly impeded my recovery, and I accordingly solicited a leave of absence. With the change of season, however, the whole state of my health has undergone a sensible improvement. I have now only a local rheumatism which, as your Lordship may perceive from my handwriting, is chiefly in my arms. And it is no longer the opinion that my remaining at Berlin can have those inconvenient consequences against which I had to guard six weeks ago. The consideration therefore of my health, which your Lordship so obligingly says is the only one which would lead you to the idea of my being absent from hence in this busy and critical moment, is no longer in any degree urgent. And, for my own part, I readily forego any advantage arising to me from the leave of absence lately granted, rather than quit my post under circumstances where, as in the present, I have the prospect of being useful. Your Lordship is, I trust, persuaded that this expectation rests upon no opinion of my own abilities, but on a conviction of the difficulty of transferring that kind of confidence that exists between me and those of my colleagues here with whom the business now beginning will come to be transacted. Your Lordship knows the nature of my habits with Count Panin. The extent of his confidence has, of late, been without limit; and, in the present moment, is not less personal, and comprehending private concerns, than dictated by his rectitude of principle, and strong attachment to the cause which Great Britain so nobly supports. The footing on which I am with Prince Reuss is not, perhaps, less essential. An acquaintance of some years standing has established between us a friendship founded, I have reason to hope, on much mutual esteem. This, however, and the being engaged in the same contest, was insufficient for several months after my arrival here to bring forth that degree of confidence which he has since adopted; and which, I own, appears to me (on my imperfect knowledge) very highly important. At all events I trust the kind of intercourse which exists between us bears, in its utility to his Majesty's interests, some proportion with the satisfaction it affords in the transaction of business.

"There is still another person whose friendship I have experienced this winter in a way for which I cannot be too grateful. It is M. de Rosenkrantz, the Danish Minister at this Court, but for the present at Radstadt. On hearing that I had received orders to communicate what I could collect of the proceedings of the Congress, he has voluntarily furnished me accounts from thence, drawn up without reserve, or care, and has thereby enabled me to forward regular reports to your Lordship. I should here observe that this correspondence from M. Rosenkrantz is unknown to every person here, without exception.

"In addition to what I here mention, Lord Leveson will probably have acquainted your Lordship with several circumstances respecting the King of Prussia, and the persons in his immediate confidence, which are likely not to be immaterial on any emergency.

"The events which have taken place here subsequent to the date of your Lordship's letter, and the business which is now before me, lead me to the conviction that advantages such as I have alluded to, are now as interesting as they could be in any possible conjuncture. And I rely on your Lordship's finding in this conviction the motive and justification of my declining a proposal which the state of my health does not render necessary; but which I shall ever consider as the most gratifying proof of your Lordship's friendship and kindness towards me."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798], April 20. Somerset Place.—"I had some conversation with Lord Minto yesterday on the subject of arming the respectable part of the emigrants, and I recommended him to speak with you likewise. For my own part I really have but one feeling upon it, which is to do what is best for themselves; but I cannot help being apprehensive that, amidst the existing prejudices, it may raise a clamour and ferment very prejudicial to themselves. Would it not be right that you should fairly state that to themselves through the Duke d'Harcourt. Perhaps some opening may occur to sound the pulse of the House of Commons upon it on Monday or Tuesday next, when I believe there is to be a Committee on the Alien Bill."

LORD GRENVILLE to the EARL OF ELGIN.

Private.

1798, April 20. Cleveland Row.—"The receipt of your last letter, in which you speak of the King's leave of absence having reached you, but mention that you shall not avail yourself of it while there is any pressure of public business at Berlin, inclines me to hope that your health is more re-established than I had apprehended; and it would certainly be a very great satisfaction to me to learn that you can remain there, in the present very critical state of affairs, without material inconvenience and danger to yourself.

"I am by no means sanguine as to the general prospect of affairs on the Continent; and yet it is mortifying to see that the whole obstacle, or at least the only insurmountable obstacle, is now to be found in the perverse folly of one man, who, because he has taken a false step in persuading his sovereign to break his engagement and desert his allies, seems now to think himself bound in honour to persevere in the same ruinous folly. If there were any possibility of trusting the Prussian government, I do sincerely believe that Vienna, not from choice but from the sense of necessity, would come forward again with energy, and if so, certainly with success; but they never will trust Haugwitz, nor can I blame them.

"When De Luc goes back, he will, I believe, carry a sort of authority from the Prince of Orange to Stamford to declare his renunciation of all idea of territorial indemnity in the Empire, and to notify this both at Berlin and Vienna. This may perhaps be of use. It will give Stamford another opportunity of seeing the King of Prussia. It may perhaps open to him some access to the Emperor. But with all this, I fear no real good will be done because of Haugwitz; and I do not well see how this or anything else is to effect his removal, with the dispositions of the King of Prussia such as they are described to me.

"If you mean to quit Berlin for any time, which I earnestly hope you may be well enough not to do, pray give me as early notice as you can of it. The arrangement which I mentioned to you in my last private letter will be at any rate impracticable, as I believe family reasons will keep Eliot in England this summer."

Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to the DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.

1798, April 23. London.—"M. de Luc, en retournant à Berlin, aura l'honneur de remettre cette lettre à v[otre] a[ltesse] s[é]rénissime. Elle me permettra, j'espère, de profiter de cette occasion pour lui offrir l'hommage de mon respectueux dévouement, et pour la solliciter d'employer encore son intervention efficace pour le succès de la grande cause de tous les gouvernements. M. de Luc aura l'honneur d'expliquer à v[otre] a[ltesse] s[é]rénissime la nature de la commission dont Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange a chargé le Général Stamford auprès des Cours de Vienne et de Berlin. La démarche du Prince d'Orange servira, je pense, en elle-même à écarter des obstacles qui s'opposeroient encore à la réunion de ces deux Cours. Elle y contribuera encore plus en donnant à une personne telle que M. de Stamford l'occasion d'approcher ces souverains, et de leur faire voir le danger qui les menace, et les moyens qui se présentent aujourd'hui, peut-être pour la dernière fois, pour y parer.

“Jamais l’occasion ne fut plus favorable pour faire sentir au Roi de Prusse ses véritables intérêts. V[otre] A[ltesse] le pardonnera au zèle qui m’anime, ainsi qu’à la connaissance que j’ai depuis longtems de ses sentimens et de ses vœux pour le bien, si j’ose la solliciter à y contribuer encore par le poids de ses conseils. Je fais cette démarche non seulement au nom du Roi, mais aujourd’hui au nom de toutes les Cours, qui paroissent n’attendre qu’une détermination favorable à Berlin pour agir de la manière qui seule leur convient. Je puis même lui dire que la Cour de Vienne en sent tellement l’importance et la nécessité, que le ministre Impérial a reçu l’ordre de me communiquer qu’on savoit à Vienne de quelle utilité ont été les conseils de [votre] a[ltesse] s[érénissime] dans le commencement du règne actuel à Berlin, et qu’on désireroit beaucoup que v[otre] a[ltesse] s[érénissime] voudroit s’employer encore pour maintenir le Roi de Prusse dans des sentimens favorables à l’union des deux Cours. V[otre] a[ltesse] s[érénissime] qui est plus que personne persuadée de la nécessité de cet union, ne se refusera pas à cette demande. En y acquiesçant elle aura peut-être la satisfaction de sauver l’Europe, s’il en est encore tems.”

Copy.

NOTE by LORD GRENVILLE for GENERAL DE STAMFORT.

1798, April 23. London.—“La commission dont le Prince d’Orange a chargé M. le Général de Stamford présente un double avantage; celui d’écarter l’un des obstacles à l’union de deux Cours que l’on fondoit sur les prétensions de la maison d’Orange à une indemnité territoriale en Allemagne; et bien plus encore celui de donner à M. le Général l’occasion de s’adresser encore personnellement au Roi de Prusse, et ensuite à l’Empereur; et de travailler auprès de ces deux souverains à l’acheminement du grand ouvrage de la réunion des Cours contre la France.

“Dans le moment actuel le premier et le principal de tous les objets seroit de disposer les deux grandes Cours de l’Allemagne à s’entendre et à s’unir. Cette difficulté surmontée, les circonstances et l’urgence de la crise ameneroient rapidement tout le reste. On fait déjà des propositions de la part de l’Empereur de Russie pour une alliance défensive. On témoigne déjà à Vienne le désir de se rapprocher de l’Angleterre. Les ministres du Roi dans ces trois Cours ont déjà tous les pouvoirs et toutes les instructions nécessaires pour traiter les détails. Mais si la méfiance continue entre Vienne et Berlin, tout devient inutile. Le caractère et les talens du Général de Stamford ne pourront manquer à contribuer efficacement à produire cette impression sur ces deux souverains de laquelle dépend absolument aujourd’hui le salut du Continent, et la conservation de la religion et de la société civile en Europe.”

Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to the EARL of ELGIN.

Private.

1798, April 24. Downing Street.—“You will receive this by M. de Luc, who will at the same time acquaint you how far he has been successful in persuading the Duke of Brunswick to take any active step on the present occasion. I send you copy of my letter to the Duke, and of the note which I have given M. de Luc of the object which General Stamford should keep in view, if he sees the King of Prussia again, and if he has the opportunity of getting at the Emperor." Copy.

EARL CAMDEN to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, April 25. Dublin Castle.—“I troubled you with a very long letter and several enclosures upon the subject of our arrests in Ireland, and upon the case of the fugitives. I am not surprised that under the present circumstances you should not have had leisure to reply to me; but whenever you have the opportunity, I should be much obliged to you for your further sentiments upon the subject.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, April 25. Stowe.—“I do not like to involve you in discussions in which I am concerned; but as I cannot bear the thoughts of being forced (by the silly German project of putting the militia under the care of the army) into discussions in Parliament which must be highly dangerous, and into measures cruelly painful to me, I enclose you a letter to Mr. Pitt, written in consequence of information given me of a private meeting of Colonels held by order of the Duke of York; not advertised, not public, at which my letter was read without notice to me, with a legal opinion from the Attorney and Solicitor General of which I have not heard one iota; and at which Mr. Pitt's name and that of Mr. Dundas were used by Lord Euston and Lord Dundas for the intention of removing my doubts by their new Bill. I believe I told you that I had apprised Mr. Pitt of my intention to oppose any such Bill by every exertion, and to resign my command the moment it passed into law. I am confident he does not mean to drive me to this necessity, but (if I have been rightly informed of this meeting) I have great reason to fear that he has suffered himself to be overpersuaded to acquiesce in a project which, I will venture to foretell, neither he, nor any one else, can see the end of; for in my conscience I believe that from the moment in which it is distinctly stated to the militia army, through the newspaper debates, that it is intended to battalionise them under the command of the army officers, and to train, discipline, and command them by East India captains of sepoys, you risk the most dangerous consequences. I know that you dislike entering into army details; but the militia principles of fighting under their own officers, and of supplying by the local connexion between officer and man what may be wanting in professional knowledge, and of maintaining by that connexion a constitutional force are so obvious, that I am tempted to hope you will endeavour to save them from the Germanised military Cabinet who have devised this new system; and save me from the pain of calling the attention of the public to it by the most decided conduct.

"I trust I have not said a word to Pitt that can vex him. I really do not mean it; and in writing to you I do not wish to put you under any difficulties; for, if upon consideration you do not think proper to speak to him upon it, you need only seal my letter and send it to him; but I cannot help thinking that you may be of use in keeping things quiet."

EARL SPENCER to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, April 26. Admiralty.—"I am so far from seeing any prospect of sending sooner than we talked of, that I confess I have still very great apprehension of our ability even to fulfil our present stipulation. The last accounts state the force at Brest to be in a greater state of forwardness than we had reckoned upon; and, if they can be trusted, would increase it to thirty sail of the line in two months' time; and all our schemes for raising men are so precarious, that I fear we must not count upon them sufficiently to ground any assurance on them till they shall be much nearer realised than they appear to be at present. The Toulon armament, however, must surely be much exaggerated, or all the accounts we have hitherto received from them must have been totally false. If the force there is really what the last accounts from Turin describe it to be, our detachment to the Mediterranean will be of no avail; for the whole of that plan proceeded on the supposition of their not having more than about ten sail of the line effective. I think we must not on any account give more expectations than have already been given."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, April 26.—"J'ai reçu par la dernière malle une longue dépêche allemande en chiffres, sur le contenu de laquelle il serait utile que j'eusse l'honneur de vous entretenir. Elle roule essentiellement sur nos affaires d'intérêt; mais j'y ai vû avec plaisir que mes cris, mes instances, et les mouvements continuels que je me suis donnés, ont enfin produit leur effet. Je suis autorisé à vous assurer officiellement et solennellement que nous ratifierons certainement et incessamment la convention. Jamais cela ne m'avait été prononcé aussi positivement. Les raisons par lesquelles on s'excuse de ne s'être pas acquitté plus tôt de ce devoir, et de ne pas s'en acquitter dans le moment même, sont en vérité assez acceptables, en condescendant un peu à notre état de faiblesse et de timidité.

"Je ne doute pas qu'on n'acquiesce actuellement sur le champ à la demande de M. Eden, et je ne pourrai m'empêcher de m'en féliciter un peu. Labor omnia vincit improbus. Voilà le cas ou jamais. J'ai, outre cela, d'autres choses à vous communiquer sur le mode de nos remboursements des arrérages de l'ancien emprunt. Je voudrais en causer avec vous avant de donner des instructions à ce sujet à Ransonet."

The MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, April 29. Stowe.—“I am sensible as I ought to be to the very affectionate attention which you have given to the letter I wrote to you ; and though there are many points of opinion on which I see that we do not meet, respecting the legality or policy of this silly plan, yet I am not less grateful to you for endeavouring to save me personally from the painful alternative which will be forced upon me, the moment that I am ordered to detach my grenadiers or light infantry for the purpose of incorporating or forming them into battalions. I have well considered the few plain words in the Militia Act which attach on this question, and whatever may be the legal abilities of the Attorney and Solicitor General, I am confident that plain common sense is in this discussion fully competent to decide. I do not dispute the military wisdom which inclines Lord Cornwallis and other officers to press for light troops, as little as I should the naval wisdom of Lord Bridport, who would equally press for seamen and marines ; but I contend that it would not be more illegal or impolitic to send us on board the Royal George, than to take our militia from the command of those officers who by law ought to lead them, for the purpose of forming them into army battalions under officers of a different service. You will observe that in this question I contend for the militia principle, and set aside entirely the question of the military advantages to be derived from light troops, because those advantages, whatever they are, may be obtained legally in other modes. But I certainly ought not to press upon you my opinions in contradiction to those which you have adopted ; and I only recapitulate them thus shortly to convince you that it is not from petulance or from insubordination that I must insist upon dissenting from the proposition of vesting in the Duke of York (from the exigency of the present moment) the power of dispensing with the first principles of the militia. It is a power which he ought not to wish for, and which, unless he is very ill advised by his military advisers, he will not contend for. You will say that the answer of the Attorney and Solicitor General bears him out in conceiving that these powers are legal. I admit that he is justified by these opinions in law, even though a civil or military tribunal may hereafter think differently from him ; but the impolicy of urging this in the teeth of the wishes (for so it is, though they may not resist) of the militia in general is so obvious, that I should think that even his voix au chapitre, if it was proper that it should be the only voice to be heard, should not be given so unwisely ; and I do not feel myself tied up from the discussion of such an order of the Commander in Chief, who, like every one else, must act according to the existing law, and not according to his conception of what ought to be the law ; which I apprehend to be the great fundamental mistake of every general officer I have known, who systematically will consider the militia to be ipso facto army, which the law says it is not.

“The result of all this (as far as I am concerned) must be very short. If no explanation is intended of the old law, I am contented to remain quiet: professing in the most explicit manner my determination to resist as illegal and to disobey at every personal risk, any order (which I shall consider as illegal) for detaching my grenadier, or light company, or any other company, to be formed into or incorporated into any other battalion, or under any other commanding officer whatsoever. And this determination, which I have stated a month since to Sir William Howe, I must repeat to the Duke of York, unless I am relieved from the difficulty by understanding that a detachment of a light corps of 400 men, or more if the whole supplementary militia is called out, from my regiment, under the command of Major Fremantle, will be accepted in lieu of the companies proposed to be formed into grenadier and light battalions. I am willing to put this arrangement forward in any shape which the Duke would prefer, either by writing to His Royal Highness to propose it, or by receiving it at once in the shape of an order from him. But if I am driven to the necessity of disobeying, I shall feel it necessary for my own character to call the public attention in every possible mode to the question, as I am very sensible with you that the times are such as to make it very difficult for me to justify myself in public opinion. You will see that I do not mean to put Government under difficulties by this determination. If I had so meant, the steps were very obvious; nor do I mean that the Duke of York should be called upon to compromise his command. But, as I have made (two months ago) this offer, which I believe is unique, and certainly more advantageous to the service (if indeed every light soldier is so serious an object) it may tacitly be accepted, and I shall understand without further explanation that I may be silent. If not, I must feel that I am driven from the service in the cruellest manner, and I must make the best of my battle.

"In all that I have said, I trust that there is nothing that implies the slightest distrust of your anxious and affectionate attentions to me. I may feel that Pitt ought to have apprised me of the change in his opinions after all that had passed, but I really do not feel angry. I cannot, however, but be astonished at the indecency (and I will not use a harsher word) of making my letter, in the hands of Lord Dundas and Lord Euston, the matter of public discussion, at a meeting of colonels assembled by the Duke's order, to which I was not called, or of which I was not even apprised; nor of any opinion having been called for from the Attorney or Solicitor General; nor of the resolutions of this meeting, though called to give an opinion upon those documents. Upon this point you will feel as I do. I had intended to have gone to my regiment for five days prior to the embodying the yeomanry, which I conclude will be in about ten days; but, in this state of uncertainty, I have not spirits to meet my regiment, nor do I think it wise to converse with my officers upon points so near to their feelings and to my own. I shall therefore impatiently expect your intimation of the resolution that may be taken by the Duke of York; for I know you will feel very severely for me, if that resolution should be such as a military Cabinet of German tacticians is likely to recommend to him.

“Putting all this out of the question, the bill which Mr. Dundas has presented and amended is still very exceptionable on the chapter of East India officers. Even if the principle was good (and I disapprove it) yet surely precautions should be taken to limit this power to those only who are natural born subjects of Great Britain; for, in the last war, and indeed still, there were Dutch, Portuguese, French, Swiss, Germans and various Eastern nations amongst the officers ‘serving in the land forces’; whom you certainly would not wish to see serving in our militia, particularly in the higher ranks.

“I take it for granted that, as Mr. Dundas has not sent me the warrant for embodying the supplementary militia, though he wrote to me on Thursday to say that he should send it that night, this news from Vienna may have made you pause upon that measure, which may be less necessary if the continental war should break out again. At the same time, I am persuaded that the French will give way upon smaller points, such as Bernadotte’s tricolor flag, provided they can secure the ceded countries, and their Swiss objects. However, I can only reason in the dark upon these points; and, if they should push this matter to extremity, their resolution must be taken upon the conviction that they have more, or at least something, to gain at Vienna, of revolution or of civil commotion.

“You would not like this clause, and yet the purport of it must be added in your bill. ‘Provided always that nothing herein contained shall authorise any Dane, Swiss, Portuguese, Spaniard, Frenchman, Dutch, or German, or any Mohammedan, Gentoo, Hindoo, Topaz, or Malay, now serving, or who hath served in any of the land forces of the said . . . , from serving as a commissioned officer in the militia.’

“I have a list of this description, which was given me as a curiosity, a few years since, by an East India officer.”

EARL SPENCER to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, April 30. Admiralty.—“I return you the enclosed, which does not appear to be worth much.

“I have received your note enclosing a letter from Sir W. Scott, and I think it would undoubtedly be very desirable if we could prevent the Neutrals from carrying stores and provisions to Brest, though I am aware of the delicacy of the question. The navy and victualling Boards could not engage to purchase the stores taken without incurring so enormous an expense as very much to distress us; and they have therefore of late been instructed to confine their purchases to such cargoes as could be of use, and were wanted. I suppose you will think it right to give notice before the measure of declaring the blockade of the Texel is taken; and I had not yet given any instruction for it, under a belief that it might be better timed when we sent our regiment to meet . . . , for which question I expect immediately to have an arrangement from Dundas.

“Lord St. Vincent will, of course, keep the instructions we sent him perfectly secret; and, as they were marked most secret, will not think himself at liberty to disclose them to any but those who are to execute them. We must have an instruction from the Secretary of State on the points mentioned in your note of yesterday respecting the subjects of the several new republics of Italy : which should accompany the orders to be sent out to Lord St. Vincent in consequence of the directions which went to him last night, conformably to what was determined in Cabinet on Saturday."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798, April. London.]—"Je n'ai encore rien reçu de Vienne moi-même, mais je viens d'apprendre du Chev[alier] Almeyda le contenu de la dépêche de M. de Lima d'une date postérieure à vos informations. Vous saurez que ma Cour, ayant tâché, avec assez de noblesse cependant, de calmer le courroux de Bernadotte, il a répondu qu'il enverrait les conditions sous lesquelles il voulait bien rester à Vienne.

1<sup>o</sup> "Le renvoi de Thugut.

2<sup>o</sup> "Punition exemplaire du chef de la police, et du chef militaire.

3<sup>o</sup> "Que l'on accorde à la mission Française un quartier de liberté et de franchise dans Vienne.

4<sup>o</sup> "Que l'Empereur fasse refaire à ses fraix le tableau des armes Françaises, et le pavillon, et qu'il le fasse hisser au haut de la maison de l'Ambassade, en le protégeant contre toute insulte. Notre réponse a été polie, mais un refus à tout. Bernadotte s'est emporté au-delà de toute expression. Il a juré qu'il viendrait venger cet affront sur la place même ; et, ayant demandé ses passeports, il est parti le 15, en sept voitures à six chevaux, escorté d'un régiment, sans lequel le peuple l'eût mis en pièces. Quelle bonne nouvelle ! je ne me possède pas de plaisir. Je suis comme le juste à l'heure de la mort, qui n'a rien à se reprocher. Je suis le seul ministre de mon maître qui ne s'est souillé de rien de vil, ni de malhonnête. C'est un grand plaisir que cela."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798, April. London.]—"Je vous ai promis de vous faire part de vous à moi, et dans notre amitié, de toutes les notions certaines que j'aurais sur Rastadt. Voici où les choses en sont ; je suis sûr de ce que j'avance, et vous pouvez y compter irrévocablement.

"Le traité de Campo Formio, bien loin d'infirmes les préliminaires de Leoben, les sanctionnait ; du moins, certainement, la bêtise du Cabinet qui l'a conclu croyait de bonne foi avoir assuré l'intégrité de l'Empire, à l'exception du seul état de Liège, que l'ignorant Gallo ne savait pas être partie intégrante du corps Germanique, et qu'il a oublié. Aucun article secret ne stipulait de notre part la cession de la rive gauche du Rhin ; mais les deux plus importants étaient :—

- (1). "Que, dès le commencement des négociations, nos troupes évacueraient Mayence, qui serait engarnisonnée par les troupes d'Empire, bien entendu que les Français n'y

- entreraient pas non plus.* Ils ont manqué à cet article exprès, et M. de Cobentzl a cédé à leur désir dans la crainte de voir échapper d'autres objets qu'il avait en vue.
- (2). "Qu'à la paix de Rastadt le gouvernement Français s'intéresserait à nous faire échanger le comté de Falkenstein et ses dépendances avec l'Electeur de Bavière, contre la partie de Bavière que nous désirons. J'ai lieu de supposer que Buonaparte, allant plus loin que ses pouvoirs, ne le comportait à promis que la France ferait consentir le Roi de Prusse à cet arrangement. Notre but était donc, et nous étions dans la ferme conviction d'y parvenir, de faire la paix d'Empiré sur la base de l'intégrité, en accrochant le morceau de Bavière que nous voulions. Cette acquisition ne se combinait ni avec les intérêts de la Prusse, ni même avec ceux de la France.

"La première a poussé la soi-disante République à insister sur la cession de la rive gauche du Rhin, afin de pouvoir ou piller l'Empire si on y consentait, et accroître aussi sa puissance en raison décuplé de la nôtre; où bien d'affecter le langage de défenseur de l'Empire, en jettant sur nous l'odieux d'avoir voulu morceler la Bavière. Je puis vous assurer, avec connaissance de cause, que notre surprise en apprennant les prétentions des Français n'a point été jouée, mais les effets en sont les mêmes, car la crainte de voir échapper le wished-for Bavaria nous fait tergiverser, et prendre une contenance douteuse que la Prusse et la Russie, ou l'une ou l'autre séparément, déterminera en dernière analyse. Voilà où on en est. Si la majorité des vota de l'Empire opine pour la guerre, nous envoyons immédiatement un triple contingent. Toutes mes lettres confidentielles de Vienne m'assurent que Thugut travaille à rompre la paix. On voudrait que l'Empire en reconnut la nécessité. Je doute qu'on parvienne à ce but. Les esprits y sont trop abattus et corrompus. Si on y réussissait, ce succès nous assurerait au moins une co-opération plus active et plus sincère que la lâche défense que l'on a fait jusqu'à présent. Si l'Angleterre pouvait ranimer l'alliance du Nord, je verrais encore couleur de rose; mais le monde est perdu s'il ne change pas bien vite.

"Ransonet arrivera sous peu de jours. Il a pris un bâtiment pour lui, voilà la raison de son retard. Je sais qu'on avoue et reconnaît la dette, mais on veut un autre mode de paiement. Cela est mal fait certainement; mais cela n'est ni roler ni insulter."

SIR JAMES CRAUFURD TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 1. Hamburg.—"I had the honour to receive by yesterday's post your Lordship's letter of the 25th ultimo, and I beg leave to assure your Lordship that I shall give my most earnest attention to the subject of your dispatch No. 14 of the same date, which I received at the same time, as well as to the whole business entrusted to my care. I am fully sensible of the peculiar importance of the matter to which your Lordship is pleased so particularly to direct my attention.

“The recommencement of the war upon this continent may perhaps be an improbable event, but I hope your Lordship will forgive my expressing my hope that in case it should take place, and that it should be thought advisable to have a person residing at the Austrian army on the part of Great Britain, your Lordship will allow me to act in that capacity, till my brother is sufficiently recovered to resume his station; or to attend the Prussian army should that power enter into the war. My not being a military man would not, I hope, be considered as an objection, many others having been employed in these situations who were not; and Colonel Graham, though now in that profession, having taken to it at a period of life much later than mine.

“I sincerely hope your Lordship will forgive my importuning you on this subject. I should be truly sorry to be guilty of any indiscretion after the kindness and countenance you have been pleased to show to my family; and I beg you will believe that I am much flattered by the choice you have made of me for the care of His Majesty’s affairs here at this moment.”

Postscript.—“In my dispatch, No. 2. of this date, I have, for the sake of greater secrecy, omitted mentioning the names which Carnot at present bears, as I wished this to be known only to your Lordship, or those to whom you may choose to communicate it. He has most commonly gone by the name of Jaccart de Ste Croix en Suisse. He had one passport under this name; another under the name of Bernard. He was about a month ago at Augsbourg; whether he is still there I cannot say, but if His Majesty’s Government were desirous of making any propositions to him, or rather of having any indirect application made to him, I might perhaps be able to find him, though he conceals himself with the greatest industry and ingenuity. His passport under the name Jaccart was made out for travelling in Germany, that under the name of Bernard, for Italy.”

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798,] May 2. Wimbledon.—“The enclosed paper has been put into my hands by Mr. Keene of the House of Commons. It is confusedly stated, but I think I perceive in it an idea that merits consideration. If there is any numerous body of emigrants who have abandoned all ideas of reunion with France at any period or under any circumstances, I cannot see a solid reason why they might not be formed into a corps, and now sent either to Canada or to St. Domingo as they please, and to aid in their defence in the present moment; but ultimately to be enabled to settle themselves there on allocations of land to be made to them. Indeed this allocation should begin to be appropriated to them immediately, and it would not be incompatible with their military service if necessary. If you think there is anything in this idea, it remains with you to arrange it in concert with the Duke of Portland and Mr. Pitt.”

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, May 2. Wimbledon.—“I wish you, in the course of this day, to send me a short memorandum of the result of your conference with the Dutchman who came over to you some time ago, particularly noting what he had undertaken to do. My instructions for the attempt on Ostend and Flushing are prepared; and I at present see nothing to prevent the armament sailing on the fourth or fifth. I wait your memorandum to give my secret orders for the detaching the 11th regiment.”

EARL SPENCER to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, May 4. Admiralty.—“In the intelligence lately brought from Genoa respecting the armament in the Mediterranean, there is this fact stated, ‘that 4000 casks of a very large size with 10 iron hoops each, and without bung-holes, have been ordered at Leghorn, where about 50 vessels have been taken up and ordered to proceed to the rendezvous at Ajaccio.’ It is not very easy to conjecture what the object of these casks is, but it has occurred to me to be not very improbable that they are intended to attach to ships of a deep draught of water in order to buoy them up, and enable them to pass over some shallows, and if so, this circumstance might possibly indicate the destination of the armament to be to the Levant, or more probably the Black Sea, which cannot (as I am informed) be entered through the Dardanelles by large ships without lightening them considerably. Would it not be worth while to throw out this circumstance to Woronzow, by way of a little stimulus at Petersburg, both for the Emperor to bestir himself, and to urge the Emperor of Germany to act in Italy? I have heard that Woronzow is already a good deal alarmed about this Mediterranean expedition, and this information may perhaps tend to impress him more strongly with the ideas on which his alarms are grounded.”

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 4. Brunswick.—“J’arrivai ici le 1 de ce mois au matin, avant la lettre par laquelle, un courrier auparavant, j’avois annoncé à M. de Stamford mon départ par le paquebot suivant, l’informant que je serois porteur des lettres de créances pour lui de Monseigneur le Prince d’Orange, le priant d’en informer Monseigneur le Duc, et de se préparer au départ.

“N’ayant point eu ces informations préparatoires, M. de Stamford étoit dans le découragement; parceque, malgré ses efforts auprès de Monseigneur le Duc depuis son retour de Berlin, il n’avoit pu l’engager à sortir de la route qu’il s’étoit prescrite, d’agir par M. de H[augwitz] ou par les aides-de-camp du Roi, à qui ce M[inistre] est venu à bout de persuader que lui seul entendoit les vrais intérêts de la monarchie Prussienne.

“Mon arrivée, avec les pièces dont j’étois porteur, ranimèrent un peu le courage de M. de Stamford, et nous nous préparâmes à lutter de nouveau contre les craintes et répugnances de s’a[ltesse] s[érénissime], ce qui eût lieu dès le même jour.

“ Je puis dire que la joie brilla dans les yeux de Monseigneur le Duc après la lecture du paquet adressé à M. de Stamford par Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange, et de la note de votre Excellence. Il n'y a pas de doute que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ne désire ardemment, et par une conviction intime, cette réunion prompte qui seule peut sauver l'Europe ; et la mission de M. de Stamford lui paroissant un nouveau moyen de la presser, elle en témoigna le plus grand contentement ; mais elle se défendit d'abord d'y concourir immédiatement, comme persuadée qu'elle n'y pouvoit rien.

“ J'eus alors l'honneur de remettre à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] la lettre de votre Excellence ; elle témoigna être sensible à la confiance de s[a] M[ajesté] Britannique, mais ajouta-t-elle encore, on se trompe sur ma position ; je puis moins que personne par des combinaisons qu'on ne voit pas mais que je sens.

“ S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ayant été informée par M. de H[augwitz] de la lettre que j'avois pris la liberté d'écrire à la Reine de Prusse et de son effet, ainsi que de l'audience favorable que le Roi m'avoit fait l'honneur de m'accorder, me demanda si je ne comptois pas de retourner à Berlin ; et ayant appris que je me le proposais sous les auspices de s[a] m[ajesté] la Reine d'Angleterre, s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] en témoigna aussi beaucoup de satisfaction ; comptant que les efforts réunis de M. de Stamford et de moi pourroient plus que son intervention, à laquelle elle résistoit encore.

“ Alors commença un très long entretien, dont M. de H[augwitz] fût l'unique objet. Je pris la liberté de rappeler à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] le temps où j'acquiesçois à son opinion que ce ministre ne pouvoit vouloir la perte de la monarchie Prussienne, à la conservation de laquelle il étoit lui-même trop intéressé ; et où je pensois aussi avec elle qu'il travailloit sincèrement à lever les obstacles qui s'opposoient à l'union des puissances. Mais parcourant alors le champ des duplicités de M. de H[augwitz] à cet égard même, je racontai à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] l'épreuve où je l'avois mis par l'indemnité du Prince d'Orange ; comment sa fausseté y avoit paru à découvert, et le parti que cela m'avoit fait prendre d'aller tout de suite en Angleterre pour travailler à déjouer son artifice. S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] fut très frappée de ce trait caractéristique des artifices de M. de H[augwitz], et nous eumes alors beaucoup plus de force, M. de Stamford et moi, pour la persuader qu'il n'y avoit qu'elle qui pût renverser ce complot évident de tenir la Prusse isolée ; complot auquel il est très possible que M. de Haugwitz se prête malgré lui, à cause de quelque lien secret qui ne lui permet pas d'agir autrement. Nous obtinmes alors de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] qu'elle écriroit au Roi pour annoncer à s[a] M[ajesté] l'arrivée prochaine de M. de Stamford, et applaudir à la résolution de Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange comme devant servir à acheminer une réunion prompte des puissances, qui seule pouvoit les sauver en commun.

“ Tel fut le point auquel nous arrivâmes enfin dès le premier jour ; et le départ de M. de Stamford fut fixé à aujourd'hui. Il a eu lieu en effet. M. de Stamford va d'abord à Berlin, pour remettre à my Lord Elgin la dépêche de votre Excellence et s'aboucher avec lui, de même qu'avec les min[istres] de Vienne de Petersbourg et M. le ministre de Reck ; après quoi il partira pour Potzdam. La lettre de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] pour le Roi est partie ; elle est en Allemand, mais M. de Stamford en a eu communication par s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] et il l'a trouvé dans les termes ci-dessus exprimés. Enfin M. de Stamford a eu encore la satisfaction, avant son départ, d'apprendre par une lettre de Monseigneur le Prince hér[editaire] d'Orange à Madame la Princesse hér[editaire] de Brunswic, qu'il a informé le Roi de la venue de M. de Stamford et de son but, et que cela a paru faire plaisir à sa majesté.

“Voilà ce que je ne devois pas tarder d'avoir l'honneur de communiquer à votre Excellence ; j'aurois quelques autres circonstances favorables au même but à y ajouter ; mais un travail pour s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] dont j'ai dû m'occuper depuis le départ de M. de H[augwitz], m'oblige à renvoyer ces détails au courrier prochain.”

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, May 5. Downing Street.—“I understand there is a strong feeling among many of our friends that some direct notice must be taken of Fox's speech. An idea has been suggested which I think deserves consideration. It is to begin with one of the mesures we talked of, that of ordering him to attend. If he disavows, prosecuting the printer. If he avows, ordering him to be reprimanded, and then (which is the new part of the suggestion) if he offers a fresh insult at the next Whig Club, instead of gratifying him by an expulsion, to send him to the Tower for the remainder of the session ; which, though I hope it would prove a very short punishment, would be enough to assert the authority of the House. I believe there are precedents for this sort of proceeding, but that I will ascertain more correctly.

“The great question of policy is whether there is most danger from leaving him wholly unpunished for such an act of defiance, or from giving him any title to the character of a martyr ; and on this question I own my opinion remains not much decided. A good deal certainly depends on the general feeling. Pray let me know what you think in the course of to-morrow ; for (if any thing is to be done) I must have some meeting on Monday.”

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 6. London.—“J'ai reçu hier une dépêche du Baron de Thugut mais de très vieille date (du 14). Il me rend compte de l'événement, et présume que Bernadotte partira le lendemain ; ce que nous savons depuis avoir eu lieu. Il me fait entendre qu'il ne doute pas de la reprise des hostilités, et insiste vivement sur une réponse à ses ouvertures, qu'il doit avoir eu actuellement. J'espère que M. Eden aura eu les moyens de nous faire toucher de l'argent promptement, au cas, comme je n'en doute pas, que nous nous ayons ratifié la convention. Cet objet est de la plus haute importance pour porter d'abord des grands coups.

Il ne l'est pas moins de sauver Naples, en hâtant les secours maritimes à lui envoyer. Je voudrais expédier mon courrier mardi. Nous aurons sûrement quelque chose de positif d'ici là. Mandez-moi quand je pourrai vous voir; j'ai encore à vous entretenir sur nos affaires d'intérêt."

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT STARHEMBERG.

1798, May 7. Dropmore.—"Il me paraît très inutile d'envoyer votre courrier avant que nous ayons quelque chose à ajouter à ce que nous avons déjà dit.

"Quant à vos prétensions, il faudra, s'il vous plaît, que vous m'adressiez un mémoire pour en expliquer la nature, et pour demander que s[a] M[ajesté] veuille bien autoriser quelque personne à en traiter avec M. R[ansonet]. La réponse doit être (je pense) qu'on y consentira volontiers pourvu que M. R[ansonet] soit également autorisé à discuter celles que le gouvernement de s[a] M[ajesté] sera chargé de faire valoir, et que les deux affaires aillent de pair.

"Pour l'amour de Dieu faites qu'on ne renvoie pas à la termination de ces chicanes, le payement des intérêts échus et à échoir. Faites-leur entendre que c'est trop demander, même de notre zèle pour la cause commune, de proposer au Parlement des nouveaux secours pécuniaires, pendant que l'on manque encore à la probité et à la bonne foi sur ceux qui ont déjà été fournis. Songez, je vous supplie, combien ceci est important au succès de la grande affaire qui fait aujourd'hui l'objet de nos espérances, et travaillez y avec votre zèle et succès ordinaire."

Copy.

SIR MORTON EDEN to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, May 7. Vienna.—"On the subject of the very interesting instructions with which I was charged by your Lordship, though I have written very fully in my despatches of this day, I will here add that the present blind and pernicious determination of this Government is the more extraordinary as they appear uncertain as to war or peace, and are making great military preparations. Whatever other reasons they may have for it, I believe that the obstinacy of M. de Thugut's character comes in for its share. On the receipt of your Lordship's instructions I, at first, wished to have an opportunity of discussing the business with him. With this view, in a note which I wrote to him transmitting the packet which Count Stahremberg had sent to his address, I left an opening for him to invite me to call upon him by saying, in allusion to the late arrangement in this ministry which I had occasion to mention, that I trusted that it would not prevent our meeting at times. But, as I received no answer to this note, and as his language to the Russian Ambassador was so unfavourable as to leave no hopes of success, I immediately gave up all idea of that nature. He lives so totally secluded from all society, and has done so since his return from the Low Countries, that there is no opportunity of meeting him except at his Office."

1798, May 7. Brunswick.—“ Quoique arrivé ici le 1<sup>er</sup> de ce mois, je ne pus avoir l'honneur d'écrire à votre Excellence que le 4<sup>e</sup> et ce ne fut presque que pour lui annoncer le départ de M. de Stamford, doutant même que ma lettre fût à temps à Hanovre ; peut-être donc que votre Excellence ne la recevra qu'avec celle —ci, où je vais ajouter ce que j'aurois désiré pouvoir lui communiquer dès ce jour-là.

“ Il ne falloit pas moins que tout ce qui est venu se rassembler ici pour vaincre la résolution où je trouvai Monseigneur le Duc de ne se plus mettre en avant ; persuadé que tous les efforts étoient inutiles. Les choses avoient beaucoup reculé à Berlin, au lieu d'y avancer ; on n'y parloit plus que de s'isoler comme le seul moyen de se garantir ; et M. de H[augwitz] toujours feignant d'instruire s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], toujours aussi témoignant son chagrin de ce qu'on ne pouvoit s'entendre avec Vienne, se resserroit sur le plan d'assurer la neutralité du nord de l'Allemagne. Enfin, s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] savoit d'ailleurs qu'on pousoit les choses, sous main, jusqu'à vouloir entreprendre de persuader le Roi qu'il ne falloit pas s'assurer à demi d'être en paix avec la France, mais traiter avec elle ; et que personne n'osoit lutter contre ce parti. Tout cet ensemble avoit tellement fortifié la crainte innée de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] de se mettre en avant dans la politique que M. de Stamford, incertain jusqu'au moment de mon arrivée du succès de mon voyage en Angleterre, n'espéroit plus rien.

“ J'ai eu l'honneur de rendre compte à votre Excellence de l'effet que produisit sur s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] le nouveau secours que j'apportois, comme imprévu par ceux qui mènent ainsi les affaires auprès du Roi, et capable de mettre une entrave à leur marche ; elle nous pressa donc, M. de Stamford et moi, de partir pour Potzdam ; mais toujours croyant qu'il valloit mieux qu'elle ne se mêlât de rien, desorte que ce fut beaucoup que nous obtînions ce premier jour la lettre au Roi dont j'ai eu l'honneur de faire mention à votre Excellence.

“ S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m'ayant fait l'honneur de m'inviter à dîner le lendemain, j'eus ensuite avec elle une conversation particulière, dans laquelle je m'attachai particulièrement à simplifier ce que les circonstances exigeoient d'elle. La faction, connoissant sa timidité, l'accuse toujours de quelque vue, prévoyant que l'inaction sera son moyen de faire cesser les bruits. Pour empêcher, par exemple, que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] n'eût des relations avec le Comte Panin, et ne fût instruite ainsi des dispositions de sa Cour, ou lui a fait insinuer qu'on la regardoit comme ayant épousé les intérêts de la Russie. On use du même artifice à l'égard de l'Angleterre, pour laquelle on avoit raison de croire que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] étoit portée d'agir, parcequ'elle ne cachoit pas son mécontentement du danger où l'on sembloit vouloir la laisser. Je m'attachai donc à la rassurer à cet égard, par ce qui m'avoit rassuré moi-même, et à lui faire comprendre qu'elle pouvoit se dispenser absolument d'en parler au Roi de Prusse, auprès de qui l'objet unique devoit être son propre danger ; parceque si s[a] m[ajesté] en étoit enfin profondément pénétrée, elle désireroit elle-même l'union la plus étroite avec l'Angleterre. J'ajoutai que c'étoit ainsi que M. de Stamford et moi nous étions conduits vis-à-vis de s[a] M[ajesté], qui alors s'étoit entièrement prêtée à nos représentations ; et que nous suivrions le même plan, si nous avions l'honneur de l'approcher encore ; mais que personne que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ne pouvoit imprimer ces vérités assez profondément dans l'esprit de s[a] M[ajesté] pour que des sophismes perfides ne pussent plus les y effacer. Cette conversation soulagea doublement s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] ; pour l'Angleterre d'abord, et en y voyant que ce que les circonstances exigeoient d'elle ne pouvoit être susceptible d'aucune mauvaise interprétation.

“ J'avois trouvé ici des lettres de mon frère, renfermant entr'autres des détails sur l'expédition des François vers le Levant ; et en les communiquant alors à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] j'y ajoutai des commentaires qui la frappèrent beaucoup ; de sorte qu'elle désira d'avoir copie de ces informations et mes remarques à leur sujet, dont elle se proposoit de faire usage ; mais craignant que ce ne fût pour M. de H[augwitz] je la priai de me donner un peu de temps pour cela ; me proposant de différer jusqu'à ce que nous fussions parvenus, M. de Stamford et moi, à la détacher entièrement de ce Ministre, en quoi nous fumes très heureusement secondés le lendemain.

“ M. de Stamford seroit parti un jour plus tôt, si s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] n'avoit désiré qu'il attendit l'arrivée du courrier de Berlin, et ce fut ce courrier qui nous fit avancer vers notre but ; d'abord, parcequ'il apporta à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] l'invitation du Roi de venir à Potzdam pour les revues ; circonstance heureuse, sur laquelle porta principalement le nouvel entretien dont je viens de parler.

“ Le même courrier avoit apporté à M. de Stamford une lettre du Comte Panin, qui mettoit M. de H[augwitz] entièrement à découvert ; c'étoit l'information d'une démarche officielle de ce Ministre, faite depuis environ trois semaines (dont votre Excellence est sans doute informée) pour proposer de la part de sa Cour une alliance défensive ; circonstance que M. de Haugwitz, tout en entretenant s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] de ses efforts pour produire la réunion, lui avoit entièrement cachée ; ce qui porta au comble son indignation contre ce Ministre.

“ Enfin le même soir, veille du départ de M. de Stamford, s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] reçut des dépêches de Rastadt, trop tard pour une nouvelle conférence ; mais s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] envoya le lendemain matin un de ses palefreniers sur la route de M. de Stamford avec une dépêche qui l'atteignit à la première station ; et elle me fit ensuite l'honneur de m'envoyer copie des informations qu'elle lui avoit communiquées, où la marche déloyale de M. de H[augwitz] se peint encore d'une manière très frappante.

“ J'avois entrepris ce que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] avoit désiré de moi, lorsque cette nouvelle piece vint m'aider à y donner plus de force ; et hier encore, avant que d'avoir fermé mon paquet, je reçus une nouvelle lettre de mon frère, contenant les réflexions les plus fortes sur le danger éminent de toutes les puissances qui existent, fondées sur des traits caractéristiques des plans suivis sans relâche par la faction. Je joignis donc encore cette lettre à mon paquet, avec un p[ost]s[criptum] à celle qui étoit prête pour s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime].

“J’ai l’honneur d’envoyer à votre Excellence les copies suivantes; No. 1, de la lettre de M. le Comte Panin à M. de Stamford; 2, des informations que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] a reçues de Rastadt; 3, des particularités sur l'expédition Française vers le Levant; 4, des remarques que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m'avoit demandé de mettre par écrit sur cet objet; 5, de la lettre dont j'ai pris la liberté d'accompagner ces remarques.

“Votre Excellence verra sous ce dernier nombre le résumé du plan que nous avons suivi, M. de Stamford et moi, auprès de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], dont les intentions ne sont pas équivoques, non plus que la résolution de faire tout ce qu'elle se persuadera d'être en son pouvoir. J'aurai l'honneur, avant mon départ prochain pour Berlin et Potzdam, de rendre compte à votre Excellence, par une lettre que j'enverrai encore à Hanovre, de l'entretien que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] veut bien avoir encore avec moi, après l'arrivée de la prochaine poste de Berlin.”
Five enclosures.

Enclosure 1.

COUNT PANIN to M. DE STAMFORD.

1798, May 1. Berlin.—“Par la communication dont vous m'avez honoré, et par d'autres avis plus récents, je vois qu'on a caché au Duc les propositions importantes que j'ai faites, il y a environ trois semaines, par ordre de ma Cour. Il s'agissoit d'une alliance défensive entre les deux cours Impériales, celles de Londres, de Berlin et de Copenhague, à l'effet de garantir la sûreté et l'intégrité de tous les gouvernemens. On m'a fait une réponse évasive et dilatoire. Je vous prie d'en instruire s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime]. Elle reconnoitra dans cette circonstance une nouvelle preuve de la mauvaise foi de M. de H[augwitz], et je me flatte qu'elle se déterminera à appuyer de tout son crédit les vues salutaires de ma Cour. Je suis obligé de remettre tous les détails au moment où j'aurai le bonheur de vous revoir; on m'assure que cela est prochain, et je m'en réjouis par bien des motifs.” Copy.

Enclosure 2.

THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK to M. DE LUC.

“Voici ce que j'ai écrit ce matin à M. de Stampford.

1. Bernadotte étoit encore, le 28, à Rastad; il avoit reçu ordre du Directoire de s'y arrêter, et paroissoit mécontent de la manière dont on avoit pris son affaire à Paris.

2. Treillhard a demandé au chancelier Albini si l'Empire pouvoit continuer de traiter sans l'Empereur. La réponse ayant été négative, il a brusquement rompu la conversation.

3. Dans une conférence entre les ministres de France, celui de Mayence, de Bavière, et de Saxe, Treillhard a averti les autres ministres que la France demanderoit encore à l'Empire, le fort de Kehl, celui de Cassel, et Ehrenbreitstein rasé.

4. M. le Comte de Goertz a dit à Rastad qu'il espéroit d'obtenir la neutralité pour l'Empire, quand même la guerre avec l'Empereur devroit se rallumer.

5. Un nommé Rosenssiel, secrétaire de Treillhard, a dit à mon correspondant qu'il considéroit cette neutralité comme impossible, mais qu'il croyoit bien que la Prusse obtiendrait le maintien de celle du Nord." Copy.

Enclosure 3.

M. DE DOLOMIEU, Intendant des Mines in France, to —.

1798, March 28. Extract.—"Je pars dans quatre jours pour une grande expédition scientifique. Je suis associé à Bertholet et beaucoup d'autres chimistes, physiciens, mathématiciens, antiquaires, naturalistes et artistes. Aucun de nous ne sait encore sa destination, et les conjectures du public, et de chacun de nous, sont tellement dissemblables, que d'après les uns ce seroit l'Amérique que nous irions visiter, l'Afrique selon les seconds, l'Asie selon les troisièmes. Mais ce qui paroît certain, c'est que ce voyage sera long, tant sous les rapports de l'espace que nous parcourrons, que sous celui du temps que nous y employerons; on parle de trois ans d'absence. . . . Vous et mes autres amis de Genève vous aurez de mes nouvelles, ou par moi directement, ou par Brochant ingénieur des mines, qui reste à portée d'entendre souvent parler de la caravanne scientifique, sur laquelle je ne puis vous donner pour le moment aucun autre détail.

"Je prends part, mon cher ami, à toutes vos peines; et si cela pouvoit vous consoler, je vous demanderois, qui n'a pas les siennes? Si l'on étoit parfaitement heureux, parfaitement tranquilles sur le présent et l'avenir, peut-être ne partirot-on pas aussi volontiers que je le fais pour un voyage de très longue durée, dont on ignore le but.

"Il y a des personnes qui croient qu'on profite de cette caravanne pour écarter quelques individus, et que M. de Dolomieu est du nombre." Copy.

Enclosure 4.

THE SAME to THE SAME.

1798, April 11. Extract.—"On ne sait pas quel est le but de ce grand voyage; il n'y a parmi les savans que Bertholet qui soit dans le secret. Ce qu'il y a de sûr, c'est qu'ils vont s'embarquer à Toulon ou à Gènes, et qu'ils sont probablement à la suite de l'expédition militaire qui s'y prépare. Il est certain aussi que leurs approvisionnemens immenses en imprimerie, livres, instrumens, machines de chimie et physique dénotent une très longue absence. Parmi les livres on distingue surtout les voyages au Levant, en Egypte, en Perse, aux Indes, en Turquie, dans la Mer Noire, la Mer Caspienne, le voyage d'Anacharsis en Grèce. On emmène douze ingénieurs géographes, des ingénieurs militaires, mathématiciens, astronomes, chimistes, physiciens, dessinateurs et naturalistes de tout genre; deux professeurs de langues Arabe, Persanne, Turque, et tout cela est enrolé et part sans savoir où on le mène.

"On s'épuise en conjectures. Les uns disent qu'on va conquérir l'Egypte et couper l'Isthme de Suez, pour miner par là le commerce des Anglois aux Indes; d'autres, qu'en outre, comme cette opération seroit longue, on embarque sur la flotte une autre flotte en pièces, que l'on transportera jusqu'à Suez, pour avoir en quinze jours de temps une flotte sur la Mer Rouge; d'autres enfin, qu'on ira attaquer par terre les établissemens Anglois de l'Inde, en faisant traverser le désert, la Perse, et le Mogol à 30 mille hommes. On dit enfin que Buonaparte commandera peut-être cette expedition. Ce qui est sûr c'est qu'il est le principal moteur de l'entreprise, et qu'il y prend un vif intérêt." Copy.

Enclosure 5.

M. DE LUC to the DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.

1798, May 8. Brunswick.—"En venant mettre aux pieds de votre altesse sérénissime les copies qu'elle m'a témoigné désirer, j'ose la prier de me pardonner si sa bonté m'accordant accès auprès d'elle que je considère comme un point central auquel se réunissent les regards de tous ceux qui désirent le salut de l'Europe, je prends la liberté de lui présenter, dans la feuille ci-jointe, quelques remarques sur ces informations.

"Votre altesse sérénissime l'a vu; la Russie, par son ministre écrivant à M. de Stamford, est venu se joindre à l'Angleterre et à l'Autriche dans la persuasion qu'elle pouvoit seule franchir la barrière qu'on oppose à ce que sa Majesté Prussienne se persuade à temps qu'il ne peut y avoir de salut pour elle et son royaume que dans le salut commun des Puissances encore existantes, auquel chacune doit contribuer de tout son pouvoir. Je n'oserois donc y ajouter une voix aussi foible que la mienne, si je ne pouvois parler d'après mon expérience.

"Je plains profondément ce jeune monarque. C'est le sentiment que j'éprouvai en sa présence, lorsque je l'entendis exprimer de la manière la plus touchante sa résolution de contribuer de tout son pouvoir à sauver l'Allemagne et l'Europe; et que tandis que je voyois aussi sa Majesté écouter avec la plus grande attention ce que j'osois lui représenter quant aux moyens d'y parvenir, je considérois au dedans de moi qu'elle passeroit bientôt sous l'influence d'un homme qui renouvelleroit toutes ses illusions. Il falloit un sentiment bien vif de cette malheureuse situation de sa Majesté pour m'enhardir à lui représenter qu'elle ne devoit pas laisser dans les mains d'un seul homme son sort, celui de ses peuples et de toute l'Europe ; mais si elle y reconnut ma probité, elle ne pouvoit pas s'assurer de mon jugement ; aussi n'en est-il résulté aucun effet. Ce ne sera donc rien que de présenter la vérité à ce monarque infortuné par un seul homme, si elle ne l'est par quelqu'un qui ait assez de poids pour résister à l'influence de cet homme ; et votre Altesse sérénissime est la seule personne à qui sa Majesté ne puisse refuser à tous égards la plus entière confiance.

“ La communication que v[otre] a[ltesse] s[érénissime] daigna me faire hier au soir prouve toujours plus fortement que, si le Roi ne prend pas bientôt d'autres conseils, la monarchie Prussienne est perdue avec toute l'Europe. Jamais le Directoire n'auroit osé braver comme il le fait et l'Empire et l'Empereur s'il n'étoit sûr de la Prusse et de tenir la Russie éloignée par M. de H[augwitz]. Ce concert, dis-je, est évident par tout l'ensemble des avis de Rastadt ; mais on frémit particulièrement d'y voir le ministre de Prusse annoncer comme un heureux effet de la position de sa Cour, qu'elle pourroit obtenir la neutralité de l'Empire, malgré un nouvelle querre avec l'Empereur ; c'est-à-dire qu'elle auroit le pouvoir de rendre l'Empire spectateur tranquille de l'attaque, et peut-être du renversement de la plus forte de ses colonnes !

“ Tous les doutes aujourd'hui sont levés sur le concours sincère de Vienne et de Petersbourg à une prompte union défensive contre l'ennemi commun ; le Roi de Prusse encore à toutes les dispositions et les intentions qui peuvent concourir à ce grand but ; qu'est-ce donc qui, au moment le plus périlleux, arrête cette réunion ?—Un seul homme !

“ Votre altesse sérénissime sait qu'avant que ces dispositions de Vienne et de Petersbourg fussent connues, j'étois disposé à penser avec elle que M. de H[augwitz] ne pouvoit que désirer la conservation de la monarchie Prussienne, à laquelle son propre sort est si lié ; et qu'ainsi on pouvoit compter sur les efforts qu'il disoit faire pour produire la réunion des Puissances encore existantes. Mais depuis qu'on a découvert de tant de manière que c'est lui-même qui élude ce rapprochement, ces preuves de sa mauvaise foi, soit volontaire soit forcée, ne laissent voir que du danger à travailler encore à le ramener ; car le jugement le plus favorable qu'on puisse porter à son égard, c'est qu'il a des chaines secrettes qui le rendent, malgré lui, un instrument dans les mains de la faction.

“ Les détails, par exemple, sur la nouvelle expédition Française, dont j'ai l'honneur d'envoyer copie à v[otre] a[ltesse] s[érénissime], donnent lieu aux conjectures les plus sinistres pour l'Europe ; mais en faire usage auprès de M. de H[augwitz] seroit infailliblement la même chose que d'en parler en présence de la faction ; ce qui exposerait les personnes dont ces détails procèdent, et feroit redoubler les efforts pour prévenir la résolution que ce nouveau péril doit accélérer. J'espère de la bonté avec laquelle v[otre] a[ltesse] s[érénissime] a daigné me permettre de lui communiquer mes idées, qu'elle me pardonnera cette remarque, et qu'elle recevra avec indulgence les réflexions que j'ai jettés sur le papier, en considérant les diverses faces sous les quelles se présente ce nouveau mouvement excentrique de la faction, à qui jusqu'ici, faute de prévoyance, on a laissé réaliser les projets les plus incroyables, comme les plus funestes."

May 6.—"N'ayant pu, par quelques incidens, finir hier ce paquet que je me proposois d'avoir l'honneur d'envoyer à v[otre] a[ltesse] s[érénissime] je me trouve aujourd'hui dans le cas de pouvoir y joindre la communication d'une lettre de mon frère qui fixe tous les objets relativement à la nouvelle victime de la faction, la pauvre ville de ma naissance, de manière à renforcer tous les traits d'après lesquels je l'ai peinte dans les remarques ci-incluses ; sa tentative trompée de faire émettre un voeu de réunion ; sa fourberie effrontée dans l'anonce publique du l'avoir obtenu ; la nécessité de céder, malgré la plus grande aversion, chez tous les peuples non-protégés dont ses troupes s'approchent ; l'insulte à tous les entendemens dans sa nouvelle tactique de supposer des insultes à son étendard, pour prétexte d'hostilités ; et l'insulte non moins grande au sens commun, de prétendre trouver partout des projets de l'Angleterre !

"Un seul homme pourroit-il empêcher que le Roi de Prusse ne vît ces forfaits, toujours nécessaires à la cabale vis-à-vis de laquelle on veut le tenir isolé, sans penser (ou en pensant) que c'est le réserver pour la dernière chute, avec le regret dévorant de les avoir aidées toutes par sa sécurité ! Non, je l'espère ; votre altesse sérénissime préviendra sûrement un si grand malheur."

Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to EARL CAMDEN [Lord Lieutenant of Ireland].

1798, May 9. Cleveland Row.—"I am ashamed to have so long deferred answering your letter ; but I had, according to your desire, put it into the Duke of Portland's hands, and I had some idea that he intended writing to you upon the subject, on which, I think, his opinions seem entirely to concur with those which I have been able to form upon it.

"I have myself no difficulty in saying that, in the case of the fugitives, Parliament ought most certainly to pass Acts of Attainder on default of their surrendering themselves to justice. It would be best (but I don't think at all necessary) that these bills should be grounded on previous indictments, found in the usual course of law. If that cannot be done, there must then, I conceive, be some examination of witnesses either at the bar of the House of Commons, or in a secret committee ; or, at least, some papers produced to such a committee, such as may personally implicate the individuals in the charge of treason.

"You will see in the last volume of Hatsell's work, page 300, several precedents, particularly the first, which support this proceeding ; and as the first immediately followed the Revolution and the rest are all subsequent to it, no objection can be taken against them.

“The case of the bill which passed the House of Commons in 1689, and was agreed to by the Lords with amendments, but was then dropped; that of the Earl of Mar and several others in 1715; and that in 1746 (House of Commons’ Journal, April 29, 1746) are all instances where such a bill was proceeded on vivâ voce evidence, at the Bar of the House of Commons. In Sir J. Fenwick’s case, papers only were produced, but I apprehend an indictment had been before found against him. In the case of the Pretender, the attainder seems to be grounded on public notoriety alone; and in the other cases mentioned by Hatsell, there had been a previous impeachment carried up to the Bar of the House of Lords. The cases in the preceding century are of less authority, but in most, if not all of them, there seems to have been some vivâ voce evidence heard at the Bar. I have not the Commons’ Journals of the Irish Parliament, and therefore have not looked into the proceedings on originating the Bills of Attainder which, I recollect, passed there in 1689, or thereabouts. But, upon the whole, I have no doubt that the existence of treasonable conspiracy, and charging individuals by name as persons who appear to have been engaged in that conspiracy, and to have fled the country, would be sufficient ground for a Bill of Attainder on default of surrender; nor do I think that this proceeding would be nugatory; because:—1, you would thereby confiscate their property and attain their blood in Ireland, whereas no process of outlawry would stand against the allegation even of the most trivial omission or error, supposing the criminals to return and offer themselves to trial after the evidence is either dead or bought off. And, 2, you might easily, and without the possibility of objection, add to such a bill a clause of the same nature with that in Atterbury’s bill, by which all correspondence and intercourse between him and the King’s subjects was absolutely prohibited.

“If this view of the subject is right, it remains to consider what is fit to be done in the cases of the traitors who have been arrested and are now in confinement, but against whom it may not be possible to bring such evidence to convict them in the ordinary course of law.

“With respect to them the decision is less pressing, because the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act allows you to detain them in custody; and no man can doubt that their cases are precisely those which the Suspension Act was intended to provide for. In the interval it is possible that fresh evidence may be procured; that the measures taken for suppressing the rebellion may give more confidence to the witnesses whom you already have; and by removing from their minds the terror under which they now labour, may induce them to consent to be brought forward; or that the course of affairs may be such as to produce a more evident and unquestionable necessity for a Parliamentary proceeding.

"If, however, that necessity is conceived to exist already, and there are certainly grounds for that opinion, I conceive the whole question will then turn on a comparison of expediency, which it is hardly possible to decide but upon the spot.

"That a Bill of Pains and Penalties not going to life or limb, in cases where legal evidence is wanting, and that by the act of the criminal, or by the nature of the conspiracy, but where the guilt is manifest, and is of a nature which, if legally proved, would affect his life, that such bills are consonant to the principle and practice of our Constitution is of itself undeniable; but it is besides established beyond dispute by the precedent in Atterbury's case, which, I think, appears to have been extremely well considered, and conducted with great judgment and temper.

"But neither the principle nor the advantage of such a proceeding apply, except in the instance of one or two, or possibly three or four leading conspirators, by whose punishment and removal from the means of doing mischief the course of the conspiracy will be either totally stopped, or at least very greatly impeded. Because no precedent nor analogy would bear you out in applying this mode of proceeding to numerous bodies of men; and thus appearing to supersede the ordinary law and course of justice, not in individual cases, but in the general punishment of all treasons.

"Now I am hardly informed of the state of Ireland to judge whether there are any such individuals amongst the traitors; nor if there are, whether they are among the prisoners. Perhaps Lord E. Fitzgerald and O'Connor may be of this description; but the former would be reached by the proceeding against fugitives; and, as the latter is to be tried, it would be hardly possible to attain him after acquitted[al], if that should be the issue.

"Whether there are one or two others whose example would be sufficiently marked to operate to any great degree either to deter others, or to main the conspiracy, you alone can judge; but, unless that is the case, I should certainly not advise the proceeding by bill against them; at least, not till the time arrives when you must decide between that course and the letting them be discharged from confinement, without trial or punishment of any kind.

"I have written you a very long letter, and on a subject on which I must of course be understood to be giving you only my own opinions. But of those I owe you on every account the most unreserved communication, and I have no other wish than that they may be of some use to you. But as such a correspondence is of course extra-official, you will have the goodness not to let it go beyond yourself; unless you should have any wish to show it to the Chancellor, or to Lord Castlereagh, to neither of whom I can have any desire to make the least exception.

"We are still without decisive accounts from Vienna, nor shall we receive them till it is known there how the Directory is disposed to consider the business. If the latter should, on this occasion, moderate their language and pretensions, and there seem to be some symptoms of their doing so, I should not think that the Court of Vienna, though sensible of their danger, are stout enough to meet it by the only means that can tend to their security.

“The King has this day erased Fox’s name from the Council books, in consequence of his speech at the Whig Club.” Copy.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 9. Brunswick.—“J’eus l’honneur d’écrire à votre Excellence le 7<sup>e</sup>, et peu après le départ de ma lettre j’eus avec Monseigneur le Duc l’entretien dont j’y avois fait mention comme l’attendant. Son objet principal fut une nouvelle lettre de M. de H[augwitz] à s[on] a[ltesse] s[érénissime] dans laquelle, se laissant encore sur la proposition de la Russie, il lui donnoit à peu près les mêmes informations qu’elle avoit reçues elle-même de Rastadt, sur les nouvelles prétentions des François ; et continuoit à lamenter sur les lenteurs qu’apportoit Vienne aux arrangemens, en voulant y faire intervenir la Russie comme médiatrice ; tandis, ajoutoit-il, qu’il seroit si important de s’entendre, pour obtenir qu’ils relâchassent quelque chose de ces prétentions. Son a[ltesse] s[érénissime] me fit l’honneur de me communiquer en même temps une lettre particulière concernant principalement ce ministre, d’après une conversation prétendue confidentielle qu’il avoit eue avec une personne dont l’écrivain la tenoit, et dans laquelle il se représentoit comme fort à plaindre, navigant entre les plus terribles écueils.

“Je venois en ce moment de recevoir une lettre de M. le Baron de Steinberg, où j’avois trouvé une preuve que c’étoit-là le langage que M. de H[augwitz] tenoit aux ministres des Princes d’Allemagne, pour les persuader que c’est l’Empereur ou son ministre qui les mettent en peril ; car M. de Steinberg me disoit ceci, sans doute d’après les informations du Ministre d’Hanovre à Berlin. ‘Je regrette que M. de Thugut à Vienne ne croye oser placer aucune confiance dans le Cabinet de Berlin, et ne veuille traiter avec cette Cour que par l’entremise de la Cour de Petersbourg ; c’est un moyen un peu long et lent pour opérer le bien dans un moment urgent, et si essentiel à nous tous.’ Je venois encore de recevoir une lettre de M. le Comte de Wallmoden, dans laquelle il m’expliquoit un autre artifice de ce ministre, sur un objet connu sans doute de votre Excellence, dans lequel il représente comme un grand désintéressement de s[a] M[a]j[esté] P[russienne] le peu de soin qu’il voudroit lui faire prendre dans les arrangemens pour garantir ses possessions en Westphalie ; comme si toute l’Allemagne n’y étoit pas intéressée.

“J’ajoutai donc tous ces moyens aux représentations que j’avois pris la liberté de faire par écrit à s’a[ltesse] s[érénissime] le jour précédant, pour lui faire sentir toujours plus fortement le besoin de son intervention ; et elle termina cet entretien à peu-près dans ces termes ; ‘croyez que je m’occupe beaucoup de cet état des choses ; je songe aux moyens d’agir, et je souhaite de vous revoir avant votre départ pour Berlin.

Voulez-vous me recevoir encore demain au soir, ou après demain matin, si vous ne partez pas de bonne heure ?' Je laissai le choix à s'a[ltesse] s[érémissime].

"Hier, vers les 5 heures, Monseigneur le Duc m'ayant fait encore demander si je voulois renvoyer notre entretien à ce matin, je profitai de l'occasion de répondre, en acquiescant, pour lui demander son indulgence sur la liberté que je prenois de mettre sous ses yeux quelques pensées qu'avoit excitées chez moi l'ensemble de ce qu'on voyoit clairement de la conduite de M. de H[augwitz]. Je ne saurois donner à votre Excellence une idée plus précise de l'état où les choses restent ici qu'en lui copiant le petit écrit que j'envoyai alors à s'a[ltesse] s[érémissime] et sa réponse."

Copie.

"On ne peut s'imaginer d'être dans la vie réelle ; on croit être dans un songe quand on voit un ministre de Prusse s'occuper à considérer lequel seroit le parti le moins désavantageux, ou de céder aux François le fort de Kehl (qui appartient à l'Empereur) ou de raser Ehrenbreitstein (qui appartient à l'Electeur de Trêve). Est-il dont arrivé au point de disposer de l'Empire à son gré ?

"Mais ce qui excite surtout le courroux comme l'indignation c'est de voir le Ministre d'un des principaux souverains de l'Empire ne s'arrêter qu'au parti de lâcheté et de démenche, de tâcher d'obtenir quelque adoucissement à la demande d'une destruction totale de la sûreté des confins de l'Allemagne ; demande faite par l'ennemi le plus perfide et le plus fougueux ; tandis que ce Ministre sait, mais feint d'ignorer, que toutes les autres Puissances existantes, et encore libres, se réunissent pour presser la Prusse de prendre enfin avec elles des mesures vigoureuses, afin d'arrêter à temps les desseins de cet ennemi. Veut-il donc à toute force perdre son maître, irriter contre lui l'Autriche, la Russie, le Danemarck, le rendre l'objet de la haine et du mépris de tous les honnêtes gens de l'Europe, et le livrer enfin à la faction !

"Il connoit, dit-il, ses ennemis et il sait de quoi on l'accuse ; sa conscience, ose-t-il assurer, et le Roi, le justifient. Il voit mieux, prétend-il, les dangers dont on est menacé de la part des François que ceux qui blament sa conduite. Mais sait-il donc quelque chose de plus terrible de leur part que le dessein formé par eux, et très connu, de détruire toute association civile ; en y employant sans relâche, par trahison or par force, tout le pouvoir qu'on leur a laissé acquérir ? S'il connoit des desseins plus sinistres encore, il est d'autant plus coupable envers son maître de vouloir l'isoler de tout conseil, et de tout appui. Mais rien ne peut être plus terrible que ce qu'on sait déjà ; et l'on ne peut que juger ou qu'il est, au contraire, aveugle sur le danger réel, ou qu'il n'est qu'un instrument passif dans les mains invisibles, ou, ce qui semble improbable, mais dont on n'a que trop d'exemples, qu'il est lui-même dans le complot. Il n'y a point d'autre supposition possible ; et dans chacune il est de la plus grande importance pour le Roi (comme pour l'Europe entière) de le tirer de telles mains.'

“ J'avoue que cet écrit étoit le produit d'une grande indignation. Mais peut-on, et doit-on même la retenir dans un moment si urgent ! Voici la réponse que me fit bientôt s'a[ltesse] sérénissime.

“ Si cela ne contrarie pas vos projets j'aurai l'honneur de passer chez vous demain à onze heures. Voyez les choses quand vous serez à Berlin ; voyez la marche des négociations qui vont s'y entamer, et ne prenez aucun parti décisif sur le personnel du Ministre que lorsque vous le verrez agir dans la négociation. Sa responsabilité n'est pas petite, le mal est là et le remède encore incertain ; peut-il revirer de bord, l'ennemi au sein de l'Empire, sans être tout-à-fait certain des autres puissances, et des moyens de la Prusse même ? C'est une situation qui demanderoit toute l'expérience et le caractère d'un Prince de Kaunitz. Je vous rendrai compte demain de mes avis de Rastadt, qui m'inquiètent beaucoup pour le sud de l'Allemagne.'

“ J'attends bientôt ce nouvel entretien. Je conviendrais avec s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] que pour décider finalement ce qu'on doit penser de M. de H[augwitz] il faut savoir à quel degré il peut être sûr du concours des autres puissances. Mais je ne le disculperai pas de faire semblant de s'ouvrir à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] et de lui cacher cependant ce qu'il sait à cet égard ; ni de tâcher d'éviter, plutôt que de rechercher au contraire, les explications de la part des autres puissances sur ce qu'on peut attendre d'efforts de leur part contre cet ennemi déjà au sein de l'Empire ; et si s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] paroit encore désirer que je voie M. de H[augwitz], je la préviendrai que je ne le verrai que comme Genève pénétré, par l'exemple de sa patrie, du danger qui menace toutes les nations.

“ Je viens d'avoir cet entretien avec s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime]. Je ne répéterai pas ce que je me proposais de lui dire, et que j'ai dit de mon mieux, mais je dois avoir l'honneur d'informer votre Excellence des avis que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] a reçus de Rastadt. Ce ne sont que des insinuations, mais on avoit déjà quelque raison de les prévoir par des propos du Prince Henri qui s'y rapportent ; et il n'y a que trop de raison de croire qu'il va se manifester de la part des François un plan pareil, qu'ils n'ont retardé que pour prendre des mesures qui le favorisent.

“ Ce plan est, de rompre entièrement la confédération Germanique, et de partager l'Allemagne en deux grandes divisions, du Nord et du Sud. Il n'est question maintenant pour la division du Nord que d'accorder à ses différens états la neutralité qui peut les éblouir ; mais pour celle du Sud, laissant à part les états héréditaires de l'Empereur, sur lesquels apparemment ils ont leurs vues d'attaques, ils veulent réunir les autres états à la manière de la Suisse, et s'allier avec eux. Buonaparte, dit-on, vient pour cela à Rastadt, avant que d'aller se mettre à la tête de l'autre expédition.

“ Ceci vient d'un correspondant de Monseigneur le Duc, son envoyé à Rastadt, homme très suspect d'entrer lui-même dans ces manoeuvres, et auquel s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] elle-même ne se fie pas, quoiqu' à présent il en paroisse le zélé serviteur. Il est en relation avec un Rosenstiele, secrétaire de Treilhard, qui a un frère dans le conseil des mines à Berlin. Je connois celui-ci, homme de talens, mais dont je n'ai pas été bien satisfait.

“ Je ne saurois douter, par bien des raisons, qu'il n'y ait quelque vue pareille, et que la tentative ne doive bientôt s'en faire. Il seroit donc bien fâcheux que Vienne et Petersbourg n'eussent pas chargé leurs ministres d'être très explicites sur les offres d'une alliance défensive, où ils emploieroient tous leurs pouvoirs, avec les plus grandes facilités pour les arrangemens particuliers. Car l'incertitude sera toujours grossie par M. de H[augwitz] pour empêcher le Roi de se décider. J'espère bien que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] donnera de bons avis à sa Majesté, mais je crains toujours que ce ne soit pas d'une manière assez déterminée ni assez pressante, à moins que tout ne soit bien clair et positif dans l'alliance proposée. Elle m'a témoigné encore son impatience que j'aie à Berlin ; je n'aime pas à la voir s'arrêter à de si foibles ressources qui ne sont rien si elle ne les appuie. Cependant je pars dans une heure, et je ferai ce que je pourrai, ne fût-ce que pour être en suite à sa portée à Potzdam. Je serois bien heureux si votre Excellence daignoit m'écrire sous couvert de my Lord Elgin.”

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 12. Berlin.—“ En arrivant ici hier matin, au lieu d'y trouver une lettre de M. de Stamford, comme nous en étions convenus, je l'y trouvai lui-même, ayant déjà exécuté sa commission à Potzdam, où il s'étoit déterminé d'aller d'abord ; réfléchissant dans la route que, comme sa mission étoit directement au Roi, il ne falloit point avoir l'apparence d'être allé à Berlin pour quelque autre but.

“ Le Roi, déjà prévenu par Monseigneur le Prince Héréditaire d'Orange, reçut M. de Stamford avec beaucoup de satisfaction et de bonté. ‘ Il seroit bien à souhaiter,’ dit s[a] M[ajesté], ‘ que chacun eût les mêmes sentimens d'honneur que le Prince d'Orange.’ ‘ Et de justice aussi,’ ajouta M. de Stamford, ‘ car c'est la justice maintenant qu'il faut appeler à son secours, pour faire contraste, aux yeux des états et des peuples, avec les déprédations du Directoire.’

“ Cela engagea la conversation sur les affaires générales, et M. de St[amford] fit de nouveau au Roi une peinture très forte des dangers dont tous les gouvernemens légitimes sont menacés, soit directement, soit par tout traité avec la faction. S[a] M[ajesté] acquiesça à tout, mais n'ajouta rien qui pût conduire M. de Stamford à parler des précautions à prendre ; de sorte, qu'il ne crut pas devoir aller plus loin jusqu'à ce qu'il eût les informations nécessaires. Il eut ensuite une longue conversation avec M. de Rökeritz qui roula sur les mêmes objets, sans le conduire pour loin ; c'est pourquoi, étant invité à voir la revue, ce qui lui laissoit l'espérance d'un entretien plus utile quand il seroit mieux instruit de l'état des choses, il se détermina à venir à Berlin.

“ D'abord à son arrivée ici, M. de Stamford vit my Lord Elgin, à qui il remet le paquet de votre Excellence, et rendit compte de ce qui s'étoit passé à Potzdam. Il vit ensuite les Ministres de Vienne et de Petersbourg qui, l'un et l'autre, lui témoignèrent leur satisfaction très grande de ce qu'un des retranchemens de M. de H[augwitz] étoit maintenant enlevé. Le Prince de Reus en particulier lui dit qu'ayant fait confidence à M. de Thugut de mon départ pour Londres dans ce but, il lui en avoit déjà exprimé le plus grand contentement ; en l'assurant que si M. de Stamford venoit à Vienne, il l'aideroit de tout son pouvoir, quoiqu'il eût pris sa démission de la place de Ministre des Affaires Étrangères ; mais restant Ministre de conférence. Cette démission avoit d'abord fait beaucoup de peine à M. le Prince de Reus ; mais M. de Thugut l'avoit rassuré ; M. de Cobenzel qui a pris sa place étant très zélé pour la même cause ; et il l'a informé, en même temps, que les réstitutions des parties du pays de Nassau, que Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange réclame, seront appuyées de l'Empereur, et n'éprouveront aucune difficulté.

“ Votre Excellence étant sûrement bien informée des instructions qu'ont reçues les Ministres de Petersbourg et de Vienne, je n'en parlerai ici que relativement à l'usage que nous avons déjà fait, M. de Stamford et moi, de ces informations.

“ M. le Ministre de Reck, en conséquence de ce qu'il nous avoit fait espérer que, si mon voyage en Angleterre produisoit ce que nous avions en vue, il parleroit au Roi de son danger à laisser des affaires aussi critiques dans les mains d'un seul homme, ayant sçu en même temps ce qu'on pouvoit attendre dans les prochaines conférences, a fait une première démarche auprès de s[a] M[ajesté], qui a déjà eu assez d'effet pour qu'on puisse attendre qu'en obtenant l'appui de Monseigneur le Duc, M. de H[augwitz] perdrait beaucoup de son influence.

“ C'est-là certainement le point où il faut concentrer ses vues ; car votre Excellence sait, sans doute, ce que M. le Comte Panin a dit à M. de Stamford, que dans la réponse plus que dilatatoire qu'il a reçue sur la proposition de sa Cour quant à une alliance entre les Puissances, M. de H[augwitz] a eu assez d'ascendant pour y faire concourir les deux autres Ministres des Affaires Étrangères ; de sorte qu'il paroît que leur réunion à M. de H[augwitz] ne feroit que fortifier son ascendant sur l'esprit du Roi, et qu'il faut tâcher d'y amener d'autres personnes.

“ M. le Chambellan de Reck aussi, ayant été informé par M. de Stamford des dispositions de Vienne et de Petersbourg, et, en même temps, de l'information certaine qu'a eue M. de Stamford, que le Ministre de France a reçu des ordres positifs de presser cette Cour pour un traité d'alliance, en lui offrant les plus grands avantages, a pris aussi le parti de parler au Roi pour le solliciter de tout suspendre jusqu'à l'arrivée du Prince de Repnin ; insistant sur ce qu'il n'y avoit d'appui réel pour les puissances morales que dans des Puissances de cette ancienne classe ; et qu'il y avoit, au contraire, tout à craindre dans des liaisons avec les hommes les plus immoraux qui aient jamais existé, parlant aujourd'hui au nom de la France.

“Ce fut hier que nous eumes cet entretien avec M. de Reck ; je l'ai vu ce matin, et il m'a assuré qu'on pouvoit être tranquille sur ce que tente le Ministre de France à l'égard d'un traité ; mais qu'il ne falloit pas cesser d'agir auprès du Roi.

“Mon principal but dans cette visite à M. de Reck étoit de le presser de nouveau de ce dont nous l'avions prié hier ; c'est de se joindre à nous pour engager Monsieur le Duc de Brunswic, avec qui il est lié, à ne pas perdre l'occasion de sa venue pour opérer essentiellement sur l'esprit du Roi. Pour cet effet je l'ai informé de tout ce que nous avions déjà fait à cet égard M. de Stamford et moi, et de ce qu'il faudroit faire encore, d'après tout ce qu'on sait ici, pour lui montrer la diminution des obstacles et l'augmentation des espérances, pourvu qu'il se montre décidé pour la seul parti sûr. M. de Reck, persuadé de l'importance du concours de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], s'est déterminé à partir demain pour aller l'attendre à Brandebourg, et l'entretenir ainsi avant qu'elle arrive à Potzdamm.

“Je n'ai rien à ajouter, quant à présent, que d'avoir l'honneur de dire à votre Excellence que M. de Stamford a l'honneur de rendre compte aujourd'hui à Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange de l'exécution de son ordre, et l'informer en même temps de ce qu'il a appris par le Prince de Reus des dispositions favorables de l'Empereur pour d'autres indemnités en sa faveur ; sans, néanmoins, entrer dans les affaires générales ; ce dont il a souhaité que j'eusse l'honneur d'informer votre Excellence, afin qu'elle fasse à cet égard ce qu'elle jugera à propos.”

COUNT STARHEMBERG TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May. London.—“Vous aurez demain, ou après demain, le mémoire que vous demandez. Je désirerais bien vous complaire aussi en liquidant promptement l'affaire des intérêts échus et à échoir, mais je crains de n'en pas trouver les possibilités. Nous ferons certainement preuve de bonne volonté ; Ransonet a été envoyé pour arranger cet objet. Il n'y a que deux moyens, que vous nous fassiez ces avances, ou que l'on fasse un emprunt momentané chez Boyd pour les rembourser. Je sais que vous croyez ne pouvoir pas vous prêter au premier de ces expédients, et je ne vous en tourmente plus ; mais ce qui me choque véritablement, c'est de voir la mauvaise volonté de Boyd, qui se refuse à toute avance sans votre garantie ; ce serait user notre crédit en trifles, et vous tracasser peut-être sans succès que d'y recourir actuellement pour cet objet. Comment se peut-il qu'un homme, aussi riche que Boyd, aussi entreprenant, aussi intelligent, et aussi heureux, se refuse à une avance de 300 mille livres pour quelques mois. Il devrait se rappeler qu'il nous doit le commencement de son bien-être ; mais comme il est sûr que le gouvernement Anglais payera au besoin les intérêts, en conséquence de sa garantie, il se soucie peu de notre crédit. Cela m'afflige d'autant plus que je me vois dans la nécessité d'en rendre compte à ma Cour, déjà sans raison (jusqu'à présent) prévenu contre lui, à cause de la prétendue cherté de nos emprunts. Il faudra qu'on trouve à Vienne quelque secret pour faire honneur à ses obligations. Je n'en vois pas d'autre que d'envoyer de l'argent ; mais il faudrait en avoir pour cela. Je ne saurais vous exprimer combien toutes ces choses me chipotent et m'affligent. Il est cruel pour un honnête homme de se trouver dans ma position ; vos bontés seules m'en dédommagent."

EARL CAMDEN to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 14. Dublin Castle.—"Although I have not had time to enter into the subject of your letter, I cannot let the post leave Dublin without thanking you for the communication of your sentiments which I received this morning. Your anxiety for the fate of this country would, I am sure, have alone induced you to give this subject as full a consideration as you have done ; at the same time I venture to flatter myself that the friendship you have always shown me has had some small share in inducing you to take so much trouble. I shall obey your commands in not making your sentiments known except where you mention."

The EARL OF ELGIN to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, May 14. Berlin.—"As to my health, which I mention in so far as it may have some connection with business here, I have the satisfaction of being able to say that it has improved within these three weeks beyond expectation ; and I have now no interruption from it to apprehend in discharge of my duty.

"Your Lordship will perceive that, in my conferences with Count Haugwitz, no allusion was made to the inserting an article in a treaty of general alliance declaring the war in which England is now engaged not to be a casus fidei. In fact I believe that suggestion originated rather with Count Panin than with Count Haugwitz ; some such resource appearing to Count Panin suitable to obviate the difficulty made to his proposal on the ground of Great Britain being at war. Count Haugwitz seems to have a general opposition to the whole plan, and not to have adopted even this partial resource."

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 15. Berlin.—"Le lendemain de mon arrivée ici (le 15<sup>e</sup>) j'eus l'honneur d'écrire à Votre Excellence pour l'informer de ce qui s'étoit passé à Potzdam à l'égard de la mission de M. de Stamford, et du premier aspect des choses. Je ne doute pas que votre Excellence ne soit bien informée par my Lord Elgin (que j'ai eu l'honneur de voir pour lui rendre compte de ce qui s'est passé à Brunswic), mais l'époque où nous sommes est si importante que je ne dois pas négliger de communiquer à votre Excellence tout ce que j'appерçois, au risque qu'il n'y ait rien d'essentiel.

"My Lord Elgin m'ayant témoigné qu'il regardoit comme très important que Monseigneur le Duc de Br[unswic] se prononçât fortement auprès du Roi ; après lui avoir rendu compte de tout ce que nous avions fait, M. de Stamford et moi, pour l'y engager, je lui fis comprendre que ce qui pourroit retenir s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] étoit l'obscurité qui règnoit encore à ses yeux sur les vraies intentions de la Cour de Vienne, et qu'ainsi il seroit très essentiel de pouvoir lui donner sur ce point des informations précises ; mais my Lord Elgin ne me dit à cet égard que des choses générales.

"C'étoit-là, cependant, le point important pour obtenir un concours direct de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] à quelque vue déterminée ; vu les lettres qu'elle avoit reçues de M. de H[augwitz] jusqu'au dernier courrier avant mon départ. Notre espérance étoit donc que M. de Stamford, arrivant à Berlin, y apprendroit positivement du min[istre] de Vienne ce que nous pensions que M. de H[augwitz] cachoit ; et en effet, ce ministre ayant témoigné à M. de Stamford la plus grande satisfaction de son arrivée, 'qui accéléreroit, disoit-il, par la renonciation de Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange, l'ouvrage si essentiel d'une réunion,' nous ne doutâmes pas qu'il n'eût à cet égard des instructions précises et conformes aux circonstances. Voilà donc ce que nous regardâmes comme essentiel de communiquer à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] avant même son arrivée à Potzdam ; et M. le Chambellan de Reck s'étoit déterminé à l'aller joindre pour cet effet à Brandebourg, comme j'eus l'honneur de le marquer à votre Excellence dans ma dernière lettre.

"Mais dès lors l'aspect des choses a changé à quelque degré, d'abord aux yeux de M. de Reck, et ensuite pour nous-mêmes. Plus M. de R[eck] est à portée du Roi, non seulement par sa place, mais par l'estime de sa Majesté, et par l'habitude qu'il a de lui parler ouvertement ; plus il est prudent dans toute sa conduite, pour ne s'exposer jamais à perdre la confiance que sa Majesté lui accorde. Il connoit aussi intimément Monseigneur le Duc, ses intentions, son caractère, et l'influence qu'il pourroit avoir sur le Roi, s'il se prononçoit décidément ; personne n'a agi plus fortement que lui pour l'y déterminer, et ne connoit mieux tout ce qui se passa ici à son précédent voyage ; il sait par là que l'evidence seule peut déterminer s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] à l'action ; que la plus grande cause de sa timidité en politique est le doute d'y voir clair ; et que dans ce doute, quoique prenant intérêt aux affaires, elle évite toujours d'y être engagé.

"D'après ces considérations M. de R[eck] ne crut pas devoir partir pour Brandebourg sans être bien assuré lui-même de ce qu'il disoit à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime]. Il vouloit surtout tâcher de savoir ce qu'on pouvoit attendre des instructions de la Cour de Vienne à son min[istre] pour les prochaines conférences. Car, si l'on peut compter, comme on paroît le faire maintenant que l'obstacle de l'engagement envers le Prince d'Or[ange] est levé, que l'objet des indemnités n'arrêtera pas, un second objet se présentera immédiatement, pour lequel même les conférences, quoique si prochaines, semblent trop éloignées; c'est la réponse à la nouvelle réquisition des François à Rastadt d'une détermination cathégorique et prompte sur leurs dernières demandes exorbitantes. Il s'agissoit donc de savoir d'abord si le min[istre] de Vienne avoit des instructions précises sur cet objet aussi provisionnel qu'important; et M. de R[eck], s'étant adressé à ce ministre même, il a eu lieu de craindre que ses instructions ne s'étendissent pas jusques-là. Il revint alors chez M. de Stamford pour lui témoigner sa surprise; et ce dernier, malgré les entretiens qu'il a eu avec le P[rince] de Reuss, dont il lui est bien resté la persuasion que la Cour de Vienne désire sincèrement le concours de toutes les puissances dans l'alliance défensive, n'a pu cependant donner à M. de R[eck] aucune lumière sur ce premier pas, quoique si essentiel.

“ Rien donc ne vient nous aider contre une opinion généralement répandue ici que la Cour de Vienne n'en agit pas de bonne foi avec celle de Berlin. Nous espérons encore il est vrai, M. de Stamford et moi, que ces apparences se dissiperont; mais elles sont bien malheureuses dans ce moment, car elles influent comme la vérité même. M. de R[eck] s'est abouché avec tous ceux d'entre les Ministres et autres personnes de conséquence qu'il regarde comme les plus disposées à concourir au bien; il a vu aussi M. de H[augwitz]; et il nous a assuré que celui d'entre toutes ces personnes qui parloit avec le plus de modération de la Cour de Vienne étoit M. de H[augwitz] lui-même, quoiqu'il dise ouvertement qu'il a fait par ordre du Roi toutes les instances possibles auprès de cette Cour pour qu'elle s'expliquât sur ses intentions. Je dois ajouter que c'est là le langage que j'ai entendu tenir à des personnes très bien intentionnées, et à portée d'être instruites; et qu'on augure surtout très mal du renvoy de M. de Thugut et du Ministre de Police, en même temps qu'on voit s'assoupir l'affaire du Ministre François; regardant cela comme une espèce de compromis, signe de pusillanimité dans cette Cour, et qui fait craindre une nouvelle liaison avec elle. En un mot, l'impression avec laquelle M. de Reck et M. de Stamford partirent hier pour Potzdam est celle qu'ils ne se flattent point, dans cet état des choses, d'obtenir de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] qu'elle se prononce décidemment; mais ils feront tout ce qui sera en leur pouvoir pour l'engager, au moins, à se faire communiquer, par les pièces mêmes, ce qui s'est passé avec la Cour de Vienne, afin de juger M. de H[augwitz]. Elle le pourra surtout par des fils que nous lui fournirons, M. de Stamford et moi, d'après des entretiens que nous avons eu avec ce ministre, mais dont le temps ne me permet pas de rendre compte aujourd'hui à votre Excellence.”

W. WINDEHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 17. Park Street, Westminster.—“I had seen Sir Sidney Smith before I had received your letter, and explained to him that, in the present state of things, no other course could, in my opinion, be pursued but to leave to the Duc de Harcourt the distribution of whatever sums we should allot to the Royalists, reserving nothing to ourselves but the payment of such expenses and gratifications connected with that service as should accrue out of France. The service of communication through the country is not of bulk enough in itself to be made a subject of separate establishment; besides that, it is so interwoven with the general Royalist service in the interior, as to be impossible to be separated from it.

“All that it is required at present is to make advances, not as fast as possible, but faster, in point of fact, than we do, out of the sums already due as debt, or coming nearly under that description. 2,000*l.* of this, which I have lately got, will be sent over in a few days by General Georges, counting as part of the 17,099*l.* of which you may recollect mention in the paper which I gave you. About 500*l.* I have in like manner advanced latterly to Frotté; though, in fact, the whole of 17,099*l.* was properly due to Brittany. The 9,000*l.* for which I compromised the debt to the three southern armies, and of which two thousand has been paid to the Duc de Harcourt, and remitted by Suzanet and others, stands upon a separate account, and makes, as you recollect, no part of the 17,099*l.* When a few more advances are made in discharge of debts for which, like this 2,000*l.* given to Georges, Puisaye is personally responsible, then something may be given to the Duc de Harcourt to be laid out as he shall think proper. When the whole of Puisaye's debt is discharged, then all that remains of the above 17,099*l.* may be given to the Duc de Harcourt.

“The expenses which I say should be reserved for our distribution may, in the present state of the service, be covered by the 400*l.* agreed to be allowed per month, of which I have as yet something in hand; though, if communication with the interior, with a view to furnishing us with intelligence, should be carried on with greater activity, it will hardly continue to prove sufficient. I speak particularly of communication by F. Marcon; for that by Jersey lies principally, and almost entirely, in the hands of the Prince de Bouillon.

“The state of the Royalists in the interior is, as Sir Sydney will have explained to you, dreadful to think of; I mean for want of such small assistance as it is so abundantly in our power, and would be so much to our interest, to give. Less than 500,000*l.* a year, which the charge for maintaining that valuable corps, the provisional cavalry, amounts to, would have sustained the war in Brittany and La Vendée in a manner at least to have saved us the necessity of standing on the defensive here. My own opinion remains unaltered that, whatever coalitions may be formed in Europe, unless the parties shall learn to take for their allies the Royalists in France, meaning by that, in a larger sense, all that are willing to combine against a Jacobin Government, the present monstrous system will never be overturned, nor Europe be restored to peace and safety. A radical cure of the disorder can, in my opinion, never be effected but in France itself."

LORD GRENVILLE to SIR JAMES CRAUFURD.

Private.

1798, May 18. Cleveland Row.—"I find on farther information that I was misinformed about M. d'Arens, and that he is not the person who had been so favourably represented to me. I have however taken measures to learn accurately who he is. From Mr. Fraser's conversation I perceive that M. de Verteuil is at Hamburgh, and has occasionally made offers of assistance and information. You will do well to be very cautious with respect to this man. Even if his principles are sound, his character is such as to make this caution proper.

"Application has been made to me on the subject of Thauvenay. It is better not to give him an avowed and ostensible protection except in the last extremity. If Mr. Fraser is right in his opinion, a mere renewal on your part of the indirect expressions of interest in M. Thauvenay's safety, which he made use of to the magistrates of Hamburgh, will be sufficient for his protection.

"I am far from being sanguine in my expectations that there will be any occasion for any British mission with an Austrian army this year; but if such an occasion should occur before your brother should be able to resume his functions, I am apprehensive that we could not very well spare you from Hamburgh, where your activity may render us the most essential service, and that, besides this, there might be a difficulty in taking any person not already belonging to the military profession.

"I wish you would be so good as to make it one of the earliest objects of your attention to endeavour to open regular and constant channels of intercourse and intelligence from Holland, and even from Flanders and France, as to all that relates to naval and military preparations. What we get of that sort, though abundant, is all occasional and uncertain; and the service would be very much benefitted by following that subject up with more regularity; which, I conceive might best be done through the means of some mercantile house at Hamburgh, whose correspondence with Holland might be constant and unsuspected. If this could be done to good effect, I should not be disposed to starve the service." Copy.

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 19. Berlin.—"Quelque soit le changement que le retour de M. de Stamford et de M. de Reck pourra apporter au coup d'oeil des choses tel que j'eus l'honneur de le présenter, le courrier dernier, à votre Excellence, il peut être utile que je lui rende compte des entretiens que nous avons eu séparément, M. de S[tamford] et moi, avec M. de H[augwitz] qui se rapportent à ce même état, principalement à cause de l'aspect de la Cour de Vienne en ce moment ; et je vais le faire en attendant le retour de ces messieurs, que j'espère de voir, l'un ou l'autre, avant le départ du courrier.

“Ce furent les deux Messieurs de Reck qui nous pressèrent de voir le Ministre, pour l'entendre lui-même. Nous y avions beaucoup de répugnance, quoique nous le dussions naturellement l'un et l'autre ; M. de Stamford comme ayant été chargé auprès du Roi d'une commission qui regardoit les affaires étrangères ; et moi, comme ne pouvant, après ce qui s'étoit passé entre nous, être à Berlin sans aller lui rendre mes respects. Monseigneur le Duc de Br[unswick] encore nous avoit témoigné qu'il le désiroit ; ainsi nous nous y déterminâmes, surtout pour pouvoir rendre compte de ces entretiens à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] dès son arrivée à Potzdam. M. de Stamford fut le premier chez le Ministre, qui lui témoigna sa satisfaction de la commission dont il avoit été chargé, comme pouvant aider beaucoup aux arrangemens à faire avec Vienne, qui étoient très pressans ; surquoi la conversation s'engagea à l'égard des affaires générales. C'est-là un étrange contraste avec sa conduite précédente, qui avoit exigé une renonciation formelle à la part de Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange, pour en prévenir les effets.

“J'allai le soir du même jour chez M. de H[augwitz] qui me fit l'accueil le plus obligeant, sans paroître savoir la part que j'avois à la mission de M. de Stamford. J'amenai cependant cet objet sur le tapis, et il me tint le même langage qu'à M. de Stamford. Puis, passant de là lui-même aux affaires générales, il me témoigna sa satisfaction de pouvoir s'en entretenir librement avec moi. Le fond des deux entretiens fut le même ; mais comme il y eut en effet moins de gêne dans ce dernier, M. de H[augwitz] m'ayant invité à passer avec lui dans son jardin où nous promenâmes ensemble près de deux heures, je m'arrêterai à ce dernier.

“Quiconque, sans être instruit des raisons de défiance contre ce Ministre, eût entendu cet entretien auroit cru que nous étions parfaitement d'accord ; tant les nuances étoient imperceptibles. Il ne fut plus question de l'Angleterre, passé le premier moment, où il me témoigna sa satisfaction de l'énergie qui s'y déployoit, remarquant qu'il paroissoit qu'elle avoit fait renoncer à l'entreprise ; et lorsque j'en tirai la conséquence qu'il en seroit de même partout, si l'on prenoit la même résolution en commun, non seulement il en fut d'accord, mais il se plut à rappeler les cas où il en avoit été de même ; se montrant convaincu que la plus grande habileté de ces ennemis communs, et la cause de leur succès, étoit dans la ruse et la trahison.

“Passant de là à des objets plus particuliers je m'arrêtai d'abord aux événemens de la Suisse ; et il appuya bientôt lui-même la seule raison qui ait pu me faire supporter son sort ; c'est que ces armées seroient enfin odieuses à toutes les nations. Sur quoi il m'assura qu'il n'y avoit plus personne à Berlin (excepté un petit nombre de gens bien connus, et qui n'ont plus d'influence) qui, depuis ces événemens, osât encore parler en faveur du Directoire François, tant l'indignation est générale; tellement que M. Caillard, quoiqu'un homme très calculé pour sa place par ses manières et son instruction générale, qui auparavant étoit un grand objet d'attention dans les sociétés, et y paroissoit avec assurance, y étoit aujourd'hui déconcerté et isolé; peut-être honteux lui-même de représenter de tels maîtres. C'est ce que m'avoient déjà dit des personnes qui le rencontrent dans la société.

“La conséquence immédiate de ce sentiment général étoit qu'on devoit être entièrement résolu à ne plus écouter ces gens-là pour aucun traité, ni même dans aucune promesse; sur quoi encore nous trouvâmes entièrement d'accord.

“Ils n'ont cessé (me dit-il) et ne cessent de nous presser à en venir à un traité; mais ils ont lieu d'apercevoir que tous leurs efforts, et tous les motifs qu'ils nous présentent, sont inutiles. Tantôt ils nous disoient que Vienne ne se relâcheroit pas d'une partie de la Bavière, et que nous ferions bien de songer de notre côté à nous agrandir, en quoi ils nous seconderoient. Mais nous avons toujours répondu que nous ne pouvions avoir une telle idée de l'Autriche, et qu'il seroit temps de penser à nous quand elle la manifesterait. Puis ils nous ont représenté, et c'est leur thème actuel, qu'il faudra bien que l'Autriche ou la Prusse s'allient avec eux; que la première le désire; mais qu'ils nous préféreroient, comme ayant plus d'influence sur le Nord, et voyant d'ailleurs plus de penchant entre nos deux nations. Le premier motif peut être vrai, mais le dernier est un double mensonge, car quant à leur nation, ils lui font dire tout ce qu'ils veulent; et pour la nôtre elle les hait, surtout aujourd'hui. Ils ne nous tromperont pas non plus à l'égard de l'Autriche, quoiqu'elle reste si boutonnée à notre égard; elle est trop prudente pour céder à leurs instances; car elle voit bien que ce seroit le signal de l'alliance la plus intime entre la Prusse, la Russie, l'Angleterre, et tout le nord; ce qui la mettroit en danger réel, tandis que son union avec le Directoire ne seroit qu'une nouvelle supercherie à laquelle elle ne s'exposeroit pas.

“Il faut donc au contraire (lui dis-je) se réunir contre un tel ennemi.’ ‘Sans doute (répliqua-t-il) il le faudroit; il n'y aura de sûreté que par là.’

“Ce fut avec cette conformité de principes que nous vinmes à parler des conférences prochaines, où il sembloit impossible de ne pas attendre son concours à la réunion; et qu'ainsi elle devoit avoir lieu, puisque c'étoit de lui seul qu'on attendoit la résistance. Il me témoigna au contraire le plus grand désir, mais peu d'espérance de succès; accusant l'Autriche de manque de sincérité, et de n'avoir en vue que de rejeter sur une défiance mal-fondée de la Prusse, le mal immense qu'elle a fait elle-même. Il me répéta plusieurs fois l'expression de son chagrin de ce qu'au lieu de s'ouvrir confidentiellement avec la Prusse dans tant d'occasions qu'on lui en avoit fournies, et d'exprimer ce désir de réunion, elle avoit contribué, sans doute, à en répandre le bruit dans toute l'Europe, et l'avoit par sa demande ouverte de l'intervention de la Russie, et l'envoy bruyant d'un ministre plénipotentiaire de cette puissance; que par là enfin les François avoient été conduits à redoubler leurs efforts; sans qu'on eût encore un seul mot de sa part qui put fonder de telles apparences, et montrer ses vues.

“Il y avoit un point bien essentiel (me dit-il) qui pouvoit conduire à des explications ultérieures; c'étoit de se concerter incessamment sur les demandes croissantes des François, à l'égard des quelles la commission de l'Empire ne sauroit prendre parti sans que la Prusse et l'Autriche ne soient d'accord. Notre ministre à Rastadt a eu de constantes instructions à cet égard; nous avons pressé à plusieurs fois le Cabinet de Vienne d'en envoyer au sien, et nous n'avons jamais pu y parvenir; de sorte que les ministres de Prusse et de Vienne, qui auroient dû être les principaux agens dans ce congrès, y ont été des zéros, faisant même un personnage ridicule dont M. de Cobenzel lui-même étoit embarrassé.”

“Je vois là de fortes raisons de suivre l'avis de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissimé]; c'est-à-dire, de suspendre mon jugement sur ce Ministre jusqu'à ce qu'on le voye dans les négociations. Il est impossible de ne pas supposer du louche, au moins pour la Prusse, dans la conduite de l'Autriche. M. de H[augwitz] n'en parleroit pas si affirmativement à tous ceux qui conversent avec lui, s'il n'en avoit des raisons; et je ne puis m'empêcher de regretter un peu que le plan d'un voyage de M. de Stamford à Vienne, dans le commencement de Mars, ait été abandonné, sur l'apparence que tout alloit bien de ce côté-là. Si cela est dans l'intention, ce n'est pas du moins dans l'apparence, et il semble qu'on puisse dire de là, que c'est tout comme ici.

“Chacun se défie, et en a sujet; la défiance mutuelle produit une conduite réciproque qui la fait croître sans cesse de part et d'autre; et cela durera jusqu'à ce que le ciel envoie quelque homme de bien avec des talens suffisans pour fouiller de part et d'autre dans les replis de la petite politique, l'écarter, et voir assez clair dans les intentions pour pouvoir dire aux deux Cours ‘finissez enfin ces disputes sur la forme, que vont vous perdre, puisque vous êtes d'accord sur le fond qu'il faut se réunir pour se sauver.’

“Mais en attendant, considérons la situation du Roi de Prusse. Il est impossible dans cet état des choses, qu'avec les dispositions les plus conformes à tout ce qu'on peut désirer. il puisse appercevoir aucune raison de se plaindre de son Ministre; et c'est ce que MM. de Reck m'ont fait remarquer, l'un et l'autre, d'après leurs derniers entretiens avec sa Majesté. Si M. de H[augwitz] ne lui montrait pas toujours la plus entière défiance des François, et le plus grand désir de produire une réunion entre les puissances existantes pour la défense commune, il perdrait certainement sa confiance; on la lui feroit perdre, si l'on pouvoit montrer chez lui de la tergiversation à l'un ou l'autre de ces deux égards. Mais il ne paroît pas que M. de H[augwitz] ait aucune crainte qu'on puisse l'en accuser auprès du Roi; et c'est ainsi qu'il avoit dit que sa conscience et le Roi le justifient. C'est ce qu'il m'a répété à moi-même; et n'ayant rien de certain qui pût me persuader du contraire (comme j'ai eu l'honneur de la faire remarquer à Votre Excellence dans ma précédente lettre) je n'avois rien non plus à répliquer.

“Voilà tout l'essentiel de cet entretien, car je m'abstiens de prendre du temps à votre Excellence pour lui détailler la partie de notre conversation dans laquelle, lui faisant remarquer que tout l'Europe avoit les yeux sur lui, je tâchai de lui faire sentir que puisqu'il disoit que la Prusse n'avoit d'autre dessein que celui de sa préservation, et voyoit le besoin de la réunion pour cet effet pourvu qu'il y eût sûreté dans cette réunion même, son rôle étoit le plus simple; qu'il devoit, dans les conférences prochaines, diriger les choses vers des explications promptes et précises sur ce qu'il y avoit à statuer; en déclarant, franchement, ce que la Prusse exigeroit pour se livrer à cette alliance, qui semble être le sujet de l'intervention de la Russie. Que le moment de ces conférences étoit beau pour un homme d'état; puisqu'il fondera l'opinion publique sur les ministres employés, comme il décidera probablement du sort de l'Europe.

“Ce fut là-dessus que roula la plus grande partie de notre entretien, et je ne saurois rien dire de favorable ni de défavorable de l'effet; en un mot je n'eus pas raison de me retirer mécontent de ce Ministre, et, pourtant, je n'étois pas satisfait. De son côté il me témoigna qu'il me reverroit avec plaisir à son retour de Potsdam.

“Si c'eût été là mon premier entretien avec M. de H[augwitz] sur les mêmes objets; ou si, dans la suite de nos premiers entretiens et de sa conduite, il n'eût pas fait naître chez moi de la défiance, je ne pourrois qu'être très content. Mais je crains son plan fondamental d'éviter la guerre à tout risque, malgré son aveu actuel qu'on ne peut compter sur aucun accord avec de tels ennemis. Vienne l'auroit mis au pied du mur en se prononçant ouvertement. Mais en se contentant de sonder le terrain on l'a mis dans le cas d'attribuer ces demi-démarches à manque de sincérité; et pour peu qu'il reste encore de ce tâtonnement dans les conférences, je crains qu'il ne s'en prévaille pour écarter toute union qui pourroit engager une guerre. Voilà ce que Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic pourroit seul prévenir, en entrant pleinement dans les affaires durant les conférences; mais malheureusement on dit qu'il doit aller directement de Potsdam à Brunswick quand le Roi viendra à Berlin.”

Le 19. “Votre Excellence sera plutôt informée par my Lord Elgin que par cette lettre (qui va par Hanovre) de l'heureuse circonstance de la venue ici de Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic, et de l'arrivée du Prince de Replin. Mais quel peu de temps avant le départ du Roi! Six jours, dont trois sont jours de revues! J'ai vu M. de Stamford. Il a conversé avec beaucoup de personnes, mais il ne revient pas satisfait de l'apparence des choses. Le Prince Reus le presse d'aller à Vienne. Il faut donc qu'il y ait quelque chose à faire; mais le Pr[ince] ne s'explique pas, et M. de Stamford ne conçoit pas encore comment il pourroit y avoir du temps. Voilà ce qui entretient le doute. M. de Stamford se décidera suivant les circonstances.

“Monseigneur le Duc m’a fait dire de passer chez lui vers le soir, mais ce sera après le départ du courrier. Si donc j’apprenois alors quelque chose d’intéressant, je ne pourrais avoir l’honneur d’en informer votre Excellence que le courrier prochain.”

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 22. Berlin.—“Votre Excellence recevra sans doute par my Lord Elgin tous les détails de l’état présent des choses, et de leur apparence; cependant il n’est peut-être pas inutile que j’y ajoute le point de vue sous lequel nous le voyons de notre côté. M. de Stamford et moi, avec assez de moyens de découvrir ce qui se passe autour du Roi.

“Il sera bien difficile de vaincre le manque d’intention qui se trouve, probablement, chez M. de H[augwitz] (et qui passe chez ceux qu’il a persuadés de son habileté) d’en venir réellement à une alliance; et l’espérance diminue à cet égard, à mesure qu’il s’exprime plus fortement sur ce que sans doute elle seroit nécessaire, sans que, pourtant, on se sente plus de confiance en ses intentions; et le manque de confiance naît surtout de la foiblesse de ses raisons de doute sur la possibilité d’acheminer convenablement cette alliance; parcequ’il doit sentir lui-même qu’elles ne sont rien comparativement à la grandeur de l’objet. Ces raisons cependant sont dans bien des bouches, et l’on peut toujours les tracer vers leur source, quoique chez des personnes qui sont bien éloignées de se fier à ce Ministre; ce sont les raisons aux-quelles j’avois opposé fortement qu’il ne tenoit qu’à lui des faire cesser, en demandant des explications du ton propre à les obtenir. Ce qui m’inquiète le plus, c’est qu’entre ceux qui répètent ces motifs de doute sur le succès, les uns pensent réellement qu’on ne sauroit prendre confiance aux deux cours Impériales, les autres que M. de H[augwitz] n’aidera point à leur en inspirer à elles-mêmes.

“Il est très difficile de pénétrer tous les replis de ce Ministre; mais il faut toujours rassembler les traits. J’en ai beaucoup par moi-même, et en voici un, par exemple, où il y a beaucoup de finesse. Votre Excellence aura vu dans ma lettre précédente le précis de mon entretien avec lui la veille de son départ pour Potzdam; dans lequel je lui avoit bien clairement exprimé ma persuasion qu’il dépendoit de lui de lever tous les obstacles à la réunion sincère qu’il paroissoit désirer, avec tous ceux qui la regardoient comme le seul port de salut. Il eut un entretien avec Monseigneur le Duc de Br[unswick] à Potzdam; et dans celui que j’eus l’honneur d’avoir avec s’a[ltesse] s[érénissime] le lendemain de son arrivée à Berlin, elle me dit que j’avois fait une grande impression sur lui, qu’il témoignoit pour moi la plus grande estime, et la satisfaction qu’il avoit de pouvoir s’entretenir avec moi des affaires publiques; tellement que s’a[ltesse] s[érénissime] regardoit comme essentiel que je continuasse à le voir, (ce que M. le Chambellan de Reck m'a témoigné aussi désirer) et pourtant, s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] répétoit elle-même les raisons de crainte que j'avois combattues chez ce Ministre !

“Voilà ce qui nous a marqué à M. de Stamford et à moi notre principale tâche ; celle de désabuser s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] sur les intentions de M. de H[augwitz] ; en qui elle paroissoit prendre confiance à cause de ses aveux sur la grande importance de l'objet. Car si elle y comptoit, et n'agissoit pas sur le Roi lui-même, son nouveau séjour ici, qui ne doit se prolonger que jusqu'au départ du Roi, le 25, ne produiroit rien de plus que le précédent.

“Nous nous sommes donc employés à cet effet de toutes nos forces ; surtout en engageant s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] à se mettre directement au fait des intentions du Cabinet de Petersbourg, en cedant pour cela au désir, jusqu'alors sans effet, de M. le Prince de Repnin et de M. le Comte de Panin de les lui exposer eux-mêmes. J'espère que nous avons avancé chemin ; du moins j'eus l'honneur de recevoir hier au soir de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] une lettre qui, pour cet objet particulier, de même que sur le fond des choses, m'a donné plus d'espérance que je n'en avois conçue jusqu'ici. Je n'ai pas en ce moment cette lettre, parceque je l'ai envoyée à M. le Comte de Panin ; d'ailleurs, sa principale force résulte de ce qu'elle est en réponse à une lettre que j'avois laissée le matin chez s'altesse s[érénissime] pendant qu'elle étoit avec le Roi à une revue. Ces revues consomment bien du temps, et obligent à saisir les momens à la volée. M. de Stamford avoit vu aussi s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] un moment après qu'elle avoit lu ma lettre, dont je lui avois communiqué la minute, afin que nous pussions aller de concert.

“Nous ne logeons pas dans le même hotel. Je me propose d'avoir l'honneur d'envoyer à votre Excellence, par un autre courrier, copie de ma lettre et de la réponse de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] par où elle verra mieux encore les difficultés qui sont sur notre chemin ; quoiqu'il y en ait que je ne puis expliquer.

“Cet état des choses retient ici M. de Stamford. On ne peut juger que d'après ce qui se sera passé jusqu'au départ du Roi, de ce qu'il pourroit y avoir à faire à Vienne ; mais alors il se concertera avec s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] et les ministres des trois Cours, sur ce qu'exigeroit la position où se trouveront alors les choses, soit pour lever quelque obstacle, soit pour aider à quelque vue déterminée. Parcequ'ainsi que votre Excellence l'apprendra sans doute, les conférences continueront ici dans l'absence du Roi et de M. de H[augwitz], les deux autres ministres des Affaires Etrangères étant adjoints à M. de H[augwitz] pour cette négociation.”

SIR JAMES CRAUFURD to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 25. Hamburg.—“With respect to M. Ahrens, I have stated in my dispatch of this date, No. 14, the intelligence which I have received from him. He is very decent in his appearance. I had seen him in the morning previous to the receipt of your Lordship's letter, but however, as the nature of his communication was not such as to call for any confidence on my part, nothing passed which gave me the smallest reason to regret that I had not received it previous to our conversation.

"I shall not fail to observe your Lordship's directions respecting M. de Verteuil, and I beg to assure you that I arrived here with every disposition to be most perfectly on my guard with all these gentlemen, amongst whom there are certainly many respectable individuals, but whom it is not always easy at once to distinguish.

"With respect to M. de Thauvenay, I am happy to find that my ideas have so exactly met your Lordship's. I have not hitherto had occasion to take any step whatever respecting him, and shall certainly avoid it, except in a case of absolute necessity.

"I cannot express to your Lordship how much I am flattered by what you are so good as to say as to the use of which you think I may be at Hamburgh. I am certainly, my Lord, entirely at your disposal."

"From the moment of my appointment to this place it occurred to me that, from its situation, it might afford opportunities of drawing intelligence from many various quarters, more particularly from Holland. I therefore lost not a moment in endeavouring to establish channels of intercourse of various kinds, one of the first of which was that of mercantile houses.

"I am much mortified not to have been able already to have derived more advantage from these sources, as also not to have transmitted more complete intelligence respecting the English residing here and passing through this country; but your Lordship, I am sure, will consider that, arriving here a perfect stranger, having to make a choice of houses for the foreign correspondence, and of agents for procuring information of what is passing here, to choose whom with discernment some time is necessary, much could not be done in the short space of one month.

"There is one person who lately passed through here whom I have not chosen to insert in the list enclosed in my dispatch of this date, from a variety of considerations. This is Sir Lionel Copley. He has been much in opposition in England, and at one time, on the Continent particularly where he is constantly rambling, used most indecent democratic language. He has lately been making a strange sort of journey, having left England in the beginning of March, and since that time having been all over Germany and even as far as Venice. What may have been his connections at Venice I do not know, but in other parts of Italy he was formerly connected with those who have since appeared on the stage of the revolution in their respective countries. He has now just gone back to England. Might I entreat you that, if it can be avoided, any accounts which I transmit of English who may happen to be here may not go into the hands of the précis writer at the Office. Not that I mean to insinuate that any of the gentlemen employed in that branch of the official business have ever been guilty of any indiscretion; but I hope your Lordship will excuse my saying that, as if it became in any degree known it might subject one to a good deal of odium, I am anxious that it should go into as few hands as possible.

“With respect to Sir Lionel Copley, any one who knows him cannot suppose him dangerous as a political man, certainly; but one sometimes sees people so little calculated for these parts who, however, appear in them, that I thought it proper to mention him. At the same time I must say that he appears to have become moderate and reasonable. I have known him long, more or less, and I do not believe he has anything bad in his character.”

WILLIAM WICKHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, May 26. Whitehall.—“Nothing can be more satisfactory than the accounts received from Ireland to-day, as well with respect to the success of the measures that have been taken by the Government, as to the state of the public opinion. The address of each House of Parliament, in answer to the Lord Lieutenant’s message, was carried up to the Castle instanter, by the respective Speakers on foot, followed by the whole House. Mr. Vandeleur expressed his particular approbation of the vigilance and clemency of Government; and Mr. Dobbs acknowledged that, if he had conceived the designs of the disaffected to have been such as they now evidently appeared, he should not have opposed Government on former occasions.

“In consequence of Lord Castlereagh’s letter, which your Lordship read yesterday, a search for arms has taken place in the most disaffected parts of Dublin, and considerable numbers have been found and conveyed to the King’s stores.

“The yeomanry corps distinguished themselves very much on this occasion; and the lawyers’ corps of cavalry, commanded by Mr. Saurin, is also particularly well spoken of by the Lord Lieutenant.

“The accounts from Wicklow, Kildare, and Tipperary all agree not only that arms to a considerable amount have been given up in the disaffected parts of those counties, but that (to use the Lord Lieutenant’s expression) these deluded persons are delivering up their captains and colonels, and appear impressed with a conviction of the errors into which they had been led.

“Mr. Ryan is much better, though not out of danger; Lord Edward is unwell, and the balls are not yet extracted.

“The paper found at Sheere’s, which your Lordship heard of yesterday, is in that gentleman’s own handwriting. It begins ‘Your country is free. That vile Government which has so long and so cruelly oppressed you is no more. Some of its most atrocious monsters have already paid the forfeit of their lives, and the rest are in our hands.’ It concludes in these words

‘Vengeance, Irishmen, vengeance on your oppressors. Remember what thousands of your dearest friends have perished by their merciless orders. Remember their burnings, their sackings, their torturings, their military massacres, and their legal murders. Remember Orr!’

“The Lord Lieutenant, however, concludes by earnestly pressing for more force, were it only for a very short time; being persuaded that the appearance of Great Britain lending Ireland some force at so very critical a juncture would have the happiest effect.

“St. Andrew St. John has been with me to offer to drop his motion, which he would otherwise make on Wednesday, if Government would engage either to bring the O’Connors to trial, or to give them leave to quit the country, in which case he and his friends would engage for their retiring to America. I have been authorised to answer Mr. St. John, and have this moment given him the answer, that Government would do what it considered to be its duty, and that Mr. St. John and his friends might take whatever steps they should think most proper.

Postscript. “The O’Connors left town this morning.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 27. Stowe.—“Your military honours are before the King, as Sir William Young’s letter notified the hundred men complete including your sergeants, so that in a few days you will be in full possession not only of the honour, but also of the amusement of yeomanising, which to be sure is most delectable. I thank you most cordially for the very long detail you have given me so kindly of the Irish news. There, as here, the spirit and loyalty of individuals have fully answered the call which the Government have made upon them. But I return to the constant burden of my song, namely that this is not a Government under which a man can live in safety where the means do not exist of bringing to punishment prisoners so decidedly guilty as those who, in the course of the last four years, have been acquitted, and those who have not even been put upon their trials. Surely some measure should be devised to meet an evil so fatal as this, for it now seems most clear that juries will not do their duty, and consequently that our ancient practice is inadequate to the crisis. This observation applies much more to England than to Ireland, though I much doubt whether Lord Edward and O’Connor will be convicted there, after the Maidstone lesson. I own that I draw some satisfaction from the desperate attempt plotted for the surprise of Dublin on the 22nd, for it clearly proves the sense which the rebels there entertain of the necessity of the most immediate struggle, and of the increasing strength of Government; and I verily believe that, if Lord Camden’s exertions and prudence tide over the next month, Ireland will be saved. But again and again I press a military tribunal there, for the immediate and summary trial of offenders.

"I am extremely happy in the success of your very important and very well digested attempt upon Ostend. The arrangements and the secrecy do great honour to Government, and I trust that you will be encouraged to persevere in this offensive war, which is the only real defensive war. You know how much I have groaned over the want of desultory attempts on the Flemish and Dutch coasts, and you will judge how much I have been gratified by the complete success of this blow. I call it complete, for the subsequent misfortune could not have been foreseen, was not necessarily connected with the blow, and, even if it were so, must have been met with your eyes open, and faced for an object so important as that which you have accomplished.

"I am now very much in earnest in proposing to you the only pledge that I can give of my eagerness for the public service, and which I wish to give in any mode that you can point out to me. I am sure that my regiment will embark anywhere with me; and I am ready to propose to them, and to present from them a petition for leave for a bill to enable them to embark for any expedition to the coasts of France and Holland, and for Ireland, where I most certainly will serve as colonel just as cheerfully as I should do here. I have no military ardour; my time of life and my habits put aside any nonsense of that sort; but I have a deep and serious sense of the difficulties of this moment, and I have long since wished to encourage by my example the formation of a force large enough to enable you to strike in force at points of the last importance, such as the Texel, Flushing, Dunkirk, Cherbourg, St. Maloes, and even Brest. Pray turn all this in your mind, and believe me most ready to lead in proposing such a bill, and to follow in whatever military arrangements can arise out of it.

"I shall be at Chelmsford on Wednesday the 6th to meet my supplementary militia there, but I am not quite sure that I shall even go through to London. My son has lamed himself at Wotton; and seems not very sorry that he is prevented from sharing the delights of Chelmsford for some time.

Postscript. "Your foreign Courts are most despicable, and will look on till their moment goes by. I conclude that Thugut is completely put aside, and with him every idea of Austrian vigour or exertion is gone."

M. DE LUC TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 28. Berlin.—"J'ai l'honneur d'envoyer à votre Excellence les copies dont je lui avois fait mention dans ma lettre du 22, qui me serviront de texte pour tâcher de lui expliquer l'aspect sous lequel les choses me paroissent en ce moment.

"Votre Excellence apprendra par my Lord Elgin comment les conférences, à peine commencées, ont été à peu près suspendues. La cause immédiate de cette suspension est certainement provenue de la Cour de Vienne, dont, inopinément, le min[istre] a fait des difficultés sur la restitution des balliages qui pourroit être une indemnité naturelle pour Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange; et comme je ne l'avois que trop prévu, dès qu'un prétexte s'est offert, M. de H[augwitz] s'en est prévalu pour faire traîner la négociation en longueur, vu le départ du Roi et le sien.

“ Cette situation des choses exigeoit un prompt départ de M. de Stamford pour Vienne; ainsi il part aujourd'hui. Le sujet immédiat de son voyage est très simple; puisque le prétexte de la suspension regarde encore les intérêts de Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange; mais il a été trouvé d'ailleurs très nécessaire pour les affaires générales; car personne ne peut mieux que lui faire comprendre à la Cour de Vienne combien il est essentiel de ne fournir à celle-ci aucun prétexte de délai. Nous ne saurions douter, d'après tout l'ensemble des choses, que M. de H[augwitz] n'ait intention d'éluder l'alliance, quoique paroissant la désirer; espérant que le temps amenera des circonstances qui en feront abandonner le projet. Et quand on considère que Syèès est probablement accepté pour ministre ici, on ne peut que craindre quelque trame; ou celle dont je présentais la possibilité dans ma lettre à Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic, ou quelque autre pire, surtout d'après la venue ici de la comtesse de Silleri.

“ D'après la réponse dont Monsieur le Duc m'honora, et une conversation qu'il eût avec M. de Stamford le jour de son départ, nous avons jugé que s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] avoit eu des entretiens avec le Roi et M. de H[augwitz] dans lesquels on lui avoit donné lieu de croire que les choses étoient en bon train; on lui avoit même montré de la confiance; car elle étoit informée de la réponse que le Roi feroit donner aux ministres des deux Empereurs, d'après laquelle on avoit lieu de bien augurer de la conférence qui devoit se tenir ce jour-là entre les ministres; et s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] partit dans cette espérance; mais le jour même, celle qu'elle nous avoit aussi donnée s'évanouit.

“ Voilà donc encore malheureusement l'influence de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], quoique si essentielle à la chose, réduite à ne s'exercer que de loin; et moi, si mince ressource, redevenu un des instrumens qu'elle croit nécessaire; surtout auprès de M. de H[augwitz]. Cependant cela ne peut avoir lieu qu'au retour du Roi; et partir, pour revenir sans une raison plausible, m'oteroit l'avantage de voir M. de H[augwitz] comme simple étranger qui voyage dans des vues particulières, et qui ainsi ne lui donne point d'inquiétude pour les conséquences. J'ai donc pris le parti de faire un voyage que lui-même et tous ceux qui me connoissent trouveront très naturel, et qui me ramènera ici au temps convenable. C'est une tournée dans les montagnes de Lusace et de Silésie.

“ A mon retour j'aurai des nouvelles de M. de Stamford, et je serai ainsi en état de juger plus sûrement des vues de M. de H[augwitz] pour en instruire s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime], et faire un dernier effort auprès d'elle. Je compte de partir dans trois ou quatre jours, et d'être absent environ trois semaines. Je désire beaucoup d'avoir l'honneur de trouver à mon retour, chez my Lord Elgin, une lettre de votre Excellence qui puisse, s'il en est besoin, me donner des forces auprès de Monseigneur le Duc, pour qui, certainement, l'Angleterre est un objet majeur."

Two enclosures.

Enclosure 1.

M. DE LUC to the DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.

1798, May 21. Berlin.—“Les circonstances seules, et la grande bonté de votre altesse sérénissime, peuvent justifier la liberté que je prends en ce moment, et j'espère son pardon si je deviens trop hardi par zèle pour un objet qu'elle désire elle-même.

“Etant allé hier au soir chez M. le Général de Stamford, j'y trouvai M. le Comte de Panin, qui voulat bien m'admettre en tiers. Il nous témoigna le désir extrême que M. le Prince de Repnin avoit d'une audience de v[otre] a[ltesse] s[érénissime], bien moins par aucune vue cérémonielle, que pour lui communiquer ce qu'il est chargé de proposer ici de la part de son maître; et si elle l'approuvoit, d'obtenir ses conseils sur la manière de se conduire pour le faire réussir. Il sait que l'Empereur le désire; en toute autre circonstance ces communications auroient pu avoir lieu durant les préliminaires, mais aujourd'hui cela devient urgent, vu le prompt départ du Roi.

“M. le Comte de Panin nous demanda donc à M. de Stamford et à moi si le premier qui pourroit avoir l'honneur d'approcher votre altesse sérénissime voudroit se charger de lui exprimer ce désir.”

“Par les discours que j'entends tenir à des personnes bien intentionnées, j'ai bien des craintes pour le succès des conférences qui vont s'entamer; j'y reconnois l'art des gens qui veulent les faire échouer; ils montrent le plus grand désir qu'on parvienne à s'entendre, paroissant convaincu du besoin; ce qui entraîne les gens de bonne foi; mais ils insinuent si adroitement des raisons de défiance qu'ils en inspirent, sans qu'on s'en apperçoive quand on n'est pas sur ses gardes. C'est à quoi sont arrivées des personnes autour du Roi en relation intime avec celle qui m'a tenu le même langage, et j'en vois l'effet de proche en proche sur d'autres qui avoient le désir, et d'abord, l'espérance du succès. Or il résulte de là chez moi une crainte particulière dont je ne puis me défendre, parceque, malheureusement, jusqu'ici toutes mes craintes ne se sont que trop réalisées.

“Il ne me paroît point naturel qu'on n'apperçoive dans ces circonstances aucun mouvement des François pour prévenir le succès des conférences; et je redoute quelque ruse. Je crains, dis-je, que tandis qu'on s'accrochera à de premières difficultés pour faire traîner ces conférences, la Directoire ne vienne tout-à-coup à se relâcher de quelque chose de spécieux sur ses exorbitantes prétentions; que les négociations ne soient par là renouées; qu'on ne suspende alors celles dont seules dépend le salut; qu'il ne se montre coulant pour entraîner une paix, et qu'alors on ne renvoye l'union aux calendes grecques.

“Je n'ai pas besoin de peindre à v[otre] a[ltesse] s[érénissime] dans quel état en ce cas demeurerait l'Europe ; et sûrement les François feront tout ce qu'ils pourront pour que cela soit ; car ils sentent bien que tous leurs desseins seroient rompus si l'union se faisoit en ce moment ; ce qui devrait être pour les puissances un motif pour se hâter de la faire ; tandis qu'ils sont bien sûrs qu'en la prévenant dans ce moment par une de leurs paix, ils auroient le temps de suivre à leurs arrangemens autour de ces puissances au Sud et à l'Est, comme ils l'ont déjà fait à l'Ouest, pour les attaquer avec plus d'avantage, et les empêcher de se réunir. Il n'y a, après Dieu, que votre altesse sérénissime qui puisse prévenir cette peste finale de l'humanité, et ce n'est que dans ces jours-ci, ces jours qu'elle passera encore auprès du Roi, que cela lui seroit sûrement possible. Ce seroit en recevant de M. le Prince de Repnin, ou de M. le Comte de Panin si elle préféroit, la communication des propositions de l'Empereur de Russie ; et si elle y voyoit des moyens de salut, de travailler à mettre fortement l'esprit de sa Majesté à l'abri de toute tentative de lui faire chercher sa sûreté particulière dans aucun autre moyen que celui de la sûreté commune, par la réunion.

“Sans ce secours immédiat de votre altesse sérénissime, il y a tout à craindre que ce plan de salut, dont j'eus le bonheur de recevoir la première impression de votre altesse sérénissime elle-même au mois de Septembre dernier, et que voilà amené sous ses yeux au point décisif, n'échoue dans des circonstances bien plus menaçantes qu'elles n'étoient alors.” Copy.

Enclosure 2.

THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK TO M. DE LUC.

1798, May 21. Berlin.—“J'espère de trouver demain après la rentrée des troupes, ce qui sera vraisemblablement entre les 10 et 11 heures, un instant favorable pour recevoir M. le Comte de Panin.

“Le grand point, ce me semble, est de ne pas s'impatienter, de mettre le plus de secret possible à la marche des affaires, et de représenter la réunion des puissances comme le seul moyen qui existe de sûreté, soit que la paix ait lieu, soit qu'elle soit reculée. La France, maîtresse de la rive gauche du Rhin, limitrophe de la Prusse sur le bas Rhin, lui dictera des loix si elle s'allie avec elle, et ne la respectera jamais qu'en tant qu'elle la verra liée avec les deux Cours Impériales, qui feront une masse assez respectable pour en imposer au Directoire. Ce n'est pas à une guerre qu'il convient de viser, mais à ces grands moyens pour l'éviter, et pour prouver à l'Europe qu'il y a des moyens d'arrêter le crime, et pour faire trembler tous ceux qui semblent se jouer des principes. Voilà, en peu de mots, ma confession de foi.” Copy.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 29. [Stowe.]—"I return you Mr. Wickham's very interesting letter, and have to thank you very truly for the very early information of the important news contained in your note. I have no doubt but that the rising on Thursday in Kildare was a part of the plot arranged for Wednesday night; and in that point of view it is most essential that this should have been so completely defeated; and the proclamation which I have received this morning, putting all Ireland under the jurisdiction of military tribunals, will, I doubt not, have the most immediate and useful effects. Upon the whole I am well pleased; for the whole plainly proves to me that the measures of the rebels have been precipitated from the apprehensions of losing ground by every day's delay. And as it seems clear that a French force to any extent cannot be landed in Ireland at present, I trust we shall have settled this rebellion by disarming and punishing, and that we shall have impressed these people very strongly with the idea of their having been duped and abandoned by France.

"Wickham's letter states that Lord Camden eagerly presses for immediate reinforcement, and presses the consideration of the advantage to be derived from the show of English force assisting in Ireland. I agree most perfectly with him; and having had the opportunity of sounding several of my officers, I repeat that I do not doubt in the smallest degree being able to present a petition to the King (to be laid before Parliament) to request a bill to enable us to serve in Ireland (or on the coasts of France) at our own request, and to extend the same powers to any of the militia, not exceeding 5,000 or 10,000 men, who may request the same, subject to the King's approbation. I detest the idea of a journey to Ireland, but no consideration shall induce me to hold back upon a proposition and from an object where I think I can serve most essentially; and where, most certainly, I should serve with more pleasure under Lake, than, in command as Lord Lieutenant, over Sir William Pitt.

"Let me then know distinctly whether you see all this in the same point of view; for if you do, I will advise with you on the quo modo.

Postscript. "I cannot bear the idea of Mr. Pitt versus Mr. Tiernay; surely he ought to have felt that there were duties that ought to have suggested a very different line of conduct than that of staking his life on such a subject, and versus such a man."

LORD GRENVILLE TO BARON DE THUGUT.

1798, May 29. London.—"Dans tous les rapports que les affaires publiques et notre position respective m'ont donnés avec votre Excellence, je me suis toujours fait un vrai plaisir de saisir les occasions qui m'ont été offertes pour lui présenter les assurances sincères de l'estime et de l'admiration dont je suis pénétré pour sa personne, et pour les hautes et éminentes qualités qui la distinguent. Ce ne sera sûrement pas dans le moment où ces rapports vont devenir pour le moins ni aussi fréquents, ni aussi directs, que je voudrai omettre de me rappeler à son souvenir. Je la prie d'être persuadée qu'en toute occasion je prendrai toujours le plus vif intérêt aux marques qu'elle pourra recevoir de la juste confiance de son souverain ; convaincu comme je le suis, que ses conseils tendront toujours au grand but auquel j'ai eu l'avantage de travailler si longtemps de concert avec elle, et dont l'importance est chaque jour démontrée de plus en plus par des événements toujours renaissants.

“J'ose me flatter que la conduite actuelle de cette Cour-ci offre aux autres puissances un garant sûr et suffisant des intentions nobles et magnanimes du Roi. Rien ne peut être plus honorable que de se trouver chargé d'exécuter de pareilles dispositions ; et je le fais surtout avec un plaisir tout particulier en tant qu'elles tendent au rétablissement de l'union la plus intime entre nos deux Cours, pour la conservation du continent de l'Europe.” Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT DE COBENZL.

1798, May 29. London.—“Je n'ai pas voulu omettre l'occasion que me fournit le départ du courier du Comte de Starhemberg, pour offrir à votre Excellence mes félicitations sur la marque infiniment honorable de la confiance de son souverain, et sur l'occasion qui lui est ouverte pour s'acquérir pour jamais des titres à l'admiration et à la reconnaissance de l'Europe. Sa haute naissance, les emplois qu'elle a déjà remplis avec tant de distinction, et son mérite personnel, tout semble assurer que ce sera par une noble et sage fermeté qu'elle voudra caractériser son administration du département qui lui est confié ; et que dans un moment où le salut de l'Europe dépend, plus que jamais, de l'établissement d'une union et bonne intelligence entre les principales Cours, elle y contribuera par des mesures convenables à la grande crise dans laquelle nous nous trouvons.

“Je m'estimerai heureux si, sous ces rapports, je pourrai mériter sa confiance. Jamais je ne pourrai mieux exécuter les ordres de mon souverain qu'en travaillant avec ardeur et sincérité à rétablir cette union intime entre nos deux Cours qui peut seule sauver le continent de l'Europe de la ruine totale et imminente dont il est menacé.” Copy.

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, May 30. Wimbledon.—“I received yours yesterday morning, with its enclosure which I return. I make no doubt that other militia regiments, at least the officers of them, feel as your brother does ; but I have long entertained an opinion that Government ought not to avail itself of the momentary zeal which may suggest itself on particular occasions to induce bodies of men to depart from the conditions of their original institutions. It may operate advantageously at a particular crisis, but it is remembered afterwards, and, in truth, would interfere with the principles of the militia. A person is not on such an occasion a real volunteer from choice. He must either follow the example set to him, or be looked upon with an inferior degree of respect, and be liable to the imputation of possessing less zeal than others; and (although not immediately) such considerations will weigh in the balance at a future period, when a person is deliberating whether he will or will not enter into a militia or any other volunteer corps. Upon these grounds I cannot look upon the voluntary service of militia regiments (however laudable on the part of the individuals) as a resource to which the country can look under its present deficiency of offensive force. Besides, it ought to be recollected that the great foundation of everything we can do offensively must rest on establishing a sentiment of perfect security at home. That would not be the case if the country was to conceive an idea that their militia force (which in truth is the whole of the regular force exclusive of the Guards) was to be sent out of the country. Unfortunately the Lords Lieutenant of counties, in place of aiding, discouraged the recruiting the supplemental militia into the regiments appropriated to receive them. If they had not done so, we should now have been on velvet with an offensive force adequate to any purpose that can be requisite; but that is over, and we must do the best we can without it; and it shall not be my fault if, with one expedition after another, the coast of France is allowed to sleep sound any one week during the summer. I hope more than one will soon be afloat.

“I suspect the judges are more to blame than juries when justice is not done. If they will be stout, and two-thirds of the jury was made sufficient for condemnation, matters would go on perfectly well.”

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798], May 31. Wimbledon.—“I send the enclosures for your confidential perusal. No. 1 is already gone; the other two I would not send without a concert with you, in case I should run counter to any assurances or expectations you may have held out to the Portuguese Government. If no such thing stands in the way of it, the strong bent of my mind is to take the King’s sanction, and carry my communication no further than Mr. Pitt, Lord Spencer, and you. If before coming to any general rendezvous, the enemy’s force should be scattered, as has been stated, in two or three different places in the Mediterranean, I am strongly impressed with a feeling that, by a sudden coup de main, some essential stroke may be struck.”

Enclosures not found.

HENRY DUNDAS to [W. PITT].

[1798], May 31. Wimbledon.—“I return the secret despatch which Lord Grenville has put into your hands. The observation you make comprehends the whole that can be stated at this time on that subject. There can be no doubt it would be very eligible to get the force alluded to, and I cannot conceive there can be any difficulty in combining it with the offensive operations you refer to, provided, as you observe, the force in question is locally situated so as to be able to act in concert with our force, and is not in the neighbourhood of other force to such an extent as that the movements of Waldeck's corps could be controlled by it. It does not occur to me that there can be any objection to Lord Grenville's going as minutely into the subject as he chooses with the gentleman who is come over; only guarding, which his own good sense will lead him to do, against conveying any idea that we have offensive operations in view; and giving to his interviews the turn that our having any such depended on the result of his conferences with the person come over. If it goes so far in treaty as to take the troops for any permanency into our possession, Lord Grenville will do well to have it understood that they may be employed in Jamaica, or the East Indies; I mean particularly the Cape. The reason why I mention particularly Jamaica, Lord Grenville and you will understand more accurately if you will call on John King to point out to you the correspondence which has lately passed between the Duke of Portland's Office and the Island of Jamaica, relative to a force to be maintained at the expense of the island of Jamaica in the event of their not being obliged to maintain any black troops; against which the Assembly of Jamaica have taken a most unreasonable, but a most inveterate prejudice. But it is impossible to reject the substitute they propose; and would certainly greatly facilitate the employment of such a body of foreign troops as those now in question."

NOTES ON THE CIVIL WAR IN IRELAND BY LORD AUCKLAND.

1798, May 31. [Dublin.]—"Sir James Duffe yesterday marched against the rebels on Blackmore Hill, near Blessington, in the county of Wicklow; they made off, leaving various articles behind them. They had burnt Lord Downshire's house near to Blessington.

"We hear accounts from Wexford of their murdering gentlemen, Protestant clergymen, and others; four or five families whom I knew personally have been massacred. Shocking as this is, it has at least contributed to draw off many Protestants who were before among the United Men.

"We have had to-day a very absurd debate; a motion of thanks to Sir James Duffe; a question of adjournment, opposed on the ground of moving for the orders of Government to Dundas; the adjournment carried 90 to 10.

"Throughout the North all is peace and quiet.

"Sir Edward Crosbie headed the rebels at Carlow. He is now being tried by a General Court Martial.

"A commission from Lord Edward Fitz Gerald has been found on a person taken up.

June 1st. "The rebels have burnt the Protestant charter school at Castlecomer.

"General Faucet on the twenty-ninth marched from Duncannon Fort with a company of the Meath regiment.

"The garrison of Wexford have evacuated the town, and is arrived safe at Duncannon Fort.

"Except to the town of Wexford, the communication is open to every part of the kingdom.

"The conduct of the main body of rebels seems to be very improvident; for Wexford lies up in a nook; the bay and river Slaney is on one side, the other open; the troops from Waterford and Duncannon Fort can attack them from the open side, and from Ross also; and they cannot retreat on the other side, because the troops marching from Wicklow, Carlow, and the camp near this town under General Loftus, will shut them up on that side—so that they are between two fires; and should they retreat south or west, they must be stopped by the sea.

"Sir W. W. Wynne landed yesterday, and this day, a number of recruits for his regiment, the terror of the rebels.

"No stir in the North except on the right side. The people called Orangemen keep the country in check, and will overpower the rebels should they stir. If we can rely on keeping down the North, I have no fear as to subduing the rest, and think that we shall be more quiet afterwards than we have been.

"It is a strange circumstance, but, in the midst of this, our revenue receipts are rising, and considerably."

THE EARL OF ELGIN TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, May 31. Berlin.—"After closing my official letter, I have received a copy, which I have the honour to forward, of the note given by the Prussian Plenipotentiaries to the French Ministers there [Rastadt], on the last demands of France."

Enclosure.

"Que le Roi avait appris, avec une peine infinie, les prétentions aussi nouvelles qu'inattendues formées par la République depuis les négociations sur les deux bords de la rive gauche et le principe des indemnités; comme la translation sur la rive droite des dettes des princes perdants sur la rive gauche; et des indemnités de la noblesse immédiate perdant sur cette même rive; la demande de toutes les îles du Rhin, ainsi que des différents points militaires et autres, en deçà du Rhin.

"Qu'entre autres, la demande de la démolition d'Ehrenbreitstein avait été très inattendue au Roi; que s[a] M[ajesté] se flattait toutefois que la France changerait encore de sentimens, et serait disposée elle-même à se désister de ses prétentions sur cette forteresse, si elle désirait sincèrement rester avec elle sur un pied d'amitié et de bonne intelligence; puisqu'exiger cette démolition, en conservant en même temps d'autres points militaires sur la rive droite, serait évidemment prendre une attitude offensive et menaçante envers le nord d'Allemagne, et nécessiter de la part de celle-ci, et de celle du Roi en particulier, une continuation non interrompue de mesures de précautions et de défense.

“Le Roi est certainement très éloigné d'entrer le moins du monde dans l'idée d'une nouvelle coalition contre la France. S[a] M[aje]sté aime à croire que la République n'annoncera pas des intentions alarmantes en prenant une contenance offensive.” French.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, June 3. Stowe.—“Your kindness in sending me constantly the earliest Irish information has relieved my mind from great uneasiness. I should think from the accounts of this day, that you may now look to an early and successful termination of this rising, as it is impossible for the rebellion to exist, locked up as it now is in the corner of Wexford. The news from the south is the most essential, for I take it for granted that the west is not in a state of preparation for rising; though, if the French Toulon fleet should escape Nelson and Jervis, I should look for them in Galway Bay, or rather in Blacksod, or perhaps Donegal Bay, with a view of communicating in great force with the northern rebels. I see plainly from your letter respecting this Toulon fleet that you are alive to it, and without looking too far into that millstone, I am content. But I shall not be so unless you urge, upon the spur of this occasion, the question of a Union, which never can be if it be not now. Your arguments respecting the militia are not to my mind conclusive; on the contrary I wish (for the public) that you had accepted my ideas; but individually, I feel glad to be relieved from the chance of going where I feel I ought to have gone, but where I must have gone with great sacrifice of personal feeling. But if you will not send militia, for God's sake send fencibles, of which you have 9 or 10 battalions in England; or Guards, or anything; but send something even if it is only for six weeks. I cannot, however, but urge again and again to you that, by declining the militia question, you make it utterly impossible to carry on your system of offensive operations on the coast of France, from which so much might be expected.

“As to your wish respecting the embarkation of our militia in water craft to serve on our coasts, there cannot exist a doubt or difficulty about it; and if upon my arrival at Chelmsford on Thursday (for I sleep in London on Wednesday) I find that you wish me to conduct such an offer, I will undertake it for you in any shape you please.”

LORD GRENVILLE TO MARQUIS CORNWALLIS [Master-General of the Ordnance].

1798, June 4. Cleveland Row.—“I send you a memorandum which I have received from the American Minister. Some of the points, particularly the latter, are matter of very serious deliberation; but with respect to the first articles, it seems to me that it would evidently be our interest to supply them, if the state of our own resources will allow it.

"I should be much obliged to you to look this paper over, and to let me know your sentiments upon it." Copy.

WILLIAM WICKHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, June 5. Duke Street.—"I have seen the Lord Chancellor on the subject of the intended Order in Council for preventing improper persons from coming into this country from Ireland. His Lordship is of opinion that no person ought to be permitted to land without a passport from the Lord Lieutenant or the Commanders of his Majesty's forces, and that the case of persons flying from the country to avoid the excesses of the rebels ought to be provided for by private instructions sent from the Treasury and the Secretary of State respectively, to the mayors and Custom House officers. Mr. Pitt is also of this opinion. There certainly will be some difficulty in drawing those private instructions so as that they shall seem to explain and not to limit the King's Order in Council; and yet there is so manifest an objection to making so large an exception in the Order itself, that I do not see how the thing can be done but in the way the Lord Chancellor points out.

"I do not think Mozer a likely man to be employed on the Continent with any advantage; but I wish, if possible, to throw the refusal on your Lordship, because I want the man here, and I should probably find him less disposed to serve me if he thought I had thwarted him in what appears now to be his great object. The truth is that here, where I have him under my eye, I can ascertain by other means the truth of all the information he gives me, which would not be the case were I to employ him at a distance.

"Bayard is about to return to the Continent to-morrow or Friday. I have, according to the instructions I received from your Lordship, long since settled with him that he is to receive a sum of 300*l.* as a gratuity and a consideration for all past services; and I shall desire Mr. Canning to pay him that sum with your Lordship's approbation. If your Lordship could employ him to give information only, I am certain you would get it better from him than from any one I know, and I daresay that about 600*l.* a year would be as much as he would require.

"The accounts from Ireland are good as far as they go. Colonel L'Estrange has defeated a large body of the rebels near Vinegar Hill, pursued them with great slaughter for several miles, and taken a position that cuts off the communication of the Wexford rebels with the county of Carlow. An attempt upon the town of Carlow has been defeated."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

[1798, June] 6. Wimbledon.—"I have considered the Portugal business. I really see no good, but the contrary, to arise out of a long discussion at Cabinet about what force we can allow for the support of Portugal. If it is a thing proper to be done at all, it ought not to be done in a shabby way. I shall prohibit the Cabinet cards from going out to-morrow, or, if they are gone, I will countermand them ; but I will call upon you to-morrow before 12 o'clock, and, after explaining to you what I think we can do without risk, I will then go to the Duke of York and settle the remainder with him, so that it need admit of no delay. I have explained my ideas to Mr. Pitt, who acquiesces perfectly in the result of my statements."

WILLIAM WICKHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, June 6. Whitehall.—"On my return home I found the enclosed. I fairly own that my suspicions of Dutheil gain ground every day. He brought me this very young man to my house in the month of February; told me the very history of his sister being arrested, with a long story, of which I did not believe one word, of the means he had employed to get both her and François discharged; and that this young man was sent over to negotiate the affair with him, and to procure the assurance that the sum of money which had been stipulated as the price of their discharge should be paid immediately. What satisfies me of his guilt is that I am certain that he was, at that very moment, acquainted with François's treachery; and that he denied it, though I pressed him strongly on that subject, as well as on some others on which he attempted to deceive me.

"And yet what can be done with this man, master as he is of every secret? It was only yesterday that Bayard, the writer of the enclosed, told me that he had communicated to him his intention of returning to France.

"Does your Lordship see any objection to my sending for him, and questioning him in a natural way about this young man? I sent over by him one hundred pounds to General Badouville in the Temple, which Sir S. Smith tells me he is persuaded he never received. The man is all suspicion, all chair vire; and yet by confining my questions and my anger to the supposed non-payment of the money, I think I could learn something from him, without directing his suspicion to the real point.

"The Abbé de Villefort, who is coming over, is his great agent, and most confidential friend. I shall, therefore, for that reason, as well as for many others, be very glad to send him out of the way.

"If anything really serious should come out against Dutheil, there would be no other mode of meeting him than that of confining him under the new Bill."

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798, June 1-10. Downing Street.]—"You have probably heard the agreeable news that Buonaparte's expedition sailed from Toulon the nineteenth of May, with twelve sail of the line and eight frigates. No mention of the amount of land force, or the destination. I cannot but think that some good event must already have happened, which this west wind, I hope is, bringing to us. In the mean time we must redouble diligence to make use of the few weeks left before his reaching Ireland (if he ever comes). There are one or two leading points, on which I should like much to have an hour's conversation with you, if you could conveniently call here any time this evening."

SIR JAMES CRAUFURD to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, June 8. Hamburg.—"I had yesterday the honour of receiving your Lordship's private letter of the 1st instant, announcing your ready compliance with my request respecting what I may write from hence on the subject of individuals, for which I return you my best thanks.

"Your Lordship has been pleased to express much more satisfaction than I feel at the way in which I have begun here. Not that any efforts on my part have been wanting, but your Lordship, I am sure, must be sensible that, where all the previous arrangements are to be made, some time must elapse before things can be put in a proper train; and, even with the utmost activity, before much benefit can be derived from one's exertions.

"No means that I can devise shall be unemploy'd for the purpose of tracing out the iniquitous machinations of our disaffected subjects, and their co-operators. I am in hopes of establishing a regular correspondence with Holland, and of finding some intelligent agents who may be sent at no great expense into that country. I am not altogether without hopes of an occasional correspondence with France likewise, but hitherto my progress has not answered to my, perhaps unreasonable, anxiety.

"Mr. Hanbury lately received a packet from an unknown quarter containing a book which he was desired to forward to the Duke of Portland, and at the same time to mention to His Grace that, upon destroying the binding of the book, he would therein find a letter. Mr. Hanbury made up the packet for the Duke and sent it to me, begging I would forward it by the first safe opportunity. I accordingly sent it this morning to Cuxhaven by a messenger who went through this place from Berlin.

"I think it necessary to mention this circumstance to your Lordship to prevent the possibility of any misconception in case it should have otherwise reached you; to prevent I mean the possibility of your imagining that I have any correspondence with any other member of administration than yourself."

LORD ROBERT FITZGERALD to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, June 9. Copenhagen.—"The unfortunate circumstances which have lately taken place in my family, and the distress of mind under which we must all still labour for some time, are the motives which now induce me to trouble your Lordship with these lines, in order to make a request which the slightest appeal to your own feelings will, I am sure, justify.

"It is fortunate for me that affairs, at present, in this country are not of that consequence or importance as to require any very particular attention from me, as I feel myself wholly incapable of bestowing much thought upon them, however great and unceasing may be my zeal in the service of his Majesty or the common cause; and, as it is possible, though I trust, through the mercy of Providence, not probable, that the approaching trials in Ireland may still involve us in much deeper calamity and anguish of soul, and, consequently, render me still less capable of serving the King usefully in this post, I wish to have his Majesty's sanction to quit it on the first notice which I may receive from my family of an unhappy termination to those trials, on which so great a share of our future happiness and enjoyment of life depends.

"I am, I trust, sufficiently known to your Lordship for you to be certain that I shall make no improper use of the discretionary power to quit my post, which I here solicit; and so distant is it from my wish to relinquish it, on a slight pretext, at a time when I think every man is bound by all that he holds honourable to stand by it, wherever it may be, as long as he thinks he may be useful to his country, that I wish the leave of absence which his Majesty in his bounty may think proper to grant me, to be conditionally restricted to the single event of a confirmation of our fears, and of the more unhappy fortune of our near and much beloved relation who now suffers in confinement."

[LORD AUCKLAND] to [LORD GRENVILLE.]

[1798,] June 9.—"I have a private letter from Cooke written a few hours after the departure of the last messenger, that is about ten or eleven at night.

"It contains nothing material or new; laments the retreat of General Loftus as leaving the county of Wicklow open to the rebels in Wexford. Nothing from General Eustace; mentions the death of Captain Duncan of the Artillery, and adds that General Champagné was to attack the rebels in the Bog of Allen on the sixth."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, June 10. Chelmsford.—"Again and again I press the immediate embarkation of 10,000 men of all sorts for Ireland; for depend upon it that this success will encourage risings in other parts to assist this centre of the revolt in Wexford; and I very much fear that the next accounts will show you a systematic co-operation in the West and South West; and unless you show to a demonstration that your means are equal to the object, believe me you will lose your force in detail. Again I offer my regiment, having consulted my officers, and being confident that the men will be as zealous as their officers to present a petition to the King, praying that a Bill may be proposed to enable us to serve for six months in Ireland. Indeed the crisis is approaching very fast, and the arguments which you used, though unanswerable in common times, do not apply to a moment so very serious. Pray again consider this, for indeed I wish to be useful. I do not understand why you send the Guards to Portsmouth, for it is certain that by the canals you could have deposited them at Liverpool on the fifth day, and the run from thence to Wexford is very short, and not liable to any of the risks which you will run by sending them round the land. Wexford is very open to attack from the sea; for the tide leaves a very hard dry sand of many miles in length, and the effect of a landing there in force would be very decisive upon the rebels, who would be driven out of the town before they had time to know the attacking force, particularly if covered by gun-boats and small frigates. I know that these points are not in your immediate department, but I cannot avoid saying all that occurs to me. The private accounts from Ireland of the horrors in the county of Wicklow are disastrous in the extreme; but as I collect from them that every one is flying from thence to Wales, I cannot but urge the propriety of watching by one or two very active military officers the coasts of Wales, for in that importation there will be much of a very doubtful nature. If you should persist in resisting my offer, I am still at your orders (if you think I can be of the smallest use) to assist you by my local knowledge of Ireland, or in any other way."

COUNT LOUIS C. COBENZL to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, June 10. Rastadt.—"Je viens de recevoir la lettre dont votre Excellence m'a honoré le 29 du mois passé. Infiniment sensible à tout ce qu'elle veut bien me dire d'obligeant, je me tiens très heureux de ce que les nouvelles fonctions que sa Majesté l'Empereur a daigné me confier, me mettront à même d'être l'interprète de ses sentiments envers sa Majesté Britannique. Il ne tiendra certainement pas à moi que le concert intime, et la parfaite union, toujours si analogue aux vrais intérêts de nos Cours, mais plus nécessaire que jamais dans les dangers qui menacent l'Europe, ne soient consolidés de la manière la plus indissoluble. C'est le vœu de l'Empereur, qui ne laissera rien désirer de ce qui peut contribuer à un but aussi salutaire. Rien ne me sera plus flatteur que la confiance que, sous ce rapport, je pourrai obtenir d'un ministre aussi éclairé que votre Excellence." French.

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, June 10. Wotton.—"In the present very critical times every communication is highly interesting to me, and the line which I received from you this morning was doubly so, from my anxiety in having just before heard that Watkin was named in the Courier as being wounded ; the slight contusion of which you speak is certainly not to be regretted, and I do confidently trust that before this reaches you, you will already have had official accounts of some such decisive action as that which you now describe only as a very probable report. All that I hear at this distance of the speed and alacrity with which you are supplying new reinforcements, seems to me to be very creditable to Government, and I take for granted it has not been forgotten to collect something of the naval and volunteer force on the Flintshire coast, for which, as I recollect to have told you, very cheerful offers were made in that country in any shape in which Government would direct it; to Ireland this has always seemed to me a very important object in the present state of things, and even still I conceive it worth attending to, as any force in the neighbourhood of Chester, Park Gate, and Liverpool could not but be highly useful for all military communications between England and Ireland. Major Williams would do best for the Flintshire coast, and, in Watkin's absence, would be assisted by Sir Foster Cunliffe, who is an active zealous man, and was for several years a resident in the city of Chester; to the same purpose Lord Belgrave might quickly make himself useful by going down there. I mention these suggestions loosely, but I daresay they have before now been acted upon, and measures are probably taken by you to draw part of what you can collect towards that coast, as the inconvenience and risk of so long a passage as that from Portsmouth to Dublin is too obvious to escape notice. I do not know to what extent Lord Egremont has offered his services, but if it is true that he has offered to go in person to Ireland, I cannot help thinking that much advantage may be made by his doing so. I do not mean in respect to his Sussex yeomanry; but if he could be persuaded to set the example to our great absentees to go over and personally exert themselves in that country, it seems to me not only that it would give new force and vigour there, but that it would be attended with very beneficial consequences indeed if Ireland saw its English proprietors ready and willing to share the danger of that country, as well as to profit from the rents of it. The pressure of this moment may rouse them to a proper feeling upon this subject, which seems to me an important one, and I know nobody more likely than Lord Egremont, more proper to take the lead, and to influence by his doing so the conduct of others."

WILLIAM WICKHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

Secret.

1798, June 11. Whitehall.—“The official despatches from the Lord Lieutenant, of the eighth instant, confirm the defeat of the rebels at Ross with great slaughter on the fifth, after a most desperate attack on their part. Lord Mountjoye is the only officer named as having fallen on the side of the King's troops. There is no official return of killed and wounded, but their loss is stated to have been inconsiderable.

“The rebels had several ship guns with them, but it does not appear that they had any other artillery.

“Bagnal Hervey, and Keogh who lately left Paris, commanded them.”

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798,] June 11. Downing Street.—“I am just come to town, chiefly for the purpose of seeing Lord Cornwallis in consequence of a letter I received yesterday from Lord Camden, pressing his coming either as Commander-in-Chief or Lord Lieutenant. I sent it to Dundas, whom I expect every moment, and who has had a very satisfactory conversation yesterday with Lord Cornwallis.

“Probably I shall be better able to let you know the result if you can contrive to call in the evening.

“I shall not go out of town till to-morrow. I will give you back your letters when we meet. I keep them now to show them to Dundas.”

LORD ROBERT FITZGERALD to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, June 11. Copenhagen.—“I had the honour to write to your Lordship on the ninth instant, stating my wish to obtain a discretionary power to leave this country for a while on the deprecated event of an unfortunate issue to the approaching trial of my brother Edward; but my anxiety of mind increasing with the miserable state of suspense in which I live with regard to the ultimate fate of that most beloved and unhappy relation, I have this day earnestly to solicit of your Lordship to obtain of his Majesty’s gracious favour the permission for me to return home, on leave of absence, by the first opportunity, if I do not find, in the course of a little time, that alleviation to my pain which may enable me to attend better to the duties of my station than, under the present distressful circumstances, I am capable of doing with advantage to the service of the King.

Postscript. “There is nothing new in this part of the world, excepting that the arrival of ten sail of the line of Russian men of war, and three frigates, is daily expected in the Sound on their way to England. The Russian Minister, M. de Kascheleff, has received the official notification of their approaching departure, and has been so good as to send me notice of the same.”

LORD AUCKLAND to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798,] June 12.—“I have received a letter of the ninth this morning from Dublin. It contains the account of ‘an insurrection in various parts of Antrim; we had lost some men at Antrim, but, on the whole, had been very successful. Poor Lord O’Neil is dangerously wounded. We have good hopes for the North, where we have very many loyal and well armed.

“The New Ross battle was a great one. The rebels’ loss in killed and wounded was not less than 4,000. General Johnson behaved most gallantly.

“We are moving on in good force upon Wexford.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, June 12. Chelmsford.—“Your bulletin was the more interesting as a check in the arrangement for contracting this rebellion within the narrow district which it now occupies must have been of the most serious consequences. I should hope that there is now no doubt but that the very essential post of New Ross will be maintained till your Waterford force arrives, and are moved up by water to it. But I am very anxious that troops should be sent to attack Wexford from the sea, as it is very accessible from that quarter, and a few gunboats or sliding-keel sloops would effectually protect and secure such an operation, which, if successful, would be conclusive. I again return to my old cry, militia; and only observe upon your last letter that I hope you will be successful in converting your comrades, notwithstanding the difficulties (which I am perfectly aware of) from colonels who will not go, and from Lords Lieutenants of the sort you describe. I have no vanity to gratify in making the offer to go to Ireland and shall therefore be content to do it at any time and in any mode that may be pointed out as most likely to serve your purpose; but I trust that, as I well know that my officers and men would not bear that any other corps should precede them in this offer, you will not keep me back till we play second or perhaps tenth fiddle in such a concert. I am well aware that nothing can be done but by a new Bill; but as volenti non fit injuria, I conceive that the best mode of introducing a Bill for that purpose, under any limitations, would be by stating to Parliament the petition of certain corps that they might be employed in Ireland. However on all this I wait the notification of your wishes, and mean to give you the strongest proof of my confidence in you by trusting the matter to you.

“I am very happy to hear that Lord Cornwallis’s mission is resolved, and I sincerely hope that Pelham will return with him, because, unaffectedly, I think that my sins would be much visited upon my brother Tom; and because, having surmised from various circumstances that such a thing was very much in the wishes of Government, I will fairly own that I think the situation very much below his calibre and time of life; and I had arranged in my mind the intention of suggesting to you (in the contingency of Lord Cornwallis’s mission to Ireland) the advantage of sending (as in the case of Lord Essex) a civil Lord Deputy to act under a military Lord Lieutenant. I do not enter into the details of those advantages, for they must be obvious to you; and of all persons I know my brother is most fit for such a situation, and the precedents always place commoners in that commission. Pray ponder well upon this, which will be recommended to you by the opportunity it presents of bringing up poor Tom’s lee-way, independent of the thousand other advantages from it.

“As your troopships are now all gone to Ireland, pray suggest the immediate necessity of sending to Bristol and Liverpool to secure some means of embarking troops from those ports, which must be your two principal points in case you should at last do what I always contend you ought to have done at first. They are the only two ports that can give an immediate supply of large ships, and their position, as with respect to Ireland, and to the stations of the English militia, particularly recommend them.

“Of your Irish leaders, Keogh is the only one whom I know personally ; you have not described Harvey, but I conclude him to be one of the Harveys of Wexford. Bagnell is too common a name for me to ascertain the man from the surname ; but I suspect him to be a Bagwell (I think James), a cousin of Beauchamp Bagwell, and living on the borders of the county Carlow. Pray continue to feed my impatience with Irish bulletins.”

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798, June 12.]—“I have seen Lord Cornwallis, who is ready to go exactly in the way one should wish, as Lord Lieutenant.

“He wishes Pelham, if well enough ; and if not, is most anxious for your brother.”

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, June 13. Aylesbury.—“Your note of this day’s post was a very welcome relief from the anxiety which had been produced by your letter of the preceding day, but it is not from personal motives, strong as they are, so much as from public motives, that I rejoice in Pelham’s continuation in office in Ireland ; to me it seems of very considerable importance that a continuance of government should be secured in this new arrangement, and I see by your note that my ideas upon this subject extend beyond the line which you have adopted, and apply as much to Lord Camden as they do to the secretary. By the removal of Lord Camden some little shake is given to the government which actually exists there, and great inconvenience is incurred by the succession of new claims which always takes place upon the succession of a new Lord Lieutenant ; added to this it must be considered that Lord Cornwallis will, for the present, be so much called upon in his military capacity in Ireland, that he will have few if any means of attending to all the civil arrangements, which it is important to keep in the hands of English Government in Ireland, but which he will be obliged to leave entirely to the discretion of the Irish Cabinet ; all this variety of embarrassment might, as it appears to me, be most effectually assisted by making Lord Camden and Lord Cornwallis Lord Deputies, instead of recalling Lord Camden and replacing him by Lord Cornwallis ; nor am I aware of any difficulty in making any such arrangement, either of delicacy to the parties themselves, or of any inconvenience which is likely to result from this joint government. Lord Cornwallis would in this shape add to the authority of Commander-in-Chief all that power which is generally at variance with the Lord Lieutenant, and the civil arrangement of the country would go on in the same track, and be retained to the English Cabinet much more effectually than it can be, if by being nominally given to Lord Cornwallis it really falls into the hands of the Irish Cabinet; ultimately too, when the rebellion is suppressed, the civil counsels of Lord Cornwallis will afford the opportunity of any new shape, about which Lord Camden alone might feel hampered, but which the two Lord Deputies might with greater facility adopt; a lesser circumstance, but still of some value, is, the novelty of this appointment, which engaging something more of public attention, would perhaps have good effect in Ireland by holding out the prospect of some great and general plan of arrangement."

MEMORANDUM by LORD GRENVILLE.

"Infantry in Great Britain, June 18, exclusive of Fencibles.

Guards	-	-	-	-	-	4500
Regt. Infantry	-	-	-	-	-	4882
Of these only 1 regiment complete	-	-	-	-	-	900
Remains only	-	-	-	-	-	3982

"Which are divided among fourteen regiments, and consist (to the amount of 1500) of recruits from the . . . militia, and many of the remainder, raw recruits."

Endorsed :—June 18, 1798.

"This is the statement on which I asserted in the House of Lords that, without explaining particulars, the amount of regular infantry in this country was not sufficient to furnish a further detachment of 12,000 men to Ireland, or even to allow of sending any more reinforcements there (except by means of the militia), without the greatest inconvenience to the public service, and totally cramping our means of acting, in any case, on the enemy's coast, to destroy preparations."

SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, June 18. Naples.—"Having so good an opportunity, I cannot resist the pleasure of sending to your Lordship the enclosed copy of a most interesting letter, for the perusal of your Lordship and of your select friends."

Enclosure.

THE QUEEN OF NAPLES to LADY HAMILTON.

1798, June 11.—"Je désire savoir comment va votre santé après toutes les agitations de la journée d'hier, et de cette affreuse incendie. J'ai été, on ne peut pas plus, touché de la lettre, que vous avez eue la complaisance de me faire traduire, du respectable et brave amiral; oui, c'est à la seule venue de la valeureuse escadre Angloise dans la Méditerranée que nous devons le départ de l'escadre Républicaine sans commettre de violences sur nos territoires; mais cette même escadre peut retourner; on en prépare une seconde en toute hâte à Toulon qui sera, dit-on, escorté par leurs amis et alliés, dont le roi et moi rougissons de prononcer le nom, comme alliés de ces monstres. Nos dangers sont donc bien éloignés d'être passés; les lettres mêmes de hier annoncent la marche hâtée d'un nombre de vingt-cinq milles hommes qui vient en Italie, partie de la Suisse, partie de la France; les Républiques leurs esclaves, Cisalpines et Romaines, ont eu l'ordre de s'armer; toutes ces nouvelles indiquent mauvaise intention contre nous, et ayant en mer des forces si considérables, on n'est jamais sur, car la foi de leurs promesses, écrits, assurances, ou traités, n'a aucune valeur, l'expérience ayant trop prouvé ce qu'ils sont, et ce qu'on peut leur croire. Je vous prie donc par l'amitié que vous m'avez toujours témoignée, et par la confiance qui m'attache si sincèrement à votre grande et respectable nation, d'assurer Lord St. Vincent de notre estime, confiance, comme de notre éternelle reconnaissance pour la promptitude avec laquelle il est accouru à notre défense, à laquelle j'attribue le départ de l'escadre son ennemie, sans commettre vers nous d'hostilités; et auxquelles je désire bien sincèrement que pas un de leurs batimens ne revoie plus les mers, mais qu'ils subissent le sort que je leur souhaite, et que les hommes comme les élémens et toute la nature se combine à les détruire pour le bien de l'humanité. Je vous prie de dire au digne et attaché chevalier votre époux, qu'il veuille bien représenter à sa Cour, nation, comme au valeureux amiral, que si dans ce moment même nous ne pouvons point suivre ce que notre coeur nous inspire, en ouvrant tous les ports à l'escadre entière, remplissant les différentes demandes, qui produiroit une guerre immédiate et ouverte, ce n'est que l'effet de la nécessité, et prudence, devant nous concerter de commun avec les puissances de terre, nommément l'Empereur; et c'est à quoi on travaille avec suite et chaleur pour, s'il étoit possible par un sincère concert général, tomber sur les monstres, et détruire une hidre qui, à la longue, nous dévorera tous; mais que jusque à ce concert arrangé, et qui nous permette de leur déclarer et agir selon nos sentimens, nous devons agir avec circonspection; que, malgré cela, toutes les facilités, soit en admettant dans des ports rapprochés les batimens, soit en rafraichissemens, vivres, secours, nouvelles, tout sera fourni, donné avec plaisir et promptitude, nos sentimens étant tous dévoués à votre brave nation; et que nous n'attendons que la réussite des négociations que nous poussons avec une vigueur, et un sentiment que nous ne retrouvons point dans les autres, qui nous fera suivre et d'abord en remplissant toutes les conditions demandées, que notre coeur approuve; et qu'une alliance bien concertée nous unisse comme nos coeurs et sentimens le sont, et ont toujours été, par des liens et intérêts réciproques. Je recommande cette lettre à votre discrétion et prudence; elle pourroit infiniment me compromettre: ce n'est que le pays et l'état que je crains d'entraîner en malheur, en avouant aussi hautement ma haine, et l'exécration que mon coeur ressent pour eux; car pour moi personnellement je me fais gloire de l'avouer hautement, et le prouver en toute occasion. Je vous prie donc que cela reste entre nous; mais, surtout, ne manquer aucune occasion d'assurer votre brave respectable nation et l'amiral que le roi mon époux, son fils, mes futurs petits enfans nourissons tous les mêmes sentimens d'amitié, confiance, reconnoissance à vous tous, et que ces sentimens dureront autant que ma vie."

SIR JAMES CRAUFURD to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, June 26. Hamburg.—"In my dispatch, No. 24 of this date, I have the honour of enclosing to your Lordship some notes, which have been put into my hands by a person whom I employ to watch the motions of the Jacobins here. They contain a great deal of stuff, as most of these papers do, but they are the beginning of a plan which may lead to interesting discoveries. The person in question is known for his ability in this way. I have erased one passage to the following effect, or rather in the following words, thinking that it might be more agreeable to your Lordship to receive this information in a private letter, than that it should appear in an official one; 'Les espions d'Angleterre en France sont presque tous connus du Directoire. On croit qu'il est parvenu à cette connoissance par le moyen de deux domestiques François qui sont chez Lord Grenville. Ceux-ci prennent note de toutes les personnes qui vont chez ce Lord, et l'envoient en France.'

"This is very likely wholly without foundation, but your Lordship knows how much false information one is exposed to. And even were it true, it does not appear that it would lead to the knowledge of almost all the English spies in France."

LORD ROBERT FITZGERALD to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, June 26. Copenhagen.—"The fatal catastrophe which has closed the lamentable scene of our distress, is not of a nature to restore me to that peace of mind which is necessary in a situation abroad, where few can join in sympathy of pain with me, and where it is one of my principal duties, and one difficult to be dispensed with among strangers, to see and mix with society and the world. I am not, indeed, equal to that task, and I have most earnestly in consequence to entreat your Lordship to grant me leave to visit my mother and family in England, who have much need of all the comfort that is to be derived from seeing so near a relation as myself to the lost and much beloved object of all their affections.

"There is, it is true, nobody here with whom I can leave the business; but if such a person should be sent out by your Lordship, he may be assured to find every paper marked with its proper label to his hand that he may want, and these I shall deposit under lock and key, with my seal affixed to them, in the hands of the Russian Minister, a man of the first character and my particular friend; if he is prevented from coming out immediately to receive them from myself.

"To induce your Lordship to comply with my earnest solicitations I need not add that the agent for my estate in Ireland has been inhumanly murdered by the insurgents in the county of Kildare, and that I wish much to consult my brother Leinster, who is in London, respecting the appointment of another."

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, July 1. Berlin.—“ M. Garlike ayant eu la bonté de m'informer qu'il expédioit un courrier à Votre Excellence, je prends la liberté d'en profiter pour m'expliquer plus ouvertement sur des causes générales dont elle a sûrement connoissance, mais auxquelles j'ajouterai peut-être quelque éclaircissement. C'est sûrement un grand problème pour ceux qui observent le danger évident qui menace tous les trônes, que de voir un monarque se conduire comme si ce danger lui étoit inconnu, et c'est ce problème que je vais tâcher de résoudre.

“ Le moyen qu'on employe pour tenir le jeune monarque dans l'ignorance des choses qu'il lui importeroit si fort de bien considérer, c'est la disposition qu'on lui a reconnue à garder le secret de ses pensées ; disposition qu'il a manifestée fortement comme Prince royal, et à laquelle on a adroitement applaudi comme marque d'un grand caractère, en même temps qu'on entreprenoit de diriger ses idées qu'il ne paroisoit pas disposé à se former lui-même par l'application.

“ Voilà sur quoi l'on a bâti avec habilité, et ce qui a donné aux meneurs la certitude qu'il ne les pénétreroit pas. Ils n'ont pas voulu avoir l'apparence de le tellement environner qu'il ne pût entendre qu'eux ; mais ils savoient bien qu'il n'aime pas les longues conversations politiques ; et jugeant quelles seroient les choses qu'on représenteroit d'abord à sa Majesté dans les momens qu'on pourroit saisir, ils les lui ont exposées eux-mêmes avec de grands détails ; de sorte qu'avec quelque force, par exemple, qu'on peigne le système des meneurs de la nation François, leur dessein de renverser les trônes, l'illusion de traiter avec eux, et la nécessité qu'il y a pour les souverains de se réunir pour se garantir mutuellement, on ne dit rien à sa Majesté à quoi elle n'acquiesce, et n'ajoute même des preuves par les faits. Mais quand on vient à en tirer la conséquence qu'il faut donc se réunir, ‘ Vous avez raison (répond sa Majesté) mais vous ne voyez pas tout ’ ; et comme il s'arrête alors sans rien ajouter, on ne peut jamais savoir à quoi il seroit nécessaire d'en venir pour le convaincre, ni à quel point même les espérances dont on le berce pour sa propre sûreté lui ferment les yeux sur les conséquences du danger des autres. Car il est malheureusement une autre cause générale qui influe sur tout, et qui certifie ce qui a été dit dès longtemps par les vrais philosophes, que la religion révélée seule peut faire porter les vues du devoir sur la société entière, et que la prétendu religion naturelle laisse à l'égoïsme toute sa force. On croit devoir songer à soi sans s'embarrasser des autres ; on ne se fait donc pas une étude de leur intérêt, et le cercle d'attention se rétrécit tellement qu'on perd même l'habitude d'examiner comment l'intérêt des autres peut se lier au sien propre ; de sorte que dans les occasions urgentes, à moins que ce motif du devoir ne soit remplacé par beaucoup d'attention et de génie, on est à la merci de ceux à qui il convient de défigurer ce côté du tableau. Tels sont les hommes avec qui le Roi vit le plus familièrement ; on les trompe, et ils contribuent à entretenir chez lui l'illusion ; et cette barrière est invincible par le secret que fait le Roi de ses motifs aux personnes bien intentionnées, qui seroient résolues de le détromper, s'il leur en fournissoit les moyens en leur parlant ouvertement.

“ Quel moyen de surmonter un tel obstacle ! Nous n'avons pu en concevoir d'autre, M. de Stamford et moi, que la communication immédiate de souverain à souverain, non sur les détails, mais sur les principes, tels que les causes du danger commun, et la nécessité indispensable d'y pourvoir en commun. C'est pour cela que nous réitérâmes nos efforts auprès de Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick tandis qu'il étoit ici, en lui présentant ce motif comme devant enfin le déterminer à agir directement ; et c'est aussi la raison de ce que je vais avoir l'honneur d'ajouter.

“ Votre Excellence a eu la bonté de me faire accuser par M. Hammond la réception des lettres que j'ai eu l'honneur de lui écrire les 4, 7, 12, et 15 May ; depuis j'ai eu encore l'honneur de lui écrire le 29, et de l'informer que, pendant l'absence du Roi et de M. de Stamford, je me proposois de faire une tournée d'observations d'histoire naturelle. Je pris Dresde pour le commencement de ma route, et je m'y procurai diverses introductions ; entr'autres auprès de M. le Baron de Gultsmidt par M. le Comte Charles de Brühl, et de M. Elliot par my Lord Elgin.

“ M. Elliot m'ayant reçu d'une manière très obligeante, je lui communiquai mon dessein de tâcher de m'approcher de s'a[ltesse] Electorale, à quoi il eut la bonté de prendre intérêt, en m'assistant de son influence, et m'instruisant des dispositions de cette Cour pour que je pusse m'y diriger. J'eus l'honneur de voir d'abord M. de Gultschmidt, qui, par la connoissance de mes ouvrages, me fit l'honneur de me recevoir très cordialement, m'assurant que j'étois connu de la même manière par l'Electeur. J'eus ensuite l'honneur de voir M. le Comte de Loof et M. le Comte de Marcolini ; et ce dernier me fit l'honneur de me mener à Pilnitz pour m'y présenter à s'a[ltesse] E[lectorale] qui avoit bien voulu m'y recevoir comme homme de lettres, instruit cependant par M. Gutschmidt que je désirois beaucoup d'avoir le bonheur de l'entretenir sur l'état de l'Europe, dont il m'avoit trouvé bien instruit dans notre conversation.

“ Je ne perdis pas du temps à peindre cet état, sachant par les deux ministres et par M. Elliot que s'a[ltesse] E[lectorale] en étoit pénétrée ; mais, je m'attachai aux obstacles qu'éprouvoit à Berlin la réunion si importante, et aux vains efforts que feroient des simples particuliers pour les surmonter, si des souverains éclairés ne travailloient directement à dissiper les fausses lueurs dont étoit environné celui dont dependoit si fort le salut de l'Europe.

“ S'a[ltesse] é[lectorale] eut la bonté de m'écouter avec beaucoup d'attention, et comme elle étoit informée de la démarche de Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange, j'eus l'honneur de lui apprendre le départ de M. de Stamford pour Vienne, et ses vues, ce qui lui fit beaucoup de plaisir ; et en général, s'a[ltesse] é[lectorale] manifesta tous les sentimens d'un prince, nonseulement très instruit, mais vertueux et ferme.

“ M. de Thugut ayant témoigné à M. de Stamford qu'il souhaitoit, qu'à son passage à Dresde, il s'y entretint avec les Ministres, il y a présenté le même tableau que moi avec de nouveaux détails, et a pressé de même la nécessité de l'intervention des souverains eux-mêmes, comme s'agissant d'un nouvel état de choses qui les intéresse tous de la même manière; et nous ne sommes pas sans espérance que s'a[ltesse] é[lectorale] ne s'y détermine.

“ Je ne dois pas entrer dans des détails sur le voyage de M. de Stamford, puisque votre Excellence aura eu sans doute déjà communication par Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange d'un premier rapport qu'il a eu l'honneur de lui faire de Vienne, et l'aura de celui qui part par ce courrier; outre qu'il en a communiqué toutes les circonstances à Sir Morton Eden, à my Lord Elgin, et enfin jusqu' à Dresde à M. Garlike. Votre Excellence l'y aura vu représenter à l'Empereur combien il importeroit que s[a] M[ajesté] continuât d'écrire elle-même au Roi de Prusse, se fondant sur le motif que j'ai eu l'honneur d'exposer ci-dessus.

“ Mais il y a une circonstance très fâcheuse, dont M. de Stamford n'a pas fait mention dans ses rapports; c'est que M. de Cobenzel, qui conserve du crédit, ne marche pas entièrement de concert avec M. de Thugut; que malgré ce que doivent lui faire comprendre les suites de sa négociation de Campo Formio, il ne cesse point de chercher à négocier avec les François, ayant pour cela des conférences à Selze avec Neuchateau; ce dont on se sert ici pour ôter au Roi toute confiance en la Cour de Vienne; sous prétexte qu'on ne sait point lequel des deux ministres l'emportera dans l'esprit de l'Empereur, et qu'il pourroit y avoir là une nouvelle paix, tandis qu'on sollicite ici des déclarations plus ou moins hostiles. Tout cela s'aplaniroit avec de la bonne intention, en se demandant mutuellement explication de ce qui offusque; c'est ce que je disois à M. de H[augwitz]; mais comme cela sert beaucoup son plan de ne pas remuer, il ne le fera pas; comme, d'un autre côté, il y a peu d'apparence que M. de Cobenzel veuille cesser de négocier, tandis qu'on ne doute pas qu'il n'y ait des négociations ici.

“ Voilà Siéyès qui, dit-on, renouvelle la réquisition de dédormager les Princes de la rive gauche du Rhin, par les sécularisations sur la rive droite; système infernal, qui enfonceroit de toute manière le poignard dans ce qui reste de l'Empire. J'ai sollicité M. le Chamb[ellan] de Reck, qui sent tout l'odieux et l'insidieux de cette réquisition, d'en faire usage pour frapper l'esprit du Roi.

“ M. de Stamford, dont l'état après ce voyage exige quelques précautions, se propose après l'hommage de partir pour quelque bains; d'autant plus qu'il trouve sa commission spéciale terminée, et que sans un renouvellement par de nouvelles instructions de Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange, il n'a plus de motif de rester ici. C'est ce qu'il m'a chargé d'avoir l'honneur de représenter de sa part à votre Excellence, pour qu'elle en juge suivant sa sagesse. Il ne met point en balance son besoin de repos dans l'état de sa santé, et s'il étoit trouvé utile à quelque chose, il s'y employeroit de tout son pouvoir.

“En attendant comme, malgré l'expérience du passé à l'égard des efforts qu'on peut attendre de la part de Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswick, c'est pourtant sur lui que se tournent toujours les regards pour le moment où ses propres illusions sur le Ministre d'ici viendroient à cesser, il est important de conserver les relations avec s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime]. C'est pour quoi, comme elle a temoigné que son jugement final de ce Ministre dépendroit de sa marche dans la négociation, M. le Comte de Panin, le plus ferme et le plus éclairé des négociateurs, sera en correspondance avec M. de Stamford, par le désir de s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] et pour son instruction.

“Quant à moi, qui me vois bien plus inutile, je ne crois pas cependant devoir quitter Berlin avant que de connoître les intentions de votre Excellence à cet égard. Je puis y rester sans conséquence jusqu'alors, et pour tout le temps nécessaire, parcequ'on connoît bien mes relations avec les naturalistes et leur but. Mais, dès que mon séjour ici n'auroit plus d'autre utilité, j'irois me vouer tout entier aux autres fonctions pour lesquelles notre auguste monarque, vrai Défenseur de la Foi, a daigné m'honorer de sa confiance. Car je sens plus que jamais que si la Révélation ne redevient pas la règle des hommes, quelque effort qu'on fasse d'ailleurs, le renversement de la société qui n'a jamais reposé que sur elle est inévitable.

“J'ai l'honneur d'envoyer à votre Excellence copie d'une lettre de la même personne dont elle a déjà eu une sur l'étrange expédition de Toulon, à l'égard de laquelle tous les détails sûrs peuvent avoir quelque utilité; et quoique votre Excellence reçoive bien sûrement toutes les intelligences de la Suisse; comme quelques pièces peuvent cependant échapper, je prends la liberté d'en joindre une bien caractéristique de l'état où se trouve ce pauvre pays.

“M. de Stamford a engagé M. l'Avoyer Steiguer à venir ici. J'ai eu l'honneur de connoître autrefois ce vénérable magistrat, et nous ferons tout ce qui dépendra de nous, M. de Stamford et moi, pour diriger ses informations au Roi sur les objets qui pourroient le plus ébranler sa sécurité.”

One Enclosure.

Enclosure.

1798, May 13, on board the Tonnant, Toulon.—“Avant de partir, mon vertueux ami, je viens vous dire adieu, et vous demander quelque intérêt pour une caravane savante destinée à parcourir l'Égypte, l'Arabie, la Perse, et les Indes, pour y reporter les lumières de la philosophie et de toutes les connoissances humaines, lesquelles se sont bien accrues depuis qu'elles sont sorties de ces mêmes contrées, où elles ont pris naissance pour venir en Europe. Mais notre mission ne ressemble pas à celle des anciens philosophes, qui, après avoir étudié à Héliopolis ou Thèbes, revenoient dans leur patrie répandre les connoissances qu'ils avoient acquises, et n'employoient d'autre moyen que celui de l'éloquence. Si nous avons aussi des moyens de séduction et de persuasion, nous en avons encore d'autres qui ont réussi aux successeurs de Mahomet quand ils ont voulu propager sa religion. Nous avons la puissance des armes; nous aurons les droits de la victoire pour convaincre les peuples que nous sommes plus savans qu'eux puisque nous sommes plus forts. Car le bon emploi de la force est maintenant associé à la science. Puissions nous leur persuader aussi, par notre conduite envers eux, que nous somme également bons et vertueux.

“ Je suis au moment de partir; au moins l'ordre en est donné, et nous ne dépendons plus que du vent. Si nous n'avions pas avec nous Buonaparte, ses talens et sa fortune, nous croirions qu'il manque encore beaucoup de choses pour assurer le succès de notre grand expédition; mais avec lui notre confiance est entière, l'enthousiasme des troupes de terre embarquées sur les vaisseaux est extrême; elles sont accoutumées à vaincre sous ce général; il seroit à désirer que cette ardeur se communiquât aux marins, qui ne la partagent point encore, et dont le nombre n'est rien moins que suffisant.

“ Je suis embarqué sur un vaisseau de 80 canons, commandé par un de mes amis qui a été mon élève; ce qui me procure pour le temps de ma traversée tout l'agrément possible. Notre caravane savante surpasse le nombre de cent; nous avons aussi des artistes, des littérateurs, des poètes; et à chaque instant retrouvant ici des gens de ma connoissance auxquels je ne soupçonnois pas l'ardeur des voyages, je m'étonne de voir réunies autant de personnes qui semblent étrangères au but apparent de notre entreprise.* Je ne suis pas peu étonné moi-même d'être associé à une expédition militaire, ayant renoncé depuis longtemps au métier des armes, et sachant que les sciences aiment le repos d'esprit et la liberté d'agir, qui ne peuvent se trouver au milieu des camps et des appareils militaires. Je crains donc d'être encore longtemps sans pouvoir exercer mon métier de naturaliste. Jusqu'à ce que nous soyons solidement établis en Egypte et partout ailleurs, nous ne pourrons étudier les montagnes de la Thébaïde et de l'Arabie, que lorsque nous ne craindrons plus d'être inquiétés par les Bedouins.

“ J'aime mieux arrêter ma pensée sur les contrées que je vais visiter et les choses extraordinaires que je vais voir, que de la tenir fixée sur les parens et amis que je laisse en Europe. Mon coeur est profondément affecté de m'éloigner d'eux, et de savoir qu'il en est bien peu qui soient heureux. Je désire bien vivement que, pendant mon absence, la tranquillité publique s'affermisse et que la paix se fasse, afin de vous trouver tous à mon retour dans une situation plus propice. Mettons notre confiance à la Providence, et espérons que nous reverrons. Lorsque je marcherai péniblement dans les sables brulans de l'Arabie, je regretterai plus d'une fois l'air pur et frais des hautes Alpes.

---

* On a fait dans les derniers temps de l'expédition une recrue de gens de loi.

Mais il faut se laisser entrainer par la destinée, et recevoir avec la même fermeté les maux et les biens par lesquels la fortune nous éprouve.

“Je pourrai recevoir des nouvelles de mes amis lorsque, m’adressant leurs lettres à Toulon, ils y joindront au titre de membre de l’Institut National, celui d’employé à la grand expédition.” Copy.

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, July 5. Wimbledon.—“You will learn from Cauning the arrangement proposed respecting India and Portugal, in consequence of talking over the business with Dundas. I hope it will answer both purposes satisfactorily. The possibility of augmenting our Mediterranean force must, I conceive, depend entirely on the degree of expedition with which we raise men here, or on the certainty of having the permanent use of the Russian fleet, or on some arrangement such as we discussed yesterday with America. I do not see any other prospect, unless you point at any local means of augmentation in the Mediterranean, which I am not aware of, and in the present state of the war, can hardly conceive.

“I will write to Lord de Dunstanville about his living, on which I can only refer him to the Chancellor.

“I was not the least aware of the impression you suppose in the Duke of Portland’s mind, but will certainly take measures to prevent its being confirmed, which I hope there will be no difficulty in doing.”

The MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, July 6. Dublin.—“I have not time to say much to you, nor do I see my way clearly enough through all the difficulties of this moment to form any very decided opinions respecting the state of this kingdom. But it seems as if the moment was very critical, and certainly it will require Lord Cornwallis’s best exertions to save Ireland from a very long and a very fanatical war. Much as I had trusted to my knowledge of this country, I had not a conception of the extent to which the religious differences are now carried; or of the creed of persecution, preached by both sects, as indispensable to the peace of the country. The barbarities and the bigotry of the Catholics can only be equalled by the project of extirpation of which all good Protestants talk with great composure as the only cure for the present, and the only sure preventive for the future. Nor do I find one who does not believe that it is the interest and intention of Great Britain to fight that battle usque ad internecionem. My opinions have been eagerly sought, and as cautiously withheld, save from the one person whom I thought they might assist; and I am happy to find he agrees with me in toto, but the quomodo must be most difficult. I do not choose to write by the post all I think upon subjects so nice, but I see the moment and the panic fitting fast away. In the course of a few days I shall be able to judge of the effect of Lord Cornwallis's pardons; at present I am persuaded that neither he nor any one else can calculate upon the effect of the proclamations and of the change of his system. But I hope he is prepared with what is to follow.

"Adieu. I am interrupted and have only time to say that I am well, and very much worried, and that I have taken refuge from all politics in my barrack room up three pair of stairs."

Postscript. "Believe me that Pelham's return would do infinite mischief, for he is sunk in character here very much. I could not have imagined that he had degraded himself so much in everyone's mind to the degree I find he has. It is only in confidence that I tell you, that the one person told me he hoped to God that Pelham would not return. I enclose a bulletin. Pray read all this to Tom, with many thanks for his letters."

COUNT WORONZOW TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, July 6. Richmond.—"Je vous rend mille graces, pour la communication confidentielle (dont je vous assure que je n'abuserai d'aucune manière) et pour les sentiments que vous exprimez à mon égard à cette occasion. Rien ne me flatte tant que l'estime et l'amitié d'une personne que j'aime et que j'estime autant que vous. Vous vous souvenez, j'espère, que dès le premier jour que j'ai eu l'occasion de vous parler à votre entrée dans le département des Affaires Etrangères, dans un moment où nos deux pays, ayant déviés de leurs vrais intérêts, étaient encore remplis de méfiance et de rancune réciproques, je vous fis ma profession de foi politique, qui a été, qui est, et qui sera toujours que rien ne peut être plus avantageux pour nos patries que d'être bien unies entre elles; que c'est de toutes les alliances la plus naturelle et la plus réciproquement utile; et que si, depuis quelques années, elles ont malheureusement oublié leurs propres intérêts, il est temps de revenir au vrai système de leur politique; et que, si le ministère anglais désire de renouer l'ancienne liaison et amitié entre les deux pays, il trouvera toujours en moi le coopérateur le plus zélé pour cette œuvre si salulaire; que je me flatte de trouver en vous plus de disposition que n'en avait votre prédécesseur pour cet objet; et que, dans ce cas, j'ose vous assurer d'avance que vous serez content de moi. Effectivement j'eus le bonheur de rencontrer en vous le ministre que je cherchais vainement depuis sept ans que j'étais ici. L'heureuse réunion de nos patries est votre ouvrage. Vous l'avez fortement voulu, et vous l'avez exécuté. Aussi vous m'avez attaché à vous pour la vie, je vous suis reconnaissant pour le bien qui en est résulté pour les deux pays; et si j'ai mérité votre amitié et votre confiance, c'est par le zèle que vous avez trouvé en moi pour cette réunion, dont l'honneur vous est dû tout-à-fait.

"Avec ma profession de foi politique, partout où je serai, je ne m'écarterai jamais de ces principes gravés dans mon âme; mais je doute que je puisse être utile étant à Pétersbourg; car il y a des circonstances assez fréquentes où un homme peut faire mieux de loin que de près ; et je vais vous expliquer mon cas avec la confiance illimitée que j'ai en vous. Partout ce que je sais par moi-même, et partout ce qui me revient de bonne source du caractère de l'Empereur ; il est juste, est bon, mais vif, ne supportant pas les contradictions, ne souffrant pas même les représentations les plus ménagées et les plus circonspectes ; c'est ce qui fait qu'il se dégoûte si facilement de ceux avec qui il est à traiter d'affaires, et que ces personnes se retirent des affaires, ou ont la bassesse de rester après avoir perdu sa confiance, et étant maltraités par lui. Le prince Bezborodko est une exception unique d'un homme qui se conserve dans une considération permanente ; mais il ne le doit qu'à un caractère tout-à-fait unique dans son espèce. Je le connais parfaitement, étant lié avec lui depuis 1779. Cet homme, avec un génie sublime, et les talents les plus rares, les rend très souvent inutiles par une bonhomie poussée au dernier excès. Avec des lumières supérieures, il cède à ceux qui en ont beaucoup moins, pour éviter la dispute ; rester tranquille et éviter le trouble est son suprême bonheur. Il est incapable de parler avec fermeté à son souverain, même à ses égaux, pas même à ses inférieurs. Il cède à tous, comme un mari débonnaire le fait envers une femme acariâtre pour avoir la paix dans le ménage. Ce n'est que quand on le consulte sur une affaire où on n'a pas pris de parti encore, et qu'il se voit le maître de donner son opinion, qu'il la donne, et que cette opinion est vraiment toujours lumineuse. C'est avec ce caractère qu'il s'est soutenu près de vingt ans sous la feu impératrice, malgré que plusieurs de ses amants ont fait des tentatives réitérées pour le chasser. Il se soutient à présent, et se soutiendra longtemps. Il est à désirer qu'il conserve son crédit ; car s'il ne donne pas tous les avis qu'il aurait pu donner, au moins il est incapable d'en donner des mauvais. Quand à moi, dans quelque place que je me trouverais auprès de la personne de l'empereur, je suis sûr de ne pas tenir trois mois, car n'ayant pas les talents du prince Bezborodko, je n'ai pas non plus cette facilité, ce pliant de caractère qui lui est particulier. Je ne pourrais jamais m'empêcher, coûte qui coûte, de représenter contre toute chose qui me paraîtrait injuste ou impolitique ; ce qui me ferait chasser comme un censeur incommode, avec lequel il est insupportable de traiter d'affaire. Je serais donc chassé d'une place que je ne désire pas d'avoir, et je ne retrouverais plus le poste de Londres que je désire de conserver, parceque je me trouve parfaitement heureux dans ce pays depuis qu'il est uni d'amitié avec le mien. Je puis, en restant ici, être moins inutile pour la continuation de cette heureuse union. L'Empereur, comme je vous l'ai dépeint, est foncièrement bon et juste. Aussi, dès que le premier moment de vivacité est passé, il revient par réflexion et par lui-même à la raison que le premier mouvement avait offusqué. C'est ce qui fait l'avantage de ceux qui ont des relations avec lui de loin, et par écrit, sur ceux qui traitent avec lui de bouche. Si j'avais eu la permission d'aller en Russie par congé quand vous m'avez demandé d'arrêter ici l'escadre de l'Amiral Makaroff, malgré l'ordre précis de l'Empereur pour son retour immédiat, et si, au lieu de lui exposer par écrit toutes les raisons irréfragables qui m'ont induit à le désobéir, je serais venu moi-même les lui exposer de bouche, il n'y a pas de doute qu'il m'aurait maltraité de parole, et m'aurait renvoyé du service comme un homme tout-à-fait incapable; mais ayant lu ma dépêche, et s'être exalté peut-être dans sa mauvaise humeur, le calme de la réflexion le fait revenir sur le droit chemin, et il a éprouvé ma conduite parcequ'il avait trois jours de distance entre la réception de ce que je lui ai écrit et la réponse qu'il devait me faire. Dans d'autres circonstances, de moindre importance il est vrai, mais que je n'aurais pas pu faire de bouche, j'ai réussi en écrivant. Aussi je suis résolu de m'excuser d'accepter telle place qu'on m'offrira sans excepter aucune; et pour excuse je plaiderai l'état de ma santé, qui effectivement se détériore toujours pendant les hivers qui sont à Pétersbourg, de toute autre durée et intensité qu'en Angleterre. D'après cet exposé je me flatte que vous approuverez mon plan, qui est de vivre dans ce pays que j'aime, où je suis parfaitement heureux, et où je puis être de quelqu'utilité pour le maintien de l'harmonie entre nos deux patries. Pardonnez-moi la prolixité de ce billet; mais je ne pouvais être laconique, ayant à m'expliquer à fond, et à ouvrir mon cœur à un ami dont je désire d'avoir toujours l'approbation. Je n'ai pas besoin de vous répéter combien je vous suis attaché; c'est un sentiment qui ne finira qu'avec mon existence."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798, July 1-7.] London.—"Voici ma première lettre officielle pour entamer notre besogne. J'ai eu l'honneur de vous mander bien que M. de Thugut avait déclaré que l'affaire du million six cent mille livres regardait directement le département des Affaires Etrangères, et que M. Ransonet n'avait d'autre instruction à cet égard que celle de parler hautement de notre volonté et résolution de faire honneur à tous nos engagements quelconques. Les lettres que j'ai reçues de Vienne aujourd'hui me donnent l'espoir presque certain de recevoir incessamment des ordres conformés à vos désirs. Daignez donc vous armer encore d'un peu de patience à ce sujet. Il n'y a rien de pis que de brusquer les choses, surtout quand elles peuvent bien tourner. Je vous connais assez pour ne pas douter que vous seriez le premier à regretter une démarche dictée par la vivacité, si vous voyez après coup que vous aviez obtenu par bonne manière ce que certainement la menace n'opérera pas. Encore une fois, vous savez que je ne vous trompe pas; je crois que vous serez content, au moins ne serez-vous plus longtems en doute.

"Quant aux propositions de Ransonet, comme elles regardent essentiellement les prêteurs de notre emprunt de 4,600,000*l.* il en parle aujourd'hui à M. Boyd, et j'aurai l'honneur de vous en entretenir le jour que vous jugerez à propos. Je vous proposerais les différens modes; et nous conviendrons, de vous à moi, de celui que je ferai adopter à ma Cour. Vous me trouverez, j'espère, dans cette occasion tel que je me flatte que vous avez toujours dû me juger, savoir, honnête, franc, et désirant par-dessus tout, de faire ce qui vous est agréable."

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, July 7. Dropmore.—"Je viens de recevoir votre lettre, et je n'ai pu qu'y reconnaître le même caractère et justesse d'esprit que je vous connais depuis si longtemps. C'est avec un vrai plaisir que je me suis toujours rappelé la manière franche et vraie dont vous me parlates, dès notre première conversation, de vos sentiments par rapport à l'union de nos deux pays. Je vous répondis peu de choses alors, parceque je n'étais pas autorisé d'aller plus loin, et que je ne voulais pas entreprendre de vous tromper. Cependant mes sentiments n'ont jamais varié à cet égard ; et dès le moment que les circonstances m'ont permis de travailler à ce rapprochement, je me suis félicité de trouver en vous un coopérateur zélé, unissant à des talents et des connaissances supérieures, cette droiture et probité sans lesquelles tout le reste n'est rien.

"Avec ces sentiments à votre égard (et ils sont bien sincères), je le regarderais certainement comme un très grand bonheur de vous voir à la tête des affaires à Pétersbourg, et de savoir que je pourrais, dans toutes les occasions, m'ouvrir à vous avec la même franchise que dans nos conférences ici, et compter avec la même confiance sur ce que vous pourrez me dire en retour. Je ne puis, cependant, que reconnaître la force des raisons que vous alléguiez ; et quoique je pense que votre caractère inspirerait certainement de la confiance là, comme partout ailleurs, je sens aussi que le premier mouvement d'impatience s'accommoderait mal d'un homme accoutumé de dire son avis, et de le soutenir avec liberté et fermeté. Continuez, je vous prie, de m'accorder votre estime, et soyez persuadé que vous n'avez pas d'ami plus sincère ni plus attaché que moi." Copy.

LORD ROBERT FITZGERALD to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, July 7. Copenhagen.—"I cannot but feel flattered by the wish which you express in your private letter of the 21st June for me to continue abroad and not to urge my request for leave to return home. Your expressions of concern and regard for me have not, either, been lost upon me, and I feel every wish on my side to do that which may be most agreeable to you.

"Your letter has occasioned a combat within my breast between my public and domestic duties, and I am disposed to sacrifice my private wishes to the service I owe my sovereign, if those of my family, and especially of my distressed mother, can be reconciled also with that determination. I have this day written home in confidence to those who see her most to inquire exactly into the state of her health and spirits ; and I must be guided by their answer as to my ultimate resolution. Your own heart will account to you for what I experience on this occasion ; your own feelings will plead my excuse ; and the esteem you are so good as to express for me will acquire additional strength from the freedom and candour with which I have explained myself."

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT STARHEMBERG.

1798, July 8. Dropmore.—"Je vous suis infiniment obligé pour toutes les expressions flatteuses de votre billet. L'approbation de ceux qui ont du caractère et de l'élévation d'âme est bien faite pour nous consoler des chicanes et des tergiversations qui se multiplient de jour en jour.

"Je regrette infiniment cette prise de Malthe. C'était le seul moyen d'échapper qui restait à Buonaparte ; et encore dans trois jours celui-là allait aussi lui être coupé, si Nelson l'avait pu joindre. Le blocus sera long, fatigant, et très décourageant pour nos officiers et équipages. Vous saurez, apparemment, qu'après avoir tant sollicité cet escadre, votre Cour semble aujourd'hui se refuser aux seuls moyens de le mettre en état de lui rendre quelques services. Nil admirari est une leçon dans laquelle je me perfectionne de jour en jour ; et si c'est là en effet le vrai secret du bonheur, j'aurai des grands obligations à votre ministère.

"Mes sentimens pour vous ne varieront jamais. Je ne sais de Boyd que ce vous me marquez." Copy.

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798, July 8.] York Farm.—"Depuis que j'ai eu l'honneur de vous écrire, j'ai reçu, par l'occasion de l'arrivée du courier de M. le Chevalier Eden, des nouvelles dépêches chiffrées, assez volumineuses, de ma Cour. En tirant la quintessence de l'enveloppe entortillée dont elles sont revêtues, j'y découvre :—

1. "Un vrai désir de recommencer les hostilités, et la conviction que l'on sera toujours obligé d'en venir à ce parti.

2. "L'envie de s'entendre avec vous sur un objet d'un intérêt aussi majeur.

"Ces deux volontés sincères sont balancées et même paralysées :—

(1) "Par un orgueil très plat qui fait qu'on se gendarme de la manière décidée, et exclusivement préalable de toute autre négociation, dont vous exigez la satisfaction. Vous savez comme je pense à ce sujet, aussi je me dispense des réflexions.

(2) "Par la crainte qu'en vertu des secours que vous pourrez nous donner, vous ne vouliez dicter impérieusement la mode des opérations militaires.

(3) "Par une autre crainte, assez naturelle à la vérité, que les secours que vous méditez de nous donner, ne soient pas suffisans, puisque vous refusez de les articuler."

"On a peur en outre (et cette timidité honteuse n'a jamais cessé) que si on ratifiait avant d'être sûr des moyens de faire la guerre, la France ne prit sur le champ ce prétexte pour tomber sur nous avant que nous ne fassions en mesure de lui résister.

“J’ai toujours fait profession de vous parler avec franchise, et je ne m’en écarterai pas dans ce moment-ci. C’est à votre sagesse à décider si vous voulez nous remettre en jeu, si vous jugez la chose essentielle au salut de l’Europe, ou non. Dans ce dernier cas abandonnez-nous, et laissez rouler le monde vers sa ruine ; mais si vous voulez encore sérieusement sauver l’Europe, sacrifiez un instant une dignité soi-disante à un intérêt majeur et réel. Les plus raisonnables seront ceux qui agiront avec le plus de gloire. Articulez

(1) “Le montant des secours,

(2) “Que vous ne vous mêlerez point du plan de campagne, et

(3) “Chargez-vous de l’entretien du corps à employer en Suisse.

“Voilà le résumé de ce que je crois que le courier que j’attends de Vienne, m’apportera l’ordre de vous proposer officiellement. Ce serait gagner un tems bien précieux que de la prévenir, et vous pouvez disposer de moi. Vous me reconnaîtrez dans cette occasion comme toujours, j’ai mis de côté tous les détours pour aller au fait. Je suis sûr que de cette manière, en mettant, comme de raison, la ratification comme conditio sine qua non, mais non pas comme préalable impérieux avant d’ouvrir la bouche, vous l’obtiendrez immédiatement, et les hostilités recommenceront sur le champ. Nous venons de faire des achats énormes de magasins et de provisions. Tout est prêt. Il ne faut que donner la première impulsion. Elle est dans vos mains ; mais la déclaration que M. Eden a voulu exiger si positivement, en annonçant seulement que l’escadre Anglaise arriverait dans la Méditerranée, ne pouvait jamais réussir. Ce n’est pas en nous roidissant que nous nous entendrons, et l’univers sera la dupe d’une obstination réciproque de dignité entre deux Cours, qui en s’en sacrifiant mutuellement les apparences, actuellement se sauveront du malheur, aussi horrible que certain, d’être bientôt forcées d’en faire le sacrifice réel à l’anarchie.

“On me mande, en outre, qu’il vient d’être signé un traité défensif entre notre Cour et celle de Naples, et on m’autorise à vous en donner part ; mais en vous demandant le secret, parce que la ratification n’en est point encore arrivée. Ceci est d’un bon augure pour nos projets à vous et à moi. De grâce un peu plus de complaisance, et tout peut aller encore.

“Vous jugez bien que cette lettre n’est autre chose que l’effusion de ma confiance dans le sein d’un ami aussi sûr que respectable et éclairé. Nous en causerons quand vous le jugerez à propos.”

LORD GRENVILLE to SIR JAMES CRAUFURD.

Private.

1798, July 8. Drommore.—“I am much obliged to you for the hint contained in your private letter on a subject which I should have been very sorry you had not mentioned to me. The intelligence is, however, wholly unfounded. At the beginning of the war I parted with the only French servant I had because I knew that if he was honest he would not be thought so. Since that I have only Englishmen in my service. Many of the names contained in the enclosure in your last dispatch are those of persons whom we know to be concerned in the treasonable correspondence." Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE TO COUNT STARHEMBERG.

1798, July 10. Dropmore.—“ Permettez-moi de vous le dire avec franchise : vous perdez votre tems et vos peines en voulant raisonner sur la conduite de votre Cour.

“Que res. Nec modum habet, neque consilium ratione modoque. Tractari non vult.

“ Nous nous sommes connus depuis assez longtems pour que j'ose me flatter d'avoir quelque droit à être cru de vous, quand je vous affirme que la condition préliminaire que nous avons demandée est nécessaire, non pas parceque nous la voulons, mais parceque la réussite de toutes nos mesures pour vous aider y tient absolument.

“ On veut mieux connaître notre constitution et la marche de nos affaires à Vienne que nous le faisons, nous qui en sommes chargés. Soit. On aura tout le loisir de s'en repentir. J'espère bien que l'Angleterre se sauvera du naufrage général ; et si même cela n'était pas, nous aurons succombés en combattant, et non pas en cédant lâchement à nos ennemis, et en ne montrant de la résolution que contre nos amis.

“ Je vous parle à cœur ouvert, et d'ami en ami. Le Secrétaire d'Etat en écrira dans le même sens au ministre du Roi à Vienne, mais dans des termes plus officielles.” Copy.

BARON DE THUGUT TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, July 10. Vienna.—“ J'ai été vivement touché des expressions remplies de bonté et d'obligeance de la lettre dont votre Excellence m'a honoré en date du 29 mai. Rien n'aurait été plus flatteur pour moi que d'avoir obtenu, pendant ma gestion des affaires étrangères, le précieux suffrage d'un grand homme d'état tel que vous, dont l'énergie et les talents supérieurs font depuis longtems l'objet de ma constante admiration. J'espère que vous ne douterez nullement qu'aussi longtems que l'Empereur daignera m'accorder quelque part dans sa confiance, les efforts de mon zèle tendront toujours vers le but important d'une union intime entre les deux couronnes, que je regarde comme le moyen le plus efficace pour prévenir, s'il en temps encore, l'effrayante catastrophe, dont l'Europe continue d'être menacée. Mes principes à cet égard ne varieront jamais ; les sentiments personnels de nos deux souverains et la profonde estime qu'a inspiré à sa Majesté la noble et inébranlable fermeté que sa Majesté Britannique ne cesse de déployer dans les circonstances les plus difficiles, doivent garantir le succès de nos vœux communs, et le concours efficace des lumières et des soins de votre Excellence me fournit un nouveau motif de certitude à cet égard. J'aime donc à me flatter avec confiance, que l'Europe devra encore son salut à un accord parfait entre les deux couronnes sur toutes les mesures que les conjonctures demandront ; et le gouvernement Britannique y apportera, j'en suis sûr, d'autant plus de facilités, qu'il ne saurait échapper à la pénétration d'un Cabinet aussi éclairé, que l'union entre les Cours doit, de toute nécessité, être fondée sur la base d'égard mutuel pour les convenances réciproques. L'Empereur est bien décidé à aller avec empressement au-devant de tout ce qui pourra cimenter les rapports les plus étroits entre les deux couronnes. Mais sa Majesté espère avec confiance de la justice et de l'amitié de sa Majesté Britannique, qu'elle voudra bien, en bon et loyal allié, entrer de son côté dans les considérations que peuvent prescrire à l'Autriche ses circonstances particulières, aussi bien que la situation des affaires générales."

LORD GRENVILLE TO COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, July 12. Dropmore.—“ Je vous restitue la lettre du comte Razamowski. Je crois comme lui que Thugut songe à la guerre comme à une chose inévitable ; mais je suis bien persuadé qu'ils ne se résoudront jamais à la faire, si ce n'est pour la défense de Naples. Encore, peut-être, même pour cet objet-là, ils n'agiront qu'après coup. Ce que Razamowski propose est absolument inexécutable. Le public ici n'est déjà que trop prévenu contre la mauvaise foi de la Cour de Vienne, et malheureusement avec trop de raison. Et toute l'éloquence de M. Pitt lui-même ne persuaderait point au Parlement qu'il soit convenable ou raisonnable de contracter de nouveaux arrangements pécuniaires avec des gens qui se refusent, non seulement à exécuter, mais même à ratifier leurs anciens engagements, et cela après en avoir retiré tout le profit. La raison qu'ils allèguent est encore moins faite pour persuader. Car comment croire qu'ils exécuteront de bonne foi un concert pour le renouvellement de la guerre, au moment où ils avouent que la crainte des François les empêchent de remplir leurs promesses, et de ratifier un traité conclu et exécuté de notre part longtemps avant la conclusion du traité de Leoben.

“ Nulle doute que la Suisse n'ouvre le champ le plus favorable pour de nouvelles opérations. On aurait dû en profiter au commencement ; on le pourrait encore aujourd'hui, mais pas avec autant d'avantage. On savait que nous étions très disposés à y coopérer. On n'en a rien fait ; et, j'ose prédire, qu'on n'en fera rien.” Copy.

THE EARL OF ELGIN TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, July 12. Berlin.—“ In addition to my public correspondence of this day, I have merely to add (what I came under a promise not to mention in an official letter) that M. Siéyès, since his arrival here, has received the instruction de ne rien brusquer.

“Would your lordship have the goodness to acquaint Count Woronzow that Count Panin, being engaged in conference with the Prussian minister, has literally not had a moment to avail himself of this messenger's departure, of which I had no time to apprise him.”

M. DE LUC to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, July 12. Berlin.—“J'ai eu l'honneur d'écrire à votre Excellence le 1<sup>er</sup> de ce mois, en profitant du départ d'un courrier que lui expédioit M. Garlike, pour prendre la liberté de m'expliquer plus ouvertement qu'on ne peut le faire par la poste; et dans le même but je vais profiter du départ de M. de Stamford afin que ma lettre soit sûre jusques dans les états du Roi. Il n'y a rien de particulier dont je puisse avoir l'honneur d'informer votre Excellence; puisque, entr'autres, M. de Stamford ayant informé my Lord Elgin de tout ce qui le concernoit depuis son arrivée, elle le saura déjà par ce moyen. Mais comme nous nous entretenons sans-cesse, M. de Stamford et moi, de ces sujets, tâchant de former notre jugement d'après ce que nous observons chacun de notre côté, je crois qu'il peut y avoir quelque utilité à ce que je repasse ici sur le même champ, en accompagnant les faits particuliers des faits généraux, parceque cela peut aider à déterminer ce qu'on a à attendre cette époque, ce qui me semble important quant aux considérations pour l'avenir.

“Il y a ici un fond d'éloignement pour rentrer dans aucune liaison dont une nouvelle guerre puisse être la suite, qui offusque tous les esprits quelles que soient les intentions; éloignement qui les fait incliner vers tout ce qui peut promettre la durée de la paix, et tire un rideau sur toutes les considérations qui, si on les eût toujours présentes, devroient faire sentir qu'il n'y a point de paix à se promettre à moins que de ne se prononcer fortement sur tout ce qui est nécessaire pour l'assurer, et de montrer qu'on ne craint point la guerre si elle est nécessaire pour cela.

“On peut ramener ceux chez qui le désir du bien est sincère à tous égards; sur quoi je ne dissimulerai point que je n'en connois de tels que ceux qui, ayant de la religion, ont le système de la Révolution en horreur sous ce point de vue, bien plus que pour la perte de la fortune ou des rangs, avec laquelle je vois qu'on s'arrange dans cet état des choses beaucoup plus aisément qu'il n'auroit été naturel de le penser, pourvu qu'on sauve sa vie. Mais le principe religieux même, le plus solide de tous, et qui n'est malheureusement pas commun, n'empêche pas les illusions, chez les uns pour la possibilité de conserver la paix, chez les autres sur l'impossibilité de rien faire dans ces circonstances; et l'on est sans-cesse obligé de rapeller aux uns ce qui doit ôter toute espérance de paix avec l'esprit révolutionnaire, quelque éloignées que soient encore ses armes; aux autres le moyen évident d'arrêter ses progrès par la réunion. Voilà en sommaire ce que nous trouvons, M. de Stamford et moi, dans tous les rangs; et l'habitude l'a fortifié à un tel point ou que tout courage est détruit, ou qu'on pense et agit comme si l'on étoit dans une isle inaccessible, d'où l'on pût considérer, avec compassion peut-être, mais sans danger pour soi, le fleau qui se promène sur l'Europe et menace déjà les contrées voisines.

“Ce qui augmente le mal c'est qu'il y a beaucoup de cette disposition dans la Cour même qui s'est mise en avant pour la faire cesser ; qu'ainsi elle n'agit point avec une forte conviction, et n'emploie pas tous ses moyens pour lever les obstacles à la réunion qui est son but. C'est ce que M. de Stamford a eu lieu de voir depuis son retour. Il a trouvé le Comte P[anin], celui des Ministres de cette Cour-là dont la solidité des principes politiques et les vraies lumières faisoient le plus espérer, actuellement hors de toute influence, et très abattu par une cause qui, peut-être, n'est pas inconnue à votre Excellence. Connoissant l'étendue de sa pénétration et la droiture de ses vues, quand je viens à me rappeler l'éloge détaillé que m'en a fait M. de Haugwitz, et le regret qu'il me témoigna dans notre dernière conversation de ce qu'on lui avoit donné un supérieur, ce Ministre me paroît toujours une plus grande énigme.

“Le Comte P[anin] n'est donc plus rien dans les conférences ; et M. de Stamford, ayant profité d'une ancienne connoissance avec le Pr[ince] de Repnin, fut d'abord très affecté de le voir entrer jusqu'à un certain point dans la défiance de ce Cabinet contre celui de Vienne, et ne point profiter de sa situation pour acheminer des éclaircissemens ; semblant prendre son parti sur ce qui en arriveroit, comme si l'événement ne concernoit pas la Russie autant que l'Allemagne.

“Voilà ce qu'on trouve si généralement. Si dans la conversation on parle historiquement de la distance où étoit la Révolution quand elle a commencé, des progrès qu'elle a fait en étendue et en proximité, et de ses moyens ; des derniers événemens de la Suisse, des mouvemens dans le cercle de la Souabe, les villes Anséatique, et l'Ostfrise ; du rapport que peut avoir l'expédition de Toulon avec les mouvemens dans la Grèce, la Turquie, la Pologne, la Prusse méridionale ; quand on lie à tout cela les déclarations répétées des François sur leur plan général, cet ensemble frappe enfin jusqu'à persuader l'existence d'un tel plan ; mais on l'oublie quand il s'agit de la politique, dont on ne change point la routine.

“C'est dans cette disposition d'esprit, cette espèce d'assoupissement que M. de Stamford trouve le Prince de Repnin. Il ne lui fut pas difficile de rappeler à son esprit tous les faits qui auroient dû mettre plus d'activité dans ses démarches pour l'intérêt de son propre pays ; mais il avoit participé à la défiance contre la Cour qui par la seule demande de l'intervention de la sienne auroit dû la dissiper. Mais on n'a point de confiance au Ministre de cette Cour. C'est encore le malheur du moment que tous les Cabinets se défient les uns des autres avec assez de raison, et que cela s'étende, réciproquement, jusqu'à celui qui sert aujourd'hui de médiateur, et c'est pour cela qu'on ne peut presque espérer le dénouement de ce malheureux noeud que lorsque les souverains se rapprocheront eux-mêmes.

“Il étoit heureux que M. de Stamford revint alors de Vienne, et qu’il put instruire le Prince de Repnin de ce qui s’y étoit passé au sujet de sa mission ; mais comme cependant il ne vit pas que cela eut assez d’influence, il se détermina à reciter à ce Ministre une conversation qu’il avoit eue avec M. de Thugut dont il n’a pas fait mention dans ses rapports, comme n’étant qu’un entretien spéculatif entre deux personnes qui se parlent librement et sans conséquence. Il a cru convenable cependant que j’eusse l’honneur de le communiquer à votre Excellence, à cause du but pour lequel il l’a rapporté au Prince de Repnin.

“Dans la conversation familière, M. de Thugut demanda à M. de Stamford comme militaire, qui a fait la guerre de sept ans, et s’est toujours occupé d’objets relatifs à sa profession, quelle frontière la Prusse pourroit se faire pour sa sûreté contre la France ; si par exemple l’évêché d’Hildesheim pourroit la lui procurer. M. de Stamford, après s’être fortement prononcé contre les sécularisations comme étant un leurre des François qui ameneroit la révolution au sien de l’Allemagne, et ne parlant que comme militaire, répondit à M. de Thugut que cette acquisition ne serviroit à rien pour la sûreté de la Prusse, comme trop près de son centre, n’ajoutant rien à sa situation militaire, et laissant au dehors toutes les positions avantageuses, la Hesse en particulier, qui seroit libre de se déclarer pour l’ennemi venant de l’autre côté du Rhin. Que la seule ligne militaire dans le malheureux état des choses pourroit être le long de l’Ems, dont l’embouchure et une partie du cours appartient déjà à la Prusse, qui passe par Munster et se lieroit au pays de Paderborn ; mais que, devant aussi embrasser le pays d’Osnabruck aujourd’hui possédé par le Duc d’York comme appartenant à la maison d’Hanovre, la ligne seroit coupée à ce point ; ce qui empêcheroit les dispositions militaires pour la fortifier et y embrasser la Hesse. M. de Thugut dit alors ‘mais ne pourroit-on pas offrir de transporter les droits du Duc d’York et de sa maison sur l’Evêché d’Hildesheim ?’ ‘C’est ce que je ne puis considérer,’ répondit M. de Stamford ; ‘je dis seulement que pour la formation de cette ligne idéale Osnabruck est nécessaire ; mais je ne la considère qu’en spéculation ; toujours convaincu que, plus on voudra faire de tels changemens en Allemagne, plus on approchera sa catastrophe.’ M. de Thugut acquiesça à cette réflexion, regrettant cependant qu’on ne pût voir de moyen qui donnât à la Prusse une frontière forte contre l’ennemi commun du côté du Rhin ; et sans s’expliquer sur ce que l’Autriche, en ce cas, pourroit demander de son côté par la même raison.

“Cela montre malheureusement, quoiqu’il ne fût question que d’une conversation spéculative, que les idées se promènent encore où elles ne devraient plus aller, et qu’on ne s’occupe pas uniquement du seul moyen de salut. Mais comme dans ces idées mêmes M. de Thugut montrait son désir que la Prusse, considérée dans l’état de séparation, fût en sûreté contre les François, ce qui devoit agir bien plus dans le plan de réunion, M. de Stamford crut devoir en faire usage pour persuader le

Prince de Repnin que ce Ministre n'avoit pour la Prusse que des dispositions conformes à ce qu'exigeoit l'état des choses, et cela parut faire de l'impression sur lui.

“ Il est à cet égard un point particulier sur lequel il n'y a ici qu'une voix, et chez les personnes mêmes les mieux intentionnées qui, dans l'occasion, seroient à portée de parler. C'est sur la déclaration que le Cabinet de Berlin a faite à Rastadt que le Roi n'entendoit point qu'on cedât aux François les têtes de ponts sur la rive droite du Rhin, ni toutes les isles ; déclaration que Vienne n'a point appuyée. J'ai renvoyé à M. de Stamford des personnes importantes à qui j'ai ouï citer ce fait comme une raison péremptoire de défiance contre Vienne ; et il ne lui a pas été difficile de la lever, d'après ses entretiens à Vienne, comme il l'a fait aussi auprès du P[rince] de Repnin.

“ Si cette déclaration eût été destinée à produire quelque effet, et qu'on eût voulu par là connoître les intentions de la Cour de Vienne, on auroit dû lui en communiquer le plan, pour la faire de concert. Mais on craint si fort tout ce qui pourroit avoir l'apparence hostile la plus reculée, qu'on a craint de s'engager par ce concert ; et en même temps que le Ministre de Prusse faisoit cette déclaration à Rastadt, il continuoit de déclarer que la Prusse ne vouloit point de guerre, et qu'elle étoit résolue à rester dans sa neutralité. Aussi les François n'ont-ils tenu aucun compte de l'autre déclaration ; sûrs que le cabinet de Berlin ne veut entrer dans aucune nouvelle coalition ; et leur dernière note à Rastadt, connue de votre Excellence, est d'une insolence qui devroit révolter, si l'on ne s'étoit accoutumé à souffrir leurs insultes qui, pourtant, ne sont pas sans dessein ultérieur.

“ Telles furent les représentations que fit en particulier M. de Stamford au P[rince] de Repnin dans leurs premières conférences, et il en résulta chez ce Ministre le plan de presser cette Cour. M. le Comte de Fink lui promit qu'on lui donneroit un Declaratum des propositions précises qu'on feroit à la Cour de Vienne ; il lui en indiqua même les articles, dont le Pr[ince] fut très content ; ce qui commença de donner quelque espérance. Mais dans la dernière conférence que M. de Stamford a eue avec le Pr[ince] de Repnin il a appris que cette espérance s'étoit évanouie, parceque ce Ministre ayant eu une conférence avec M. de H[augwitz], celui-ci a prétendu n'avoir connoissance de rien de pareil, et a décliné de donner un Declaratum.

“ M. de Stamford trouva le Pr[ince] de Repnin très offensé de telles menées, où il voyoit un dessein formé de la Cour de B[erlin] de décliner la réunion ; mais il n'en tiroit d'autre conséquence que celle de terminer les conférences dès qu'il seroit bien sûr qu'elles seroient inutiles. M. de Stamford, très affligé de ce découragement, travailla à faire comprendre au Prince qu'on ne devoit pas attendre des représentations de la Russie, mais de son poids de briser cette barrière. Que le dessein, soit aveugle, soit pire encore, de conserver la neutralité en de pareilles circonstances, devoit avoir quelque cause qui resisteroit à de simples représentations, même à la perspective de la rupture des conférences dont il y avoit lieu de croire qu'on ne seroit pas fâché. Qu'il falloit opposer une crainte à une autre crainte ; et que comme ces évasions n'avoient pour motif que de ne pas s'attirer à dos les François, et de se conserver au contraire en bonne intelligence avec eux, il seroit peut-être nécessaire que s[on] E[xcellence] déclarât qu'elle voyoit ainsi qu'on préféreroit de conserver des liaisons trompeuses avec les ennemis déclarés des trônes, à en former de solides avec l'empereur son maître, dont l'intérêt étoit le même ; et qu'elle ne pourroit se dispenser d'en instruire sa M[ajesté] I[mpériale] pour qu'elle avisât aux conséquences que la persévérance dans un tel dessein pourroit avoir pour l'Allemagne et pour elle-même.

“ Le P[rince] de Replin sentit la force des représentations de M. de Stamford ; mais il ne se déclara pas sur le parti qu'il prendroit. Il est certainement à souhaiter qu'on mette plus de force dans les représentations, mais il faudroit plus que cela ; il faudroit des offres positives et bien claires de secours immédiat ; sans quoi je doute du succès ; parceque je sais que la défiance de M. de H[augwitz] en cette Cour égale celle qu'on y a de lui. Lorsque je lui ai représenté l'avantage d'avoir l'appui de la Russie, et que, sur les raisons qu'il me donnoit d'après l'expérience de ne pas compter sur les promesses de cette Cour, je prenois la liberté de lui présenter mes idées sur les moyens d'en assurer l'effet, il revenoit toujours à cet argument ; ‘ nous tenons la neutralité ; nous croyons pouvoir nous y procurer sûreté, en joignant la prudence à la force intérieure. Dans une telle position nous pouvons attendre ce que le chapitre des événemens amenera pour augmenter cette sûreté ; au lieu qu'on ne voit pas tout ce qui pourroit arriver qui trompât l'attente lorsqu'en y comptant on auroit une fois renoncé à ce rempart, et donné un prétexte au François de recommencer des hostilités sur la ligne de démarcation, qu'ils savent bien que nous sommes résolus de défendre dans l'état des choses.’ Voilà qui ne s'ébranle point, et malheureusement il ne me paroît pas que rien se prépare qui puisse l'ébranler.

“ Pour ne rien négliger M. de Stamford, devant naturellement rendre compte au Roi de sa mission à Vienne, ce qui pourroit lui donner occasion d'entretenir encore une fois sa Majesté, lui a fait demander, il y a huit jours, par le Prince Héréditaire d'Orange, la permission de se rendre auprès d'elle. Le Roi lui fit répondre qu'il le verroit avec plaisir ; sa Majesté le devoit, puisque c'est-là un objet qui l'intéresse ; cependant, quoiqu'il ait eu l'honneur de la voir le jour de l'hommage, il n'a point encore été appelé ; de sorte que voyant que la saison des bains s'avance, et en ayant absolument besoin, il s'est déterminé à écrire à l'un des aides-de-camp du Roi, fixant son départ au 13<sup>me</sup>. Je saurai ce qui en sera résulté.

“ Les deux ministres de Russie et le ministre de Vienne voient son départ avec peine, et voudroient également qu'il revint, par la simple possibilité qu'il pût se présenter quelque circonstance où il seroit utile ; et ils lui représentent à cet égard que bien d'autres princes ont des envoyés ici qui y ont moins d'intérêt que le Prince d'Orange. Quant à lui il n'en voit pas l'utilité, et son séjour ici lui est extrême[me]nt pénible ; mais son premier désir étant le bien, si votre Excellence y voyoit quelque avantage, et que Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange y en trouvât pour lui-même, il céderoit à cette considération si sa santé se remet.

“ Il reste encore pour ressource l'arrivée de M. l'Avoyer Steiguer qui, pourtant, tarde beaucoup ; quoique sur les représentations de M. de Stamford il se fût déterminé à venir. M. de Stamford a prié M. le Prince Reuss que s'il arrive, il ait la bonté de le prévenir que je désire d'avoir l'honneur de le voir avant qu'il aille à la Cour. En ce cas je suivrai le plan qu'a déjà commencé M. de Stamford en lui représentant que s'il veut produire quelque effet, il ne doit pas présenter une perspective de guerre ; mais employer tout le poids de son caractère, de son âge, et de sa malheureuse expérience, pour dissiper chez le Roi toute autre idée de sûreté que dans l'union des puissances ; et pour cela je tâcherai de le mettre au fait de toutes les illusions qu'on travaille à inspirer à sa Majesté.

“ Le Roi fit inviter hier M. de Stamford à Charlottenbourg, où d'abord sa Majesté le reçut dans le jardin, et débuta ainsi : ‘ Vous voilà de retour de Vienne M. de Stamford, je suis bien aise de vous voir.’ M. de Stamford rendit d'abord compte à sa Majesté de ce qui regardoit le Prince d'Orange, mais comme cet objet se lioit à des arrangemens à prendre, et ceux-ci aux choses générales, il y fut bientôt amené. Alors, commençant par le désir sincère d'une réunion exprimé par l'Empereur lui-même, et par son Ministre, il répéta à sa Majesté, avec toute la force possible, ce que la situation des choses a d'allarmant pour tous les états ; à quoi le Roi, comme à l'ordinaire, acquiesca sans restriction. Mais quand M. de Stamford conclut de tout cet exposé qu'il n'y avoit donc point de salut que dans la réunion, le Roi parut en douter, sans s'expliquer davantage. C'est fut assez cependant pour M. de Stamford pour qu'il pût continuer quelque temps, et entreprendre de convaincre sa Majesté que, dans les circonstances actuelles, il n'y avoit point de secret possible de Cabinet comme moyen de sûreté ; que toute la situation des affaires étoit palpable pour les hommes attentifs ; que les moyens et les ressorts des ennemis étoient manifestes, et continuoient d'opérer sous les yeux de tout le monde comme les gens éclairés l'avoient depuis longtemps prévu et prédit ; et qu'il étoit tout aussi visible (puisque sa Majesté convenoit qu'il n'y avoit point de foi à ajouter aux engagemens des François) qu'aucune puissance n'étoit en état, séparément, de pourvoir à sa préservation, et que leur réunion seule pouvoit les sauver. Le Roi ne répondit rien, et l'entretien finit.

“ Après le dîné M. de Stamford eut une conversation avec l'aide-de-camp du Roi, le col[onel] Kökeritz, écho passif de M. de Haugwitz, mais un écho qui eût été probablement redressé pour être trop précis, car il découvrit le déplorable pot aux roses. Les accusations banales contre la Cour de Vienne furent d'abord employées ; fondées sur des apparences, qu'on ne cherche point ici à pénétrer, et qu'on ne s'étudia pas assez à lever de l'autre côté. Cependant M. de Stamford, moins gêné avec le col[onel] qu'avec le Roi, le mit tellement à cet égard même au pied du mur qu'il lui échappa de dire ; ' enfin ils veulent que nous garantissons une paix, ou une trêve de l'Allemagne, et nous ne le voulons pas, parceque nous ne voulons pas nous exposer à la guerre.'

"Voilà donc un parti pris quand tout s'écrouleroit autour d'eux ; car c'est dire qu'ils ne se mettent pas en peine du reste de l'Allemagne ; et le Roi, qui n'est pas en état de se tirer par lui-même des lacs de ces gens-là, se met, par son silence, hors d'état d'être assisté pour s'en délivrer. On a beau voir encore que Malte, l'imprenable, a été prise sans résistance ; il a beau être évident que tout est menacé du même sort dès que ces gens-là auront le temps de s'en approcher ; que quelque éloignée que soit cette nouvelle approche vers Berlin, passant ensuite par Naples, par la Dalmatie, par où que ce soit, la ligne de circonvallation s'étend ; malgré, dis-je, tout cela, les uns ne veulent pas convenir, les autres sont incapables de voir qu'il ne sauroit y avoir de salut qu'en se hâtant de se réunir pour frapper le corps de cette hydre avant que ses cent têtes qui vont tout dévorant, n'aient détruit tout moyen de lui porter des coups efficaces. Quel malheur qu'on ait pu offusquer à ce point les yeux du souverain de qui dépendroit ce moyen de salut, autant pour lui-même que pour l'Europe ! Une torpille infernale engourdit deux cent mille hommes, par un seul homme.

"Votre excellence ne voit que trop par ces détails ce qu'on peut attendre des conférences ; les moyens n'y sont point arrangés pour détruire cet engourdissement ; le Duc de Brunswick seul le pourroit ; mais M. de Haugwitz le connoît, et l'endort d'espérances comme il est endormi lui-même (car on ne peut s'expliquer autrement sa conduite) ; et l'on compte sur sa répugnance à se mêler d'affaires d'état. Cependant il ne faut pas abandonner ce Prince. Il y a une conférence aujourd'hui ; le Comte P[anin] y sera ; votre Excellence sera sûrement informée de son résultat ; M. de Stamford l'attend afin de le porter à Brunswick, où, avant que de continuer sa route vers les bains de Rehbourg, il fera tout ce qui dépendra de lui auprès de s'a[ltess]e s[érénissime]. Il peut venir un temps où ses yeux s'ouvrent sur les maux que produit son immobilité.

"Avant que M. de Stamford n'eût vu le Roi, le Prince Héritaire d'Orange avoit ajouté l'expression de son désir qu'il revint à celle des Ministres de Russie et de Vienne ; sur quoi il répondit de même ; qu'il ne sauroit en voir l'utilité ; qu'il falloit de plus fortes mains pour écarter ce qui entoure le Roi ; mais que, d'ailleurs, cela dépendroit du Prince son père, à qui, s'il le jugeoit à propos, il pourroit communiquer ses idées à cet égard. Cependant, voulant au moins laisser une pierre-d'attente, M. de Stamford dit au Roi (d'un ton demi-sérieux, demi-badin, comme avec son ancien élève) qu'en partant il ne pensoit pas prendre tout-à-fait congé de sa Majesté, et pourroit bien revenir lui rendre son hommage ; à quoi le Roi répondit qu'il le verroit toujours avec plaisir. On sait maintenant ce que cela veut dire, mais la porte reste au moins entr'ouverte.

“ Pour être bien sûr que ces pages renferment un tableau fidèle de la situation des choses, j’irai chez M. de Stamford les lui lire avant que de les cacheter, et les lui remettre sous couvert à M. le Baron de Steinberg. Si donc votre Excellence n’y voit point de changement, elle saura ainsi qu’il les a approuvées.

“ Quant à moi, si je n’avois pas marqué à votre Excellence dans la lettre que j’ai eu l’honneur de lui écrire le 1<sup>er</sup> de ce mois, que j’attendrois ici ses ordres auxquels j’obéirai toujours, j’aurois besoin aussi de partir, pour me soustraire un peu à tous les sentimens que j’éprouve. Cependant je ne me relâcherai point d’employer le temps qui s’écoulera jusqu’à la réponse dont j’espère qu’elle voudra bien m’honorer, pour saisir toutes les occasions de tenter de faire quelque bien.”

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, July 13. York Farm.—“ J’ai l’honneur de vous envoyer une lettre de part du Grand Duc de Toscane, que j’avoue avoir oublié depuis huit jours dans mon tiroir. J’ai reçu hier de Pétersbourg des nouvelles instructions aussi douloureuses pour mon cœur, qu’elles sont extravagantes, à l’égard de cette ennuyeuse et éternelle ratification. M. de Cobentzl me paraît se donner bien des airs à ce sujet. En vérité si je ne me croyais pas autant Anglais qu’Autrichien, et que je ne fusse pas aussi attaché que je le suis à cet excellent pays, votre ami aurait depuis longtemps envoyé promener tous ces sots et vils ministres qui ne sont pas dignes d’avoir un homme d’honneur pour exécuter leurs plans ; mais je suis trop bien ici pour m’en aller ; et d’un autre côté, tant que mon digne père vivra, il ne me serait pas possible d’habiter l’Angleterre sans y être employé. Il faut donc se résigner et supporter beaucoup de choses pour un plus grand bien. Mais rendez-moi, je vous prie, la justice de croire que je souffre beaucoup intérieurement. Après ce préambule, que la sensible amitié et l’honnêteté de Lord Grenville saura apprécier et pardonner, j’aurai l’honneur de vous prévenir qu’on m’ordonne de vous dire de nouveau mille choses, et de faire encore des tentatives pour savoir ce que vous nous donnerez avant de ratifier. C’est de la Russie que ces ordres viennent actuellement. Le Comte de Woronzow doit m’aider et m’appuyer. Je prévois que je ne réussirai pas plus que les autres fois ; mais comme je connais les êtres à qui j’ai à faire à Vienne et à Pétersbourg, je vous prie de trouver bon que nous nous écrivions, l’un et l’autre, sur cet objet ; afin que vos réponses prouvent au moins que j’ai obéi à mes instructions, en vous assiégeant encore. Je suis trop triste, trop irrité, trop indigné et en même temps humilié pour avoir le cœur de vous en parler moi-même. Je vais passer deux jours avec ma famille à Tunbridge, et c’est de là que je vous bombarderai. Adieu ; plaignez votre ami, il mérite bien votre estime.”

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT STARHEMBERG.

1798, July 15. Dropmore.—“ Je vous restitue la dépêche qui vous charge d’une très mauvaise affaire de la part du Grand Duc de Toscane. Vous jugerez mieux que moi ce que vous pourrez et devrez faire à cet égard ; n'étant pas, je pense, accrédité ici de la part de ce prince. Si vous m'en écrivez officiellement, je pense que vous trouverez bon que, pour cette raison, je m'abstienne à vous répondre là-dessus, en renvoyant la négociation aux soins de M. Wyndham et de Sir H. Nelson, qui la poursuivront bien mieux que nous. Je vous prie d'être bien persuadé que ni les affaires de cette petite Cour, ni celles de la grande Cour qui vise à se rendre petite, ne changeront jamais rien aux sentimens personnels que je vous ai voués pour la vie." Copy.

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798, July 18. Tunbridge Wells.]—"J'ai reçu la réponse officielle que vous vous êtes donné la peine de m'écrire. Elle est parfaite, et bien adoptée aux circonstances. Je désire plus que je n'ose l'espérer qu'elle produise enfin l'effet que nous voudrions. Croyez que je ne manquerai pas d'en écrire encore par le courier d'aujourd'hui, avec toute la force que j'ai coutume d'y mettre. Je suis venu passer ici quelques jours avec ma famille. Je retourne demain à Londrès, et j'y serai à vos ordres si, par hasard, vous aviez encore quelque chose à me dire. Nous avons lieu de nous flatter, ce me semble, d'une nouvelle victoire navale. J'en attends la confirmation, et les détails avec toute l'eagerness d'un bon Anglais."

LORD GRENVILLE to the EARL OF ELGIN.

Private.

1798, July 19. Dropmore.—"As I understand that you have not derived from the baths of Töplitz the advantage which you expected, I cannot help suggesting to you whether it would not be best that you should avail yourself of the present state of affairs in order to return here, and to take whatever precautions may be advisable previous to your entering upon another winter at Berlin.

"Although this mode of communication does not allow of my entering more particularly into the subject, I may say, generally, that you see enough to satisfy you that no disadvantage is likely to arise to the King's affairs for their being left for the present in Mr. Garlike's hands. I entertain a very favourable opinion of his discretion and judgment, and do not think it likely that during your absence any necessity can arise for a temporary arrangement of any different sort. But if that should be the case I could easily contrive it, without breaking in upon whatever plan you shall find best for the complete restoration of your health, which I am very desirous you should effect absolutely and not partially, before you begin another German winter.

"I have not sent you any fresh leave of absence, considering your former one as in full force, but I will take care fully to explain the circumstance to the King, who is indeed already fully impressed with the zeal which you have at all times shown for his service.

“ I am confident I need not dwell upon the unwillingness which I feel to lose, even for a time, the benefit of your assistance at such a post as that of Berlin, but it is for that very reason that I am anxious you should avail yourself of the present moment to remove the seeds of illness which might, hereafter, interrupt your services at a more inconvenient time.” Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to LORD ROBERT FITZGERALD.

Private.

1798, July 19. Dropmore.—“ I have only time by this mail to mention to you that I am making arrangements for supplying your place during a temporary absence from Copenhagen ; and that you may prepare for leaving that place as soon as a person can be sent out for that purpose, which shall be with as little delay as possible.” Copy.

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, July 21. Wimbledon.—“ I did not know that so many officers from Switzerland were in this country or in the situation you describe. I have not had an opportunity of conversing with the Duke of York on the subject since the receipt of your letter. He was here yesterday, but as the King and Queen were of the party, I had no opportunity of talking with him. I imagine, however, that the difficulty of seconding these officers on the battalions of the 60th arises, partly from the numbers of our own unattached officers whom the Duke takes the earliest opportunities of introducing again into the service, and partly from the circumstance of the 60th regiment having been lately recruited very effectually by taking into it the men of the foreign regiments serving in the West Indies, and at the same time incorporating with them a good number of their officers. At the same time, if it is a matter of policy to keep up an intimate connection with Switzerland, and some expense must be incurred for that purpose, the best way for this country to execute that purpose is in the shape of military aid from them. I shall talk with Wickham upon it, and when I am sufficiently master of the carte de pays, I shall bring it under Mr. Pitt's attention ; for in truth it is a question of expense and of that only.

“ The education of our young military men is an object calling loudly for attention, and I flatter myself from a plan which has been laid before me (and of which the Duke of York and, I believe, Lord Cornwallis approve) to be executed under the superintendence of Monsieur Jarré, there is a prospect of a system for that purpose being established. I believe, however, that the radical defect of our army arises from the abuses which have been introduced into it by the rapid promotion of young officers. It is impossible they can know the duties of subalterns, or, of course, of their profession, for they are hurried through these inferior situations into the rank of field officers before they have either studied or practically exercised the elements of their profession. Our army has gradually suffered in some of those material respects from the death of the old Duke of Cumberland; but, from the good dispositions of the present Commander-in-Chief, who has the advantage of being a Prince of the Blood, it will be the fault of those about him if a very few years does not make an important change to the better in the British army. But, if this is to be accomplished, we must not run wild with economy on the return of peace, for upon the application of that principle indiscreetly at the conclusion of the last war, our regiments were frittered down to a state of perfect inefficiency, and, excepting in the East Indies, we began this war without one regiment fit for service; and the West India conquests were made by taking away the flank companies of all the few regiments we had, and they were from that time reduced to a state of weakness they have never recovered. Lord Amherst was a worthy and respectable old man, and nobody shall ever hear me say a disrespectful thing of him; but the mischief he did in a few years will not be repaired but by the unremitting attention of many. I have been inadvertently led into a longer digression than I intended, and you will be relieved from any more prosing by my being summoned to breakfast."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, July 23. Dublin.—"My letters to you will have informed you that the rebel cordon round Dublin has been entirely broken through, and that gradually the whole has been getting quieter. Every hour now gives us details of the success of the country against the small plundering parties who have ventured to assemble, and in a few days I should hope that the roads will be secure, at least during the day; but it is necessary that the most immediate exertions should be made in re-establishing confidence in the country by a proper disposition of disciplined troops in the room of the yeomanry and militia, who, though they have saved the country, have certainly made it pay most severely for this protection. I know that Lord Cornwallis feels as I do upon this point, but his generals (I believe the worst in Europe) do not seem to have an idea of enforcing any one of the first principles necessary for a soldier. The rapine and cruelties of the troops have, in many instances been as atrocious as they have been mischievous to the public service. Lord Cornwallis knows that in many instances the surrender of individuals and even of parties has been checked; and, in some, the wretches actually refused when suing for the proclamation pardons. The entire surrender of the Kildare corps took place on the twenty-first. It was offered to Lord Cornwallis, through me, on the fifth, but the universal jealousy entertained of the good faith of the King's officers and troops constantly prevented the actual surrender, till they could receive assurances either under Lord Cornwallis's hand or mine. The first could not be sent without real difficulties; the latter was not fitting; till, at last, hurt by the danger of the delay, and by the sacrifice of at least 2,000 men who had perished in the interval, I offered to Lord Cornwallis to go out (as Colonel) with terms to them, or to write a letter to the father (whom I had known) of young Aylmer. He accepted my last proposal, and saw it before I sent it; and in 24 hours after this letter was communicated, their Generals, Aylmer and FitzGerald, answered my letter, and with 13 colonels surrendered to General Wilford; and their army gave up above 5,000 pikes and firelocks, with all their cattle, horses, sheep and plunder, and have received protection and pardon. These chiefs are prisoners of war in the Castle. I have refused to see them, but they requested Captain Browne of my regiment, who guarded them yesterday, to assure me that they could answer for the rebellion being at an end in Wicklow, Wexford, Kildare, and Meath; and that they had no reason to believe that it could show itself in any other part of Ireland. They were full of contempt of the general officers who have acted against them, and of resentment against the Dublin Directory who induced them to rise under the assurance that all Ireland was to rise on the 23rd May. There is no doubt from their general language that many of the demagogues in Parliament have been very deeply dipped with them. The Duke of Leinster is now very openly talked of; and it is certain that all the men most active in this rising in Kildare have, within these few months, received from him very valuable leases upon his estate, or are in other respects dependent on him. Still, however, I do not think that it is the wish of Government to press that inquiry as far as I think it ought against him and others. This proclamation and the general tenor of Lord Cornwallis's very meritorious conduct has raised much ferment amongst the very violent Orangemen, who have formed a very dangerous society, professing very loyal principles, but certainly united as a body almost in every town in Ireland in contradistinction to the Catholics; and wherever they have not been suffered to be formed, namely, in the counties of Kerry, Clare, Galway, Sligo, Mayo, all which are Catholic counties, not a man has stirred, nor has a United Irishman taken arms. It is, however, understood that the Catholics there are only quiet because the Protestants are so. Now this sort of loyal association upon Jacobin principles must be grappled with, or the Government must be given up to them; and yet I protest that I do not know what in theory I could advise. Numbers certainly look to a Union as the only solution, but I cannot disguise from myself the certainly that, though it might be carried in Parliament, and may possibly be approved by the bulk of the Catholics if they could see advantages in the concoction of it, yet the opinion of the Presbyterians would be general and strong against it; and many of the Catholics would, on such a question, join the nonsense against the sense of the people. In this statement, however, there is nothing new, and nothing that those who have considered the question did not expect; and therefore the question is to be measured nearly on the data which we discussed some time since, saving only that I am of opinion that the difficulties in Parliament will be fewer than I imagined. However that and every other question upon which it may be possible for the army to take a wrong turn must be postponed until a system of discipline and subordination has been established, in aid of the spirit of loyalty which hitherto has been the only link to connect the whole together, or to bind it to the public service. I must say distinctly upon this head, that I fear everything from the licentiousness, the disobedience, and the independence of control in every being of this army, from the Lieutenant-General (not Lake) down to the drummer. With 43 generals now actually serving here, there is a very small number indeed from whom the country has derived the smallest advantage, or who are capable of giving it; and the confusion and disobedience arising from all these separate commands have been productive of the most serious consequences. The militia officers and their corps are under no sort of control, nor is there a regiment effective within a large proportion to the numbers it returns. In short, the whole of this system must totally and entirely [be] changed; and till that is done, Ireland is not safe for a moment. My advice is instantly to recall or strike off one half of your generals who are worse than useless, and particularly your brigadiers of Irish cavalry and Irish connections, for whom there cannot be the slightest occasion, and from whom much is to be feared, and nothing can be hoped; immediately to re-assemble the militia and fencibles, and to inspect each corps most minutely in its numbers, clothing, arms, and accounts. My next idea is to send some of your best skeleton or weak corps in exchange for the Irish corps, and to spare no trouble to complete a regular efficient army in the room of that which Lord Camden's (must I say) weakness, Lord Carhampton's mad violence, and, above all, Sir R. Abercrombie's total insufficiency and fatal order for free quarter has completely ruined. And once more be assured that, till this is done, Government is in the power of any popular clamour that catches hold of the popular mind, in which the army is likely to partake; and whenever the immediate danger of the rebellion is over and the plunder that attends it, the army is perhaps just as likely to think wrong as right.

"In all these discussions you will see that I consider the rebellion at an end. I certainly do, and I am every hour more sanguine in my hopes that the predatory war, which I so much dreaded, will neither be long, nor serious. I do not know Lord Cornwallis's ideas exactly on the detail; but his general system is that of some few barricaded houses as posts in the worst passes. I have had, entre nous, a great deal of the most confidential conversations with him, which he courts very much, and which perhaps are not entirely useless to him. I agree with him that for the present he can look to nothing but to prorogue his Parliament, and to reform his army. He is very anxious in the decided preference which he gives to Lord Castlereagh; in which, for many reasons which he stated, and others which have been stated to me from other quarters, he is clearly right.

"I wish you to tell Tom that I have turned very much in my mind your and his suggestions. I do not like his putting himself to sleep out of Parliament for 400*l.* per annum; nor do I see any daylight at present that can help him or you; but, I again repeat I am ready to assist in arranging it for Lady Carysfort. Astle's office is reformed already. Does poor Bruce's vacancy offer any means? Fremantle is too fat and too rich to be tempted to foreign parts. I fear that I have very little the means here of suggesting, but I will lend myself to any thing for what I so much wish as I do his objects, and that for Lady Carysfort.

"As to my pilgrimage you must see from all this detail that Lord Cornwallis will keep us as long as he can; for the English militia is almost the only garrison he can trust to, and by the help of a very sharp discipline I hope to keep our Royal Bucks untainted. He does not (in confidence to me) see any chance of our release sooner than September; and I have told him that in this, as in everything else, I can have no wish but for the public service; though I feel ten thousand difficulties and awkwardness of every sort and kind, that make me at times very petulant and unhappy. Indeed I have sacrificed more than my fair share in undertaking this thankless voyage; however, le vin est tiré, and I will drink it as as gaily as I can."

Postscript. "Could not you let the King know how handsomely I have waived my rank as one of the oldest army colonels, and have offered to Lord Cornwallis to serve under any brigadier or any officer of any rank, or in any way he may think most useful; for that I have left my army commission in England on purpose to avoid all discussions of that sort."

COUNT WORONZOW TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, July 24. Richmond.—"Je suis bien fâché de la nouvelle que vous venez de me donner de la rupture des négociations entre l'Autriche et la Prusse à Berlin. Il est visible que la récente arrivée de l'abbé Séyès et ses intrigues ont déterminé cet événement. Il est plus que probable que la France va attaquer l'Autriche. Les nombreuses troupes qu'elle a eu le temps d'envoyer en Lombardie, qui avait été dégarnie pendant cinq mois: celles qui sont venues tout fraîchement en Suisse pour renforcer l'armée qui y était déjà; la correspondance querelleuse que commence à avoir le Commandant Français en Suisse avec le Général Autrichien du voisinage; et l'occupation de la citadelle de Turin, sont les préliminaires et les indices certains de cette prochaine rupture. La maison d'Autriche regrettera, mais en vain, d'avoir consumé inutilement les magasins de sa grande armée en Italie, et d'avoir manqué de reprendre la Lombardie dégarnie de troupes Françaises, et de n'avoir pas prêté la main aux braves Suisses qui, dans les petits cantons démocratiques, n'étaient pas encore subjugués; tandis que, dans les grands, le peuple n'attendait qu'un appui pour secouer le joug qui venait de leur être imposé.

"Je m'attends que la Cour de Vienne, au moment qu'elle sera attaquée, criera partout qu'elle a été surprise, et se plaindra de la perfidie Française, et ne sentira pas à quel point sa conduite est imbécile et stupide." French.

LORD GRENVILLE to LORD ROBERT FITZGERALD.

Private.

1798, July 26. Cleveland Row.—"I have this day seen Mr. Ogilvie, who has mentioned to me that it was the wish of your friends here that you should not return to England this year. This being the case, I conclude from what you mention to me in your last letter that you would wish me to suspend taking any step to provide for the conduct of the King's affairs at Copenhagen, and I shall accordingly do nothing further in that business till I hear again from you. I beg you to believe that I sincerely feel for what you must have suffered." Copy.

THE EARL OF ELGIN to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, July 27. Grünemwald.—"The two last posts have brought me neither letters, nor newspapers from England. But a foreign gazette informs me that I have had the misfortune of losing my brother. This loss, however severe (and long habits of the most intimate affection render it severe indeed) would not have induced me to trouble your Lordship on my own account. But I cannot help dreading its consequences to my mother, whose weak state of health, very acute feelings, and unbounded fondness for my poor brother, will make this shock very hard for her to bear. And it is particularly aggravated by the apprehensions which my letters are, I perceive, insufficient to destroy, namely, that my illness is still of a dangerous nature. The proofs I have experienced of your Lordship's kindness and friendship encourage me to address myself without hesitation to you, under these painful circumstances, and to request that you will enable me to come for a short time to England, in order to give to my mother that consolation which, I am persuaded, my presence alone can afford her, and which, if necessary in her situation, is a duty that my obligations to her leave me no choice in executing."

July 27, evening. "Since closing my other letter of this date, Prince Reuss and Count Panin have come to inform me that Count Cobentzl is expected here immediately. However painful any delay must be in the execution of the plan I have so earnestly laid before your Lordship, I am free to confess it is impossible for me to leave Berlin until it is known what is the object of Count Cobentzl's mission, and in how far my attendance may be called for. I make this confession the readier as, while on the one hand I am determined not to neglect or abandon my duty, I am equally convinced on the other that your Lordship will enter into the feelings of anxiety and impatience with which I protract my stay at Berlin ; and will permit me to come to England as soon as I can with propriety."

LORD ROBERT FITZGERALD to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, July 31. Copenhagen.—"I had the honour yesterday to receive your Lordship's private letter from Dropmore of the nineteenth, and though I wrote last post to say I should not now avail myself of your obliging offer to send me a congé, I hasten to assure your Lordship how extremely sorry I am for all the trouble I have been the occasion of to you ; and that I shall think myself happy if, in continuing at my post, your Lordship perceives my earnest wish to do that which may be most agreeable to you."

RUFUS KING to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, July 31. Margate.—"By private letters from America as late as the third instant, I learn that the Senate has passed a Bill, 14 to 4, annulling our treaties with France, and no doubts are entertained that it will likewise pass the House of Representatives. As a circumstance of very considerable weight in proof of the spirit and temper of the country, I have the pleasure to mention that the House of Representatives of the State of Massachusetts, on the twenty-eighth ultimo, unanimously passed a resolution that the Senators and Representatives of that state in Congress should move an amendment of the constitution of the U[nited] S[tates], declaring that none but natural-born citizens and those who were in the country at the Declaration of Independence, shall be eligible to the office of President, Vice-President, Senator or Representative of the United States.

"The late intelligence from Paris throws some light upon the system of the Directory. Talleyrand, at the close of a long letter to Mr. Gerry, on sending him his passport to return home, after informing him that the Directory, as a measure of precaution, had laid an embargo on all American ships, says, "telle est la répugnance du Directoire à considérer les Etats Unis comme ennemis, que malgré leurs démonstrations hostiles, il veut attendre qu'il y soit irrésistablement forcé par les hostilités réelles."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798, July —.] Wimbledon.—"I have yours of last night. I have it not in my power to give you any explanation about the order respecting Monsieur. I signed it in consequence of Huskisson having prepared it by orders of Mr. Pitt, and I understood it a measure settled at Lord Spencer's the evening before, in consequence of a letter from Monsieur, and I was not surprised at any wish of the kind coming from him in his forlorn state. But, if there is any thing misunderstood about it, there can be no difficulty in remedying it ; and if you wish any order about it before I come to town, send to Huskisson, who will do anything you please about it, till Mr. Pitt and you meet. For my part I have not any opinion, far less a wish about it."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798, July. York Farm.]—"Vous jugez bien que ce n'est pas mon cœur qui a dicté la lettre officielle ci-jointe, mais il fallait absolument obéir aux volontés de ma Cour, et lui prouver que j'avais accompli ses ordres. On me croit tellement prévenu en faveur de ce pays qu'on s'imagine que je ne me suis pas acquitté avec assez de chaleur de cette désagréable commission. Ayez donc la bonté de me répondre ce que vous voudrez à la charmante missive que vous recevez de moi, et ayez, de grâce, celle de me l'envoyer dans la journée de jendi prochain, pour que je puisse la faire passer au héros de Campo Formio par l'occasion du courier que M. de Woronzow expédiera vendredi prochain. Je ne vous demande pas de vous voir, cela ne me ferait que de la peine actuellement. J'attends un tems plus prospère ; peut-être viendra-t-il bientôt. Dum spiro spero."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, July. York Farm.—"Madame de Rochechouart vient de revenir de Paris, et elle apporte des détails bien intéressans sur tout ce qui se passe ouvertement et secrètement dans ce cloaque d'iniquité. Je suppose que vous serez bien aise de lui parler vous-même, et de l'interroger à fond sur plusieurs objets. Elle est en mesure de répondre à tout. Elle a tout vu avec sagesse et intelligence, et connaît à fond tous les meneurs, leurs caractères, leurs goûts, leurs vices, et les manières de les prendre. Ce qu'elle m'a dit sur les projets de ces scélérats contre nous confirme ce dont je me doutais depuis longtems. Ils ont déjà organisé dans leurs conventicules la République d'Autriche, qu'ils nomment Austrarie, Dieu sait pourquoi. Les Directeurs en sont nommés in petto, et j'en connais quelques-uns. Donnez-moi mes ordres pour Madame de Rochechouart. Vous ne regretterez pas de lui avoir parlé. Elle se rendra au bureau ou chez vous, le matin, et à l'heure que vous fixerez.

"Si vous voulez l'employer, elle retournera en France quand vous le lui direz. Quand vous voudrez me voir, vous me le ferez dire. Je n'attends que les nouvelles du brave Nelson, pour écrire à fond à ma Cour par courier, ou par estafette."

FRENCH AFFAIRS.

Report of a conversation with M. de Talleyrand [by Madame de Rochechouart].

1798, July.—"Je vais vous rendre compte d'une conversation que j'ai eue avec le Ministre des Affaires Etrangères le quinze de Juillet de cette année. Cette conversation, étant improvisée, imprévue, sans conséquence, vous y verrez peintes et expliquées naturellement les pensées du Ministre ; et les idées généralement adoptées par le Directoire. (J'ai fait la note de cette conversation aussitôt après avoir quitté le Ministre.)

Moi.—“Vous ne pensiez pas que l'Angleterre fut en état de soutenir une défense aussi énergique ; je crois que vous vous trompez aussi à l'égard de l'Empereur.”

Le Ministre.—“L'Angleterre ne peut pas se soutenir plus longtemps que dix-huit mois avec son système : et l'Empereur tout seul ne nous embarrasse pas aujourd'hui ; le dernier traité de paix le livre entre nos mains ; nous lui avons fait un bien petit présent, ou pour mieux dire, un fatal présent, en lui donnant l'état de Venise ; il lui faut cent milles hommes pour le conserver ; par là, nous épuisons ses finances comme s'il faisait la guerre. S'il se détermine pour la guerre ; faites attention que nous disposons des Républiques qui l'entourent. Elles sont déjà inquiètes, ambitieuses ; elles seront bientôt guerrières. Nous avons toutes les places fortes du Piémont, tous les postes, passages et communications de la Suisse. Nous voilà entièrement maître de la Méditerranée, ce qui est d'une grande importance. Quand au Rhin nous sommes mieux que jamais, l'Allemagne est entièrement découverte ; l'Empire est dessous, et croyez moi, par la suite nous ferons quelques choses de la Suisse.”

Moi.—“D'après ce que vous me dites, il me semble que la paix tiendra l'Autriche, et que l'Empereur a tout à perdre à attendre du tems une meilleure situation ; ici son intérêt étant très clair, je crois qu'il le verra comme nous le voyons ; il doit donc en résulter la guerre.”

Le Ministre.—“Non jamais (soyez en sûr)—le Cabinet de l'Empereur ne se déclarera le premier ; on nous laissera encore aller longtemps, où nous voudrions et comme nous voudrions. Ce Cabinet est désuni.—M. de Thugut ne nous aime pas, mais le crédit de M. de Cobenzel tient au système de la paix : à moins qu'il n'y ait quelques changemens dans les intrigues de cette Cour, qui en est toute remplie. L'Impératrice sera retenue par la crainte de voir s'abîmer le trône de sa mère, la reine de Naples. D'ailleurs quand je leur supposerais assez d'énergie pour déclarer la guerre, quels sont leurs moyens ?—des finances en mauvais ordres, plus d'argent de l'Angleterre, un mauvais système de guerre, des officiers lâches, ignorans, et corruptibles. Si vous avez rencontré Berthier, il vous aura peut-être dit combien ont coûtés quelques états-majors de leurs armées ; il y a des choses incroyables à cet égard. Si nous entrons en Allemagne, nous ferons une guerre terrible, nos armées ne nous coûteront pas un sol. La guerre sera pour nous un système d'économie toute pure.”

Moi.—“Je vois que vous supposez toujours que l'Empereur sera tout seul dans la contestation. Votre ambition démesurée, et votre plan de changer le système social de l'Europe, sont à découverts aujourd'hui pour tout le monde. Du milieu de leurs ruines, l'Italie, la Hollande et la Suisse vous abhorrent. Le Roi de Prusse et la Russie, menacés comme les autres, se convainquent chaque jour qu'il est question de leur sûreté personnelle. Cette conviction ne peut-elle pas amener une coalition ?

Le Ministre.—“ Nous sommes revenus de la peur de coalitions ; il y a un principe de haine, de jalousie, de défiance entre les Cabinets de Berlin et de Vienne qui avant tout les guidera, et même les aveuglera dans leurs négociations. J’ai obtenu, comme vous savez, que Siéyès serait envoyé en Prusse. Il a dans son portefeuille de quoi déterminer ce Cabinet au repos. Nous lui donnons pour rien, ce qu’il n’oserait espérer après la plus belle campagne. Siéyès est très habile et nous sommes très généreux. Quand à la Russie elle fera des menaces d’un côté, et des promesses de l’autre, qui ne meneront à rien. Cet empereur n’a pas une politique guerroyante ; il s’occupe de petites choses. Je sais que l’Angleterre travaille beaucoup pour le décider ; mais elle n’est pas favorisée. Certes si la Russie le voulait sincèrement et grandement, nous pourrions être fort embarrassés ; surtout l’Angleterre l’aidant de son argent. Mon opinion particulière est, que si Catherine eut vécu cette année-ci, nous aurions courus de grands risques par notre conduite folle et gigantesque.

Moi.—“ Je pense tout cela comme vous, et puisque nous parlons avec confiance, j’ajouterai que si la République était renversée, nous y gagnerions tous et peut-être vous aussi.”

[Postscript by Lord Grenville.]

“To this my informant adds that Talleyrand wrote to the King this year to offer his services, and to give assurances of his attachment. Malhabile qui s’y fie !”

LORD GRENVILLE TO RUFUS KING.

Secret.

1798, August 3. Dropmore.—“ I am very much obliged to you for the interesting information contained in your letter of the 31st July. The spirit which the United States continue to display in the present crisis of their affairs affords the best prospect, and the surest means, for the maintenance of their consideration abroad, and of their tranquillity at home. You know how sincerely I concur with you in every wish that you can form for the success of the wise and dignified measures which your Government is pursuing.

“ In my opinion the tone of Talleyrand’s last letter to Gerry, on sending him his passports, plainly shews that those measures have already produced a great part of the effect to be expected from them. But if this affectation of friendship and conciliation succeeds in imposing upon your people, and induces them or their government to relax its efforts, the whole of what has been done will be useless ; and the same course will be to be again pursued with less expectation of ultimate success. You know I am never very sanguine in what I say to you of continental affairs in Europe. If all or any of those Powers whose ruin is either completed, or in the regular progress of completion, had shewn half the energy that has been displayed by the British and American people, they would have been safe, we should have been triumphant, and America would have been a tranquil and uninterested spectator of the troubles which the infernal spirit of atheism and modern philosophy had produced in France. It would be too much to persuade oneself that they are yet fairly roused from their fatal lethargy, and impressed with a true sense of the nature of the crisis in which they are placed. There are however, just now, appearances more favourable with respect to Austria and Russia than we have lately been accustomed to see. Between the former of these Powers and Naples a defensive alliance has been concluded for mutual support against France; and any attack by the French against Naples for receiving or supplying our ships (which the Neapolitan government has engaged to do) is to be considered by Austria as a casus federis. This stipulation seems to render the renewal of the war almost certain, and Austria is preparing for it accordingly. The conferences at Seltz are entirely broken off. Cobenzl and Neuchateau had both orders to demand satisfaction on the affair of Bernadotte, and as neither was authorized to give it, nothing was settled on that head. Cobenzl had also orders to remonstrate and treat on the subject of the Italian and Swiss revolutions since Campo Formio; and Neuchateau refused to talk on these events, which had happened, as he said, by the will of the Italian and Helvetic nations. Nothing was therefore agreed to, but the whole negotiation was referred back to the ordinary channels of intercourse, and the negotiators separated, as I learn, with great mutual politeness.

"I mention these particulars to you in confidence, not to be talked of here, but with full liberty to state them to your Government, to whom, I conceive, it may be very important to be accurately informed of them. If there was more energy and union on the Continent, I should think the prospects of the present moment very favourable; but, be the conduct or the state of the Continent what it may, you may be assured that neither the principles nor the conduct of this country will vary." Copy.

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 5. Walmer Castle.—"I have reason to think the connexions of Lord E. Fitzgerald will be active in endeavouring to represent the Bill of Attainder against him as unjust and unprecedented; and I have had a letter on the subject from the Duke of Richmond, to which I have returned as yet only a very general answer, not knowing in fact the degree of evidence on which the Bill is founded, nor the state of precedents. If you have an opportunity without trouble to yourself of looking into books to see what cases have occurred here of such proceedings against persons deceased, or of talking to any of our lawyers upon it, I shall be very much obliged to you if you will send me all the learning you collect, or as much of it as will conveniently travel by the post. I feel very impatient to hear something more on the subject of union, and have been ruminating on some new ideas on the subject, which I will endeavour to put on paper, and send you for consideration and correction, as soon as the attractions of the sea-side will allow me."

THE EARL OF ELGIN TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 5. Berlin.—"Pardon me for recommending the utmost secrecy on my having made the communications contained in my official letters of this date.

"I have not time, nor indeed would it be interesting to your Lordship for me to repeat a variety of proofs which Count Cobenzl gave yesterday in his private conversations with Prince Reuss, Prince Repnin, and Count Panin (to which I was occasionally admitted) in testimony of his political sentiments such as I have traced them. But I have grounds to believe that, among his various reasons for quitting Vienna at this conjuncture, one which he will give to be understood is that the Emperor means to attend the army in case of a war; not as Commander, but in order to be on the spot, and to give all necessary orders without delay. And that Baron Thugut will accompany him. If so, Count Cobenzl would not wish to remain at Vienna, where little business will be done. Those who know Count Cobenzl intimately, are inclined to think that, seeing the probability of a war, and knowing the aversion to it of the inhabitants of Vienna on whom he relies, he has thought prudent to leave to Baron Thugut the odium of the measure. Count Cobenzl appeared a little hurt on the arrival of the intelligence brought by this messenger from Petersburg; having, in the course of the day, professed it to be his only object in going to Russia to procure support from them for Austria.

"I am quite ashamed to bring myself so frequently under your Lordship's notice, but I am justified in believing that you enter into the delicacy of my position; having, on the one hand, the permission to gratify a very ardent desire of giving relief to the deep affliction of my family, and being, on the other, detained here by the strongest sense of duty. What I would venture to request (and it would be a very essential favour) would be that your Lordship would take the trouble of writing a line to Lady Elgin, saying that business of a most important nature is unexpectedly come before me here, and may keep me longer at Berlin than I had foreseen. A word from your Lordship to that effect would, I know, satisfy my mother's anxiety. I cannot yet foresee what turn matters may take here. Count Panin proposes making his communications this day to Count Haugwitz. And the knowledge of the conduct of the Court of Petersburg may possibly give great importance to the discussions between that Minister and Count Cobenzl. At all events, your Lordship may be well assured that I shall not quit my post as long as I conceive my services can be of any use."

W. PITT TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 6. Walmer Castle.—"I see no difficulty in issuing 5,000*l.* by a Treasury warrant out of the vote of credit to Almeida, or any one authorised by him to give a receipt for the service of Portugal. But I think the issue should be recommended in a letter from you to the Treasury, in the same manner as any issue for secret service.

"I have felt rather uneasy at the very imperfect accounts of the discovery obtained from the Irish traitors ; and I wrote, two days since, to Lord Cornwallis, with the view of drawing from him a little more information, and also of urging the necessity of bringing forward the great work of Union, which can never be so well accomplished as now.

"I have written to Long to furnish the 5,000*l.* on any application from your Office."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 6. Somerset Place.—"I have read Monsieur Malouet's paper with infinite satisfaction. Indeed he has wrote in French what I proposed to state this day to the Cabinet, only that my ideas go upon a larger scale ; perfectly however within our certain reach if we lay aside extravagant projects on the coast of France. I confess myself out of all patience on that subject. We have the means of commanding a glorious peace if those means are steadily and vigorously pursued, and it would be unpardonable to throw it all away in quest of imaginary and hazardous projects, equally ruinous to us and to those who are the objects of them."

SIR JAMES CRAUFURD to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, August 7. Hamburg.—"I had the honour to receive by the last post your Lordship's notification of my appointment as minister plenipotentiary to the circle of Lower Saxony.

"I beg leave to return your Lordship my most sincere thanks for your goodness in recommending me to the King for this office. I am the more sensible of it, and the more flattered by it, as the difficulty of placing people in the foreign line has undoubtedly been considerably increased by the events which have occurred within the last five years. And I shall think myself extremely fortunate if, by my exertions here, I shall prove myself in any degree worthy of the choice you have been so good as to make of me.

"There is one object, one of the earliest of my attention on arriving here, in which I fear I have not much to expect. I mean the establishing a correspondence with Holland by means of a commercial house. I have caused the most extensive enquiries to be made, observing the necessary circumspection ; but I have been uniformly told that, such is their fear of exposing themselves to the resentment of the Government, none of the merchants or any people of credit in Holland ever write any political news of importance. From the difficulty which I have experienced in attempting to establish a correspondence, I have thought of sending some proper person into the country who might observe what is passing in the ports ; but I wait to know your Lordship's sentiments on this subject, as, in all probability, you have many people in England who offer themselves for this service, whom you employ in this way, and I therefore might be incurring an unnecessary expence. And the delay occasioned by my waiting for your instructions is inconsiderable. But I apprehend that, if I am to take any step of this kind, it should not be deferred much longer, as, if anything is undertaken from the ports of Holland or Flanders, the autumnal season will probably be chosen for that purpose.

"At the same time that I am exerting myself to the utmost, it is but just that your Lordship should be made acquainted with the obstacles that I have to encounter, in order that I may not be unmeritedly blamed in case certain parts of the business should at any time appear not to have been sufficiently attended to.

"What I allude to is this. When Siéyès was appointed to Berlin, I conceived that a very active communication would probably, if not certainly, take place between him and the Jacobins here. I therefore wrote to Lord Elgin stating this idea, and recommending to his particular vigilance all persons passing and repassing between Berlin and Hamburgh; and hinting that I thought it would be advisable to have persons at the different inns to furnish him with intelligence of this nature. There was surely nothing illicit in this, nor any thing but what is practised by, I was going to say, every foreign minister; and which I am sure ought to be practised by all. To this letter I received the enclosed answer. It seems to be written rather in haste; and indeed there is no other way of accounting for the obscurity of it. For how what I recommended—and I can assure your Lordship it was nothing more than I have stated—can be construed into an interference in the internal concerns of the country I am at a loss to conceive. That an English minister should watch the steps of a French minister, and of all those who communicate with him, appears to me the first of his duties; nor, I apprehend, would any Government feel otherwise than obliged to a man who, by his vigilance, should discover the existence of a Jacobin conspiracy in their country; far would they be from complaining of proper, secret, circumspect attempts to unravel one.

"I am sensible that what I have here said might, in the eyes of some people, have an invidious appearance; but I can assure your Lordship very sincerely that I have no such motive. I have no ill will towards Lord Elgin; but, on the contrary, really esteem him for his good nature and honesty of character; but the matter in question is connected with so important a part of my mission that it is incumbent on me, in justice to myself, to show that all that depends upon me has been done."

Enclosure.

THE EARL OF ELGIN TO SIR J. CRAUFURD.

Private.

1798, July 14. Berlin.—"Your letter in cipher came to Berlin during my absence. I do not yet see how far I can continue to adopt the measure you propose. Nothing can be more active than the police against foreign ministers. Everything we do, and every one we see is known. And I am aware ministry at home would be very angry were I to allow any complaint to be made against me for interference in the internal concerns of this country.

"The negotiation between Austria and Prussia, under the mediation of Russia, is drawing towards a close. The Prussians seem very anxious to confine themselves within the prescribed line of neutrality, and that I presume to be motivated by the presence of Siéyès, whose solicitations they are very anxious to prevent. I believe Prince Repnin will soon quit Berlin. He is yet undecided, and therefore what I mention is only between ourselves. But he loses expectation of doing anything to purpose. Siéyès hitherto is very quiet. Poland, however, seems to occupy him."

LORD GRENVILLE to EARL SPENCER.

1798, August 9. Dropmore.—"I this morning received from the Office the copy of Mitchell's letter to the Admiralty. It does not appear to me that Wrangel's proposal is very materially different from what M. D'Asp stated to me, but I should be very glad to know how it strikes you before I send any answer to the official letter. There is a letter from the King of Sweden to the King on this subject amounting almost to a declaration of war. I have desired Hammond to send it to you." Copy.

EARL SPENCER to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 9. Admiralty.—"The only material difference in the Swedish captain's proposal appears to be his refusing to go and join the Lisbon convoy at Spithead, from whence it is about to depart, and which, if he does not agree to, will produce considerable difficulty in effectually watching him and preventing his taking the convoy into French or Spanish ports. By a letter we had this morning from Captain Mitchell, he seems to have entertained a doubt whether it was not required of him to take the Swedish convoy under his protection as he would a convoy of his own; whereas, if I understand the agreement with M. D'Asp correctly, all that we wish is that some ship or ships of ours should accompany it; and we have answered his letter accordingly. We have had an account to-day of another Swedish convoy being brought into the Downes yesterday, but the particulars have not reached us."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798,] August 10. Walmer Castle.—"I have received your letter with its enclosures, which I return, and have, as you desire, wrote to Mr. Bruce. I perfectly adopt the idea that there ought to be some such offices as some of those in question, which ought to be sinecures, and given as rewards, in place of being looked upon for the performance of duties. But I am sure, when you examine the subject with your own eyes, you will be satisfied that Mr. Bruce's office cannot be permitted to remain on that footing; or, at least, if it is, some other must be appointed not to be a sinecure, but to do those very duties which Bruce's commission supposes to be done by him. In fact, some of the material ones actually have been done by him. I don't mention all the researches made by him under my directions at the early period of the institution of the present establishment of Indian government, because, whatever was done under that order, was strictly connected with the Office out of whose funds he was paid, and by whose clerks he was assisted. But, more recently, when the situation of the country in a peculiar manner called upon me to look to the internal defence of the country, I was naturally desirous to know what had been done by our ancestors under similar circumstances; and we all knew that an accurate research into the proceedings of Queen Elizabeth, at the period of the threatened Spanish invasion, must afford material suggestions. I directed Bruce to make a research, and, when many of the original documents were brought to me, I was shocked to see that, in a country like this, its ancient muniments should be going so rapidly to destruction as these seemed to be going. The research, however, was made, and a collection from it prepared, which contains all that could be found, and perhaps all that practically useful for the purpose I had in view was worth having; and it was some consolation to find that, in a period of as much energy as was that of Queen Elizabeth's preparation against the Spanish Armada, ideas and measures similar to those which I was meditating, had been, many of them, anticipated by that able Princess. How was this done? for there was not one article necessary for the execution of it in the Register's department. It was done in a room at the India Board, with the aid of the clerks there, and such further aid as could be hired for the purpose; but it was done to the great interruption of the business of the Indian Department, with which, in truth, it had no concern. More recently Mr. Pitt and the Duke of Portland wished him to be employed, and applied to me for the purpose of searching into all the records, both here and in Scotland, with a view to the Irish union; and, accordingly, after much labour and research carried on by the same aid and by the same means as the former research had been, a Report was made to the Duke of Portland, printed and distributed by him. The printing excepted, all the other expense was defrayed, as formerly, out of the establishment of the Indian Office. Within these same months, Mr. Pitt (and, I understand, the Duke of Portland) have expressed an earnest wish that an accurate search should be made into all the Irish records and correspondence in this country, in order to put Ministers in possession of all the information which those materials may afford respecting the connexion between the two countries. Those who know me will not impute to me any disposition to obstruct any public service that can be suggested to me, or executed by any body who may be more immediately under my protection; but your Lordship must feel that, if without the means of doing any duty whatever except what I can accidentally afford to him, he is to be called upon, out of a salary of 132*l.*, to bestow twelve or fourteen hours per day upon the business of his Office, it is not perfectly fair to him; and, I am sure, impossible for me, with any propriety, to interrupt the business of another Department, in order to aid business with which it has no concern. These have been my sentiments for near two years past; but, perhaps from a ridiculous feeling that Mr. Bruce was originally a protégé of mine, and still more from an idea that you had not much disposition either to the measure or the man, I delayed till lately urging the arrangement; and then I only did it upon Mr. Pitt stating to me that, if I wished it to be done, you would rather I would do it without your participation. Being decisively of opinion that the measure is a right one, and being convinced that there is not another man in the world to be found who would rest the joy of his life in being buried in old records, and happy whenever he should be called upon by any Secretary of State to report the result of his researches, I am perfectly ready to avow the responsibility of recommending it; but I am sure your Lordship will not believe that I can have any wish to hurt any person under your protection; as, indeed, till I received your letter, I had never heard nor understood that there could be any collision among them."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 12. Wimbledon.—"Two [hours] ago I received a letter from General Don with some enclosures. They do not give a very promising picture of the dispositions of the Court of Prussia. How far it is proper to take any other steps than those already used to counteract the intrigues of the French Government you are the best judge; but it would be wrong in me not to convey to you all that has reached me on the subject."

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 13. Walmer Castle.—"Your learning respecting attainders is quite satisfactory as to law and precedent. I have sent your notes to Carthew, desiring him to make a copy, and forward the original to you. I own I should like also to see on what grounds you think the reason and justice of such a proceeding equally unquestionable. It may be said that the law of forfeiture equally affects heirs without their being heard; but then the person whose life is interested in the cause, and who is best acquainted with the case, has had an opportunity of making a defence. Here the whole proceeding may be ex parte; or at least the defence rest with those who are incapable of making it to advantage. I state these doubts of course with a strong wish to have them solved. I wait most impatiently to hear from Ireland, though I do not think there is so much mischief to be expected from what has passed as you seem to do. I have written by mistake on a half sheet and have not time before the post to add any thing to it. I am extremely well, and I hope gaining gradually a stock of health, for occasions when it will be more wanted than here.

"I shall probably be in town in about a week."

THE EARL OF CARYSFORT TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 15. Dublin.—"Though you are, of course, well informed about all that passes here, I cannot close my letter without saying something upon what I have been able to observe of the state of the public. I have reason to think that the Lord Lieutenant's sentiments both as to men and measures coincide so much with mine that I shall have particular satisfaction from the support which I shall give to his government. But it is certain that the lenity he has shown to so many leaders of rebellion is very unpopular here, and condemned more generally and more loudly than you may be aware of. I am however of opinion these clamours are not to be dreaded, and proceed in a great measure from certain political intriguers, who are apprehensive that he means to rely more upon his own judgement than theirs. In this description I do not include the Chancellor. The noise will soon subside, and those who are most forward in making it, when they find they cannot gain their ends, will be eager to atone for their conduct by any compliances that may be required from them; for there is no union or concert between them; on the contrary their distrust of each other is notorious and extreme. The policy to be pursued for the future security of the country is however a question of as much delicacy as importance. Whatever I hear of the opinions of others, and whatever suggests itself to me, I shall communicate to you when we meet; and in the meantime shall only observe that the minds of all with whom I converse seem to me earnestly fixed upon an Union. How far the present circumstances of Great Britain, the present numbers of both Houses of Parliament there, and the state of the war, may admit of the Government turning their thoughts to a measure of such consequence I cannot guess; but I am persuaded that while the terror of the late rebellion is fresh, it would be received as a most important boon to Ireland. It is what I never have wished for, and what indeed I have always been disinclined to, perhaps from a view of my own private interest, and because I thought it very possible to do without it; but I have seen and heard so much of the furious animosities by which the people of this country are impelled against each other, that I am forced to alter my opinion, and really believe that we can never be well governed without it."

H. ELLIOTT to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, August 15. Dresden.—“I beg leave to trouble your Lordship with a few lines, upon a subject, which, though not immediately connected with the duties of my situation at this Court, will, I presume, be thought worthy of your Lordship’s attention.

“In the present contest between the established Governments of Europe, and the destructive ambition of the French Republic, civilised society has been exposed, perhaps, to greater danger from the extension of the tenets of impiety and anarchy, through the medium of the press, than even from the success of the French arms. The partisans of revolution and innovation have not been more active in any country than in Germany; and, unfortunately, the German universities have been the centre of a spirit of democracy, which has from thence been diffused into all the various classes of what are styled the learned professions.

“Among the other topics which assist the sale of political pamphlets and journals in the empire, there is none more universally resorted to than an indiscriminate abuse of the British Government and all its measures. These secretly obtain the support of those Cabinets which have hitherto shown themselves as ill inclined towards Great Britain, as blind to their own real interests. Although the German language is not supposed in England to be the channel through which any extensive effect can be produced beyond the limits of the empire, I beg leave to observe to your lordship that, in the northern countries of Europe, in Denmark, Sweden, and Russia, German is more generally read than French, particularly among the middling ranks of society. And the gross misrepresentations of conduct, and misstatements of facts, contained in German publications, seldom meet with a contradiction; but Anarchists, Deists, and Republicans have, through them, vented their malice against England, without encountering an opponent. It must indeed be confessed that, by such means, they have contrived, in some degree, to render unpopular the only Government and the only cause for the success of which all honest men of all countries ought equally to unite their efforts.

“The splendid reputation of the Rev. Mr. Marsh of St. John’s College, Cambridge, for deep erudition has, without doubt, not escaped your Lordship’s notice. His theological works, his translation of Michaelis, and his assiduous labours during many years residence at Leipsic, have given his name great weight among the literati of Germany, particularly as he possesses the very unusual talent of being able to write equally well in German and in English. To this I must add that there does not exist a better man, nor a more loyal subject, or one who has, upon all occasions, proved himself more attached to the true interests of his country. It is from this principle that Mr. Marsh has already undertaken the defence of Great Britain against the attack of Achenholz and other writers, published in German periodical works.

"Having entered the field of controversy, he finds the cause he supports worthy of a more important work, and he has resolved to lay aside, as much as possible, his other pursuits, to stand forth the champion of his country, by publishing in English and in German, a general defence of the measures of the British Government since the beginning of the French Revolution. With this view, he has applied to me for various publications and papers necessary for the completion of his purpose, which I have no means of obtaining here. Perceiving the general expectation raised in Germany from Mr. Marsh's laudable undertaking, I have written to him that, although I cannot myself furnish him with the materials he asks for, I consider his intended work as being of sufficient importance as to justify me in venturing to solicit your Lordship's assistance, through the means of Mr. Hammond, with whose enlightened zeal for the honour and interest of Government I am well acquainted, and to whom I have written upon the subject.

"May I therefore be allowed to encourage Mr. Marsh to send Mr. Hammond a list of the various pamphlets and publications he stands in need of, to be transmitted to him to Leipsic by any of the King's messengers who may be going occasionally through that place to Vienna. I presume also to suggest that it would be eligible that such pamphlets and publications should be sent to Mr. Marsh free of expense; as I am fully convinced that the work he is engaged in will be materially conducive to benefit the political interests of Great Britain, in all those countries where the German language is the usual vehicle for information."

FRENCH AFFAIRS.

Memorandum by Lord Grenville.

1798, August 16.—"M. de Calonne told me to-day that Madame de Rochechouart in her late journey to Paris had met Rewbell at the house of Talleyrand. That in the course of conversation the former asked what the dispositions of the English Government were, and when she professed total ignorance on this head, he followed his former question up by asking (if England wished for peace) whether it would not consent to an armistice, in the course of which many difficulties might be smoothed. This she said was spoken in a manner that seemed to indicate a wish that it should be repeated in England, and was accompanied with some expressions that they did not see why it should be concluded in England that the Directory was averse to peace. But as she could make no answer to these questions the conversation (as M. de Calonne stated to me) ended there.

"I am inclined to believe that more passed, and that this Madame de Rochechouart, who has openly announced her intention to return to Paris, has undertaken to make this communication and to bring back the answer. I made no reply whatever to any part of this statement, but immediately turned the conversation off to other points."

WILLIAM PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 16. Walmer Castle.—“If I thought there could be any hesitation or difference of opinion on the subject of the answer to be sent to Russia, I should not lose a moment in coming to town. But I am persuaded we shall all agree most cordially in going as far to meet this overture as our pecuniary resources will allow. On that point I am happy to think we are much more at ease than in the period of October 1796, and I think it perfectly clear that we may safely go the full length which we did in our proposal of a treaty at that time. I mean that, on condition of Russia furnishing an army of 60,000 men, we should engage to pay 300,000*l.* preparation money on the ratification or, if necessary, on the signature of the treaty; and afterwards 100,000*l.* per month, with the power of discontinuing payment on a notice and advance of two months; and should also pay after the war, as a debt, a further sum to be computed at the rate of 50,000*l.* per month (or even if necessary a sum greater by one-third) for the time the treaty shall be acted upon. You will observe that this goes (as far as money is in question) to the full extent of the utmost concessions authorized by your secret dispatch in 1796, Number 20. Another concession was there admitted for reducing the number of Russian troops to 50, or even 40,000; which I should think now either ought to be excluded, or directed only to be yielded in case it should be absolutely impossible otherwise to conclude the treaty. I see no necessity for inserting what was proposed to be the 2nd article of the treaty, subjecting it to the approbation of Parliament. All subsidy treaties are so, of course, as to their permanent effect; but, as to the remainder of this year, we are both authorized and enabled by the vote of credit; and with a view to a permanent engagement, it seems to me to stand best in the usual form, without any special reserve that implies distrust of the measure. The provision in the 5th article for discontinuing the subsidy on notice, seems still a necessary precaution in case we should unexpectedly find the remittance too inconvenient; which, though much less likely than in 1796, will not be thought impossible.

“This is perhaps the point most likely to occasion difficulty, as I see from Whitworth’s dispatch, Number 56, he had in that negotiation agreed (though contrary to his instructions) to wave it. He seems indeed totally to have mis-conceived the view with which it was inserted. I suppose the treaty can hardly be made at present to last longer than for the year 1799, though (with the liberty on our part of discontinuing on notice) a longer term, or during the war, would be preferable for us.

“I had written thus far when I received your note by the post this morning. I have determined in consequence to come to town, and will be there between twelve and one on Saturday. I could not without a good deal of inconvenience to others, as well as myself, come sooner; and I hope no time will be lost with respect to the Russian business, as you will probably prepare the instructions in the meantime.

"With respect to Ireland, a day can make no difference. I am quite of opinion that the dispatch, even with the corrections I have suggested, is better withheld.

"I hope your accounts from Sir Morton Eden give sufficient reason to believe that Austria has really taken its decision."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 19. Wimbledon.—"Mr. Pitt came out with me yesterday in the carriage to Wimbledon, and we naturally were led to pursue a little the train of our deliberations in Downing Street. Mr. Pitt stated a doubt how far the country would adopt the idea cheerfully, and we agreed nothing could be more prejudicial to every interest, if they were revolted by it. As usual the subject haunted me in the course of the night, and, when I rose in the morning, I put down in writing the train of thinking in which the subject had cast up to me. I showed it at breakfast to Mr. Pitt, who seems to feel more strongly than he did before the doubts that were floating in his mind, and we agreed that I should send the enclosed to you for your consideration.

"The Duke of York has been here this morning, and you may safely pledge yourself to leave two of the regiments now there, and to add another regiment of infantry within six weeks or thereabout. It is likewise our intention to strengthen the regiments now there, so that, in fact, the British force will be rather increased than diminished by the arrangements now making. Say nothing more of cavalry, for, although a regiment of cavalry might be got, if essential for any very beneficial purpose, it could not for a considerable time be done without material inconvenience."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 21. Richmond.—"Je serai demain chez vous entre trois et quatre heures, et je vous attendrai pour avoir la satisfaction de causer un peu avec vous sur nos affaires, et sur la nouvelle que vous avez l'amitié de me communiquer. Je vous avoue que j'ai l'incrédulité de St. Thomas sur la nouvelle que l'officier Turc a apporté d'Egypte à Constantinople; et, à moins que vous n'ayez reçu d'autre part la confirmation, la frayeur d'un Turc ignorant n'est pas une autorité valable. Au reste, je les aime mieux en Egypte ou en Crimée, ces gueux de Français, qu'à Thessalonique d'où ils auraient pu donner la main à Passanan Ouglu, lui laisser des officiers et des ingénieurs, et aller eux-mêmes attaquer la Maison d'Autriche en Croatie, en Esclavonie, et en Dalmatie où on n'est nullement préparé à se défendre. Le climat d'Egypte fera ce que les armes Russes auraient fait en Crimée, si Bonaparte aurait pu y arriver.

"Ce qui me paraît le plus improbable est que Nelson ait devancé, et qu'en retournant de là, il n'ait pas rencontré les Français ; d'autant plus que dans cette saison les vents dans toute ces parties de la Méditerranée, pendant les trois mois d'été, sont constamment au west, et que celui qui navigue vers l'Égypte doit aller fort vite ; du lieu que celui qui part de là ne peut avancer qu'en convoyant. Ainsi Nelson devait, à son retour, ne pas manquer les Français.

"A tout événement, il faut se réjouir de ce débarquement en Égypte, car c'est une armée perdue pour la France."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 24. Richmond.—"Je vous envoie ce que j'écrirai à l'Empereur. Examinez, je vous prie, si je vous ai bien compris ; et si j'ai ajouté ou omi quelque chose de ce que vous m'avez dit, ajoutez ou effacez vous-même, et renvoyez-moi mon papier, car c'est la copie d'un brouillon que j'ai écrit si vite, que je ne puis plus le déchiffrer moi-même ; et que le seul homme qui peut déchiffrer ma mauvaise écriture quand je me presse d'écrire, a passé deux jours à copier cette pièce.

"J'espère que vous enverrez un de vos couriers avec le mien, tant pour porter les pouvoirs au M. Withworth, que pour pouvoir vous rapporter la nouvelle de ce qui sera fait à Pétersbourg, en conséquence de ces dépêches. En me renvoyant l'incluse, ayez la bonté de me faire savoir quand vous comptez envoyer votre courier, pour que le mien puisse être prêt, et partir en même temps.

"Je vous prie aussi de faire mettre dans la gazette l'arrangement que vous avez déjà agréé pour les passeports au sujets Anglais, afin que je puisse l'envoyer à l'Empereur. Si d'aujourd'hui au départ du courier vous ne venez pas en ville, et que vous recevez quelques nouvelles intéressantes, que je puisse me faire le mérite de les communiquer à l'Empereur, ayez la bonté de me les communiquer en m'écrivant."

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, August 25. Dropmore.—"Je vous renvoie votre dépêche, dans laquelle j'ai trouvé ce que j'avais à vous dire, énoncé avec beaucoup plus de netteté et de clarté que je peux me flatter d'y avoir mis. C'est précisément le sens des explications dont j'ai été chargé. Si j'avais quelque chose à y ajouter ce serait peut-être la remarque simple mais frappante, que pour les frais de l'année courante, on a imposé ici sur chaque particulier un impôt calculé sur le dixième de son revenu disponible, et que si quelques-uns ont trouvé le moyen de se soustraire à cet impôt, d'autres (et en plus grand nombre) l'ont augmenté par des contributions volontaires, jusqu'à le montant du cinquième de leur revenu. Ce qui prouve non seulement l'effort que nous faisons, mais aussi la nécessité absolue où le gouvernement se trouve de consulter l'opinion publique ; aujourd'hui si bien prononcée en faveur des mesures vigoureuses, mais qui pourrait si facilement être changée en la choquant par des mesures même qui, sous d'autres rapports, auraient pû être utiles.

"Nous n'avons absolument rien de nouveau. J'ai chargé Hammond de vous expliquer mes difficultés au sujet de l'insertion dans la gazette officielle, de l'arrangement relatif aux passeports." Copy. French.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 26. Dublin.—"I have this moment received your very unwelcome letter of the 21st, which too truly establishes the fact that Buonaparté has made his landing good at Alexandria. The after game, as far as Nelson can be concerned in it, may prosper, but I fear very much that the Turk will add one more (from internal commotions assisted by this armament) to the melancholy chapter of fraternised governments. Still, however, I have as little doubt but that Buonaparté must ultimately be undone.

"Our Irish news from Mayo is unfortunately a blank, for the mail coach with the despatches was stopped by a party of rebels, who collected in the night at the eleven-mile-stone from Dublin near Kilcock, and took the mails and the despatches. From the other parts of Ireland there does not seem the slightest expectation of disturbance, except that parts of the county of Meath are feverish. It is impossible however not to see that the slightest check would produce the most mischievous effects. Under this idea Lord Cornwallis has given orders for a strict defensive until the force collected is amply sufficient to ensure success. He collects his infantry at Athlone, and his cavalry at Longford, and forms a reserve at Tullamore. But a considerable force is pushed over the Shannon, and if their numbers amount only to about 1,000 or 1,200 men, it is not impossible but that General Hutchinson has already attacked them.

"I am now to state to you the situation in which personally I have been placed by the measures taken by Lord Cornwallis on the 24th. I heard this news from the Officer Commanding the artillery here, having just received orders from Lieutenant-General Craig to parade 350 men for an immediate move. Though I was a little hurt at receiving orders in that way from Lieutenant-General Craig without the slightest communication (as usual) from Lord Cornwallis, I wrote instantly to him to offer and to request that I might move with my detachment, or that I might command the two detachments (namely, the Warwick and mine) and to offer my services in any way in which my local knowledge or any other circumstances could make me useful. To this I received a dry note thanking me for the offer, but stating 'that it was his intention that the detachments should be commanded by a Lieutenant-Colonel or a Major.' The next day, yesterday, my detachment was increased to 500 men, and I then wrote another note to press the same thing, and to intimate very strongly, though in the easiest terms, my confidence that if he left Dublin he would not leave me and my regiment to faire la guerre des pots de chambre. In answer he sent Lord Hobart to me to state verbally that 'he felt it awkward to write upon it, but that he was very sorry to be obliged to decline my offers which were very handsome.' In consequence of which Freemantle is gone with the command of both detachments amounting to near 900 men, and my present duty is to take care that the barracks are swept clean; nor is the slightest explanation given to me by Lord Cornwallis, who is this morning gone off with my detachment to Tullamore where they all arrive this night. Now as I have not the slightest military vanity, I have no difficulty in saying that this command would have been very painful to me from its responsibility; but I felt it a very serious and very marked duty which I was bound to undertake, and I most certainly feel that I am disgraced and degraded by the order which leaves me here at such a moment, and under such a commander as Lieutenant-General Craig, with whom I am upon the best terms, but who is an old woman. In consequence of all this, I have writ the enclosed to Lord Cornwallis, which I trust you will think very temperate; but I never will forgive you if you do not agree with me in thinking me and our Bucks cruelly used in being left at such a moment to take care of Newgate gaol, Kilmainham gaol, Bridewell infirmary, Penitentiary House, Prevots, Marshalsea prison, Naval Hospital, Bank of Ireland, exclusive of the usual guards (not very flattering) which you remember. In short I am so thoroughly sickened of the whole business that a very little more oil upon the flame will make it break out; for both the regiments, officers and men (except Lord Hertford, which, entre nous, is the secret history of Lord Cornwallis's refusal of my offer) are outrageous at the general treatment of this very meritorious body, on this very thankless, laborious, and now disgraceful duty; and as soon as the French are driven out of the country, I am persuaded that a memorial will be signed to both the Colonels, complaining of the manner in which we have been employed.

"But all this is nonsense when we look to the very serious and critical situation of the country if there should be any check, or if Lord Cornwallis should be killed; in either case I am persuaded that the mischief would be incalculable. I trust to his prudence and skill with thorough confidence for our security against the first contingency; and I am fully of opinion that, if we have no check in destroying the French, we shall have no rising, though it is possible that there will be partial and petty insurrections; but I tremble for fear of the latter, because I see no solution short of that which I proposed to you with so much personal pain to myself. Since I wrote that letter it has occurred to me that you might send to Lord Hobart (who is here) either an active commission of Lord Deputy to execute civil and usual business in Dublin, of which there are several precedents; or a dormant commission in case of Lord Cornwallis's death; or else send the dormant commission for me; but for God's sake remember that I will not, for any consideration, hold it for more than three weeks or a month; and that I only press it because I know that the appointment of the Chancellor and Speaker as Justices would instantly, from party feelings, create a rebellion."

Postscript. "Letters just arrived from General Hutchinson at Castlebar stating that he was arrived there yesterday morning, the 25th, with about 2,400 men of all sorts, and that he was going on in the evening; that all was quiet, and not a man had joined the French. No other news. Lord Altamont from Westport writes to the same effect. Letters from Meath of this day at 12 o'clock state all quiet at their chapels, and no rising."

RUFUS KING to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, August 26. Margate.—"If your information is not so late, the enclosed letter, which I pray you to return, will communicate intelligence of some importance.

"Talleyrand with much earnestness urged Mr. G[erry] to wait at Paris for instructions, which he expressed his belief to be on their way, and which would remove all his scruples respecting his power to treat separately with France. We see the explanation of this scheme in a motion that has been made in the House of Representatives to address the President, requesting him to instruct Mr. G[erry] to treat separately with France, on the basis laid down in the instructions originally given to him and [his] colleagues. The proposition was treated with great and uncommon indignity, and negatived by 51 against 31 voices."

LORD GRENVILLE to RUFUS KING.

1798, August 27. Drogheda.—"I return you your letters with many thanks. The papers to-day give us General Washington's letter, which is, I think, extremely well written, and calculated to produce the best effect. We have nothing more about Buonaparte or Nelson, nor can we, I think, expect to hear yet, as the letters from Constantinople were of so very recent a date.

"The French are, thank God, a good deal too late in their Irish expedition. Two months ago a debarkation would have been matter of some uneasiness; now, I trust, it cannot but terminate more advantageously for us than if the thing had not taken place." Copy.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 27. Dublin.—"The French had begun to entrench at Killalla, but on Saturday they seemed to have gathered confidence in consequence of some information that they had got of an intended rising at Sligo, and pushed out a great part of their force. But upon coming up with the pass at Ballina found it occupied by the 6th Dragoon Guards, and did not attempt it, but retired to their former ground. Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Thomas Chapman followed them, and writes as late as yesterday morning that they were busy in strengthening their entrenchments, and had warped their ships close in under their works. Chapman had a few infantry, but did not mean to act or to do more than to secure the pass. He says that a few Killalla inhabitants had joined them, but not one man from the country; and that he had found every assistance in men and tools. General Hutchinson writes from Castlebar on Saturday night that he was waiting for some guns which he had sent for, and which would be up in the night, and that on Sunday morning he should move with 3,400 troops and ten pieces of ordnance, and thought he should be able to attack them on Monday morning. Lake will be there by that time. The country are all loyal, and have furnished pioneers, and cars, and cattle to any extent.

"But the best news is that Lord Cavan writes from Londonderry that, on Saturday morning, the wherries which he had ordered to sea fell in off Lough Swilly with the Melampus and two other frigates (said to be the Doris and Dryad) and delivered Lord Cavan's information of the French ships, which has been acknowledged by Captain Moore or Lord Ranelagh (I cannot make out which) who went about immediately, and hoped to be at Killalla on Sunday by noon.

"The wind blew heavily on Saturday night against them, but we know that the French ships were there yesterday morning at 9 o'clock. It appears therefore that the chapter of Irish invasion will be soon closed. Every part of Meath and of the suspected counties perfectly quiet. The party who stopped the mail yesterday were all cut to pieces, about eleven o'clock yesterday, by some dragoons and yeomanry, and the mail coaches of this day are all arrived without escort.

"You will have seen O'Connor's impudent manifesto printed in the papers of this morning. I do not know what will be done with him, but I well know he ought instantly to be executed; for his intention at such a moment is too manifest."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 28. Dublin.—"The news of this day unluckily contradicts Sir Thomas Chapman's account of the frigates remaining in Killalla Bay, for it appears by General Hutchinson's letter of the 26th at noon, that the frigates had sailed early on that morning, and were out of sight when an officer from him went in with a flag to General Kilmaine to summon him. The answer had not been received. Hutchinson had received Lord Cornwallis's orders not to move, and remained at Castlebar with 3,400 troops, and the certainty that the French did not exceed 800. How far he may be deceived I know not, but it certainly looks as if he was now strong enough to brusquer la chose, and the loss of five or six days is incalculable. Lord Cornwallis was last night at Kilbeggan, 45 miles from Dublin; and is this night at Longford, 54 miles from it, so that he seems determined to keep the matter afloat till he has collected force enough to ensure success against any and every possible chance. I certainly do not know his reasons, but he clearly risks a great deal by this conduct, which after all may be wise, but which does not suit with the fever of the moment. The frigates which sailed on Saturday from Lough Swilly were the Diana, Cerberus, and (supposed to be) the Doris; and on Sunday morning about noon a very heavy cannonade was heard off Lough Swilly; but I fear, though the wind was at south west, the French frigates could not have got round so far from Killalla in that time. The Hazard sloop of 18 guns brought another of the Mauritius frigates with troops into Cork.

"You will have seen the details of the debate respecting the manifesto of Emmet, O'Connor, and M'Nevin. The House was unanimous (even the most violent anti-attainders) in the necessity of excepting these three from the indemnity, and giving them up to trial. Lord Castlereagh was the only dissentient, which between ourselves is not very wise; and stated that they had been immediately confined as close prisoners. This manifesto has evidently occasioned very great ferment, and ought, according to my poor ideas, to be pursued as the overt act of 'endeavouring to bring the King, his Parliament, and his government into odium and contempt'; which in itself is a new treason to which the compact of Government with them could not apply. There seems every disposition in the House to push the matter to its fullest extent, and there is much folly in our now no-Government interfering to check such a disposition. Lord Castlereagh is (to use our Eton phrase) to stay out sham till he gets Lord Cornwallis's directions on this matter. In the mean time, I am, as usual, very angry at being left in Dublin degraded and ridiculous."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 28. Dublin.—"One hour after I had closed my letter unfolded the official mis-statements of Hutchinson's force, and of the steps taken by the French. All that I wrote to you I received from Cooke, or from the different Offices; and, during the whole of yesterday, they attempted to keep as a profound secret the news of the entire defeat of our troops under Hutchinson, but actually commanded by Lake. The secret was instantly whispered; and I (who knew, and had told Cooke that I had proof that Lewins, the agent from O'Connor to France, had landed with them, and had sent up the account to his friends four hours before Government received theirs) soon heard the fact, which can hardly be mis-stated because nothing could be more complete. Our artillery (8 pieces) evidently had the advantage, and every thing promised most fairly when the stray shot of some of the French guns opened on our infantry, who gave way instantly in the most cowardly manner, particularly (as I hear) the Fraser fencibles and the Kilkenny militia. The enemy occupied Castlebar, and last night they had pushed on to Tuam. Lord Cornwallis was at Athlone and states that the enemy had been joined by great numbers, and that he was not in force to move forward to attack them. I understand from the Quarter-Master-General's Office that this night he is to be joined by the Guards, 2nd, 29th, and 100th, all of which are invaluable, for nothing more could be more abominable than the misconduct and cowardice of the Irish militia.

"In the midst of all this we have no Government, or any thing like one, in the capital, where people talk of a rising with the same coolness as they would of any other event. It is known that the rebel leaders (not in prison) all left Dublin yesterday, and the consternation in Dublin must invite all the mischief that can be done. I still am persuaded that there will be no rising in Dublin, but I am most sure that there will be risings in Meath and Kildare. But the real mischief is the no-government in the no-hands of Lord Castlereagh and General Craig. I have been urging, but without any success, that a Committee of Council (of which I am not) should assemble and sit to carry into execution the Lord Lieutenant's orders, and to provide for the security of Parliament and of Dublin; with the hopes that a Government so constituted might supply in the publick mind the absence of the Executive Government, and might (which is the real reason and object of my anxiety) find itself seated in the saddle in case of Lord Cornwallis's death. For God's sake do not hesitate but send a Lord Deputy, which would at once solve every difficulty, either as temporary, or as a provisional government; for I am convinced as I am of my existence that Lord Cornwallis's death would, rebus sic stantibus, annihilate every chance for salvation; and most particularly so if, by the same misfortune to General Lake, the army fell to General Craig, who is folly itself, and so weak that Lord Castlereagh did not even trust him last night with this secret. The garrison of Dublin has been most wantonly thinned; we have barely 1,100 infantry in the town, and the whole neighbourhood calling out for troops. I trust you will send us strength from England, but I know not where to advise that they should land, for if the rising takes place it will be universal. Galway will fall of course, for from Tuam the French have cut it from all succour, and the inhabitants are very bad.

"I repeat however that I see no reason for solid alarm, if we had a Government; but it is too hard to fight the cause of government, without even the appearance of one.

Postscript. "I have thought it right to press Lord Cornwallis to appoint a Committee of Council, that its authority might be constituted, received, and acknowledged in case of any accident to him."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 30. Dublin.—"After Lord Cornwallis had wrote word to the Duke of Portland that Lake had been forced to evacuate Tuam, and that the French had occupied it, he wrote to Lord Castlereagh to stop the letter, for that the officer who had reported it to him appeared to be deranged in his mind, and that Lake had collected 1,800 troops there, and meant to hold it. This has materially altered the face of things; particularly as Lake has since repossessed Holymount. The French have sent in twelve officers on parole, and 300 prisoners (not having men to guard them) and from them it is ascertained that they lost 70 killed, nearly as many wounded, and that they cannot leave Castlebar. From various circumstances it appears that they expect co-operation of landing elsewhere, and from the extreme civility of their Commanding Officers, they evidently see and prepare for their fate. They cannot bear the Irish who have joined them, and very serious quarrels have already arisen between them. Now for our loss; 59 killed, 29 wounded, and above 400 missing! The 6th of foot (only 60 men) and the Fraser's behaved most gallantly; the Longford and Kilkenny militia began the rout, and every militia man ran before the enemy got within musket shot of them. Our force was about 2,500 troops, exclusive of yeomanry, who behaved very well. Nine guns are lost, with tumbrels, et cetera. The French were completely beat by our superior artillery till they ceased firing at our guns and threw their shot at our infantry, who gave way instantly. In short, never was so disgraceful a scene. Lord Cornwallis moves this day to Ballinamore, half way to Tuam, where all his British troops assemble, namely the Guards, 2nd, 6th (a handful), 54th, 29th, 100th, Royal Bucks, Warwick, Sutherland's, together with the Fraser's, the Suffolk, and one other fencible. His last idea was not to mix a single Irish man with them. His artillery is the British brigade, and in a letter I had from him this morning he appears confident. I am not sure that all this force can assemble before to-morrow at Ballinamore, but if the French retire from Castlebar he will push them; if not, he will wait one day for the co-operation of General Taylor's brigade, who will be at Boyle this night.

"I have now the mortification to tell you that the result of my correspondence with Lord Cornwallis will probably be my resignation of my commissions. I take this night to think it over, but I fear it is impossible for me to submit to the disgrace which he has thrown upon me; and it now is too late to retrieve it. I am sure you will be pleased with my letter to him, and you will be more pleased to know that, though I am so bitterly hurt, I have not consulted on the matter with any one person, nor has a single being seen my correspondence, though every one knows how much I am hurt by his refusal to permit me to command my own detachment, at a time when I had not so many men left at Dublin as he had taken from me. In short I am made miserable, but I will not forget myself, nor can I resign while my regiment is in Ireland; though I may to-morrow lay before the King the correspondence, and request his leave to retire as soon as my regiment is recalled.

"Dublin gets quieter from the precautions taken; but I still tremble for the state of the adjacent counties. All the mails are arrived safe, which is one proof of their quiet, but all the disaffected are very busy. For God's sake send a Lord Deputy or a Provisional Commission."

PAUL, EMPEROR OF RUSSIA, to COUNT WORONZOW, at London.

1798, August 30. St. Petersburg.—“Par nos réscripts qui vous ont été envoyés précédemment, vous avez vu qu’afin de détourner toute dispute et malentendu entre nos alliés, qui auroient pu causer non seulement de l’empêchement, mais même un mal réel à la bonne cause, nous avons employé à Vienne nos représentations, afin qu’à l’égard des difficultés survenues avec la Cour de Londres sur des emprunts et les secours d’argent, on se sert d’un arrangement à l’amiable et amical. En conséquence de quoi nous avons reçu, tant de la part de notre ambassadeur Comte Razoumovsky que de celle du Comte Cobenzel retourné à son poste, des informations que l’Empereur des Romains, désirant sincèrement finir cette affaire à l’avantage réciproque, la remet à notre médiation, nous priant d’en devenir l’arbitre. Par délicatesse et par égard pour la dignité de nos deux alliés, nous ne voulons pas nous approprier ce dernier titre; mais agissant uniquement d’après notre amitié envers eux et d’après la liaison de nos intérêts communs qui dans les circonstances actuelles, difficiles, et dangereuses, exigent de notre part des efforts analogues et énergiques, nous sommes prêts à contribuer par nos bons offices à la décision de cette affaire. Le paquet que porte le présent courier contient des instructions données par le Comte Cobenzel au Comte Stahremberg, et dont les copies sont jointes ici pour votre information. La connaissance que vous avez vous-même de la nature de cette affaire, la certitude de l’utilité et de la nécessité de la finir, et des observations locales, vous donneront des moyens suffisans, après vous être concerté avec le Ministre de l’Empereur des Romains, pour l’arrangement convenable de cette affaire, afin d’oter par là pour les tems à venir toute tendance au refroidissement mutuel, et pour ne pas occasionner de nouvelles difficultés dans les opérations contre l’ennemi, qui réussit encore plus par la mésintelligence entre les alliés que par la force des armes. Il dépendra de votre prudence d’employer auprès de deux côtés en notre nom des insinuations les plus fortes pour leur rapprochement.”

PAUL, EMPEROR OF RUSSIA, to COUNT PANIN, at Berlin.

1798, August 30. St. Petersburg.—“A l’arrivée de l’Ambassadeur de sa Majesté Impériale Royale, Comte Cobenzel, auprès de notre Cour, il s’est expliqué avec notre ministère que, comme conformément aux instructions qui vous ont été données par notre rescrit du 21 Julliet, la négociation entamée sous notre médiation entre les Cours de Vienne et de Berlin, malgré son peu de succès, n’a pas été rompue, il n’existe non seulement aucun inconvénient pour son renouvellement, mais, au contraire, il est nécessaire pour l’intérêt de la cause commune de l’emmener à une conclusion. En conséquence de cela, il transmet des instructions au Prince de Reuss, dont vous recevez ci-joints les copies pour votre information, qui contiennent les demandes que l'Empereur notre allié, en rentrant pour sa sûreté et pour préserver l'intégrité de l'Empire Germanique, en guerre contre les François, juge absolument nécessaires, et qui, d'après la part active que nous y prenons, nous intéressent pareillement. Après avoir convenu avec le Prince Reuss, vous ne manquerez pas d'employer de nouveau tous vos soins pour enlever le Roi de Prusse à l'arrangement de cette affaire, et à l'assurance que ses engagements positifs seront scrupuleusement remplis par des faits et non par des phrases seulement. Si le Roi de Prusse, sans même entrer dans la coalition, désireroit, pour la sûreté de nos provinces acquises en Pologne, faire des stipulations de concert avec nous et l'Empereur des Romains, ou même séparément avec nous, vous pourriez, d'après les pleins pouvoirs que nous vous avons donnés, les conclure dans des termes claires et propres. Nous nous réservons de vous mûnir des instructions ultérieures sur les affaires générales, lorsque nous recevrons les réponses de Londres et d'autres Cours, et alors nous vous mettrons encore mieux en état de vous expliquer plus en détail, et plus décisivement avec le Cabinet de ce pays-là."

SIR JAMES CRAUFURD TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 31. Hamburg.—"I must beg your Lordship's permission to trouble you with a few words on a subject on which I never thought of touching whilst I considered myself as here merely on a temporary footing; but on which, being now by your Lordship's goodness placed in a permanent situation, it becomes absolutely necessary to make a representation to you.

"The fact is that, in consequence of the immense increase of expense of this place, owing to the extraordinary influx of strangers from every part of Europe which the circumstances of the time have produced, I find myself wholly unable to live here with decency, I aim at nothing more, upon the ordinary appointments, with the addition of my private income.

"In laying before your Lordship the real state of things here one might well be suspected of exaggeration. The rise in the indispensable article of a house is so enormous, that in many instances, the rent has within five or six years been quadrupled. And now an ordinary house is not to be had for less than about three hundred pounds a year, and with difficulty for that. Though this is the most remarkable article, yet in everything else also the dearness is excessive.

"Your Lordship will, I hope, do me the justice to believe that I am not absurd enough to aim at anything like representation. My establishment is that of a mere private gentleman; but, at the same time, as British minister placed in one of the most frequented resorts in Europe, it is difficult to avoid seeing occasionally at my house the various people who come recommended to me, as well as those of the town. There are many, too, from whom a minister frequently receives services, and those often not the least essential, to whom he can make no other return but that of asking them to his house. There are various writers, as well as others, whom I think it advisable—particularly at this moment when all these means are so industriously employed by our enemies—to cultivate and conciliate; all of whom it is impossible to pay, and who are flattered by this mark of attention. In short, the advantages which a minister has when he has the means of doing this are sufficiently obvious. At a place where there might be little to do, or where circumstances might be different, all this might possibly be unimportant; here it undoubtedly is otherwise.

“Strongly as I feel the necessity of this, I perhaps should not have ventured to mention it to your Lordship had it been wholly without a precedent to make sometimes extra allowances to foreign ministers.

“I do it with the greatest repugnance. An application for an increase of pay, immediately after your Lordship has so very handsomely taken the first opportunity of conferring a diplomatic place upon me, at a time too when these places are scarce, may perhaps at first sight indicate something unreasonable and beggarly; very foreign, I flatter myself, to my disposition. Did my fortune enable me, I should be happy to take the ordinary course of the service, and your Lordship certainly never should have heard from me on this occasion; but my affairs are much deranged, neither by my fault or my father’s certainly, but by the unfortunate events of the war.

“There is an arrangement which might be made in the event of the renewal of the war on the Continent, which would obviate the necessity of any additional allowance to me, which would be highly advantageous to me, and certainly not disadvantageous to His Majesty’s Government, perhaps productive of some saving.

“Supposing that the war should re-commence, England would probably subsidise more than one foreign power. The money must pass through this place. The arrangement to which I have taken the liberty of alluding is, that I should be allowed to make these payments, or a part of them, if there is more than one subsidy. My not being in a commercial line would be no obstacle; I could just as easily manage this as commissaries frequently do great money transactions. I should be contented with profits inferior to those, so enormous, of the merchants; and it might perhaps be more advantageous to Great Britain that the payments should be made to the foreign powers by drawing bills on London, than by the former mode of remitting the money.

“The intelligence which was some time ago given to me respecting two foreigners who, it was pretended, were in your Lordship’s service, regards, as I have since found, two of the men at your Office; but I am strongly inclined to believe it is wholly without foundation. It came to me, indirectly, from Verteuil, and was very possibly said merely for the sake of giving himself some merit in my eyes, as is so commonly the case with the whole race of spies. All he had to say against these men was that they took down in writing the names of all persons who come to the Office, which appears natural enough when a servant has a great variety of people to announce."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, August 31. Dublin.—"No news this morning, except reports, which I am much inclined to credit, of the French having capitulated. The force and movements of Lord Cornwallis you will collect from the enclosed, which are the latest post letters; but you will observe that these letters do not state the two battalions of Guards, the 2nd, 29th, 54th, and 80th, who were to join Lord Cornwallis at Ballinamore from Portumna Bridge over the Shannon; the bulk of whom, it is known, will be there this night. The rebels who have joined are not 2,000 of all sorts and sizes, and the conduct of the French has discouraged such a junction by refusing to hang yeomanry prisoners made by them, in return for the rebel Irish hanged by us. I know that the game is considered to be up by the French as well as the rebels, and that some of the French officers complained to some of our prisoners of the deception of their Government, who had promised them a co-operation of another expedition and of a general rebellion. I have nothing to add but that Dublin is most quiet, and that the morning reports from all the patrols in Kildare, Wicklow, and Meath are equally good. The mails are all arrived, and no rising or appearance of one anywhere.

"For myself, I at present say nothing but that Lord Cornwallis has broke my heart by refusing me leave to command the detachment of my own regiment; and confining me to Dublin under circumstances such as the present has left me no possible alternative. I wrote to him this morning to desire his permission for me to transmit the correspondence for the King's information; and as soon as the French are disposed of, I must take my measures for doing myself justice in whatever way may appear wisest. But I will not be degraded by any man, and you will feel for me as warmly as I can do myself. Such is the dénouement of my cursed Irish journey, in which I certainly looked to much misery, but not to oppression and humiliation."

Enclosure.

JOHN EDWARD FREMANTLE to the MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM.

1798, August 29. Athlone.—"After a very fatiguing march of sixteen miles from Tullamore to this place, we encamped near Athlone, under the command of General Moore and Lord Huntly, with the two brigades (20 light companies), the Hundredth regiment, 8 pieces of artillery, and our brigade, which I command. We were joined during the night and early this morning by the Reay, Sutherland, and Suffolk Fencibles, the Armagh and the Downshire, with a troop of the Hompesch. Our brigade is ordered to be [in] readiness to march at a moment's notice, but with whom I know not. I suppose you have heard of Hutchinson's being surprised at Castlebar. Lake arrived there about one in the morning, and the French came in about seven. They had no notice of their approach before five. We have lost six pieces of cannon. The Kilkenny regiment bolted, or, I understand, our artillery would have succeeded. The Frazer Fencible and the Sixth behaved uncommonly well, the former saved their cannon. Many of the officers of the Sixth, I hear, are killed. Lake has retreated to Tuam. No blame whatever is attached to Lake; he had not fourteen hundred men. The French with croppies were estimated at two thousand. We have in our army about six thousand seven hundred infantry. I am sorry to say that Lord Cornwallis is very unwell; they attempted to bleed him last night, but no blood could be produced; however he rode out, and placed the advanced sentries on the other side of the Shannon. We have had some few drunken men, but in general the men have behaved well, so have the Warwick. If possible somebody shall write again the day after to-morrow. My comrades desire to be remembered to their brethren in Dublin."

Postscript. "The Seventh Dragoon-Guards, I understand, join us to day. Lord Cornwallis is now out, looking for a position for us on the other side of the town, where we go to about seven this evening. The French have retreated from Castlebar about twelve miles. Lake is encamped the other side of Tuam. No rebels have joined them except those in Killala, which report Astle has just brought up from Athlone. Any further accounts I hear to-morrow your Lordship shall immediately know. Lake's present force is not known; the 5th Dragoon Guards are come, the 7th coming. I hope General Taylor and his nine hundred men are safe, and have retreated, as I understand it was not possible for him to join Lake. Tell Badcock the saucy Sixth, if possible, behaved better than ever, though they have suffered in officers, I fear, greatly. Lord Henry always desires the Warwick to copy us, and then he is sure they will do well; we have as yet done them up in every thing."

Note by Lord Grenville of the heads of a conference with Count Woronzow, Russian Ambassador in London, on the project of a new coalition against France.

1798, August. London.—1. "Les différences qu'il y a entre notre situation actuelle et celle de 1796, surtout par rapport à l'Autriche, qui depuis ce tems-là a fait sa paix séparée en nous abandonnant seuls à la rage d'un ennemi auquel, heureusement, nous avons su résister avec fermeté et succès.

2. "Les dépenses que nous faisons aujourd'hui pour le soutien des autres.

£200,000 pour le Portugal, et qu'il est même question d'augmenter.

£500,000 destinés à la Suisse.

£1,500,000, à peu près, pour la flotte de la Méditerranée, qui quoiqu'elle nous y soit sans contredit de quelque utilité, n'y auroit certainement jamais été envoyée que sur les instances de Vienne et de Naples.

3. “£100,000 par mois avoient été destinés pour aider l'Autriche, si elle eut voulu établir un concert sincère, et surtout remplir ses anciens engagements. Mais puisque nous n'avancions pas depuis le mois d'avril, nous consentions bien volontiers à transférer ce secours à l'objet de la marche d'une armée Russe, pour être employée à des opérations que l'on réglera du consentement commun des trois Cours, sachant d'ailleurs que c'est là le moyen le plus efficace d'aider l'Autriche elle-même.

4. “Mais comme ces opérations ne peuvent être réglées qu'en concert avec celles de l'Autriche, nous prions l'Empereur de Russie d'agir efficacement à Vienne pour persuader au Gouvernement Autrichien.

1. “De remplir ses engagements avec l'Angleterre, sans quoi nous ne pouvons contribuer à le secourir, soit directement comme il en étoit question, soit indirectement par la coopération qu'on nous propose aujourd'hui.

[Marginal note. Cet article tient à la nécessité des discussions Parlementaires, et est pour cette raison d'une nécessité absolue. Tout notre crédit seroit employé en vain pour faire passer de nouveaux subsides, sans la ratification de cette éternelle convention.]

2. “De s'ouvrir franchement sur ses plans de guerre et de paix, et sur le moment où il agira.

3. “De tenir, en attendant, une marche plus capable d'encourager les foibles, et de rassurer les bien-intentionnées dans toute l'Europe.

5. “Sur ces bases le Roi se prêteroit (par l'entremise de votre Cour) à un concert avec l'Autriche, où elle pourroit stipuler.

1. “Pour que la flotte reste dans la Méditerranée.

2. “Sur les secours à donner respectivement aux Suisses pour recouvrir leur indépendance.

3. “Sur les plans militaires auxquels la coopération des secours de votre Cour, et de celle-ci, seroit employée de la manière ci-dessus mentionnée.

6. “Et pour éviter la perte du tems, notre ministre pourrait déjà signer chez vous une convention provisoire, où il seroit stipulé quel seroit le montant des troupes que S. M. L'Empereur mettroit en marche, en retour du secours ci-dessus mentionné, si le concert venoit à s'effectuer. Mais que cette convention n'auroit son exécution qu'au cas où, d'après l'établissement de ce concert, Sa Majesté se verroit dans le cas de demander, et Sa Majesté Impériale d'accorder la marche des troupes à ces conditions.

“La somme pour les payes extraordinaires seroit réglée sur le pied de projet de 1796, mais d'après le nombre des troupes employées; et resteroit comme dette à être liquidée après la conclusion d'une paix faite d'un commun accord.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 1. Dublin.—“ I write merely because I would not leave you uninformed one day at a period when every hour is critical. The army was yesterday at Ballinamore and moves this day only eight miles to Newton Bellew. The heat of the weather has prevented the Guards or the 2nd and 29th from coming up; and Fremantle writes me word yesterday from Ballinamore that it is doubtful whether the Guards can come up to the army, but that the 2nd and 29th are to join the army at Tuam; to which place it marches on Sunday; so that you see by this account that Lord Cornwallis cannot even look at Castlebar till Tuesday evening. His return last night is now lying before me, and he had in camp last night at Ballinamore 6,766 rank and file! All this is exclusive of the débris of Hutchinson’s army (sent to Athlone to learn discipline and courage) and of General Taylor’s force of 1,437 men at Boyle, and of the force which is to join at Tuam. Surely as versus less than 1,000 French, assisted by certainly less than 2,000 croppies, this does seem a very cautious proceeding; and from that very caution it is in effect more hazardous, as every day lost gives the chance of another flotilla or of a rising, though I acknowledge that no immediate systems of insurrection have appeared. I am confident that the French looked to another flotilla. I know that they have been, through correspondences, urging an insurrection in Dublin. Under these circumstances I must own that I think Lord Cornwallis takes a most heavy responsibility on himself by this most unaccountable delay; and the lesson he teaches as with respect to another invasion, even if every Frenchman now here capitulates, is very alarming. The officers who are come in all hold one language of the unreserved manner in which the French speak of this enterprise; however they are endeavouring to organize some of the croppies and some of the Kilkenny and Longford run-aways.

“ I now find that three more militia corps are coming over if you can induce them to embark. I trust Lord Cornwallis will not make upon their commanding officers the experiment he has made upon me; and yet if he does not, he makes the veto which he has put upon me if possible more degrading. I am haunted at every moment by these reflexions, which the observations of every one naturally suggest to me; and only wait for Lord Cornwallis’s permission to send you the correspondence respecting my claim to command my own detachment of my regiment.

“ It is indeed melancholy that in such a moment the feelings should be so severely wounded of those who wish to do most; and that I should be to worry myself and all that is dear to me with complaints of this nature where there is no remedy.

Postscript. “ No Government in Dublin! Good God! how can Lord Cornwallis venture such an experiment as to undertake to conduct all the details with a Parliament sitting, himself at 100 miles distance without a single man of business with him; liable of course to the risk of his profession, and liable to the chance, in case of a serious rising in the most disaffected counties, namely Meath, Westmeath, Longford, or Kildare, to be completely cut off from Dublin.

"I again implore you to think of a Lord Deputy or a provisional government (not that of the Lord Chancellor and the Speaker), notwithstanding the reasons you have given in your last letter against it.

"Remember that even if there were not insurmountable objections to the nomination of Lord Clare and Foster to take the government, they could not, as both Houses are actually sitting.

"I enclose you Lord Cornwallis's answer to a very long letter from me urging him to appoint a Committee of Lords of the Council (of which I could not of course be one) to carry his orders for the security of Parliament and of the metropolis into execution."

Enclosure.

MARQUIS CORNWALLIS to the MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM.

Private.

1798, August 31. Camp at Ballinamore.—"I received yesterday your very kind and friendly letter, and return you many thanks for pointing out freely to me the measure which appears to you to be necessary at this important crisis.

"There are however, in my opinion, many weighty objections to it, which I have not at present time to detail; and as I feel confident that the enemy in this quarter are not in sufficient force to give me any serious trouble, I trust that (unless another French flotilla should arrive) all will again soon be quiet, and that consequently there will be no occasion to alter the present course of things."

The MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 5. Dublin.—"No news this morning from the army except the eternal and inexplicable delay of their movements. The Guards are all halted by Lord Cornwallis's orders at Rosscreea and Birr, to keep in check any idea of insurrection in the south; and on Sunday the 2nd, the 29th had joined three miles west of Tuam, so that the army was brigaded and complete. On Monday they marched only two miles, and yesterday to Hollymount, only eight miles, from thence they have fourteen Irish miles (eighteen English) to Castlebar, so that it is not possible that Lord Cornwallis can even look at the enemy sooner than to-morrow morning, consequently we cannot hear the result in Dublin sooner than Saturday morning. The artillery was all up, and was even upon their ground before the infantry on Sunday, so that no delay has been occasioned by them. You will easily judge the impatience upon this subject when every hour is invaluable, for great exertions have been made to create risings, and to operate in every way on the public mind, and in many parts of the country they have succeeded in raising plundering parties. Reports had been spread for the last ten days that the night of the 4th was fixed for a general rising both in town and through the country, and you have no idea what a panic this had spread all over Ireland. I need not add that nothing was ever more quiet, for every mail coach is come in and reports that not a soul was to be seen on any one road; and as to Dublin, I never saw it more quiet, for during the whole of my rounds (which I always ride alone) for upwards of three hours, from eleven to two last night, I literally did not meet or see any living being save the patrols.

“You will probably have heard that a Major Plunkett, who has been most active in organising Roscommon and other parts of Connaught, surrendered himself at Elphin (to the Bishop) on Monday morning; and that circumstance seems to answer for the peace of Roscommon, of which Lord Cornwallis was with reason so jealous, that he sent General Lake to take the command at Boyle from General Taylor. We hear of the very zealous and handsome offers from the militia regiments in England. The whole will be unnecessary, but some ought to land in the south, and it would be advisable to have a force at Liverpool, Chester, or Whitehaven, or Bristol, ready to embark for Newry, Dublin, or Wexford, in case of any unforeseen rising, or of any possible accident to Lord Cornwallis’s army.

“As for myself I cannot describe to you the hundredth part of all I feel on the subject of my disgrace. I have not yet heard from Lord Cornwallis in answer to my last, and I feel that, though I asked only for one word by Captain Taylor’s pen, yet that I am bound to wait for some days longer before I take steps to enable me (as soon as the French are disposed of) to resign my degraded and disgraced situation. The arrival of the other British militia will increase my difficulties, for the colonels of those regiments will certainly not quit their corps; and Lord Cornwallis will be obliged to let them serve in their present rank, after refusing me leave to serve with my own regiment in any rank. And in the meantime you will observe that my hour of real duty and service will have passed by. All this is indeed a most bitter pill, and now, never can be palliated or done away.

Postscript. “A small rebel party occupied Blessington for an hour last night, but there was nothing to plunder. They are chiefly deserters (and therefore the more dangerous) from amongst the disaffected of the 5th dragoons, the Cavan, Antrim, King’s County, and Wicklow militia.

4 o’clock. “A messenger just come from Lord Cornwallis to say that he pushed on last night to within six miles of Castlebar, and that he had arranged his attack for this morning. Lake is gone to Boyle to take the command, not only of Taylor, but of General Dunne at Longford and Athlone, and of General Nugent, who has garrisoned Enniskillen and has pushed on to Sligo. If, therefore, Lord Cornwallis is successful not a man can escape.

General Moore is to lead the attack, in which my detachment is included; and, whether the regiment does well or ill, think what my feelings must be in either contingency."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 8. Dublin.—"It is now 7 o'clock p.m., the latest hour for the mail, and no messenger from Lord Cornwallis. The public impatience and discontent is at high beyond all description. He has suffered himself to be completely out-generated by the French, who were in his net; and with numbers (as it now appears) ridiculously small for the immense body that he laboured at the expense of so many days to collect. They slipped Lord Cornwallis, and afterwards slipped Craufurd, and got by Tobercarry to Collooney, where they passed Thursday [Wednesday?] night; on Thursday morning by 2 a.m. they were clear of that town, and from that hour, or rather from General Lake's hour of date at 8 a.m. of that day, no one has heard by any accident one word, save General Lake's opinion that they meant to be (on that night, namely Thursday) at Manor-Hamilton, on their way to Enniskillen. But variety of objects present themselves if (as is expected) they find Enniskillen too well secured by General Nugent. They may have occupied Sligo; they may have pushed to Belleck (weakly guarded) between Ballyshannon and Lough Earne; or they may have turned rapidly to the south, and by holding a course west of Lough Earne, they may have pushed to Belturbet, the worst part of Ireland, and cut Lord Cornwallis from Dublin. We have now four mails due from England: we have no Government in Dublin; we have no communication with our Lord Lieutenant; we have a formidable insurrection (however gallantly the Longford yeomen, commanded by Lord Longford, have checked it at Mullingar) in the middle counties; we have a mass of rebellion suffered to gather every day under a General Holt, who has for the last four days occupied Blackmoor Hill in Wicklow, while General Eustace has been reconnoitring him; and we have not, as far as I can judge, the slightest confidence in any one. Such is the state; a victory may do much, but the lesson that Lord Cornwallis has taught the French and Irish Directories is most fatal to Ireland; and I am bound to say to you (what I protest solemnly I have said to no creature breathing) that I believe all is owing to Lord Cornwallis's misconduct.

"I do all I can to keep up the spirits of others, but my own are indeed very low. It is certain that the number of French are not more than 800 most discontented, and the number of rebels with them at Colooney were not 2,000 of all sorts. Lord Cornwallis's effective force, including Lake's, are (by the Adjutant General's return) about 11,000 troops! exclusive of yeomanry and other auxiliaries.

Postscript. "Again, and again, I press for troops to Newry, if you hope to save Ireland, in case Lord Cornwallis has been checked, or in case the French are got into the north."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, Sept. 9. York Farm.—“Voici encore une nouvelle persécution de Madame de Rochechouart pour vous et pour moi. Si ce qu'elle dit est vrai (comme une petite partie peut l'être). M. Wickham la mène un peu rudement. Il est vrai que, si on écoutait les scélérats, il n'y aurait personne de pendu. D'ailleurs, tout ceci ne me regarde en rien, et je me borne à vous faire passer ce que je reçois. C'est bien assez de tous les tourmens qu'on vous donne journellement, sans que j'y ajoute encore. Il me paraît, d'après ce que m'écrit le Comte de Dietrichstein, que l'Empereur Paul se conduit au mieux. Je ne doute pas que nous n'imitions bientôt ce bel exemple. Les Français eux-mêmes nous y forceront à la fin, pourvu que les secours pécuniaires que vous vous déciderez peut-être à donner à la Russie, ne soient pas pris aux dépens de ceux que vous nous destinez. Je ne le crois pas, car, dans ce cas, ma malheureuse disposition à voir en noir, que les événemens n'ont que trop justifiée, me ferait apercevoir dans cette détermination une nouvelle source de jalousie, de mésintelligence, et de reproches. Quod Deus avertat. Vous rendez trop de justice aux sentimens qui m'anime, pour me savoir mauvais gré de mes craintes et de ma sincérité.”

EARL SPENCER to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, September 10. Admiralty.—“I have returned the papers you sent me to Hammond. With respect to augmenting our naval force in the Mediterranean, I can only state that we have now in that sea a larger force (nearly by one-third) than in our most sanguine expectations we had formed an idea of having; and the consequence is that Lord St. Vincent remains with only sixteen or seventeen sail of the line off Cadiz; and though we have full reason from experience to hope that this may be enough to keep the Spanish fleet in awe, it is not quite what I should, on the whole, judge it right for him to have with him, were it possible to reinforce him. We are about to send fresh ships from home, but they will but serve to replace such as are unfit to remain abroad in the winter, and by this relief our home squadron is cut down as close as possible.

“I don't know how Sir Sidney would like to be taken from the command of the fine ship he has now got in order to go and assist the Turks; to send him in his ship for that purpose would be absolutely impracticable, and there would be very great difficulties in the way of sending him in any other.

“I am very glad that on the latter subject of your letter I can give you a better report, for, in the course of last week, a paper was received from Sir James Marriott (which I immediately gave to Pitt) proposing, on account of his infirmities, to resign his situation, but on terms which appeared very extravagant. Pitt said he would enquire about it, and I will immediately write to him to know whether he has made up his mind on the subject. At all events, it must end in getting rid of Sir James, but he seemed to have much doubt whether Sir W. Scott would take it.

“ I am extremely desirous of getting out of town on Wednesday night if I can, therefore should be glad if you could come to town at any time most convenient to you on Wednesday morning, and I will endeavour to get Pitt to come too.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 10. Dublin.—“ The messenger of yesterday went off in 5 minutes after he came to Dublin, that he might take no private letters. I now enclose to you the details of this complete victory of General Lake. You will observe that Lord Cornwallis let them slip him at Castlebar; that he missed his second plan of pinning them into Mayo by occupying Colooney, near Sligo; that he missed his third plan of pinning them to the West of the Shannon by occupying Carrick on Shannon; and that nothing saved Ireland but the exertions of his infantry, who, having marched 14 Irish miles on Friday, marched again at 10 o'clock on the same night, and completed 26 Irish miles by eight next morning, total 40 Irish or 51 English miles in little more than 24 hours. You will observe that, at the last, the enemy had the start of Lord Cornwallis in this race, which they acknowledge was for Dublin. I learnt on Saturday night that they had crossed the Shannon. I proposed immediately to Lieutenant-General Craig and to Lord Castlereagh to let me move instantly to Trim, where there is a strong post, to head and check them. This was refused from fears (too well founded) for Dublin; and it now appears that Sourazin's plan was to reach Kells, 12 miles from Trim, on Sunday, and to endeavour to get by Trim on Sunday night. The Guards were moved by Lord Cornwallis's orders from Tullamore, and would have been in Dublin yesterday by 3 o'clock p.m., but were stopped on account of this victory. The Leicester (or at least part of it) came in this morning at nine, so that we should have been run very close indeed. Every one is loud in complaint of Lord Cornwallis for being so completely and repeatedly out-generaled.

“ Since writing this, I have received your letters from Dropmore, and feel most fully all your difficulties. It is impossible for me to know what will be the result of Lord Cornwallis's conduct towards me. He has not yet condescended to direct one line to be written to me, in answer to my request that he would permit me to send our correspondence to be laid before the King. I cannot therefore foresee either his line or my own. But things cannot rest where they are, and I know of no alternative, particularly after the difficulties which I collect from your letter as existing with you. But for God's sake, in justice to me on another point, distinguish between the decided opinion I entertain of the wisdom of extending the King's mercy to the rebels who should acknowledge their individual guilt, and should tell all they know short of names, and the folly of suffering them to mount upon a horse so high as that which, it now appears, Lord Cornwallis has suffered them to ride. I knew the impossibility of convicting some of the worst of them; I knew the effect that would be produced by this supposed treachery both in the minds of their followers, and of their friends, and of their French allies. But do not believe that any consideration should have induced me to have acceded to such a paper as is now produced ; which I never saw till about ten days since, and which you cannot reprobate as weak and criminal more than I do. But the measure of amnesty was, and is still in my mind, most wise with its exceptions, and the subsequent events have clearly shown the advantage of it ; for if the Kildare rebels had continued in arms, I protest I do not know how they could have been forced ; and you will remember that the whole of our north-western army has, for the last eighteen days, been supplied with every military store, and with their daily bread, along this very line.

"The Banishment Bill is equally imperfect and disgraceful ; but I say no more upon it, as it is before you for correction ; but for God's sake enact their confession into a record of conviction, and attach the penalty on the party being found at large in any of his Majesty's dominions, otherwise the mischief will be incalculable. As to our other object, every day convinces me that it is attainable, but it is impossible that it should prosper in the hands of one who will consult no one, either here or in England. Friar Bacon's head has spoken twice ; take care that it does not speak 'the time is past.'

"What is now to become of us ? I recommend myself to your protection, for I am most miserable at all I see, and all I feel.

"Tom could show you my letters which speak distinctly my reprobation of such a treaty as that which now appears to exist, pari passu, between Lord Cornwallis and O'Connor and the others.

"Citizen John Moore (President of Connaught) is born at Alicant, has an estate in Mayo from the death of his elder brother, has lived the last five years in the Temple, and was a very active personal friend of Mr. Fox in the Whig Club, of which he was a constant member and attendant. He came to Ireland about three months ago. Pray do not let this anecdote be lost."

Enclosure.

MAJOR JOHN EDWARD FREEMANTLE to the MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM.

1798, September 8. St. Johnstown Camp.—"I have great satisfaction in acquainting your Lordship, that the whole of the French and rebel army have surrendered themselves prisoners to General Lake. Our column, under Lord Cornwallis, marched from Carrick about 10 o'clock last night, and reached Mohil by eight in the morning, when every preparation was made for beginning the action ; but unfortunately the Sutherland fencibles and Downshire militia had missed their road from the darkness of the night, which delayed us an hour and upwards, during which time the French decamped, but fell in about eleven o'clock with General Lake's column, who had not been joined by Moore.

We saw the action from our left; it lasted about half an hour. The light third battalion of Irish light infantry stood the chief of the action; and charged the French who were posted behind some turf, upon which they immediately surrendered; about 600 French, and 400 croppies only who are by this time nearly demolished, for no quarter has been given them. Our fellows took six, but did not kill them owing to their begging for their lives so piteously that they could not butcher them in cold blood; for which they were abused by some of the officers of the baggage guard."

Postscript. "I have just seen George Lake; he says there are eight hundred French prisoners."

THE EARL OF ELGIN TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, September 12. Blackheath.—"Having been under the necessity of remaining constantly in the country since I had the honour of seeing you, I have not been able to apply to Taylor, who would have copied the enclosed papers much better than you will find them written; but they are quite accurate. Allow me to repeat the promise I gave on receiving them, that your Lordship would observe the utmost secrecy regarding them.

"The first paper contains P[rince] Reuss's proposal on opening the negotiation, and the Prussian answer. That and the two which accompany it, comprise the whole of what was given by the Prussian Ministers.

"Besides these papers, there was the Project of a convention drawn up by P[rince] Reppin; the answer of the Russian Ministers on the No. 2 (enclosed); and the observations sent from Vienna to the Russian ministers on the project of Convention. I regretted much not having been able to procure copies of the whole; but I believe that the accounts of them contained in my correspondence were exact.

"If I mistake not, I mentioned to your Lordship that after the last conference Count Cobentzl expressed, even to persons connected with the Court, much ill-will against Prussia.

"My private letters from Berlin, since my leaving it, inform me that his language grew more violent, and his disappointment appeared to be very great on finding that he was to receive no snuff box from the King of Prussia."

Three enclosures.

Enclosure 1.

Réponse des Plénipotentiaires de sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse aux ouvertures faites par Monsieur le Plénipotentiaire de sa Majesté l'Empereur-Roi dans la conférence du 21 Mai.

"Les ouvertures que Monsieur le Prince de Reuss, Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire de sa Majesté l'Empereur-Roi a faites dans la conférence du 21 Mai, et le précis qu'il en a communiqué aux Ministres du Roi portent sur les propositions suivantes.

1. "Que si sa Majesté Prussienne veut bien se désister de toute prétentions d'indemnité aux dépens de l'Empire, pour elle et pour la maison d'Orange, sa Majesté Impériale renoncera également à toute prétention semblable, soit pour elle-même, soit pour le Duc de Modène, et l'Archiduchesse sa fille.

2. "Que si cette première proposition n'est pas agréée, et que le Roi insiste sur un dédommagement à la charge de l'Empire pour ses provinces transrhéennes, l'Empereur exigera pareillement une indemnité pour ses pertes et sacrifices.

3. "Et que dans le cas où sa Majesté Prussienne demanderait en outre, une indemnité pour la maison d'Orange, l'Empereur ferait aussi valoir les droits du Duc de Modène, et de l'Archiduchesse Béatrice, en leurs qualités de feudataires de l'Empire.

"Le Roi n'hésite pas un instant de s'en tenir aux principes de modération et de désintéressement qu'il a déjà manifesté plus d'une fois à sa Majesté Impériale dans sa correspondance immédiate ; et quelques légitimes que soient ses titres d'indemnité, il préfère d'y renoncer en plein pour contribuer de son côté, autant que possible, au maintien de l'intégrité de l'Empire ; mais en faisant ainsi le sacrifice gratuit des provinces qu'il a perdues par la cession de la rive gauche du Rhin, il accepte, très expressément, la déclaration que la maison d'Autriche renonce, de la manière la plus positive, à toute indemnité et prétention aux dépens de l'Empire ; et il s'ensuit par conséquent que sa Majesté l'Empereur se contentera, pour tout dédommagement, des extensions territoriales qu'il a obtenues en Italie par la paix de Campo Formio, telles qu'il les possède actuellement. Après avoir écarté de la sorte tout projet d'indemnité, de compensation, d'acquisition, ou d'agrandissement, le Roi s'adresse à l'amitié de sa Majesté l'Empereur pour lui demander un service qui peut lui être rendu sans entraîner le moindre inconvénient ; c'est la suppression de tous les procès qui ont été élevés devant les tribunaux de l'Empire au sujet des affaires de la Franconie, et la concession du privilège de non appellando pour les principautés d'Anspach et de Bareuth, d'après la promesse formelle que sa Majesté Impériale en a donnée en 1791 et 1792. Il s'agit de considérer que les districts recouverts par le feu Roi sont autant de propriétés légitimes qui ont été injustement détachés des anciennes possessions de la maison de Brandenburg en Franconie, au mépris de ses pactes de famille, sanctionnés par les chefs de l'Empire ; et quoiqu'il resterait encore à réclamer à ce titre d'autres prétentions valides du même genre, s[a] M[ajesté] ne songera pourtant pas à les faire revivre ; et elle se borne uniquement à la conservation du status quo actuel. Les propositions sont trop faciles à remplir pour que la Cour de Vienne n'y accède sans aucune discussion quelconque. Et d'autant plus qu'elle paraît être suffisamment convaincue des droits incontestables que le Roi serait le maître de faire valoir à la charge de l'Empire. Puisque, sans produire d'autres prétentions au nom de s[a] M[ajesté] Impériale, les Pléni[potentiaires] Autrichiens au congrès de Rastadt ont proposé, et l'articulé de leur propre chef dans un aperçu remis à ceux de s[a] M[ajesté] Prussienne, l'évêché de Hildesheim comme pouvant servir d'indemnité à ses pertes territoriales. Ainsi, et en se désistant aujourd'hui encore de cette acquisition, qui serait à plusieurs égards si fort à sa convenance, le moins que le Roi puisse se réserver c'est l'aplanissement des affaires de la Franconie. Et il est hors de doute que tout l'Empire se fera un plaisir d'y applaudir, d'une voix unanime, s'il peut à ce prix se libérer de ses obligations vis à vis de la Prusse.

“Le même esprit de conciliation et de modération qui a dicté les sacrifices que le Roi vient de s'imposer pour lui-même, présidera pareillement aux ouvertures qui lui restent à faire relativement à la maison d'Orange. Les deux Cours Impériales connaissent le vif et tendre intérêt qu'il est autorisé à prendre aux malheurs non mérités de cette illustre famille. Et elles n'ignorent pas non plus qu'elle avait conçu l'espérance de les voir réparer par un dédommagement convenable. Néanmoins, et puisqu'il serait à prévoir qu'il résulterait d'un tel arrangement de nouvelles difficultés pour le grand ouvrage de la pacification de l'Allemagne, les Princes d'Orange sont les premiers à renoncer aux avantages de l'indemnité dont on les avait flattés ; et ils consentent à supporter avec résignation les pertes et les injustices dont ils ont été les victimes. Le seul soulagement qu'ils réclament c'est le recouvrement des bailliages de l'électorat de Trèves, qui sont situés sur la rive droite du Rhin, et sur lesquels ils ont à faire valoir les droits les plus légitimes. Le Roi se fait un devoir d'appuyer cette réclamation si modeste, et il y ajoute la condition que la maison d'Orange-Nassau soit mis en possession de ces districts, en vertu d'un arrangement à prendre entre les Cours de Vienne et de Berlin, et sans être exposés aux termes interminables de la voie judiciaire. Telles sont les réponses du Roi sur les objets qui ont été agités dans la première conférence. S[a] M[ajesté] se flatte qu'elles seront de nature à satisfaire complètement l'attente de s[a] M[ajesté] l'Empereur.”

Enclosure 2.

Observations que les Ministres du Roi ont ordre de participer à Monsieur le Maréchal Prince de Repnin, sur le projet de convention éventuelle, qu'il leur a communiqué confidentiellement au sortir de la conférence du 14 Juin 1798.

“Le Roi a reconnu dans l'expédient d'un arrangement préalable à conclure entre les Cours de Vienne et de Berlin, le désir sincère et très louable qui anime M. le Prince de Repnin d'abrégé des longueurs nuisibles à l'intérêt commun, et, en applaudissant ainsi complètement à l'idée de l'acte projeté, sa Majesté a fixé d'autant plus mûrement son attention sur les stipulations qu'il renferme.

“L'Article 1 pourra être adopté dans toute son étendue tel qu'il est ; et comme il est destiné à mettre en évidence le désintéressement des deux Cours, et leur renonciation formelle à toute prétention, à toute vue, qui serait de nature à léser les possessions des co-états de l'Empire, il conviendrait encore d'y ajouter la clause suivante : ‘que les deux puissances contractantes promettent et s’engagent en particulier, de veiller à la conservation intacte et de respecter elles-mêmes l’intégrité plénière des états séculiers et héréditaires de l’Allemagne ; de manière qu’ils soient à l’abri de toute cession, aliénation, et échange quelconques.’ Ce corollaire, si propre à tranquilliser les membres du Corps Germanique, a été proposé déjà par les ministres Prussiens à ceux de s[a] M[ajesté] l’Empereur dans leurs pourparlers de Rastadt ; et il achevera de sanctionner ici de la part des deux Cours l’acte de leur renonciation solennelle.

“ Il se présente une autre considération essentielle qui appartient encore à l’article 1.

“ Monsieur le Prince de Repnin se rappellera que dans la conférence du 14 Juin, il fut question de la note verbale du 23 Mai, et nommément du passage où il est dit : ‘ qu’en renonçant à toute indemnité et prétention aux dépens de l’Empire, s[a] M[ajesté] l’Empereur se contentera, pour tout dédommagement, des extensions territoriales qu’il a obtenues en Italie par la paix de Campo Formio, telles qu’il les possède actuellement.’

“ A cette occasion Monsieur le Maréchal observa : ‘ qu’il serait injuste de vouloir faire renoncer d’avance la Cour de Vienne aux indemnités futures qu’elle pourrait acquérir un jour dans le cas d’une nouvelle guerre, ou par des échanges volontaires.’

“ Et M. le Prince de Reuss ajouta : ‘ que sa Cour ne consentirait jamais à confondre la paix de Campo Formio avec celle de l’Allemagne.’

“ Les ministres du Roi n’ont pu se dispenser de rendre compte à s[a] M[ajesté] de cette explication, et elle a dû en être frappée.

“ Sa façon de penser ne lui permet assurément pas de nourrir contre la Cour de Vienne le moindre sentiment d’envie ou de la jalousie ; et s’il arrivait malheureusement que cette puissance fut entraînée dans une seconde guerre contre la France, il y aurait de l’injustice sans doute à lui disputer dès à présent les indemnités qu’elle pourrait acquérir dans la suite hors de l’Allemagne, pour prix de ses efforts ultérieurs. Mais il est une autre chance à laquelle il est impossible de ne pas s’arrêter. Les engagements particuliers que Sa M[ajesté] Impériale a déjà contractés, et les négociations séparées qu’elle poursuit encore avec la République Française, continuant toujours à rester couverts des voiles du mystère, n’est-il point permis de poser un hypothèse qu’au défaut des acquisitions que l’Empereur des Romains se proposait d’abord de faire en Allemagne, il peut s’être réservé d’y substituer d’autres acquisitions territoriales, soit en Italie, soit ailleurs ; et que, par un tel revirement, il saurait se dédommager des sacrifices qu’il apporte à l’Empire ? Ne s’en suivrait-il pas que le Roi de Prusse, n’ayant pas les mêmes facilités d’agrandir ses états ailleurs qu’en Allemagne, se trouverait dans le cas d’avoir fait une renonciation unilatérale, dont la Cour de Vienne recueillerait les bénéfices ? Cette réflexion tient naturellement à l’ordre actuel des choses, et non à des contingents futurs.

“ Le Roi est donc obligé de consulter les intérêts de sa monarchie pour obvier aux désavantages d’une chance qui peut être regardée comme possible ; et il faudrait, par conséquent, ou que la Cour de Vienne le rassurât à cet égard par une explication claire et nette, qui serait insérée dans la convention éventuelle, ou que s[a] M[ajesté] conservât la faculté de s’indemniser de la perte de ses provinces transrhénanes dans le cas où l’Autriche parvint à se procurer de nouvelles acquisitions hors de l’Allemagne, pour se dédommager du désistement de ses prétentions à la charge des états de l’Empire. De cette manière, l’égalité des chances se trouverait rétablie entre les deux puissances transigéantes, et c’est la conservation de cette parité qui doit être un des principaux soins de la Cour médiatrice qui est intervenue dans la négociation.

Article 2.—“ Dès la première conférence, les ministres du Roi ont fait sentir à Messieurs les Plénipotentiaires des deux Cours Impériales, l’extrême différence qu’il y a entre le recouvrement des cinq bailliages Trévinois, sur lesquels la maison d’Orange-Nassau a des droits légitimes, et le nouvel établissement que l’Empereur cherche à ménager en Allemagne à la maison de Modène, ou plutôt à l’Archiduc Ferdinand et à ses descendants ; c’est à dire, à une des branches de la famille Impériale. La Cour de Vienne persiste cependant à demander une parité pour les deux maisons, et faute de pouvoir fonder sur des droits réels ses prétentions en faveur de celle de Modène, elle les recommande au Roi à titre de complaisance réciproque. Mais si l’Empereur attache un certain prix à l’assentiment qu’il accorde aux réclamations de la maison d’Orange, le Roi sera dans le cas de répondre à cette marque d’amitié par un retour bien plus important. En parlant des indemnités qui doivent revenir aux princes lésés par la cession de la rive gauche du Rhin, on n’a eu en vue jusqu’ici que les états séculiers, et la Cour de Vienne propose, tout à coup, le rétablissement et l’indemnisation des trois Electorats Ecclésiastiques. Il est notoire que cet objet majeur est entièrement étranger aux intérêts de la Prusse, et que l’Autriche seule y peut gagner. Si donc le Roi y prête les mains, et s’il concourt à faire obtenir aux trois Electeurs Ecclésiastiques des indemnités proportionnées à leurs pertes territoriales, ce ne serait qu’en autant que la Cour Impériale consentirait au faible arrondissement qui doit échoir à la maison d’Orange, sans qu’il puisse être question, en sus, d’une concurrence de celle de Modène.

“ Il n’y a rien à observer sur les articles 3 et 4. Le 5 a pour objet une déclaration que les Cours de Vienne et de Berlin auraient à faire en commun au congrès de Rastadt, pour s’opposer aux prétentions des Français sur la rive droite du Rhin, et pour accélérer la retraite de leurs troupes au delà de ce fleuve. Plus cette démarche est importante, plus il est nécessaire d’en peser les conséquences, et de s’en expliquer à cœur ouvert.

“ Monsieur le Prince de Replin étant convenu lui-même que la déclaration à faire devrait être rédigée poliment, et de manière à ne pas provoquer la guerre, il s’agit de considérer si on peut se flatter qu’elle produira son effet ; ou si plutôt la République ne l'envisagera pas comme le premier résultat d'une coalition formée contre elle. Cela étant, la réponse est aisée à prévoir ; elle sera négative ou évasive.

“ Mais quels seraient alors les moyens que la Cour de Vienne se proposerait d'employer pour soutenir sa thèse ?

“ Et quelles sont les mesures auxquelles elle s'attend de la part du Roi ?

“ C'est sur quoi les deux puissances doivent s'entendre d'avance ; et pour ne pas laisser la Cour Impériale dans une incertitude dont elle pourrait avoir à se plaindre, le Roi, fidèle à la franchise dont il se fait une loi invariable, n'hésite pas un instant de la prévenir qu'il n'outre-passera pas les bornes qu'il s'est prescrites par son système de neutralité ; qu'il doit s'astreindre à la défense du nord de l'Allemagne, et qu'il ne saurait se porter à des mesures offensives et lointaines. C'est à la Cour Impériale à calculer les siennes en conséquence, et à prendre en considération, après l'explication qui vient de lui être donnée, en combien la déclaration à faire en commun, par elle et par la Prusse, lui paraît convenable, et dans ce cas, en quels termes cet office devrait être conçu.

“ Le roi souscrit en plein à l'article 6.

“ Il consent aussi selon l'article 7 à employer ses bons offices et ses soins pour procurer la neutralité à l'Empire, dans le cas très fâcheux d'une nouvelle rupture entre l'Autriche et la France ; mais les deux Cours Impériales ne sauraient se refuser à la réflexion qu'il y aurait peu de fond à faire sur une neutralité sans garantie ; et elles sont trop justes pour s'attendre que la garantie du Roi puisse embrasser l'Allemagne entière jusqu'au Rhin. Elle resterait circonscrite dans l'enceinte de la partie septentrionale dont il a pris jusqu'ici la défense.

“ Par une suite de ces mêmes principes, la reprise des hostilités en l'Empire, qui est supposée dans l'article 8, n'apporterait aucun changement au système de neutralité que la Prusse a suivi depuis l'époque de la paix de Basle. Le roi s'engage à le maintenir dans toute sa vigueur. Mais ce sera dans les termes de la convention de neutralité arrêtée avec la France ; et, à cet égard encore, s[a] M[ajesté] n'a pas voulu laisser le moindre doute à la Cour de Vienne.”

Enclosure 3.

[Rejoinder of the Prussian Ministry to a reply from the Russian Plenipotentiaries to their foregoing observations on the project of a Convention proposed to them by Prince de Repnin.]

“ Les ministres du Roi n'ont pu se dispenser de mettre sous les yeux de s[a] M[ajesté] la réponse que Mess[ieurs] les Plénipo[tentiaires] de s[a] [Majesté] l'Empereur de Russie leur ont remise dans la conférence du 16 Juillet, sur les observations auxquelles a donné lieu le projet de convention éventuelle dressé par M. le P[rince] Repnin.

“ Le Roi serait fâché de voir naître le doute que l'addition proposée pour l'art[icle] 1, pourrait avoir été dictée par des motifs de défiance et de jalousie. Il est loin de nourrir une façon de penser si opposée à son caractère ; et si peu compatible avec le désir qui l'anime d'amener entre sa Cour et celle de Vienne le système d'une harmonie réciproque et parfaite. Il n'a pas encore renoncé à l'espoir d'établir et de consolider cet heureux accord. Et il se flattait d'y parvenir d'autant plus sûrement, en donnant à s[a] Majesté l'Empereur des Romains l'exemple de la plus grande franchise, et en lui demandant le retour. Il leur importait donc, de part et d'autre, de fixer avec une entière précision les sens des stipulations dont il voulait convenir, et d'entrer pour cet effet dans des explications plus claires et nettes. Si la Cour de Vienne n'est pas dans le cas d'agréer celles que les ministres de Prusse ont été chargés de proposer dans leurs dernières observations, la faute en est certainement aux circonstances, et le Roi est très disposé à en respecter la raison, sans vouloir l'approfondir. S[a] M[ajesté] n'en est pas moins persuadé, cependant, qu'on se serait entendu beaucoup plus aisément, si on avait pû éclaircir quelques doutes qui subsistent encore, et dès lors, probablement, telle ou telle précaution qui dans le moment présent peut paraître nécessaire, serait devenue inutile. Mais, faute de pouvoir en venir à ces éclaircissements tout de suite, ne vaudrait-il pas mieux de laisser provisoirement de côté les objets énoncés dans l'art[icle] 1; d'en reprendre la discussion après que le temps y aura répandu un plus grand jour; et de s'occuper, en attendant, de l'arrangement des indemnités revenant aux princes de l'empire lésés par la cession de la rive gauche du Rhin, arrangement qui, selon les intentions des deux Cours, a fait proprement le but principal et primitif de la négociation actuelle.

“Le Roi est prêt à traiter cette matière compliquée avec s[a] M[ajesté] Impériale, et il ne demande pas mieux que d'y apporter toutes les facilités qui dépendent de lui. Il a cru s'apercevoir dans la réponse de Messieurs les Plénipotentiaires Russes que la Cour de Vienne semble toujours attacher un grand prix au projet de procurer à la maison de Modène une indemnité en Allemagne. Quelle que puisse être la différence d'opinion de s[a] M[ajesté] sur cette proposition, elle tâchera pourtant de se rapprocher autant que possible des idées de s[a] Majesté l'Emp[ereur] des Ro[maines], et elle l'invite de s'en expliquer plus particulièrement. Si la Cour de Vienne veut réellement établir un principe de parité entre la maison qu'elle protège et la maison d'Orange-Nassau; s'il s'agit de faire éprouver à l'une et à l'autre au même degré les effets de la complaisance que les deux Cours transigeantes sont à même de se témoigner réciproquement dans cette occasion, le Roi ne la laissera pas échapper pour donner à s[a] M[ajesté] Imp[ériale] une preuve de plus de son amitié et de sa bonne volonté. Mais il suppose aussi, qu'après avoir déféré encore en ceci aux vœux de la Cour de Vienne, celle-ci ne cherchera pas à multiplier inutilement le nombre des sécularisations; et que, n'ayant pas d'autre parité à offrir à la Prusse, elle n'insistera pas non plus sur les dédommagements dont il a été question (en passant) dans une des conférences précédentes pour les Electeurs Ecclésiastiques.

“Il reste encore une réflexion à faire, ou plutôt à répéter, sur la neutralité que la Cour de Vienne voudrait assurer à l'Empire Germanique, dans le cas où il éclaterait une nouvelle rupture entre l'Autriche et la France sans que la pacification de l'Empire eût été amenée à une heureuse issue. Messieurs les Pléni[potentiaires] Russes ont déjà reçu du Roi la promesse que s[a] M[ajesté] consent à employer ses bons offices et ses soins pour y disposer le gouvernement de la République; et rien en serait oublié, sans doute, pour amener une résultat aussi intéressant. Mais si le Roi, en suivant l'impulsion de sa loyauté, indique dès à présent aux deux Cours Impériales la mesure des efforts qu'il est capable de consacrer à ses co-états, il est impossible qu'on lui sache mauvais gré de cette franchise. Pour être efficace, la neutralité qu'on a en vue doit être garantie; et la Prusse est hors d'état de se charger seule de cette garantie dans toute son étendue. En la bornant à la partie septentrionale, que sa position géographique lui permet de défendre mieux que le reste, elle couvre plus que la moitié de l'Allemagne, et ce n'est pas un léger fardeau qu'elle s'impose. Serait-ce trop prétendre ensuite que d'inviter la Cour de Vienne à pourvoir à la sûreté de l'autre moitié, qui est le plus à sa portée; et d'employer pour cet effet les moyens qui sont à sa disposition. Ce partage est dans l'ordre naturel des choses, et à cet égard encore, il ne s'agirait que de bien s'entendre pour assurer mutuellement la reconnaissance des états de l'Empire, et leur rendre les services les plus réels."

H. FAGEL to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, Sept. 12. Wimbledon Common.—"Some unforeseen business, which I can not put off, makes it absolutely necessary for me to be here at the end of this week, and early in the beginning of the next, and thus, to my great disappointment, puts it out of my power to wait on you at Dropmore, as you had kindly proposed to me. I shall be very happy if you will allow me to repair this loss, as soon as it will suit your convenience. In the meantime I return you the enclosed papers, upon the contents of which I shall be very glad to have some conversation with your Lordship. All I can say at present of the persons mentioned in Mr. B[entinck]'s letter is, that they are very little known to me. They may, for aught I know, possess some influence in the provinces (of Friesland and Groningen) to which they belong, but I don't think they have had any material share in the government previous to the French Invasion of 1795. The thing which to me appears to be of the greatest importance, particularly after what you confided to me at Dropmore, is to ascertain the real disposition of the leading men, under the present system, in the Province of Holland, which Province has always given, and must by the natural consequence of its wealth, and local situation, and for many other obvious reasons, give the impulse, whenever a change takes place in the Republic. This circumstance it is that will make the intelligence expected through the channel you mentioned so extremely interesting. I am perfectly satisfied that being once sure of Holland, the rest would follow as a matter of course. This certainly does not preclude the use there may be in keeping up the connexions and correspondence alluded to in Mr. B[entinck]'s letter, but I don't believe that the persons therein mentioned, notwithstanding the zeal and good intentions they may have, are at all equal to the task of bringing about a change in the Republic, independently of the good will, efforts, and management of some person or persons possessing power and means of influence in the Province of Holland. I think my Lord, the knowledge you have of the interior of the Republic, will make you agree with me in this opinion. The confidence which you have shewn me on so many occasions, has induced me to explain myself thus plainly and confidentially to you upon a subject which it is natural for me to take to heart, and upon which I am not entirely unable to form a judgment. Much more might be said upon this matter, but which I wish to reserve till I have the pleasure of conversing with your Lordship."

LORD GRENVILLE to MARQUIS CORNWALLIS [Lord Lieutenant of Ireland].

Private.

1798, September 13. Cleveland Row.—“During your absence from Dublin, I felt it quite impossible to trouble you on the subject of the inclosed papers. You will recollect that we had formerly some conversation on the business, and I think you then seemed to be of opinion that although we could not suffer the American Government to employ the British manufacturers yet that the Ordnance here might afford them some limited supply.

“Not knowing to what degree you are enabled to mix with the labors of your present situation any attendance or superintendence of the details of the Ordnance here, I am not sure whether I do right in troubling you upon this subject; but Mr. King's applications are so pressing, that I am under the necessity of giving him a definite answer.” Copy.

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 14. Hollwood.—“When I saw Huskisson yesterday, he did not know where Koehler was. I have just now learnt from him that Koehler is with Lord Mulgrave, and set out with him the day before on his return to Beverley. Huskisson had before told me that they were particularly intimate. This has led me to think whether our plan might not be much improved by endeavouring to prevail on Mulgrave to undertake the mission (as a temporary one) accompanied by Koehler. He might also, I conceive, be accredited in a civil capacity, and might be of great use in bringing the Russians and Turks to some understanding. The éclat of his being sent to Constantinople would do good rather than harm, and he would be the fittest person for settling terms with Koehler, and for keeping him in order, both during the time of his being employed and afterwards.

“If the war is renewed in Italy, we shall want some military man of rank with the Austrian army, and the prospect of that situation, as soon as he had accomplished the immediate objects at Constantinople, would probably be a great temptation to Mulgrave to go. I am in hopes you will like this project, and if you do, I am sure you will have no objection to sending for Mulgrave, or writing to him immediately upon it. From the nature of the commission the proposal will come most naturally from you ; and besides I am going to Walmer on Monday."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 15. [Dublin.]—"The landing of the British force has been invaluable to us, inasmuch as it has put the country completely in our hands, both against a foreign and a domestic foe ; but I expect nothing to result from these immense means, and therefore I shall not be disappointed. Ireland will be peaceable while it is governed (as at present) by the 150,000 men now armed in it ; but as I am confident that no arrangement will be formed to secure the country against the repetition of the same evils arising out of the same causes, I am equally confident that the strength and treasury of England will have been wasted only for the temporary possession of Ireland, not for her lasting security or connexion with us.

"If any thing could add to my sense of the imbecility of Lord Cornwallis's government, it would be the enclosed proclamation which appeared last night, and which, in the wording of it, gives an amnesty to any persons however criminal (deserters included) who have joined the French, provided they bring in a French musket ; but leaves within the danger of the law all persons however penitent who have lost, broken, or destroyed their French musket. I cannot tell you what an effect of indignation this state paper has produced, hatched without the slightest communication with any person breathing, at the very moment when we know that Castlebar has been attacked by these very insurgents armed with French arms, and Westport actually plundered, and (as the accounts of this morning state) held in force by these rebels and about forty French who have got together in that small town.

"I should have thought that the precipitation of the former measures, and the disgraceful capitulation with Messrs. O'Connor and Company, would have taught some discretion in these measures ; but indeed the whole is very grievous, and the open contempt of the Government very mischievous. Imagine the Speaker cutting short a conversation at a dinner of near 20 persons with, 'Come, don't let's talk of him ; he is a damned silly fellow.'

"In short, his measures and his campaign have produced a change most disadvantageous to the only object you and I have in all this, namely the peace of Government in both kingdoms.

"Lord Hobart sails for England on Monday ; he will tell you in as plain terms as he has told Lord Cornwallis that all this will not do. He will likewise discuss with you most fully the question of the measure which we all have considered so carefully. We do not quite agree, but he certainly is competent to give to you the completest (and I am sure the most correct) information upon that point, and I wish you to discuss it with him, because, as he and I do not quite agree, I think his ideas may be useful to you. I say nothing of my own misery here, as you cannot help me, and I am sure that you feel for me; but, que diable faisois-je dans cette galère!”

COUNT WORONZOW TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 15. Richmond.—“Les couriers tombent sur moi comme la grêle. Je n’ai pas encore réexpédié mon second, que je viens de recevoir un troisième, expédié de Pétersbourg 16–27 Août. Quoiqu’il ne m’a apporté que des choses auxquelles nous avons lieux de nous attendre, vue l’activité et le zèle que l’Empereur met depuis quelque temps, c’est à dire depuis qu’il a compris le danger commun, j’ai reçu pourtant des papiers qui prouvent l’élévation de son âme et la manière généreuse dans laquelle il agit envers les Turcs. J’ai reçu la communication des ordres donnés à nos ministres à Constantinople, à Vienne, et à Berlin, et la copie du traité d’alliance qui va se faire entre la Russie et la Porte. Sur cette dernière il n’y a que la Cour de Londres que l’Empereur désire d’informer.

“Les papiers que j’ai reçus sont volumineux, et, malheureusement, en Russe; il faut du temps pour les traduire, et les mettre au net, ce qui ne pourra pas être avant mercredi. Je vous suppose à la campagne, et si vous ne venez pas mercredi en ville, je vous demande la permission de venir mercredi dîner chez vous à Dropmore.

“Mon intention dans ce cas est de venir une heure avant le dîner, pour que vous ayez le temps de lire le tout; car, ayant à renvoyer le courier vendredi, je n’aurai que le jeudi à faire une réponse, par conséquent je dois revenir ici mercredi au soir.

“Le courier a passé par Berlin, et m’a apporté une lettre du Comte Panin, que je vous envoie en original, vous priant de me la renvoyer tout de suite, après en avoir tiré une copie, si cela vous est agréable.

“Je joins ici une lettre pour vous que mon courier m’a apporté du chevalier Whitworth. Faites-moi l’amitié de me dire si milord Elgin retournera à Berlin.”

LORD GRENVILLE TO COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, September 16. Dropmore.—“Je vous restitue, avec mille graces, la lettre intéressante du comte Panin, qui vraiment lui fait honneur. Je vous félicite de la conduite de votre Cour. Si quelque chose peut encore éclairer celles de Vienne et de Berlin sur le précipice qui est sous leurs pas, c’est la conduite de l’Empereur de Russie, mais tout ce que je reçois de Vienne n’est que foiblesse sur foiblesse.

“Je ne puis pas absolument décider dans ce moment si c’est mardi ou mercredi que je viendrai en ville, mais je serais bien fâché de renoncer au plaisir de vous voir ici. Je vous en préviendrai dès que je saurai quel jour je dois être en ville, et nous arrangerons le reste selon votre convenance.” Copy.

MARQUIS CORNWALLIS to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, September 18. Dublin Castle.—“No branch of the Ordnance business has given me so much anxiety and uneasiness as the situation in which we stood in regard to small arms, of which article, when I came into office, we were almost entirely unprovided. The loss of arms in Holland, and still more in the West Indies, have exceeded all bounds of calculation; and we have since been called upon to provide in the first instance for the supplementary militia, and afterwards for the general arming of the country.

“In order that we might pursue an uniform system as well in our transactions with the manufacturers as in the distribution of arms, I requested the Surveyor General (General Ross) to take the peculiar superintendence of this branch of the Department, and to manage the correspondence and all the transactions with the manufacturers, who were prepared to take every advantage of our difficulties and distresses.

“I have desired General Ross to wait upon your Lordship, and to lay before you the amount of our present stock, with our probable receipts and deliveries, and your Lordship and his Majesty’s confidential servants will then be enabled to judge how far it may be in our power to assist the American Government.

“I shall only add that I am perfectly persuaded that it would be better for us to give them every fire lock in our store than to allow Mr. King to employ our manufacturers.”

COUNT PANIN to the EMPEROR PAUL.

Secret.

1798, Sept. 18. Berlin.—“Le Ministre des Révolutionnaires François résidant ici reçut, il n’y a pas longtems, un paquet de Kocziusko à l’adresse de votre Majesté Impériale pour le faire parvenir par mon canal à sa destination. Siéyès, prévoyant (comme il l’a avoué lui-même) que je me refuserois avec mépris de toute communication avec lui, ne pouvoit se résoudre comment remplir la commission dont il étoit chargé. A cette occasion il dit entr’autres ‘il vaudroit mieux envoyer ce paquet par la voie d’un négociant, mais qui auroit le courage de le remettre à son adresse au risque d’aller en Sibérie.’ Je n’ai pas pu découvrir comment ce paquet a été transmis à Siéyès, si c’est directement par Kocziusko ou par le Gouvernement, mais d’après les informations que j’en ai, il faut conclure que l’enveloppe ne contient pas seulement une lettre mais encore un paquet. J’ai aussi lieu de croire que le Ministère d’ici n’ignore pas ces circonstances, par la perlustration ou par des espions destinés à surveiller Siéyès.

“L’annexe à cette rélation m’est parvenue par un canal sûr, quoique pas par l’entremise secrète connue à votre Majesté Impériale. Cette note sert de réponse à celle qui a été remise par le Comte Haugwitz, dont je n’ai pas pu avoir de copie, mais son principal contenu est inséré dans ma relation du 21 Aout.”

Enclosure.

LE CITOYEN SIÉYÈS to COUNT HAUGWITZ.

8 Fructidor, Année 6. Berlin.—La note remise le 2 fructidor à l’envoyé de la République Française par le ministre d’Etat et du Cabinet ne s’annonce que comé une réponse à l’entretien qui avoit eu lieu huit jours auparavant entre M. le Colonel de Zastrow et le citoyen Siéyès au sujet de la paix continentale ; mais l’envoyé de France ne peut se dispenser d’y voir une offre positive et nouvelle, qui quoique non provoquée de sa part, exige qu’il la recoive avec les sentimens d’intérêt et d’amitié qui l’ont dictée. Cette offre est celle des bons offices du Roi pour applanir des difficultés qui, suivant la note, se sont élevées de nouveau entre la République française et la Cour de Vienne depuis le traité de Campo Formio. Le soussigné ignore si, en effet, il s’est élevé entre ces deux Puissances des difficultés assez graves pour appeller utilement l’interposition des bons offices de Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse ; mais il doit se montrer infiniment sensible à une attention qui prouve au moins la part amicale que Sa Majesté seroit disposée à prendre aux intérêts de la République française, dans le cas où de telles difficultés viendroient à s’élever. Dans cette hypothèse le soussigné a cru convenable de faire connoître ces bonnes dispositions à son gouvernement, et il a l’honneur d’en prévenir le Ministre du Cabinet. Copy.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 19. Dublin.—“Not having been very well for the last two days, I should not have written but to remove any anxiety that you might have even for a moment from hearing of a second landing of the French, which is piously believed in Dublin. The fact is that, on (I believe) Sunday, a French brig stood into the isles of Arran, and from thence to Burton Coningham’s famous job-harbour of Rutland which used to plague me so much, on the north-west point of Ireland ; they landed Napper Tandy and about thirty men, and announced arms for 3,000 men ; they remained on shore a few hours till they caught a boy with the post, and having opened it and found by the newspapers that the French were taken, they re-embarked, and, the wind being at south-west, they stood eastward round towards Lough Swilly.

“At the same time we got the news of the Cork mail coach having been stopped and plundered last night at Kilcullen Bridge by Holt and his banditti, with whom Lord Cornwallis has been negotiating through a protected rebel, one Byrne, till Holt has collected about 500 deserters, at the head of whom he offers protection to all deserters who will join him; and Generals Eustace and Wilford, the one at Wicklow and the other at Naas, have allowed him to plunder all the country between their posts. When you add to this the ill humour arising from the plundering parties now in arms in Mayo, and the proclamation which pardons every body for every possible offence who brings in a French musket (nota bene; I have bought one from a grenadier of mine who killed the French owner of it) you will judge of the disposition to cry 'praise and honour on his head' who has not yet above 120,000 men in arms under his orders!"

LORD GRENVILLE TO HENRY DUNDAS.

1798, September 20. Dropmore.—"I received the enclosed this morning by your directions. I have no doubt that Mr. Sullivan may be accurate in what he states of the danger to be apprehended from Zeman Shaw, especially as by your sending his letter to me I conclude that your opinion coincides with his. But my ignorance of the subject makes his explanation very unsatisfactory to me as to the second point, which is that of the means which the Emperor of Russia possesses of counteracting such a league as Mr. Sullivan describes. He does not state what it is that he wishes Russia to do, whom she is to attack, nor where her army is to march. The story of a projected attack on Bengal in 1791 has, I believe, found its way into Eton's book. I never gave it the smallest credit, nor do I now. Such a thing might be talked of at Petersburg to flatter the Empress's vanity, or it might be talked of by her amongst those romantic projects which she was fond of indulging in conversation, but I am confident it was never seriously in contemplation: and this for one solid reason among many, namely, that it was perfectly known at Petersburg, from the first hour of the armament, that it would not terminate in war.

"In my apprehension the making such a proposal at Petersburg as Mr. Sullivan suggests, would only tend to give that Court a persuasion that we are dependent on them in a quarter where nature has separated us by limits more insuperable than the oceanus dissociabilis which Horace speaks of.

"If I am wrong no one is more able to set me right than yourself; but do it, if you please, with a map in your hand, and with a calculation of distances, a reference to history, and a consideration of the present state of the intervening countries between Petersburg and Calcutta.

"It is impossible to be better disposed than both Russia and the Porte are in the present moment, but it is in Europe and Africa that I look to reap the benefit (or at least the direct benefit) of their aid. In its consequences that aid may doubtless be of the utmost importance to India."

EARL SPENCER to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 21. [Althorpe.]—"Your letters of the 18th and 19th reached me yesterday. In respect to Captain Mudge I will take as early an opportunity as I can to give him employment.

"On the subject of your other letter I agree very much with you in what is to be wished by us; the only difficulty appears to be in the execution of it. In consequence of our last conversation, I wrote last week a long letter to Lord St. Vincent giving the outline of our ideas for the employment of the fleet in the Mediterranean, which will point out to him the general line of instruction we wish to be given; and I am not quite sure that much more precise instructions can be given considering the various circumstances which may arise, and may require to be acted upon before any directions can be sent from home. However, I will talk over the whole of this subject more particularly with Admiral Young, in whose opinion and discretion on naval matters I have great confidence, on my return to town, where I shall be on Sunday next; and will at the same time see what are the best arrangements that we can make on the subject of supplying officers to the Porte. There are many reasons for preferring Sir Sidney, but at the same time there are some difficulties in the way, but none, I believe, that may not be surmounted."

CAPTAIN H. TAYLOR to WILLIAM WICKHAM.

1798, September 24. Dublin Castle.—"I transmit to you enclosed copies of information received from Major-General Myers at Cork. The only thing that could, and has as yet, been done in consequence, was immediately to communicate the intelligence to Major-Generals Nugent, Champagné, and Trench, and to direct the troops to be on the alert and in readiness to move. Should they attempt the landing either in Killebeggs Bay, or in Lough Swilly, the troops upon and in the neighbourhood of the Shannon, namely, the Guards, 2nd and 29th and 100th regiments, the 1st and 2nd Light Infantry Battalions, and the Downshire Militia and Reay Fencibles, can immediately assemble and march by Belturbet or Enniskillen; the Sutherland Fencibles from Newry, the North Gloucester from Drogheda, and West Suffolk from Dundalk, would move to the same points. These troops, with what General Nugent would assemble in the North, will, it is hoped, be equal to any thing the enemy could bring, without suspending in any degree the operations of the troops ordered into the counties of Wicklow and Wexford, and that of Mayo. The same troops, in great measure, would march, in the event of a landing in Sligo Bay, or south of it, towards Galway; and, if necessary, or in the event of their landing still more to the south, a considerable force might be assembled and march from the neighbourhood of Limerick and even Clonmel, without even then suspending the above operations.

"The garrison of Dublin, consisting of the Warwick, Bucks, Leicester, and South Lincoln, would not be reduced; and parts of the Bedford, West Kent, and Worcester would relieve the troops in Louth, would reinforce those at Trim and Mullingar in Meath and West Meath, which counties are subject to be disturbed. The Northumberland Fencibles would, when relieved by one of the above regiments at Mullingar, proceed to Longford. By these movements the country in our rear would be kept quiet, and the garrison of Dublin would be sufficiently strong if necessary to detach to the county of Kildare. Of course, the sending back the parts of the militia regiments to England cannot but be suspended at present. We know nothing of the North Hants as yet.

"Lieutenant-General Lake was ordered to direct the operations in Wexford and Wicklow, but will be relieved by Sir C. Asgill. Holt is said to have left Wicklow and got into the barony of Forth. I shall not fail to send you the intelligence of every thing that may occur.

"Should they land in any point so as to render General Trench's stay in Mayo too dangerous, he will fall back upon Athlone." Copy. Endorsed: "Military dispositions in Ireland."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 24. Dublin.—"Our news is very short, namely, Mayo very unquiet and apparently forgot in the distribution of troops; Lieutenant-General Lake with 400 men ordered and gone to hunt Holt in the Wicklow mountains; Teeling just hanged, and Tone under trial; all the other prisoners made at Ballinamuck brought up to Dublin, and all relieved for transportation, and put on board what is termed a crotty-ship; Chief Baron Yelverton arraigning in every company the courts martial of murder; Mr. Egan, Judge of Kilmainham, telling a jury in his charge that no credit is to be given in any case to an informer employed by Government to deceive and to betray; the yeomanry all put off duty, and the crotties employed in murdering them separately; every one loud against Lord Cornwallis, some with reason, but most without any; and all, whether government or rebels, stating the certainty of another attempt, which Lord Cornwallis says he expects in about a month."

M. DE LUC TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 24. Berlin.—"Ayant trouvé ce matin M. Garlike prêt à expédier une dépêche à votre Excellence, je lui ai dit à la hâte quelques nouvelles circonstances que je désirois lui faire connoître; mais M. le Comte de Panin m'ayant dit depuis que j'avois encore un moment pour ajouter quelque chose à son paquet, je m'empresse d'en profiter.

"Peu après la dernière lettre que j'eus l'honneur d'écrire à votre Excellence, M. de Haugwitz me fit témoigner, par un de ses amis devenu le mien, qu'il étoit fâché de ce que je ne venois pas le voir familièrement comme il m'avoit témoigné le désirer, et je profitois de cette invitation. Plus je lui ai parlé fortement comme je pense, plus il m'a pressé de le voir souvent; et enfin, lui parlant de départ, il m'a prié de rester, m'assurant que les circonstances changeroient suivant mes désirs, et qu'il souhaitoit que j'y fusse. Lui-même m'a pressé d'aller à Potsdam voir Monseigneur le Duc de Brunswic, et m'en a facilité les moyens. S'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] m'a témoigné sa surprise de tout ce changement chez M. de H[augwitz], et m'a demandé des explications de ce qui s'étoit passé entre nous, ce dont elle a témoigné son satisfaction, m'assurant qu'il l'avoit trouvé très changé suivant ses désirs, et m'invitant à continuer de le voir. J'ai pu donner en même temps à s'a[ltesse] s[érénissime] des informations importantes, à s'engager à en recevoir d'autres de M. le Comte de Panin, en le voyant en particulier. Cet entretien a eu lieu, et Votre Excellence apprendra bien des choses favorables par ce courrier. À quoi je ne pouvois ajouter que cet exposé succinct, que je devois à Votre Excellence, des raisons qui m'ont retenues ici."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 26. Dublin.—"I have endeavoured to give every attention to your questions respecting that measure to which we look with so much impatience, and I have discussed it very much at length with the person whose opinions are likely to have so much weight with you. I have found in him a very strong and decided disposition to stake the whole upon it, because he appeared convinced with me that nothing short of it could be substituted as a measure or system adequate to the task of establishing a decided British government in Ireland. He is strongly convinced that all power given to the Catholics will be used by the mass of them against England, and any connexion with her; but appears more doubtful than I should have expected of the power of the Catholics to crush the Protestants, supposing England unable or unwilling to embark her means in such a quarrel. But these opinions do not shake his decided ideas in favour of our measure, though I plainly see that he would be averse from the coupling with it that which we look to, namely, the abolition of such of the remaining restrictions on Catholics (particularly as with respect to eligibility in Parliament) as may then be removed without the slightest risk to the Protestant ascendancy, secured as it would be by a Protestant Parliament in London, even though Irish Papists should be eligible in the Irish part of the limited House of Commons. He seemed to lean to the idea of leaving all the existing restrictions where they are, and stated that the greatest bonus that could be held out to the Irish Parliament to induce them to acquiesce in the measure, would be the certainty that by an union the gate would be completely barred against any further concession to the Catholics. Such he seemed to think would be the expectation of most of the Northerners, whose prejudices and eagerness must be very attentively looked to on this subject ; while, on the other hand, the great temptation to the Catholics would be the hope of gaining some share, though obviously an imperfect one, in the legislation if not in the executive government of the country. To all this I have urged that if the measure does not go to the full extent of settling all questions of future Catholic claim, and all questions of Parliamentary reform, it is very incomplete, and perhaps que le jeu ne vaut pas la chandelle ; and this I find is the opinion of many people, who being thoroughly convinced of the impossibility of satisfying both Catholics and Protestants, are averse from moving the question, fearing that, even if it should be carried, still the great object of it would be missed. I took the opportunity of this long conversation to discuss with him (as a part of this arrangement) my ideas respecting a full and complete establishment for the Catholic and Presbyterian Churches. It is unnecessary to go into the details of our conversation on that head, since he agreed with me that it would be insanity to attempt the measure without this arrangement. I pressed the doubt stated in your letter, and urged it in its full force before I gave him my opinion, and he agreed with me in giving it no weight, supposing always that the stipend was ample for all ranks and lucrative for the highest orders ; and supposing always that the question of tithes was put to sleep by some arrangement for a corn rent or a land allotment. I cannot describe to you the importance which all ranks appear to annex to some arrangement of this sort respecting tithes, which they state as being a sine quâ non for the peace and quiet of the country, and which would certainly operate as a very general and universal premium to all religions to taste any measure of which this formed a prominent feature. I am not insensible to the delicacy of this ground, but I am firmly of opinion that it must be grappled with, and may be turned to the greatest advantage. I do not state this as necessarily forming part of our measure, but as one that in policy and wisdom you will not separate from it. But to complete your system of connecting these Churches with the Government of the country, you must be prepared to give certain legal powers of suspension, deprivation, and expulsion by law both to the Catholic Church government and to the Presbyterian government assembly, for without such powers your measure will be incomplete.

“Very much of the question of the eligibility of the Catholics to sit in Parliament must turn upon the opinion of it in England ; for it is obvious that if England and Scotland are not prepared to do away so much of the Test Act as prevents Catholics sitting in the united Parliament, the question ought not to be stirred here ; and it is a point of such magnitude on your side of the water, and involves so many collateral considerations, that I doubt whether you are ripe to give an opinion upon it. Perhaps it might not be impossible to admit Irish Catholics to sit for Irish seats in the united Parliament, on the same footing as Scotch Presbyterians may sit by law for Scotch seats ; but it is obvious that English Catholics would assert claims with real foundation, and English Dissenters with none ; but both sects would press upon you at such a moment, with great inconvenience to your measure. I have at different times digested a plan for the formation of the united Parliament, which, at least, has the advantage of being applicable to the system of a Parliament limited only to Protestants, or partially opened, or generally opened ; and the leading principle of my plan is to keep all the existing rights of election entire, though I reduce the numbers to one half. I have explained it generally to Lord Hobart, and I amuse myself in varying it from time to time as improvements occur to me ; assuming as a datum that the proportion should be, in the House of Commons from 100 to 120 members, and in the House of Lords about 80 ; the whole to be chosen under the existing rights of election, and the surplus disposed of in the shape of election committees, and committees on private bills, to be chosen by the House for the session only, and to sit in Dublin for those purposes. Something of this sort must be formed, for I find every one strongly impressed with the impossibility of sending their disputants, or parties to private Bills, to London for the purpose of battling their private concerns, or fighting an election question before a committee in London.

“ But I again return to the Catholic question, for the whole in my mind turns upon that. If this measure is understood by them to be proposed for their advantage, it is possible that you may derive great advantage from them, and so vice-versa. Still, however, this or any other statement or modification of the project must remain open to all the difficulties which arise out of the heat and intemperance of two very hot-headed and ill-blooded parties, mutually undervaluing each other's strength, pretensions, and situation in this country ; and, at last, it must be decided by the wisdom of English Government ; and you will be to consider your means for carrying your plan into execution by looking to the English force of all descriptions, which is the only real force upon which you can depend. I have thought very much upon it, and though I do not pretend to underate any of the very many momentous difficulties that must occur, I have no difficulty in saying that I think the measure may succeed to the full extent of an open Irish proportion ; and that I do not see any possible salvation short of such a measure, connected with the ideas which I have thrown out. You will clearly understand that when I give this opinion, I look only to Irish side of the question ; for I cannot pretend to judge how far it might or not succeed in England.

“ But, conceiving myself bound to consider very well every possible bearing of this question, and to divest myself of every prejudice, and looking to those through whom this great work is to be conducted, I hold myself called upon to say distinctly to you that I believe, first, that Lord Cornwallis will not undertake the measure whenever the moment of execution arrives ; and, secondly, that such is the universal impression to his disadvantage, that I solemnly protest I believe it will prosper less in his hands than in those of any possible person to whom it might be committed,

I should not dare say thus much to everyone ; but to you who know that no consideration would induce me to undertake it, and that I do not look to any possible A. B. or C. for such an undertaking, I have no difficulty in speaking my mind ; and I trust that I do it without heat, or without any one leaning or improper bias whatsoever. From the moment Lord Cornwallis landed, he has professed to govern without the slightest communication with any of the many persons from whom he might have derived much useful information. Lord Castlereagh has neither the abilities nor the means of supplying the great deficiency of materials that must arise out of such a system of no communication. The common routine of Office has almost in every instance been put by, and the exertions of individuals have, to my knowledge, been employed with much pains and success to mislead for the purpose of exposing. The ill disposition of the Speaker, the incapacity of Lord Castlereagh to so great a situation, and the conduct of all persons in office, very naturally malicious in return for this no-confidence, has thrown the House of Commons loose to a series of such measures and such bills as never disgraced a legislative assembly. Much however of this has been tolerated so long as the impression continued of the advantage to be derived from his very superior military talents ; but the history of the last three weeks has given a very different turn to the public opinion upon this subject ; and it is painful to hear everything that is said respecting his conduct, his military objects, and the extreme risk incurred, as well as the disgraceful encouragement given to the enemy by collecting near 20,000 men to form a cordon from Enniskillen round to Galway, out of which cordon the French slipped, and but for the unparalleled march of the infantry would have got first to Dublin. I do not mean by all this to say that Lord Cornwallis deserves a twentieth part of all that is said respecting him ; but the mischief is done ; and I fear that much of the means are lost which he had in public estimation for the very interesting measure upon which so much depends. I will however fairly own that part of this mischief may be repaired by sending hither a Minister (as Secretary) of a very different description to conduct all the civil business of the country ; but I much fear, from what I hear and see, that Lord Cornwallis would not be easily led ; and unless he is so, I cannot see how the system can be changed ; for even if he could alter his manner and conduct to those who could assist him here, it is too late for them (recollect what I told you of the Speaker) to alter their's. I cannot yet discover that he has suffered the word union ever to escape his lips, save to the Lord Chancellor, whose opinions he knew before he came hither, and Lord Hobart, and me ; and I know that Lord Clare, as late as yesterday, was persuaded that he had not collected any one opinion from any one person whose ideas might have been doubtful. Lord Castlereagh has given him some names pro and con, and I have added to those lists, as have, in some few instances, Lord Clare and Lord Hobart ; but I do not believe that he knows any thing more on that chapter. Add to all this that his measures arising out of the actual state of the country are inexplicable. I always have thought, and still think, the extension of mercy (on confession of guilt) wise and politic, after the very many examples made to the amount of 300, who were executed in different ways during the rebellion. You know my opinion upon the mode in which this measure was conducted; but the extension of that system to a rebellion in aid of, and acting with a French force landed here, is inexplicable. Fourteen Longford militia men taken in arms have been hanged; so has Blake the general, and Teeling and one O'Dowd. Tone is under trial, and Moore (the President of Connaught) ordered for trial. But all the other prisoners taken at Ballinamuck or since are, without exception, ordered to be transported, and are actually taken out of prison and put on board for that purpose. Of the rebels now in arms under Holt in Wicklow not one is tried; and of those put into the croppieships (as they are called) by Lord Camden, and since his departure by the different General Officers, a list of above 200 are now pardoned, upon the terms of entering into the King's land service, from which they may be discharged next day. And these people are to be disembarked, as Mr. Swan told me, who shewed me the list, on Saturday or Sunday next, and turned loose to any regiment who will take them. Add to this the famous French musket proclamation, and it completes a system of such complete imbecility that there is no safety to individuals but in turning rebels. At least such is the very avowed and open language of every one. I have asked what number have taken the benefit of this proclamation, and I can say from the best authority that, on Saturday last, not one musket had been delivered; and I enclose a Sligo extract which will sufficiently explain why they are not given up.

"In the midst of all this arrives notice of the French fleet being out; and every yeoman has already been disbanded, and with reason outrageous at being given up to be murdered in their separate houses or beds, by the insurgents in every part of the kingdom."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798,] September 28. Dunira Lodge.—"I received yours with the enclosure last night. It had been sent to you in common course from the Office, on account of the mention made of Russia. I only myself received it two days ago, and could not therefore give any special order with regard to it; but it is a general order to send to every Department any thing that comes to me, which, in any ways, bears upon the business of any other Department.

"With regard to the letter itself, I cannot say it gives me any new information; for it requires no great sagacity to discover that, if any confederacy is acted upon to overthrow our power in India, Zemaun Shaw must be a material link in that chain; because it has been and is the ruling passion of that family to restore the throne of Delhi, and its resources are considerable both in men and money. I believe his revenues are not much less than three crores, which is not inferior even to those of Tippoo. In conjunction with France and Tippoo, there can be no doubt of his being a formidable enemy to us, because by his means our Bengal force and revenue would be kept in play at the time the united efforts of France and Tippoo were employed against us in the Carnatic and on the coast of Malabar. I don't mean to say that the difficulties of Zemaun Shaw are not great in the execution of such a project. He must either subdue or conciliate the Seiks. He must lay his account of being opposed by the Scindian branch of the Mahratta power, in whose hands is now centered what remains of the ancient Mogul authority. These difficulties must be overcome before he can reach us; and although he would be aided by some of the Rohilla tribes from predatory or other interests, I should not apprehend from him any serious calamity if our resources were not called for to act in other still more pressing quarters. Of course I can only write here from general recollection, but it is one of those Indian positions, which I have laid up in my own mind, that Zemaun Shaw ought to be looked upon as a very formidable part of any confederacy that may be formed against us in India. There is a minute of Sir John Shore upon some of the consultations of the Bengal Government, professedly on the subject of Zemaun Shaw, and his views and resources. I shall desire Mr. Cable to send you a copy of it. In that minute, if I am not greatly mistaken, one of the difficulties stated to attend the execution of Zemaun Shaw's projects arises from the distracted state of his own family, one of the branches of which is supported by the existing power in Persia. I know not whether right or wrong, but I have conceived that the influence of Russia in Persia is very great; and, if that is the case, even the knowledge of Russia being in habits of strict amity and connexion with us, would operate so on the power of Persia as to create indirectly an efficient counterpoise to check the ambition and projects of Zemaun Shaw. In short, if the power of Persia was to take a part against him, he durst not leave the confines of his own dominions; or, if he was to act he might be compelled to take a part to annoy, in the place of supporting, the projects of France.

"As to the point whether Russia had views of attacking us in 1791, or whether the proposed route was or was not practicable, I really cannot take upon me to decide; and I cannot follow your advice of having recourse to my maps, for I have none here of a nature to direct me in such an investigation. I remember some years ago to have bestowed some attention upon it, and I was disposed to think it impracticable, chiefly from the difficulty of provisions in some parts of the progress; but having seen what bread the Russian soldiers and sailors are contented with, I confess I should be sorry to think our security in any great quarter rested solely on such a basis. Mr. Eton has often stated that the plans and details of that expedition were still to be got among the papers of Potemkin; and if there is any chance of its being got, we should do wrong not to send him to bring them, if he can by any means procure them.

"There is one direct way in which Russia can be of use to us. She can let the East India Company, if necessary, have ten thousand of her troops in their pay ; and such an aid would be of the utmost importance, if a large French force was to be acting either on the Malabar coast or in the Carnatic, in conjunction with Tippe; and, if the Turks and Russians are really about to act in concert together, there would be no difficulty of bringing them by the Black Sea and the Mediterranean to Gibraltar, or Minorca, if it should fall into our hands.

"By a note from the Admiralty received last night, I hope there remains no doubt that at last Sir Horatio Nelson has fallen in with the French fleet. If the action has been decisive, it, I would hope, puts us on velvet in the Mediterranean, and indeed every where in Europe ; but alas ! it comes too late for India. I hate to indulge retrospective melancholy, but in this instance I cannot relieve my mind from it. If we had not been too incredulous as to the object of Buonaparte's armament, I think such instructions would have been given to Sir Horatio Nelson as would have prevented him from leaving Alexandria, after he had once reached it in the auspicious and promising way he did. What a change that circumstance would have made on the state of this country ? I must close the subject, for it almost drives me mad to think of it."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 28. Dublin.—"The county of Mayo, after having been completely left to its fate, save and except Castlebar, and after having been plundered and laid waste for 14 days after the battle of Ballinamuck for want of troops, was recovered on the 22nd by General Trench ; who has taken all that remained of French, and has killed above 2,000 persons in arms, and made no rebel prisoners ; in which he is right in an economical point of view, as Lord Cornwallis will soon find the expense of victualling all he takes (and will not hang) very heavy. Yesterday two Irish artillery men who deserted, and were found in French uniform at the French guns at Ballinamuck, were pardoned on condition of serving in the West Indies ! and 97, being the entire lot of Ballinamuck prisoners, were put on board a transport ship as poor deluded men who were not leaders, without one legal example having been made whatsoever. All our troops are now moving south ; and poor Lake, having in vain hunted Holt, is now gone down to collect troops at Mallow."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, September 29. [Dublin.]—"I enclose you our bulletin and congratulate you that it is now ascertained from authority that on the 26th, which makes the 18th day after the battle of Ballinamuck, five muskets had been given up in consequence of the proclamation. I enclose to you two papers which are amusing. The note to General Trench is sufficiently impertinent for a Frenchman at the head of a French army ; but for a Frenchman at the head of rebels I think a different measure of treatment should be held out than that of a common prisoner of war. The other is a copy taken just now out of the pocket of Tone who is this moment hanged, having been taken under the name of Smith, acting as adjutant in the French army. He refused a priest, and said he gloried in the principles and name of a Frenchman. You will observe that Killibegs was their object, as settled in their original plan ; and you will observe that a debarkation there puts them within the line of the defence of Lough Erne and its lower waters. This would not be of any great moment if there was a force to check them at Donegal, but there is none. You see that Tone in this letter speaks of ‘any other squadron,’ and of the assistance to be derived from the fishing boats. This very point was suggested to Lord Cornwallis even before this landing ; but even with the past experience, no one step has been taken for instructing any person in any part of Ireland on this head, or on the more important chapter of breaking bridges and roads, nor is this duty committed or recommended to any one. I have heard this morning from Kilkenny and from Wexford. The rebels are in force in the county of Kilkenny, and Holt is master of the whole low country round Lord Carysfort’s estate at Arklow, and very narrowly missed taking your friend General Eustace on Tuesday last. I should not write to you all this unpleasant nonsense but that I know that every day’s post is interesting to you, and I trust that Tom shares all these communications.”

Enclosure :

M. TONE to ———.

Donegal Bay, Fructidor 5.—“ The day I embarked at Rochelle I wrote to you ; in that letter I gave you an account of our force, but as it might have miscarried, I shall repeat its contents. We are nine hundred infantry and about one hundred chasseurs and canonniers, with twenty or thirty officers à la suite. We have, besides three field pieces, six thousand stand of arms, and a very adequate quantity of ammunition. I should also mention a large quantity of helmets and odd clothing of various colours which the General found in the magazine at Rochelle. Pat will look droll in a helmet without any corresponding article of dress. To come to our actual situation, yesterday morning we arrived at the mouth of the bay, after a passage of thirteen days, without seeing anything. We stood up towards Killybegs harbour with a light breeze, and got within two hours’ sail of our landing place, when the wind died away. This is damned unlucky, as it has entirely deprived us of the advantage of surprise. The wind springing up contrary in the evening, we stood right across the bay to the county of Mayo side, where Killala, I believe, affords a place proper to debark. Night and the want of a pilot obliged us to anchor in the middle of the bay. This morning we are under way again, and endeavouring to get into Killala, the wind not being very good. I refer you to the map, where you will see that we are in sight both of Killybegs and Killala bays, without the power of entering either. Pause here, my friends, and pay a compliment to my patience, which suffers me to write in such a situation. You cannot expect coherency; we are surrounded on all sides by very high mountains; if there is an aristocrat within ten leagues of us, he is with his glass on the top of some hill watching our motions, and sending expresses in every direction. These are pleasant speculations. I hope the rogues won't have the wit to destroy all the fishing boats round the bay, for we are in great need of some to help us to debark. We have not as yet seen a single boat and be damned to them. On dit, that we shall be in Killala in a couple of hours; our grenadiers will debark in our own boats, and if there be any fishermen, the rascals shall be made useful. I have no more to add. You shall have a line from me written on the back of my hat; I have seen a print of Buonaparte in that attitude.

One o'clock in the afternoon.

"I ask pardon of the gods for having repined. We are close in with Killala, and have taken a little brig, a thing absolutely necessary as our frigates are too large to run close in. We have also some fishing boats. The pilot, who is up, gives us the best intelligence in the world. There are scarcely any troops to oppose us, and Jemmy Plunkett is at the head of the insurgents who are up in the county Roscommon. We have also taken a lieutenant of the Prince of Wales's regiment of Fencibles, going from Sligo to Killala to take the command of, or rather join a company of infantry there with his servant; and a gentleman of Sligo with him. A yeoman, though I believe an aristocrat, offered to lay a guinea that, if we please, we will be masters of Sligo to-morrow without firing a shot at us. God bless you. My postscript shall be dated from Killala. En attendant, I apprise you that we hear nothing of any other squadron having arrived. Burke considers this letter as from himself.

Killala, Fructidor 6.

"Yesterday evening we landed, and drove sixty yeomen and regulars before us like sheep. A few of our grenadiers only were engaged. We killed two and made a dozen prisoners. The people will join us in myriads; they throw themselves on their knees as we pass along, and extend their arms for our success. We will be masters of Connaught in a few days. Erin go Bragh."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 2. Dublin.—"As to Ireland, we know nothing of French ships; nor have the usual symptoms shewn themselves by which on former occasions it was easy to foretell that an invasion was expected. I told you in a former letter that if the wind held as strongly at south-west off the French coast as in Ireland on the 19th and 20th, it would be clear that they must have run back to L'Orient, and the very long interval from the 17th September to the 1st October (for all the country mails are come in this morning) without their appearance off Ireland, strengthens this conjecture. God grant it may be so; for all I see, and all I know assures me that the defeat of an invasion of 3,500 men will not be as speedily as your wishes or mine would lead us to expect. My views and my fears are very gloomy on the subject of Ireland, and the public opinion is equally desponding. Lord Cornwallis is now employing two obscure men to enquire, and to liberate at their discretion from the gaols and prison ships, men 'improperly committed by the civil or military power, or improperly convicted by military tribunals.' You will hardly believe that I quote the words exactly, as stated by Mr. Justice Swan, one of these Inquisitors, to be the nature of his employment. In consequence of which, amongst very many others, Murphy the feather merchant (in whose house Lord E. FitzGerald was hid, and who was in the room when Lord Edward was taken), committed for high treason, was yesterday liberated, to the indignation of all Dublin, without the slightest communication with any one of the law servants of the Crown. This system has been pursued now for about ten days, and has struck such a damp that the country justices and juries (it is now assize week) have refused to act in some of the counties, and the witnesses have almost universally absconded. What to advise you to I protest I know not; but I owe it to you and to myself to say that I have not met a single person who does not agree with me that the country never bore so gloomy an aspect; and that there does not exist one grain of confidence in the talents of Lord Cornwallis, who has thrown away the greatest game that ever was put into the hands of man. Lord Carysfort goes to England in a few days; he will tell you how very generally this distrust is spread; and increased if possible by his announcing on Saturday last, not to Parliament, not to the Privy Council, not to his Cabinet, not to individuals high in office or in situation, but to the corporation of hosiers! an intended change of system; an answer which they printed and sent round most decorously to all members of Parliament. Of this answer no one person whatsoever was apprized till the 'master of the hosiers' announced it. Indeed it is most true that if this man ever had talents, he has left them on the other side of the water; and (what is more important) will be a most unprofitable servant, either to the exigency of the present moment or to the hereafter. For though 'if it were done, it were well it were done quickly,' yet I solemnly protest I do not conceive it possible that it should prosper in his hands."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 2. Richmond.—"Je me réjouis avec vous et je vous félicite bien sincèrement sur la belle victoire du brave Chevalier Nelson, dont nous avons la nouvelle certaine, et qui est encore plus brillante que nous ne l'avons cru auparavant. Je vous envoie l'extrait d'une lettre que j'ai reçue hier de mon ami Kotchoubey, et la copie de celle que le Capitaine Capel m'a apportée du Comte Rasoumowski."

Enclosure 1.

M. KOTCHOUBEI to COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, August 25. St. Petersburg. Extract.—"Je ne sais si je vous ai marqué que le comte Cobenzl est de retour ici. Il a eu la permission de venir faire sa cour à leurs Majestés à Gatchina, où je l'ai vu parfaitement bien accueilli. Il conte mille choses de Buonaparte, qu'il arrange, je crois, un peu à sa façon; mais convient néanmoins que le grand génie perce partout. Nous avons reçu hier par Constantinople la nouvelle qu'il marchait sur Caïre. J'ai lu différentes proclamations faites par lui en Egypte, et dois convenir, comme je l'ai toujours dit, que personne ne connaît mieux les Turcs que les Français."

Enclosure 2.

COUNT RASOUMOUSKOI to COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, September 8-19. Vienna.—"Je vous écris deux mots de chez le Chevalier Eden, où je mène suis rendu en grande hâte pour voir le Capitaine Capel, envoyé par l'Amiral Nelson avec la nouvelle officielle de la grande victoire remportée sur les Français dans la baie d'Abukir. Je ne vous en détaillerai pas les circonstances; le résultat en est que de treize vaisseaux de ligne qu'avait l'ennemi, neuf ont été pris, deux brûlés, et deux se sont sauvés. De trois amiraux, l'un a été tué, c'est Bruyers; l'autre pris, Blankett; le troisième était à bord d'un de ceux qui ont échappés. Ce grand événement qui annule la marine Française, qui aura les suites les plus importantes sur toute l'Italie, se passait au moment où douze vaisseaux Russes venaient de passer les Dardanelles pour joindre les Anglais; au moment où notre Cour, indépendamment de vingt mille auxiliaires, en promet soixante mille à l'Autriche. Si celle-ci ne profite point d'une pareille circonstance qui peut et doit inmanquablement réparer ses malheurs, et changer de la manière la plus avantageuse la face de l'Europe menacée de sa perte, l'Autriche sera cause de nos malheurs à venir, et responsable devant la postérité. Je n'épargnerai certainement ni soins ni arguments pour appuyer sur cette opinion, mais sera-ce avec succès? Je n'ose m'en flatter. La position fatale vis à vis de l'Angleterre offre une pierre d'acchoppement, que le Cabinet le plus généreux des deux doit ôter; ce n'est pas celui de Vienne."

Copy.

EARL SPENCER to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 3. Admiralty.—"In answer to your two notes at once, I think upon the whole (having turned and returned the subject in my thoughts as much as I can) that there is not now the occasion there appeared before for sending another ship up the Mediterranean. You will see by the further despatches arrived to-day that Nelson has taken the only measure which in his state he could take, and which appears the only one required for the present, of blocking up Alexandria and the mouth of the Nile by a good squadron ; and by that means entirely cutting off the French army from its supplies, of which all the intercepted letters represent them as being in the most pressing want.

“The Turk, you will also see, has decidedly taken his part by a most magnificent declaration of war ; and as the Russians have brought supernumerary officers to assist on board the Turkish fleet, I should be apprehensive of danger from our sending any out, unless we were desired to assist them in that manner. If any ship was to be sent, Sir Sidney and his Tiger would, I think, be the best to send ; but I hesitate very much on the necessity of sending him now, as every thing seems to be in so perfectly good a train in the Levant.

“I wish things were as well at Vienna. I fear nothing but our giving up the point about the convention will now bring Austria forward, even if that will, and it is very possible the French may make their peace ; though I cannot help having still hopes from the Neapolitan interest, and Naples must be at war with France. The accounts from Malta are most encouraging ; and having come through Naples, I hope our naval people will be sufficiently apprized of them to act upon them even before our directions arrive.”

B. GARLIKE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, October 3. Berlin.—“What I have now the honour of communicating to your Lordship was confided to me in a private conversation with Count Panin. In the opportunity which he had of talking with the Duke of Brunswick at the Potsdam review, his Serene Highness asked him whether, in the possible case of the renewal of hostilities on the part of the German powers, it had occurred to them to fix the boundaries of the respective countries which might become practicable at the peace. Count Panin answered that he did not believe that anything respecting it had been suggested by either of them ; that he was much struck with the penetration and foresight of His Serene Highness on the subject, and that with the Duke’s permission he would mention it to the Emperor. Count Panin accordingly wrote to His Imperial Majesty, and with so much secrecy, that the letter was directed to be delivered en mains propres.

“The light in which Count Panin considers the Duke of Brunswick’s question is that the object of it had previously furnished matter of conversation with the King of Prussia, and that it was made for the purpose of discovering how far the Emperor might be disposed to consent to a considerable acquisition of territory to Prussia on the side of the Low Countries, if, in the course of events, it should become necessary or practicable. He told me that he did not believe Russia would object to such an aggrandizement, and that a new Prussian frontier on that side might become desirable for the future tranquillity of Europe.

“At the same time, it was evident from the manner in which Count Panin spoke and dwelt on this point, that he thought it neither unlikely nor unreasonable for Russia, in such a possibility, to look for some cession (he did not say, nor express the idea of an equivalent) from this country. Some allusion was made to the port of Memel.

"Although this letter may be a premature reference to the discussion of such important questions, I have nevertheless thought it best on the whole to submit it to your Lordship. I am certain that Count Panin had no view in speaking of it to me; and I take the liberty humbly and earnestly to suggest that it be not mentioned to Count Woronzow; and that, whenever in your Lordship's judgment it may appear expedient to favour a discussion of this nature, on grounds which the subject itself presents, no allusion be made to this conversation; it having been quite confidential with the Duke of Brunswick; and Count Panin not having meant that the part of it he mentioned to me should lead to any ministerial communication between the Courts concerned."

COUNT WORONZOW TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 4. Richmond.—"J'ai reçu encore un courier. Les paquets qu'il m'a apportés pour vous ont été envoyés tout de suite à votre bureau. Les dépêches dont il était le porteur ne sont relatives qu'à vos démêlés avec l'Autriche. Starhemberg vous demandera sans doute une entrevue, parcequ'on m'a envoyé la copie de ce que Cobenzel lui écrit officiellement, et dans un ton d'un ministre dirigeant. Il est nécessaire que nous nous visions aussi, et que cela soit avant que vous ayez vu Starhemberg. Vous en verrez la cause par les papiers que j'ai reçus de Pétersbourg et Berlin, et que je vous communiquerai le jour que vous voudrez bien m'indiquer. Le courier que je devais expédier demain, partira toujours demain au soir. Les affaires Turcs exigent l'expédition de ce courier, mais il m'en restera encore un, celui qui est arrivé ce matin. J'ai averti Monsieur Hammond pour qu'il prépare ces paquets pour Pétersbourg pour demain vers minuit."

LORD GRENVILLE TO RUFUS KING.

Private.

1798, October 4. Dropmore.—"I have not a great deal to add to what I last stated to you on the subject of continental politics. Russia has, as you may have seen, taken a decided part, both by the liberal tender of assistance to Austria, and by the still more liberal step of actually sending a fleet to Constantinople, and putting that and a Russian army (which is on the frontier) under the orders of the Russian Ambassador there, to be employed, on the requisition of the Porte, for the defence of the Ottoman territory.

"We have taken several advice-boats with Bonaparte's dispatches, and a number of private letters, some of the latter written since the action of Alexandria. All are in a desponding style, describing difficulties much greater than were expected. The army is wasted by disease, and continually harassed by the country troops and the Arabs. Even a letter cannot be sent from Cairo to Alexandria without an escort of 600 horse. On the whole, I really think that, without being sanguine, we may consider that business as over. The Porte declared war against France on the 2nd of September.

"The councils of Austria are still wavering and irresolute; and if the insolence of the Directory is so far humbled by this last blow; as to induce them to hold out fresh lures to Vienna of acquisitions in Italy, I would not answer for it that the Austrians might not catch at the bait, though they see the hook, which it no longer conceals.

"I have been desired to suggest to you an idea which might (it is conceived) be beneficial to both our countries, in the essential article of raising supplies with as little pressure as possible on our own people. It is that, by mutual agreement, we should retain so much of our drawbacks on sugars, and you charge the export of that article for foreign consumption with such duties, as would supply to both of us a considerable revenue drawn from foreign countries, on an article in which our two nations have no competitors, nor are likely to have any. If you think anything of this sort practicable, Mr. Pitt would, I know, be very happy to be allowed to converse with you upon it, and if possible before the mail goes out. Copy."

LORD LOUGHBOROUGH to [WILLIAM PITT].

1798, October 5. Weymouth.—"I cannot resist the desire I have of expressing my thoughts to you on the subject of the last dispatches from the two Imperial Courts. The obstinacy of the Court of Vienna seems so perfectly irrational as well as unjust, that I strongly suspect that either Monsieur Thugut has misunderstood, or Sir Morton Eden has ill explained the object of his instruction to insist upon the ratification of the Convention of May, 1797. In the recital of M. Thugut's last conversation, he is stated to have said that His Imperial Majesty's finances were in such a state as to permit no idea of fulfilling at present the engagement of that convention; and, in the sequel of the discourse, he rests the refusal on the unprovided state of the Emperor's treasury. All this (and, as I recollect, the preceding dispatches were in the same stile) seems to imply that the ratification was to be followed up by an immediate payment of the money due according to that convention. Our idea, I think, was only to require an avowal of the engagement in form, but to give every reasonable allowance for the pecuniary difficulties of Austria, and forbear insisting on immediate payment. If this idea had been fully explained to M. Thugut, it seems impossible that he should answer as he has done, because the answer does not apply to the demand.

"Supposing, however, that for some incomprehensible reason the Austrian Cabinet should persist, and that Lord Grenville should not find in his conference with Count Starhemberg that Sir Charles Whitworth's expectations of his being authorized to give way to the mediation of Russia are well founded, will it not deserve the most serious consideration whether it is not fit for us to waive the point for the present, and make the compliment to Russia. It is much more a point of honour than of immediate interest; and the object to which we should concede it is so immense, that I confess it seems to me we should be nearly as much in the wrong as Austria were we to persevere, at the risk of defeating the greatest combination of force that ever could have been formed against the enemy. Our present fortunate situation enables us, without any loss of dignity, to extend our aid most liberally; and I am convinced you will find the public ready to go any lengths you can propose in pushing vigorously the war, and enabling Austria to take the field for recovering Italy, and especially Switzerland. I don't risk this opinion merely on conjecture. But I happened yesterday to fall into conversation with a person who is a very good judge of the temper of the city, and the disposition and abilities of the moneyed men; I mean Williams, the father of the present sheriff. He is strenuous for the most vigorous and extensive prosecution of the war, and makes not the least doubt of the most prompt and abundant supply of money. He conceives that the opening the trade to the Levant and the Turkish dominions will give a great spring to commerce; and that the war itself is really become popular with the manufacturers and merchants.

"I propose to be in town on Tuesday; had the weather remained as it has been ever since I came, I should have left this coast with some regret; but Mr. Smith has sent his Elisian wind to us, which makes the prospect as obscure as his dispatches. Lord Clare informs me that he shall set [out] after the prorogation to-morrow for London directly, which will stop my journey to Yorkshire; as I have persuaded myself that I have a great deal to say both to you and to him on the subject of his journey, which has been very much the employment of my thoughts, till our late victory gave them another direction.

"The length and perhaps the stile of my letter may point out the bad weather we at present suffer. . . ."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 6. Richmond.—"Mon courier est parti hier au soir, et a pris vos dépêches pour le Chevalier Whitworth. J'ai reçu hier-au-soir votre lettre et je vous rend mille graces pour la nouvelle que vous m'avez donnée de la déclaration de guerre de la Porte contre la France, et de l'arrestation de Ruffin et de tous les Français dans l'empire Ottoman. Tamara m'écrit pour m'accuser seulement la réception d'une de mes lettres, et s'en rapporte à ce que j'apprendrai de vous sur les affaires Turcs. Milord Spencer, chez qui j'ai dîné avant hier, m'a dit que la déclaration de guerre des Turcs est très originale. Si elle ne sera pas insérée dans la gazette de ce soir, je vous prie de me la communiquer. Je vous prie aussi d'ordonner à Monsieur Caning de me montrer les dépêches qui viendront de M. Smith de Constantinople. Je ne demande pas des copies, mais je viendrai une fois par semaine au bureau pour les lire, au moins celles qui peuvent m'être montrées; car vous sentez bien qu'il m'est très important d'être au courant des ces affaires, et que ni Smith n'a pas le temps d'écrire à votre ministre, ni Tamara à moi, et que chaque'un d'eux doit supposer que votre ministre à Pétersbourg, et moi ici, nous sommes informés par les ministres respectifs.

“Quand à l'objet du courier que j'ai reçu, ce n'est pas une affaire pressée; ce n'est qu'une nouvelle infamie de Cobenzel, qui tâche de justifier sa Cour chez nous aux dépens de l'Angleterre; mais dans cette affaire même je vois la sagesse de notre ministère. Je bénis le ciel, en vérité, de ce que l'Empereur a auprès de lui le prince Bezborodka, et son neveu Kotchoubei; car on ne saurait avoir plus de jugement, plus de probité, et plus d'élévation d'âme que ces deux dignes ministres d'un si grand empire. Starhemberg est indigné contre Cobenzel, et je le plains bien de servir une Cour tiraillée en différents sens par des fourbes, des coquins, et des imbéciles qui la gouverne. Je crois que Starhemberg vous écrira officiellement; je vous supplie dans ce cas de différer votre réponse jusqu'à ce que j'ai la satisfaction de vous voir. Si vous ne venez pas la semaine prochaine à Londrès, faites le moi savoir mercredi ou jeudi. Je me dégagerai alors de tous les engagements que j'ai, et je viendrai dîner chez vous samedi prochain. Je viendrai vers les trois heures pour pouvoir causer, et je vous demande la permission de retourner le soir à Richmond. Je ne crains pas les voleurs, ayant deux hommes à cheval bien armés, et la route qui n'est que de deux heures, et qui est bonne, ne m'incommode nullement. Je rumine dans ma tête un expédient que je prendrai la liberté de vous proposer pour la réponse à ma Cour, et au misérable mémoire du pacificateur courier de Campo Formio.

“Milord Spencer m'a dit aussi, qu'on a intercepté beaucoup de lettres de Bonaparte, et d'autres généraux et commissaires Français; entre autre de Tallien. Il me semble qu'à moins qu'il n'y ai quelqu'inconvénient à cela. On ferait bien d'imprimer ces lettres, quand ce ne serait que pour faire voir aux Français avec quelle impudence le Directoire trompe la nation.”

WILLIAM PITT TO LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798.] October 6. Hollwood.—“I will meet you in town on Monday, and write by this messenger to Canning to summon a full Cabinet at eleven on Tuesday. You will understand the King's letter the better from reading one which I received to-day from the Chancellor. Both the King and the Keeper of his conscience seem to me very sanguine, and I much fear the French will submit so far as to induce Austria to prolong its present wretched system. And even if this should prove otherwise, and Austria again engage with us, I see no reliance to be placed on such an engagement which could justify the payment of any subsidy to that Court. We do enough if we procure them the full co-operation of Russia; and give Switzerland the means of acting. This I believe we can do, without very material inconvenience at present, or any fresh risk as to the future. But I am much afraid of going beyond two millions in the whole amount of subsidy, which Russia, Switzerland and Portugal will require, and I have not a notion that a direct payment to Austria will be tolerated, till they have, at least, ratified expressly the convention; I think, not till they have begun to execute it.

“On all this, however, I keep my mind quite open, till we have fully discussed it.”

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 7. Richmond.—“Je vous suis bien renaissant pour les ordres que vous avez bien voulu donner à M. Caning. Il vient de m'envoyer la déclaration de la Porte.

“J'ai toujours aimé ces bons Turcs, et je les aime de plus en plus depuis qu'ils se conduisent si bien. Ils se conduisent d'une manière à faire rougir leurs Majestés Apostolique et Catholique. Que Dieu bénisse ces bons Musulmans !

“Puisque l'Amirauté fait difficulté de se séparer du Tigre, elle devrait au moins donner quelqu'autre vaisseau au Chevalier Sidney Smith. Ce n'est pas le vaisseau, mais sa présence, qui est nécessaire en Turquie.

“Je vous supplie aussi de travailler que Keller [Koehler?] soit envoyé, et envoyé en Sirie auprès de ce Pacha qui avec cent milles hommes doit entrer en Egypte. Les Turcs ne cèdent à aucune nation du monde en fait de courage. Je les ai vus de près; j'ai fait toutes les campagnes de l'avant dernière guerre sous les ordres du Maréchal Roumentzow; j'ai vu dans toutes les occasions que le Turc est brave au suprême degré; mais il est ignorant de discipline et encore plus ignorant en fait d'artillerie. Les Vizirs que nous avons contre nous avaient trois fois plus d'artillerie que nous, mais ne savoient pas s'en servir. Je ne connais pas Keller, mais il a la réputation d'être habile dans cette partie; et il a l'avantage d'avoir été déjà en Turquie, et de connaître la manière avec laquelle il faut se prendre dans ce pays-là. Pour l'amour de Dieu pressez le départ du Chevalier Sidney Smith et de Keller à ——— au plus vite ces scélérats de Français.”

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 8. Melville Castle.—“Mr. Cabell has transmitted me a letter sent from your office to the Commissioners for the Affairs of India, containing intelligence of the French sending out emissaries to India by neutral vessels from Sweden and Denmark. We will of course put our governments abroad upon their guard against them, but I submit to you if it would not be right to remonstrate to those neutral powers against the exercise of such unfriendly acts. I cannot pretend to say it is strictly against any principle of the law of nations to carry out foreigners in neutral ships ; but, our situation with regard to India is so particular a one, I am sure no neutral nation can pretend to justify such a conduct, and at the same time pretend to entertain the smallest sentiment of amity towards us. If they persevere in it, we can certainly distress them very considerably by discountenancing them in every way possible in India. Did not Denmark lately apply to you for saltpetre ? While they pursue such a conduct they certainly cannot expect that or any other kind of indulgence from us."

LE CHEVALIER CHARLES DE THUISY to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 10. Richmond.—" Oserai-je croire que votre Excellence lira avec quelqu'intérêt la relation que je prends la liberté de lui envoyer ; si elle dit comment Malte fut trahie, elle dit peut-être aussi ce que les traîtres ont à craindre.

" En effet, My Lord, les massacres des chevaliers et les méfiances du peuple indiquent que la grande majorité n'avoit été ni consultée, ni corrompue ; que si ses trésors sont partis sa haine reste, et que tous les Maltois croient peut-être déjà que le bras couvert d'or de St. Jean, devant le quel ils se prosternoient, les chatie aujourdhuy de leur infidélité, et de leur crédulité.

" Mais, My Lord, si le besoin de se venger, et de réparer de grands torts pouvoit se combiner avec les effets de vos victoires, et les efforts de vos flottes, me permettriez-vous, oserois-je vous avouer l'espérance que ce n'est pas sans dessein que la Providence a voulu que les étendards de la religion fussent apportés en Angleterre, que Sa Majesté put nous y rallier, et nous dire ; ' allez joindre L'Amiral Nelson, il vous conduira devant Malte, vos drapeaux reveilleront des souvenirs prêtieux, vous laverez vos rochers de votre sang, et par votre mort, ou par vos succès vous apprendrez à l'univers que vous ne meritez pas vos malheurs.' "

Enclosure.

Relation de la prise de Malte par le commandeur de Thuisy, membre de la congrégation de guerres.

Extract.

1798, August 24. Pisa.—" Malte étoit minée depuis longtemps par la pénurie due à ses pertes et aux dilapidations protégées par la foiblesse du dernier grand maître.

" Le secrétaire du trésor (titre du chef des finances) le commandeur de Boredon de Ransijat, après avoir pendant vingt ans travaillé à sa ruine, étoit devenu le chef connu des principes novateurs qui devoient tôt ou tard consommer notre perte. Bien des gens avoient prévu le danger, et il étoit d'autant plus grand que l'argent nous manquoit de plus en plus chaque jour, qu'on ne s'en procuroit que par des moyens précaires et ruineux, et que par cela même on avoit du réformer plus de la moitié des forces de terre et de mer.

“ Il se préparoit donc depuis quelque tems un orage bien noir, et des chevaliers zélés avoient souvent averti. Ils auroient désiré qu'on fondit le trésor de l'ordre de St. Jean, et que, n'ayant pas une personne capable de commander en cas de siège, on attirât à Malte un général expérimenté et connu pour la défendre. Ainsi donc on manquoit de tout ce qu'il falloit pour se défendre, et même pour vivre, car les bléds exceptés, on n'avoit ni bois, ni charbon, ni bestiaux, et surtout point de toutes ces espèces d'aggrêts indispensables pour soutenir un siège, comme affûts de canon.

“ Telle étoit la position de l'isle quand, en janvier dernier, on vit arriver de Gênes un secrétaire de Faypoult, le Sieur Poussielque, qui, sous prétexte d'une vaine mission, y vint habiter pendant cinq semaines chez un banquier de son nom, gardien du port, et déjà très connu par ses sentimens patriotiques. Le dit secrétaire apportoit des lettres de recommandations pour tous ceux qui pouvoient le servir en ses projets ; il donna des banquets scandaleux aux principaux amis de la révolution, se lia étroitement à tous ses coopérateurs, enfin arrêta tous ses plans. Ainsi tout étoit préparé quand, le 6 Juin, on vit arriver dans le canal de Malte la première division de cette flotte fameuse qui s'étoit préparée depuis longtems. Alors des lettres tranquillisantes et perfides de l'ex-commandeur Dolomieu, embarqué sur l'escadre, et d'autres, communiquées à propos par son ami le commandeur de Boredon de Ransijat, parurent assourir les inquiétudes. Cependant on fit des préparatifs, des affûts, des cartouches, mais au lieu de faire sortir de la ville, ou d'enfermer, les gens suspects, d'y faire entrer avec leurs provisions tous ceux du dehors qui pouvoient la défendre, et au lieu de s'enfermer dans les murailles, on divisa, on dispersa tous nos meilleurs chevaliers (surtout les François) dans les insuffisantes batteries, et tours de la côte, et à la tête du régimens des milices de la campagne, et dans tous les postes que étoient pour le service de l'artillerie, sous la direction du commandeur de l'artillerie, le commandeur de la Bardouanche l'ami et l'allié des conspirateurs. Lui et les autres chefs des ateliers avoient fait manquer les vivres, et munitions de toute espèce. En sorte que quelques émissaires mêlés dans les milices leur persuaderent sans peine qu'elles étoient trahies, et bien plus, que c'étoit les chevaliers envoyés à leur tête pour les commander, et surtout les chevaliers françois, qui d'intelligence avec leurs assaillans vouloient les livrer à l'ennemi. Jamais, en effet, la perfide et la machination ne furent mieux ourdies ni plus habiles. Aussi dans tous les postes, et même dans les forts de la ville, la méfiance vraie ou simulée de tous les soldats Maltois devint générale. Au dehors tous les jeunes et braves chevaliers vouloient rassembler leur troupes, et ils s'en voyoient abandonnés. D'autres vouloient les porter en avant, et on croit qu'ils vouloient les livrer, les réunir à l'ennemi ; et bientôt, sous ce prétexte, quatre chevaliers périront, massacrés par leurs propres milices ; et neuf autres furent aussi fusillés, mutilés, blessés, et entraînés par leurs soldats, liés et garotés, à la ville, et jusques dans le palais du grand maitre, qui étoit gardé à vue par plusieurs factieux qui signoient des ordres, et qui s'étoient rendus les maitres absolus.

“Cependant la descente étoit déjà effectuée sur sept points différens. Buonaparte escorté, dirigé par l'ex-chevalier Picot de Moras, capitaine de génie qui nous avoit quitté depuis deux ans pour l'aller joindre, et par l'ex-chevalier Barras et autres Maltois bannis, étoit débarqué à la Calle St. George d'où le brave chevalier de Préville commandant de la mauvaise tour, sans munitions, sans vivres, et abandonné des siens, avoit été obligé de se retirer.

“J'ai omis de dire que le 9 juin, à l'arrivée des deux autres divisions de la flotte, Buonaparte envoya le consul François demander verbalement de sa part au grand maître l'entrée de tous nos ports pour toute sa flotte. Le conseil s'assembla et répondit que par ses traités avec les puissances, par sa neutralité et pour sa propre sûreté on ne pouvoit recevoir plus de quatre batimens de guerre à la fois. Le consul, porteur de cette réponse, ne revint point, et le lendemain, dès la pointe de jour, on vit toutes les chaloupes effectuer le débarquement.

“Quoique le bailli de la Tour du Pin, chevalier très zélé, très actif, et membre ainsi que moi de la congrégation des guerres, eussions sollicité depuis longtemps de prendre des mesures de précaution très nécessaires, entre autres le rétablissement de certaines batteries enlevées non sans cause, et aussi le transport de dix mille barils de poudre du magasin général de la cottoner, qui par le succès d'une descente au port de Marsa Scirocco devoient aisément tomber au pouvoir des ennemis, ce ne fut que le jour du débarquement même qu'on obtint des ordres pour le second objet, devenu bien plus difficile par les circonstances. Le bailli de la Tour du Pin demanda le commandeur Thuisy pour son second. On leur donna des soldats pour faire la chaîne de là jusqu'à la mer, et quinze chevaliers pour escorter les poudres jusqu'aux différens forts ou magasins; mais quel fut leur embarras en arrivant au magasin général lorsqu'ils virent, qu'à dessein ou autrement, on y faisoit manquer les mulets, les charettes, et tous les moyens de transports. Cependant le bailli de la Tour du Pin alimenta de provisions les différens forts, mais non sans péril; car il falloit faire filer des barques à travers des coups de fusils que les Maltois dechainés contre les Grecs (il y en a beaucoup à Malte) tiroient contre eux sur le rivage. Le lendemain nous eûmes bien plus de peine encore; car on avoit si bien persuadé aux habitans des parties enceintes par la cottoner, qu'en enlevant ces poudres nous voulions leur ôter les moyens de se défendre, que je ne trouvai plus personne qui voulut revenir avec moi, et que le bailli de la Tour du Pin et un troisième furent obligés d'exécuter, tous seuls en partie, cette mesure que l'on jugeoit encore nécessaire.

“La nuit du 10 au 11 vit s'élever dans la ville tous les bruits, toutes les terreurs. Les femmes, les enfans, les fuyards accourus du dehors, y accrurent l'embarras et la confusion. Au bruit de coups de fusils tirés dans la rue de France par l'effroi d'une escalade de ce côté, je me rendis au palais. Mais quel fut mon étonnement d'apprendre que d'après une députation des barons, des jurats, et d'autres laches forcenés qui étoient venus représenter l'urgence de la capitulation, le conseil alloit s'assembler au milieu

de la nuit. Cependant beaucoup de nos meilleurs baillis étoient absens, et étoient employés aillieurs. Cependant le conseil s'assemble, et la surprise augmente quand on y voit entrer cinq de ces fongueux députés Maltois, oser être témoins des délibérations, et exiger même de voir la lettre écrite à Buonaparte. Bien plus on les voit chercher, amener des trompettes pour y recevoir l'ordre d'aller avertir les forts, et les ennemis de la trêve, et timpaniser au milieu de la nuit notre précoce déshonneur. Et tandis qu'ils ne sont que sujets dans l'isle, ils exigent que pour dresser les articles de la capitulation, on députe quatre d'entre eux contre deux seuls membres de l'ordre, sous la médiation du ministre d'Espagne, et l'on fait sortir le commandeur de Boresdon de Ransijat du fort St Ange, où il avait demandé d'être enfermé plutôt que de se battre, pour être le chef, l'organe de cette déshonorante députation. Ainsi la fameuse place de Malte est livrée au dedans et au dehors à ses ennemis ; ainsi l'ordre abandonne, commet son fort au plus ancien, au plus dangereux de ceux qui ont conspiré sa perte. On les voit capituler lâchement, avant que le siège même soit commencé, et recevoir en vingt-quatre heures la loi d'un ennemi qui n'a pas encore attaqué ses remparts. Mais comment s'opposer à ce conseil, à cette capitulation ? C'est au milieu de la nuit qu'elle se décide. Tous les chevaliers sont éloignés et dispersés, les baillis les plus fermes, les plus inébranlables dans le sentier de l'honneur sont absens, la trahison environne le chef, et le destin de cet ordre illustre est prononcé.

“Buonaparte entré le 11 au soir dans la ville, fut occuper le palais du marquis Parisi, noble Maltois. On croyoit qu'il iroit rendre sa visite au grand maitre, mais lui, au contraire, attendoit que le grand maitre à notre tête fût lui faire la sienne, et le grand maitre s'y refusa. Aussi, dit-on, que ce fut alors que Buonaparte, peu content, intima à tous les membres de l'ordre de partir sous trois jours. Il n'en donna que deux aux chevaliers Portugais, et que trois heures au chevalier O'Hara, ministre de Russie.

“Boresdon de Ransijat, nommé président de la commission du gouvernement provisoire, commandoit au grand maitre, avec Regnault de S<sup>t</sup> Jean d'Angély. Il étoit sous Buonaparte le souverain de l'ordre, et du pays dont il avoit organisé la perte. Regnault de S<sup>t</sup> Jean d'Angély avoit été membre de l'Assemblée Nationale, et l'avocat payé de l'ordre pour l'y défendre. A Malte il étoit commissaire du Directoire.”

“En peu de jours on efface, on renverse partout, dans les auberges des langues, et jusques dans de palais du grand maitre présent, jusqu' aux moindres vestiges des armes, de la religion, de ses chefs.

“Les François trouverent intact le trésor de St. Jean, de même toute l'argenterie de l'Hôpital et des églises de l'Ordre, qui furent dépouillées aussitôt de leurs richesses. Toutes les pièces brisées devinrent des lingots. Le prieur et les chanoines conventuels expulsés de l'église de S<sup>t</sup> Jean, elle divint le cathédrale de l'isle, et l'on vit, le jour de S<sup>t</sup> Jean même, l'évêque y officier sous le daïs du grand maitre, assisté des chanoines mitrés de la cité vielle.

Mais la vraie richesse de l'ordre, le trésor qu'a perdu avec Malte toute la noblesse Francoise et des autres états, ce sont ses archives. Elles sont tombées dans leurs mains, sans qu'aucune prévoyance ait pu les en préserver.

“Le second jour Buonaparte fit publier, afficher l'ordre d'une presse générale, et embarquer sur sa flotte tous les matelots de l'isle, les gardes du grand maitre et tous les soldats enrégimentés, et en même tems il amena avec lui quelques uns de nos plus jeunes chevaliers, qui sans scavoir où donner de la tête, n'ayant aucun espoir de rentrer en France, ni aucune ressource pour aller allieurs, se sont livrés au désespoir. Ah malheureux jeunes gens !!!

“Si Buonaparte nous a traité avec une si grande rigueur, ce fut, dit-on, à cause de notre malheureux grand maitre, dont il n'étoit pas content. Cependant nous eûmes à nous louer du général Vaubois gouverneur de nos isles, de son second; en tout les officiers de la flotte et de l'armée nous plaignoient et partageoient nos malheurs. ‘ Nous connoissons mieux que vous mêmes, nous ont-ils dit, tous vos moyens; nous scavons que vous ne pourriez pas vos défendre. Cela s'est passé à Malte comme en Suisse où nous etions, et vous ignoriez peut-être que tous les conjurés avoient fait le serment de vous massacrer tous, au signal de la première bombe.’

“Le grand maitre est parti pour Trieste le 17 juin; c'est-à-dire, le premier de nous tous, amenant avec lui une douzaine de ses membres, dont quelques-uns étoient de sa maison.

“Le 24, la municipalité fit afficher l'ordre à tous les ex-chevaliers ou membres de l'Ordre de quitter Malte sous quarante-huit heures; et en effet nous partîmes entassés sur les premiers batimens Ragusoïs qui si trouverent dans le port.

“Nous avons vu placer, installer, et récompenser, comme de raison, tous ceux qui avoient contribué à notre perte. Le commandeur Boredon de Ransijat secrétaire du trésor, le commandeur de Bardouanche commandeur de l'artillerie, le commandeur servant Touzard ingénieur de la place, le chevalier de Fay commissaire des fortifications, le Donat Doublet secrétaire du commandeur Royer pour France, le Chevalier Poussielque capitaine du port, les prêtres Breward, Annibale, Beaufort, et beaucoup d'autres de S<sup>t</sup>. Jean, des barons, des jurats, adjudans, avocats, notaires, tous placés en ce moment.

“Les passeports de tous ceux qui ont quelques droits de rentrer en France nous adressent à Antibes, à un commissaire qui devra nous y juger. Les autres nous dirigent à Barcelone et à Livourne. On a fait payer à chacun des membres de l'ordre seulement 250 livres tournois, c'est à dire, dix louis. Je vais rejoindre près de Gènes Madame la duchesse de Brissac.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 15. Dublin.—“Long before this the Chancellor will have been with you, and he will, I doubt not, have told you explicitly that (right or wrong) the clamour against Lord Cornwallis is increased, increasing, and not likely to be diminished ; that his total want of all communication has created indisposition in many quarters that may be very mischievous to our great object ; and that no opinions upon that great measure have been asked from any person whatsoever, as far as he knew, or as I can gather from many quarters who would wish to have been spoken to. In short I am bound to tell you that nothing can go on worse than the whole system of Government in the opinion of those who are to be governed ; and that I certainly join with them in the opinion that the future is as little promising as the past has been creditable.

“As to my return I have not a word to say, but to thank you for all you feel and say upon that subject. My application to you was on the supposition that some part of the force was to return ; and, if so, I should imagine that no difficulty ought to exist in sending home first those who first embarked ; and perhaps on consideration (if Lord Cornwallis proposes to send any back) it might not be inconsistent with your views for my credit to propose that it should be stated to Lord Cornwallis that many advantages would arise to the measure of encouraging the British militia to embark, by returning to England first those who had been longest absent, in order to remove the prejudice that has been industriously spread that they are to be considered as regular troops and to be draughted.

“I fear that Nelson has undertaken for more than he can easily perform with respect to the transports in Alexandria, for I fear that in that shallow water they will be too well secured ; however I depend upon our Russian ally, and trust that he will be usefully employed in the Archipelago ; and as to the progress of Buonaparte, I have little idea that he can ever move from Cairo ; and if so, a few weeks sooner or later makes very little real difference in the chapter of his final ruin. Europe now opens a vast field, and I hear, from other quarters, that you are not idle.”

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 16. Hollwood.—“I return you the King’s letter which is full of good sense. I think in the proposal actually gone to Russia, we offered an additional sum for any body of troops to be put under our direction. At least we talked of it, but I am not sure whether we did not relinquish the idea as hopeless.

“I have had two very full conversations with Lord Clare. What he says is very encouraging with a view to the great question of the Union, in which I do not think we shall have much difficulty ; I mean, in proportion to the magnitude of the subject. At his desire I have written to press the Speaker to come over, which he seems to think may be of great importance. I endeavoured to learn what he really thought about the general state of things in Ireland. He seems to believe that the want of that communication which had formerly been made even too much a matter of course, has produced some dissatisfaction, but that the ill-humour does not go far ; and that everything may be set right if a Secretary, who can speak with the authority belonging to his station, is sent over immediately. Pelham, I am sorry to find from the Duke of Portland, is still hesitating, but he is now coming to town and must decide.

"I have seen King, whose conversation gives much greater hopes for my tax than you formed from his letter. Our revenue for the year to the 10th of October surpasses all expectation, and will materially aid next year's Budget.

"I understand from Lord Spencer, you have a new account of the French plan of invasion, which I wish much to see.

Postscript. "Since sealing this letter I have received the enclosed from Lord Darnley, to which of course I shall give no answer till I hear from you; though I take for granted you will not think a volunteer mover of an address is to be rejected, considering how much asking is usually necessary."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 16. Richmond.—"Voici un griffonnage énorme, que je vous supplie d'avoir la patience de lire presque au bout. Je vous prie aussi d'effacer, de tailler, de corriger, et d'ajouter tout ce qui vous plaira, et de me le rendre après demain, jeudi, quand je viendrai chez vous à Dropmore. Vous trouverez, sans doute, que je me suis trop étendu et appesanti sur nos griefs contre l'Autriche. Je l'ai cru nécessaire pour éclaircir cette affaire, qu'on n'a jamais bien compris chez nous, et que les Autrichiens ont embrouillé, et ont faussement représenté à Pétersbourg. Le mémoire que le Comte Cobentzel a présenté à notre Cour, qui ne m'a pas été envoyé, mais que le Comte Starhemberg m'a montré, n'est qu'un amas de mensonge et de calomnie contre l'Angleterre.

"S'il s'est permis tant d'impudence par écrit que n'aurait-il fait verbalement? Il faut donc éclairer l'Empereur qui est porté par inclination et avec raison à croire plutôt le ministère Britannique que celui de Vienne, si avili à la face de l'univers. Du reste, je ne copierai ma dépêche que d'après vos corrections. Vous savez mieux les affaires, vous en avez tout l'ensemble, tandis que je ne connais qu'une partie.

"Je vous prie aussi de me rendre, quand je serai chez vous, les papiers que je vous ai envoyés il y a quelques jours."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 18. Dublin.—"At last the long expected details are arrived, and the letter I enclose to you will set your mind completely at ease with respect to any project of French invasion. I have another letter from George Nugent, stating the frigates which have escaped to have thrown even their guns overboard. You will observe that the Canada brought in no prize with her, and that the four ships named in the letter with the Hoche and the three frigates are not yet arrived. The gale of yesterday evening and night was remarkably heavy from the south-east, so that the crippled ships will have great difficulty in escaping. There is a report that Tone (brother to the one hanged), and the cleverest man amongst the united Irishmen, is on board the Hoché.

“How happy should I be if this could relieve me from this cursed pilgrimage, but I fear that cannot be; and yet I clearly see that the only thing for which it is wished that we should remain will not be.”

Enclosure.

E. COOKE to [the MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM].

[1798, October 18. Dublin] Castle.—“I have not been able to send your Lordship a word till this moment.

“Sir J. B. Warren writes from Lough Swilly, the 16th, that, on the 12th, after a long action, four French ships struck, among them the Hoché of 84 guns. He left the prizes with the Robust, Magnanime, Elthalrin? and Amelia. A brig went off at the beginning of the action which, he thinks, was Napper Tandy’s. The ships full of troops et cetera; they tore their papers after the action.

“He thinks, on account of the gales, the ships which escaped will be so crippled that they must fall into our hands; they had thrown boats, spars, . . . over board.

“After Sir John’s letter was sent off, the Melampus appeared with another frigate in tow, which she had been sent in pursuit of. Thus we have five.”

COUNT PANIN to COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, October 18. Berlin.—“Dans plusieurs entretiens confidentiels que j’ai eu en dernier lieu avec M. le Comte de Haugwitz, il m’a fait des ouvertures d’un tel intérêt pour le gouvernement Britannique que je crois devoir en faire part à Votre Excellence, pour que Milord Grenville puisse prendre des mesures préalables, au cas où les idées du Ministre Prussien s’accorderoient avec les siennes. Le papier ci-joint expose l’état de la question, et les points sur lesquels je pense qu’il seroit utile de donner des ordres à la mission de Berlin. J’en ai fait lecture à M. Garlike, en le priant d’y conformer son rapport; mais cette démarche a eu plutôt pour objet de lui donner personnellement un témoignage d’égard que tout autre motif. Si Milord Grenville désiroit d’encourager M. de Haugwitz, et si vous-même, M. le Comte, jugés convenable que je lui parle dans ce sens, je n’hésiterai pas à la faire; mais je vous avoue qu’il répugneroit à ma délicatesse de traiter la moindre affaire d’une des Cours alliées, à l’insu de la personne qui la représente ici.

“Votre Excellence voudra bien observer que c’est Haugwitz et non le Ministre du Roi qui a fait ces ouvertures, d’où il résulte qu’on peut également leur donner suite, ou les ensevelir dans l’oubli.

“ Je puis me tromper, mais je pense qu’il étoit de bonne foi en parlant de ce projet. Malgré cela, il n’y a guères d’apparence qu’il se décide de le négocier formellement avant que L’Empereur des Romains n’ait tiré l’épée, et qu’on ne voie des forces imposantes en Allemagne.

“ Je vous supplie M. le Comte de me faire connoître le jugement que Milord Grenville portera de l’exposé ci-joint, ainsi que votre opinion personnelle.”

Enclosure.

Exposé des questions qu’il faudroit soumettre à Milord Grenville.

“ Depuis l’époque où on remarque un changement dans les opinions de M. le Comte de Haugwitz, ce ministre a parlé dans plus d’une occasion avec chaleur du danger qu’il y auroit de laisser la Hollande sous le joug des François. Il a dit même en propres termes, il n’y aura point de paix stable, ni de sûreté pour les Puissances, tant que la Hollande et la Suisse seront dans leur état actuel. Il est à observer que M. de Haugwitz traitoit cette question de son propre mouvement sans provocation quelconque, mais aussi toujours confidentiellement comme une opinion personnelle. Il est allé plus loin, et en parlant de la possibilité d’une coopération active de la Prusse dans la guerre actuelle, il a dit que le but principal de cette coopération seroit la délivrance de la Hollande ; et en cherchant à prouver les grands avantages qui en résulteroient pour la cause commune et pour chacune des Puissances en particulier, il finissoit toujours par dire, ‘ reste à savoir le prix que l’Angleterre attache à cette opération, et ce qu’elle donneroit pour en faciliter les moyens.’

“ Il paroissoit regretter de ce que Sa Majesté Britannique ne s’étoit pas jusqu’ici expliquée à ce sujet.

“ On a objecté au Ministre d’Etat qu’après les déclarations réitérées de sa persévérance dans le système de neutralité, et le refus de toutes les propositions de la Russie et de l’Autriche, on ne pouroit guères s’attendre à Berlin à des explications de la part du Cabinet de St<sup>e</sup>. James, puisque rien n’en faisoit augurer le succès. Que si la Prusse vouloit coopérer au plan général, elle devoit manifester cette intention d’une manière claire and précise ; que la Grand Bretagne auroit probablement plus de facilité à soutenir aujourd’hui les efforts de la Prusse par des secours pécuniaires, que lorsqu’un embrassement général sur le Continent rendroit bien moins utile l’appui du Roi de Prusse, puisqu’il s’agiroit alors de sa propre défense.

“ Par les réponses de M. de Haugwitz il sembloit que ce Ministre ne doutoit pas de la prestations de subsides pour la délivrance de la Hollande, quelque soit l’époque où on le demandroit.

“ Comme il est assez vraisemblable que M. de Haugwitz n’en restera pas à ces insinuations, et qu’il cherche à pénétrer d’avance jusqu’à quel point la Cour de Londres seroit disposée à soutenir l’opération dont il s’agit, il seroit peut-être utile d’avoir en réserve quelques instructions sur les questions suivantes.

1° “ Les dernières dispositions de la Cour de Londres en faveur d'un subside, telles qu'on les a annoncé à MiLord Elgin, sont elles applicables à ces cas, et peut-on en faire usage si M. de Haugwitz entre en explication directe avec celui qui est chargé des affaires du Roi ?

2° “ Si le Ministre se borne d'en parler dans le ton amical et confidentiel au Comte de Panin, comme il a fait en dernier lieu, trouvera-t-on nécessaire que l'Envoyé de Russie lui réponde d'une manière encourageante et en quels termes ? ”

COUNT PANIN to COUNT WORONZOW.

Secret.

1798, October 18. Berlin.—“ Notre Cour n'a aucune connoissance de ce que j'ai l'honneur de vous communiquer par la présente. Je n'en ai pas fait rapport comme, depuis quelque tems, j'ai passé sous silence bien des choses dont Haugwitz me parle dans le ton amical et confidentiel. Voici les motifs de cette réserve : s'il est véritablement de bonne foi il ne se bornera pas à ces premières insinuations, et il exposera les mêmes idées dans une correspondance secrète qui m'est connue. Alors ayant des garants de sa sincérité, je pourrai rendre compte de ces ouvertures d'une manière à écarter tous les doutes. Si, au contraire, il se donnoit un nouveau démenti, j'aurai l'avantage d'avoir prévenu une cause d'aigreur et d'animosité contre la Prusse. Au reste les véritables intentions de Haugwitz ne peuvent pas tarder à s'éclaircir. Je me flatte que Votre Excellence, en se rappelant ces observations, voudra bien engager Milord Grenville à ne pas faire paroître mon nom dans les relations qui pourroient s'établir sur la base que je vous présente aujourd'hui.

“ Monseigneur le Prince d'Orange a bien voulu se charger de ce paquet, et je profite des bontés de Son Altesse pour vous faire passer, M. le Comte, les pièces les plus intéressantes de mon portefeuille.”

“ Les dernières lettres de Constantinople annoncent qu'une division de la flotte Angloise, restée dans les passages d'Alexandrie, a brulé toute la flotille qui se trouvoit à l'embouchure du Nil. Il est possible que cette nouvelle ne soit pas encore parvenue à Londres. Les Ministres du Roi la donnent pour autentique. Ils m'ont aussi confirmé l'insurrection de Malte. Un commissaire est venu en personne faire ce rapport au Directoire, et dit que la garnison s'est renfermée dans la citadelle. Il prétend qu'elle a pour six mois de vivres.

“ Kosciusko a quitté Paris sous le nom de Dufresnoy ; les uns disent qu'il va s'embarquer à Hambourg pour se glisser dans nos nouvelles provinces, et y rassembler ses partisans ; d'autres assurent qu'il va joindre Panvan Oglou.

“ Quoiqu'il en puisse être, je profiterai de cette circonstance pour mettre à exécution les derniers ordres de Sa Majesté Impériale que j'ai eu l'honneur de vous transmettre, en proposant une convention sur les secours mutuels qu'on se prêtera pour arrêter la sedition. Je ne manquerai pas de rendre compte à votre Excellence de mes démarches à cet égard.

“Je n'ai pas oublié le conseil dont elle m'a honoré relativement à M. de Kotchoubey; et dans une occasion importante où le Prince de Bezbrodsko ne peut guères se dispenser de me répondre de main propre, je l'ai prié d'en charger son neveu, s'il manquoit de loisir; en ajoutant que je me ferois un honnèur d'entrer en relation avec lui.

“Le prompt départ du Prince d'Orange m'oblige de remettre à une autre occasion ma réponse aux dernières communications que vous avez eu la bonté de me faire.” Copy.

B. GARLIKE to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 19. Berlin.—“I have not had the honour of writing the confidential dispatch of this day's date without the apprehension inseparable from the premature discussion of the important point to which it refers. I do not understand that, on this occasion, Count Haugwitz made an allusion to the idea of territorial acquisition suggested in a private conversation by the Duke of Brunswick to Count Panin; but I believe that the latter was not inattentive to the two questions relative to pecuniary and territorial compensation for the eventual co-operation of this country, coming, though at different times, from His Serene Highness and from the Prussian Minister. With regard to the first of those modes, Count Panin has written, I believe, in the sense of the dispatch he enabled me to write to your Lordship. It will give me great pleasure to convey to that Minister the answer which your Lordship may judge proper to return to the two questions he has brought forward.

“I have been favoured with the reading of a memorial of Prince Henry of Prussia in behalf of France and against the allies; but it was not in my power to have a copy of it; and, as Count Woronzow will shew it to your Lordship, I will not attempt to express the nature of that extraordinary performance.”

LORD GRENVILLE to HENRY DUNDAS.

1798, October 21. Dropmore.—“I have received your letter of the 8th. I have not the least idea that the French emissaries are sent out to India in Danish ships with the knowledge or concurrence of that Government; but, considering the nature of their trade there, I doubt whether they have the means of preventing it. This however you know much better than I do, and I will very willingly make any representations you may wish on the subject.

“As to the Swedes, more than half the people there, particularly in trade, are as great Jacobins as Rewbell or Talleyrand, and the Government is little better.

“Nothing will do with them but menaces or force; and for that sort of language or measure we must have positive proof.”
Copy.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mémoire of the Duke of Brunswick, on the co-operation of Prussia and Great Britain to expel the French from the Dutch Republic.

1798, October 22.—“ Il est en vain de prétendre que la Prusse abandonne le système de neutralité une fois adopté, aussi longtemps que la guerre ne se déclare entre l'Autriche unie à la Russie et à Naples contre la France; même alors la Prusse ne pourroit convenablement rentrer en lice qu'en déployant ces forces pour le rétablissement d'une paix générale, dont les bases seroient stipulées d'avance entre l'Angleterre, l'Autriche, la Russie, et la Prusse. Comme il est nécessaire de séparer dans cette guerre les intérêts de la nation Française d'avec ceux du Directoire, il seroit de la plus grande importance de déclarer qu'on n'en veut aucunement à la France, point à ses anciennes possessions ni à la forme de gouvernement qu'elle s'est donné, mais qu'on veut concourir au rétablissement d'une paix générale; que tous les sacrifices que l'on a faits doivent prouver qu'ils n'ont servi qu'à augmenter la dureté des conditions imposées par le Directoire, et que la liberté rendue à la Suisse et à la Hollande doivent servir de base à la paix générale, et donner les moyens à l'Angleterre de s'expliquer sur les restitutions à faire à la Hollande, redevenue un état libre et consistant par lui-même. La guerre en Italie, sur les frontières de la Suisse, dans le sud de l'Allemagne, et une coopération des armées navales Angloises, Russes, et Turques dans la Méditerranée, pourroient alors faciliter des démarches vigoureuses de la part de la Prusse sur le Bas Rhin, combinées avec une entreprise sur la Hollande. Toute entreprise sur la Hollande doit rouler sur les bases suivantes : (1) S'accorder parfaitement d'avance sur quels principes on veut rétablir l'ancienne forme de gouvernement en tout ou en partie. (2) Se former sur ces principes le parti le plus considérable dans les Provinces—Unies que possible, et convenir avec lui de livrer, soit Coevorden, Groeningue, ou telle autre place au parti d'Orange. (3) Rassembler sous le Prince Héréditaire d'Orange l'ancienne armée Hollandoise dans ce poste. (4) Faire avancer une des armées Prussiennes sur les frontières de l'Overyssel pour couvrir et favoriser ces opérations, tandis qu'une autre armée Prussienne occuperait les armées Françaises entre le Rhin et la Meuse. (5) Avoir par l'Angleterre les vaisseaux plats dans la Zuyder Zée, avec quelques canons, pour transporter de Stavern dix à douze milles hommes dans la Nord-Hollande. (6) Cette opération devroit être favorisée par une armée Prussienne ou alliée qui passeroit l'Issel, se portant sur le Greb; et par des démonstrations des flottes Anglaises, soit sur la flotte Hollandoise dans le Texel, soit sur les côtes de la Zeelande. (7) Les troupes Hollandaises transportées en Nord-Hollande se porteroient avec le gros sur Beverwyk, et une autre partie sur Buykslooten vis à vis d'Amsterdam, où les menaces et la préparation des esprits par le parti d'Orange devroient faire recevoir les troupes Hollandoises, à la tête desquelles le Prince Héréditaire se trouveroit en personne, avec des plein pouvoirs du Prince Stadhouder pour le rétablissement de l'ordre des choses. Ceci est le précis d'un mémoire beaucoup plus étendu d'un homme qui n'est rien dans la politique, qui n'a aucune influence dans la Cabinets, mais qui se fera employer pour l'exécution de tous les plans qui peuvent tendre à rétablir l'ordre, et à sauver l'espèce humaine du joug avilissant sous lequel la France la tient enchainée." Copy.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 23. Dublin.—“The country is still very much disturbed by the nightly plunderers who have succeeded in Wexford, Wicklow, and parts of Kildare and Meath, in driving off every gentlemen; and the unexplained and unaccountable lenity of Lord Cornwallis, who will execute none save where murder is proved, and has turned loose from the crotty ships near 400 of the most dangerous and desperate, has given to friends and foes a most decided opinion that it is less dangerous to be a rebel than to be a loyalist. In short the public confidence in Government is shaken to such a degree that it appears from the Office for passes that more persons are now emigrating than at any period of the rebellion. I do not know how far individuals will commit themselves to you or other Ministers, but I cannot conceal from you that there is not one man whom I have met who does not speak more or less openly his sentiments of indignation on Lord Cornwallis's government. Now all this would not annoy me if it did not tirer a consequence very deeply, and if I did not see the game of Great Britain completely thrown away at the most important and fortunate moment by the grossest mismanagement. These feelings certainly tend very much to embitter my residence in Ireland, for I could submit with patience to every inconvenience if I was assisting in repelling invasion, but that is all over; in putting down a rebellion, that too is at an end; or if I saw the least probability that the measure, to which alone I look for the future repose of this country and of Great Britain, were likely to be furthered or assisted by my regiment; but I am thoroughly convinced that Lord Cornwallis will not (if he can avoid it) attempt it. I doubt very much whether he has not thrown away much of the means that any man would have of carrying it through, and I am confident that he will meet difficulties that no other man would experience from the disinclination which is hourly increasing against him from various important and from many trifling causes. You have now seen Lord Clare, and you have heard from him the very long and interesting conversations which we had together. Our ideas agreed exactly. I opened to him my idea of making from a committee of Privy Council a Board of Trade (and of finance) as in England, for questions and measures that Government might refer to them; and to make Foster Lord President; but I stated it as my own thought. He jumped at it as an arrangement highly useful to the country, and peculiarly eligible as with respect to the man whom it would bring forward, and as the only safe Board that Government ought to have in this country except for the details, as revenue stamps. But he agreed with me that unless Foster would co-operate heartily in the business nothing could be done, and he doubted with me whether he ever would draw heartily with Lord Cornwallis.

"Adieu, I write to you all that can be useful, and am very impatient to hear from you the result of your deliberations on this point.

Postscript. "I think it doubtful whether the British militia will consent to stay in this country (which they detest) beyond the time limited in the first Bill; unless they have some Frenchmen or croppies to amuse them.

"Lord Cornwallis has contrived by a comment upon the sentence of a general court-martial (in my mind very injudicious and intemperate) to set all the army wild against him. You will hear more about it, as it is drawing on to further consequences; Lord Enniskillen is the President."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 25. York Farm.—"J'ai l'honneur de vous envoyer huit pages de radotage de notre Crispin de Pétersbourg. Ce maudit homme gâte tout; il m'ennuie, m'impatiente, et m'indigne. Plaignez-moi, et renvoyez-moi ce barbouillage diplomatique de Cobentzl, après l'avoir lu.

"Pourquoi M. Whitworth convient-il que nous avons raison? Il travaille aussi à gâter ma besogne, ce me semble."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 26. Dublin.—"I have this morning received yours of the 21st, and most heartily do I thank you for your kind attention to my situation here, which has led you (as far as you can go) to arrange that 'first come first served'; putting always out of the question any sudden resolution that he may take, whose resolutions have in many instances been as sudden as they have been tenaciously adhered to.

"Your next intelligence would, six weeks ago, have made me very happy, because I should then have been more sanguine in my hopes of the success of this great measure, than I can be now; for I verily believe that the want of all confidence in him increases hourly, because every day he appears to narrow his communications, and to offend, or to abandon the civil government wholly; while at the same time he does not seem anxious to make his military government useful or respected; and I am most confident that, if anything can shake the success of this measure, it will be the character and conduct of Lord Cornwallis. However, le vin est tiré, and for many reasons I am glad that you have taken your decision; but the first sine quâ non is that the Speaker must be had; and I protest that I do not know how it will be possible to induce him to communicate with Lord

Cornwallis in the habits and with the confidence necessary. I believe that I have much weight with him, but I never have even sounded him for fear of doing mischief, and I will not hazard anything that can derange your plans; but if you think I can speak to him, I will do it. He is jealous that he does not stand well with Mr. Pitt; but Lord Clare will tell you what he and I agreed upon as the sure mode of engaging him, and as the proper situation for him. You will clearly understand that I do not want to be busy; but I see very clearly that you will not have many means of gaining the knowledge of his intentions and views; and I protest that I think he may make the difference of carrying the question or not.

"This letter of yours has determined me to the resolution of sacrificing my personal feelings in a point which I never can forget or forgive; which has hung upon my mind most heavily, but which I have ceased to state to you because it could only hurt you to know me so miserable in a matter where you could not help me. I had given a month's labour to draw up a complaint in the shape of a memorial to the King, enclosing and referring to Lord Cornwallis's correspondence with me when he refused to permit me to serve with my regiment, and told me 'that in many particulars it would materially injure the public service.' I had left my reparation to the King; but I had stated in the strongest terms my claim to this reparation in the most marked manner, or [to] withdraw myself and my regiment from the command of one who had deliberately thus outraged me. I had fixed the day of the King's return from Weymouth for transmitting to him through the Duke of Portland (officially) this memorial in a private letter; and had written out the whole. I have passed this morning since I received your letter in turning it in my mind, and have at length burnt the whole performance, that I may not be tempted to a step which may be of consequences very interesting to so great a measure. I mention this because it will shew you how much I have this great step at heart, and because it is the surest pledge to you that there is nothing I will not do to assist in it.

"You say nothing of your plans, and ask for mine; I will prepare that for the representation which I have discussed with Lord Clare, and will work upon your ideas if you will open them. But the sine quâ non are, a most efficient Secretary, and Pelham is not the man; and a most conciliating Lord Lieutenant, and you cannot mend Lord Cornwallis; Lord Clare, and he is most steady; and Mr. Foster, who, I think, clearly may be had, but it must be in his own way; and I wish you would allow me to try with him."

LORD GRENVILLE TO COUNT STARHEMBERG.

1798, October 27. Dropmore.—"Je vous restitue avec bien de rémercimens la dépêche de votre Chef in partibus. En vérité je vous plains d'avoir à exécuter de pareilles instructions, et je trouve l'Angleterre bien et bien heureuse de ne pas être dans la dépendance de ceux qui font de si beaux raisonnemens.

“L’assertion à l’égard de Whitworth est tout aussi bien fondée que celle relative à un autre de mes amis, que l’on accuse d’avoir aussi agi contre les instructions et l’intérêt de sa Cour. J’en ai la preuve entre les mains.”

Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to W. PITT.

1798, October 28. Dropmore.—“I send you Whitworth’s last letter. This incident is extremely embarrassing, because one sees plainly that, at the bottom of all these fine protestations, the project is to make us first pay Austria a subsidy of a million or 1,500,000*l.* for going to war when she cannot help it; and then pay Russia as much more for assisting her. I know that, all other considerations apart, the amount of this demand is alone sufficient to put our compliance with it quite out of the question. But the difficulty is how to manage the business so as to put it in any more practicable shape, and what that shape should be. What is, I think, above all important is that it should not fall back into the old situation of our paying the whole to Austria, leaving her exertions (?) to rest on no better security for the exertions of Russia. The whole must be mixed up together to form a dose that will be palatable to the country, or of any benefit to us. Cobentzel’s last instruction to Starhemberg about the convention (brought by Whitworth’s messenger) was even more extravagant than the former, and you see by Eden’s despatch that our successes in the Mediterranean have no effect in giving either vigour or decision at Vienna. It sounds whimsical, but I am inclined to think that in this state of things, urgent as the moment is, the best resolution we can take is to do nothing; to declare that we consider the negotiation at Vienna as at an end; and to say, but without the least tincture of ill-humour, that we must now wait for proposals from our allies, those which we had made having failed.

“If however any better scheme occurs to you, I should be very glad to discuss it with you, and if you will give me dinner on Tuesday, we may talk the whole subject over.” Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, October 28. Dropmore.—“J’ai reçu une dépêche de Whitworth qui m’a bien affligé en m’informant que votre Cour a voulu renvoyer l’arrangement de nos affaires à un concert avec l’Autriche, qui, selon toute apparence, ne s’effectuera jamais. Cependant comme notre ministre me renvoie pour tous les détails à vos communications, je serai bien aise de vous en parler. Je serai en ville mardi, sur les deux heures. Pourrez-vous passer chez moi à cette heure? Si non, faites-moi savoir quand je pourrai vous voir.” Copy.

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 29. Woodley.—“I shall be in town to-morrow, and very glad to see you at dinner, when we may talk over the state of the negotiation, which is certainly full of difficulty.

"It will be, at all events, impossible to give more, at the utmost, than two millions to both Courts, allowing nothing for Switzerland, and stinting Portugal as much as possible. If for this we could get a Russian army at our disposal, in return for the Russian share of our subsidy, perhaps we might diminish the difficulty as to Austria, by making the payment to her an engagement to her and Russia jointly, and dependent on both continuing to act with the force and for the purposes to be stipulated, on the side of Germany and Italy, exclusive of the separate Russian force to be employed under our immediate direction. All this however supposes that Austria shall agree to satisfy us on the subject of the convention, and to take her part decisively, of neither of which there are any symptoms at present; and I am afraid there is as little prospect of the Directory driving the business to a point. I am not therefore very sanguine in my hopes of any thing, but our continuing to fight well our own battle; and Europe must probably be left for some time longer to its fate."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 29. Richmond.—"J'allais vous écrire pour vous demander une entrevue, quand j'ai reçu votre billet. Je serai demain, mardi, à 2 heures dans votre maison en ville, comme vous me l'indiquez. Je suis mécontent de la dépêche que j'ai reçu, et que je vous communiquerai. C'est encore une intrigue de ce gueux de Cobenzel. Il ne faut pas se décourager pour ça, et attendre quelle sensation produira chez nous les représentations et les nouveaux expédients que porte le courier que nous avons expédié le 19 de ce mois. En attendant, il faut être ferme. La force de la raison, appuyée par la force d'âme, doit prévaloir sur les basses intrigues. Vous avez pour vous la justice et l'intérêt général de l'Europe; l'Autriche ne vous oppose que les vues rétrécies d'un vil intérêt, et d'une vanité ridicule, croyant ou s'élever seul dans le démembrement de l'Europe, ou avoir à elle seule la sagesse et la puissance de la sauver, sans s'apercevoir qu'elle sera la première à être engloutie dans le gouffre que la France nous creuse à tous."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, October 31. Richmond.—"En vous renvoyant la proclamation polyglotte du trop fameux Corse, avec bien des remerciements, je vous joins ici la lettre du Chevalier Whitworth. Vous êtes censé ne l'avoir pas vue, et je vous prie de me la renvoyer. C'est un honnête homme qui ne connaît pas toutes les fourberies de Cobenzel, de ce vil Scapin politique; et il est naturel qu'il ait été trompé par lui. Ce gueux qui a égorgé Venise, et vendu Mayence, a trompé mon Empereur et son ministère. S'il ne sera pas démasqué, ce ne sera pas de ma faute."

[GEORGE CANNING] to [LORD GRENVILLE.]

Private.

1798, November 1. Downing Street.—“I have been with Colonel Brownrigg about the gazetting Colonel Koehler, and I find not only that he cannot be gazetted on Saturday, but (if I am not very much mistaken both as to what I think I gather from Colonel Brownrigg’s conversation, and as to what I understand from a draft of a letter from the Duke of York to your Lordship, which is sent to-day for his Royal Highness’s signing, and will be sent to you to-morrow) the Duke of York entirely disapproves of the whole business of Colonel Koehler’s mission. I will mention to your Lordship the several points upon which Colonel Brownrigg stated the Duke of York’s opinion, in such a manner as to lead me to form this conclusion, which your Lordship will, of course, have the goodness to understand me as only mentioning privately to you (as I am by no means commissioned to speak of them) and only because, if you were to go on in the business with the notion that the Duke of York approved in the whole, and was difficult only as to particular military points, it would probably hardly ever be brought to any settlement; supposing (I mean) that I have collected His Royal Highness’s sentiments rightly.

“With regard to Colonel Koehler himself, Colonel Brownrigg says (and the Duke of York’s letter to your Lordship states in guarded terms) that His Royal Highness does not pretend to give any opinion against employing him; that he may be a very fit person; that his knowledge of the language and manners of Turkey is undoubtedly a great point; that perhaps, with some other steady and experienced officer to guide and control him, he might do very well; but that, to say the truth, he does think that there is some risk in giving him such ample discretion, and so large a military commission as seems intended; that he does think he will disappoint the hopes that he has raised. Nevertheless, if it shall be ultimately determined that he should have such a command given him (which is no business of His Royal Highness to determine) the Duke of York can of course have no objection to submitting his name to the King for the temporary and local rank of Br[igadier] Gen[eral]. But he wishes it to be understood that it is not of his doing.

“As to the officers whom Colonel Koehler has selected, the greatest part of them, the Duke observes in his letter, belong to the Ordnance Department; that if the Lieutenant-General’s permission is obtained, he can, of course, have no objection to their serving, and none to their having the local rank which may enable them to serve. I mentioned that your Lordship, after your conversation with the Duke of York yesterday, seemed to consider this as fixed; and that I was actually come to consult about gazetting Hope and Holloway, as well as Colonel Koehler himself. Of this Brownrigg said he knew nothing; that all that the Duke of York meant to have understood was that he should not interfere in the business; that it belonged exclusively to the Ordnance; that if they thought fit to send Hope and Holloway, he would not refuse his good offices; but he had no voice in the matter and nothing at all to do with it, except barely laying the names before the King.

“Upon the subject of the officers of the Line the letter of the Duke of York speaks more decisively, and Colonel Brownrigg more strongly than the letter. His Royal Highness thinks the selection made by Colonel Koehler utterly improper; young, raw, inexperienced officers, none of them having seen much service, and one of them a boy of 17 years old. I mentioned your Lordship’s having omitted to speak to His Royal Highness yesterday about the rank to be given to the senior officer of the Line; and having seen Colonel Koehler since I left you, and having learned from him that his senior officer had refused to go, that he had not yet filled up his place, and that he wished, by way of propitiating the Duke of York, whom he suspected not to be very friendly to the arrangement, to request of His Royal Highness to nominate such person as he might think fit, I told Brownrigg that such was Colonel Koehler’s wish; to which he answered that he believed His Royal Highness would not undertake to do any such thing; that the qualifications which Colonel Koehler required (justly he had no doubt) in the officer who was to fill this department were not easy to be found united in any officer, much less in one of a rank and standing to serve under Colonel Koehler; that for such officers he, the Duke of York, should look, if any where, in the higher ranks of the army; but that he (in short) washed his hands of the whole business; that he would (as is before said) recommend for local rank any officer and Colonel Koehler himself, if it was ultimately thought right to send him upon the establishment proposed; but that he had great doubts [on the whole subject].

“The letter concludes with saying that, as to the Ordnance stores, the Duke of York cannot conceive for what they are necessary, if the Turks have (as Colonel Koehler’s mémoire states) an admirable train of artillery, furnished with all proper appurtenances. Colonel Brownrigg adds that the Ordnance are as little persuaded as the Duke of York is of the necessity or propriety of Colonel Koehler’s arrangements; particularly that Colonel Malcolm (with whom Colonel Koehler has most intercourse upon the subject) is surprised at the nature and extent of the preparation made, and the powers granted to Colonel Koehler.

“I have thought it best to trouble you with this detail (which I wrote down immediately after conversing with Brownrigg) that you may form your opinion as to the best mode of removing those obstacles in the way of Colonel Koehler’s arrangements of which, from what your Lordship reported of the conversation with the Duke of York yesterday, you did not seem to be aware; and the letter alone (though that is pretty strong) might not perhaps without a knowledge of Brownrigg’s commentary upon it, put you fully in possession of His Royal Highness’ opinion.

“If I were to judge from what I have heard to-day, I should suppose that the Duke of York, though he will not decidedly negative any arrangement that is pressed, will at least not assist very cordially in forwarding the execution of it.

"At all events nothing will be done but with the utmost and most punctilious form; a formal recommendation, for instance, is required from Sir W. Howe of the Artillery and Engineer officers, before His Royal Highness will lay their claims for rank before the King."

LORD GRENVILLE TO COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, November 2. Dropmore.—"Mille graces pour la communication de la lettre intéressante du Comte Panin. Dans la dépêche que Garlike m'a écrite par le Prince d'Orange, il m'a parlé de ces idées, mais avec moins d'étendue; et le Prince m'a parlé fort au long, et avec beaucoup d'emphase, du changement de dispositions qu'il croit avoir aperçu depuis quelque temps à Berlin.

"Avec tout cela, je ne me livre point aux idées flatteuses d'une coopération générale, quelque évident que soit, selon moi, l'intérêt de toutes les Grandes Puissances de mettre fin à cet état de choses qui les épuise, et les mine, même au moment où ils paraissent jouir de quelque intervalle de repos.

"Il me semble surtout qu'à l'égard de notre assistance on nous met toujours dans un cercle vicieux. La Prusse ne veut agir qu'avec nos secours; et après avoir vu l'Autriche se mettre en avant. La Russie de même, et l'Autriche attend pour se mettre en avant, de s'assurer de nos secours pécuniaires, et de la coopération de la Russie, ainsi que de la neutralité de la Prusse. Nous ne pouvons suffire à mettre en mouvement les armées des trois Grandes Puissances continentales.

"La somme de deux millions que nous avons cru pouvoir destiner à des objets continentals, est, en elle-même, extrêmement forte, vu l'urgence de nos propres besoins, et les moyens auxquels nous sommes obligés d'avoir recours. De l'augmenter il n'y a aucune apparence. Il ne peut donc s'agir que de la meilleure manière de l'employer pour la chose publique. Je pense que cela ne peut se faire que par l'établissement d'un concert général, et quadruple alliance, comme nous l'avions proposé au commencement de cette année. Là on conviendrait des opérations, des moyens, et des objets, tant de la guerre que de la paix. Il n'est pas facile (je le sens) de concilier tant d'intérêts, surtout entre des gouvernements tels que ceux de Vienne et Berlin; mais sans cela je ne vois guère d'espoir de faire rien qui vaille.

"Lord Clare doit passer ici mardi en son chemin pour retourner en Irlande. C'est pourquoi je ne viendrai en ville que mercredi matin. Si vous pourrez, en attendant, m'envoyer une partie des pièces que vous avez reçues je vous en aurai bien d'obligation. Je vous restitue avec cette note les deux lettres du Comte Panin, et leur incluse." Copy.

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 4. Richmond.—“ Je suis tout-à-fait de votre avis sur le cercle vicieux autour duquel tournent les Cours du continent. Tout en avouant qu’elles sont en grand danger, elles croient, en même temps, que c’est l’Angleterre qui doit s’épuiser pour les sauver. Sans quoi elles veulent rester dans cette inactivité qui ne retardera que de peu de temps leurs chutes inévitables. Si j’ai une mauvaise idée sur la foi Autrichienne, je n’en ai pas une meilleure sur la foi Prussienne; l’une et l’autre vaillent bien l’ancienne Punique.

“ Je vous envoie tous mes papiers avec prière de ne pas prendre copie, et de me les renvoyer jeudi, dans ma maison en ville. Je consente que vous les lisiez à monsieur Pitt mercredi, où vous le verrez sans doute, mais pas à personne d’autre. Vous verrez par la dernière pièce du recueil que je vous envoie ce que c’est que ce Duc de Brunswic, et combien peu on doit se fier à lui. Je crois que le Comte Panin se trompe sur le prétendu retour de sentiment du comte Hawkwitz, et je crois ce dernier d’accord avec le Duc. Ce ne sont que des fourbes qui, à force de finesse, sont incapables de concevoir des grandes idées, et de prendre des mesures énergiques qui seules peuvent sauver l’Europe, qui se perd par les jalousies et l’avidité de s’agrandir des cours de Vienne et de Berlin.

“ Si je n’avais des affaires qui me retiennent mardi à Richmond d’une manière à ne pouvoir m’en dégager, je serai venu vous demander à dîner à Dropmore, pour avoir la satisfaction de faire la connaissance de mylord Clare, pour le grand caractère duquel j’ai une très grande estime. J’aurais eu aussi le plaisir de jouer quelques parties d’échecs avec vous; mais je ne puis bouger d’ici après demain.”

[GEORGE CANNING] to [LORD GRENVILLE.]

1798, November 4.—“ I understand that the Duke of York withdraws his objections to Colonel Koehler’s plan, and that I am to expect a letter from Bröwnrigg in the course of a day or two, saying (without any reference to what has passed) that if Colonel Koehler will send in a list of the officers of the Line whom he wishes to take with him, sanctioned by your Lordship, His Royal Highness will give them the necessary permission, and lay their names before the King for local rank, and taking no notice of any other point. This being the case, perhaps your Lordship might think it best to suspend the sending any answer to His Royal Highness upon the general subject until Bröwnrigg’s letter arrives, which may make such a discussion unnecessary.”

THE EARL OF ELGIN to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, November 4. Brighton.—“ I regret extremely that the attention I am obliged to pay to the means recommended for the recovery of my health prevents my having the honour of waiting upon your Lordship and mentioning, in a more satisfactory manner than by letter, what I now beg leave to lay before you.

"Having been for some weeks out of the way of business, I have had no opportunity of acquiring any knowledge of the proceedings and intentions of Government relative to the object I have in view. But, on considering how infinitely the present contest is likely to be influenced by the union of Turkey and Russia with Great Britain; how essentially the future greatness of France may be obstructed by our firmly establishing, and maintaining an interest in Turkey; and how much our trade in the Levant and in the Mediterranean may hereafter be augmented by a proper improvement of the present dispositions of the Ottoman empire; it has occurred to me as possible that it may be in your Lordship's intention to send to Constantinople an English representative equal in rank and situation to the Imperial and French Ministers at that Court. Should that supposition be founded, I would venture to bring myself under your notice for that embassy.

"The many gratifying marks of kindness I have experienced from your Lordship encourage me to submit this suggestion to you, without further detail, and without making application or communication to any other person on the subject. I feel confident that your Lordship would not advise me to undertake any mission that was not quite eligible for me; and I am equally sure you will rightly appreciate my motives for proposing to engage in this new service.

"If your Lordship should have any commands for me on this occasion, they will find me at Brighton, where I mean to pass some time for the benefit of warm sea bathing. My health has, I confess, been one inducement with me for bringing forward the idea contained in this letter, since I have much benefit to expect from a change of climate, and a sea voyage."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 5. Dublin.—"I send you a memoir to which I have given the greatest attention, and upon the outlines of which I have consulted some of the wisest and coolest heads in this kingdom. I have read it to the Lord Chancellor, who highly approved it; and it obviates so many of the difficulties that, if you are not startled by the numbers, I think you will find grounds in this plan on which you may build your measure. As I have heard nothing from you respecting the Speaker, I have not dared converse with him. You will have known before now that he declines the journey to London, because it was proposed to him through Lord Cornwallis, who enclosed Mr. Pitt's letter to him; this, however, does not alter my opinion that he may be induced to assist cheerfully, though it is obvious that the public service must suffer by the folly of Lord Cornwallis's conduct to this man, who is certainly one of the most useful servants of the English Government, and I must say one of the most manageable, provided he sees a disposition to confide in him. I repeat that, for many reasons, I have had no confidential communication with him on this point; but if Mr. Pitt and you wish it, I will try to manage him, or at least I will endeavour to know his ideas. But I entreat you to believe that he is much too important a card to throw away, from his faculty of doing good if he will work with you, and of doing mischief incalculable if he works against you. I am now employing myself on a project for an establishment for the two great dissenting Churches, the Catholics and Presbyterians of this kingdom, having a most decided opinion that they must be connected (by means of a general assembly of each as in Scotland) with the Crown; that powers of control must be given to correct the misconduct of the teachers, and that they must be made independent of their flocks. I am endeavouring to collect the proper documents for such a project, but I beg you to prepare your mind and that of others for the idea, which I hold a sine quâ non, both for the present effect of such a measure on the union, and for the future tranquillity of Ireland. I, of course, confide all these ideas to you, but, if you approve them, you will of course shew them to Mr. Pitt. Lord Cornwallis told Mr. Beresford on Friday last that he had not spoken on the subject to any creature breathing save the Lord Chancellor, and I believe he spoke true. Beresford has conversed with me very fully and appears decided, though he fears that the opposition to it will be most violent unless Mr. Foster is induced to take part with you; which he, Beresford, says would be done if Mr. Pitt discussed the measure personally with him instead of Lord Cornwallis, with whom Beresford seems to think he will never act cordially.

“I have now to mention to you, and through you to Mr. Pitt, my earnest wish that if you should appoint Commissioners in any stage of this business, or in the conclusion of it for signing the articles, I may be named. You will see that my motives for this wish must be obvious, and they are at least pardonable. Perhaps my vanity may lead me to think that I have given as much time and consideration to the subject as any one, and most certainly I have advantages that every one has not.

“But whatever is to be done, do it quickly; for every one here of all parties and opinions agrees that the time is fast passing by. Nothing is here done by Government to lead the public mind, and every industry is exerted by pamphlets and newspapers to mislead; and the clamour is chiefly raised upon points which, from what I know of Mr. Pitt’s ideas and yours, are least likely to stand in the way. But it is indeed ‘mirabile, mi fili, quam parvulâ sapientiâ’ every part of the civil business of this country is conducted; and I wish I could think more favourably of the result of the military arrangements which he has made. But be they what they may, this country never will forgive him for leaving Wicklow, and Wexford, with the greater parts of Meath, Kildare, and Westmeath, and of the country within four miles of Dublin, in a state so insecure that the communications (except of the mails which are escorted) are almost stopped. And this with 71,000 effective regulars and 47,000 yeomanry !”

LORD MINTO to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 5. Minto.—“The enclosed letters appear to me of sufficient importance to be transmitted to your Lordship, although it is probable that they may inform you of nothing you are not already acquainted with. It would seem, however, that the matters alluded to were not thought ripe, at the date of these letters, for a direct communication to your Lordship, and it is principally this circumstance which has led me to consider them as worthy of your attention now. Your Lordship must, I am persuaded, have been informed from other quarters of the good disposition of the Duke of Brunswick ; but it is just possible the steps he took at Berlin to gain the King of Prussia, and the success he supposes himself to have had in leading that prince towards the measures and the system he approves of, may not yet have reached your Lordship ; and I have presumed to think some notice of the application to our Government which seems in contemplation might not be unacceptable. The letters were entrusted to me by the Comte d’Artois ; and your Lordship will see by the Duc de Serrent’s letter of the 1st November (which accompanied the last of the two letters from Brunswick) that the Comte d’Artois is desirous of communicating to Government anything that is thought interesting, although some anxiety is expressed that the secret of this correspondence may be kept. In these circumstances I know nobody to whom they could be communicated with so much propriety as your Lordship. I think it right to add that if your Lordship should think the correspondence of Monsieur, which is very extensive, likely to furnish any information of moment, it will be easy for me to encourage a very unreserved communication from that quarter, and to convey what is interesting to you in such a manner as not to commit your Lordship personally, or Government, further than you may wish. In doing this I should not abuse the confidence the Prince is disposed to put in me ; nor could I indeed accept of any confidence from him, of which I should not be at perfect liberty to make this use when I thought it proper. I cannot conclude this letter without expressing the great satisfaction with which I learnt that the mind of the King of Prussia (and his Minister) is, at least, in suspense on these subjects. Some degree of wisdom and honour in a King of Prussia seems to have been the grand desideratum in the affairs of Europe since the commencement of this contest. Your Lordship must be much better informed, but I cannot help thinking with much pleasure that this young man is not to be despaired of, though he is much worked, no doubt, on one side.” Three enclosures.

Enclosure 1.

————— to SON ALTESSE ROYALE, Monsieur.

1798, October 1. Brunswick.—“J’ai encore aujourd’hui à déposer dans le secret intime du cœur de Monsieur, des notions aussi sûres qu'elles sont intéressantes, et qui confirment pleinement celles que j'ai transmises par mes deux dernières.

“L'excellent Duc s'est héroïquement conduit dans son séjour de Potsdam. Il y a parfaitement exécuté tout ce qu'il s'était proposé en partant de Brunswick. La transcendence du Prince Henri, et la sorte d'empire qu'il avait pris sur le Roi son neveu, a été attaquée, ébranlée, au point de n'en avoir plus rien à craindre. On est parvenu à faire sentir au jeune monarque la honte et le danger auxquels il exposerait sa gloire personnelle et sa couronne, en se laissant guider par les conseils de son oncle. Ce dernier avait remis, depuis peu de jours, un mémoire détaillé sur la conduite que la Prusse avait à tenir dans le cas où la guerre se renouvellerait. On croit que ce mémoire était, en grande partie, l'ouvrage de l'abbé Siéyès, dont le Prince est le protecteur affiché. L'objet qu'on se proposait dans cet écrit, ne tendait à rien moins qu'à déterminer s[a] M[ajesté] Prussienne à se lier étroitement avec la France républicaine contre l'Autriche, sa seule et véritable ennemie. On a promis au Duc de ne pas même le lire.

“Le succès du Duc a été si complet, non seulement sur l'esprit du Roi, mais aussi sur celui du Comte de Haugwitz, qu'on s'est expliqué provisoirement sur la nécessité et les moyens d'avoir en état de mobilité, et de marche immédiate, un corps de 60,000 hommes pour renforcer au besoin, si le cas l'exigeait, l'armée commandée par le Duc.

“Il était important de s'assurer par cet arrangement de prévoyance, contre le plan qui pourrait tenter le Directoire Français dans l'espoir, et pour couvrir leur désastre d'Alexandrie, de marcher sur Bremen et sur Hambourg, avant que la négociation qu'ils peuvent savoir être commencée entre les deux Cours de Vienne et de Berlin, soit terminée, et que le concert désiré puisse être établi et réglé.

“Le Comte d'Haugwitz a été jusqu'à prier le Duc de pressentir la Cour de Londrès sur la quotité du subsidé que l'Angleterre fixerait dans le cas où la Prusse rentrerait en activité contre la France, et le Duc s'en est chargé. Mais je sais que, par réflexion très sage, depuis son retour ici, il a écrit fort au long pour demander lui-même à Berlin des explications détaillées sur la force réelle de l'armée Prussienne à employer, et sur la nature des services qu'elle aurait à rendre, sous le prétexte de prévenir par là tous mésentendus dans la confection du traité à convenir, mais dans le véritable objet de s'assurer d'abord par la réponse du ministre de sa sincérité, et ensuite d'accélérer la conclusion de cet arrangement avec la Cour de Londrès. Le personnage dont j'ai annoncé dans ma dernière le départ immédiat pour Berlin, y sera vraisemblablement chargé de presser cette réponse du Ministre, et du soin de la faire rédiger conformément au désir du Sérénissime négociateur.”

Enclosure 2.

LE DUC DE SERENT to LORD MINTO.

1798, November 1. Edinburgh.—“Monsieur me charge de vous adresser la copie d'une nouvelle lettre qu'il a reçue de Brunswick, et qui fait suite à celle qu'il m'a ordonné de vous communiquer dernièrement. Le secret de cette correspondance étant nécessaire pour qu'elle puisse être utile, son Altesse Royale s'en rapporte sur cet objet, comme sur tant d'autres, à votre prudence, pour ne rien compromettre si vous jugez qu'il soit avantageux pour votre Gouvernement de lui transmettre cette information."

Enclosure 3.

— to SON ALTESSE ROYALE, Monsieur.

1798, October 11. Brunswick.—“ Un incident, dont je n'ai pu percer le mystère qu'hier, a dérangé l'exécution du voyage de Berlin, que j'avais annoncé dans mon dernier rapport particulier. Voici quelle a été la cause de cette variante. Le Comte d'Haugwitz a su que c'était à la réquisition même de la Cour de Vienne que l'armée auxiliaire de Russie avait fait halte, après son passage du Bog; et il a, sur cette démarche du Cabinet Impérial, conçu le soupçon qu'il était déjà occupé à négocier secrètement avec le Directoire Français, pour se faire accorder en Italie de nouvelles cessions des territoires qui sont à sa bienséance, à titre de complément des articles du traité de Campo Formio. Plein de cette méfiance, le ministre s'en est fait un titre, en écrivant au Duc, pour lui recommander la plus grande réserve dans les démarches convenues avec Son Altesse Sérénissime relativement à la Cour de Londrès, dans la supposition d'un nouveau concert de vues et d'opérations entre les deux Cours de Vienne et de Berlin. La conclusion de la dépêche du Comte d'Haugwitz était de nature à faire craindre que ce nouveau grief n'indisposât assez la Prusse contre l'Autriche, pour lui faire adopter des mesures absolument opposées à celles qui avaient été arrêtées à Potzdam en dernier lieu. L'excellent Duc a appelé au moment même de la réception de cette intéressante dépêche, l'homme qu'il honore de sa confiance, auquel il l'a communiquée, et avec lequel il a concerté sa réponse; que j'ose assurer avoir été telle, et pour la dignité des expressions, et pour la pureté et la noblesse des sentiments, qu'elle ne laisse rien à désirer, non seulement pour écarter toute méfiance de la tête de M. d'Haugwitz, mais même pour convaincre le ministre que, quand même l'Autriche (ce qu'on ne croyait pas) serait en négociation avec le Directoire, il n'en conviendrait pas moins à la dignité et même à la sûreté de la couronne Prussienne, de se rapprocher de la Cour de Vienne pour combattre l'ennemi commun de toute l'Europe; et que toute rivalité devait être nécessairement suspendue dans la crise actuelle. Cette réponse a produit l'effet qu'on s'en était promis. M. de Panin a travaillé dans le même sens, et dans le même temps, M. d'Haugwitz; et on ne retarde à marcher sur les errements qu'on avait adoptés à Potzdam, que jusqu'à l'arrivée du Prince Héréditaire d'Orange, qu'on attend ici le 17 du courant; et qui en partira pour Londrès après avoir concerté ici avec le Duc, et le personnage destiné au voyage de Berlin, la marche respective de la négociation, et des arrangements dont ils seront chargés, chacun de leur côté.”

LORD GRENVILLE to RUFUS KING.

Private.

1798, November 6. Dropmore.—“I return you the two letters which you had the goodness to leave with me. I think I collect from them that the persons with whom Mr. M[urray] has conversed will not treat with us about the means of delivering their country from the yoke of France, unless we first agree that the P[rince] of O[range] and the Stadholderate shall be set aside.

“This condition we consider as wholly inadmissible as a preliminary to such a discussion; nor can we give the least expectation that it would even be the result of it. We hold it to be impossible to restore, and still more to maintain, the tranquillity of that country by the exclusion of the most numerous party in it.

“The object of England is what you stated to Mr. M[urray] and what it has been for above a century. To see in that country a rational, free, and efficient government, capable of providing for its domestic happiness, and of maintaining a real independence with respect to all its neighbours. The persecution of one party for the past, or its exclusion, or that of the other party for the future, are equally incompatible with these objects. Those persons, whoever they may be, who concur in this wish, would find in England a willing and a powerful assistant; but there is nothing in the present relative state of Great Britain and Holland which could tempt us to embark in any more limited plan, at the risk of increasing, instead of destroying, the internal divisions of that country, and thereby exposing it to become avowedly and permanently, what it is now in substance, but for a time only, a conquered country, annexed to the present Government of France.”

Postscript. “I need hardly repeat that if, on the grounds stated in this letter and in yours of the 16th August, there is any disposition to open a discussion with us, our disposition remains the same; and it would be for them to name the place and person where and through whom they would communicate. We would immediately give the necessary instructions to a fit person on our part.” Copy. Three enclosures.

Enclosure 1.

RUFUS KING to W. V. MURRAY.

1798, August 16. London.—“It is almost certain that the war will soon be renewed, at least between Austria and France. The political timidity of Prussia will prevent the king from acting; but a war with Austria supported by Russia would favour any disposition that may exist in Holland to emancipate themselves from France. It will be difficult for England by any formal act to discard the Prince of Orange, though as I have before told you, and as the past history of England and of Holland proves, the non-existence of the Stadholderate will not impede a friendly and useful connection and treaty between the two countries; a reform would perhaps be preferable to an abolition of the Stadholderate.

"W——th has reported to me a conversation with S—— that passed, I believe in your presence, and which may be made the commencement of at least an informal negotiation between Holland and England. No one can approve the old constitution of Holland. England desires to see and would gladly assist in any suitable manner to establish a rational, free, and efficient government in that country; she would engage to all persons perfect security against every sort of personal or other inconvenience on account of the past, and would moreover, become the guaranty against the abuses which might be apprehended from the weakness of the Prince of Orange.

"The portion of authority which he or his family should retain in the new system would be matter proper for discussion; and you may say that a person on the part of England will meet such person on the part of Holland, by which I mean all the Provinces, as shall be sent to any convenient place that they shall name confidentially to confer upon these important concerns." Copy.

Enclosure 2.

W. V. MURRAY to RUFUS KING.

1798, September 7. The Hague.—"I received your letter in cypher, of the 16th August, the 2nd instant, but could not answer by the post of the 3rd, because of circumstances and the necessity of caution. The answer was, that it would not do; 'that no plan containing any share of the Prince of Orange in government will do'; and that 'if England would give up the Prince of Orange, and agree to let the present constitution stand, and if Prussia (in concert with Great Britain) would cede a tract of country convenient to them (Holland) and useless to her (Prussia) on the east side of the Ems river, that then they would give a sum, or if more agreeable a fixed annual stipend, to the Prince of Orange.'

"I know nothing of the gentlemen with whom Mr. W—— had the conversation in this affair. It is known but to four Dutch—and he is not one—though now it is probable he may be.

"I can add nothing to the inducements in sound policy, which I have already, I think, with repetition stated.

"The object is very important, namely, to drive the French out. That alone is worth a war. The actual state of things presents the only means that ought to be used with good faith. The object once attained, the nation would be free to choose, consistently with that good faith which would be gratified by withholding all interference at such a time." Copy.

Enclosure 3.

W. V. MURRAY to RUFUS KING.

1798, October 6.—"I have again been asked about the subject of my last by the same person.

"This proceeds both from the hopes entertained, and in the gravest manner, of success; and from the prospect of war, because in case of war all things ought to be previously understood and arranged. I was asked on this subject, solicitously, yesterday.

"You have spoken to me of Wads affair; if that course and business is more agreeable and more feasible in the settlement of our accounts, say so and mention your arbitrator. I hate cyphers, and therefore speak without; you will understand me. My own opinion, is, nor can it be formed on your idea, that that is not so substantial a house as the other. I know little of the broker whom he mentioned, except that his reputation is excellent; but in our affair I know nothing of him. I do not like to hazard any further in these sorts of speculations, nor to extend credit, and therefore I did not ask him if he would act.

"What you say to me will be delicately used. You would wish to know the state of parties here. Without adding anything to what I have mentioned often, I will say only what I think will follow the commencement of a war on the Rhine. I think that the party spirit will be high if F[rance] withdraws her troops, but that this fervour will be without effect, as long as England withholds the pledge which I have often mentioned as essential to the expulsion of the French." Copy.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 7. Dublin.—"I told you yesterday how much I feared that the indolence of Government would give great advantage to the exertions which were made in many quarters to raise a clamour against the union. I then knew that it had been proposed to the lawyers' corps to assemble as a corps, and to come to very strong resolutions against it, pledging their lives against such a measure. I was in hopes that it would have been prevented, and that the friends of Government would have succeeded in their statements of the dangerous impropriety of such a step; but I have this morning (what I conceive certain) information that such a meeting is to be called immediately, and that resolutions of that nature will be carried. I have reason to think that they will delay it for two or three days in order to ensure the co-operation of the attornies' corps, who are to do the same; and they hope that this practice will be universal. Lord Cornwallis was informed of the intention on Saturday last, but I have no reason to think that he has consulted any one upon it. Lord Charlemont is very much at the bottom of this, and employs one Plunkett, a barrister brought into Parliament by him, who is very active and clever; and Mr. Barrington has been equally busy on the same business. I know that the discontent against Lord Cornwallis has likewise operated strongly in this question, and unless the whole system of civil government is changed, be assured that the House of Commons will run riot not only on this, but on every other point made by Government. You cannot change Lord Cornwallis, but you may insist upon a change of his system ; and you ought to send a real Minister to the House of Commons instead of Lord Castlereagh, who, if he had the abilities of an angel, cannot do all that a Minister must do in that station.

“In short, undeceive yourself and your friends if you expect any success upon any points so long as the machine is left to chance, as at present. I owe to you this explicit declaration, and the misery I feel is relieved by endeavouring to make you feel these points as I do.”

LORD MINTO to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 8. Minto.—“ Since my last, I have received the enclosed from the Duc de Serent, which I take the liberty of forwarding for your perusal.”

Enclosure.

LE DUC DE SERENT to LORD MINTO.

1798, November 6. Edinburgh.—“ Voici encore un extrait d’une lettre arrivée dernièrement de Brunswik. Quoiqu’elle ne réponde pas à beaucoup près aux espérances qu’avaient données les premiers rapports, son Altesse Royale m’a ordonné de vous en donner communication, afin que vous ayez une égale connaissance du véritable état des choses dans le moment.

“ Il paraît aussi que la conduite actuelle de la Cour de Vienne présente des incertitudes inquiétantes.

“ Je ne sais si je me fais illusion, mais il me semble que l’Angleterre serait bien plus indépendante de la politique privée de ses alliés, si elle dirigeait ses principaux efforts dans le sens qui peut donner le plus de consistance au parti royaliste de l’intérieur de la France. C’est un allié qui pourrait devenir bientôt plus puissant qu’aucun autre. Il serait forcément plus dans sa main, et il faudrait plus d’un demi-siècle avant qu’il pût cesser de demeurer dans sa dépendance.”

Extract.

1798, October 18. Brunswick.—“ Les explications que le Duc avait demandées au Comte d’Haugwitz, ainsi que je l’avais marqué, ne lui ont point été envoyées par ce ministre : et la négociation que ce Prince devait entamer à Londrès a été suspendue. La méfiance a prévalu dans le Cabinet Prussien, et, malgré toute la force des raisons qui ont été exposées dans la réponse du Duc au Comte, ce dernier s’obstine dans ses soupçons de négociation particulière et perfide. Cela ne laisse pas de donner ici peine et travail au personnage qui doit retourner à Berlin ; mais malgré cette reprise d’incertitude et de méfiance suspensive, le Comte de Panin marque cependant être assez content de la façon franche avec laquelle le Comte d’Haugwitz traite avec lui.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 10. Dublin.—“ I say nothing upon your very interesting packet which I got yesterday, as I have been very hard at work upon it; but it is highly gratifying to me to see how exactly our ideas have tallied upon the essential points, in the very difficult question of parliamentary arrangements. I still think my projet for the House of Commons is better than yours, and perhaps discussion of the subject may suggest something better than both. But that (as far at least as Lord Cornwallis is concerned) will not take place, for he professes to know nothing of what 'Ministry are doing about it in England,' and therefore leaves it, and all the clamour and machinations on the subject, to absolute chance. Lord Castlereagh is gone into the North, and Cooke is the only thing that remains like a Government, for His Excellency does not now come to Dublin more than twice a week, and sees no one in the Park. His table for himself and his family is of eight covers, and twice a week he has 12 covers; this (as you see) leaves him completely uninformed of every thing; and all this at such a moment, with such an object, and with such means. I am very uneasy about our British militia, for their disinclination to the service increases every moment, exactly in proportion to the increasing disgust with which they hear themselves treated for the 'treachery' of the measure of sending them here to force a union. Add to this the unusual fatigue of very very severe duty, and the sickness which has increased in all our regiments for want of proper barracks and accommodations, and you will see how easily they will listen to any idea of returning home. I still hope we may manage to engage the Royal Bucks and Warwick to stay till spring, but I am sure that they will not stay longer; and if any of the other corps should (as we understand the Dorset have done) insist upon returning when the act expires, I will not answer for our people, nor for the Warwick, of whom Lord H. Seymour (their real colonel) thinks as I do. This is a most serious consideration to you; and as Lord Cornwallis never has had the slightest communication with any of us upon it, I wish you to bear it in your mind. The numbers now sick, of the British militia, are near 900, and they increase in spite of every care.

"Tone has just been tried; he desired to give the court-martial no trouble; acknowledged that he was an Irishman, and in the service of the French Republic; gloried in having been the instrument of uniting three millions of his fellow citizens against the oppression and tyranny of England, and of having procured from 'the great nation' that assistance for the recovery of their liberty which had so unfortunately failed. He was stopped in parts of his declamation addressed to the Catholics of Ireland, for whom, he said, he was happy to lay down his life; and requested of the court that they would copy the humanity of the French Directory and government who, in judging to death Charrette, Sombreuil, and others who had fought in opposition to them, had reconciled their death to the feelings of a soldier; and he therefore begged to be shot 'not so much from his private feelings, as from a sense of respect to the uniform he wore.' He finished by requesting that the sentence might be sent to Lord Cornwallis instantly, and hoped His Excellency would confirm it, and order it to be executed within the hour. Notwithstanding all this he was much agitated, and I cannot help thinking that he means to destroy himself before Monday, on which day it is supposed he will be hanged."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 11. London.—"J'ai été bien sensiblement touché de la première partie du billet aimable que j'ai reçu hier de vous. Vous me rendez justice en comptant sur mon attachement à tout épreuve pour vous, et sur le zèle le plus ardent, prêt à me faire tout entreprendre pour la succès de la bonne cause. Dans le moment où votre lettre m'est parvenue, j'allais vous écrire pour prendre la liberté de fixer votre attention sur le même objet, et vous parler du parti que je crois qu'il y aurait à tirer du mouvement assez prononcé qui a actuellement lieu dans la Belgique. Je me trouve heureux d'avoir rencontré votre idée. Ce n'est pas la première fois que cela m'arrive depuis que nous nous connaissons ; et mon petit amour-propre en est trop flatté pour que je puisse m'empêcher de m'en glorifier avec mon respectable ami.

"J'ai songé avec beaucoup d'attention à la manière d'établir cette communication avec la Belgique. Il s'agissait d'y trouver une personne sûre, sensée, bien-intentionnée et qui ne fut pas assez bête pour se compromettre mal à propos, ainsi que ceux qui l'employeront. Il fallait, en outre, quelqu'un qui ne marquât point actuellement, et qui soit de nature à pouvoir marquer par la suite. Ayant été à peu près élevé dans les Pays-Bas que je ne puis m'empêcher de regarder comme une seconde patrie, j'y connais des individus bons, mauvais, et indifférens de toutes les classes ; et j'y ai encore beaucoup de gens qui m'y paraissent dévoués. Mais j'ai toujours observé que la bêtise et la maladresse y gâtent souvent les affaires beaucoup plus que la mauvaise volonté. Ce peuple est capable de tout quand il est bien conduit. Il n'y a point de sacrifices qu'il ne soit prêt à faire, point de danger qu'il ne soit disposé à affronter, point d'acte d'héroïsme pour lequel il ne soit susceptible d'être électrisé, pourvu qu'il soit bien conduit. Mais, 1, il ne sait point se diriger par lui-même ; et 2, il est peu de personnes parmi ses concitoyens en état de les mener. Il en est une, cependant, et peut-être la seule qui soit capable de remplir nos vœux si elle veut s'en charger ; et qui serait, en même tems, assez honnête pour nous avertir de l'impossibilité de rien réaliser d'essentiel, en nous en donnant les preuves, si elle était convaincu de cette triste vérité. Cet homme est mon beau-frère le Duc d'Ursel. N'oubliez pas que c'est votre ami qui vous parle, et non le ministre de l'Empereur. Je crois nécessaire de vous faire connaître celui que je vous propose.

"Marié très jeune à la fille du Duc d'Arenberg, sœur aînée de ma femme, il est entré de bonne heure au service de l'Empereur, et n'a pas tardé à s'y distinguer de manière à être avancé promptement. Il a fait notre petite guerre de Bavière ; et lorsque nous avons été au moment de rompre avec les Hollandais au sujet de l'affaire de l'Escaut, il était déjà général, et destiné à commander un corps considérable sous le Duc Albert. Une raison prématurée, une réputation bien méritée, d'une probité scrupuleuse et sévère, et une connaissance exacte des loix et du gouvernement, lui avait dès lors attiré l'estime de ses concitoyens, qui voyaient dans lui le seul noble dont on pût attendre quelque chose. Il ne trompa pas leur confiance, car, sous le ministère du Comte de Belgioso, lorsque l'Empereur commença à tenter ses innovations fatales aux Pais-Bas, le Duc d'Ursel fit au souverain des représentations respectueuses et fermes. Mais le peuple, ayant voulu se porter à des extrémités encore inconnues jusqu'alors, il parvint par son sang-froid, et l'empire qu'il avait su prendre sur lui, à l'arrêter plusieurs fois au moment de son explosion. En ouvrant l'histoire du tems, vous y verrez que le Duc d'Ursel a souvent exposé sa vie pour mettre des bornes à ce prétendu patriotisme Flamand. Quand il crut voir, sous M. de Trautmansdorff, les esprits exaspérés à l'excès des deux côtés, il prit le sage parti de se faire employer à l'armée d'Hongrie, qui combattait les Turcs, et prouva par là à son pays dont il idolâtrait la constitution, et au souverain qu'il servait avec honneur, combien son caractère était éloigné de toute intrigue ou faction. Il se couvrit de gloire au siège de Belgrade, dont la prompte reddition fut due au Prince de Ligne, sous les ordres duquel il commandait immédiatement. Quoiqu'il eut pris la résolution de ne pas retourner aux Pais-Bas pendant ces tems de trouble et de confusion, la probité le força, malgré lui, de demander un congé pour y passer quelque tems, en apprennant les persécutions et les mauvais traitemens de toutes espèces que la bêtise, l'insolence, et la dureté de M. de Trautmansdorff avaient fait éprouver à sa femme. Il passa par Vienne avant de se rendre chez lui. J'y étais alors. Il vit l'Empereur Joseph qui le traita avec la plus grande distinction, lui donna un régiment, et le pria de s'employer avec la sagesse et l'influence qu'on lui connaissait pour ramener les esprits égarés. Le Duc d'Ursel, ayant reçu la parole de son maître d'obtenir une réparation prononcée des insultes faites à sa femme, ainsi que celle de revoir la constitution de son pays dans toute sa vigueur, promit à l'Empereur de se dévouer entièrement à ses intérêts, en le prévenant en même tems, que pour le mieux servir, il aurait l'air, dès qu'il serait dans la Belgique, de quitter le service militaire. Je puis vous certifier que le Duc d'Ursel partit de Vienne dans cette intention, et il aurait travaillé dans ce sens si, peu après son arrivée, il n'avait pas eu lieu d'être convaincu que Joseph l'avait trompé. Les inconséquences du Gouvernement redoublèrent, et tout ce que le Duc d'Ursel put faire de mieux fut de rester tranquille. Il fit alors le plus de bien qu'il put dans l'ordre des choses du moment, et refusa tous les commandemens et honneurs militaires que les Patriotes voulurent lui conférer, en n'imitant point l'indigne conduite de plusieurs autres grands seigneurs du païs. Quand la Belgique rentra sous la domination Autrichienne, le Duc d'Ursel tint toujours une conduite très passive, ce qui était assez simple de la part d'un homme qui avait à se plaindre de son souverain. Les Français conquissent, et perdirent depuis en quelques mois de tems, la Belgique sous Dumourier ; et je dois rendre la justice à mon beau-frère en disant que pendant cette première invasion, il me faisait passer secrettement à la Haye toutes les notions et renseignemens qu'il jugeait pouvoir être utiles aux progrès des armes Impériales. Son bon esprit lui faisait sentir dès lors ce qu'il doit mieux sentir encore à présent, que tout était préférable à la domination régicide. Lorsque l'Empereur vint faire son apparition théâtrale à Bruxelles, et qu'il eut juré solennellement cette jameuse 'joyeuse entrée,' suivie de si près d'une honteuse sortie, le Duc d'Ursel se dévoua de nouveau tout entier à la bonne cause, mais ses avis et ses conseils ne furent point écoutés de ceux qui voulaient perdre la plus belle province des états de mon maître. On alla jusqu'à rejeter l'offre prêt à être exécutée d'une levée de soixante mille hommes. Vous savez ce fait comme moi, en ignorant peut-être que lui seul pouvait l'organiser dans tous les vus. Quand on eut abandonné les Païs-Bas, le Duc d'Ursel se souvenant qu'il était père de famille, et croyant qu'il pouvait produire plus de bien, ou plutôt empêcher plus de mal, au dedans qu'au dehors, se détermina à rester. Peut-être lui en a-t-on fait un nouveau crime chez nous. Je l'ignore. Quoiqu'il en soit, en voyant le sort qui attend les malheureux qui ont tout abandonné pour la Cour, je ne puis pas le blâmer à un certain point.

"Il a trouvé le moyen de m'écrire une ou deux fois. Ses sentimens n'ont point varié, mais il lui a été impossible de se prononcer d'aucune manière. Il est suspect aux Français et à leur parti ; adoré et estimé des bons Belges. Sa femme est à Bréda depuis deux ans, et la tyrannie Française ne lui a pas permis depuis ce temps de rejoindre sa famille et son époux. Que cette circonstance doit encore plus l'aigrir contre les régicides.

"Je vous demande pardon de cette longue digression, mais elle était nécessaire pour que vous connaissiez comme moi l'homme que je vous recommande, et que je crois préférable à tous ; parce-que :—

"1. Il est parfaitement honnête jusqu'au scrupule.

"2. Parcequ'il est animé du désir du véritable avantage, bien entendu, de son païs.

"3. Parcequ'il y est estimé, aimé, et respecté.

"4. Parcequ'il est doué d'une tête très froide, qui ne lui fera pas prendre des chimères pour des réalités.

"5. Parcequ'il est gentilhomme ; ce qui joint à la probité dont je vous ai parlé, l'empêchera de se charger d'une besogne impossible, uniquement pour escamoter quelques centaines de livres à l'Angleterre, comme ont fait tant d'autres.

"6. Parceque par l'esprit, l'instruction, la sagesse, et les talens militaires qu'il a, il pourra réussir dans tout ce qu'il se chargera d'entreprendre.

“Après ces premières données il s'agit :—

“1. De trouver les moyens de lui faire passer nos désirs.

“2. De le déterminer à y répondre, et

“3. D'établir une correspondance.

“Le second point est peut-être le plus difficile. Je m'offre à me charger de le tenter. La connaissance que j'ai de son caractère me donne quelque espoir. Je saurai mettre son ambition, sa sensibilité, et son patriotisme en mouvement ; mais il faut que je puisse lui promettre que, par la suite, les Païs-Bas ne seront pas cédés à la France par l'Angleterre, et que quelque soit le souverain auquel ils échoiront en partage, on leur conservera leur ancienne constitution, et privilèges. Je sais que le Duc d'Ursel, comme tous ceux qui aiment vraiment leur païs, préfère la domination de l'Empereur à toute autre. Il va sans dire, qu'en cas de fraix, on l'indemnifierait de ceux qu'il serait obligé de faire. Si mon beau-frère voit une chance quelconque de remplir nos vues, je crois que je le porterai à s'en charger ; mais rien ne l'y fera consentir s'il croit l'exécution impossible. Dans l'une et l'autre supposition, je vous garantis sa discrétion comme la mienne propre, car il est bien important que le plus profond secret règne dans toute cette négociation, et nommément vis-à-vis de ma Cour, dès son premier principe. L'honnête homme qui vous écrit vous donne sa parole. Vous n'avez pas sous vos ordres de ministre Anglais plus fidèle ni plus zélé.

“La manière de faire parvenir nos propositions s'exécutera facilement, ce me semble, en confiant avec toutes les précautions que la prudence et l'usage de notre métier font inventer, une lettre à un de mes gens affidés, dont la femme est à Bruxelles, et qui ira la voir avec un passeport neutre. On n'y sait pas qu'il est à moi, en tout cas il dira que je l'ai renvoyé. La réponse à notre lettre et son envoi doivent être remis à la sagesse de notre correspondant.

“Quant à la nature des ouvertures par lesquelles on débiterait dans cette affaire importante, vous les déciderez, et me donnerez vos ordres. Voilà, je crois, les principaux éclaircissements que vous pouviez désirer. Vous verrez par la longueur de cette dépêche in quarto, dont je vous ai ennuyé, et par la manière dont elle est griffonnée, que je n'ai pas perdu un instant pour vous faire part de toutes mes idées ; vous retrouverez ici plus que jamais cet abandon tout-à-fait aveugle de confiance que l'amitié m'inspire toujours quand je traite avec vous. Si vous voulez discuter cet objet, ou prendre quelque résolution à cet égard, donnez-moi vos ordres. Je me rendrai quand vous voudrez, et où vous voudrez, soit à Dropmore ou ailleurs. Permettez-moi de vous faire observer que si on veut produire quelqu'effet, il faut saisir l'occasion aux cheveux. Fugit irreparabile tempus.”

The MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 12. Dublin.—“There having been much appearance of ferment this morning, I have only time to tell you that Tone cut his throat, but will live to be hanged. However Lord Cornwallis took so much time to consider whether he would hang him or not that, in the mean time, Curran moved the court of King's Bench for a habeas corpus, which was granted. The Provost-Marshal was directed to make no return, and a capias was moved and issued against him, so that our civil and military powers are distinctly pitted against each other. The present orders are to hang him to-morrow, but his Excellency is so versatile on this subject that it is still doubtful. The sentence was that his head should be fixed upon the most conspicuous part of Dublin, which his Excellency was pleased to disapprove! What folly is all this."

Postscript. "Cooke tells me that he warned Lord Cornwallis of this on Saturday!"

COUNT WORONZOW TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 12. Richmond.—"Par un moyen que nous avons avec le Comte Panin de nous écrire sans craindre aucune perturbation, il vient de m'envoyer la copie de deux rescrits qu'il a reçu de l'Empereur. Ils étaient en Russe. Je les ai fait traduire par mon fils en Français, afin que vous puissiez les lire. La traduction n'est pas élégante; elle est d'un enfant de 16 ans, mais elle est exacte. Vous me la rendrez quand nous nous verrons; et vous pourrez la communiquer à Monsieur Pitt.

"Vous ne m'avez pas renvoyé tous les papiers. Il y a quelques pièces qui manquent. C'est pourquoi je vous supplie de chercher parmi vos papiers, parmi lesquels les miens se sont égarés peut-être. Je vous fais mes compliments sur les affaires des Grisons. Cela va entraîner la guerre entre la France et l'Autriche, quelque peu d'envie qu'à la dernière de la recommencer."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 13. Dublin.—"The consummation of Lord Cornwallis's incapacity seems drawing on very fast. He has suspended Tone's execution till further orders; he has directed Major Sandys (the acting Provost-Marshal of Ireland) to put in for answer that his reason for not obeying the Habeas of yesterday was 'because Tone could not be moved with safety,' and he has directed all courts-martial now sitting to be suspended. I could not have believed all this if Lieutenant-General Craig had not shewn me his orders, and if Sandys had not shewn me his answer, prepared by Kemys the Crown Solicitor. The consequence of this is an order, moved by Curran, for bringing up Tone in the custody of the sheriff so soon as he can be moved, which order is only delayed under an assurance that it is not intended to carry the sentence of the court-martial into execution for some days, and a peremptory order made (upon motion) for committing Sandys. In this manner has Lord Cornwallis completely overthrown the whole system of military tribunals that were sanctioned by proclamation, to which the judges were parties, approved by Parliament; and the result of it will be, unless he again changes his system, a general gaol delivery of every suspected person (by habeas) not in the custody of the civil power. Such is the firmness and vigour of his conduct in the case of the man who glories to this moment (and so told the court) that he was the man to rouse three millions of his fellow subjects to a sense of their debasement from that bane to all their prosperity, their connexion with Great Britain ; that he had first suggested the doing this by French assistance ; and that he died happy in having been the instrument to obtain it. And to this glory Tone is too truly entitled, for you know that his assertions are most true. I enclose to you the account drawn up by order of Government for their newspaper, and much softened ; and yet you will see how strong the language of this man has been stated in their narrative.

“ Since I wrote this, I am assured that Lord Cornwallis will hang this man as soon as he is a little better, and that he means to stand his ground and to abide by the military courts. If so his conduct is tenfold more unintelligible.

“ God protect us from such absolute imbecility, the result of which, I will venture to foretell, will shock and loosen the little government now existing.”

Postscript. “ Thank God the Chancellor is landed, and I hope he will at least give this man a little common sense. Holt surrendered himself yesterday, and is this morning arrived at the Castle. I very soon expect that he will be allowed to go to England, in the same manner as Byrne and others who have been permitted to go there (where they cannot be touched) in their way to ‘some state in amity with the King.’ Aylmer and the Kildare rebels are to go to England next week. A pleasant transportation ! ”

COUNT WORONZOW TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 13. Richmond.—“ Vous verrez par la liste que j’inclus ici, les papiers que vous ne m’avez pas renvoyés parmi ceux que je vous ai communiqués. Je vous conjure de vous donner la peine de les chercher sur vos bureaux et tables ; et s’ils ne sont pas chez vous, ou chez Monsieur Pitt, en ville, ils doivent être chez vous à Dropmore, où je vous supplie de regarder la première fois que vous retournerez à la campagne.

“ Permettez-moi de vous réitérer ma prière pour la communication des nouvelles de Constantinople. Peut-être que M. Canning attend qu’il y ait quelque chose de bien intéressant pour me le communiquer, et qu’il suppose que les affaires ordinaires et courantes ne peuvent guère m’intéresser, et c’est pourquoi il ne me les envoie pas. Mais c’est précisément celles-là qui m’intéressent, et peuvent mener à comprendre mieux les autres, surtout quand on connaît la Turquie comme j’en ai eu l’occasion. J’ai beaucoup vécu avec les Turcs ; j’ai été six ans dans leurs pays ; j’ai été employé dans les négociations du Maréchal Roumentzow avec quatre grands vizirs consécutifs ; j’ai été employé dans la négociation de la paix de Cainardji ; en un mot j’ai beaucoup étudié les affaires de la Turquie, et je m’intéresse à tout ce qui s’y fait, particulièrement dans l’époque où nous sommes. Je vous supplie donc de lui ordonner de m'envoyer les copies des dépêches de M. Smith, excepté celles que vous croyez que je ne dois pas voir. Il n'a qu'à me les envoyer dans ma maison en ville, d'où on m'envoie ici tous les jours les paquets qui me sont adressés."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 14. London.—"Voici la lettre telle que je l'écrirai avec de l'encre de sympathie. Vous pouvez garder ce papier puisque j'en ai le double. Vous voyez que je n'ai pas perdu de tems. J'ai gardé presque toutes vos propres expressions; votre note m'a paru parfaite. Je serai à vos ordres avant midi. Je me charge de demander le passeport à M. King, pour un de mes gens qui retourne dans son pays. Le paquebot, un bâtiment, vous regarde. Je ferai, si vous le trouvez bon, les petites avances nécessaires du moment, dont je vous remettrai ensuite, ou à mesure, le compte à vous-même.

"C'est bien le cas du to be or not to be de Shakspear, et nous allons enfin, j'espère, take arms against a sea of troubles."

Enclosurc.

COUNT STARHEMBERG to the DUKE D'URSEL.

1798, November 14. London.—"Votre probité, vos talens, votre manière de penser, et votre patriotisme bien entendu, sont trop connus par les preuves que vous en avez donné si souvent, pour que l'on n'ait pas recours à vos lumières et à votre secours dès le premier moment qui semble fournir une lueur d'espérance de pouvoir arracher votre malheureux pays de l'état affreux d'oppression et d'infortune de toutes espèces sous lequel il gémit. Vous êtes la première et la seule personne à laquelle on se soit encore adressé; et vous étiez la seule qui méritât de jouer le rôle honorable qu'on vous destine, si les circonstances le permettent. Il fallait votre courage, votre prudence, et votre discrétion. On en est aussi convaincu que de votre dévouement à toute épreuve pour une si belle cause; et, en conséquence, l'Angleterre, animée du même attachement qu'elle a toujours conservé pour votre patrie, et n'ayant en vue que le but qu'elle se propose depuis plus de deux siècles, de protéger et de garantir la liberté, le commerce, et l'indépendance constitutionnelle de ses provinces qu'elle a un si grand intérêt de soutenir contre la France, désirerait que vous lui fassiez parvenir, par mon canal, des éclaircissemens en réponse aux demandes suivantes. Il est inutile de vous faire observer qu'il est urgent de savoir au plustôt à quoi s'en tenir sur cet objet.

"1. Quel est l'état actuel du pays, la force des insurgés, et généralement leurs moyens de résistance?

"2. Quelles sont les forces que le Directoire y a déjà, ou qu'il destine encore à y être employées?

"3. Y-a-t-il quelqu'espérance de pouvoir se flatter d'une résistance solide et permanente, si l'insurrection était appuyée par les secours de l'Angleterre ; surtout si la guerre se rallume sur le Continent ?

"4. Quels sont les secours dont on aurait le besoin le plus pressant, et quel moyen y aurait-il de les faire arriver ?

"5. Croyez-vous à la possibilité d'ouvrir, au moins momentanément, une communication avec le país, soit par Ostende ou par un autre endroit de la côte, car on enverrait immédiatement ici les armes et munitions déjà prêtes à être embarquées d'un moment à l'autre ?

"6. Voudriez-vous, par la suite, vous charger d'un rôle ostensible, et entreprendre de concerter avec l'Angleterre les moyens de délivrer votre patrie du joug qui l'opprime ; ou, si vous y voyiez des obstacles qu'on ne prévoit pas, voudriez-vous vous ouvrir confidentiellement sur l'état des parties et des dispositions, et sur les personnes qu'il serait à propos de mettre en avant, et de soutenir pour la réussite de cette utile et glorieuse entreprise ? Je ne vous dis rien ici qui ne soit sanctionnée par la volonté du ministre avec lequel je suis personnellement assez intimement lié pour m'être chargé de vous faire ces ouvertures en son nom. Ma conduite vous prouve mes sentimens pour la cause et pour vous.

"J'ai donné peu d'argent au porteur de la présente pour l'empêcher de paraître suspect ; faites-le vivre, et payez-lui son retour. Il va sans dire qu'on vous remboursera exactement les fraix de toute espèce que vous pourrez juger convenable de faire pour le grand but. On attendra votre réponse avec impatience. La poudre de noix de galle, que vous ferez dissoudre dans un gobelet d'eau, vous fournira une encre qui ne paraît qu'en passant sur le papier un pinceau trempé dans une dissolution de vitriol. Quand l'encre est trop forte, elle paraît un peu jaune sur le papier ; il ne s'agit que de l'affaiblir en y mêlant plus d'eau."

LORD GRENVILLE TO SIR CHARLES WHITWORTH.

Most Secret.

1798, November 16. Downing Street.—"The present state of affairs appears to afford a greater degree of probability than has yet appeared of a renewal of the war between Austria and France. And there is also much reason to hope that the dispositions are more favourable than they have hitherto been at Berlin to the idea of co-operating with the other Powers engaged in this important contest.

"It appears, however, by recent information from that quarter, that the Prussian Government not only hesitates to take its part till Austria shall be actually engaged in the war, but that it is also desirous of now establishing by previous concert the ultimate objects to which the efforts of the Allied Powers are to be directed.

"This wish is the natural effect of the prevailing jealousy between Austria and Prussia ; and difficult as the establishment of such a concert must appear, no other mode could perhaps be so effectual for preventing a repetition of the circumstances which produced the dissolution of the last confederacy against France.

"But with such dispositions at Berlin and Vienna, they will have little confidence in the execution of any engagements which they may contract with each other on this subject; and the first appearance of success will open a wide field for new distrust and jealousy.

"The intervention of Russia affords the only remedy for this evil. There is no doubt that the influence of Russia at those Courts is sufficient both to insure their punctual execution of those engagements, and to create that confidence between them in this respect which is necessary to success. So much has already been done by Russia for the establishment of a concert between these Powers, and the sentiments of the Emperor of Russia appear to be so much in unison with those of His Majesty respecting the present situation of affairs in Europe, that His Majesty flatters himself with finding in his ally every disposition that can tend to facilitate the completion of this important work.

"It is therefore His Majesty's pleasure that you should express to the Minister of His Imperial Majesty, His Majesty's opinion that no time should be lost in bringing forward at Vienna and Berlin a distinct proposal in the Emperor's name for a plan of general cooperation against France; and that this proposal will come with infinitely more weight and effect, if it be brought forward as one complete and digested system, proposed by H.I.M. to his allies, than if the same proposals were to be gradually worked out from the tardy and reluctant explanations of Austria and Prussia.

"His Majesty would recommend that the Russian Ministers at Berlin and Vienna should be instructed to propose the immediate conclusion of a treaty between the four great powers: the basis of which should be the employment of their united efforts to reduce France within her ancient limits; (an object of evident and pressing interest to the future tranquillity and independence of Europe) and to which every other Power should afterwards be invited to accede.

"On this principle would easily be grounded such engagements as might satisfy the mutual jealousy of Austria and Prussia by limiting and defining the separate advantages which they should respectively acquire from the success of measures, the great and general advantage of which would be the deliverance of Europe from that state of disquietude and danger in which it must ever remain, if France should at a peace retain her conquests.

"The views of Austria appear now to be principally directed towards Italy, where her success would certainly afford least ground of jealousy to Prussia. No objection could reasonably be made at Berlin to the effect of any measures which should lead to the recovery of all the former dominions of Austria in Lombardy; provided it were distinctly understood that no further encroachment should be made on the possessions of the other Powers of Italy. And the reconquest of the Milanese, added to the acquisitions already made by Austria in Italy would, it is conceived, furnish a sufficient indemnity to that Power for those exertions which indeed her own safety indispensably requires her to make both on the side of Italy and Swisserland. It might therefore on this ground, and in conformity to the principles of the negotiation already established between Austria and Prussia, be expressly stipulated that no indemnity should be sought by Austria in Germany.

"The disposition of the King of Prussia to act eventually on the side of Holland for the restoration of the House of Orange, and for the re-establishment of a solid and efficient government in that country have been intimated to His Majesty; and nothing could more effectually tend to consolidate the tranquillity of Europe, than the success of measures to be taken for this purpose, in which H.M. would willingly co-operate in so far as could in any manner depend on him. It is uncertain whether the Court of Berlin has in view any, and what, objects of separate advantage in addition to that general benefit which would result from the restoration of the tranquillity and security of Europe. It seems therefore very important that the King of Prussia should, on the present occasion, be invited to explain himself confidentially and fully on this head, and to define and limit by precise stipulation the nature and extent of any such advantages, if any such are in his contemplation. It being sufficiently evident that there are many objects of this description which might, in a great variety of modes, be rendered consistent with the general principle of this plan, and with those which the Emperor of Russia has already recommended to the adoption of his allies in the negotiation above-mentioned.

"From the establishment of the general basis of treaty already laid down, the independence of Swisserland and Holland will necessarily follow; as well as the restoring to the German Empire those parts which were to be ceded to France by the negotiation of Rastadt, and the compelling the French to renounce the possession of Savoy and the Netherlands.

"But as these last Provinces cannot probably under all the circumstances which have occurred be replaced under the dominion of Austria, and as it may well be doubted whether these acquisitions would be an object of ambition to either of the two great German Powers, it will remain to be considered what plan will be most effectual to provide for the defence of this highly important barrier against the future encroachment of France. None has here occurred which is thought equally effectual and practicable as the uniting those Provinces to the Dutch Republic under the administration of a Stadholder, and with such provisions as may be best adapted to the maintenance of their respective civil and religious constitutions. But on this head His Majesty would willingly receive the suggestions of his ally, directed as he is confident they would be to the same object to which His Majesty looks, that of securing those Provinces as far as possible from again falling a prey to the restless ambition of France; a point the accomplishment of which must always be regarded by His Majesty as being at least equally important with any other object in the whole range of the extensive interests which would be to be adjusted in such a negotiation.

"If it should be found practicable on discussion between the four Great Powers to agree on these leading and principal features of a future arrangement, the smaller objects which may be connected with them would, it is presumed, be easily adjusted, and His Majesty would propose that the whole plan should be guaranteed by all the four Powers to each other, and that they should enter into the most solemn engagements not to lay down their arms till it shall have been accomplished, and to exclude from the benefit of it any one amongst themselves who should in any respect deviate from the engagements to be thus taken both as to the objects themselves, and as to the means to be employed for their attainment.

"His Majesty has been induced by his entire reliance on the sentiments and principles of the Emperor of Russia to enable you to open yourself thus fully and confidentially on all the different points which respect the final settlement of Europe. But important as these details are, it is still more so that some adjustment should be made by the powerful intervention of the Emperor of Russia, who can alone quiet the jealousies of Austria and Prussia, and by his guarantee give to those Powers a confidence in the mutual execution of their engagements to each other. You will therefore labour to the utmost to induce the Russian Government to adopt, if not this precise plan, at least some definite plan grounded as much as possible on similar principles, and to authorize M. de Panin (or such other Minister as may be judged proper for the purpose if, contrary to His Majesty's wishes, any different choice should appear necessary) to enter in His Imperial Majesty's name into the necessary stipulations of guaranty, and of perseverance in the war till the objects in view shall have been accomplished.

"In the hope of your succeeding in these representations it is His Majesty's intention to send a minister to the Continent (and in the first instance to Berlin) amply instructed and empowered to treat and conclude on every point that may have reference to this important and extensive negotiation. This appointment will be announced to you as soon as it is regularly made, and it is probable that the person in question shall arrive at Berlin some time before any instructions from Petersburg, given in consequence of this dispatch, can reach that Court." Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to the EARL OF ELGIN.

Private.

1798, November 17. Cleveland Row.—"I have hitherto delayed answering your letter from a desire to turn the subject fully over in my own mind, and to consider it as it regards both the public interests and your own situation, to which you do me only justice in believing that I shall not be inattentive on such an occasion. The more I have reflected on it the more satisfied I feel that the idea is in every point of view eligible, and that the appointment of a person of your rank and situation to that embassy may be productive of material public benefit in a great variety of points. Under this impression I have taken the liberty to submit the idea to the King's consideration, and I have the satisfaction to find that His Majesty entirely approves of it. With your permission therefore I will immediately set about making the necessary arrangements; but before I speak to the Turkey company about it, which is one of the first things to be done, I should be glad to hear from you respecting the state of your health, and at what time you think you could without danger undertake such a voyage." Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to HENRY DUNDAS.

1798, November 17. Cleveland Row.—“I received your letter from Scotland respecting the permission to Denmark to export saltpetre directly from our Indian possessions. As I was then daily receiving similar applications from America and Portugal, I did not communicate to the Danish Minister your opinion that the permission might be granted, but have hitherto given him dilatory answers only.

“An idea has occurred to me that it might be better to let these powers specify their demand, and then that the East India Company might contract to deliver them that quantity here, within as short a time as they could themselves get it from India.

“You will best know whether this idea is worth any thing, or whether it is better to let them all have the permission to export t themselves from Bengal.”

THE EARL OF MORNINGTON to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 18. Fort William.—“I have received your kind letters of the 9th January, 11th April, 3rd May, 1st June, and 16th June, and also some letters of recommendation of different persons. I have written two or three short notes to you overland, and now, such is the continual pressure of my business here, that I fear I shall not have time to enter into one-tenth part of the topics which I should wish to talk over with you. In the first place let me express to you how strongly I feel your kindness to my family, of which I have not only found many proofs in all your letters, but have received particular accounts from Lady Mornington. I need not say that this is a new tie of friendship and affection between us, but the old are so numerous as not to require this addition. I was dreadfully shocked at the malicious and exaggerated account of the riot at Barbadoes, and most happy to hear that your mind and Lady Grenville's had been set at ease on that subject. I had heard from King of the state of your anxiety at the worst moment, and I resolved not to allude to it in any of my letters to you until I learnt the truth of the story from yourself.

“I return you many thanks for your zeal and diligence in the affair of the Chief Remembrancer's patent; I concur with your opinion entirely on every part of that question, and am very much pleased with the manner in which the whole business was conducted. I trust entirely to you and to Pitt to put Richard's life into the reversion patent whenever circumstances may favour such a measure, or if any accident should happen to me.

"You will see that a voluntary contribution has taken place here; the sum from all India will be about 300,000*l.*, most of the subscriptions are annual during the war. You must recollect that now there exist few overgrown fortunes in India; the only capital among the civil and military servants is the annual saving of income, and the accumulation of that saving. The general rule adopted in the Company's service was to subscribe one month's salary annually during the war; I exceeded the rule by a few hundred pounds, in order to make up a round sum of 3,000*l.*, annual subscription. The general spirit of loyalty and zealous attachment to every right principle is very strong here; and in calling out the militia I have found great alacrity in the offers of personal service. I have been a colonel before, and am become one again; but, as you may believe, I am obliged to leave the details of the regiment to the lieutenant colonel commandant.

"I am most happy to find that all your blue devils are vanished, and that you are at length satisfied with the spirit and energy of England.

"I should be glad to have two sets of your Homer on large paper; but do not send them here. I should also wish for two sets of the small paper; one of which I should be glad to have sent out to me. The large paper will be a beautiful book; and this climate, from its various plagues of damp, heat, and insects, is fatal to books.

"My health has been much better on the whole since I have been here than I ever remember it to have been for so long a period in Europe; this I attribute to the great regularity of my life, and to the continual exertion of my mind, relieved by the great variety of the business of this vast empire. There is also something to be attributed to the constant sense of good intentions, accompanied by a very large powers of putting them into execution. To these considerations I think I may add the complete success of whatever I have attempted, and the prospect of the approbation and applause of every man at home who understands the interests of India, and is attached to those of Great Britain. Lastly, although my household is magnificent, and my table open to every respectable person in the settlement, and to all new comers, I find my savings far greater than I expected. Under these circumstances I think it not impossible that your dream of Clifden may be realized; it so happens that it is a favorite castle in the air of my own. You will observe that our joint castle of governing the world is no longer a baseless fabric; and when you have read the papers annexed to this, you will perhaps not think me a sleeping partner of your throne. But all this vision will vanish, unless you send Lady Mornington out to me by the next ships. There is now no objection to her appearance, as my authority and character are perfectly established ; and I believe you know enough of her character to be satisfied that no part of her conduct will ever be injurious to me. Her society here is absolutely necessary to my comfort ; and without her, I fear, I shall not have fortitude to remain here long enough to accomplish all my grand Financial, Political, Military, Naval, Commercial, Architectural, Judicial, Policial Reforms, and to make up as large a Treasure as Aboulcasem of Basras (Bassora's ?). All this might be effected within five or six years from the day of my embarkation at Cowes. But I leave you to judge of the necessity of her society while I give you some idea of my private life. I rise early, and go out before breakfast, which is always over between eight and nine. From that hour until four (in the hot weather) I remain at work, unless I go to council, or to church on Sundays ; at five I dine, and drive out in the evening. At present, I drive out at five, and dine a little after six. No constitution here can bear the sun in the middle of the day at any season of the year, nor the labour of business in an evening. After dinner therefore nobody attempts to write or read, and, in general, it is thought necessary to avoid even meetings on subjects of business at that time ; for, in this climate, good or ill health depends upon a minute attention to circumstances apparently the most trivial. Thus in the evening I have no alternative but the society of my subjects, or solitude. The former is so vulgar, ignorant, rude, familiar, and stupid as to be disgusting and intolerable ; especially the ladies, not one of whom, by the bye, is even decently well-looking. The greatest inconvenience, however, arises from the ill-bred familiarity of the general manners ; this evil is chiefly to be attributed to the folly of having placed Sir John Shore in the government general. His low birth, vulgar manners, and Eastern habits, as well as his education in the Company's service, his natural shyness and awkwardness, added to indolence, timidity, and bad health, contributed to relax every spring of this government from one extremity of the empire to the other ; and at the seat of the government established a systematical degradation of the person, dignity, and authority of the Governor General. This is the true character of the last government ; never did there exist in India one more inefficient in its control over the subordinate presidencies, more careless or timid with respect to all our foreign relations, more incorrect and even partial with respect to the distribution of patronage, nor (to complete the picture) one so little feared or respected by any branch of the civil or military service, or by any description of natives or Europeans residing at the very seat of the supreme power. All this is quite for your private information. The effect of this state of things on my conduct has been to compel me to intrench myself within forms and ceremonies, to introduce much state into the whole appearance of my establishments and household, to expel all approaches to familiarity, and to exercise my authority with a degree of vigour and strictness nearly amounting to severity. At the same time I endeavour, as much as it is compatible with the duties imposed on me by the remissness of Sir John Shore, to render my table pleasant to those whom I admit to it, and to be easy of access to everybody. I am resolved to encounter the task of effecting a thorough reform in private manners here; without which the time is not distant when the Europeans settled at Calcutta will control the government, if they do not overturn it. My temper and character are now perfectly understood; and while I remain, no man will venture hiscere vocem who has not made his mind up to grapple instantly with the whole force of government. But it required some unpleasant efforts to place matters on this footing; and you must perceive that I am forced to fly to solitude for a large portion of the twenty-four hours, lest I should weaken my means of discharging my public duty.

"Your sally is very good, particularly the parody of Πρὶς Στράζου, but the bishops must have been in a very high state of twadley not to have smoked you. I am sick of Europe, excepting England; there, I have just now told Pitt, you have at length taken your station on an impregnable position, if any can be so in these times—Huc tandem concede, hæc ara tuebitur, omnes aut moriére simul.

"With respect to Asia I refer you to the annexed papers, which however (as I know Dundas to be a little jealous of interference in Indian politics) you will not say you have received from me; but you will ask him to state his opinion on my conduct, and to furnish you with the means of judging it. I will avow honestly to you (and you know how fastidious I have always been with respect to my own public exertions) my conscientious belief that to my single effort is to be attributed the salvation of your Indian empire from the greatest danger which has ever threatened it. Read the papers according to their numbers, and not to their dates. Your indignation will be raised against my old friend* Lord Hobart's petty faction among the commis and subordinate military officers at Fort St. George. But I entreat you to urge Pitt and Dundas to fulminate instantly against that faction, and to call on me to dart the bolts which I have shaken, but delayed to strike; without this, my authority is gone; and although I have not directly said so to Dundas (for obvious reasons) I tell you that, if this be not done, I will instantly put the government into Clarke's hands, according to my powers, and return home.

"You will enjoy my gentle conquest of an army of fourteen thousand men under the command of French officers in the service of the Nizam. My dispatches do not mention a curious fact, that the standard of this army was the Tricolor Flag; the only one of that description erected on the continent of India. This standard has fallen into my hands; and I shall send it home as the best comment upon the whole policy of making an effort to crush the French influence in India.

---

* Dundas will show you my private and secret correspondence, which will explain this passage.

"Nelson's glorious victory, the accounts of the state of Buonaparte's army, and the vigilance of our squadron on the coast of Malabar and at the mouth of the Red Sea (where I hope Blanket is by this time arrived) will probably preclude the French from aiding Tippoo for this season. If they should come, be it remembered that I called out the army in the Carnatic and on the coast of Malabar on the 20th of June; that, on the 8th of July, I ordered measures to be taken for the subversion of the French party at Hyderabad; and that on the 22nd of October I had completely annihilated that party, the existence of which would have proved the most powerful obstacle to a successful war with Mysore, and the source of most effectual assistance and co-operation to France. I admire beyond all Greek, Roman, British, or any fame, the provident, bold, and (as it deserved) gloriously prosperous measure of reinforcing Lord St. Vincent in the face of a menaced invasion and of an existing rebellion at home. Never was a public measure taken with more wisdom or spirit. I cannot doubt that this success must awaken Europe, unless she be for ever fallen, but I trust it must also prove a substantial reduction of the power, resources, and audacity of the enemy.

"I have told Dundas that I trust those who were the advisers of this measure will not condemn me for having detached a force from the Carnatic (in the face of Tippoo's menaces and of the clamours of the Hobartins) for the purpose of crushing the French party in India before it could be reinforced from France.

"I was not surprised at the Irish rebellion; you have taken the best preliminary step to the restoration of order in sending Lord Cornwallis, but I hope you will not suffer the difficulties of an Union to delay or prevent that necessary measure. They are great, but they never appeared to me insuperable; you must found the Union on the most comprehensive basis so as to leave no room for future claims of justice, and, with this view, you must not shut your eyes to the question of the Roman Catholic pretensions. I am most happy to hear of the gallant and honorable conduct of Lord Buckingham in offering his services in Ireland. There is a story of Lord Abercorn which forms a striking contrast with your brother's conduct.

"The account of Pitt's duel made me tremble. I am happy the effect of it was such as you describe; his own complete heroism I never doubted; but I felt it disgraced in being opposed to so base-born an antagonist. I must tell you, because Pitt's modesty I suppose will not permit him to mention it, the bon mot of the Advocate-General of Bengal on the subject. He has lodged all his fortune in the English three per cent. consols. He said: 'I do not understand by what right Mr. Pitt has suffered Mr. Tierney to fire two shots at my three per cent. consols.' This bon mot contains all that can be said of this perilous duel; I hope this will be the last shot at the consols.

"I delight in the Anti Jacobin; the American negociation, and Stone's letters; your preface is excellent.

"I assure you I have never yet mounted an elephant, although I must confess that I believe the circumstance is to be attributed merely to the accident of my not having been at liberty to visit the upper provinces. Here they are not much used, as they frighten horses and ladies. At Fort George the Nabob of Arcot visited me with twenty elephants adorned with splendid castles, and a number of palankins of all shapes from a snake to a peacock.

“My next letters shall contain some account of the appearance of the country, ceremonies, et cetera. I trust you will continue to favor me with your friendly letters (Tippoo’s constant conclusion); write anything and everything; it is a comfort not to be conceived by any person who has never been so far removed from heaven and heaven’s light, to receive a good dispatch from England.

“I send you by Mr. Stokes, the bearer of this letter, a collection of plants and seeds from our Botanical Garden; you shall have a better collection soon. If Lady Grenville wants anything from Cabul to Assam, let her command her slave. I desire to recommend Mr. Stokes very particularly.

“There remain two or three points on which I am anxious to say a few words.

“If Lady Mornington should come out to me, it would be very desirable that the Queen should be prevailed on to receive her at Court before her departure. I know you will give any assistance you can to carry this point. I have not mentioned as particularly as I ought to have done my sense of your kindness in bringing Richard to Dropmore, and in examining his progress; pray work him well. I need not recommend my boys to your protection, in the event of Lady Mornington’s leaving them.

“If I have not formed an unjust or extravagant estimate of the service which I have rendered here, it will probably occur to you in England to confer some mark of honour upon me which may tend to strengthen my hands, and to raise my authority and consideration as well among the inhabitants of the Company’s provinces and with the subordinate governments as with the native princes and powers. Do not suppose me to be a second Abercorn when I tell you that, on principles of public policy, you ought to do something of this kind (if you approve my service); and that no honor which the King can give is too high for this office, of which the magnitude and splendor cannot be either overrated or too much extended. The Garter was given to Lord Cornwallis before he had done anything here; and an arrangement was made by which it was given to him when no vacancy existed. ‘Nos, ut nondum iidem,’ yet may pretend to have struck a blow which has remedied in a great measure the main error of the treaty of Seringapatam, and enabled us to reduce the power of Tippoo within due bounds. The Garter sent to me in India as the reward of my late treaty and of my orders for assembling the army in the face of all counteraction, would give a degree of vigour to my power which I should not abuse; means might be taken (even if there should be no vacancy), of creating one, by making foreign princes supernumerary knights; or it might at once be laid down as a rule, that graat merit in the graat administration of this graat Empire might be a case for the extension of the number of knights; for I have always understood that this honor is considered as the peculiar reward of statesmanly service. This is the only honor which I should feel with real pride. But if this be not done, I really think my rank in the peerage ought to be raised. Perhaps it might then be practicable and desirable to obtain the remainder for Richard in default of legitimate male issue, and it might also be proper to give my daughters their rank as if legitimate, as was done in the case of Lady Mary Churchill. All this is stated sub modo, supposing you to agree in my estimate of my services. I have said nothing to Dundas or Pitt on this subject; you will talk to them and to the Speaker upon it, if you please, and if you find that my conduct has made the impression which I expect. If the Garter were to be sent to me, I dare say Lord Clive would very readily accept the pinchbeck. This gives me occasion to say that he is a worthy, zealous, obedient, and gentlemanlike man, of excellent temper; but neither of talents, knowledge, habits of business, or firmness of spirit equal to his present situation. How the devil did he get there? Did he go thither merely in the hope of supplanting me? Was he encouraged in that hope? or ideo ne tantum renerit ut exiret? While I am talking to you of myself, I wish to apprise you that if anything should ever happen to Dundas to remove him from the Presidency of the Board of Control, I look to that situation in Cabinet as my meta viarum. If you can find anybody more likely to satisfy you in it, put him there; let Pitt know this idea of mine at a proper time. The President of the Board of Control ought to have no other business but India. Dundas knows and feels this, and the public will soon feel it also, if they have not done so already.

“God bless you. It is a great delight to me to perceive in all your letters and conduct since my absence that all this dreadful space of half the convex world which obtrudes between us has not impaired your regard.”

Postscript. “I rely on you to state my conduct to our royal master with every degree of advantage.

“I suppose Lady Grenville would not like a chicken rhinoceros! I have sent one home not more than a year old; it was a nuzzen from the Nabob of Dacca. Rhinoceroses do not come within the law.”

Enclosure:—

Extract of a general letter from the Right Honourable the Governor General to the Honourable the Court of Directors.

1798, November 21. Fort William.—“While I was engaged in considering the means of improving the internal order and management of your finances, I received intelligence which led me to apprehend the approach of a war with Tippoo Sultan aided by a French force. Your Secret Committee is in possession of this intelligence, of which the result on my mind was a firm conviction that the safety of your possessions in the peninsula of India demanded that your armies should be placed in an active and early state of preparation for war. Accordingly, having apprized the governor of Fort St. George as early as the 8th of June of my apprehensions of the designs of the enemy, and having directed his attention to the probability of our being involved in hostilities, on the 26th of June I issued my final orders to the governments of Fort St. George and Bombay for calling your armies into the field on the coasts of Coromandel and Malabar. These orders have been executed, and I trust that the subsequent disclosure of the projects entertained by France against the British empire in India, and the adventurous and daring spirit with which those projects have been prosecuted, will sufficiently justify to your Honorable Court the measures of precaution which I deemed it my duty to adopt for the defence of your territories; although the immediate effect of those measures has necessarily occasioned a large increase of your expenses, a diminution of your commercial investment, and a suspension of the improvements which I had hoped to have accomplished in the state of your pecuniary affairs.

"It would have been a most improvident and mistaken economy to have hazarded the permanent safety of the British empire in India, and to have abandoned the sources of your commercial prosperity without defence to the attack of the enemy, for the purpose of preserving a specious and delusive appearance of security in a conjuncture of real danger.

"I am persuaded that the wisdom and justice of your Honorable Court will readily approve the policy of sacrificing a degree of temporary advantage to the important object of providing an effectual protection for the foundations of your trade and revenue, and for the lasting tranquillity of your possessions in India.

"Under the expectation of an approaching war with Tippoo Sultan aided by the French, the state of our alliances with the country powers became an anxious object of my consideration.

"I have submitted a full detail of my opinions and proceedings upon this subject to your Secret Committee; but it is my duty in this place to request the attention of your Honorable Court to the condition in which I found our alliance with his highness the Nizam, and to the happy improvement which circumstances have enabled me to effect in the nature of our connection with that prince.

"The corps commanded by French officers in the service of the Nizam which, during the last war with Mysore, amounted to no more than 1,500 men, and was at that period of time so defective in point of discipline as to be rather an object of contempt than of jealousy to your governments in India, had gradually augmented its numbers and improved its discipline under the command of the late Monsieur Raymond, until at the period of my arrival in India it had nearly reached the number of 14,000 men, and had attained a degree of discipline superior in every respect to that of any native infantry in India, excepting the sepoys entertained in your service.

"The corps formed the largest and most efficient branch of the military establishment of his Highness, and the French officers had acquired a considerable ascendancy in his dominions, and had manifested on several occasions the symptoms of a disposition so arrogant, overbearing, and adventurous as to excite alarm in the minds of his Highness and of his ministers. Although his Highness had entered into no engagement or obligation which in any degree bound him to retain this party in his service, and although their sudden dismissal would at any moment have been warranted by every principle of justice, and their continuance at Hyderabad threatened the independence if not the existence of his Highness's throne, yet the Nizam and his ministers confessed their inability to check the growth of a power of which they acknowledged the dangerous influence, and dreaded the destructive effect.

"The principles of the French officers commanding this army were avowedly the same with those of the persons who for some time past have exercised the powers of government in France, and their enmity to the British interests was declared on all occasions. While this army, commanded by Frenchmen of such principles and views, and of such uncontrolled power, remained in the service of the Nizam, his Highness's alliance must have proved a source rather of danger than advantage to the Company in the event of a war with Tippoo Sultan; and that danger would have been greatly aggravated by any coöperation which might have been afforded to Tippoo from France. Various other considerations will occur to the wisdom and experience of your Honorable Court to prove the direct and collateral effects which the existence of a numerous armed French party in the centre of the Deccan must have produced, whether in time of war or of peace, upon the whole frame of your political interests in India. Under these circumstances the expulsion of the French party from the Court of Hyderabad appeared to me to be a necessary part of that system of precaution and defence by which I hoped to be enabled either to encounter the pressure of war or to secure the advantages of peace.

"With these views, on the 6th of July I instructed the Acting Resident at Hyderabad to open a negotiation with his Highness the Nizam, proposing an addition to the British detachment serving at Hyderabad, and stipulating for the dismissal of the corps commanded by French officers in his Highness's service.

"A new subsidiary treaty founded on this basis, and embracing other collateral arrangements (particularly such conditions as appeared necessary for the removal of all causes of jealousy, and for the restoration of union and concord between our two allies the Pishwah and the Nizam) was signed by his Highness at Hyderabad on the 1st of September, and ratified by me in council on the 18th of the same month.

"By this treaty an increase is made in the British subsidiary force serving with his Highness of 4,400 men, and an increase in the annual subsidy paid by his Highness of about nineteen lacs of rupees; the former subsidy having been 53,713 Arcot rupees per mensem, and the subsidy under the new treaty being 201,425 Arcot rupees per mensem, or 2,417,100 Arcot rupees per annum.

"The substance of this treaty was communicated to the Pishwah both previously and subsequently to its conclusion, and at both periods he expressed his entire approbation of the nature and tendency of the new engagements, as well in their operation upon the interests of the Mahrattah empire as upon those of the Nizam.

"On the 13th of July I ordered the government of Fort St. George to assemble such a force in the Guntoor circar as might enable me to fulfill the subsidiary engagements of the Company under the new treaty at the earliest possible period subsequent to its conclusion. This measure was executed with the utmost degree of promptitude and alacrity by Lieutenant-General Harris (at that time uniting in his person the offices of Governor of Fort St. George and Commander in Chief on the coast of Coromandel) to whose zeal, public spirit, and prompt obedience on all occasions wherein I have entrusted him with the execution of my orders, I am happy to be able to bear this public testimony.

"The British detachment under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts reached Hyderabad on the 10th October, and on the 22nd of October, under the orders of his Highness the Nizam, and with the coöperation of a body of his cavalry, surrounded the camp of the French army, disarmed all the sepoys, and secured the persons of all the French officers then in the camp. This operation was happily effected without bloodshed and without contest. A mutiny having broken out in the French camp on the preceding day, and the sepoys having imprisoned their officers, the Resident at Hyderabad and Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts, with the consent of the Nizam, judiciously availed themselves of this favorable opportunity to execute this important measure without difficulty or danger.

"The amount of the French force disarmed on this occasion was about 11,000 men, from which circumstance your Honourable Court will observe that a part of the corps was absent on detachment. Measures have been taken for the arrest of those who commanded the detached force. The French officers, by my particular orders, were treated with every practicable degree of attention and humanity. At the period of their arrest by our troops their persons were in confinement and their lives in danger from the mutiny prevailing in their camp; and the greatest difficulty which Colonel Roberts encountered was that of rescuing the imprisoned officers from the violence of their own sepoys. Particular care was taken to save the property of the officers for their use, as well as to obtain from them such arrears of pay and allowances as were due to them from his Highness. Captain Kirkpatrick informs me that he has been completely successful in effecting both these desirable objects. The French officers are now on their passage to this Presidency on board the Bombay frigate which I had previously stationed at Masulipatam for their accommodation.

"On their arrival at Calcutta it is my intention to receive them with the consideration due to their respective ranks, and to allow them every indulgence compatible with the security of their persons. I propose to send them to Europe by the earliest opportunity, using the precaution of dispersing them in different ships.

"On their arrival in England I have engaged that they shall not be treated as prisoners of war, but shall be immediately transported to France, without suffering any detention for an exchange of prisoners.

"The treaty under which this measure was executed has been already forwarded overland to your Secret Committee, and it now forms a number of the secret dispatch by the Eurydice.

"The effect of the measure will I trust be highly favourable to your political interests in the peninsula of India. The British subsidiary force now stationed in the dominions of his Highness the Nizam, while it must tend to cement the connexion between the Company and that prince, and to render him a more useful and efficient ally in the event of war, will operate at all times as an effectual protection to your possessions in the northern circars; and the total subversion of the French influence in the Deccan, under all the circumstances of the present moment, is an event from which I expect to derive not only additional security for your territories, but for the general tranquillity of India.

"Among your servants who have been concerned in the execution of my orders on this occasion I have already recommended Lieutenant-General Harris to your favourable notice. To his name it is my duty to add those of Captain Kirkpatrick and of Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts. I found the former in the situation of acting Resident at Hyderabad, and to his zeal, address, discretion, and firmness I attribute the early success of the negotiation intrusted to his management.

"Upon the resignation of Colonel Kirkpatrick I took occasion to manifest my sense of Captain Kirkpatrick's merits by appointing him Resident at the court of the Nizam.

"To the ability and temper of Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts, acting under the judicious instructions of the Resident, I attribute the complete and satisfactory execution of the articles of the treaty relating to the dismissal of the French army; and his conciliatory and humane conduct towards the officers deserves the highest commendation.

"The rumours which have prevailed of the intended approach of Zeman Shah to the frontier of Hindostan, although of a vague and contradictory nature, appeared to me not wholly undeserving of attention; and I have the satisfaction to inform you that every possible precaution has been taken for the effectual defence of the frontier of Oude.

"I am happy to be able to inform you that although I found the subsidy of the Nabob Vizier considerably in arrears, I have succeeded in persuading his Excellency to discharge a large part of it ; and in justice to his Excellency I am bound to declare that I have found him sincerely disposed to fulfil his engagements under the treaty concluded by Lord Teignmouth, and to manifest on every occasion a cordial attachment to the interests of the Company. The situation of affairs on the coast of Coromandel, and the necessity of providing against the possible event of a war with Tippoo Sultan, have hitherto prevented me from visiting the upper provinces. But I have not been unmindful of the affairs of Oude, and I trust that I shall soon be able to turn my undivided attention to the improvement of the civil and military establishments of the Nabob Vizier.

“ Although I have deemed it my duty to call your armies into the field in every part of India, my views and expectations are all directed to the preservation of peace, which, in the present crisis, cannot otherwise be secured than by a state of forward preparation for war. In the meanwhile you may rely on my unremitting efforts to confine your expenses within the most narrow limits, and to raise your commercial investment to the highest scale compatible with the indispensable necessity of providing for the security of your possessions.” Copy.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 21. Dublin.—“ Lord Shannon will support the union cordially, and there does not seem a doubt but that Parliament will approve it, provided there could be the means found of repairing the mischief occasioned by this suspension of the martial law, which has done away all confidence of every sort. I have laboured most indefatigably, by every means short of direct communication, to make Lord Cornwallis feel the necessity of resuming his military powers ; but he is determined to view the whole as a legal question, and to refer it as such to his lawyers, who of course can give him but one answer. I still however do not despair through Cooke and Lord Castlereagh (who agree with me) to urge him to resume it as a state question, and to apply for an indemnity to satisfy his legal doubts ; but, if we cannot prevail, I cannot entertain the idea of continuing in Ireland upon duties which we cannot perform ; and I should deceive you much if I gave you any very sanguine hopes of being able to keep my regiment here, even if I wished it.

“ I am made very happy by Tom’s mission, for I have every confidence in his savoir, and the temptation you hold out to him of signing the ruin of French democracy is the proudest bait you could offer to him.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 23. Dublin.—“ I have had a very long visit from Lord Castlereagh upon the subject of the British militia, which ended in his requesting me (from the Lord Lieutenant) not to do anything upon the subject of endeavouring to induce my men to re-engage to serve.

"You will see however that I have, out of all this, drawn from Lord Cornwallis an authorized disavowal of all his imbecility, and a direct assurance of his support of us, in our quality of military versus the civil courts. You will already have heard that he has sent orders to Castlebar to refuse obedience to citizen's Moore's habeas corpus, and to make a special return upon it, in which measure I may say to you that I have much merit."

"We must bring our Catholics to some explicit understanding. It will be asked of you whether your legate Erskine is to be trusted as an instrument in leading that silly and headstrong flock to a proper understanding with Government. They are certainly very well disposed, and if we could get a system for Protestant church ascendancy, including tithe and other regulations, and for Catholic and Presbyterian subordination connected with Government, that which has convulsed Ireland for centuries might be teres atque rotundus."

"Lord Shannon, Lord Ely, both for. So are all the chief Judges cum multis aliis, such as Lord Abercorn, Downshire, Northland, Longueville, Altamont, O'Neil, and Ormonde. Conolly very eager for it. G. Ponsonby is come over to lead the bar against it. The South are to a man for it."

Postscript. "For God's sake, no Commissioners nor Privy Council; but send the whole by King's message to the two Parliaments with all the documents, for you must not keep the public mind too long upon it."

LE DUC DE HARCOURT TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 25. London.—"La dernière fois que j'ai eu l'honneur de voir Votre Excellence, elle a désiré que je luy fasse parvenir L'état Général des Forces de la République. Je le joins ici, l'ayant reçu hier, et j'ai lieu de croire qu'il est exact. Je suis fâché que l'on n'y ait pas ajouté particulièrement l'état de l'armée de Buonaparte. Mais comme elle diminue tous les jours, il est vraisemblable que l'on ignore l'effectif auquel elle est reduite actuellement. Je mettrai toujours le même empressement à remplir les comissions que vous me donnerez, et à vous informer de tout ce que je croirai utile ou agréable à votre Excellence."

Enclosure.

A statement of the strength of the French Army, from which its effective force in Europe at this time appears to have been 274,000 men of all arms.

Postscript by Lord Grenville. "By Mr. Jackson's letter of 18 October, 1798, it appears that, with the reinforcements then on their march, the French Army in Italy would amount to 80,000 men, of which from 12 to 16,000 were stationed in the fortresses of Piedmont."

M. DE LUC TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 26. Berlin.—"Monsieur Garlike ayant eu la bonté de me faire savoir qu'il avoit aujourd'hui une occasion sûre d'envoyer un paquet à Votre Excellence, je prends la liberté d'en profiter pour lui communiquer mes observations depuis la lettre que j'ai eu l'honneur de lui écrire le 4<sup>me</sup> de ce mois.

“L'affaire du Prince de Ratzivill est connue de Votre Excellence, ainsi je me bornerai à ses conséquences à l'égard de M. de Haugwitz ; suites qui appuient ce que j'ai eu l'honneur de lui dire dans ma dernière sur la haine que le parti François porte à ce Ministre depuis qu'on voit sa résolution de lui résister. La douceur du Roi envers le Prince coupable a enhardi ce parti ; les Princes oncles du Roi ont pris fait et cause pour ce Prince ; et tandis que la résolution prise contre lui étoit un acte du Cabinet dont M. de H[augwitz] avoit été le dernier à connoître la cause, comme déchargé maintenant par son propre désir des affaires de l'intérieur, on a jetté les hauts cris contre lui ; le public a suivi cette impulsion, et le Prince Henri se sentant ainsi appuyé, a osé demander au Roi le renvoy de ce Ministre, déclarant qu'il ne resteroit pas à Berlin tant qu'il demeureroit en place.

“Cependant on a bientôt été informé que, loin que M. de H[augwitz] fût le promoteur de cette affaire, lorsqu'elle avoit été portée au conseil par le Ministre chargé des affaires intérieures, il avoit été de l'avis d'agir avec ménagement. Mais alors on a changé l'attaque, et on l'a rendue par-là plus fâcheuse pour lui, en y entraînant aussi des personnes bien opposées au parti qui la suscite ; on a prétendu qu'il n'avoit conseillé au Roi les mesures douces que parcequ'il avoit été complice du Prince dans le temps où il écrivit la lettre qui fait le délit.

“Dans ces accusations contradictoires, procédant d'un même parti, on voit le but d'attaquer ce Ministre per fas vel nefas ; on cherche des prétextes, et à mettre en jeu l'ambition ; de sorte qu'entre les personnes qui ne se livrent pas à ces menées, et qui n'ont aucune vue particulière, il y en a qui craignent que, pour conjurer cet orage manifestement élevé par le parti François, M. de H[augwitz] ne devienne temporisateur, et qu'on ne puisse plus attendre de lui la fermeté qu'il avoit commencé à montrer depuis quelque temps.

“L'amitié que ce ministre veut bien me témoigner m'a mis à portée de suivre l'impression que cette affaire a faite sur lui, de même que ce qui pourroit en resulter chez le Roi. J'ai vu chez le premier tout le calme d'un homme qui ne se reproche rien, et je crois qu'il l'auroit conservé même si le Roi se fût laissé prévenir. Je ne l'entends accuser par personne ni de vues ambitieuses, ni de tirer vanité ou avantages personnels de sa place ; il a une grande simplicité de vie et de manières, et je crois qu'il quitteroit cette place avec sérénité s'il perdoit la confiance du Roi ; mais il m'a assuré qu'il n'avoit pas lieu de le craindre, et que rien n'ébranleroit le plan de conduite qu'il s'étoit formé pour sauver la Prusse et l'Europe de leur danger actuel.

“Quant aux affaires générales, je ne pourrois rien dire à votre Excellence de leur malheureuse stagnation qu'elle ne connoisse bien mieux que moi ; je me bornerai donc aussi à cet égard à ce qui concerne M. de H[augwitz]. Quoiqu'on ne puisse encore persuader quelques personnes de sa sincérité dans les dispositions qu'il montre depuis un certain temps, et que je voye même leur résistance à cet égard s'accroître depuis cette perspective qu'il pourroit être culbuté, je ne saurois découvrir aucune raison de doute, et je regarderois comme fort malheureux qu'il y en eût de fondés; car le nombre des hommes qui pourroient le remplacer n'est pas grand, et quand on en fait le tour, je ne vois personne qui eût plus la confiance de bons juges. Quand aussi l'on demande ce qu'il faudroit que ce Ministre fit de plus pour persuader qu'il est sincère dans les dispositions qu'il professe, personne ne peut l'indiquer; car tant que la Cour de Vienne tient la même conduite, on ne sauroit penser qu'il convint à la Prusse de s'avancer au delà de sa vigilance sur la ligne de démarcation.

“Voilà ce dont M. le Comte de Panin me paroît persuadé; et trouvant aussi que M. de Stamford avoit déjà formé le même jugement d'après la correspondance de ce ministre avec Monseigneur le Duc de Br[unswick], et qu'il avoit la même idée sur la nécessité qu'il demeure en place, j'ai cru qu'il y auroit de l'avantage à tâcher de produire entr'eux la même relation qui existe maintenant avec M. le Comte de Panin. Pour cet effet j'ai commencé à parler de M. de Stamford comme j'en pense avec M. de H[augwitz]. Il m'a d'abord témoigné franchement qu'il savoit que lui et Monseigneur le Prince Hér[éditaire] d'Orange avoient tâché de lui ôter la confiance du Roi. Personne n'étoit plus à portée que moi de lever cet obstacle en lui rappelant celui de nos entretiens dans lequel je lui avois avoué que, dans le même temps où le Prince et M. de Stamford en agissoient ainsi, je pensois et agissois comme eux; mais que l'un et l'autre, ainsi que moi, nous avions dès lors changé l'idée. ‘C'est ainsi (ajoutai-je) que votre Excellence trouvera M. de Stamford. Il y a cinq à six ans que toutes nos pensées sont communes, ainsi que nos sentimens, sur les affaires politiques. Nous avons vu séparément de bonne heure le danger de tous les états; nous avons déploré ensemble qu'on ne prit pas les mesures nécessaires pour s'en garantir; et nous blâmions tous ceux que nous pensions y mettre obstacle. Jamais nous n'y avons rien mis de personnel; quand nous avons agi, ç'a été par notre propre mouvement, et uniquement en vue du bien. Tel est donc l'homme que v[otre] E[xc]cellence trouvera dans M. de Stamford, avec de grandes lumières militaires et politiques, et la confiance bien précieuse de Monseigneur le Duc de B[runswick], fruit d'une longue expérience de s'a[bl]tesse s[érénissime]. Quand vous vous serez bien connus l'un et l'autre, je suis sûr que ce sera un moyen de vous entr'aider pour un même but.’ M. de H[augwitz] me témoigna sa satisfaction de cet éclaircissement, d'autant plus qu'il devoit voir M. de Stamford le jour même, qui étoit hier, de sorte que je n'ai pu savoir encore ce qui s'étoit passé.

“Dans tous les entretiens que j'ai eu d'ailleurs avec ce Ministre depuis la dernière lettre que j'ai eu l'honneur d'écrire à Votre Excellence, son langage a été uniforme, et je crois pouvoir le réduire sous deux points de vue, ayant pour base commune sa persuasion, aujourd'hui complète, qu'il ne peut y avoir que malheur pour l'Europe à laisser la France, telle qu'elle est, en possession des pays qu'elle occupe aujourd'hui. C'est d'après cela, dis-je, que l'état des choses se présente à ses yeux sous deux points de vue, d'après ces questions : la Cour de Vienne ouvrira-t-elle enfin les yeux et se résoudra-t-elle à la guerre ? Ou fera-t-elle encore quelque traité avec les François ? Dans le premier cas, il faut que la guerre devienne générale, que chacun concoure à délivrer l'Europe ; dans le dernier, il faut songer à la sûreté de tout le Nord. Or, dans l'un et l'autre cas, dit M. de H[augwitz], les intérêts de la Prusse et de l'Angleterre sont évidemment communs, et ils ne diffèrent qu'en ce qu'il faut l'action immédiate dans le premier, au lieu que dans le dernier il faudroit se concerter éventuellement avec les autres puissances du Nord. Le moment de la décision peut venir lorsqu'on y penseroit le moins, et il seroit à souhaiter qu'on n'eût pas alors tout à faire pour s'entendre. 'C'est ce que je vous ai déjà témoigné' (me dit-il en dernier lieu avec un air significatif). 'Vous savez que je vous ai dit qu'on ne pouvoit rien entamer encore officiellement ; mais que je voudrois que vous pussiez me dire, entre amis qui se parlent à cœur ouvert, que la confiance mutuelle règne assez entre l'Angleterre et la Prusse pour qu'on puisse être sûr de s'entendre bientôt, avec même résolution d'employer chacun ses moyens.'

"Je puis dire en général que dès le temps même où j'étois le plus mécontent de la conduite de ce ministre, par sa temporisation et ses relations mêmes avec les François, dont aujourd'hui je vois les causes principales dans les illusions, je lui ai toujours ouï tenir le même langage à l'égard de l'Angleterre ; par où il m'a attaché depuis que je le connois mieux, parceque je vois un parti bien décidé contre lui pour cela seul. Les villes veulent le commerce de mer et des manufactures. La Société maritime, en particulier, repandue partout, qui a à sa tête le ministre de ce département, et des actionnaires parmi les gens de toute classe, s'est laissé entraîner par le parti François à la jalousie contre les Anglois ; et on a fait passer ce sentiment dans le public, à cause des hauts prix du sucre, du café, du thé. Ces gens-là sont infatués de l'idée absurde qu'il y auroit du commerce par mer pour toutes les nations qui ont des ports, si les François abattoient la puissance Anglaise, et que Buonaparte pénétrât dans l'Inde. Voilà, dis-je, ce que j'entends moi-même ; et M. de H[augwitz] en m'en parlant, m'a cité entr'autres un époque où voyant qu'on travailloit fortement auprès du feu Roi pour le faire entrer dans ces vues, après avoir représenté à sa Majesté les raisons propres à la convaincre que ceux qui lui tenoient un tel langage vouloient sa perte et celle de son royaume, il lui déclara qu'il abandonneroit sa place au moment où un tel système prévaudroit ; mais il convainquit le Roi.

"Néanmoins, ce parti, aveuglement intéressé, subsiste toujours ; et toujours aussi il est prêt à se joindre à ceux qui attaquent M. de H[augwitz]. Il s'est de couverture à toutes les menées Françaises, de prétexte à toutes les insinuations, tantôt à l'orgueil national, tantôt aux intérêts particuliers, contre le ministre qui résiste.

"Je ne puis donc m'empêcher de penser qu'il mérite la confiance de l'Angleterre, et j'ai lieu de croire qu'il éprouveroit de la satisfaction à en recevoir quelque assurance à l'occasion de toutes ses explications avec moi sur ce sujet; car quoiqu'il me traite en ami, il ne doit pas penser qu'elles soient pour moi seul."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November 26. Dublin.—"I do indeed share your impatience for continental movement; but it must be on condition that you share mine for the union, which seems to slacken on your side of the water more than on this, where it certainly gains ground every day. I do not see why it must necessarily take up 'six months,' for I cannot conceive the necessity of all the preliminaries of Privy Council, committees, and so forth, which are only so many invitations for exhibition of talents of controversy, and for delay. In point of form and of propriety I can see no reason why the King (the common centre) should not lay before the Houses of both kingdoms a project and papers. I will exert myself and do l'impossible to urge my regiment to stay for such an object; but I agree with you that, if this object cannot be obtained, there is not the shadow of reason for continuing us here, when our return would certainly facilitate the second edition of the same undertaking. All I beg is that, upon no consideration, may it be told us that we are compellable by law to stay. By the bye you did very unhandsomely by us not to give us a slice of compliment in the King's speech, for the zeal of 12,000 such volunteers ought to have [been] treated more handsomely, though we should not have expected all the panegyric that fell to the share of Lord Nelson. I cannot tell you how eager all the South, and indeed all the Catholics, are for the Union. Ponsonby is doing all the mischief he can with the Bar, and Lord Charlemont, who is doting, is as loud as he can be; but I hear of nothing else except Lord Enniskillen, who takes this mode of resenting, for the present, the ill-usage which he has personally received, and which, entre nous, was the most illegal and wanton attack ever made."

HEADS OF A UNION WITH IRELAND.

1798, November.

Article 1.

The kingdoms to be united; the style to be the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Succession to remain as by the existing laws.

Ensigns armorial to be settled by the Crown.

Proposed plan of representation.

32 Lords.

6 Spiritual } to be elected by 26 Temporal } each body respectively.

Query, whether the election of bishops should not be annual, in order to avoid the giving any plea for a constant non-residence.

100 Commoners.

To be chosen as follows:—
The whole of the rights of election to remain as at present, but each place to choose one member instead of two. From those 150 members, 100 to be chosen by ballot in each year to attend the ensuing session, but with power of exchange by consent among themselves. The other 50 to remain in Ireland as committees on private bills, on controverted elections, and such matters.

Article 2.

One United Parliament. The British part to remain as at present. The Irish part to consist of Spiritual Lords, Temporal Lords, and Commons, to be chosen according to an Act to be passed in the Parliament of Ireland.

Crown may declare present Parliament of Great Britain to be the members of the United Parliament on the part of Great Britain in the first Parliament, but not to last beyond the duration of the present Parliament.

Article 3.

Privileges of peerage and rank of Irish peers, as in the Scotch Union.

Query. Whether the system of the representation of Ireland in the House of Lords would not be greatly improved by preserving to the Crown the power of creating Irish peers from time to time as at present. Such new created Irish peers not to be capable of voting, or being chosen at any election till after the date of one general election (or a term of 7 years) subsequent to their creation.

Article 4.

All members of the United Parliament to take the oaths now required by law in Great Britain, but subject to such change as may be made in this respect by the United Parliament.

It is proposed that a plan for the comm[utation] of tithes by the scale of rent, and also a power of redemption by transfer of stock, should be submitted either to the Irish Parliament previous to the Union, or to the United Parliament immediately after.

This is to be accompanied with the strictest possible provisions for enforcing residence by the authority of the bishops, but under the compulsion of positive laws; according to which the profits of the living et cetera, as the case may be, are to be paid to the incumbent only in proportion to his residence, and the remainder to accumulate as a fund for the repair of the church, parsonage, et cetera, in the parish in which it shall arise.

Nota Bene. Provision to be made for clergy and priests of other denominations in Ireland, but this is not to be done as any part of the Union itself; and the provision to be so given should be made absolutely dependant on the Crown.

Query, Salt, Fisheries, Coals.

Will any special provision on these, or other articles, be necessary?

Article 5.

Continuance of the present Church establishment in each kingdom to be a fundamental article.

Provision that in case any commutation of tithes is made under the authority of the United Parliament, the same shall not be less than — per cent. in proportion to rent, and to vary with the rent itself; or than a sum equal to the growing value, to be estimated from time to time according to the price of articles of produce to be enumerated.

Article 6.

The tariff of the French treaty of commerce with Great Britain in 1786, to be adopted on import and export between Great Britain and Ireland; the duties never to be increased, but may be diminished by the United Parliament.

All other points to be regulated by the United Parliament.

Special provision for linens, and salt provisions, imported into Great Britain and her colonies.

Article 7.

Revenue and Debts. The Exchequer, revenues, and debts of each part of the United Kingdom to be kept separate. After the Union, Ireland to pay one-sixth of all annual expense incurred by the United Kingdom, beyond the amount of the present charge on the consolidated fund, and of the peace establishment of Great Britain, estimated at ——. If the taxes already existing, or to be imposed in Ireland for this purpose should produce a surplus beyond this proportion, it is to be exclusively applied in discharge of Irish debt, or to local purposes of improvement in Ireland. If a deficiency should arise, it is to be made good by additional taxes in the succeeding year.

This proportion to remain fixed for — years, and then to be subject to be varied, or different provisions to be made herein by the United Parliament.

Article 8.

Courts of Justice to remain as at present, subject to alteration by the United Parliament.

Appeal in dernier resort to the United House of Lords, but with provisions for the examination of witnesses in Ireland, by commission directed to the Lord Lieutenant and Council, to the Court of Chancery, or otherwise.

Article 9.

Great Seal of Great Britain to be the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, and to be used in acts of state. That of Ireland to remain, and to be used in private rights.

The Privy Council of Ireland to remain.

The government by a Lord Lieutenant must also evidently, and of necessity, be continued; but this, it is conceived, being a matter relating solely to the manner of exercising the authority now belonging to the Crown, is not properly matter to be inserted in the Act of Union.

M. DE CAZALÈS TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, November.—“Le Roy de France réclame de la justice et de la générosité de Sa Majesté Britannique l'exécution des engagemens pris, il y a deux ans, par le Chevalier Withworth son ministre à la Cour de Russie; ce ministre a promis que l'Angleterre fourniroit à l'entretien du Roy de France dans la même proportion que la Russie. Sa Majesté Impériale aiant fixé sa part à 200,000 roubles, c'est environ vingt-cinq mille livres sterling que l'Angleterre devoit fournir. Cette augmentation de traitement devient absolument nécessaire par l'accroissement de dépense que causera au Roy l'arrivée de la Reine à Mittau, et le mariage de Monseigneur le duc d'Angouleme. Si elle n'étoit pas accordée le Roy se verroit dans l'impuissance d'entretenir ses correspondances avec les différents Cabinets de l'Europe, et celles beaucoup plus importantes qu'il entretient avec les mécontens de son royaume. L'intérêt que Madame Royale inspire généralement en France ne peut que rendre tres utile à la cause des ennemis de la République Francaise son marraige avec Monseigneur le duc d'Angouleme; et quand même les puissances coalisées regarderoient comme impossible de replacer le Roy de France sur son trône, il n'en seroit pas moins d'un intérêt majeur pour l'Angleterre, condamnée à une guerre vraisemblablement bien longue avec cette injuste et turbulente République, de perpétuer la maison de Bourbon, pour avoir toujours un chef à donner aux mécontens qu'un gouvernement aussi violent ne cessera d'y entretenir et d'y faire naître.

“Si l'on considère le Roy de France comm'un Roy à qui il ne s'agit plus que de donner un asile et du pain, deux cent mille roubles pourront paroître suffisans; mais si l'on le regarde comm'une puissance alliée, dont les partisans nombreux, et qui le deviendront tous les jours d'avantage, peuvent servir la cause de l'Angleterre plus puissamment peut-être que les autres alliés du Continent en troublant la France, et en y allumant dans un temps plus ou moins rapproché la guerre civile, on conviendra que deux cent mille roubles sont totalement insuffisans pour lui donner les moiens d'alimenter son parti dans l'intérieur de son royaume. C'est avec la plus grande confiance que ces réclama-tions, et les motifs qui les appuient, sont mis sous les yeux de my lord Grenville. Sa justice, sa générosité, et ses lumières bien connues ne laissent pas douter qu'il ne détermine son Gouvernement à remplir les engagemens pris par Monsieur le Chev[alier] Whitworth.”

Endorsed by Lord Grenville:—“Received from M. Cazalès through M. Windham.

“No answer was given, M. C. being told that the application should come through the D. de Harcourt.”

RUFUS KING TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, December 1. Great Cumberland Place.—“The newspapers speak in such positive terms of a treaty concluded between General Maitland and Toussaint, the negro chief of St. Domingo, that I take the liberty to inquire of your Lordship whether any engagement of the nature of that said to have been formed by General Maitland has actually been concluded. Your Lordship knows how materially we are concerned, at the present moment, in this enquiry; and I flatter myself will, on that account, excuse what might otherwise seem a mere matter of curiosity."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1798,] December 3. Downing Street.—"I find from Mr. Pitt that he had seen in the same light I had done the propriety of not doing more than acknowledging the receipt of Lord Cornwallis's letter till we heard again, in consequence of his having received our opinions upon the legality of the militia not being compellable to remain against their will in Ireland, and the Duke of Portland's letter of Saturday night was upon that principle. I am glad there is an interval from this circumstance to consider still more on your delicate situation; for I confess to you the more I think of it, I feel it the more difficult how to advise you. I shall however think still further upon it, and shall be very happy if any additional circumstances shall come out to enable me to speak to you with more decision than I find myself competent to do in the present moment.

"I see nothing in the transaction at St. Domingo which it is necessary to keep from the confidential knowledge of Mr. King, and if he will take the trouble of calling here at any time he pleases, I shall direct Huskisson to show him everything requisite for him to know."

W. WINDHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 4. [Park Street, Westminster].—"I am pressed by Cazalès to obtain an answer from you to the note which I conveyed to you from him some time since. Besides the general wish of executing, as soon as possible, a commission that has been entrusted to him, he is anxious, I suppose, to give a sample of his activity and success in his new appointment."

LORD GRENVILLE to HENRY DUNDAS.

1798, December 4. Cleveland Row.—"Lord Cornwallis's letter, received yesterday, contains an assertion that, in a letter addressed by Lord B[uckingham] to you, the latter has disclaimed all connection with the Irish Government, and has thereby rendered it impossible that any application should be made to his regiment, or to him, to continue in Ireland.

"These are, as nearly as I remember (not having Lord Cornwallis's letter before me), the exact words used by him.

"As this is no longer an insinuation or implication of charge, but a direct assertion, I trust there can be no impropriety in my requesting you to send me the letter from Lord Buckingham which you showed me at the Cabinet, and any other (if there is any such) which you may have received from him on the subject in question."

Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to W. WINDHAM.

1798, December 5. Cleveland Row.—"I had not the least idea that, in the circuitous manner in which Cazalès sent his paper, he could expect an answer to it. I am unwilling to do any thing to wound or offend an honourable man who has distinguished himself in the cause of monarchy and religion in France. But on the other side, the common procédés which are observed in the course of all business of this nature, required that some regular communication should have been made to me of the intention to supersede the Duke of Harcourt whom I am known to think well of, and to appoint Cazalès, who is unfortunately not less known to entertain the most absurd prejudices against some of the King's servants, and to have expressed them with the greatest indiscretion.

"To this change, if it had been communicated to me, I should even have thought (without wishing to press on the unfortunate) that the consent of the King's Government was, under all the circumstances, fit to be asked, and it certainly would not readily have been given.

"But when no communication whatever has been made to me about it, I should, by receiving and answering notes from M. Cazalès, be acting very injuriously towards the Duke of Harcourt, and countenancing that system of double negotiation which I abhor, and which, I am truly grieved to see, prevails no less at Mittau than it did at Paris."

Copy.

W. WINDHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 5. Park Street, Westminster.—"I thought as you do about the answer to Cazalès while the proceeding was to remain a secret from the Duke of Harcourt; and, indeed, rather understood from you that upon a reference to him (the Duke of Harcourt) the answer, if any were given, must be founded.

"Since that time Cazalès, I found, had accepted the office; and as a communication had been made in consequence to the Duke of Harcourt, I took it for granted that a corresponding one had been made to you.

"Undoubtedly they cannot claim to have two ambassadors communicating at once with the King's ministers, and I most heartily wish that they had kept to the one already received. But I should think it would appear like pressing hard upon the situation of the King if we were to limit him in the choice of the person he might wish to employ, provided that no one was proposed to whom there was a very marked exception; or were to interfere in any arrangement which was not to bring any new and additional person into a communication with Ministry. I really do not at all understand what the footing is on which they propose that Cazalès should stand. They certainly do not mean to displace the Duke of Harcourt; and Cazalès, I take it for granted, does not mean to be, even ostensibly, merely in the situation of Dutheil. I shall say to Cazalès that, till the Duke of Harcourt is declared to be recalled and somebody formally appointed and received in his place, you can have no communication but with him."

HENRY DUNDAS TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 5. Somerset Place.—"I was in bed from a severe rheumatism when your note of yesterday was brought to my house this forenoon. I have at last been able by different messages to the Office to get Lord Buckingham's letter to me which I showed you at the Cabinet, and which is the only one on the subject I have. I send it to you. I did not recollect when I received your note the paragraph to which it alludes; but, upon looking it over, I rather think you will find it does contain a position that a communication from the Lord-Lieutenant to him on the subject of his regiment remaining in Ireland was not in due form, and that it ought to come from the British Government. I do not recollect what the assertion is in Lord Cornwallis's letter; but if it goes only to the subject of communication respecting the regiment remaining in Ireland, I think such an intimation through the Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant was a pretty direct negative to the Lord-Lieutenant addressing any colonel of militia on that point, if that Colonel entertains the sentiment conveyed in that part of Lord Buckingham's letter which I have underscored. I have not seen your letter to the Duke of Portland, but, upon the whole subject, I can see nothing likely to arise but infinite mischief."

The MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 7. Dublin.—"The Union has of course occupied everyone, and there is hardly a man in Ireland who has not already made up his mind, one way or other, before it was ever possible for him to dream what may or may not be the terms of it. Cooke's pamphlet has been very universally read; and, allowing for the extreme hurry in which it has been writ, and for the difficulties arising from the uncertainty of the measure in its detail, I think it a very able, and certainly a very useful performance. The clamour against it in Dublin is as violent as anything can be that is urged forward by everyone the most violent, and the most disaffected, and to which no resistance or check of any sort is opposed by Lord Cornwallis. I enclose to you a pamphlet which is circulated by the Bar all over Ireland, and which you will observe (under the cry of "no union") travels over every ground of popular discontent, in a style for which many a man in the last five months has been hanged; and yet on the part of the Government no struggle is made against it. Ballads are sung about in the same style without animadversion. Now all this is most painful because, after repeatedly turning it over in my mind, I am convinced the measure is more easy every hour, and that it will be effectually supported if Government do not run away from it. The Catholics almost unanimously are for it, even without a stipulation of any sort for advantages or for protection; which, as they have told Government, they conceive themselves sure of obtaining from the equity and policy of the kingdom when united, but which might embarrass the question if urged at present; but that, at all events, their tolerated situation would be abundantly safer and happier under a union than under the present feverish form of government. Much of the same language is held by the Dissenters in the North, and the commercial people, save the traders of Dublin, all appear eager for it; but the greater part of the Bar, and of its legal satellites, are wild upon the subject, and indefatigable. And when nothing is opposed to all this save the supineness, weakness, and ignorance (from want of communication) of Lord Cornwallis, I fear very much not only that the nonsense of Ireland will be triumphant, but that Great Britain will have lost irretrievably by her failure on the experiment. Lord Cornwallis is supposed to have expressed a wish that the sense of the people should be fairly taken, which, of course, has marvellously encouraged the disposition and opportunity of bringing back the press and the public mind to that state to which Lord Camden ascribed so much of the mischief, and to which he applied such vigorous and decisive remedies. And be assured that, whenever the time comes in the course of this discussion (and come it must) when Lord Cornwallis must recur to the same system, he will not find that confidence which is the main and leading spring of such an exertion. As to the measure, in all its great points it must be prepared in England, for there is neither sense nor temper here for such a discussion. Part of the smaller details of Parliamentary representation may be arranged here, but nothing can be done on that head until it is known what proportion Great Britain will entertain in the two Houses of Parliament. If that point could be cleared, the details of it would be more obvious and more easy. The great difficulty which I find in my discussions arises from the impossibility of fixing the quota of Irish contribution, either as a permanent or fluctuating proportion; for either of them might be manifestly injurious to the contracting parties. For example, a fifth would be a small contingent for Great Britain to look to from Ireland hereafter, and yet that contingent would be ruinous to Ireland in presenti; and I know not from what article of her commerce, or consumption, or taxes, you could form a criterion of the future increase or decrease of her means.

"I find that people here lean very much to the idea of appointing commissioners to digest and prepare all the details, and to present them en masse to Parliament, first to that of Great Britain and then to that of Ireland. By this arrangement they say that the principle of union might be recognized at the same time in both kingdoms ; the details would then be arranged by commissioners, and the result would be passed into a law first in England, and afterwards in Ireland. My objection to all this is the delay ; and yet I do not know exactly how the measure can be hastened ; but, if this should be the intention, your Parliament should discuss such a Bill for Commissioners immediately, and the Irish Parliament should meet the 28th for the supplies, and for this Bill, and should then adjourn. I am not sure but that many advantages may arise from sending the commissioners from Great Britain to meet in Dublin, at least for part of the time ; for you will observe that all our Irish wisdom is centred in the Office people who cannot stir during Parliament, such as the Lord Chancellor, Speaker, Beresford, Parnell, and a very few others. You may be sure that the Saint Esprit viendra en malle to your English Commissioners, as it has arrived formerly at Rome, and that nothing will be done without it, and I think that many advantages might arise from this measure. Much of this must depend upon your Commissioners, but I think there are some who might be very usefully employed for Great Britain in this kingdom ; such as Lord Auckland, Lord Bolton, T. Pelham, Lord Hobart. I threw this out to Cooke, who agreed with me in that the greatest advantages might grow out of it, and particularly that it would conciliate much more than the measure of closetting their great men in London.

“ You probably are tired of the word union ; here we dream of nothing else, and hold Minorea and everything else very cheap.”

COURT WORONZOW TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 7. Richmond.—“ J’ai reçu hier la nouvelle la plus agréable que je pouvais recevoir, puisqu’elle me donne la certitude de rester dans un pays que j’aime, et j’ai eu la satisfaction d’apprendre en même temps que l’Empereur a fait le meilleur choix qu’il pouvait faire parmi ses sujets, sans exception de personne, pour remplir notre département des Affaires Etrangères, en nommant Monsieur de Kotchoubey vice-chancelier, et Monsieur Rostopchin membre du collège des Affaires Etrangères. Ils ont, tous les deux, beaucoup de talents, de jugement, et d’élévation d’ame ; sont dans les meilleurs principes ; ont été, tous les deux, en Angleterre, et sont attachés au système de l’union indissoluble entre nous deux patries. Je vous réponds d’eux comme de moi-même. Je les connais à fond, parcequ’ils sont mes amis intimes. Ce qu’il y a d’heureux pour les affaires est qu’ils sont très amis entre eux, et également attachés au Prince Bezborotko, qu’ils regardent comme leur pere. Ce choix de l’Empereur lui fait honneur, et il [est] aussi heureux pour lui que pour le bien de l’Europe, dans la crise où elle se trouve ; aussi cette nouvelle m’a rendu parfaitement heureux. Comme vous m’honorez de votre amitié, et que vous êtes attaché à l’alliance que vous avez formé entre nos deux patries, je suis persuadé que vous partagerez ma joie.

“S[a] m[ajesté] le roi m’a dit hier que M. Tamara a signé notre traité avec la Porte. Pourriez vous me dire la date de cette signature, et si vous avez quelqu’autre nouvelle des opérations des Turcs, par terre et par mer, contre la France.”

THE PRINCE OF ORANGE TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 7. London.—“J’ai reçu par la poste venue hier deux lettres de M. de Stamford. J’ai cru devoir former une note de ce qu’elles contenoient de plus intéressant, et je l’envoie ci-joint à Votre Excellence, avec prière de la mettre sous les yeux du Roi.”

Enclosure.

NOTE ON PRUSSIAN AFFAIRS.

1798, December 7. London.—“Le Général de Stamford a fait rapport au Prince d’Orange qu’ayant eu l’honneur de remettre au Roi de Prusse la lettre dont il l’avoit chargé pour ce monarque, il en avoit été reçu très gracieusement; et le Roi lui ayant demandé s’il resteroit quelque temps à Berlin, et le Général de Stamford lui ayant répondu que l’intention du Prince d’Orange étoit qu’il y prolongeat son séjour, se flattant que sa Majesté n’y seroit pas contraire et que lui nourrissoit le même espoir; le Roi lui serra la main en signe d’approbation, et il fut invité ce jour-là, qui étoit le 18 Novembre, jour anniversaire de la Princesse Héréditaire d’Orange, à la table du Roi, où il n’y avoit que la famille royale, et le Prince Auguste, fils de sa Majesté Britannique.

“Le Général de Stamford a mandé de plus qu’un jeune seigneur Polonois, dont il n’a pu apprendre le nom, s’étant rendu suspect, a été arrêté à ce qu’on prétend en Gallicie; qu’on a trouvé, parmi ses papiers une lettre du Prince Radzivil, époux de la Princesse Louise de Prusse, dont la date portoit le mois et le jour mais non l’année où elle a été écrite; que le Prince Radzivil, après avoir fait des vœux dans cette lettre en faveur de la Pologne, sa patrie, qu’il souhaite de voir rendu à son indépendance, s’explique de manière à faire entendre que le trône de Pologne ne scauroit être rétabli à moins que la nation Polonoise ne se détermine à y placer un prince de la famille royale de Prusse; que cela avoit excité à Vienne le soupçon que la Cour de Berlin tramoit quelque chose de ce genre, et qu’elle avoit d’abord donné connoissance de cette lettre à sa Majesté Prussienne, qui avoit pris la chose dans la plus sérieuse considération. Que le Roi avoit d’abord fait mettre le scellé sur tous les papiers du Prince Radzivil un jour qu’il étoit à une partie de chasse, et la Princesse son épouse à Bellevue, l’un et l’autre ne se doutant de rien. Il ajoute que beaucoup de personnes assurent qu’il ne s’est rien trouvé dans la correspondance de ce Prince qui indiquât de sa part quelque trame secrète et criminelle, et qu’il auroit convaincu le Roi et son Ministère que la lettre à l'occasion de laquelle on faisoit toutes ces recherches, a été écrite il y a trois ans, et par conséquent à une époque où il pouvoit se croire permis d'énoncer ainsi sa façon de penser.

“Le Général de Stamford croit que ces personnes sont mal informées, et son opinion à cet égard se fonde sur les termes dans lesquels le Roi de Prusse écrit au Prince Radzivil en lui signifiant sa décision à cet égard. Sa Majesté a écrit à ce Prince que, quoique l'imprudence de sa conduite le mette dans le cas d'être déclaré coupable de haute trahison, elle veut bien ne pas donner de suite à cette affaire, et céder plutôt au penchant de son cœur en donnant encore à ce Prince cette marque de sa bonté, et cela d'autant plus qu'elle a adopté pour principe de traiter avec la plus grande indulgence ses sujets Polonois.

“La première fois que le Prince Radzivil a été mandé auprès des Ministres, ils lui ont fait subir un long examen ; la seconde fois ils lui ont déclaré comme sentence qu'ils se référoient entièrement au contenu de la lettre que le Roi lui avoit écrite à cet égard. Les scellés ont été levés, et le Prince a continué de paroître en publique comme à l'ordinaire.

“Le Général de Stamford dit n'être entré dans ces détails sur cette affaire que parcequ'elle a beaucoup occupé les Ministres, et qu'elle a été cause que la Comte de Panin n'a reçu que le 15 Novembre une réponse sur les dernières propositions qu'il a faites de la part de sa Cour. Cette réponse est encore évasive. Elle est courte et porte en substance ‘que sa Majesté Prussienne souhaite extrêmement que la France puisse être desserrée, sinon tout-à-fait dans ses anciennes limites, au moins dans des limites plus étroites que ne sont celles qu'elle s'est donnée ; que sa Majesté Prussienne pense que les forces des deux Cours Impériales seroient suffisantes pour obliger le gouvernement François à abandonner la plus grande partie des conquêtes qu'elle a faites ; et qu'elle croit concourir d'une manière assez efficace à leur faire atteindre ce but en continuant de protéger le nord de l'Allemagne, ainsi qu'elle l'a fait jusqu'à ce moment.’

“M. de Panin a répliqué, le 17, par une note verbale, dans laquelle, en mettant sous les yeux du Ministre les différentes positions que pourroient amener les circonstances actuelles, il a insisté sur une explication franche et loyale vis-à-vis de sa Cour quant à la conduite que la Prusse prétend tenir dans chacun des cas qu'il a clairement exposé. En suite de cette note [M. de Haugwitz] a demandé un court délai pour faire son rapport au Roi, et il a fixé le lendemain pour un entretien avec le Comte de Panin, dans lequel il lui feroit savoir la réponse de sa Majesté Prussienne.

“Le Général de Stamford a communiqué de plus que la réponse du Roi de Prusse à cette note verbale de M. de Panin relative aux secours offerts à la Prusse par l'Empereur de Russie, a été absolument conforme à la première, c'est à dire évasive ; que non seulement elle ne donne pas le moindre espoir d'un concert prochain entre la Cour de Berlin et celle de Vienne et de Petersbourg, mais qu'elle ne laisse pas même entrevoir que, tel ou tel cas échéant, la Prusse pourroit se reveiller de sa léthargie, prolongée aujourd'hui non par M. de H[augwitz], mais par un parti qui doit s'être formé très en secret contre lui pour le culbuter ; lequel probablement est dirigé par les artifices du Ministre de Schulembourg. M. de Haugwitz doit avoir donné connoissance de cette trame, le 18 de Novembre, au Comte de Panin, lorsque celui-ci se plaignant, avec le ton de l'amitié et de la confiance, du peu de cas que sa Majesté Prussienne paroïssoit faire de l'amitié de l'Empereur de Russie, il ne cacha point à M. de Haugwitz qu'il le soupçonnoit d'en être la cause. Le Général de Stamford assure que ceci est fondé, et que la cabale dont M. de Haugwitz se plaint, existe réellement. Le Général de Stamford en a acquis la certitude par le chambellan de Reck, frère du ministre de ce nom.

" M. de Schulembourg qui, pendant que M. de Haugwitz étoit pacifique, ne parloit que de guerre, doit avoir changé de ton depuis un certain temps, et ne parle que de la nécessité de conserver la paix. Zastrow et Kôkériz, qui étoient ci-devant les échos de M. de Haugwitz, parlent comme Schulembourg ; et les uns et les autres font entendre au Roi que M. de H[augwitz] n'a changé de système que parcequ'il est piqué contre Sièyès.

" Le Général de Stamford dit que ceci explique pourquoi que Haugwitz, qui est un homme foible mais attaché par ambition à sa place au-dessous de la quelle il restera toujours, n'a pas osé se prononcer en dernier lieu auprès du Roi comme il l'auroit désiré en faveur des dernières ouvertures faites par la Russie.

" La question qui occupe depuis cette découverte Messieurs de Panin et de Stamford est, s'il faut laisser tomber M. de Haugwitz, ou chercher à le soutenir ?

" Haugwitz est un homme foible et qui n'a que peu de moyens ; Schulembourg doit en avoir davantage. C'est un grand antagoniste du Duc de Brunswic, et son intrigue actuelle paroît concertée avec le Prince Henry, qui doit avoir écrit à Madame la Princesse Ferdinand pour la consoler de l'affront qu'elle prétend lui avoir été fait dans la personne de son beau-fils le Prince Radzivil, que de cet événement il pourroit résulter un grand bien, parcequ'on pourroit en tirer parti pour obliger le Roi de chasser ce dangereux Haugwitz, qui cherchoit à l'entraîner dans une guerre contre la France.

" Le Général de Stamford ajoute enfin qu'il faudroit sçavoir à présent si un tel changement dans le ministère pourroit, ou non, devenir avantageux à la bonne cause ; qu'il lui paroît probable que lorsque le système pacifique de M. de Schulembourg lui auroit servi à supplanter M. de Haugwitz, il ne pourroit, au moins d'un certain temps, se départir de ce système auquel il seroit redevable de son triomphe, et que, par conséquent, il en résulteroit toujours un retard dangereux. Tout cela fait que M. de Stamford désireroit beaucoup d'avoir l'occasion de conférer sur ces objets avec le Duc de Brunswic avant de se décider."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 10. Wimbledon.—"Before I make any answer to the enclosed, I think it right to send it for your perusal. I understood that, in consequence of our former correspondence, the Portuguese Government had been furnished with all the saltpetre they had occasion for. If there is however occasion for giving them any more, I do not object to it, provided it comes under your sanction ; but my reason for troubling you at present is that, in consequence of what has passed between us, I have had a full conversation with the Chairman, and suggested to him that the only proper method of conducting this business with foreign nations was that each nation should enter into an agreement with the East India Company for the specific quantity they require, and that the East India Company should bring home what is necessary to supply those demands, in addition to what they bring home for the use of our own Government. In any such agreement care must be taken to stipulate on the part of the East India Company that it shall be subject to the control of the executive government at home ; for, otherwise, the East India Company under their agreement might be compelled to proceed in furnishing a foreign power with a commodity which it would be the policy of Government at the moment to prevent."

LORD GRENVILLE to HENRY DUNDAS.

1798, December 11. Cleveland Row.—"I will write to Walpole guardedly on the subject of the acquisition of Diu, and he will feel the ground at Lisbon. I presume that what the company would offer for it is money, for I know not what else they have to give that Portugal would wish to acquire. Almeida has been directed to consult me how far our interests would be committed by their offering, and in case of need, ceding to France two small settlements which they say they have in the Philippines, instead of what France asks of them in Brazil. I conclude few things could be worse for us than letting France get any footing there. If you have a mind to talk to Almeida about it, he talks English, and will tell you the particulars; if not, write me a strong letter, that I may shew him on the subject.

"The paper you sent me does not relate to Portuguese but Danish purchases of saltpetre. Whatever other determination is taken about it, I think one resolution should be not to see or have any thing to do with this Mr. Coninck, who is the great conductor of all the schemes for bringing home Dutch property as Danish, and who is come here to defend the ships stopped at St. Helena." Copy.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 11. Dublin.—"This accursed Warwick regiment has succeeded too fatally in corrupting my men, and yesterday, having judged it necessary to bring the matter distinctly to every man's personal consent, I found that very much the larger proportion insisted on their right to return, and, notwithstanding every exertion we could make, persisted in it. In consequence of which I wrote to Mr. Dundas, and to Lord Cornwallis, to notify to them that a large proportion of the men refused to abide by the answer which I had, in my public orders, undertaken to give in their name, unless they should wish otherwise; and I rather think that the greater number will persevere in their cry 'Go to England with the Warwick.' No sooner had I notified this to Lord Cornwallis, than I received an official copy of a letter written by the Adjutant General, by His Excellency's commands, to the Medical Board here, charging me in the most distinct terms with disobedience of orders, and with having 'occasioned this disease' amongst my men; and all this written without the slightest communication to me on the subject, either from Lord Cornwallis or from this greater man, of any sort or kind whatsoever. I have, as you will easily believe, written to Lord Cornwallis in the style that becomes me; as yet I have had no answer, but the matter shall not rest here whatever be the consequence. I am indeed stung to death by all I see of this wretched man's conduct, who will as surely ruin the cause of England as can be. You have seen the result of the Bar meeting, where Government took no pains to collect the attendance of any of the very many legal dependents connected with them. Since then the Lord Mayor has called a meeting of all the merchants and traders of Dublin, with Latouche and Beresford at their head, and no exertion is to be made to check it. Those who talked stoutly a week ago (I could name you some of the best friends of Government) have told me that they will not commit themselves till they see further. The Chancellor is very ill and very dissatisfied, and no one civil officer of the Crown has the slightest intercourse with Lord Cornwallis. Lake and George Nugent, whose names I trust to you only, have told me that as an officer he has lost every faculty of explaining himself, so that we literally have no Government. All this will give you pain, but I owe it to you to plague you with these unpleasant truths, though nothing probably will arise out of it.

"I cannot tell you how happy I am to see our dear Tom now so fully and fairly employed in a line which may lead much further; for I never shall forgive you if you do not ultimately employ him to make the peace after his success (which God send him) in forming the war confederacy. For both he will be entitled to the best rewards this country can give him."

THE PRINCE OF ORANGE TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 11. Hampton Court.—"Je m'empresse de vous envoyer une note contenant ce qu'il y a d'intéressant dans la lettre qui j'ai reçu hier de Monsieur de Stamford. Je prie Votre Excellence de la mettre sous les yeux du Roi."

Enclosure.

NOTE ON PRUSSIAN AFFAIRS.

"Dans une lettre que le Prince d'Orange a reçu hier du Général de Stamford, ce Général lui mande que la cabale qui travailloit à perdre M. de Haugwitz paroît échouer complètement par sa propre maladresse ; elle avoit voulu se servir de l'affaire du Prince de Radzivil comme d'une arme contre ce ministre. La douceur du jugement du Roi envers ce Prince (de la conduite du quel le Général de Stamford dit que l'on pourra le mieux juger par la copie de la lettre écrite par le Prince de Radzivil, et adressée à Paris le 15 Novembre 1796,) a enhardi ce Prince à se plaindre au Roi du tort qu'on lui faisoit, et de la manière injuste dont on agissoit à son égard ; et poussé par le parti de Schulembourg, et probablement le Prince Henry, il s'est plaint hautement de M. de H[augwitz], et l'a accusé d'avoir eu, dès l'année 96, connoissance du projet dont on fait à présent le chef d'accusation contre lui ; cherchant ainsi à faire retomber cette affaire sur le Ministre lui-même. Le Général de Stamford ajoute qu'il n'a pas été difficile à M. de Haugwitz de se justifier de cette imputation, aucune pièce officielle ne l'accusant, et sa conduite prouvant que, s'il a eu effectivement connoissance du projet en question, il n'y a fait aucune attention, ne supposant nullement qu'on songeat à l'exécuter ; et que dans les conférences dont il avoit témoigné le désir, et que M.M. de Panin et de Stamford ont eues avec lui le 24 et 25 Novembre, il avoit paru fort tranquille au sujet de la trame qu'on avoit ourdie contre lui, et avoit dit lui-même le 25 Novembre au Général de Stamford qu'il en avoit parlé au Roi, et que sa Majesté Prussienne l'avoit tellement rassuré à ce sujet que, loin de lui avoir porté aucune préjudice, ceux qui ont cabalé contre lui paroissoient, au contraire, l'avoir raffermi dans son poste.

“ Enfin le Général de Stamford mande que M. de Haugwitz lui a témoigné mettre un très grand prix à la confiance du Duc ; qu'il s'étoit attaché à le bien persuader qu'il ne se l'est acquise que par son changement de système.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 12. Dublin.—“ The great pillar of our Irish salvation is the most contemptible personage I ever knew. I possibly may amuse you (or grieve you) with our correspondence, and you will see how very little a great man may be. I fancy that it is now closed with the insolent submissiveness in language of the very strongest sort that I could put together.

“ My heroes of the Royal Bucks are in their way as little ; for above 1,000 of them now sue for the extension of the golden sceptre, and entreat that they may stay to the 14th April, which was the day proposed to them. I have treated them very roughly, and my prescription will probably succeed in keeping very much the largest part, and possibly the whole. Lord Hertford has allowed the Warwick to run riot, and they tainted ours till they found me more sturdy than his Lordship. His brother has exhausted both his language and patience in endeavouring to put him right.”

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 13. Wimbledon.—“I daresay there are some unavoidable reasons for the delay, but if General Koehler is to be of any use at Constantinople, I cannot help regretting that he is not there before this time. It was wrote to me when in Scotland in September that he was to go there, and the month of December is now running on. All that I deprecate is an over confidence in the destruction of Buonaparte, such as to lose sight of the importance of its being in some shape accomplished. I am perfectly happy in the hope that his fate is decided before this time in the most adverse way, but I am sure nothing has yet reached us of a nature so decisive upon that point as to justify us in going to sleep in repose upon it.

“It was not, however, to say this that I took up my pen at present. Ever since I formed the opinion I early did that the expedition was destined for that quarter of the world, my unremitting attention has been paid to every view in which I could consider the subject, and I am not aware, looking retrospectively, that I have omitted anything, within the line of any department where I am authorized to act, which can tend to frustrate the success of this gigantic attempt. About a month ago Mr. Huskisson put a letter into my hands which he had received from Colonel Maitland. Not seeing the means of a pecuniary nature to attack Buonaparte in the manner that letter points at, I did not pay much attention to it; although several others who like him have been in that country, and viewed it with attention, concur with him on his ideas. You may however perhaps recollect that, in a very cursory manner, I one day threw out in Cabinet a notion floating in my mind that we might act against Buonaparte if necessary from India by the Red Sea. I have had many confidential conversations with the chairman, and likewise Mr. David Scott, on the idea. The last, who knows every part of the scene of action well, is very sanguine indeed, I think more so than several of the military men connected with India service with whom I have conversed. Among others I have endeavoured to analyze the subject in every view with Colonel Maitland, who is well acquainted with that service, and whose abilities enable him to talk upon it with more than usual precision. I think it right to send you the perusal of the letter to Huskisson I have already referred to; and I likewise send you a memorandum from him, which he prepared by my direction after one of our conversations. I have now put the Chairman in possession of all my ideas, and the resolution I have formed is to send off Colonel Maitland as quickly as I can; Suez or somewhere in the Red Sea being his ultimate destination. Having a perfect confidence in his pecuniary purity, I shall procure to him from the East India Company a credit to the amount of ten or fifteen thousand pounds to be used, if opportunity offer, in the manner his letter to Huskisson points out. But my chief object in sending him is with a view of deciding on the spot how far it appears to him, from the state in which he finds matters, that a military force from India can be of any material use in that part of the world. I will at the same time send orders overland to India to have in readiness a body of five thousand men at Tellicherry, to transport to the Red Sea, if he shall send a requisition to that purpose. This force, acting with a small squadron on the Red Sea (where vessels for gunboats will be got) would be perfectly sufficient to keep in awe any hostile dispositions that may be likely to appear there; and, what is more material, will be adequate to protect all the ports and little powers on the Red Sea, and on the banks of it, from the plunder to which, unprotected, they will certainly be exposed from the rapacity and necessities of Buonaparte. By following this course I think I shall steer a middle course between too much dashing and too much caution. It would be too much of the first to order any body of troops to the Red Sea beyond merely what is already ordered for the Isle of Perim in the straits of Babelmandeb, without knowing how far they were likely to be of any service when they arrive there. On the other hand it would be too cautious and dilatory to give no order on the subject till I should have a report made to me by Colonel Maitland, and much valuable time may be lost by such a delay.

"These are the outlines of my project which I will carry into execution without delay. My idea is to send Colonel Maitland by land to Constantinople, and from thence to proceed to Rhodes, where he may embark and proceed to any landing place he pleases. I think the nearest to Aleppo is the most likely, but as to that I must leave him a discretion. I will of course direct him to correspond and give every information in his power not only to the agents of the East India Company, but to his Majesty's Minister at Constantinople, and the Commanders by sea in the Levant and Mediterranean. If there is any particular instruction you would wish me to give him connected with any arrangements you may have in view, you will let me know."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 14. Richmond.—"Je vous remercie pour la plaisir extrême que vous m'avez fait en me communiquant la nouvelle que le Ch[evalier] Eden a eu du B[aron] de Thugut; elle est si probable, si dans les mœurs du pays où s'est passée l'affaire, que je la crois, et que j'ai toujours cru que telle serait la fin de Bonaparte et de ses satellites. Le silence de Smith ne doit pas invalider cette nouvelle, puisqu'il lui est arrivé souvent d'être trois et quatre postes sans vous écrire, et que par la dernière malle il vous mandait, à ce qu'il me semble, qu'il est malade et à la campagne.

"Dans les mœurs orientales on peut s'emparer des richesses individuelles des particuliers en leurs supposant des crimes; et c'est ainsi qu'en agissent tous les despotes Asiatiques et Africains; mais des nouveaux impôts, et des contributions générales, ils n'osent jamais le faire. Quand les grands seigneurs se sont avisés se mettre des nouveaux impôts, ils se sont toujours renforcé et appuyé par des fetfa du grand moufti; et encore cela n'a jamais passé sans une émeute à Constantinople, à la suite des quelles les grands seigneurs ont été quelquefois déposés. Avec des opinions pareilles, souffrira-t-on que des étrangers, d'une religion abhorrée, prennent sur eux une autorité qu'on n'admet pas même d'un souverain qui réunit en soi la puissance civile, militaire, et religieuse; car le grand Seigneur est reconnu comme successeur légitime des Califes?"

PAUL, EMPEROR OF RUSSIA to COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, December 16th. St. Petersburg.—Sa Majesté le Roi de Suède s'est, en second lieu, adressé à nous pour nous demander nos bons offices auprès de la Cour de Londres, au sujet de plusieurs convois marchands Suédois qui ont été détenus par des escadres Angloises. La bonne harmonie qui existe maintenant entre nous et ce prince; la conduite actuelle de la Cour de Stockholm qui, d'après des renseignemens sûrs, n'est nullement conforme à leur ancienne partialité pour les François; et le désir que, si les alliés ne peuvent augmenter le nombre de leurs partisans ils ne s'attirent au moins pas de reproches, et surtout dans des affaires où, comme dans la présente, malgré les bonnes dispositions du Gouvernement, le désir du gain peut faire agir les commandans contre les règles de la justice, nous portent à vous prescrire d'employer vos efforts auprès du ministère Anglois de contenter la Cour de Stockholm autant qu'il est possible, en montrant au ministre Suédois, résidant auprès de la Cour de Londres, votre disposition d'employer vos bons offices dans cette affaire. Nous y accédons d'autant plus que, vû l'état de blocus où se trouvent presque tous les ports de la Méditerranée qui dépendent ou directement ou indirectement des François, il ne pourra être, à ce qu'il paroît, d'aucun inconvénient à l'Angleterre de faire passer des vaisseaux Suédois dans la dite mër. Notre ministère a fait au Chevalier Whitworth des insinuations pareilles à celles que nous vous prescrirons. Translation.

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, December 18. Yarmouth.—“I am this morning arrived here, and as the post is going to leave Yarmouth, I have only time to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th by Shaw, together with the secret service regulations, and Mr. Garlike's last letters enclosed to me in one from Mr. Hammond; Mason has likewise given me the two letters from the King to the Duke and the Duchess of Brunswick.

“I certainly will recollect to mention the subject of the Portuguese command to the Duke of Brunswick, and to learn his opinion without any formal application to him on the subject; you are however probably aware that, as no cipher will be within reach, and as our messenger must be reserved for Berlin, I shall not easily find any opportunity of writing to you from Brunswick.

“ Mr. Garlike’s dispatches seem to contain nothing new ; it is the old song set to the old tune. I heartily wish it were possible to change it, and if it is not changed it shall not be for want of every effort that I can make.

“ If Schawenburg would dip his Grison army, and the Neapolitan march of the 13th be as hostile as your private letter states it, they may be forced at Vienna. God send they may.

“ The Juno is not come, but a frigate is seen at a distance which they think may be her, though the fog is so thick they think she will come no nearer. They seem to hope that I may sail to-morrow, as Admiral Dickson thinks of sending me in the Champion if the wind is fair before the Juno comes.”

LEGISLATIVE UNION OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

Note respecting evidence to be taken in Ireland.

1798, [December 1-18].—“ One of the greatest difficulties which has been supposed to attend the progress of Union between Great Britain and Ireland, is that of the expense and trouble which would be occasioned by the attendance of witnesses in matters of controverted elections, or in matters of private business requiring Parliamentary interposition.

“ It would therefore be very desirable to devise a plan (which does not appear impossible) for empowering the Speaker of either House of the United Parliament to issue his warrant to the Chairman of the Quarter Sessions in Ireland, or to such other person as may [be] thought more proper for the purpose, requiring him to appoint a time and place within the county for his being attended by the agents of the respective parties, and reducing to writing in their presence the testimony (or the consents or dissents as the case may be) of such persons as by the said agents may be summoned to attend, being resident within the county. If not there resident, a similar proceeding should take place in the county where they do reside.

“ And such testimony, so taken and reduced to writing, might by such chairman, or by the sheriff of the county, be certified to the Speaker of either House, as the case might be.

“ It seems difficult to provide by a detailed article of the Union for all the various regulations which such a proceeding might require ; but the principle might perhaps be stated there, and the provisions left to be settled by the United Parliament.

“ All questions respecting the admissibility, competency, or credibility of such evidence, so certified, must of course still remain with the House or Committee to whom it is to be produced, but it does not appear that, in such cases, there is any benefit of vivâ voce testimony which might not equally be obtained by written evidence in this form.

“ Perhaps, in arranging the details, it may be useful to consult the provisions now subsisting by the different Acts respecting the procuring evidence in like manner from the East Indies.”

Endorsed :—“ Sent to Lord Castlereagh, December 18, 1798.”

LEGISLATIVE UNION OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

Note respecting the election of Irish Peers.

1798, December 18.—“If the precedent of the Union with Scotland should be exactly followed in the present case with respect to the peerage, the following difficulties would arise.

1. “The principle of election for one Parliament only seems to be in itself adverse to the constitution and character of the House of Lords, as forming a part of the British Legislature. And the inconvenience arising from this circumstance would evidently be much augmented when, instead of sixteen, as at present, so large a proportion as near fifty out of less than three hundred members would be so elected.

2. “But in this instance the danger would be greater, because the Scotch peerage, though it has in the course of a century suffered some diminution, is nevertheless so constituted that it is little likely to suffer any further diminution; and the body is still sufficiently numerous to afford a reasonable security against improper combinations or cabals. But the Irish peerage, being for the most part of much later creation, and in almost every instance limited to heirs male, is likely to suffer a much more rapid diminution; and as the number to be elected is considerably larger, the effect might, at no very distant period, be extremely inconvenient of subjecting the election of so powerful a body in the House of Lords to be dependant on the cabals possibly of a very few individuals.

3. “The taking from the Crown all power of conferring Irish honours will necessarily reduce very considerably the objects of fair ambition to which persons of consequence in that kingdom might hereafter look; and it would, besides, throw such a pressure on Government of claims for British peerage, as must, in its effect, be highly embarrassing whether it be satisfied or not.

“May it not, therefore, be worth consideration whether a new principle might not with advantage be adopted as to the election of peers on the part of Ireland?

“That the Irish temporal peers now existing or hereafter to be created by his Majesty, should elect in the first instance 26 of their number to seats in the House of Lords for life, and should by like election supply all vacancies.

“And that all the electing peers should be capable of seats in the United House of Commons; if however this last provision was thought to bear hard on the leading commoners of Ireland, such right might be confined to the Irish peers who might be elected for places in England only.

“The spiritual peers should (it is thought) take their seats by rotation among the archiepiscopal and episcopal sees respectively; so that one archbishop and three bishops may be to sit in each Parliament.

“By this plan the Irish peers would be much less under the influence of the Crown, and would, at the same time, be also free from the operation of private cabals.

“Query : What should, in such a case, be done respecting the privileges of peerage ?

“It seems better, in every mode of election, that it should be done by signed lists sent to the Lord Chancellor here, rather than by any meeting of Irish peers at Dublin or elsewhere.”

Endorsed :—“Read at the Cabinet and sent to Lord Castle-reagh.”

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, December 19. Yarmouth.—“Your communication from General Stamford is in every respect very interesting, and in some respects certainly more favourable to your views than any of the latter accounts from Berlin. If General Stamford is not much deceived, there is more likelihood than ever of Haugwiz being inclined to push his own interests pretty far upon the assistance and the co-operation of the Duke of Brunswick; and if it be true that Zastrow much exceeded his instructions in the letter which he wrote to discourage the offer of assistance from Prussia to the Orange party, it may be a stronger lesson than any other to Haugwiz of the necessity of taking his measures so clearly and explicitly as to prevent the mischief of such a double line of conduct in the Prussian government as is found in the comparison between his profession and Zastrow’s official letter. The time seems to me to press so much for the personal assistance of the Duke of Brunswick at Berlin, that I shall not be sorry when I arrive at Brunswick to learn that he is already at Berlin, where his presence and influence seem more than ever desirable. I dare not, however, be sanguine enough to promise myself such good news, though it is difficult to conceive how, with the eagerness and zeal with which he seems to see this moment, he could hesitate to take in his own person every active means to assist the measures which appear to him to be so important and so necessary. While Haugwiz, however, is pressing from Brunswick for a regular military plan of operations, I daresay you yourself will feel likewise the necessity of advancing as much as possible the detail of those plans in which our naval force can co-operate; if the sea officers whom I have seen here are not extremely over sanguine, much indeed may be done; for Admiral Dickson, Captain Hope, Macdonald Deane and others are, in their conversation, forward to describe the certainty of success both as to the Helder Fort and Texel Island, and also, in the opinion of Admiral Dickson, as to the practicability of destroying by a boat attack the ships now at Helvoet. I mention this last circumstance only to shew how much these subjects occupy our seamen here, for certainly an attack of this latter description is calculated for a more decided state of hostility towards Holland than, by General Stamford’s letter, we should see ourselves placed in; but at all events we should gain much if we could accompany the Duke of Brunswick’s detail of military operations by a detail of measures for naval co-operation, and in this shape shew to the King of Prussia that nothing remained to be done for the execution of the whole plan but his consent to take in it the part which should fall to his share.

"I take for granted the Hereditary Prince will pretty soon exercise his power of drawing for money, and I shall be glad if you will be so good as to send to me the form of the receipt which he is to give to me for the drafts in question; that which you have sent me being only the receipt which you are to have from me. I am impatient to get forward on my journey, and have agreed with Captain Raper of the Champion that I will go on board early to-morrow, if it be anyhow possible for us to make any way."

LORD GRENVILLE to THOMAS GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, December 19. Cleveland Row.—"It is, I am afraid, too probable that this letter will find you still at Yarmouth. Stamford's communications will have shewn you that better prospects are opening at Berlin. We have in the Morning Post of to-day a report (said to come from Paris) of a considerable defeat of the Neapolitans in the Roman territory; but, as great pains seem to have been taken by the Directory to hinder their papers from coming over here, I give very little credit even to the fact of this story being in a French paper; but even if the report is true, I shall think the confirmation of the actual commencement of hostilities much more important than the success or failure on either side of the first operations.

"The Lisbon mail received to-day speaks so confidently of Minorca, as to put its surrender out of all doubt. But we have no letters from Stuart himself.

"The probabilities of immediate war between Spain and Portugal increases so fast that the subject you was to mention to the Duke of Brunswic becomes more and more pressing. You may easily send an express from Brunswic to Mr. Harward at Cuxhaven." Copy.

PAUL, EMPEROR OF RUSSIA, to COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, December 19. St. Petersburg.—"Conformément aux stipulations faites entre nous et la Cour de Londres à l'égard de l'isle de Malte, dont vous êtes déjà informé, nous avons donné ordre d'envoyer par dessus le secours que nous prêtons au Roi de Naples, trois bataillons de grenadiers et trois cent artillieurs en garnison sur la dite isle, à condition qu'à l'effet de la défense de cette isle et des fortifications qui s'y trouvent, il soit envoyé un nombre égal de forces, tant de la part de Sa Majesté Sicilienne, que de celle de Sa Majesté le Roi de la Grande Bretagne, comme vous le verrez par l'article séparé stipulé avec la Cour de Naples, dont nous vous envoyons ci-jointe une copie pour votre information. En réponse sur cela le Chevalier Whitworth nous a d'abord assuré que de tels arrangemens seront très approuvés par sa Cour, ce pourquoi vous ne manquerez pas de demander que les ordres nécessaires soient, à cette fin, donnés au Commandant des troupes Angloises dans la Méditerranée.

“ Dans notre rescrit nous ne sommes pas entrés en détail dans nos explications concernant les plans de l'Angleterre de conquérir l'isle de Minorque et de mettre la Suisse en activité. Nous vous ordonnons de déclarer au ministère de Londres que nous approuvons toute mesure que notre allié prendroit, et qui serviroit à causer des torts essentiels à l'ennemi commune.”
Translated into French.

LORD GRENVILLE to THOMAS GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, December 20. Cleveland Row.—“ Though from your letter this moment received I think it is likely that this will not find you at Yarmouth I take my chance, in order to communicate to you the interesting intelligence.

1. “ That Malta as well as Minorca is certainly in our possession, with the French ships that were there; and

2. “ That on the 7th December the Directory declared war against Naples and Sardinia, in consequence of the Neapolitan army having on the 23rd November attacked and driven back the advanced posts of the French troops in the Roman territory.

“ The first piece of intelligence comes to us from Lisbon, where a letter was arrived from Lord Nelson; the second by Paris papers of the 8th.” Copy.

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, December 20. Yarmouth.—“ Nothing can be more perverse than the state of the weather; the wind continues due East, and it is impossible to stir; we have already five packets here waiting with as much impatience as ourselves. The agent of the packet boats has this moment left us with the agreeable news of his being persuaded that the Elbe is frozen, as the two packets from Cruxhaven, of Sunday and Thursday last, have not arrived, though the wind for them has been so favourable that it should have brought them hither in twenty-four hours if they had sailed on any one of these last seven or eight days. The Admiral tells us that the wind looks fixed for some days longer. I must therefore beg you to order through Mr. Broughton my letters and papers to be sent to me here, at Mr. Warmington's, agent for the packet boats at Yarmouth, as long as I am kept here, and I will desire him to forward to me at Berlin any that may come here when I am gone. It is tiresome to be kept here, but I am better satisfied to be upon the spot, than to be absent, because I am now as ready as it can depend upon me to be.”

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 20.—“ I have read the papers you have sent to me. It has often occurred to me that, after the disaster of the French fleet, the single stroke of despair which remained for Buonaparte was to push for India by the Red Sea, but I have always checked myself in that speculation by recollecting how impossible it was for him to get shipping without previous preparation. Besides we should have heard of such a progress by one or other of the East India Company's agents at Aleppo or otherwise. The hearing either at Paris or Madrid of his having reached Ceylon is literally impossible; and, upon the whole, although there is nothing impossible from dates to his having gone to Suez, I think the other story of his assassination is infinitely more probable than this one. I suppose the other news from Malta is true, but I have not heard that the Latona is arrived.

"I don't like the style of Pinto's letter of the 1st December to Almeida. It looks like asking what they know they cannot possibly get, which is always bad, and must be meant to found a pretence for want of exertion on their own part."

Postscript. "Cuyler must in the first instance go to Portugal. If anything is made of the idea of Mulgrave, it must be a subsequent arrangement. It would be difficult from his rank in the army to propose him as commander-in-chief. He is only a major-general. If you was to succeed in obtaining the command of their army to a British officer, I see no means but either sending back General Stuart from Minorca, or taking Sir Ralph Abercrombie from Scotland, if he could be brought to accept of that command. He is naturally very fond of his present situation, but he wrote to the Duke of York some time ago stating that, if his services were thought to be of more use anywhere else, he hoped no ceremony would be used with regard to him. Another idea has struck me that perhaps Sir Charles Grey might be brought to go, if he saw any prospect of fame. If either he or Sir Ralph Abercrombie were to go upon such a command, I think you would have some offers of voluntary service."

LEGISLATIVE UNION OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

Cabinet Note as to Irish revenue.

1798, December 21. London.—"That it is intended to propose for a given number of years a fixed proportion for the contribution of Ireland towards the peace establishment of the whole, and also a fixed proportion for her contribution towards the expenses of war.

"That whether these proportions shall be the same or different must be the subject of separate and detailed discussion.

"But, that on the whole, in as far as relates to peace establishment, it is not probable that, in the present arrangement of the business, Ireland will be called upon for any additional expense beyond what would now be her establishment at a peace, if the union did not take place.

"That the present Irish revenue should be made perpetual, subject to repeal and substitution of taxes by the United Parliament; that it should be appropriated towards defraying the proportion to be so fixed of the general peace establishment, as well as the interest and sinking fund of the Irish debt, and the objects now provided for by annual grant of Parliament.

“It may be matter of consideration whether any surplus of revenue beyond this proportion, which should arise from the increased produce of the Irish taxes, or from the extinction of debt, should be appropriated or reserved for the extra expenses; or should to any limited amount, and for a given time, be applied to objects of local improvement.”

Endorsed:—Taken at the Cabinet, December 21, 1798. Copy sent to the Duke of Portland.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 25. Dublin.—“What the result of this struggle is to be, where every exertion is made on one side and none on the other, it is not difficult to foresee; but Cooke promises wonders as soon as you have settled the arrangement on your side of the water; but from Lord Cornwallis you are to expect nothing, for I am persuaded that of his former character nothing remains but that opinionâtrêtê which certainly will not essentially serve us without other points of character that are lost. It is, however, hopeless to think this over, for I see no solution to the difficulty, and therefore you must be content to work with the tools you have. I have very much thought over and discussed the points which you proposed to me in your letter of the 12th, and am fully satisfied that you will not find a single person interested in the question who will entertain for a moment the idea of classing the boroughs for delegates as in Scotland, and trust me it is equally hopeless to look to any distinction of city members beyond Dublin and Cork. Every thing beyond that will let you at once headlong into every question of population and contribution and all the other speculations of reformers and of republicans; and be assured that every friend to this great measure, whether English or Irish, will feel it an object paramount to every other that these most dangerous ideas of reform of any sort should be wholly put by. But, in whatever way it is done, whether by ballot or by nomination, pray be convinced that it is essential to the justice and to the existence of this country that a committee should be named from session to session, or from month to month, to sit here as an evidence committee, and for the trial of contested elections. And if you attempt to put this by, as well as the ‘committee of Lords Triers’ for appeals in the House of Lords, depend upon it you strengthen the resistance to the Union to a degree that will be irresistible; for I cannot but consider it as an absolute denial of all justice if you compel me to seek it, in the case of appeals, at the bar of the House of Lords of Great Britain, already so loaded that, when I left England, Cowper told me that four years would not clear the paper then before us. The same observation goes to the committees on private Bills, and even to a degree on public Bills; nor can I see what is to be feared from a body so fluctuating as the body would be who might be named by the House of Commons for this purpose. Recollect how much this country is governed by the lawyers, and see what a force of argument and of prejudice you put, by this arrangement, into the hands of those who already are prejudiced against it. These observations are not merely mine, but are equally felt by others who are equally friends to the measure, and I wish you would weigh them very well. The Catholics, as a body, will clearly ultimately be with you, their clergy most decidedly so, and a great part of their lower ranks; but everything that is Republican will join in the fanatic frenzy of the Orangemen against it. Still however, under every possible disadvantage, I continue to think well of the measure, if it is to be such a one as a man can conscientiously say contributes to the strength of the whole by benefiting the component parts. But Foster's declared hostility, Parnell's duplicity, Lord Cornwallis's imbecility, Lord Castlereagh's inexperience, and the treachery of every subordinate minister who opposes upon principles of bargain and sale, altogether compose a mass of formidable considerations to be added to the nonsense of this good people. It is already understood that no man is to be turned out for his vote on the Union; and Lord Cornwallis's name is quoted for this, with as much truth as I was quoted for a declaration of the same nature respecting the Regency; but the effect of it now will possibly be the same as it was then."

W. A. CROSBIE to the DUKE [OF MONTROSE].

Private.

1798, December 25. Dublin Castle.—“We are in a very anxious situation in this country, and you are acquainted with part of the causes which contribute to put us in that state; and, if nothing else were added to so important a subject as the Union must at all times be, there would be matter enough to keep us for some time in a state of suspense and inquietude. A project so hostile to the selfish views of so many inhabitants of this capital of course must induce much opposition and clamour against the measure from them; and we know that the voice of a capital is a voice of great vociferation, and carries with it an almost irresistible force and persuasion. If that were all I should hope, if the measure be sanctioned by the enlightened men of both countries, that the violence and indeed indecent opposition which has been shewn to the measure, without anything like grounds on which to form an opinion, will be resisted by that wisdom, and confidence, and resolution, so necessary when a great measure of public utility is to be carried against the selfish views of some, and the prejudices of still a more numerous body. The lawyers, merchants, and others have had meetings, and have cried down the measure. The latter I think excusable, because, as a commercial body, they may be considered as justified in taking up the measure in a commercial point of view, and giving their advice to Government. I think they have not indeed been temperate in the manner of doing so, nor are they devoid of the imputation of selfish views. But the lawyers are by no means in the same predicament. They have a right to expound the laws, but have nothing to say to the making of them; and I can compare their meeting to nothing but a Jacobin club deliberating upon a measure previous to it being discussed in the National Assembly. With whatever disgust we may look upon such proceedings, we must, however, acknowledge the public mind has been much inflamed by them; and the bringing forward the measure thereby rendered infinitely more serious, and, I am afraid I may add, alarming in the extreme; with this additional mortification in perspective, that whatever disturbances may arise independent of the present question, which are so likely to happen that we are in daily expectation of their breaking out, will be attributed to the proposing a question of such magnitude at so improper a moment. For most of the opposers have taken care to make that their objection, in order to state the impending rising as a consequence of the abhorrence of the people to a Union. You will be astonished, perhaps, to hear of our being still under any apprehension; but we are, I assure you, in a dreadful state, and only less dreadful than a few months ago, as much as private assassination and general plunder and robbery can be called less dreadful than open rebellion. If the present enormities were likely to continue, I should not scruple to say that an open rebellion, which must be crushed, would be infinitely more desirable; for we have troops sufficient to bid defiance to the disaffected in the end, though they may again give us some trouble. I am afraid Lord Cornwallis's system of lenity has not had the success it deserved. But I cannot blame him for trying it, though we savage Irishmen had a tolerable notion of the only way of putting down a rebellion of our own. As to conciliating the minds of the lower Irish, Roman Catholics or Presbyterians, I believe the attempt to be as foolish as the success is impracticable. Whether we act with lenity or severity, their minds will be the same, but their disposition to act can only be curbed by punishment staring them [in] the face. Every act of mercy, I believe in my heart, has operated directly contrary to the intentions of the benefactor, for, instead of bringing back a traitor to his allegiance, it gives him fresh hopes of impunity in crime, and operates still more as an incitement to others. For we all see daily proofs of the greatest villains, bearing commissions of generals in the rebel army, tried and condemned by courts martial, now walking about the streets, and probably hatching new treasons for our destruction.

"I have not heard any arguments against the union which satisfy my mind, and I think I conceive many reasons why it may be of advantage to this country. In the first place, I am not afraid of the English minister defying the members of the Irish branch of the Legislature, or oppressing Ireland in the face of the world, even with the corrupted voice of her members. I should hope there would be an end of divisions in Ireland; the Catholic question would be, of course, put an end to. Parliamentary reform must depend upon England; and we should get rid of those seeds of discontent which were sown in this country by the members in our own Parliament, who were continually abusing England and the corruption of Government for their own purposes; at the same time, forcing that Government to fresh and fresh corruption to resist their opposition. We, of course, shall have as good laws as you have in England; we shall have all the trade we can employ. Dublin will continue still as great a town as it need be; and if some of its opulence shall be transferred to Cork, or elsewhere, I see nothing to lament. As to our pride and nonsense about our independence, I cannot but laugh at a country talking of its independence, who can neither defend herself against her interior or exterior enemies without the men, navy, or credit of the friendly neighbour of whom she is so jealous; and I am sure I feel far from being hurt at the idea of becoming a part of Great Britain."

THE EARL OF ELGIN TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, December 28. Broom Hall, by Edinburgh.—"Although I am in expectation of being in London in the course of ten days, I feel very anxious to lose no time in mentioning to your Lordship an occurrence of much moment to me; that the Duke of Hamilton is now dangerously ill, and in case of his death a green ribbon will be vacant.

"It has been, I believe, at all times customary to bestow orders of knighthood on foreign Ministers. At present, if I mistake not, every person in the line, of my standing and rank in it, has the order of the Bath; and on that ground, had I been within reach at Lord Mansfield's death, I should have been induced to apply to succeed to him, particularly as he received his ribbon while on foreign employment, and as I am the only Scotch Peer in that line. The circumstances of my case are, however, now become much more positive; and I should venture to hope your Lordship will consider this mark of dignity as a very suitable appendage to the embassy before me.

"May I therefore beg leave to solicit your Lordship's kindness and assistance to me in making an application in my favour in a view to a vacancy among the knights of the Thistle. I am quite aware I have no personal claim to urge in apology for my using this liberty with you. But my time having been wholly passed in your Department, I wish to stand upon no other ground; and I can, with truth, assure your Lordship that the sense I entertain of your conduct to me makes me very desirous of putting my interests in your hands, whenever I may be permitted to do so."

LORD GRENVILLE TO J. KING.

Private.

1798, December 28. Dropmore.—"Some time since I received a letter from you stating some circumstances respecting Mr. Arbuthnot, which made it particularly an object to him to be named to some mission. I could at that moment say nothing on this point, however desirous of doing an act of friendship towards him; because I saw no certainty, nor even a near prospect, of such a vacancy as might enable me to consult my good wishes towards him.

"There are now two consulships vacant, one at Lisbon, the other at New York; each of them equal in rank and estimation to the situation of minister plenipotentiary, and I believe both considerably superior in value. If either of these would answer the object which was in view, when this particular application was made, I should be well inclined to recommend him for one of them to the King; but on this condition, which he will of course not think unreasonable that, as these situations are not strictly within the course of promotion in the foreign ministers' line, he will not think himself unkindly dealt with if, on a future vacancy of the situation of minister plenipotentiary, I should propose the removal to him, even though in point of income it might be somewhat less desirable.

"I need hardly add that my only view in this proposal is that of doing him a kindness; and that, if it should on any account not fully and completely meet his wishes, there can be no reason for his not telling me so without reserve, and without the least apprehension of producing any change in my desire to assist him on any other occasion."

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1798, December 29. Yarmouth.—"Though very giddy and much shaken by a rough sea voyage of nine days, I have really lost all sense of my aches and pains in the additional disappointment which I feel at the failure of my voyage when the little news which I collect here seems so full of every possible motive for wishing that I could have succeeded in it. When I sailed I own I was taught by what I heard here not to be sanguine as to the practicability of the passage, though I thought it my duty at all hazards to undertake the experiment; we persevered in it as long as Captain Raper deemed it in any way safe to do so, and were unlucky enough to satisfy ourselves that every possible communication with the German continent was completely cut off; and as you see by the postscript to my public letter, great apprehensions are entertained for the fate of the packet the most advanced, which when last seen, appeared to be making fruitless efforts to return, and the lieutenant of the lugger which convoyed her fears she is lost. The rigour of the winter is beyond what I could have believed; our rigging was so frozen as to be almost unmanageable, and we had the misfortune to lose a man who fell into the sea probably by the slippery hold he had upon the frozen mast. I was less sick than usual, but am too giddy and shaken to add anything now to this letter. The extreme severity of the weather makes all chance of passing for these three weeks or month desperate; I therefore leave my heavy trunks here, and proceed slowly to Audley End, where I shall stay Tuesday and hope to hear from you there ; if it were possible you could come there for a day or two I would stay on there, if not I will come to town.

"I send back Shaw and Mason ; when I go again I have another plan to propose as to having an extra messenger to go from Berlin to Cruxhaven, as Lord St. H[elens] had from the Hague to Helvoet, but I am too sick and giddy to talk of it now."

PAUL, EMPEROR OF RUSSIA, to COUNT WORONZOW.

1798, December 30. St. Petersburg.—"Jusqu'ici nous avons retardé de répondre aux propositions de la Cour de Londres, tant à celles qui vous ont été faites par Lord Grenville, qu'à celles qui ont été répétées ici par le Chevalier Whitworth, ayant rencontré des circonstances qui exigeoient des éclaircissemens ultérieurs. Mais, en attendant, nous avons senti dans toute sa force la solidité de ces communications amicales, et la nécessité réelle d'un accord sincère entre les Puissances intéressées, et, en conséquence de cela, d'un concert unanime de leurs efforts.

"Sans répéter ici la part active que nous avons prise au commencement de cette année dans la cause commune par nos forces de terre et de mër, envoyées au secours et à la défense de nos alliés, mais voulant que notre co-opération s'étende le plus loin que possible, nous avons crû que le premier pas étoit de tacher de rapprocher nos deux alliés vers les liens qui leur conviennent et aux intérêts communs ; et si nos derniers conseils seront considérés par le Roi de la Grande Bretagne avec les dispositions amicales touchant les disputes survenues avec l'Empereur des Romains, il en resultera un bon commencement pour des opérations vigoureuses contre l'ennemi, car on ne sçauroit nier que, sans la participation de la Cour de Vienne, il est difficile d'espérer de grands succès sur le Continent.

"Le second effort efficace de notre coté a été fait en faveur du Roi des deux Siciles. Aussitôt que nous avons sçu qu'il a fait une démarche convenable à sa dignité afin de délivrer l'Italie du joug François, accompagnée des mesures de prudence, nous avons consenti volontiers à lui donner un secours de nos troupes, consistant en huit mille hommes d'infanterie et d'artillerie avec 200 Cosacks, en les expédiant par le chemin le plus court par la Moldavie, la Wallachie, le Banat de Kraysovée, et la Croatie jusqu'à la ville de Zary, qui est dans la Dalmatie actuelle de l'Autriche ; d'où ils doivent être transportés sur des batiments Napolitains en Italie ; sans en demander aucun autre avantage que leur nourriture, comme cela est stipulé ordinairement dans tous les traités d'alliance.

"Le troisième moyen et très efficace pour faire du mal à l'ennemi, ou pour mieux dire, pour atteindre le but que nous attendons avec l'Angleterre, et avec toutes les Puissances bien organisées, est le consentement du Roi de Prusse d'entrer avec nous dans la coalition commune. Nous lui avions déjà préalablement proposé tout ce qui pouvoit exciter l'amour propre et l'appas des acquisitions en donnant l'espérance de notre propre secours. Nous renouvelons actuellement les ordres à notre Ministre Comte Panin de lui faire définitivement les mêmes demandes, comme vous le verrez par notre rescrit, dont la copie est ci-jointe. Nous faisons consister le secours en question dans quarante-cinq milles hommes d'infanterie, et de cavallerie, avec le nombre suffisant d'artillerie, aussitôt qu'un traité provisional conclu par notre ministère et par le Chevalier Whitworth, et signé par ce dernier sub spe rati, aura été ratifié par Sa Majesté Britannique. Quoique d'après nos intentions qui assurent le salut de nos alliés, et même on peut dire de toute l'Europe, nous ne doutions par que la Cour de Londres approuvera la conduite de son Ministre, néanmoins nous avons reconnu nécessaire d'expliquer ici le contenu de ce traité.

“ Dans le préambule on fait mention du but des opérations du Roi de Prusse du côté de la Hollande, conformément aux propositions même de l'Angleterre, qui vous ont été communiquées par Lord Grenville et à notre ministère par le Chevalier Whitworth. Nous envisageons comme une acquisition grande et utile pour toutes les Puissances bien-intentionnées, si les ci-devant Pays-Bas Autrichiens puissent être arrachés à la France et joints à la Hollande. Touchant cet article, de même que des acquisitions que le Roi de Prusse pourra faire en sa faveur aux dépens de notre ennemi, nous avons des assurances de la part de la Cour de Vienne, qu'elle ne s'y opposera en aucune manière.

“ Dans les articles suivans du traité nous bornons notre secours au Roi de Prusse, comme il est dit ci-dessus, à quarante-cinq milles hommes et d'après cela on a posé par une diminution proportionnée d'avec les projets précédents tant les subsides, en les fixant à 900,000 livres sterling, que pareillement la somme un fois à payer, nécessaire pour équiper les dites troupes, faisant 225,000*l.* sterling, et pour d'autres dépenses à raison de 37,500*l.* sterling par mois, que le Roi de la Grande Bretagne prendra sur lui comme dette, payable après la conclusion de la paix. Quoique ce traité doive être considéré comme provisionel, car il est naturel que si le Roi de Prusse ne se décide pas à agir en faveur des alliés, et reste dans sa précédente neutralité suspecte, dans quel cas nous devons aussi nous borner à observer sa conduite, et nous tenir tout prêts à arrêter par la force toute démarche de sa part contre les Puissances en guerre avec les François ; dans quel cas le dit traité n'aura point son effet ; néanmoins si pendant la continuation de la présente guerre il s'ouvre une facilité pour employer notre secours, le dit traité y servira de fondement et de règle.

“ En laissant à vos soins de conduire à son terme cette affaire avec le ministère Anglois, nous revenons à d'autres propositions de Lord Grenville relativement à la guerre et à ses conséquences.

“ Nous considérons comme un moyen salutaire pour toute l'Europe, et comme le seul pour tranquilliser toutes les Puissances, de ramener la France dans les limites où elle a été avant la Révolution qui y eut lieu. Pour l'atteindre par la force des armées, c'est l'affaire de tous les alliés ; et ayant conclu la paix à ces conditions on peut espérer très aisément qu'il s'y opérera de soi-même un changement ; par le moyen du quel il s'y établira un gouvernement régulier et qui ne sera ni préjudiciable ni dangereux pour les autres Puissances. Mais, au reste, toutes stipulations détaillées provisoires relativement aux acquisitions de la Cour de Vienne et autres objets pareils, entraînent plusieurs incoveniens. Premièrement l'acquisition des succès dépendra des suites et des avantages de la guerre exposée à beaucoup d'incertitude. En second lieu, en les fixant d'avance dans une vûe raccourcie, ne donnera-t-on pas par là-même un prétexte à cette Cour de chercher préalablement à la guerre, suivie de grandes dépenses et de grands dangers, à obtenir quelques avantages, même moindres, par le moyen de sa négociation avec les François. Et quoique sans doute cela ne sera pas solide, mais ayant résolu une fois de rester neutre, toute la coalition sera reduite alors à un grand affoiblissement. Et enfin, troisièmement, il ne sçauroit ne pas exister quelque proportion entre les acquisitions des Cours de Vienne et de Berlin, établie communement d'après les rapports précédents de la Puissance, et de l'étendue de l'une et l'autre : c'est pourquoi nous croyons plus convenable pour nos vûes communes avec l'Angleterre, sans ôter à ces deux Cours la perspective des acquisitions, si par malheur elles y trouvent plus d'appas que dans la sûreté pour les tems à venir de leurs propres trônes et de leurs possessions actuelles, de tâcher de les amener à une prompte décision. Nous ferons auprès de la Cour de Vienne de nouvelles instances en lui représentant que dans le tems que, non seulement le Roi des deux Siciles est entré dans les états de Rome et en Toscane pour en chasser les François, mais que même ces derniers ont déjà déclaré la guerre au Roi de Sardaigne, menacé d'une ruine totale ; quand leur traité conclû à Campo Formio est évidemment enfreint du coté des François par l'expulsion du Pape de sa capitale et de ses états, et par la subversion hostile de la Suisse ; et quand la négociation entamée à Rastadt est accompagnée des demarches violentes tendant à la ruine de l'empire d'Allemagne, la dignité personnelle de l'Empereur d'Allemagne et sa bonne foi à l'égard de ses alliés exigent impérieusement qu'il prononce sa détermination et adopte sans délai des mesures actives ; que personne ne peut le regarder comme agresseur, aussitôt qu'il défend le traité violé par la partie adverse, et l'Empire, dont il est le Chef, exposé aux vexations cruelles d'un ennemi acharné à la ruine de toutes les Puissances ; et que c'est actuellement qu'il se présente l'occasion et les moyens de montrer et sa grande force dans les opérations, et sa fermeté dans les principes et dans les procédés.

“Quant à ce qui regarde la réstitution au Pape de sa capitale et de ses états, le rétablissement du Roi de Sardaigne dans son ancienne indépendance, et d'autres articles expliqués par l'Angleterre, nos idées et nos intentions ne sont nullement différentes de celles du Roi de la Grande Bretagne ; et nous désirerions sincèrement que dans tous les arrangemens et transactions exigés par la nécessité, on puisse autant qu'il est possible éviter les changemens, ou de secousses qui entraînent après soi l'annihilation des puissances ou des états entiers.

“D'après ces explications confidentielles de notre part, et des efforts employés pour l'avantage de la cause commune, nous nous flattons d'obtenir que la Cour de Londres reconnoitra que personne ne sçauroit nier que nous ne soyons dans la guerre actuelle une des parties principales agissantes.

“Tout ce qui a été dit ci-dessus, et tout ce que nous faisons pour aider nos alliés, est un témoignage meilleur que toutes les déclarations quelconques : mais si d'après le consentement général des alliés il sera trouvé nécessaire de faire des déclarations pareilles, soit auprès des autres Cours afin de les exciter d'entrer dans la coalition, soit à la Diète de l'Empire et au Congrès de Rastadt avec l'explication de nos intentions, en insistant de rompre une négociation aussi préjudiciable, et de conseiller aux membres de l'empire Germanique de faire cause commune avec leur Chef, nous ne nous refuserons pas à le faire, en expédiant en son tems à cet effet des ordres à nos Ministres, afin qu'ils agissent ensemble et d'accord avec les personnes accréditées par Leurs Majestés l'Empereur des Romains et les Rois de la Grande Bretagne et de Prusse ; avec cette reserve cependant, que les paroles soient fortifiées par les actions ; car autrement les suites de pareilles déclarations produiront seulement des réponses indécentes, des désagréments, et une inconsidération universelle.

“Vous communiquerez le contenu de ce rescrit au ministère de Sa Majesté Britanique dans toute son étendue, en demandant qu'on envoie des ordres à Vienne et à Berlin pour exiger les efforts nécessaires et uniformes des ministres Anglois avec les notres, qui se trouvent auprès de ces deux Cours. Translated into French.

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 30. Wimbeldon.—“I send for your perusal a very rough draft of a private letter I propose to send to General Stuart. If any thing else occurs to you I shall be happy to receive your suggestions and likewise your corrections. I shall send off Major Gifford in a very few days.

“Have you ever turned in your mind how far it might not be practicable to induce Russia to give us a force of twenty thousand men, or even a less number of troops. They could be brought down the Mediterranean, and, if divided between Minorca and Portugal, they would do wonders. Under the sentiments by which that Court is now actuated, they certainly cannot wish to see France extend their successes in any quarter. If not to Portugal, perhaps they would agree to let them go to Italy, and they would be a wonderful tower of strength in that quarter. Do speak to Woronzow on this subject, and don't give it up unless you are convinced on trial that it is impossible.”

CHARLES ARBUTHNOT to LORD GRENVILLE.

1798, December 31. London.—“Happening to be at Lord Gwyder's in the country when King sent me your Lordship's letter, it was not in my power to speak to him on the subject of it, or to answer it so soon as I should have wished to do; but now, if your Lordship will permit me, I shall beg leave to trouble you with a few lines, as I want extremely to endeavour to express my gratitude for the very uncommon kindness you have shown me, and at the same time to explain as clearly as I can the exact situation in which I am at present standing.

“As King has informed your Lordship of those circumstances which at a particular moment made me more than ever anxious to be employed, it would be unnecessarily intruding on your time if I now did more than merely say that the application which I ventured to make was in consequence of a conversation with Lord Cholmondeley, who confessed to me that he saw a very great chance of my being successful if I could obtain such an income as would meet with the family’s approbation. Not then flattering myself that such vacancies in the foreign line were likely to take place as could enable your Lordship to assist me, I thought myself called upon to desist from those endeavours which were sure of being opposed while my circumstances were so limited; and, whether it be owing to that or to any other cause, I am obliged to own that such information has very recently been given to me on the subject of my wishes as makes me apprehend that the appearances which really were most extremely in my favour are now considerably altered. But yet from what did happen, from the observations which I was enabled to make myself, and from those also which my friends made, I can’t help flattering myself that I may still succeed; though, at the same time, I ought not to conceal that, as there might be difficulty and even danger to my hopes in bringing this point at once to issue, I fear such a delay in filling up the vacancy could not be allowed by your Lordship as would permit me to take the necessary measures for obtaining the wished for information. If, however, a delay of a few weeks could be granted to me, I trust I need not say that I would not encroach on your Lordship’s goodness; for the very instant of my becoming certain either to succeed or fail, I would acquaint King with the result. But this favour I do not presume to ask; I merely mention it as desirable.

“As your Lordship has not only had the goodness to offer me a very lucrative situation, but has also most kindly left it entirely to my option either to accept it or decline it, without leaving me under the apprehension that in the latter case I might forfeit your future favour, I can only say that to me this particular appointment seems to be highly desirable in every respect, and to hold out such pecuniary advantages as must totally remove all difficulties with regard to income; but in reply to the expectation which your Lordship expressed of my not thinking it unreasonable if I were at some future period to be removed to a diplomatic mission, I must beg leave to assure you that, after having treated me as you have done, whatever conduct you might henceforward hold towards me I should always know it to be intended kindly; and indeed, with regard to the instance now in question, instead of considering it as a disservice, I should feel it to be a peculiar favour if, at a convenient opportunity, I were again to be brought into my old line, which I should certainly prefer, however considerably I might be a loser in point of emolument.

"Before I conclude this letter, which is much longer than I had hoped it would have been, I should wish to return your Lordship those thanks which my heart feels, but which my words will ill express. I may however say with truth that your Lordship's long and continued kindness has made me devoted to you for life."

Postscript. "I forgot to mention that, if I were enabled to accept either, it would be the Consulship at Lisbon, which for many reasons I should prefer."

IRISH UNION.

Note as to the mode of bringing forward the business of the Union.

1798, December.—"The following may perhaps, on consideration, appear the most advantageous course of proceeding on this subject :

"That the British Parliament should adjourn to the same day (the 22nd or 24th of January) on which the Irish Parliament is to meet for the dispatch of business. That the measure should on the same day be recommended to both Parliaments ; in England by a message to both Houses, in Ireland by the Lord Lieutenant's speech. That the answer to this should, in the first instance, be quite general ; and that a day should be fixed for taking the subject into consideration ; which day should be, as nearly as might be, the same in both countries, and should be sufficiently distant to allow time for a call in Ireland, if that should be proposed by the opposers of the measure, unless indeed it were thought advisable that the proposal should come from Government.

"On the day fixed, no other proceeding would, as it appears, be necessary than a joint address of the two Houses in each kingdom, expressing their disposition to promote so desirable an object on suitable terms ; and requesting the king to appoint Commissioners of each kingdom to confer together, and to prepare a plan for this purpose to be submitted to His Majesty, and (if His Majesty shall think proper) to be laid before Parliament.

"Such an address would pass (if at all) by the first week in February. In the next six weeks it would be impossible that the Irish Commissioners should come to England, on account of the business of their Parliament. But much, and very valuable, time would be saved, if it were thought expedient that the British Commissioners should name a certain number of their body to go to Ireland to collect information there, and to confer with any sub-committee of the Irish Commissioners. If the persons selected for this purpose were men well acquainted with the details of Irish and English trade, particularly the former, more progress might be made towards a conclusion by a fortnight or three weeks of such discussion taking place upon the spot, than in as many months of formal conferences between large bodies of commissioners, sitting in England."

HENRY DUNDAS to [W. PITT].

[1798, December.] Wimbledon.—"The more I consider it, the more doubtful I become on the subject of the Cabinet deliberation yesterday.

"In consequence of the rupture of the negotiation at Lisle, and the language and menaces of France immediately subsequent to it, the nation was put to the necessity of taking a decided and manly part on its own bottom, trusting to its own resources, and without longer entangling itself with the jealousies and perfidy of other powers to which they [it?] had already sacrificed so much of the treasure of the country. From that time Great Britain has proceeded acting upon those principles with fortitude, ardour, and perseverance; and having placed ourselves in a state of security by our own exertions, we perceive the effects of it upon every feeling and interest of the country. Every impatience for peace is gone, the word is never mentioned; our commerce is unbounded, daily increasing, and adding to the wealth, the capital, and of course the resources and revenues of the country. And I believe I may safely aver that the country has now settled itself into a calm determination to fight the battle we are engaged in without shrinking, on a confidence that the new mode of calling forth the resources of the country will be persevered in and improved upon, for the purpose of continuing the war so long as the madness and obstinacy of the enemy shall render it necessary.

"When I refer back to a period not older than twelve months, and compare the feelings and state of the country at present with what they were so short a time back, I am sure it will be admitted that, in the foregoing description of this country, there is nothing exaggerated, and nothing which every man cannot testify from his own personal observation.

"Placed in so enviable a situation, it behoves the rulers of the country well to consider before they adopt any measure or bring forward any proposition that may revolt the feelings of the country, or give a different direction to those feelings than that in which they now run. I am afraid that a new continental system, or an old one again reverted to at any burdensome expense, may stagger the confidence of the country in its own resources, and produce many of the prejudices and doubts which we have already encountered and overcome. At present we feel every shilling expended is for British security and for British purposes, rendered necessary by the obstinacy and inveteracy of our enemy. It may be true that the objects now in contemplation are so connected with the permanent interests of the country as entitle them fairly to be considered as British interests; but, still, that is a matter of reasoning rather than of immediate feeling, and in every country, and in none more than Great Britain, the general conduct of the public at large is operated upon more by their feelings than by their reasoning and remote theories.

“Notwithstanding all I have said, I am not able to satisfy myself that it would be right to give a cold negative to the proposition of Russia. Every principle of policy present and future point out that power as the natural ally of Great Britain; and, in all our transactions with her, that principle ought never to be overlooked; our answer therefore ought to be open, frank, and unreserved. I would detail with much precision the change which the state of this country has undergone since its last proposition to the late Empress of Russia, and since our last proposition in April to the Emperor of Germany. For this purpose the topics referred to in the note Lord Grenville read to us yesterday ought to be particularly dwelt upon, and there are two topics so true and so striking they ought to be insisted upon as very prominent features. The first, the great expense we have been put to in arming the country at large for its own security, an expense rendered necessary by the abandonment of us by all our allies; and, therefore, the nation having incurred that expense, would complain with justice of being put to a second expense for the same purpose. I say the same purpose, for it will be recollected that one of the great grounds upon which this country has always justified foreign subsidies is the diversion it creates at a distance, and thereby indirectly providing for our security at home. We have now done this at our own expense completely by means of our fleets and armies; and we should be most unfavourably listened to, if we were now to resort to security at home as a topic for granting a foreign subsidy. The second topic I refer to is the great additional expense we have put ourselves to recently in augmenting our fleet so as to obtain the same decided superiority in the Mediterranean we have hitherto enjoyed everywhere else. This is an expense which we must continue, and any nation, whether it be Russia or Austria, that may be obliged to engage in hostilities with France, must feel that this last mentioned expense is, in truth, as much for the other powers of Europe in general as for any separate interest of this country. With that proposition, so undeniable in itself, and so obvious to the most limited understanding in the kingdom, it may be fairly stated to Russia and to Austria that this country will, in the expense of that fleet, feel that it is already contributing its full quota of a subsidy for the carrying on the war on the Continent.

“Having stated these topics with all their force, I would conclude with declaring that the Government of this country dare not venture to revolt the feeling of the public by bringing forward any such proposition of expense for continental purpose as they had formerly done with much difficulty under very different circumstances. At the same time, if Russia can form any concert with Austria so as to bring forward a co-operation between them truly and fairly and honourably directed to such a conduct of the war as tends to a more speedy termination of the war, and to the future security of Europe, we will engage to embark in the cause a sum not exceeding one hundred thousand pounds per month, to be divided in such proportions as they may arrange between themselves; but beyond that sum in the whole we cannot go, without endangering that general good disposition which at present pervades this country. And here it would be necessary to state, that, although the observation does not apply to Russia, of whose fidelity we entertain no doubts, still it is improper to disguise that the aversion of this country to renew any more subsidiary treaties is greatly increased by the unfaithful execution of those already past, on the part of our allies.

“If Russia is not satisfied with the above proposition, our ambassador may be instructed to bring forward another upon the basis suggested in Lord Grenville’s note; I mean, without at all implicating ourselves with Austria, to offer to subsidize an army of Russians for British purposes; and if such a force could be obtained either for a vigorous attack on Holland, for the recapture of Malta, the defence of Switzerland, the opening the markets of South America, the capture of Brest, I am satisfied that a sum of twelve hundred thousand pounds given for such purposes would be not only tolerated but popular.”

THOMAS GRENVILLE TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 1. Audley End.—“I have recovered my strength but not my temper, being still a good deal more cross and out of humour than I ever remember to have been. I shall be in town to-morrow, and am impatient to see whether, instead of groaning over my disappointment, I may not by the information which London can so extensively furnish, find some less tardy means of repairing it, than the season is likely to supply, or the helpless conversation of Yarmouth can suggest. If the King of Prussia had a hundredth part of the impatience to see me which I have to see him, and would only send the Duke of Brunswick forward to make a little thaw in Holland, the Prince of Orange would not be starving at Harwich, nor should I be grumbling over my return from Yarmouth.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 2. Dublin.—“Lord Castlereagh is come back announcing the determination of Great Britain to push the question to its utmost, and to carry it either now or to-morrow. But he says nothing of the quo modo, save that commissioners are to be named, and that the whole Catholic question is to be kept out of the measure. The latter, I know, cannot be in fact, though it may in appearance; because unless the Catholics understand distinctly that the door is left open, with the intention of letting them into the eligibility for Irish seats, on the same footing as a Scotch Presbyterian is eligible for a Scotch seat, at some convenient and fitting opportunity, be assured that the measure cannot pass. The foolish and almost Jacobin association of all the Orangemen against the Union has had the fortunate effect of turning all the Catholics (except the republicans of that persuasion) to the measure, and they ought not to be lost. Pray turn this in your mind, and be a little communicative as to what you have settled; and remember that nothing will so completely relieve the non-efficiency of Lord Cornwallis on this subject as the having here an able Commission, to set [sit] here for the purpose of treating with the Irish Commissioners. Such an arrangement would wonderfully facilitate the whole thing, and you might be perfectly sure of controlling it from England. Lord Auckland would be the man in the world for such a mission, and the English militia now serving here might give some few who might be added to those whom you would send over, Lord Euston, Lord Hertford, myself, perhaps Lord Dorchester. But the advantage of this would be the giving real efficiency to Lord Cornwallis's government without trenching upon his situation."

LORD GRENVILLE to the EARL OF CARYSFORT.

1799, January 7. Cleveland Row.—"It was not till to-day that I have been able to talk with Mr. Pitt on the subject on which we conversed when you were last in town. The delay has arisen from his being wholly occupied in the details of the Income bill, and latterly from his being out of town.

"I found him, as I had expected, with every possible good wish to do whatever might be agreeable to you; but, at the same time, stating strongly the difficulties of an increase of the peerage, a measure to which I well know that the King has more than once expressed to him his great repugnance. I urged on this subject the necessity which there would probably be of extending this rule or limit, whatever it may be, on account of the measure of the Union in Ireland, and that as that extension would probably be in favour of Irish peers, that circumstance considerably strengthened your pretensions.

"He told me that it was yet quite uncertain what would be done on that point; that as yet he knows but of two persons intended, and those of a description or situation that seemed to make strong grounds of exception in their favour. That he could however certainly not answer for it that he might not be compelled to go further; and that, although the King's injunctions and his own sentiments as to the inconvenience of further increase would not allow him to stretch the rule with the view of including you in it, yet, unquestionably, it would give him pleasure to do in your instance what he did for any other person of pretensions at all equal to yours.

"Here I conceive the matter rests for the present; and till he sees a little further into the arrangements to which the discussion of the Union may lead, you will, I imagine, think it not unreasonable that he should not as yet be able to give a more decisive answer, nor do I think the delay at all injurious to your wishes." Copy.

LORD GRENVILLE to RUFUS KING.

1799, January 9. Cleveland Row.—“In consequence of our last conversation relative to St. Domingo, I have, after discussing the subject with some of my colleagues, prepared the enclosed minute, which I send for your consideration as the basis of an arrangement which would, I think, provide equitably for the commercial interests of our two countries as concerned in that business; and what is infinitely more important, would afford as good security as the nature of things allows of, against the infinite dangers to which our islands, and your southern provinces, would be exposed from an unrestrained intercourse with St. Domingo in its present state.

“If you should be at leisure, and could meet Mr. Pitt and Mr. Dundas here to-morrow morning at eleven, half an hour's discussion might very probably so far terminate the business as to enable us to write to America, and to dispatch Colonel Grant. If you had any wish to see me earlier I shall be at home.”
Copy.

COMMODORE SIR W. SIDNEY SMITH to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private and secret.

1799, January 10. Constantinople, Tigre.—“I have much satisfaction in being enabled by my reception here to assure you that the measure you adopted of sending the person who was to fulfil the objects of the treaty of alliance himself to contract the obligations has been taken as you meant it, and has operated as an additional cement to a long subsisting friendship. I may add too that it has a good effect towards creating a better understanding between the Russian and British missions here than I found to subsist, our views and relative position being better defined de vive voix by a person so lately in direct personal intercourse with principals, than by formal notes and distant hints which did but increase distance. The Russian envoy is of the old school and much more exclusively Russian than is consistent with the liberal system of politics developed to me by his colleague at Richmond. His age and diplomatic rank occasioned him to make greater pretensions to take the lead dictatorially than my brother could or ought to admit, for, not content with the early, constant, and unlimited communication of the business in hand during its progress, he attempted to assume a right of decision and arbitration perfectly incompatible with our situation as an independent power of known good faith, and therefore not likely to infringe in the least on the conditions of our alliance; which, of course, if it were not expressed, implies the obligation not to contract anything contrary to the spirit of that alliance, a thing not in the least probable on such an occasion as the one in question. He even required that his act of acceptance (which I own I did not conceive to be necessary at all from the envoy at Constantinople, as we were not empowered to treat with him) should precede the signature of our treaty; which, had we acquiesced, would have made us appear in the eyes of the Turks to be the passive instruments of Russia, or at least subject to her censure; the dragoman of the Porte (who, though sufficiently anti-Jacobin and anti-Gallican, is rendered, by his ambition to have one of the Principalities, much more exclusively Russian than he ought to be) being ready to give that turn to the transaction, by way of increasing the exclusive influence of Russia to his personal advantage. All this was to be seen with half an eye, and of course had not escaped my brother's penetration. M. Tomara not expecting to find me more pliant than my brother in this respect, only touched very gently on it, but finding me, notwithstanding, sufficiently disposed to conciliate as much as possible, and to pursue our equal interests with perfect impartiality, was content to accept our notification of our treaty after signature; which he even admitted to be the natural mode, considering that it could not be called a treaty, or accepted as such, till it was signed; after which he sent us whatever he pleased to call his act of acceptation, which, for my own part, I thought he might have allowed to be sent direct from Petersburg to London, instead of pushing himself forward as a principal. One naturally mistrusts some design where a man makes a very essential point of what is apparently of trifling import. We treated the matter as un-essential, at the same time of course receiving and transmitting whatever he chose to send us without commenting thereon when done. This accounts for the act of acceptation which will be transmitted with our joint dispatch, and which your Lordship may not expect to see come from Constantinople, as we were not instructed to make any agreements with Russia, and certainly had no occasion for any confirmation of those already existing. M. Tomara made such a point of this in conformity (as he said) to written private instructions from his sovereign, so that we let him take his own course, except as to the time, and he is now perfectly satisfied, which I, of course, wished he should be in the beginning of such a connection. I send you the inclosed in proof of our good personal understanding, which can alone excuse my transmission of personal compliments; his letter was in answer to my invitation to dine with me on board the Tigre the day after the signature of our treaty, when it was announced to the world by a salute from the Tigre and Tophana battery conjointly, as proposed by me, and agreed to after reference to Sultan Selim. His Imperial Majesty is much pleased with the presence of the ship under his windows, and has directed a very ample supply of fresh meat, vegetables, fruit, and wine!!! to be sent on board every day for the consumption of the ship's company; he has sent privately for the prints of the naval actions and the portraits of the admirals which his people told him were on board, and expressed much satisfaction at learning they were destined for him, as well as the acceptable present of cannon."

LORD GRENVILLE to the DUKE OF PORTLAND.

1799, January 12. Dropmore.—"I had intended before I left town yesterday to write to your Grace on the subject of the draft of the Lord Lieutenant's speech, and I am very sorry that it escaped my recollection. I feel the delicacy that is due to a person in that situation who must be considered as the best judge of the effect to be produced in Ireland by particular phrases and turns of expression; and therefore, although there are several points put in a manner in which I should certainly not have expressed myself if it had fallen to my lot to address the Irish Parliament in the present very peculiar and critical circumstances, and some which may, I fear, in debate afford a handle against the Government, I do but [not?] think it necessary to trouble you with remarking on them, the rather indeed as I see that some of them had not escaped your notice.

"But there is an omission in the part which speaks of foreign politics, which I suppose is accidental, but which might produce serious mischief; I mean the passage where the Ottoman Porte is mentioned without any reference to the conduct of Russia; this I conclude there can be no difficulty in rectifying.

"Another passage which has struck me very forcibly indeed is that where the Lord Lieutenant (I write from memory, not having the draft here), after speaking of the system of mercy and lenity which he has pursued, contrasts it with a system of revenge and unnecessary severity. This is so put that I conceive no one can read the passage without supposing a censure intended on the plan of government which he found established in the country on his arrival there. I do not impute to him the intention of throwing so harsh, and so very unmerited a censure on his colleagues; but I am confident such must be the impression of the public if the speech should appear to the world in its present shape; and your Grace will not be surprised that, with this impression, I should be very solicitous for the omission or total alteration of that paragraph.

"Even in the view in which I conceive the Lord Lieutenant to have intended this sentence, I cannot help very much doubting its propriety or wisdom. That civil war should have produced mutual animosity and violence (such as persons not engaged in such a scene must condemn), is not matter of much surprise. Nor can any one at all acquainted with the local and peculiar circumstances of Ireland think it wonderful that these motives should, in that country, have produced individual instances of savage ferocity on both sides, which, God be thanked, are repugnant to the very nature of Englishmen. But while the Government applies itself in Ireland to check these outrages with an equal and impartial hand, I see neither necessity nor policy for bringing them forward to public view in a speech from the Throne, and loading with the odium of them (for such must be the effect) all those who have been fighting our cause as well as their own, and whose aid the Government must again require whenever the enemy may make another attempt on the Irish coast.

"You will have the goodness to excuse this long letter on a point in which it is most probable that your own opinion has outrun any remarks of mine." Copy.

THE EARL OF MORNINGTON TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 13. Fort St. George.—“I hope you will have received long before this can reach you a great packet from me by the ship Eurydice. You will not be surprised to hear that I am at this place in the present crisis. Dundas will inform you of all my proceedings; which I know you will approve; unless you are much altered since the month of July, 1798. I still trust that we shall not have a war, but if war should be inevitable, it will be short and successful. All here is right; Lord Clive in high spirits. I find him a very sensible man; but he is so reserved and shy, that he is not known even to those who transact business with him every day. With me he is on the most intimate and cordial footing. His temper is admirable, and his disposition amiable to the greatest degree. All faction is fled.

“Invidia infelix . . . and you may rely on the best news from this quarter in a short time.

“I am in remarkably good health; much the better for my sea voyage, and ready for all events; but confident of a prosperous issue to this crisis. The great activity required by these times keeps up my spirits, which would otherwise sink under the horrors of separation from my family and friends.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

[1799, January 14. Dublin.]—“I see no reason to alter my opinion upon the question of the Union, namely that nothing except Lord Cornwallis’s imbecility can endanger it. But he and his Secretary have both taken a tone within these few days (the reason of which I do not exactly understand, and the effect of which may be very mischievous) of declaring that the Catholic question is wholly unconnected with the question of Union, and so entirely unmixed with it that he cannot discuss their Church establishment or any of their wishes. And Lord Castlereagh told my informant that this language was held because they feared they might indispose the Protestants, and because the Government of England was not prepared to say how far it might be possible for England to concede to them. I can easily conceive your difficulties on the latter head, but I cannot understand the policy in Ireland of risking the loss of the Catholic support for the idle speculation of coquetting with the Orange clubs, who are distinctly hostile to the utmost extent of their means. Remember that England is strong enough to maintain herself in Ireland against either of these parties by the help of the other, but she is not strong enough to grapple with both. This has completely put me out of conceit with my project for a church establishment for the Catholics, for it cannot be formed without some little communication; and I feel that I am doing mischief if it is determined not to go on with what I always thought had been settled as a leading feature, necessary for completing the measure of the Union. Lord Castlereagh is confident in his numbers, but the violent Opposition are equally sure of their majority. The Speaker refused to call upon him when he landed in Ireland, and went out of town to avoid any further explanation; but is quoted for a declaration 'that this was a question upon which it is fitting that every gentleman, whether in office or not, should judge for himself; and that no Government would venture so violent a measure as that of removing from office for such an opinion.' This declaration has been acted upon; for several persons holding office during pleasure have declared and even advertised their hostility, and no notice has been taken of them. Lord Boyle has asked (and obtained) Lord Shannon's leave to oppose, and the Speaker has enlisted several of the young men, such as Lord Cole, Lord Corry, and others. Lord Carhampton is doing a great deal of mischief from England by declaring his intention to oppose, and by encouraging to oppose by stating that he had told Mr. Pitt 'that he dared not turn him out.' All this should be stopped or the contagion will spread. It is imagined that Parnell will oppose, but of that I do not believe one word; though I know that the Speaker has great influence with him. You should in England be prepared with means to meet one difficulty which will occur in April, namely, the return to England of many of the English militia who have volunteered to serve only to that period. Lord Cornwallis deceives himself into the idea that they will continue to serve, but remember that you ought not to trust to his information upon it.

"As to union, once more I add that Cooke is sanguine that it will be carried in Parliament; and, in that case, I have very little fear for the rest."

E. COOKE to [LORD GRENVILLE].

Most secret.

1799, January 15. Dublin Castle.—"There is much violence against union among the Protestants, and especially the old friends of Government who work, many of them, underhand. And the Protestant Ascendency men are active against it everywhere. I hope, however, our majority will be good on the first day; and if Lord Ely, Lord Downshire, and Lord Abercorn are decided, I have no doubt of the measure in Parliament.

"My particular reason for writing to your Lordship is that I conceive the question will be decided by the Catholics. The general order of the leaders of that body is for no Catholic to take a part against it; and, as Orange violence has increased against it, the Catholics seem more anxious for it.

"I find, in conversation, that several persons wish that the grant of political equality to the Catholics should accompany the measure of union, and many, such as Lord Shannon, who have been hitherto against them; but they conceive that, when the door is shut against reform, admitting Irish Catholics to sit in the English Parliament could do no harm.

"The Catholic Bishops are in town, and, I hear, admirably well disposed at present.

"I write this in order that your Lordship may consider whether, in debate in England, the exclusion for ever of the Catholics from equality and political privileges should be insisted upon; and whether some latitude should not be left for taking them in at an early period.

"I have not yet heard that there is any serious idea of making a tumult in the meeting of Parliament; much art is used to intimidate.

"We hear the Cork address will be unanimous.

"The North is not ill-disposed; but the general language of independence may have an effect on them.

"I do not see yet any junctions of opposition and united Irishmen, nor of Papist and Orangemen; some low attempts have been made.

"If it were possible to hint that the Catholics should be admitted to equality on a peace, provided they acted heartily in this question, and through the war, it might be of great use."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 16. Dublin.—"You will have heard by yesterday's mail that last night Lord Cornwallis dismissed Sir J. Parnell. I should have written to apprise you of it, but that I was in hopes to have been able to inform you of his successor, and I delayed till the mail (which was early) was gone. This morning Corry was ordered to attend Lord Cornwallis, and has just told me that he is appointed. You will at least have the advantage of a very able and active man, in the place of a most pig-headed and treacherous fool. I know for certain that he was convinced as late as yesterday morning that Government would not dare to remove him; and consequently that he is completely duped into his patriotism by the Speaker, who has thrown away his scabbard. The removal of J. C. Beresford and of two others is likewise said to be determined on. Cooke thinks the minority will be about 100; my ideas are that they will divide 120, but some of the stray sheep are returned to the fold, amongst whom is Lord Boyle. All now depends upon the immediate prosecution of the measure, even at the expense perhaps of some of the accuracy necessary in such a work; and with these impressions you will judge my disappointment when Corry told me that Lord Castlereagh had told him that he had not yet got the draft from England of the Bill for appointing commissioners; and that he could not engage for any specific time in which it would be ready. Now as you are always called upon to do everybody's business as well as your own, I do adjure you not to let this matter sleep, but to put it into some immediate train, for, if the interval of time between your prologue (as you term it in your last letter) and your play is too long, be assured that it will be damned. As to your new plan of electing peers for life, I own I do not like it; nor the new system of the House of Commons; but I like the Union too well as a measure to quarrel with the details upon points which I conceive are not exactly the end of the world; but I own that I adhere most tenaciously, and as a sine quâ non, to the trial of contested elections by committees to be sent hither, and of appeals to the House of Lords by committees of Lords Triers, to be likewise sent over; for any other arrangement would be a denial of justice in fact though not in words, and this opinion is very generally held by every moderate man. The Catholics are coming forward very roundly, but the British Government must urge that of Ireland to the Catholic questions, or else nothing will be done, and their support will be lost."

COMMODORE SIR W. SIDNEY SMITH TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Quite private.

1799, January 16. Constantinople, Tigre.—"Your letter concerning Brigadier General Khoeler, dated 11 November, only arrived this day. I have already paved the way at the Porte, where he is known advantageously and anxiously expected. I shall have pleasure in co-operating with a man like him of abilities and experience. I take for granted the officers who are to follow him will come out in the Charon, which, I learn with much satisfaction, is coming to this quarter under the command of my cousin. I think him just calculated for the sort of service.

"We have, of course, laid some stress on the unexampled liberality of the presents in the essential articles of military stores, so as to come off cheaper than could be expected in other respects. The prints which I brought for individuals of the government have been highly acceptable, as well as those intended for monuments of our naval achievements in the hands of the Grand Signor. I could wish those of the battle of the Nile and the best likeness of Lord Nelson to be sent out as soon as they are published, the prejudice of religion in respect of paintings having given way to custom, and admiration of the arts, and particularly the subject. The Turkey Company certainly never had their business managed cheaper than now, that it is more likely than ever to be enabled to bear even a greater expense than heretofore. The old British palace being so completely out of repair as to be no longer habitable, the representative of the nation which now takes the lead here is obliged to live in the worst house of the many bad ones at Pera, in which he has not a comfortable room to give even me who can put up with anything; and for this he is obliged to pay rent; whereas if Government would take the present favourable opportunity and buy one of the three vacant palaces which nobody else can bid for, there would be a proper establishment without the necessity of the minister paying house-rent out of appointments on which he cannot live as he ought to do. A propos to house-rent, it appears hard that the weight of the old bad bargain shall fall on my brother from the time of Mr. Liston's departure; the rent of the old house, near three hundred a year, being of course on his shoulders although he did not stand in need of a habitation of that size, not being married then, or obliged to représenter quite so much as at present; and this too for a period of time when, by your Lordship's decision on his application as to his appointments, he literally had nothing from Government as sole chargé d'affaires without a secretary, doing the double duty of a political and military mission, and the consular correspondence of the commercial company. I told him what your Lordship said on the score of temporary augmentations of establishment and consequent expense being to be borne out of the secret service money, but he has naturally a delicacy at paying himself that way; for besides its being impossible to fix a price on one's hospitality, which is necessarily more widely extended where there are no inns for travellers, and where Europeans alone can entertain Europeans, it is very difficult to draw that sort of line that would satisfy one's conscience. Would it not be better for your lordship to decide on a given sum to be given for this contingency, if a proper permanent establishment cannot yet be formed, as you did in the case of Mr. Liston's first début here?"

PAUL, EMPEROR OF RUSSIA, to COUNT WORONZOW.

1799, January 16. St. Petersburg.—“En conséquence des Notes qui ont été présentées à Rastadt par les Ministres François à la Députation de l'Empire et au Comte de Lehrbach, à l'égard de nos troupes auxiliaires, et en nous attendant que les Agens François employeront tous les moyens possibles pour diviser à cet effet plusieurs états de l'Allemagne au grand préjudice des Alliés, notre ministère a communiqué au Chevalier Whitworth notre désir, pour que sa Majesté le Roi de la Grande Bretagne prescrive au Ministre d'Hannovre à Ratisbonne d'employer l'influence de sa Cour à la diète de l'Empire, et d'agir contre les intrigues des François, soit dans le susdit cas particulier, soit dans tout autre cas, où l'intérêt commun l'exigera.

“Nous vous chargeons de vous expliquer dans le même sens auprès du ministère Anglois, et d'insister sur ce que les dites instructions soient expédiées. Nous les regardons d'autant plus nécessaires vu que la conduite de la Régence d'Hannovre et du Ministre Ompteda n'a pas jusqu'ici été fort analogue à nos vues communes avec l'Angleterre contre les François.” Translated into French.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 18. Dublin.—“The storm is gathering very thick in this country, and Lord Cornwallis is likely to pay very dear for his utter want of all communication, and for his most indolent imbecility. Parnell appears full of regrets, and evidently might have been managed had it been wished. The Prime Sergeant has likewise notified his intention to oppose, and is to be removed; so are two or three of the Dii minores. But at this late hour no distinct answer has been obtained from Lord Downshire; and a letter very full of doubts has been received from Lord Ely, whose doubts on the measure have originated in London, where he has been soliciting what he probably has not obtained ; you will easily see what a change in the book of numbers these two noble lords may make. Lord Abercorn, who never does anything like anybody else, has written to Lord Castlereagh to say that he and his friends are to support this measure ; but that his friend Mr. George Knox is to be at liberty to oppose it though he is a Commissioner of the Revenue ; and that ‘if a hair of his head is touched, every vote whom he can influence shall oppose.’ The Speaker has, in the resolutions of the county of Louth penned by himself, threatened that the attempt to carry this measure by force will ‘reduce the country to the necessity of recurring to first principles,’ and the violence of language is beyond all imagination. Still however I am confident that nothing can lose the question save Lord Cornwallis’s mismanagement of every means in his hands. Lord Donegal [Belfast ?] has writ from Belfast to all his father’s members (four) to call upon them to support him in his opposition to the union, and I fear he will succeed with three out of the four.

“The Catholic bishops have had a meeting in Dublin, and have unanimously agreed to support the Union ; and to write to their clergy to warn their flocks against tumultuous assemblies, and the misrepresentations of those who wish to mislead them.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 19. Dublin.—“I enclose to you Foster’s resolutions, in which you will observe his ‘recurrence to first principles’ ; by which phrase he admits to his friends that he means ‘the people.’ In the meantime he talks very openly of the influence which the Orange clubs have in all the Irish militias, and in the Scots Fencibles, and in the English militia. The whole of this is undoubtedly most exaggerated, but I think him capable of any extremities in the very desperate state of his private affairs. Lord Castlereagh is still confident of his book of numbers, but there are very many rats, and, if Lord Downshire and Lord Ely should play tricks, I should doubt the event. The yeomen of Dublin were all summoned to receive new colours with new mottos on Monday, but orders were sent for disbanding the first (Liberty Rangers) who moved, and they have cried peccavi ; but I have very little doubt but that there will be a street riot on Tuesday unless Lord Cornwallis should awake from his apathy, and avail himself of the force in his hands.

“I have just got your letter, and am most happy that your mind is so relieved. It has indeed relieved me from the full share of your uneasiness. I have only time to add that your plan for bringing the details forward in England on the 29th appears highly useful, and the appointment of Lord Auckland and others will, I trust, be by resolutions and not by bill, as they will be nothing more than a committee to digest and report, but not to conclude.

“This will save time, and the many stages in which the battle could be fought over and over again. I trust Lord Ely is secure. Lord Carhampton might be secured (as I know from his friends) by being threatened as to his Ordnance by Mr. Pitt.”

The PRINCE OF ORANGE to [H. FAGEL].

1799, January 20. Hampton Court.—“J’aurois envoyé les extraits des rapports de M. de Stamford à my Lord Grenville, s’il avoit été possible de les avoir mis au net, mais il s’est trouvé encore plus de chiffre que je ne l’avois vue ce matin, et ce n’est que dans ce moment que toutes ces lettres ont pu être tirées au clair. Je vous prie de passer chez my Lord Grenville, et de lui dire que je suis bien fâché de n’avoir pu être prêt aujourd’hui, mais que sans faute j’espère dans la journée de demain lui faire parvenir les précis qu’il désire voir, et que je comprends comme lui qu’il est nécessaire qu’il aye bientôt, et qu’il puisse lire avant le départ de son frère. Je vous écris cettre lettre le dimanche, mais comme vous ne la recevrez que demain, vous pouvez assurer my Lord Grenville que durant la soirée il aura ma lettre avec les papiers.”

The EARL OF ELGIN to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, January 21. Archerfield, Haddington.—“Your Lordship will, I am happy in believing, give me your good wishes on the occasion of my marriage, which is to take place very shortly. This event leads to no alteration in my plans as fixed with you, further than making me very anxious to have as much time as it is possible for you to allow me previous to my setting out for Constantinople. The long interruption of all intercourse with Germany, and the consequent delay in the notification of my appointment, induces me to hope that your Lordship will not find difficulty in granting me this indulgence. I should wish to receive your instructions on this suggestion, rather than name any limited period. But I shall have occasion for some time in Scotland for the different matters of business to be settled on such an event; and as much more afterwards as may be required for the preparations of my mission.

“Your Lordship would oblige me greatly by informing me, as soon as you conveniently can, what your wishes are on the subject, as all my arrangements, and in a moment of so much interest, depend upon your decision.

“Not having yet had time to make my friends acquainted with my present engagement, I would beg your Lordship not to mention it.”

The MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 22. Dublin.—“I have been busied this whole morning in consequence of the illness of Fremantle, and of the absence of my other field officers, in looking over my regiment, and over all the Dublin guards, which by accident are under my orders for this week, in order to insure tranquillity on this day. It is now four o’clock and nothing has stirred, nor are there any symptoms of mobbing more than applause to the Speaker, who has been courting it in every way, and holding language little short of what he has been hanging so many croppies for. Lord Castlereagh is still very sanguine in his calculation of numbers, but I think the minority will divide above 100; though he in private assured me that they would not be 80. Lord Kingston moves a separate Orange amendment against Lord Cornwallis, but will support the Union. Lord Kingsborough is said to be gone to England, but the young Orange men in the House of Commons will be very personal and violent. George Knox, who has solved Lord Abercorn's difficulties by resigning on Sunday, is the only one of his family who opposes. The Hutchinsons are all eager supporters. Coote has writ a very manly letter to his Queen's County electors, declining to abide by their instructions; and has accepted, at Lord Cornwallis's earnest solicitation, the command of that militia to keep out W. Pole, who thought that it became him to write a most insolent letter to the Queen's County meeting, urging them to oppose the Union. I have judged it right, after turning the matter very fully in my mind, and after having arranged my ideas for speaking upon the Union in the House of Lords, to persevere in my original plan of cutting that illustrious assembly; but for fear of any misconstructions, I have given my proxy to the Lord Chancellor. I enclose you specimens of the language held by an Irish Speaker, and by an Irish judge of the Admiralty. I am at a loss to say which of them, were I in the Government, I would begin with; but I should most certainly think it right to attack both in their offices, which they probably deem secure before they would venture to use such language.

"I have just got your letter of the 18th, and your note of the 17th, which puts me in the highest hopes and spirits. God grant that the cards may yet be played to advantage at Berlin. I will work at the Catholic project upon your intimation; and with the more zeal because I have had an explanation with Lord Castlereagh, who is more reasonable, and at my desire has seen Dr. Troy, whom, he told me, he found much more reasonable than he expected. The Catholics are as a body quite staunch, and are very useful; and what is equally advantageous is that the mass of the Dissenters in the north are inclined to the Union. With arrangements for these Churches, which will cost 100,000*l. per annum*, and with a regulation for tithes, you are masters of Ireland."

7 o'clock.—"All has passed most quietly; not an outrage to any one, and no mob except about ten or twelve men to huzza the Speaker at his house. I have just dismissed 1,200 men, whom I have had under arms."

COUNT WORONZOW TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 22. Richmond.—"Je n'ai pas reçu la note explicataire de nos raisons contre la maudite convention, ou plus-tôt contre le projet de cette convention qui, n'étant pas signée, ne peut être regardée comme existante. Je n'ai pas reçu non plus les lettres du Comte Panin que je vous ai laissé hier. Je vous prie donc de m'envoyer toutes ces pièces par l'homme que je vous envoie exprès à cheval pour cet effet.

"Faites-moi l'amitié de me faire savoir si monsieur votre frère va enfin comme ministre remplaçant my lord Elgin à Berlin ; ce qui mettra à son aise le trop timide ministère Prussien qui, jusqu'à la conclusion finale de ses arrangements avec vous, ne veut donner aucun ombrage à l'intrigant Syes, [Siéyès] et, en témoignant cette complaisance pour le Cabinet de Berlin, vous lui attirez bien des prétextes qu'il mettra en avant pour ne rien conclure. Monsieur votre frère a trop d'esprit pour croire que le grade diplomatique avec lequel il ira, l'obligera à une plus longue résidence, qu'il ne le désire.

"Il me reste encore à présent à vous prier, à vous supplier, à vous conjurer à ne pas rappeler votre ministre en Russie. Il est fautif sans doute ; mais il est déjà puni. Il doit être bien honteux pour la manière dont il s'est compromis chez nous, et il sera encore plus puni quand vous lui exprimerez l'indignation de Sa Majesté le Roi et de son ministère à cause du faux pas qu'il a fait : c'est certainement une punition terrible pour un gentilhomme comme lui. En le rappelant vous vous punirez vous-même, car l'importance des relations réciproques entre ce pays et le mien exigent que vous ayez chez nous Ministre qui connaisse bien le pays et ceux qui sont à présent, ou qui peuvent être à l'avenir, en place, qui soit aimé de l'Empereur et qui ait la confiance du ministère. Vous n'avez personne à la main pour le remplacer tout de suite. Est-ce le tems pour manquer d'information d'un pays aussi intéressant que la Russie ? Celui que vous enverrez à sa place, quelque mérite qu'il puisse avoir, sera plus d'une année sans avoir gagné la confiance qui ne se donne, ni ne se prend pas comme une prise de tabac. Il sera donc hors d'état de vous servir efficacement.

"Après de si grands intérêts, il ne me conviendrait pas de parler des miens, mais votre amitié pour moi m'enhardit à le faire. Je suis intimement persuadé que le rapel de votre ministre produira ipso facto le mien. Quel que ce soit qui me remplacera sera plus capable que moi, et s'il est un vrai Russe, il sera aussi bon Anglais que moi ; mais il se passera bien du tems avant vous le connaissiez à fond, et dans cet interval, il ne jouira pas de cette confiance dont vous m'honorez. Les affaires en souffriront dans cette crise générale, quand les ministres Anglais en Russie et le Russe en Angleterre ne seront pas connus dans les pays où ils se trouvent, et ignoreront le pays et les gens avec lesquels ils auront à traiter. En frappant avec trop de violence contre le Chevalier Whitworth vous frapperez aussi contre moi par bricole.

"Ce pays-ci est le seul au monde que je quitterai avec regret. Je suis persuadé qu'on me le fera quitter, et ce sera mon ami Lord Grenville qui me chassera d'ici !"

Postscript. "Dans ce moment un de vos couriers vient de me rapporter les lettres du Comte Panin. Il ne me reste donc à avoir que le papier que vous vouliez me donner hier, et que je n'avais pas pris parceque je vous avais prié d'ajouter quelque chose que je ne comprenais pas, et vous m'aviez promis de m'envoyer."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 22. Richmond.—"Je ne sais trouver aucun terme suffisant à pouvoir vous exprimer ma profonde reconnaissance pour la nouvelle que vous me donnez que le Chevalier Whitworth ne sera pas rappelé, et pour le motif obligant auquel vous attribué cette résolution. J'en suis pénétré, et s'il y avoit moyen que quelque chose au monde puisse augmenter l'attachement sans borne que j'ai pour vous, cette nouvelle preuve de votre extrême amitié pour moi le produiroit. Qu'il est heureux pour moi de posséder cette amitié; je la mérite par celle que j'ai pour vous.

"Combien les affaires de l'Europe iroient en mieux s'il y auroit vue entre ceux qui les traitent cette cordialité qui existe entre nous. Vous m'avez rendu heureux par l'assurance que j'ai à présent de ne pas quitter ce pays que j'aime, et auquel j'ai été, je suis, et je serai, toujours attaché."

The EARL OF CARYSFORT to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 23. Dublin.—"I arrived after an unprosperous voyage (having been twenty-one hours in a storm, and landed sixteen miles to the north of Dublin, from whence I came to town on a car,) just as the Lord Lieutenant was going to the House. I wish I could announce to you better news. But I am afraid the plan of Union must be laid aside for the present, and I think it will require a good deal of prudence and management to prevent the bad consequences which may result to the public service from the heat which has been excited. In the House of Lords an amendment was first proposed by Lord Powerscourt calling in question the competency of Parliament. As the other lords in opposition were not prepared to go this length, he desired to withdraw it, but the Chancellor would not agree to it. There was a division on the question for withdrawing the amendment, 46 to 19, in which the Archbishop of Cashel was in the minority, Lord Ely going behind the throne. On the amendment afterwards proposed by Lord Bellamont the numbers were, 16 and 1 proxy to 49 and 3 proxies, Lord Farnham voting in the majority. I am not sure whether the Archbishop of Cashel voted at all. Lord Ely again went behind the throne. Lords Yelverton and Carleton spoke strongly and well on the side of Government, and the Chancellor played his part with great spirit, and I think with a considerable degree of effect and impression. In the House of Commons the amendment was rejected only by one vote. The fears expressed in the letter I sent you were too well verified by the event. Several persons who had been considered as firm friends joined the Opposition. Lord Castlereagh had been apprised that there were grounds to suspect them, but continued to receive assurances from them to the last. The debate on the part of the Opposition was most violent, and all the most furious expressions applauded with clamour. On the side of Government the best speeches were not cheered at all. The benches left half empty, and the members affecting carelessness and inattention. Lord Downshire's friends were exactly divided. Lord Ely's, with one exception, a general upon the staff, did not vote. It appears to me that in the present state of things you cannot venture upon many dismissions. The removal of Parnell and the Prime Serjeant will tell to good account hereafter. But if you go further just at this moment, there will be danger of forming a strong party against Government under Mr. Ponsonby. A few, whose conduct has been peculiarly marked by treachery, might perhaps be turned out without risk; but I hope Government will be wise enough not to let the present or any future vacancies be filled by the friends and dependents of those who have acted with so much bad faith upon the present occasion, and have laid by to take advantage of any moment of distress. If they do, all hope of carrying this measure hereafter, or of any real strength or consistency of administration in this country is at an end. Lord E[ly] told me upon the journey that he was undecided. The Archbishop of C[ashel] had, I believe, a considerable influence upon him, and I hear that a good deal of the mischief is attributed to Carhampton, who has however availed himself of some pretence to stay away in order to save his office. Lord Enniskillen acted merely in resentment to Lord Cornwallis, and so did a few more of the violent Orangemen and exterminators; but, as far as I am informed at present, it will require a good deal of time and management to bring over sufficient numbers to form a majority which can be relied upon. I have the mortification of being obliged to require Mr. H. Osborne to relinquish his seat. He conducted himself with a degree of fury, and every attempt to restrain only served to inflame him. My arrival was too late for me to speak to him, but it would have been of no avail. The vacancy will be supplied by somebody who will be previously approved by the Government. C. Osborne, I hope, acquitted himself very well, and I rejoice that I had an opportunity of making a very unequivocal avowal of my own sentiments.

"I shall remain, at all events, long enough to know a little more of the state of our Parliament and the nation than I now do; and shall endeavour to put you in possession of information which, as far as it goes, shall be correct. I am not aware that I can be of any use by staying through the session, but I will do it if the Government here wish for it, or if there appears to be any storm brewing. Parnell is manœuvring to regain his post, and did it so grossly in the debate as to cover himself with ridicule."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 23. Dublin.—"The curtain is dropped on the Union. In the Lords, 51 for, 17 against. In the Commons, Government opposed the amendment, and saved it by 106 against 105. Opposition tried to negative the main question with 105, and Government saved it by 107. Lord Castlereagh then gave notice that no further proceedings would be had upon this measure, without giving further and very full notice; and the House rose at  $\frac{1}{2}$  past 12 at noon.

"The mob drew the Speaker home, and then proceeded to hustle Lord Ormonde and Captain Pakenham; the latter drew a pistol, collared the first man who struck at him, and has secured him. They were dispersed by the first appearance of troops, but as their High Mightinesses have given their orders for illumination, and as Lord Cornwallis has given no one order yet (at five o'clock) for patrols, Dublin is in a very unpleasant state.

"Now read my letters, and see whether I have prophesied truly in stating the numbers against it to be above 100. Lord Castlereagh has really worked like a horse, but his principal is a dead weight that bears down everything. It is astonishing how many have voted in this business from their personal outrages or complaints, independent of and unconnected with the question of office, or objects; and I feel bound as an honest man to tell you that, having disgusted every man in the country, friend or foe, and having shewn, in the common management of the question and of the men through whom he was to work, the most absolute incapacity, you do not discharge your duty to either kingdom or both unless you recall him, and put the game (which I think recoverable) into other hands. The Speaker declares that he will not oppose Government on any other point; so does Parnell; but you will easily see that opposition is too tempting with such advantages as he has against the character of Lord Cornwallis. Herbert Taylor sails for England this night with his despatches, heartily sick of the country who are much disgusted with the effect of his influence on Lord Cornwallis's mind, to which much of what is disliked is ascribed. I again repeat my eager wishes for Lord Cornwallis's removal, it being, I am sure, clearly understood by you that no consideration will induce me to look to such a bed of thorns. But I feel that I do not discharge my duty if I do not urge you to save Ireland and the empire from the consequences of his misconduct, which I verily think are beyond all calculation.

"Orders are this moment come to me, as commanding officer for the night, from Lord Cornwallis, to send out two patrols from each corps of cavalry and infantry, of one officer and 18 men each, to patrol the streets till 12 o'clock; to be very careful not to molest individuals or small parties, but to protect houses and persons and to disperse large mobs, and upon no account to attempt to prevent illuminations.

"Such are our orders, given against the opinion of every person civil and military whom he has consulted, who have all told him that, unless illuminations are prevented, no house or person of any of those who have voted for the Union is safe. I shall do my best, but remember that these are my orders, and preserve this proof of (I know not what to call it) in case of accidents.

8 o'clock. "We have a most fortunate ally in a most heavy rain which has prevented much of mobbing; but all Dublin is illuminated at the same time. I repeat again and again that last night the lower classes were with us, and it is most cruel to lose this game where, above all other places, we had the means of ensuring it. I write to Mr. Pitt upon these points to deliver my conscience. I have been round Dublin where there is nothing serious, but every thing to apprehend from the inefficiency of a Government which exists only in this very incapable man. Again and again I repeat, the House of Commons was in his hands had he taken the most obvious and common care."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Private for yourself and Mr. Pitt.

1799, January 24. Dublin.—"The very unquiet state of Dublin kept me on horseback till two o'clock last night; but the force in very numerous patrols, which I arranged in breach of Lord Cornwallis's orders according to my own fancy, and the alertness of the troops in dispersing every assembly of people, prevented any serious mischief, or any resistance wherever it was necessary to interfere. Four or five houses in different streets suffered severely before it was possible for us to move the troops to check the mob, but, upon the whole, the night passed more quietly than I expected. I now write to you again to press upon your most serious and immediate consideration a subject which I mentioned to Mr. Pitt yesterday, and upon which I conversed much with Lord Castlereagh last night, having been called to disperse a mob near his house; I mean the situation of the Catholics. In consequence of what had passed between Dr. Troy and him about ten days since, which arose out of my earnest recommendation to him to converse with them on their objects, and on the arrangements necessary for connecting their Church with the Crown, Lord Castlereagh told me on Sunday last (what I knew before) that they had agreed to leave to the Crown the nomination of their bishops; to accept of such powers as Government might think necessary for their control over their clergy; to frame distinct and public ordinances, subject to the royal approbation, for the discipline of their Church; and to meet, if allowed, a High Commissioner (a Protestant) once a year, or not, as it might be wished by Government, for holding a General Assembly on the plan of that of Scotland; they likewise engaged to suspend refractory priests at the requisition of Government. This was the general outline of the conversations between Lord Castlereagh and Dr. Troy, who engaged to digest a plan for the pay of their Church according to ideas thrown out by Lord Castlereagh. In consequence of this conversation, all the Catholic bishops came to Dublin and agreed to these ideas as stated by Dr. Troy, and authorized him to assure Government of their active and immediate exertions for the Union; and last Sunday an admonition was read in all the chapels warning their flocks to confide in the King's benevolent intentions for the peace and security of his subjects, and to refrain from any riot, tumult, or resistance to the Government. In the course of Monday they (I mean Dr. Troy) received a communication from a very violent Catholic anti-unionist, a son of Sir P. Bellew, to threaten (on behalf of the Speaker, whose name was used) every vengeance for what had been done, unless steps were taken to retract; which was refused. Yesterday, after the House was up, the same threats were repeated in general terms that they should be given up to the resentment of the Orange men. In consequence of this the Bishops all agreed that it was necessary for them to separate, and to go down to-morrow to their respective counties, under the greatest alarms for their own safety and that of their people. I spoke on this subject to Lord Castlereagh, and stated the absolute necessity of giving them some general assurance of the sense which Government entertained of their loyalty, and of the attention that would be given to prevent them or their people from suffering in consequence of it. He promised to urge Lord Cornwallis on the subject; but though I stated the bad consequences that would arise from neglecting this communication, particularly as they separate to-morrow, he doubted whether (under their press of business) Lord Cornwallis or he could have time to see Dr. Troy to make this communication. All this made me very uneasy, as I could not bear the idea of these persons going to the 32 counties of Ireland, each to tell the tale of their abandonment from the British Government whom they meant to serve; and, therefore, early this morning I sent a person (through whom I have had communication) to Dr. Troy to say, from a written memorandum, that I had no doubt but that he and his brethren would receive from Government the strongest assurances of their sense of the loyalty which had been shewn on this subject by the body of the Catholics; and of the disposition of Government to prevent them from suffering from any resentments or prejudices which their conduct might have raised in the minds of those who were ill disposed to them; but that, for fear of any mistake in the hurry of a moment so anxious as the present, I had written a private letter to Lord Grenville and to Mr. Pitt to express my sense of their services which were known to me, and my request that they might not escape the attention and protection of the English Government. I really believe that, if this had not been done, very serious and unpleasant consequences might have arisen; and, at all events, that it would have been impossible to have attempted to have brought them forward again on a similar occasion; for they were in the lowest state of dejection. I have now only to request Mr. Pitt and you to approve the very cautious way in which I have named you both, and to avail yourself of the first opportunity of directing the Irish Government to assure them of protection.

"Lord Castlereagh did not attempt to explain the causes of his defeat save in general terms of the treachery and poltroonery of individuals; and appeared wholly undecided what to do as to removals of those who hold offices; and I suspect that Lord Cornwallis is very averse from any steps of this sort, for I know that he held very loose and strange language upon this subject about ten days since. I hope and trust that the very milk-and-water paragraph in the Speech, respecting the Union, was not of your fabrication; for I never read one less dignified, less impressive, or less calculated to convey the idea that Great Britain considered this measure as the only solution to the difficulties of every sort that press upon Ireland. I think it probable that the Opposition will endeavour to-night to throw out the address upon the report; and if they attempt it they will succeed, as all confidence is gone. But having stated this, I am as explicitly certain that an able man would recover the ground which Lord Cornwallis has lost; and would secure his majority out of the 83 who have not yet voted, and out of the enemy's ranks, capable of carrying this question with éclat; but indeed it is insanity to attempt to carry this or any other point so long as this mill-stone hangs upon the shoulders of Government. Once more I implore you to see well all the consequences of keeping Lord Cornwallis in a situation where his personal conduct and character make you enemies, without any one, per contra, to counterbalance all that he puts into the scale against you.

7 o'clock. "The same orders for patrols as last night, but, fortunately, I am not upon duty. I do not think from what I hear that there will be any riot."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 25. Dublin.—"Just as I foretold yesterday, Lord Castlereagh has lost his address upon the report, 109 for expunging the Union paragraph to 104. Immediately after this, W. Ponsonby urged a resolution pledging the House to their country that they would at no time consent to any Union, but would always support the constitution of Ireland under a King, Lords, and Commons, in a Parliament assembled and resident in Ireland. But this was immediately opposed by several of Mr. Ponsonby's new allies, who stated that such a resolution could not bind, and that though they had opposed it now, they would support it if the country hereafter wished for it; so the resolution was withdrawn. This is in itself a commentary worth a thousand others upon the text which I have so often preached, namely, that the majority was secure but for the imbecility of Lord Cornwallis; and it confirms me in my opinion that the thing may yet be carried (and even this session) by a majority secured out of these conscientious gentlemen, and out of the 83 who have not voted. But remember again and again that Lord Cornwallis can neither carry this, or any other point, so far as his talents or character are concerned. His language, of which Lord Carysfort will tell you more, is most scandalously lukewarm on the whole subject; and I can now tell you distinctly that his confidential aide-de-camp (Captain Raymond) told a person yesterday on whom I can depend, that Lord Cornwallis was not surprised at this defeat, for that he expected it, and did not care one farthing for the event of the question. You will observe that I do not ask you to believe (what I do not) the truth of this assertion; but I desire you to think as I do of the effect which such conversation is calculated to produce, added to the impressions arising out of the very cold and careless style both of his personal language, and of his speech on this great question. Since I wrote yesterday I have received the signatures of almost every man of property, and of every Catholic in Westmeath, in the most distinct terms of approbation; and the anti-Unionists were both beaten on Monday in the counties of Longford and Cavan; and from every account I can get I am confident that the people, save in Dublin, are ten to one in favour of it; and even in Dublin it now appears that the priests had recovered and exerted their influence so successfully as to prevent the slightest appearance of a mob, till the question was lost.

“At all events, and whatever your determination may be, I implore for the sake of Government some assurances to the Catholics that they shall not be abandoned to the Orange anti-Unionists for this act of loyalty. Lord Ely was in the House of Lords and would not vote. Of his members all stayed away, save General Eustace. Of Lord Downshire’s members only two appeared; of Lord De Clifford’s not one. All this is very bad, but confirms my assertions.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE,

1799, January 26. Dublin.—“Only three words to say that the storm is thickening. Lord Cornwallis has ordered that the troops shall only act under the orders of a civil magistrate; and no justice in the city will or dares act, so that last night half the windows in Dublin were broke, and the mob very turbulent. A gentleman (a Mr. Bailey) whose house was attacked, fired and killed two; and Lord Clare fired a blunderbuss over the mob and dispersed them; but it is most painful to obey such orders.

“A more important fact is that G. Ponsonby has persuaded the Speaker to join him in giving carte blanche to the Catholics of repeal of test, and of a Church establishment, as the sure means of preventing an Union, and has created a great effect. Cooke came to me this morning about it, having heard it from a leading Catholic merchant, one Macdonnel, who seemed inclined to close with Ponsonby’s offer. This puts Government completely in a cleft stick, and the solution either way is very difficult. My solution for it is to persevere at all hazards in the plan for union; but that and every thing else depends upon the removal of Lord Cornwallis, for with him no one, friend or foe, will act.

“I can now bring proof of his having declared within these four days that ‘he had nothing to do with the civil government of Ireland,’ and the language of his aide-de-camp of ‘his not caring a farthing for the question’ still continues. No arrangements are taken with respect to the future common measures in Parliament, only that it is to be ordered to adjourn. But the Speaker yesterday told Cooke ‘that they must remain assembled till they heard of Mr. Pitt's speech and motion, for that Mr. Pitt was apt to be intemperate, and if there was any expression of that sort in the speech (much more in the motion) it would be necessary for the House of Commons here to interpose with a strong resolution.' I repeat the words correctly as Cooke told them to me. He is anxious to go to London to speak his mind, where it may be wished to hear his opinions, which agree in toto with mine, except that he is more desponding."

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, January 27. Yarmouth.—“Being just waked by your despatches, and having determined to sail as soon as it is light, I can only just cast my eye over them and write you one private line to tell you that I have received Nos. 2, 3 and 4, with the volume of credentials and the other accompanying papers. I should have been perfectly satisfied with whatever shape you had preferred as to the Prussian credentials, but my own individual opinion strongly leans to the special mission as bearing a character of more vigour and urgency, such as belongs to the time and subject of my mission. I will, however, venture to assure you that my decision upon this subject will be as open as you can wish it to be to any solid reasons which may occur on the other side. I presume that I am not to deliver the letters of Lord Elgin's recall, unless I present those of his resident successor. The only circumstance which strikes me in the instructions of No. 2 as being in any way doubtful is the shape in which you speak of the 800,000*l.* or million to be discussed in a new engagement with Prussia; you have said the whole of this may be given entirely to Prussian army; if that is the case what becomes of the arrangement necessary to take for the expenses of the Dutch army, which are put, as you know, at 500,000*l.*? Yet, if this is retained for Holland, it leaves only 300,000*l.* as applicable to Prussia, which is too small a sum to dwell upon as any object; perhaps the best course to follow might be to give to Prussia the disposition of the million as applicable to the deliverance of Holland, including in it the military force to be raised within the country. Of this, however, I wish you to think, as it is a very important point; I will likewise turn it in my mind as soon as my head has done turning at sea.”

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 27. Yarmouth, 2 p.m.—“Thick fog ever since daylight, and wind got round to be completely adverse. All hopes of stirring to-day are over; we live only in the hopes of to-morrow's dawn, and I begin to grow more confident after every disappointment, from a persuasion that I must at length have exhausted all the ill-luck which could attach upon the outset of my expedition. You thought by my letter of this morning, if you have read it before this, that you had fairly got rid of me ; but here I am hanging still a dead weight upon my friends in England, more difficult to be shaken off than the little crooked old tormentor of Sindbad in the Arabian Nights Entertainment."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

Privée.

1799, January 28. Richmond.—"Dans les deux dernières entrevues que j'ai eu avec vous, nous étions si occupés d'affaires majeures, que j'ai oublié de vous remettre le papier ci-joint que j'ai reçu de l'Empereur relatif à l'étrange résolution dans laquelle il s'est précipité, induit à cela par Sitta et d'autre chevalier de Malte résidents en Russie, en acceptant la grande maîtrise de cet ordre que ces messieurs lui ont offert sans avoir ni droit ni autorisation quelconque pour lui faire cet offre. Ce n'est qu'au moment d'expédier mon courrier et retrouvent ce piece, que je me suis aperçu de l'avoir rapporté sans vous la remettre, et de peur d'être justement grondé de chez moi pour cet oubli d'une chose à la quelle, très mal-à-propos, on met un très grand intérêt à Petersbourg. J'ai écrit que je vous remis ce papier, et que vous m'avez promis de le mettre sous les yeux du Roi. J'espère que vous me pardonnerez ceci, et que vous le présenterez à Sa Majesté la première foi que vous en aurez l'occasion. Je suis affligé et étonné d'apprendre que l'affaire d'Irlande a manquée dès son commencement, et que l'opposition dans la chambre haute a eu l'avantage d'une majorité de dix-sept voix. Tandis qu'il y a à Londres et ses environs plus de vingt pairs Irlandais qui passent pour être bien intentionnés, et qui ne sont pas remués, ne suivent pas l'exemple de my lord Clifton qui passa d'abord la mer pour aller soutenir à Dublin l'union réciproquement utile au deux pays. Rassurez-moi, je vous prie, sur les malheureux bruits qui courent au sujet de Naples."

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 28. Yarmouth.—"A fall of snow has changed the wind to the northward, and we are just going to make an effort which will, I trust, at last be successful.

"I hear nothing yet of the Hamburg mails, but the wind of yesterday must probably bring them in the course of this morning. The Sun of Saturday has sent the king of Naples to Sicily. I wish I had to determine where those should be sent who have made it necessary for him to go there. I have read your last papers more carefully, and think them quite out of the reach of criticism. I suppose you mean Whitworth should hang himself."

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1799,] January 28.—"I return Lord Carysfort's letter which is full of good sense. I think it best also to send you one which I received yesterday from Lord Buckingham, and for which (whatever I may think on the main point he suggests) I feel myself much obliged to him. From what I have heard I expect to find by to-morrow's accounts that the proceedings of last Thursday in Ireland have been more violent than even the opening promised. Be they what they may, they can only make it more necessary to open fully and state decidedly our plan. In this idea, my notion was still to move on Thursday the resolutions we had settled. I wrote on Saturday to Lord Cornwallis to say I should do so, and the Duke of Portland (with the general agreement of the Cabinet) was to send a dispatch to the same effect. The subject of dismissal was to be left by the dispatch to his discretion, but with a leaning to pushing it as far as in prudence he could. I stated in my letter to Lord C[ornwallis] a clear opinion that he should, at all events, dismiss the Speaker's son; but suggested a doubt whether, in less striking instances, the line of forbearance might not be more advisable. Lord Carysfort's letter rather confirms this idea. I return to town to-morrow; and I wish much you could do the same. We must have a Cabinet on Wednesday, but I should like much to talk with you first. If you can come, you will find dinner and no company in Downing Street. Let the messenger bring your answer to town."

THE EARL OF CARYSFORT TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 28. Mountjoy Square.—"I think it impossible for any man at the present moment to form an estimate of the temper and disposition of the public, or of individuals, sufficiently accurate to be a ground for the future proceedings of Government. I hear it said that out of the eighty members who did not vote a sufficient majority might yet be obtained; but upon looking over the list with great attention, and making all the enquiries I could, I am convinced there is nothing to be expected from that quarter. The numbers are nearly balanced, but the scale against the Union appears to be preponderant. Of those who voted for it many of the placemen at least are not sincere; and the strength of the opposition would induce some to venture upon desertion, notwithstanding Sir John Parnell's dismissal. And among the country gentlemen, several have declared that they will not support it against the sense of so large a body in Parliament. On the other hand it is certain that many of the Opposition are well inclined to hear reason, and with a little patience and management I should not despair that, in the course of a few months, or at any rate by another session, a majority of thirty or forty might be obtained. It is rumoured that offers have been held out to the Catholics by both parties, and it is even said that the Speaker has been induced to promise them every thing, on condition of their joining to defeat the project of Union. If he has really taken this step, it is to me a decisive proof that he cannot depend upon the continued support of those who have acted with him upon the late occasion. But I do not believe the report; and I hope there is as little foundation for supposing that the Government, finding the Orange faction adverse to them upon this point, will endeavour to carry it by the assistance of the Papists. In my opinion neither the Orange nor the Green occasioned our late defeat, or have consistence and power sufficient to procure a better success hereafter. Either time or address has been wanting to treat with individuals who are not prepared to make a great personal sacrifice without personal compensation. The Papists could bring no accession of Parliamentary strength. Many of the Orange leaders are well inclined to Government, and might yet be brought to give their support to the Union. But more activity and exertion is requisite. Lord Castlereagh has been very assiduous since his return, but no one else, if I am rightly informed, has moved at all. According to the best accounts I can collect there is a sufficient proportion of the nation in all parts of the kingdom (excepting the immediate vicinity of Dublin) favourable to the measure, to make the attempt perfectly safe, if a reasonable majority can be obtained in the House of Commons. As I think this is practicable I look forward to ultimate success, and presume the project will not be abandoned. But if Government is of a different opinion, there is undoubtedly an opportunity of carrying through without difficulty any measures short of a Legislative Union that may tend to strengthen the English interest there."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, January 28. Dublin.—"The game with the Catholics has been played with every eagerness by the persons I named to you, and various meetings of that body have been held, to whom it has been proposed to sign an immediate petition to the House of Commons, which is to be supported by the Opposition; not with any hopes of success, but with a view (as Mr. Barrington told a friend of mine) of separating them from Government, who, it is clear, could not give way to such a measure, introduced in such a manner, and for such an object. At these meetings the democratic Catholics have of course been most violent, and have certainly borne down many of the more discreet; but I am in hopes from what I have just heard of their meeting of last night and this morning, that they will agree to put off the petition for a few days, particularly as a message is to be sent to the House of Commons this day to adjourn. Lord Kenmare went yesterday to Lord Cornwallis to communicate to him the intentions of the body to petition, and his refusal to sign such a paper, or to join in any measure hostile to Government; but Lord Fingall will probably join in the petition, though he will wish to defer it for some days. Upon the whole, then, I hope that time will be given to you to take the only measure now in your power for re-establishing the King's government by the immediate recall of Lord Cornwallis, for indeed and most solemnly I aver to you, that there is not one of the servants of the Crown with whom I have conversed (and if it were fitting to write names by the post I would name them) who has not urged to me the necessity of a new appointment immediately, for that without it no one measure is safe for a moment. The House of Commons are this day busy in framing resolutions upon Mr. Pitt's Irish speech, as printed in the Morning Chronicle; and Corry (who has vacated his seat) seems to think that, absurd as all this is, some resolutions probably will be carried. I doubt it; but am equally sure that you have all to fear from the present no-government, and all to hope if you would send us a steady Lord Lieutenant and a good Secretary.

"I feel bound to state to you all that occurs to me, and therefore I hint to you Lord Winchelsea, and above all Mr. Steele, whose pilgrimage here of one year would, to my conviction, and to that of every one to whom I have named not the man but the measure, give you the Union. I can now speak more confidently upon the 78 who have not yet voted; and of those pray believe me when I assure you that I have carefully examined that list, and that there exist the means of ensuring at least from 45 to 50, exclusive of some who, I know, may be gained from the Opposition ranks.

"Do not conceive me too much heated to judge fairly upon this great question; but believe me most earnest for the public service, most confident that all this disgrace originates in Lord Cornwallis, and most certain that it may be regained by his recall. But it must be immediate, or Ireland is lost; and experience tells you that the nomination of [a] new Lord Lieutenant, or even an avowal of the intention, always has and will suspend every motion and measure of Opposition."

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1799, January —.] . . . . "Il y a bien longtemps que je n'ai eu l'honneur de vous voir. Les nouvelles que nous avons reçu de Paris, depuis quelques jours, paroissent très fâcheuses à la première lecture, mais en les examinant avec attention et sur la carte, on trouve quelques consolations, et on peut se convaincre aisément qu'il n'y a rien de désespéré. Ce pompeux étalage de succès dont les papiers français sont remplis, se réduit, au résumé en une colonne, du résultat de plusieurs échecs partiels, mais il n'y a point eu d'affaire générale; il ne se seroit pas donné de bataille sans que Mack y fut, et les Français n'auroient pas manqué de boast of it, ce qu'ils ne font pas; ils se bornent à dire que le Roi et Mack fuient. Voici le fait je crois; Mack a voulu essayer par des affaires particulières une armée qui n'a jamais vu le feu. La retraite de Rome, qui est intenable, est une conséquence nécessaire des revers éprouvés, et sûrement moindres qu'on ne les présente. Donnez-vous la peine de regarder la carte et vous jugerez comme moi qu'un homme aussi habile que l'est certainement Mack, n'aura pas manqué d'occuper les positions de Velettri et de Tivoli. Il donnera bataille à un ennemi placé entre son armée et la mer, et pendant ce tems le Prince d'Orange descendra par Ancone avec nos troupes, car nous arriverons, n'en doutez pas. Il faudroit pour croire le contraire nous supposer traitres et imbécilles, et il m'est impossible d'admettre cette hypothèse avant d'en avoir les preuves. Je ne vous cacherais pas dans notre confiante amitié que je ne puis m'empêcher d'en vouloir un peu à ceux qui en doutent. Nous n'avons pas encore mérité ce degré de réprobation. Vous connaissez mes sentimens, et combien notre conduite m'a révolté, mais néanmoins, comme disoit Louis XIV. à ceux qui paroissaient étonnés de lui voir joindre la devotion à la galanterie, parce-qu'on commet un péché, il n'est pas dit qu'il faille les commettre tous. J'aime à me flatter que vous ne vous rendrez pas coupable de celui de permettre à ce scélérat de Barthélemy de venir en Angleterre, comme on dit qu'il en a le projet. C'est un monstre bien dangereux. Adieu ; mon attachement et mon amitié pour vous sont aussi invariables que mes autres principes."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, February 1. Harley Street.—" Arrivé hier ici pour m'établir à Londres, j'ai trouvé chez moi votre billet par le quel j'ai appris à mon grand plaisir qu'on est déterminée à poursuivre les mesures tendentes à unir les deux isles. Rien n'est plus respectable, et n'imprime plus de dignité dans tout gouvernement que sa fermeté. C'est elle qui accroit la confiance et l'attachement de ceux qui lui sont dévoué, et qui décourage les factieux et les malveillants. Le discours d'hier de Monsieur Pitt est un chef-d'oeuvre d'habilité, et doit produire un grand effet en Irlande. Il n'offense personne. Il ménage et semble estimer même les opposants. Il caresse tous les différents intérêts de politique et de religion, et fait voir à tous, ce qui est vrai, que tous gagneront à cette union. Ce discours, qui fera certainement beaucoup de bien en Irlande, en auroit fait d'avantage s'il auroit pu être fait (du moins quant aux principes de cette union) s'il auroit été fait trois semaines avant qu'on ait débatté ce sujet à Dublin. Celui qu'a fait Sheridan n'est qu'une déclamation inflammatoire pour échauffer à la revolte des pauvres testes plus remplies de pomes de terre que de cervelles.

"La réplique que lui fit Lord Hawksbery est excellente, et fait honneur à ce jeune homme. J'apprens dans ce moment avec beaucoup de chagrin l'arrivée de l'infortuné Roi de Naples à Palerme. Il a été bien malheureusement conseillé à cette fausse mesure par la quelle il abandonne les trois-quarts de son principal royaume. Sa capitale pouvoit être prise et lui se retirer à Salerne, dans la Capitanate, dans les deux Calabres, disputer son pays, et le défendre pouce par pouce ; surtout dans les Calabres, toutes couvertes par les Apenins, et remplis de défilés aussi impraticables que facile à défendre. En restant dans son royaume il conservoit le gouvernement, un centre d'union et d'autorité, et ne décourageoit pas quatre millions et demis de ses sujets par une retraite qui équivalait à une abdication. En défendant son pays, pied par pied, s'il auroit été poussé jusqu'à Reggio, il n'avoit qu'un trajet d'une demi heure pour passer à Messine, et y rester là pour ne perdre de vue, au phisique comme au moral, les côtes du royaume de Naples pour y rentrer à la première occasion. On dit que c'est le Général Autrichien Mak [Mack] qui a conseillé d'aller à Palerme ; mais pourquoi suivre, dans les affaires internes, le sentiment d'un Autrichien, et qui plus est, d'un ami de Thugut."

The MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, February 1. Dublin.—“A new mine to be sprung more mischievous than that intended to be played with the Catholics ! By a negotiation in which I was requested by Lord Castlereagh to assist, the principal Catholics had been induced to hold off from the petition ; and to urge the adjournment of all discussion of it till Mr. Pitt's plans and ideas could be ascertained, and understood by the public. In consequence of this, a meeting of Opposition was held on Tuesday at the Speaker's, where Ponsonby at length yielded to the earnest solicitations of Parnell and Foster, and engaged to abandon the Catholics, and to support the Orange party in a resolution which was sketched out, and of which I have seen an accurate copy, and which will be moved immediately ; ‘To regret that His Excellency's humane intentions in extending the mercy of the Crown have failed in the object proposed by them of recalling the rebels to a sense of their duty ; and to advise that immediate steps shall be taken for the suppression of this rebellion by the most active exertions of the army, and by giving to the Protestant ascendancy that decided and efficient support which alone can secure the constitutional connexion with Great Britain, and the establishments in Church and State.’ The copy I saw was much blurred, and the words of the resolution may be changed, but such is the purport of it. Now I have very little doubt but that, in the present state of no-government, this or any other nonsense of Orange run mad will be carried ; and the effect of it will be the instant revolt of the Catholics unless Great Britain interferes ; but it gives an opening of which the most decided advantage might be made, if there was any one to act in it ; but Lord Cornwallis says to every one that ‘he is no politician.’ Let me adjure you not to let this great moment of difficulty pass by without the most anxious exertions on your part to recall this idiot ; and believe me acting on the purest motives in urging the most decisive steps.

“I am most happy to hear that Mr. Pitt perseveres in proposing his plan on your side of the water.

“I am most decided in my opinion that the Union may still be carried ; but I am most decided that Lord Cornwallis will lose that and every other possible question.

“Again I say that I could name to you every one almost of the oldest and best friends to England and the Union, who declare the country lost if the Lord Lieutenant is not changed.

“This cruel easterly wind locks up our mails from England for which I am so anxious, not having heard from you ; but though I feel that I may distress you, yet I know I do my duty in stating to you all I hear and see. The chapter of the grossest negligence and incapacity increases hourly, and the necessity of grappling with this unnatural coalition of Foster and Ponsonby is obvious and immediate. Cooke thinks the question of Union wholly gone by for the present; and the majority in the House of Commons irrecoverable to Government on any question connected with it, or with the Protestant ascendancy. I own I think differently, though I would certainly advise you to prefer his opinions to mine. But he thinks that a prorogation at no very remote period might do much. I have not, of course, asked him what he expects might happen in that prorogation to assist his plans, but it is impossible not to see that his opinions on his master's do not differ much from those of every one else."

SPENCER SMITH to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, February 1. Constantinople.—“ In making up my packet of yesterday's date, voluminous as it is, I cannot help making the present small addition, as happening to be so closely connected with a certain part of the main subject, consisting of a paper I in vain searched and ransacked every corner for when glancing at the same subject in a similar confidential way with your Lordship by the messenger. I was then checked from saying more on this particular point from the loss of the enclosed (which had been mislaid on board le Tigre) as I am now from a disinclination to renew a disagreeable topic, and the impropriety of pursuing one so delicate to any considerable extent in this open form; the only one I can at present have recourse to. I do not like troubling my superiors with official complaints, but I do not choose to lose the present unaffected opportunity of making your Lordship acquainted with the specimen alluded to of a certain captious authoritative tone in a certain quarter excessively disagreeable in business, more especially when not compensated for by the useful ready co-operation and never-failing reciprocity I had been so long habituated to by the gentleman's predecessor, whose polished manners, elegant hospitality, and friendly confidence, I must confess rather spoiled me for the contrast of a cold enigmatical politician, and that in times so much improved. In short, the 'Reverse of the medal' sums up my meaning perfectly. I am only afraid sometimes of being misled by appearances in the individual to misinterpret the views of his comments, so difficult is it to suppose so total a change in the system of a conspicuous and preponderant portion of our society to spring from the sole uncouthness of character in the person of the chief, without some other influencing cause.

“ Perhaps this matter may still require a few more observations at a proper season, till when I am glad to take leave of the subject, and revert to one more agreeable set afloat in my mind by my brother's conversations. His arrival has revived a sympathy with friends, family, and home that long absence and other circumstances had much enfeebled, and public pursuits almost supplanted. I beg your Lordship's permission, with reference to a change of state on my own part, by a recent marriage with the daughter of the Emperor's minister, Baron d'Herbert, (thus repatriated) to present my wife's and my own affectionate respects to Lady Grenville; whom so many many years' separation from, since early youth indeed, have however less impaired my remembrance of, than of many less distant scenes; and which later events have tended to restore."

INTELLIGENCE FROM BERLIN AND HOLLAND.

1799, February 2. Berlin.—“Les affaires ne sont pas aussi avancées ici qu'on s'en flattoit. St[amfort] est fort mécontent du D[uc] de Br[unswic] et prétend que celui-ci, bien loin de stimuler Haugwitz, ne le soutient pas même. Haugwitz par contre continue à se prononcer pour la guerre, mais Köckerits, influencé vraisemblablement par d'autres, veut temporiser; et le peu de confiance que la conduite actuelle de la cour de Vienne peut inspirer, la manière dont elle abandonne les Rois de Naples et de Sardaigne, la manière de s'exprimer de Thugut, qui doit avoir dit que rien hormis les intérêts particuliers de la Maison d'Autriche ne le décideront soit pour la paix soit pour la guerre, ce sont là autant de motifs dont ceux qui sont de cette opinion se servent avec avantage pour le soutenir. Jusqu'à présent le comte Panin n'a pas encore rien de réponse positive aux offres de secours et d'alliance offensive qu'il a faites, mais dans ce moment-ci il vaut mieux que cette réponse ne vienne pas, parcequ' elle ne seroit probablement pas satisfaisante, et que tout en avouant les principes, on voudroit se tenir ici sur le défensive; tandis qu'il est possible que l'arrivée de Mr. Grenville, que l'on attend avec une véritable impatience, apporte quelque changement dans ces déterminations, et si quelque chose est à même de la faire c'est bien sa mission. Sûr est-il que le Roi a prié le Duc de continuer son séjour à Berlin jusqu'après cette arrivée. Avant-hier au soir à une cour et bal chez la Reine-mère, le Roi s'entretint avec le Duc et avec Kockerits pendant tres-longtemps. Le Duc fut content de cette conversation, en ce qu'il trouvoit les bons principes établis; il y avoit cependant de l'éloignement pour la guerre offensive. J'ai communiqué au Duc et à Stamf[ort] le précis de la conférence du 27 Novembre; ils en furent très-contents. D'après l'avis de St[amfort] j'entretiendrai Haugw[itz] de ces matières, et vais à cet effet demain chez lui. Depuis mon départ vous aurez reçu les informations demandées par L[ord] Grenville par rapport à la navigation des Waddens, et si cela n'est point encore parvenu j'aurai soin de l'envoyer; de plus j'ai chargé quelqu'un de se rendre sur les frontières pour pouvoir s'y aboucher avec d'autres, et prendre plusieurs papiers afin d'avoir des détails par rapport au Zuider Zee, sa navigation, et les lieux les plus propres pour pouvoir débarquer; et s'il est nécessaire que quelqu'un s'abouche avec un amiral Anglois pour converser sur ces matières et lui donner des détails de bouche, le Lieutenant de Marine Spengler pourroit passer en Angleterre.

1799, February 1. Bremen.—“Le general Brune n'a pas été à Paris, mais il est retourné à la Haye après une absence de quelques jours: il y a mis en réquisition cent lits de la meilleure qualité : on ignore dans quel but. Il continue à travailler au renversement du parti de Daendels, et à relever celui de Vreede. Il est sûr aujourd'hui que Daendels commandera les troupes embarquées à bord de la flotte, au nombre de 8,000 h[ommes] parmi lesquels je trouve un corps d'artillerie volante et autre : cette expédition projetée occasionne une désertion incroyable : à Campen 50 hommes de l'artillerie volante ont déserté en deux nuits. La flotte consistera en vingt vaisseaux outre ceux de transport. On répand divers bruits sur la destination de cette flotte. Les uns parlent du Cap. de B[on] Espérance, les autres des Indes occidentales, mais il paroît que l'Irlande est le véritable objet. Quoiqu'il en soit doivent, dans tous les cas, passer ou par le canal ou par le nord de l'Ecosse. Ce dernier est le plus probable. On assure que le Cap[itaine] Bosch s'est laissé engager à commander la flotte. Les insurgents dans la Belgique paroissent avoir remporté de grands pièces : plusieurs déserteurs Bataves se joignent à eux." Extract.

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, February 3. Newwork.—“I write one line to tell you that we are all alive and well, having providentially escaped from the wreck of the Proserpine to this small island, eight miles distant from Cruxhaven.

“We sailed, as you know, on Monday the 28th January, though, from the mails not having arrived, we had some small apprehension about the passage. We took a pilot from Helegoland, who dissuaded us from the enterprise ; but the wind being favourable, and our own pilot confident, we determined to go on as long as we could with safety. A sudden change of the wind however brought down from the Elbe such immense fragments of ice that, by the time we had passed Nework in the way to Cruxhaven, we found it utterly impossible to proceed, and we began to attempt to return ; the buoys being all cut away, we saw our danger and the difficulty which we should have in escaping the pressure of ice, the mass and rapidity of which it is not easy to describe. On Friday the 31st, from there being no buoys left, we ran upon a sand-bank a few miles from this place and stuck there ; in this situation we had to stand the rapid tides which brought down upon the ship on every side larger and thicker blocks of ice than I could have conceived it possible to have been put in motion ; no boat could live a moment, and on Friday night the shocks were so great that our rudder was forced away, and the general opinion was that every hour was likely to break the ship down in a state that would leave us no chance of saving our lives, and we had already thrown overboard all our guns and heavy stores without any effect. Desperate however as our state was, Mr. Fisher, Baron Kirkla, and I determined to make any effort rather than await with a certainty of perishing where we were. Providentially the ice had increased so much that on one side of the ship it was frozen quite fast in, though the tide still ran quickly on the other, and knowing that we could not be above a mile or two from the coast, we determined, and the captain and crew agreed with us, in trying to explore a passage on the ice on foot, and we succeeded well enough in this attempt to arrive safely at this place last night. Upon mustering our numbers we find that we have only lost twelve persons who perished by the extreme severity of the weather in the hazardous march which we were obliged to make; the frigate still appears not to be entirely broken down, and if the weather admits of it before she disappears, the captain will endeavour to save what he can. None of our party have any one article of baggage or dress except what we have on our bodies, but our escape is so wonderful that I can only dwell upon our miraculous deliverance, and have not room in my mind for any other reflections of loss or of embarrassments. I have been fortunate enough to save the greater part of my papers, all the material ones indeed except the Full Power, and some copies of the Petersburg correspondence. The communication between Cruxhaven and the continent not being likely to take place for some time, and our distress being likely to reach England and to alarm our friends by the report made of our danger from Helegoland, I send to Cruxhaven as soon as I can, and desire Horwood to insert our escape in the Hamburg Journal, and take any steps he can to get it inserted in the French papers, in hopes of its reaching you by those means before you receive this letter from Cruxhaven. Of the cutter which sailed with us we know nothing, but we learnt here that the packet which sailed from Yarmouth on the same day that we did (commanded by Captain Dean, of Yarmouth) was lost three miles from this place on the day before that of our misfortune. The passengers, however, and crew all escaped, except one or two of the seamen. We are likely to be detained here a few days before any road is practicable for us to reach Cruxhaven; from thence we shall proceed to Hamburgh in order to buy some shoes and stockings and coats and waistcoats, and from one of those places I will write again to you a letter which will, I doubt not, reach you as soon as this, as they tell me the passage of the Elbe is not likely to be open this fortnight at soonest."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, February 4. Harley Street.— . . . . "En vous envoyant les articles secrets qui font suite à notre traité avec la Porte que je vous avois communiqué dans son tems, permettez moi de vous demander si vous pouvez me faire l'amitié de me donner la copie de la lettre que vous avez reçu du M. Hamilton de Palerme, pour que je puisse l'envoyer ou en entier, ou en extrait, suivant que vous le jugerez à propos, à l'Empereur qui s'intéresse vivement au sort de l'infortuné Roi de Naples, et qui ne pouvait recevoir d'autre part les détails de ce qui lui est arrivé, que par Vienne, d'où toutes les nouvelles seront perverties et empoisonnées par les Thugut et les Cobenzel, qui ne manqueront pas de calomnier et l'infortuné Roi abandoné par eux, et le gouvernement, et l'Amiral Anglais qui, à tant d'autres gloires, a eut encore celle de sauver la famille royale de Naples. Les nouvelles antiques que vous me metrez à même de présenter à l'Empereur ne serviront qu'à mieux démasquer celles, que le perfide ministère Autrichien lui aura communiqué, toutes forgées sur les memes événements."

THE EARL OF CARYSFORT TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, February 5. Dublin.—"The fixed determination of the British Ministry, which will, I doubt not, be well supported by the voice of Parliament and the nation, will ultimately accomplish the great object of the Union. And I should hope that the extraordinary violence with which the Opposition here have resolved to act, will bring it nearer than might have been expected. They mean to require from Lord Castlereagh an express renunciation on behalf of the British Ministers of all intention to pursue the project now or at any future period; and, upon his refusal, to withhold the supplies. Though I learn from authority I can scarcely doubt that a resolution has been actually taken to this effect, and though I place great reliance upon the wrong-headedness of our faddy politicians, I think Foster must have more cunning than to suffer them to propose what must detach many of those who voted with them upon former occasions, and would lead immediately to a crisis which would threaten every man's property and personal safety. But he is strangely buoyed up just now with the success he has had. All the meetings of Opposition are held at his house, and he is indefatigable in his exertions to keep the party together. Bets are offered that Lord Cornwallis and Lord Castlereagh will be out of office, and the late Chancellor of the Exchequer restored before the end of this month. This confidence will be abated by a few more dismissions; and in the only case which at this moment occurs to me in which a powerful interest may be engaged in support of the delinquent, I mean that of George Knox, who is a friend of Lord Abercorn, I am glad to think that he was placed in a situation which distinguishes him from the generality; a test having been proposed to him at the election, which, however, he did not take without an express reservation by which he is not precluded from ultimately giving his support to the measure. The other two commissioners, Forster and Wolfe, the one for his own misdeeds and the other for his father's, deserve no mercy; and I think the vacancy of their offices will certainly be a lure to some better men. I communicated to Elizabeth a piece of intelligence, which is not to be doubted, of a combination between some proprietors of boroughs to secure their interest; which accounts satisfactorily to me for the defection of some persons upon whom Lord C[astlereagh] had entirely relied. I think it not altogether impossible that the Lords who have decided in favour of Union may be called upon to check the impetuosity of the Commons ; and that they have some weight with the public, and might therefore be made good use of, appears to me very plain from the hesitation of the Aggregate Body of Dublin to thank the minority of the Lords, lest they should offend the majority."

W. PITT to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1799,] February 7. Downing Street.—"I send you a draft of a message respecting the Militia. Be so good to make any alteration in it you think right, and send two copies of it to me at Hollwood to-morrow, so that I may forward them to the King for signature, in time for their being presented on Monday. I will write to him at the same time to remonstrate a little against the notions which he seems forming every day, more and more, of excluding the Catholics in case of an Union."

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, February 7. Cruxhaven.—"Anxious to pursue my journey after the escape which I described to you in my letter from Nework, and depending upon the safe though long march which the guides announced as sure to bring me from that island hither, I set out yesterday on foot with seventy seamen to walk about eight miles, chiefly over ground overflowed by high water tides, though practicable on foot at low water. Judge, however, of our dismay in finding that, by a mistake of the guides as to time of tide, they had brought us half way when they found the tide rapidly coming in ; to return was impossible, and the only chance left us was to struggle forward through water often as high as our middle, sometimes higher, through a current so rapid that it overthrew some of our stoutest seamen, and this for above an hour together in the severest frost I ever felt, and with a violent sharp snow storm in our face. My poor Henry supported it with wonderful fortitude, and thanks be to God we arrived here safely, though entirely exhausted with fatigue, and literally sinking down with lassitude. Here however we are, and here I find a letter from Mr. Garlike informing me that the H[ereditary] P[rince] of Orange, who arrived at Berlin on 29th ultimo, had desired him to express to me the Duke of Brunswick's wish that I would come on straight to Berlin to converse with him there, instead of going round by Brunswick. I have therefore sent Shaw directly on to Berlin with a letter to Mr. Garlike to say that, in obedience to H[is] S[erene] H[ighness]'s commands, I am proceeding directly to Berlin. I thought this the more necessary because, though I am anxious to get forward, the extreme fatigues which I have undergone will not, I fear, allow me to travel very expeditiously ; our baggage however will not detain us as there is not a second shirt in the company, and we shall travel something quicker for going in the post-waggons of the country.

"The surrender of Ehrenbreitstein is horrible, but was so certain that I am not much struck by it. A Russian messenger is here who probably carries to you Whitworth's Russian convention. I hear no other news, and am really so much tired that I must add no more now. I presume that I need not formally announce my arrival upon the continent to the Secretary of State till I get to Berlin, as I am put by from Brunswick.

"I have saved yesterday the same papers as before, and Count Woronzow will be glad to know that I preserved his private letter to Panin as well as the other letter. The packet to Prince Adolphus from the Princesses is lost with the frigate, but all the other letters are preserved. Adieu, I am just getting into my waggon."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, February 8. Dublin.—"I am most anxious that Mr. Pitt's Union speech should be accurately corrected and printed, for the effect produced here by it is beyond all calculation. I know that he does not usually correct his speeches, but he should consider this as a sort of manifesto which is to operate very essentially on the public mind. Foster is irritated beyond all imagination, and declares his intention of answering it. Bowes Daly and Ponsonby have prevailed upon their Catholics to present a petition on Monday next, which Foster and his Orange are to oppose. Foster's friends are then to urge the censure on Lord Cornwallis's measures, and the invitation to employ the Protestant ascendancy or Orange party in putting down the rebellion, which Ponsonby has promised to support, but which Lord FitzWilliams has peremptorily written to him to oppose; so that it will be difficult for these new allies to avoid quarrelling, though it is avowed that the intention of the Catholic petition is only to compel Government (as they must do) to oppose it. Every day convinces me that in the country the Union gains ground. In the venal town of Newry, Opposition sent down a Mr. Ball with a subscription purse of 100*l.* to oppose Corry upon Union grounds, [but he] could only get 11 votes. I am confident, therefore, that the thing may be done, but not by Lord Cornwallis. If, therefore, you are decided to let him try to close his session, for God's sake look to a successor, and strike at the Union as soon as he arrives. I cannot but think that Lord Euston and Steele would answer every purpose; and Lake would answer every purpose as well as your old woman in a blue riband, who may pair off with any old lady in a red riband."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, February 13. Dublin.—"Six mails due from England have made us very impatient, as every moment on the Continent is so interesting and important. Paddy goes on with his usual absurdity; for the great contending parties, having disagreed on their Protestant and Catholic objects, agreed that it was highly necessary to prove the dignity, impartiality, and superexcellence of the Speaker, and the gravity, decorum, and wisdom of the House by burning the unfortunate Sun, who dared to assert what twenty persons said on their legs, and what every one present at the Union debate heard and saw ; namely, the clapping, hissing, groaning, and applauding in the galleries, and the violent and continued clapping as soon as the division had been announced. And the House having now asserted that no such thing existed, I have no other argument left to convince you save that of Saint Peter in Swift's Tale of the Tub. But St. Peter has at length done himself credit ; for after having kept Parliament in suspense for a week, waiting for their resolves, a meeting was held yesterday of 83 of the principal Catholics of Leinster and Dublin, at which a unanimous letter of advice from all their Bishops was read, recommending them to wait patiently for that kindness and relief which it was manifest that the English Government had always shewn them, as far as it was possible for her to grapple with the party prejudices of this country. To this letter the Catholic peers and gentlemen of property have acceded, but did not attend. The democratic and personal friends of Mr. Ponsonby moved the same petition as was presented to Lord FitzWilliam, and stated that they were now sure of extorting from the friendship of one party and the fears of another all they wished ; but, after a debate of seven hours, they divided only seven against 76, who proposed that they should remain quiet and take no step of petition to Government or to Parliament during this session. In consequence of this they are to be given up by Mr. Ponsonby and Mr. Daly to the Orangemen and John Foster, provided that Opposition are strong enough to carry their question on Lord Corry's intended motion for Friday next ; which is for a committee on the state of the nation ; where (as at present settled) Foster is to move an address to the King, 'to quiet the alarms of Ireland by his paternal advice to his faithful Commons not to discuss further a measure so fatal as the Union.' I give you the sense of this nonsense, not the words. After that, they announce a severe enquiry into the misconduct of individuals in public Offices, who have, as they say, broke their promises by voting with Government ; such as my virtuous friend Cuffe and others ; but this threat has exactly operated the other way, by alarming for mutual defence. Cooke, whom I have just seen, tells me, entre nous, that he is confident that Government will beat on any question moved against them on Friday ; but I own that I have no great faith in this confidence. Still, however, I can make no reply to such a communication ; and the enormous weight of new taxes for the five millions that Ireland must borrow will give to Foster and Parnell, who are now playing the whole Opposition game, great facilities of impeding Government. I have been carrying on with Lord Cornwallis a temperate but strong correspondence upon the situation of the British (and of all the other) troops in this country, in consequence of the apprehension in more than one instance of the military for acting in obedience to the Proclamation ; and, after much difficulty, Lord Cornwallis has consulted the Chancellor upon a Bill to render the military (while the Proclamation continues in force) amenable only to the military tribunals for acts done by them in obedience to it; and the Chancellor tells me this morning that he has prepared the Bill. I should think that it would be carried, and God knows it is too necessary, if the country is to be held from those who would overturn it."

Postscript. "Old Beresford says that the Union is carried, and will be voted whenever Mr. Pitt chooses it should, after this session. Foster says to my informant that Mr. Pitt's is a very flimsy speech, and not half so good as half the silly pamphlets he has read for the Union. Such as it is, however, in the newspapers, it has had a wonderful effect here. I only wish it had been corrected in parts where I can plainly see that he is mis-stated. I am most anxious for a correct copy."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, February 14. Dublin.—"I enclose to you a pamphlet from which you will, I think, derive much entertainment: for, with proper allowances for a style which is rather pedantic, I consider it as the ablest performance that has appeared. The effect of it, particularly with the Catholics whom he warmly supported in 1795, has been very great; for three editions have been sold in the course of as many days. Mr. Smith has the merit of taking this line in the teeth of the mortification he felt at seeing the very young and inefficient Mr. Stewart named Solicitor General, and St. George Daly, equally inefficient though with parts, preferred to him for bar promotion, and both silent on the first day of struggle; and most certainly he has placed himself on very high ground by his abilities and conduct.

"It now seems clear that the question is gaining ground, but there certainly is not the chance of carrying it through Parliament in the hands of Lords Cornwallis and Castlereagh. So long, therefore, as other considerations bear upon that question of change, we must not look for the consummation so devoutly to be wished. An opening is said to have been made yesterday from some of the new allies, stating that if Lord Castlereagh would repeat, as his personal promise, Mr. Pitt's words (of his last speech) in which he declares his intention not to press this question in the present state of mind of the Irish Parliament, and would add the words during this session, they would immediately return to the Government colours. Some pains are taking to ascertain the extent of this opening; and my opinion having been asked by Lord Castlereagh, I have said that, in his situation, I should do it, if I saw clearly the means of resisting by such an accession every other question; for that I saw much inconvenience to the prospect of this measure of Union, and much danger to the country, from keeping the county meetings in hot water, and from pledging them as anti-unionists at a time when it was plain and palpable that Government were making no exertions to stem that torrent. But that I doubted very much the good faith of this proposed opening and the extent of it. I think it unlikely that anything can be ascertained on this chapter till to-morrow, for which contest every man on both sides is summoned; but under the impression which is now prevalent on all sides that this measure will be carried, it is plain that many of these honest patriots are looking out for a bridge on which to get back. Parnell said yesterday that Mr. Pitt and Foster were at issue who should be minister of Ireland; from which wise observation it is clear that this mock-monarch has promised him 'Th' Earldom of Hereford' in the shape of his old office, for which he is languishing. I shall be able to judge more of the style and manner of this great man this evening, as he has begged me as a particular favour to dine with him; but he is said to be confident in his manner, though disclaiming regular opposition. Whenever I have seen him, there has been much embarrassment in his manner."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, February 15. Dublin.—"I have just got yours of the 8th. The same reasons which induced you to turn with disgust from the Continent turn me from Ireland; I mean the closer view which is equally painful to us both. The opening in question appeared so loose that though, when I wrote to you yesterday, I thought it might be wise to act upon it, I am now satisfied that it would have produced no real good. The motion is for a committee on the state of the nation, which, from various changes of opinion, Government is confident that they can resist. I have seen too much of that confidence to be very sanguine, particularly as I cannot guess as to the grounds on which they suppose certain persons to vote with them who did vote against them.

"I dined with Foster, and never saw a man so painfully embarrassed. The mails came in after dinner, and from his letter he announced that Dundas had been most indecent in his attack upon Ireland, and most violent in his declarations of persevering. This account, though untrue, produced some very long faces; but when he read aloud in the papers the division, he said that the snow must have kept the opposition in the country. In a word he was most evidently extremely mortified and disappointed."

Postscript. "I am very shy of quoting you on any occasion to any one; but I have ventured to quote your opinion that the French are certainly preparing another visit; for the fears of Paddy on that chapter are very great, and certainly bind them to Government."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, February 16. Dublin.—"The enclosed will give you the result of last night's struggle, and I have the satisfaction to tell you that the victory was more complete, because only five (as I have heard) of the anti-unionists joined Government, namely the two whom I have crossed, and the two Rowley's, and Colonel King; and the difference has therefore chiefly arisen from the additional strength who have been collected by Government, and by the absence of some of the anti-unionists who stayed away. But the mass of the new allies voted with Opposition, and specifically all that the Speaker could get together, such as Lord Cole, G. Ogle, Maxwell, Rochfort, Lambert, and Ruxton, all of whom used to vote steadily with Government. I understand that the Speaker could not conceal his misery; and Sir I. Parnell was much more violent in his general language than G. Ponsonby, having depended upon dividing, as he told a friend of mine who votes with them, 127. Now upon this very much might be done, but it is clear to me that nothing will be done effectually by Lord Cornwallis; and perhaps the best one can look for is to tide quietly to a prorogation, if the impossibility is as decidedly clear as you seem to imagine it; but as you well know my opinion upon his military conduct in Ireland, you will not be surprised at my persuasion that any old woman in a red riband would do as well as the old woman in a blue riband; and that Lake is fully adequate to the general duties of Commander in Chief, and, though not all one could wish, most certainly equal to his Lordship in the task of hunting 800 Frenchmen, or those great officers Generals Holt, Aylmer, and the rest. However, I do not expect every one to see all this so strongly as I do; but I should deceive you if I did not press most earnestly upon you the duty of carrying the Union, which cannot be done by Lord Cornwallis, as paramount to every other consideration, whether of present invasion or future rebellion."

Enclosure. A letter, signed Charles H. Coote, giving some particulars of the debate in the Irish House of Commons, on Lord Corry's motion for a committee on the state of the nation.

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, February 19. Berlin.—"The date of this letter will show you that difficult as our journey has been, it is, however, at length accomplished; we arrived here on the 17th well in health, with no bad effects, as I trust, from the extraordinary fatigues which we have all undergone; my companions are both well, and I am myself entirely recovered by a day's rest at home from the lassitude which I had begun to feel. Mr. Garlike sends to you by this post a dispatch which will announce my arrival, but I have not time myself to write more than these few lines of a private letter to tell you that I am here and well. I am to-morrow to see the ministers; I have passed the greatest part of the day with Count Panin, whom it is impossible to see and to converse with without feeling great esteem and admiration for his talents and principles, and for the vigour and energy of his active mind. I expect him here every moment, and have therefore nothing to add in these first hours to these few lines, which I abandon to the course of the common post. I shall write by a messenger very shortly, but until the weather changes it is useless to do so, as there is no possibility in this continued and severe frost that any communication should be had between England and Cruxhaven."

The EARL OF MORNINGTON to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, February 21. Fort St. George.—"I return you a thousand thanks for your very kind letter of the 5th of October; it is not possible to give an idea of the pleasure which I receive from your letters in this magnificent solitude, where I stalk about like a Royal Tiger, without even a friendly jackall to soothe the severity of my thoughts.

O Majesty! where are the charms
That Vanity sees in thy face!
Better toil in my Domine's farms,
Than reign in this horrible place!

But although I feel the perpetual misery of solitude, excepting my brother having no resource of society, and having (excepting him) left every thing that is dear and valuable to me in England, my sceptre is not otherwise burdensome to me; nor am I afraid to wield it; as you will have learnt by my dispatches per Eurydicé, which I conclude will reach you in the course of the month of March. Pursuing the course traced in my minute of the 12th August, I have had the satisfaction to succeed completely in drawing the Beast of the Jungle into the toils. Beast of Jungle is a metaphor by which Tippoo Sultan is ordinarily described. I know nothing yet sufficiently certain of the French army in Egypt to be able to agree with you in the proved impracticability of their throwing four or five thousand men into Mysore, and then T[ippoo] S[ultan] would most assuredly rise. I know nothing yet of Blankett, Richéry, and the others; we have not heard a word from the Red Sea since the 26th August, 1798. In this situation I have continued my military preparations, and I am resolved to bring Tippoo Sultan to terms which shall preclude him from the expected benefit of his alliance, before the season can admit of any assistance reaching him. The happy success of the treaty with the Nizam is now completely felt. The company's subsidiary force (for which he pays) together with a large army of his own, was actually ready to join our army before our General was prepared to receive it. This event (if your interest in my success has made you sufficiently an Indian politician to feel it) you will perceive is a great triumph to me. The Mahrattahs are also ready to bring as large a force into the field as they did with Lord Cornwallis. Our own army is the finest which ever took the field in India; and by dint of scolding and flattering, I have equipped it within a period of time perfectly astonishing to the Old School. All this has already (although late in one sense) brought Tipoo Sultan to an humble posture; but I am resolved not to forfeit the inestimable advantages of that position which he has compelled me to take, and I trust that before the 18th of May, 1799, the anniversary of my taking charge of the government general, I shall have concluded a peace which shall for ever exclude the French from India. All I want is a good general, which you will say is to want all; but I believe we shall succeed without that sine quâ non. Pray read my last letters to the Secret Committee, but take care not to appear to interfere too much in Indian affairs. I suppose I shall be accused of having created a war, but I shall wait with patience for the opinions which shall reach me in the month of February, 1800. Nelson's victory is an interminable theme of poetry and joy. So write a joyful ode upon it to this motto:

*Quidlibet impotens
Sperare, fortunâque dulci
Ebria, sed minuit furorem Vix una sospes navis ab ignibus.*

"I have sent you by this dispatch a long and entertaining history respecting Tranquebar; you will of course immediately communicate the whole to Dundas, but to the Secret Committee you will not send the private correspondence of Anker, Muhldorffs, and Macaulay.

"Two events have lately happened which have taught me the pangs of a great government, and what terrible effects are often produced by an inadequate execution of one's most seriously considered orders. A dreadful massacre has been perpetrated at Benares by Vizier Ali the pseudo-Nabob of Oude, whom Lord Teignmouth most properly compelled to descend from the throne, which he had most weakly and unjustifiably allowed him to mount to the prejudice of the lawful heir. You will see the whole history in my letter and inclosures of this dispatch to the Court of Directors. This event has given me great pain, as the immediate cause of the massacre probably was the neglect of those employed in omitting to take the precautions which I had enjoined previously to the removal of Vizier Ali from Benares to the Presidency. My second grief is still more painful. The intrigues of the French at Pondicherry rendered it necessary to remove several of them to Europe in the present crisis; a list had been made out by the commanding officer on the spot, and sent to me for approbation; I reduced the list with my own hand on the principle of not including any father of a family; and it was returned to Pondicherry so reduced, with an explanation of my object not to separate parents from their children. The officer in command, had, it seems, originally sent me a false list; and although aware of my intentions, he has embarked several fathers of families for Europe, and occasioned a heart-rending scene of misery and distress. I suppose that a hundred such misfortunes have happened to you in the course of your official career, but I am new to the harness, and this weight has galled me most grievously.

"I am happy to tell you (if I have not told you before ; and I believe I have not ever told you that I am now at Fort St. George, having magnanimously sallied forth to carry on the war with my own hand) that all faction is crushed here, and that I meet with nothing but zeal, alacrity, and prompt obedience. All Lord Hobart's friends now behave very well ; but they must be scolded from home for their former misconduct, which would have ruined India, if I had not bullied and ranted. Now I forgive all that is past. Lord Clive is really happy to see me here ; there cannot be a better man, and his understanding is far beyond his reputation. But for God's sake, whatever may become of me, never send him to Bengal, if you have any share in such arrangements ; I am convinced he would ruin everything with the best intentions.

"I am grieved to hear your account of Pitt, whom I love as if he were my brother. I have known such attacks (for I understand it to have been nothing more than a great weakness of stomach) completely pass away, and even leave the constitution stronger than it was. But I am afraid he will not take the necessary care of himself. I wish he would come to see me in Bengal ; a long sea voyage would be an effectual remedy for all his complaints. Pray remember me to Lady Grenville. Have you got your plants and seeds from Bengal ?

"Mr. Spencer Smith is diligent ; he has sent us an excellent letter from the Grand Seignior to Tippoo, which I have no doubt will be useful.

"If you ever make peace with France you must retain Pondicherry, Mahé, and Chandernagore ; you must also retain Ceylon and all the Dutch possessions on the continent of India, otherwise you will soon have confusion here.

"I hope you will rent Tranquebar and Serhampore, those nests of Jacobinism and treachery.

"Do not listen to a pompous blockhead, a Sir Charles Malet ; he is a prejudiced system-monger in Indian politics. He will tell you that the Mahrattahs are now jealous ; they are always so ; but never less so than now."

COMMODORE SIR W. SYDNEY SMITH to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, February 22. Dardanelles. Tigre.—"To meet your anxiety as to my progress in the labour your friendship assigned me, I take up my pen before the Consul's boat puts off to say that I am got thus far on my way to the theatre of operations, where, however, I am told I shall find an older officer than myself ; which, if so, renders the letter I have from the Vizier for Gezzar [Djezzar] Pasha of Acre, and Hassan Bey, governor of Rhodes, unfit for delivery, as being inapplicable to any other arrangement than that of the command being in the hands of the person who has been in conference with the Ottoman Ministers on the projected operations and necessary preparations, and who can speak to them authoritatively as to detail.

Be this as it may, you may be sure I have the service and the good of the cause too much at heart to let anything stand in the way of the cordial co-operation of the allied forces so far as depends upon me. About the same time this news arrived by the Bonne Citoyenne of Captain Troubridge being gone to the station off Alexandria, which however is not mentioned in Lord Nelson's letter brought by her, a paragraph in a newspaper announced the appointment and immediate departure of Lord Elgin as ambassador for this court. This news together surprised us all in the middle of our work, and rather paralyzed the action of those we had to deal with by making them feel that much of what was in hand might be to be done over again; on our part of course we endeavour to keep the traces tight for fear of a retrograde movement, which, of course, is recommended by those who point out Naples as a warning to such as go on too fast. I can't say I saw any inclination or disposition to listen to this sort of timid counsel, or to recede; on the contrary every confidence in our ability and readiness to protect this empire was manifested, although it was strongly urged that more force than that pointed out by Lord Nelson's last letter to me, a copy of which I send enclosed, was necessary in the Levant, lest anything from Ancona or Toulon should escape the vigilance of our cruising squadrons lower down. The force assigned is exactly what was specified in your Lordship's instructions to us, communicated to Lord St. Vincent and Lord Nelson; no mention being therein made of frigates. None are appropriated to this service, and thus if Smyrna, which is exposed to a coup de main, should be visited by any straggling runaways while we are on the coast of Egypt, our establishment there, which is but barely reviving since the fire, will be again destroyed, as our fishery at Newfoundland was by Richéry.

"I have made the necessary requisition to the admiral in the Mediterranean for a certain force in frigates, as required and even stipulated in our conferences; but it will be necessary that this should not only be backed by orders from home, but by the means of dispatching them being furnished from England. This being become a diplomatic question I leave it in your Lordship's hands to settle with Lord S[pencer] rather than intrude on him with my reasoning, which, with all his indulgence for me, will be set down to the same account as all the similar applications he is daily receiving from every quarter of the globe. Three frigates at least are necessary to preserve the footing we have gained here, as we cannot as yet count on efficient force from our new allies, though we are forming it. As to their force in troops of disembarcation, I mean in a disciplined state, it does not amount to more than 1,000, which have been placed at my disposal. I have therefore been induced to listen to an offer made me by an Albanian chief of a thousand men, who are ready to enter into the British service in preference to any other. These are to be paid as our marines are being, to do not only the same duty as they do on board, but that of able seamen, which is a very great acquisition; and if they perform what they promise, this force may be increased to a greater number with great advantage. The late intercepted letters speak of the discontent and distress which prevails in Buonaparte's army; we have taken measures to turn it to account, looking forward to drawing off the malcontents, irritated as they are against the Directory, and turning their arms against them either in Italy or the South of France. I hope if my brother is removed from Constantinople (and removed he must be, for after the place he has held, and filled with such credit, he can no more become second than I could become Lieutenant of the Tigre) I hope he will not quit this scene of action entirely. Naples is not gone yet. Sir William Hamilton writes me word he is going home. Perhaps a younger man may now be required there; my brother speaks Italian."

Enclosure.

ADMIRAL LORD NELSON to COMMODORE SIR W. SIDNEY SMITH.

Extract. 1798, December 31. Palermo.—"I have been honoured with your letter from off Malta, with its several enclosures; namely an extract of a letter from Lord Grenville to John Spencer Smith, also an extract of another letter from Lord Grenville to yourself and brother; and Earl St. Vincent having sent me an extract of a letter from Earl Spencer to him saying that you should, from certain circumstances, be the officer selected for the command of a small squadron in the Levant seas, and his Lordship having also informed me that Captain Miller was the officer of your choice, and desiring me to give you a frigate or sloop of war until Captain Miller's arrival, you may rest assured that I shall most strictly comply with the instructions sent by Lord Grenville to your brother, also those of Earl Spencer and Earl St. Vincent; for this purpose I must desire you will lose no time in proceeding to Alexandria to take upon you the command of the blockade, which I shall direct to be delivered up to you, and from my heart I wish you every success. The united squadron of Turks and Russians, and of two sail of the line under your command, must be sufficient for the two ships armés en flûte and three frigates, which, thank God, are all the enemy have left in those seas."

BARON de LERTHE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Austrian negotiations with France.

1799, February. London.—"On écrit de Berlin, en date du 5 Janvier, qu'on sait de quelqu'un qui, selon toute apparence, doit être bien informé, que les négociations entre l'Autriche et la France ont été entamées par la cour de Toscane, et se continuent peut-être encore. La base principale sur laquelle la cour de Vienne a traité roule sur les points suivants.

1. "Que tout soit rétabli comme il était lors de la conclusion du traité de Campo Formio.

2. "Que, par conséquent, les monarchies en Italie restent comme elles étaient alors.

3. "Que l'Autriche, pour sa sûreté, ait la rivière Oglio pour frontière, et obtienne par conséquent Mantoue.

"On ajoute, d'ailleurs, que l'Empereur ne demande aucune acquisition en Allemagne, mais veut se borner à des arrondissements en Italie; que par la base surmentionnée, on avait entre autre le but de mettre un frein aux manœuvres révolutionnaires de la France; et que, quoiqu'on eut fort bien senti que par le même il serait fort difficile de l'y faire accéder, on s'était flatté de la porter à des termes plus équitables, par les armements formidables de l'Autriche elle-même, par l'assistance de la Russie, et par les préparatifs militaires du Roi de Naples. Sous ce point de vue le Baron de Thugut avait été très fâché que Naples eut attaqué sitôt; croyant que cette puissance aurait pû imposer à la France, mais non pas se soutenir contre elle à la longue. Il était d'avis que l'Autriche ne devait pas, en suivant cet exemple, risquer le tout en recommençant la guerre; mais plutôt tâcher de s'arranger avantagement avec la France en Italie, et laisser aux autres puissances à trouver elles-mêmes les meilleurs moyens pour convenir avec les Français de ce qui concernait leurs propres intérêts. On a ajouté enfin que le Baron de Thugut voyait avec beaucoup de peine que, vraisemblablement, la levée de boucliers précipitée de la Cour de Naples avait renversé toutes ces idées." Copy.

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, February 23. Berlin.—"In the expectation of being able to dispatch Mason in two or three days, I write only a few lines of a public dispatch by the post of to-day to tell you of my arrival here on the 17th instant, and I add a few words of a private letter only to tell you that we are all well and somewhat recovered from our fatigues. By a letter of the 8th instant, which I had received yesterday from Captain Wallis at Newark, I find that a good part of our baggage is likely to follow us safely to Berlin, and as his letter announces the certain destruction of the frigate, which is broke down at both ends, and was only supported by the ice in the middle, I take for granted that in the first moments of this thaw the Proserpine has crumbled to pieces. I cannot enough speak of the praise due to Captain Wallis in these hard trials, and I should not have thought I had done fairly by him if I had not spoken as I ought about him, both in my public dispatch of to-day, and in a letter which I wrote concerning him to Lord Spencer on the second day after our escape. The interest which has been taken about us here is extremely flattering, and considering that we are come naked into this world of Berlin, we have much to say of the kindness which has been shown to us here. Of Count Panin I shall have too frequent occasion to write to you to make it necessary for me to dwell now upon his subject as much as I should at all times be glad to do ; but, in truth, I am a good deal pressed in time by the first hurry of the thousand things which are to be done in the first days ; and as I had hoped that I should have had early communication enough to have enabled me to send a messenger to-morrow, I had not in any degree prepared myself for to-night's post, and the little time I have is shortened by the necessity of my going this evening at six to be presented to the Queen. It is now an age that I have lived in ignorance of England, as not a word can as yet have reached me since I left Yarmouth, which will have been to-morrow a complete month. The snow however has disappeared, and three successive days of south wind make us look with confidence every hour for the arrival of English letters.

"Death has been busy here, and has given room to great regrets, in the person of Prince Reuss, and Prince Frederick of Orange ; to these the last posts have added the Elector Palatine, to whom the Duke de Deux Ponts has quietly succeeded.

"There were a few lines to-day from Sir M. Eden to Mr. Garlike dated February 16, but the same post will have brought you dispatches from him at greater length than those which reached us here, which do not contain any important news."

COMMODORE SIR W. SIDNEY SMITH TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, February 26. Rhodes.—"I take the opportunity of a Tartar which my very old friend Hassan Bey dispatches to the Porte, to afford you the satisfaction of knowing that I am here with him combining the operations settled in conference with the Ottoman ministry, as far as his very limited means will allow ; and as soon as my next conference with him is over, and matters finally arranged for him to follow me with an efficient force (as to equipment at least, however small) I shall proceed to meet Captain Troubridge's very natural impatience to be relieved. He writes me word from Alexandria that he supposes me gone on to Constantinople by his not finding me on the station, as he was led to expect from the tenor of his orders, not knowing that I had other duties to do, and that my operations were not to be confined to the simple 'blockade,' but extended to the preparation of a force sufficient to carry the place, which, from its state as he describes it, I hope to do when the first division of Turkish troops arrives. I find the arrangement of the relief of that station by an older officer than me, which has taken place since Lord Nelson's letter to me of 31 December, is, notwithstanding, in conformity to the disposition contained in that letter, as Captain T[roubridge] says he is instructed to leave me in the command of the blockade ; thus my apprehensions of want of connection in the measures to be executed under the combination of Gezzar Pasha, Hassan Bey, and a new person who was not at the conferences wherein they were debated, is done away, and we shall go on very smoothly, I have no doubt. I hope, however, that my operations will not be interrupted in the middle by the arrival of any chance comer as senior officer, because the service must in that case suffer after all that has passed, and I shall be left accountable for measures suggested by me, and which require the fostering hand of the projector in the execution. When we come to blows, which I hope will be soon now as the season is becoming fine and the Ramazan fast is over, we shall soon prove whether, as is said, Alexandria must fall on the first attack; if it should not, we shall at least have learnt how to make a second to greater advantage."

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, February 28. Berlin.—“The dispatch which I send to you I presume is very much that which all the latter correspondence of Count Panin and Mr. Garlike must have taught you to expect. Haugwiz and Finchenstein are both believed to be sincerely disposed to adopt the measure of war, but the first of these two is thought to have rather less influence than he had, and to be afraid of still diminishing that by pressing opinions against which the mind of the king is pre-occupied by the influence of so weak a man as Koekeritz, who is made the tool and channel of designs which he has not sense enough to perceive the drift of. Old Finchenstein meanwhile has obtained an audience of the king to urge the necessity of the measures which we recommend, and I am in hopes he will in a day or two repeat his advice in a written mémoire, after which General Stamford will make an effort to prevail upon the Duke of Brunswick to second the joint opinion of the two most influential cabinet ministers here. Schulemburg said the other day on this subject, on a beau faire tout ce qu'on voudra mais on aura la guerre; and in this opinion many reasonable persons concur, though it is evident that the king's mind is not yet suffered to look to so manly a decision. Count Panin's hopes are, I think, rather diminished by his extreme disappointment at the fatal weakness of the Duke of Brunswick, of whom none of our friends here can speak with patience; he is likewise much embarrassed by the positive orders of his court to retire from hence if he has not a prompt and satisfactory answer, and he is naturally impatient in having as yet received no answer from Thugut to the letter which he wrote to Vienna in November. That my hopes are very sanguine as to succeeding in the prompt attainment of what we wish I cannot say; but I am nevertheless not without good hopes that Austria and Prussia must, before it is long, be driven into the necessity of war, and in that view you will see that I am working on as well as I can. My first care was to persuade Count Panin to make (without directions from his Court) the formal offer from Vienna which Prince Reuss had been directed by Thugut to press upon them here through the medium of Count Panin. I am now very well pleased that I did so, for I last night received a letter from Sir M. Eden of 20th instant, expressing the astonishment there at no answer being sent yet from Berlin to their offer of a month ago of dissolving the Congress. I shall send to-day, either by estafette or courier, to explain to Thugut through Sir M. Eden that this proposal had not been made till four days ago, and I will not let them rest here till they send the answer which is desired, or one as favourable as can be obtained from them. You will observe that I have spoken to Haugwiz of the offer of Russian auxiliaries as the joint offer produced by the concert between the two courts of London and Petersburg. I did so because, though I found Count Panin was ordered by his court not to speak here of the Russian convention with England, I thought it not fit to let that stand here as the bare and single offer of the court of Petersburg; by Panin's communications I have seen that convention. I think it should have contained a more marked reference to Great Britain in the disposal of the force which she pays, but I presume you will be so well satisfied with the general effect of the convention that you will not demur as to several inaccuracies which are to be found in it, and the neglect of some points which ought to be found in it; and you will have seen that to this convention the Emperor adheres, notwithstanding the failure of Count Cobenzel's famous convention. When we speak of Holland, if we get on to that detail, which we shall do if Austria does not make peace, Haugwiz will recommend much caution in the naming the restoration of the Stadtholder, and will urge the advantage of declaring at first only for the deliverance of Holland, a distinction which it is probable enough the situation of parties in that country may in the first moments render necessary.

"I do not find as great a jealousy here of the designs of Austria as to Bavaria as I thought would have arisen from the death of the Elector Palatine; their blow, if they intended any, would probably have been struck on that occasion, for they have certainly 110,000 men in Bavaria and the Palatinate exclusive of the Russian army. Is it new to you that the supposed agent for the intercourse said to be carried on between Austria and France is Marcolini, now at Vienna from the Cisalpine Republic, and it is through him that Haugwiz believes they are negotiating. I have written these desultory sentences as they occurred, and my time allows of no more, as I must see Haugwiz upon this offer from Vienna, on which I still build some hopes of concerted hostilities as long as I can."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1799, February. Harleÿ Street.]—"Je vous suis bien reconnaissant pour la communication que vous avez eu la bonté de me faire de l'avis que vous avez reçu de l'Amirauté par rapport à notre escadre. C'est à vous que je dois sans doute ces arrangements dont on sera content en Russie, et qui m'épargne des désagréments infinis. Depuis votre entrée dans le ministère je n'ai reçu que de ces marques de bontés de votre part, et je vous proteste que je sens tout le prix du bonheur de traiter avec vous les affaires. Je me trouve come en Paradis apres avoir été plus de sept ans en Purgatoire. Je vous supplie de me faire la grace de parvenir à Sa Majesté le Roi la lettre que j'ai reçu du Duc d'Oldenbourg.

“ Si vous n'avez pas envoyé au chevalier Whitworth le projet du manifeste du Roi de France, pourriez vous me faire la grace de m'en donner une copie pour que je puisse l'envoyer à l'Impératrice par mon courier que je compte d'expédier vendredi prochain. Je vous suis bien obligé pour la copie de l'extrait de la plate lettre du Duc d'Alcudia à M. del Campo.”

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1799, January-March.]———“ Je crois pouvoir avoir l'honneur de vous assurer, d'après plusieurs conversations presque confidentielles que j'ai eu avec M. de Pergen, que ce jeune homme est entièrement porté pour une paix même honteuse avec les Français. J'ai lieu d'être certain, en conséquence, qu'il écrit dans le même sens par le courier d'aujourd'hui, et qu'il déconseille l'emprunt, maintenant notre palladium, le plus qu'il peut. Quoique sa mémoire ne porte que sur la partie financière, je crains toujours les effets des mauvais avis dans un pays où l'on n'est que trop sujet à prendre le mauvais parti. Je sais d'ailleurs que sa dépêche sera portée sous les yeux de l'empereur comme la mienne, et je meurs de peur qu'elle n'ait plus de succès, parcequ'elle est un peu plus platte encore. Si je ne connoissois pas Milord Grenville, je n'oserais pas prévenir le Secrétaire d'Etat de mes craintes, mais je sais qu'il rend justice aux motifs qui m'animent ; l'amour du bien général et la gloire même de ma Cour qui pourroit ignorer ses propres intérêts, me font un devoir de l'avertissement que je prends la liberté de vous donner. Je sais qu'en en profitant, vous me rendrez justice sans me compromettre, et surtout, qu'après avoir lû cette lettre, vous la brûlerez immédiatement.”

Postscript. “ Si vous ne me savez pas gré de mon zèle, soyez au moins convaincu de l'étendue de ma confiance et de ma haute opinion. Je ne trouverai vraisemblablement plus l'occasion de vous en donner un témoignage aussi démonstratif.”

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1799, January-March.]———“ J'attends avec une véritable impatience des nouvelles de l'homme que nous avons envoyé aux Pais-Bas ; le premier bâtiment nous en apportera sans doute. On m'a dit ces jours derniers que les Belges avaient envoyé nouvellement quelqu'un ici tout-à-fait dans nos vues. L'amitié que vous me témoignez et mes principes me donnent le droit de vous demander franchement si la chose est vraie, comme je songe sans cesse à cette diversion intéressante qui sourit à mon cœur comme à mon esprit. Il m'est venu plusieurs idées à ce sujet que je crois utiles, et que j'aurai l'honneur de vous soumettre lorsque vous aurez bien voulu m'indiquer le moment de vous faire ma cour. Agréez tous mes hommages et mes félicitations les plus sincères sur le part que je prends en bon Anglois à la gloire immortelle dont se couvre  votre véritablement grande nation, sous le sage gouvernement des très grands ministres, qui la conduisent sur le sentier droit de la vertu de l'héroïsme et de la prospérité.

“Je crois qu'il seroit à propos que j'eusse aussi l'honneur de vous entretenir avant le départ de Mr. Grenville. Je serai toujours prêt à faire tout ce que je dois pour la cause; et pour mon ami, et le frère de mon ami, tout ce que l'un et l'autre pourront désirer.”

COUNT STARHEMBERG to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1799, January-March.]———“J'ai prié mon ami le Comte de Woronzow de vous parler de toutes mes peines; en vérité les évènements du moment me percent le cœur. Je n'ai pas pu prendre sur moi de faire ma cour au Roi depuis quinze jours. Vous savez combien j'étois exact auparavant, et les bontés touchantes de Sa Majesté m'y engageoient doublement; mais autant j'étais fier de me montrer, autant ma constance doublait quand le voisinage des Français de Vienne ne nous embrouillait pas encore, autant suis-je honteux de les voir si près de Naples. Votre belle âme me comprendra et me plaindra. Daignez dans l'occasion en dire un mot au Roi, auquel je suis bien respectueusement et sincèrement attaché. Quoique je n'ai malheureusement jusqu'à présent aucune communication officielle à vous faire, je voudrais avoir l'honneur de vous entretenir quelques instans. Ma tête travaille sans cesse dans le sens du mal à faire à ces infâmes Français, et j'aurais à ce sujet quelques idées à vous soumettre. Je viendrai demain en ville, et je me présenterai à votre porte en Cleveland Row après onze heures. Si vous ne pouviez pas me voir, laissez de grâce un mot à votre portier par lequel vous voudrez bien m'indiquer à quelle heure je pourrai vous faire ma cour.”

MILITARY DISPOSITIONS FOR THE CAMPAIGN OF 1799.

LORD GRENVILLE to COUNT WORONZOW.

Minute.

[1799, February-March.]———“Nous croyons que l'emploi des 45,000 hommes en Suisse seroit infiniment plus utile à la cause commune que si on les envoyoit sur le Bas-Rhin.

1. “Parceque les opérations que l'on pourroit avoir en vue dans cette dernière destination, seroient toujours plus ou moins embarrassées par la démarcation Prussienne, et par la politique vacillante de cette Cour.

2. “Parceque toute cette ligne depuis Dusseldorf jusqu'à Mentz, et de là encore jusqu'à Strasbourg, est hérissée de forteresses, la France ayant aujourd'hui entre ses mains toute son ancienne barrière, ainsi que toute celle qui lui étoit opposée. Il faudroit donc absolument une forte artillerie de siège pour pouvoir faire le moindre progrès de ce côté là.

3. " Dans cet état des choses une armée sur la rive droite du Rhin n'auroit aucune influence sur ce qui se passe en Brabant et en Hollande. Le seul moyen de favoriser des insurrections dans cette dernière seroit de pouvoir entrer dans le pays du côté de la Prusse, ou de s'emparer de quelques positions importantes sur les côtes maritimes de ces Provinces par des troupes de débarquement.

4. " Il est de toute évidence que la présence de cette armée sur le Bas-Rhin influeroit encore moins sur la défense de Hambourgh, et des autres villes Anséatiques. La part que l'Empereur de Russie paroît vouloir prendre à cette défense est, sans doute, un objet de la plus grande importance pour bien des raisons. Mais cet objet seroit (je pense) beaucoup mieux rempli par l'envoi d'un corps très inférieur en nombre, mais qui débarqueroit près de Hambourg, et s'établirait soit là, soit en Holstein; soutenu, s'il le falloit, par un corps de troupes Danoises que le Roi de Danemarck ne refuseroit pas aux instances de l'Empereur.

5. " La grande faute des opérations militaires contre les François a été, jusqu'ici, la trop grande division des forces que l'on auroit dû concentrer sur une seule ligne d'attaque. L'opération contre la Suisse offre de plus les deux grands avantages, de délivrer un peuple militaire qui ne demande pas mieux que de s'armer contre les François, et d'ouvrir aux attaques des alliés la seule partie de la frontière Française qui soit sans défense. Cette opération auroit aussi une grande influence sur la guerre en Italie.

6. " Il y a aussi des considérations morales, surtout par rapport à l'impression du public ici, qui font que la délivrance de la Suisse serviroit plus que tout autre succès à remplir les vues que l'on doit se proposer par la guerre actuelle."

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, March 4. Berlin.—" To-morrow morning being fixed for announcing the answer to the proposal from Vienna, and some account being to be given by Haugwiz, on the 6th, to Count Panin and myself upon the general concert, I shall send a messenger to Cruxhaven with what information I may have on these subjects, and will write this morning such desultory matter as belongs better to a private letter. I was scarcely arrived here when I received a communication from Stutgard, signed W. M'Intosh, and claiming to be known to you and to Mr. Canning, which expresses the greatest apprehensions at the progress of French principles in the duchy of Wirtemberg under the active directions of Citoyen Mengaud and Citoyen Trouvè, who are so good as to employ themselves with great zeal and success for that purpose; and the informations which I have since had confirm this account, with the addition that the Duke of Wirtemberg is so disheartened and dispirited at the contradictions which he meets with from the States now assembled at Stutgard, that he talks of retiring to Louisbourg, and if he does so, that timid measure will, it is feared, be of the most fatal consequences. It had been suggested to me to try to prevent this by procuring some encouraging assurances from this Court, but knowing the direct communication between Wirtemberg and Vienna, and judging that such an interference from Prussia would increase the jealousy which the Austrian Government have of Prussian interference in the empire; considering too that 110,000 Austrians are upon the line of march towards that country, I thought that every consideration led to try the influence of Vienna rather than that of Berlin, and I accordingly have recommended this object to Sir M. Eden's attention. I hope no time will be lost in it, for every account concurs in the description of danger which prevails there. Trouvè was originally employed in England by Prussia, but proving himself, as Haugwiz told me, to be a very mischievous democrat, they sent for him here to shut him up, which he avoided by escaping to France, and has since become one of the most active agents for the revolutionizing of Germany. I do not know how far your Wirtemberg negotiator, Sir J. Hippley, could be likely to put into the Duke the courage and prudence which is wanting, but if he really has any means of influence there, it were well perhaps that he should employ it. With the Prince of Hesse Cassel the French Directory have likewise been tampering, and have been endeavouring to tempt him to range himself under the protection of France. I believe, however, that the only effect of this has been to alarm and indispose Prussia the more with respect to France, the Landgrave himself being, as Haugwiz describes him, perfectly steady and well disposed to resist both the intrigues and menaces of France.

"I have seen since my arrival here the Baron Linden who came from Holland, as you know, to solicit assistance from the Court of Berlin. I have found him extremely dissatisfied at the distance at which he has been kept here, and impatient of the various excuses under which Haugwiz has hitherto avoided seeing or communicating with him. I have thought it right to do what I could to shew him the necessity of waiting for a fit and well-concerted opportunity of resistance in Holland, and have pacified him with the assurance of my belief that, whenever that moment should arrive, Haugwiz's present silence and coldness would not stand in the way of whatever arrangements might appear to promise best. He laments the disadvantage of letting go by the opportunity which arises from the present detestation of the French in the United Provinces, where the pecuniary requisition can hardly be collected, and the requisition of men has not been ventured since the passing of the decree. The alarm at Hamburgh of an expected attack from the French seems meanwhile to increase, and information has been sent to the King of Prussia from thence which confidently names

General Brune as destined by the Directory to command 30,000 men on this expedition. The King's answer, for he wrote one with his own hand in returning thanks for the information, expressed his firm determination to try the fate of his army to the last man rather than suffer the approach of the French to the city of Hamburg. We have lived hourly in the expectation that the news which arrived here from Rastadt would be confirmed, but it still rests on the same single authority. It is a letter sent to the Duke of Brunswick by Eberling, who is chargé d'affaires to the Duke of Brunswick at Rastadt; it is dated the 24th ultimo at 12 at night, and positively asserts the arrival there of a courier from the Directory notifying to the French ministers there a declaration of war from France against the King of Bohemia, and an order to the French troops to cross the Rhine. Haugwiz still continues to believe it, but still is without any letter whatever from Rastadt.

March 5. "I continue to add to this private letter, which I trust I shall be able to send to-morrow with some certain knowledge of the answer to my overture, though without any official communication; for to-morrow is now fixed by Count Haugwiz to shew confidentially to Count Panin the answer which is afterwards formally to be made to the proposal of assistance from Russia; and Haugwiz has told me that, from my manner of stating this offer, he should consider the answer to Petersburg as applying in great part to London likewise. Meanwhile the answer has this morning been given to the proposition from Austria for the dissolution of the congress at Rastadt; it is a verbal answer, and purports to be an assurance on the part of the King of Prussia that he is ready to concur in that measure pour le cas d'hostilités commencées, et à condition que S[a] M[ajesté] I[mpériale] voudroit bien communiquer à S[a] M[ajesté] P[russienne] les mesures et la disposition qu'il aura pris pour la sûreté des princes du Sud de l'Allemagne, et particulièrement pour les princes rive-Rhins en cas de rupture. Count Panin, who was present at this answer, from the part which he had taken in the measure, thinks this condition equitable, and is not as much dissatisfied with it as M. de Hudelist, the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires, to whom it was made; for my own part I think there is too much of fencing in it, and I had rather have seen, no doubt, a direct assent to the proposal. But in order to do away the inconvenience of M. Hudelist giving a harsh or unfavourable representation of this by his courier to-night, I have seen Count Haugwiz myself upon this answer, and I asked him whether he did not think 110,000 Austrians in Bavaria and the Palatinate a sufficient security for the princes in the south of Germany; 'Yes,' said he, 'most assuredly, if Austria will act with them: and the only object which we have in our answer is to ascertain that point.' With this explanation I have written by Hudelist's courier to-night, to state to Sir M. Eden what had been Haugwiz's view of this answer, and to urge him to try all his influence with M. de Thugut to obtain from him such an intimation of the Emperor's meaning to act for the defence of Germany, as will satisfy the appearance of hesitation which this answer may seem to carry with it. In truth the King of Prussia, as Haugwiz states it, desires, before he invites the princes of the Empire to challenge the hostility of France, to be enabled to tell them that means are likely to be employed which are adequate to their defence. This point, therefore, I have pressed to Sir Morton, and to Thugut through him, and have represented that if Austria was really determined to abide the consequences of the proposal which she had made, and which I considered as equivalent to an offer of commencing hostilities, a plain and direct language upon that subject would, I was confident, remove all difficulties here, and begin at once a concert of good hope and promise. If these expressions are something more sanguine than belong to the moment in which I write them, yet as I allow something for their evaporating in their passage to Thugut, and something for the prejudices which they are intended to counteract, I do not repent of the favourable statement which I have made for Vienna in describing the disposition which prevails here. If I gave way to my own suspicions, I should perhaps fear that this answer from Berlin, which seems to call for promise of hostility as measures of defence for the princes of Germany, may mean to hint at an extended line of demarcation with the present system of neutrality as affording sufficient measures of defence; and all that I have heard of the Elector of Bavaria and other southern states of Germany soliciting to be included in the Prussian line of neutrality would increase this apprehension, concerning which I am the more jealous from thinking that it may accord with the sort of concert of vigorous defence which I am always afraid of seeing brought forward at Berlin instead of the vigorous offence which it is my business and study to promote here. Great objections indeed in every view seem to me to arise to any system which leaves the greater part of Germany in a state of neutrality while the Emperor is in a state of war; nor do any of the military opinions which I have heard in favour of this arrangement, as telling more against France than against the Emperor, satisfy me in any degree against the political mischiefs arising from it. The activity of French agents in revolutionizing Germany remains in full vigour and effect during such a state of neutrality, and it is against this growing evil that open and successful hostility can alone furnish sufficient security. I heartily hope that my suspicions as to such an extended line of defence being the only measure which Prussian spirit is yet equal to, are ill-founded; but when I so often sound Haugwiz and find him answer well both as to the general danger and the necessity of concert, and yet see him hesitate as to the immediate active and vigorous hostility which I look for in that concert, it is impossible not to have much apprehension on that subject. If that be the line which they adopt I see no remedy, unless their eventual concert should turn upon any event so near and probable as to offer good hope that the event may have arisen while we are discussing it; but unless I am otherwise directed, nothing else short of vigorous hostility is the discussion of my mission.

March 6. "This morning brings an account from Paris through Baron Rede that, in consequence of the Austrian troops having passed the Inn, the French Directory had directed their troops likewise to move forward; and had announced at Rastadt that they were still equally desirous of peace, and would order their army to resume its former line of position whenever the Austrian troops would return to theirs, and satisfy the Directory upon their demand respecting the march of the Russians. I presume this will be found to be the explanation of the Rastadt news which was called a declaration of war; but if the Austrians have advanced their army rather than give way upon the demand made by France, I think it is not easy to see how Austria can now recede, and therefore I am still much disposed to believe in immediate hostilities between France and Austria. The object here which Haugwiz will probably attempt is to limit the proposed concert to that of an extended line of what he honours with the name of vigorous defence; but I will not tire you with more speculations on this point, as I will keep my letter open till I learn to-day from Count Panin what is the complexion of the answer which is confidentially to be shewn to him this morning. Fauche is come here from Hamburgh, and is, as I understand, very sanguine in the hopes of his negotiation at Paris. Pichégru is likewise here incognito. I have seen neither of them, but it is because I have not sought much for that communication, and am in general disposed to place no great confidence in the intrigues of Paris, or in the judgment and discretion of those who conduct them. Another motive with me for not being forward in these discussions is that I am persuaded Siéyès must be informed of them, and for gaining the public mind or that of the king to the concert which we wish, we should risk much if we gave Siéyès the advantage of stating that the war which we provoked was a war only for the establishment of the monarchy of France. I should however be glad to hear what you wish me to do in this matter, as although I keep clear of it, Count Panin and General Stamford are in a good deal of communication upon it, and I am likely to be pressed to mix a good deal more in it than at present I am disposed to think would be right or useful.

March 6, 3 p.m. "I am this moment furnished with the official papers from Rastadt sent by M. Goertz on the 27th ultimo to the Government here, by which the event of war between Austria and France seems ascertained beyond all doubt; and if further proof was wanting, it is found in the circumstance of M. Domb (another Prussian Minister at Rastadt) having been told by the French Ministers there that General Masséna had orders to demand the immediate evacuation of the Grisons, and in case of refusal to attack the Austrians there. So far so good; yet you will see that this event has produced no good spirit in the answer from Prussia to Austria; and I find from Panin's confidential conversation with Haugwiz this morning there will be no better spirit in the official answer preparing for him and for me. That answer will be to concur with us in our view of the common danger, and the necessity of common concert, but to offer on the part of Prussia, instead of immediate hostilities against France, a more extended concert for the protection of the north of Europe. This concert is to embrace Denmark under the supposed influence of Russia, and though it is actually a defensive concert, we are to be reconciled to it by being told that it may easily lead to offensive measures. I asked what were the cases in which defensive measures might become offensive, but I do not find that any such are explained, nor do I understand that any distinct solution is suggested by Haugwitz to the difficulty which he will hear from us of our being instructed to pursue offensive measures, and to establish, not a concert of defence, but a concert of prompt and vigorous hostility ; yet he continues to express sanguine hopes that events may daily arise which will enable him to bring the measures of his Court nearer to the wishes of London and of Petersburg. If the only difficulty which existed here was founded on suspicions of Vienna I should understand this ; but when Haugwitz to-day described the proposed answer to Panin, he knew that Austria was either actually at war or in a state equivalent to it ; as no man believes that they will have crossed the Inn to give up the Grisons and send back the Russian troops at the requisition of France. In this state both Panin and myself are disposed jointly to make the strongest representation against the answer as it is described, and to ask for a specific explanation of the case, whatever it be, in which Prussia will act hostilely against France in concert with the two Courts. Infinite will be the mischief resulting from this conduct in Prussia, because in continuing to offer to great part of Germany the specious though fallacious appearance of peace and neutrality, while Austria and the south of Germany is separately fighting for its existence, that spirit of division which France is successfully pursuing in Germany is powerfully assisted, the general means of defence are impaired and lessened, and Prussia becomes by this line of conduct a party to the measures pursued by France, in the moment when we are seeking to engage them [her?] under a sense of common danger, in measures of common hostility. I shall wait impatiently to hear from you on this subject. Count Panin seems sometimes to entertain rather more than I do the discussion of defensive concert, if the positive and marked orders of his Court would allow it. I am inclined to think that it might be useful to alarm them here with the idea that, if Austria makes war and Prussia remains neutral, the whole co-operation of the two Courts of London and Petersburg will naturally centre in Vienna instead of Berlin ; but this is delicate ground, partly because we must have the concurrence of Prussia for the great object of Holland, and partly because the conduct of the Cabinet at Vienna makes it difficult for us even to threaten to connect ourselves in a subsidiary view with them ; yet it will not escape you that in Sir Charles Whitworth's last dispatch there is an insinuation of Cobentzel's which is meant to lead to communications of this description. Upon the whole I shall be inclined to feel the ground a little here in that shape, and shew to them, rather as a danger than a menace, that Great Britain and Russia, looking for active co-operation in war with France and finding it offered by Vienna and refused by Berlin, must, if it [they] be consistent with its [their] own principles, give its [their] means, its [their] support and its [their] concert to those who adopt the same system, instead of reserving it for those who, in professing to be neutral, rather augment than diminish the common danger."

Commodore SIR W. SIDNEY SMITH to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, March 7. Tigre, off Alexandria.—"I send you the enclosed papers communicated to me by Captain Troubridge. I shall of course turn the information to account. In my intercourse with the shore I feel much in want of a good Arabic interpreter, which was not to be procured at Constantinople in time enough for him to come with me. I shall endeavour to get one at any price, for I cannot get on without direct intercourse with the enemies of the French on the coast. I have heard nothing of Murad Bey since his first letter to Captain Hood after the battle of the Nile, so that I am not able to judge how far he may be in force. Ibrahim Bey is at Gaza, on better terms with Gezzar Pasha than the former. I shall labour to make them act together in the common cause. I have sent Mr. Wright to Gezzar Pasha to open my communication with him. He promised to move after the Ramazan feast, which being over yesterday I hope he will meet me on my rendezvous, thereby evading Buonaparte's meditated blow, and taking him in the rear with a more formidable artillery than the French can have with them. The intercepted French letters call Egypt une parfaite Vendée, by which it should seem that the whole country is against them, independent of combined military operations, which, since Murad and Ibrahim Beys' first efforts of resistance, have not been tried.

"I am very apprehensive no Turkish army that we shall be able to assemble under a Turkish leader, will be able to do more than fight one pitched battle. I reckon, with even so few as three thousand of the native troops in British pay, I could manage to keep a certain force always in line to guard artillery, to attack an essential point, to turn the scale of a battle as corps de reserve, or to cover a retreat. I have taken on myself to accept an offer made me by an Albanian chief from the Morea, of one thousand with proper officers as marines, which I mean to employ in gun-boats on the coast and on the Nile. Without some such force I see we may cruise here to eternity, hauling off to sea for every gale, and never be able to profit by the openings which famine, disease, and desertion may, nay do, give me. I am at a loss to know what fund to draw on for the contingent expenses of formation. The monthly pay can come from the ships' books on the naval establishment."

Enclosure.

LERIGI MALAGAMBA to COMMODORE SIR W. SIDNEY SMITH.

1799, March 1. Acre.—"D'ordre de Son Excellence Gezzar Pascha, j'ai l'honneur de vous écrire la présente qui vous sera rendue par Mahomet Bey, capitaine d'un petit brigantin du dit gouverneur. Voici ce qui en est l'objet. Puisque par Monsieur le capitaine Foote, vous avez eû la bonté d'envoyer avis de l'invasion que les François devoient faire en Syrie, vous n'ignorez pas le dessein de nos ennemis communs. Je dois à présent vous dire que, les jours passés, après s'être emparés de Lariss, [El Arisch] chateau entre les frontières de l'Egypte et la Syrie, que les troupes de Gezzar n'ont presque rien défendu, sont aussi entré à Gaza, que les mêmes troupes ont abandonnées.

"Aujourd'hui les soldats de Gezzar, au nombre de 13 à 15,000, sont, une portion à Jaffa, une autre à Ramé, et à Lidda, villages pas éloignés de Jaffa. Mais dans ces soldats règne le plus grand désordre et crainte des François, de façon qu'à chaque instant nous nous entendons à quelque autre revers, et même à être renfermés à Acre, qui tiendra bien peu si les troupes n'ont pas plus de courage. En outre de ce que je viens de vous dire, il y a presque tous les habitans des environs qui n'attendent que les François, surtout au Mont Liban, qui sont absolument déclarés pour les François. Voilà l'état véridique où ces contrées sont réduites, et peut-être qu' à l'arrivée chez vous de la présente, nous serons encore plus mals.

"Dans ces tristes circonstances le Pascha n'a d'autre secours que dans votre amitié. C'est le tems de l'aider, et de remplir les promesses que, tant de fois, votre prédécesseur et, dans votre dernière lettre, lui avez fait. Ainsi il me charge de vous dire qu'il vous prie instamment de vouloir bien expédier tout de suite deux vaisseaux, si vous le pouvez, pour rester à Caiffa, et l'aider en cas de besoin; et s'il est possible, de faire croiser de Damiette à Gaza, pour empêcher que les François ne portent les vivres par mer à l'armée, étant assuré que c'est par ce canal qu'ils font passer leurs provisions. Si vous ne pouvez pas expédier deux vaisseaux, il en attend un, sans faute, et avec la plus grande diligence. Ici vous trouverez toutes les provisions que vous aurez besoin, et s'il ne vous envoie rien par la présente occasion, c'est parcequ'il ne veut que personne sâche pour où il expédie ce bâtiment.

"Tout ce que j'ai l'honneur de vous dire, c'est d'ordre du Pascha. J'espère que votre générosité n'abandonnera jamais un ami et allié comme lui qui feroit tout pour votre service, sans vous dire les autres raisons qui peuvent vous engager à venir.

"Quant à la peste, depuis quelques jours elle a beaucoup diminué, et aujourd'hui il y a peu de chose."

Postscript. "Dans l'instant on apporte la nouvelle que Jaffa est prise, mais il faut attendre d'en être assuré." Copy.

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, March 10. Berlin.—"My last dispatch, No. 3 by Dietry, will have completely prepared you for that of which Shaw is the bearer to-day. The answer given to us is certainly a distinct refusal in the present moment to accede to offensive measures ; and as this refusal seems chiefly to be attributed to the weak and feeble counsels of Köckeritz and of those who act through his influence, while that influence prevails, there is little chance of a change of conduct, unless events should force it. I mean, unless the French should attack Hamburg, or court hostilities with the north of Germany ; a measure which, however, does not accord with the language of Jourdan's address, though every post brings me accounts from Sir J. Craufurd of this project against Hamburg being pursued, and though Daendels is gone to Paris, as is supposed, for this arrangement with the Directory. Meanwhile I shall be impatient, as you will naturally suppose, to hear what may be your decisions in England upon the present situation of the Continent ; seeing that Prussia refuses war and Austria declares war, we who want at London and Petersburg to pursue the war with vigour should naturally look in the first place to Vienna ; where, I presume, their disappointment in seeing the inactivity of Prussia will lead them to be manageable enough as with respect to us and our convention, if they do not at once become so dispirited as to hurry back into negotiation and peace. In this light (I mean in the view of some co-operation with Austria) I propose to write a few lines to Sir M. Eden and endeavour to nurse their courage there with the hopes of the efforts made by Russia and Great Britain centring now more entirely with Austria ; this seems to me to be all that can be done on the sudden, and I have the satisfaction of finding Count Panin disposed to look to the same arrangement as probable ; and his letters to Petersburg to-day may, in presenting that view more nearly to them, already induce them to prepare for executing that plan. It does not appear to me that, even if I was sure you would act upon this view, I should do any good by going instantly to Vienna ; if I could have carried from hence any, even conditional, promise of support to Austria, I might with advantage have combined it by going there ; but that hope being out of the question, I do not see that my immediately going there could have any other effect than that of shewing an unbecoming solicitude to be allowed to do them at Vienna the service of support and co-operation. If they are in earnest there to try the chance of war vigorously we shall soon hear of them, and I do not think we need be the beggars in this suit, and carry our partnership about to every market that will be open to us. Another hesitation in my mind as to an immediate conclusion and departure from hence belongs to the proposed project of defensive concert for the north of Europe, and some doubt whether that idea should be finally and absolutely renounced by us. It is very true that such a concert is not that which we think best suited to the interests of England, of Prussia, or of Europe ; but if we do not succeed in the concert which we wish to form, it is perhaps going too fast to say that we will form no other ; the true question seems to me to be whether, by adopting this defensive system of concert here, we can keep that in reserve, and yet pursue active co-operation now wherever we can find it.

If the form of their defensive system here were such as demanded no immediate sacrifice of expense from Great Britain, and left us in the present moment the full application of all our means to Austria, I should not hesitate to say we should adopt it, and consider it as an acquirement more or less valuable, though not precisely what we had wished; if that sacrifice which it may now require is great enough to suspend our efforts for immediate action, the defensive concert should give way to the better course of vigorous measures. The great point therefore to ascertain appears to be to know what proportion of those means which we destine to vigorous war would be diverted or suspended by the defensive concert proposed here. We accordingly pressed Count Haugwiz very closely on this point, and urged him much to give us a sketch or projet quelconque of the general stipulations which would be included in his view of such a concert; he has not absolutely promised it, but he speaks as if he intended to offer some such confidentially; and as we could only take his last answer ad referendum, we must wait some time for decision, and cannot better employ that time here than by endeavouring to learn whether his proposed concert is a regular systematic measure, or only imagined to soften their other refusal, and preserve a connection which they do not like to lose sight of though they run no risk to secure it. If the King had a fixed character, and opinions of his own, I should dwell more upon the two or three conversations which I have had with him, and in which I am told that he has shewn to me more ease and readiness to discussion than he has yet shewn to any foreigner; but though I do not see much advantage in this, it has, however, given opportunities of convincing me that his mind is much impressed with the supposed benefits which would arise from this defensive concert, and therefore I presume his ministers and his advisers must likewise attach much importance to it. I cannot better describe this eagerness of his to you than by telling you with how much warmth and anxiety he answered me when I told him, the night before last, that to see Prussia still inactive now that Austria had engaged in war made me for the first time begin to despair of any hope for the safety of Germany; he repeated the word with so much anxiety both in tone and manner that I said I certainly would not use that word if any foundation of better hope could be supplied; and he then dwelt with much vehemence upon this concert of defence as supplying that hope. You see therefore he is at least taught to represent, if not to consider, this new proposed concert as a measure which they have much at heart to obtain. In speaking of this to Haugwiz he considers, I find, Sweden as necessary and willing to engage in this concert; and says that he has only named Denmark because the relations between this Court and Sweden are not strong enough to be named upon the same footing in the note to Count Panin. In that note you will be struck with the expression of dès lors le moindre revirement, but he explains himself to mean by revirement any change of circumstances which might make the moment more favourable for Prussian hostilities; and he stated that this change might happen either by new hopes from Austrian success or by new fears from Austrian defeat; so that you see by this he confesses his principle of avoiding aggression dwindles down into a mere calculation of favourable or unfavourable chances. Among those chances it is important to mention that we took up his idea of the Russian troops being so placed as to be efficient in the Austrian war, and applicable to the proposed concert of defence, and we asked whether, to enable them to take such a position, Prussia would admit of their passing through Prussian territory; he gave no precise answer, but I was led to think that this question, like most of those which we put to this timid and irresolute government, is left for the calculation of the moment, and is not tried by any regular system or established plan. Another reason for putting the question which I have quoted was a desire to know how far we might look to the possibility of a passage for Russian troops to Holland through the country within the line of demarcation; but no precise answer could be obtained to this suggestion; and here I am sorry to observe in Sir C. Whitworth's dispatch to you that the idea of transporting a body of Russian troops by sea to the attack of Holland is considered at Petersburg as impracticable, both from the expense and the difficulties attending it. I had always imagined this project to be by no means impracticable, and sometimes looked at it as a measure which, if carried into effect, might in its first impression decide Prussia to exert itself, when so fair a chance offered itself under their eyes for the deliverance of Holland and the security of their frontier, instead of the precarious defence which the Ems, under their line of demarcation, at present affords to them. You will learn probably from Panin and Stamford's correspondence all that has passed between them and the Paris negotiators. I am somewhat incredulous, but they were right in trying perhaps all means, and if Count Panin's last manœuvre succeeds, he hopes to buy a good cause of breach with France by an attack upon the line of demarcation.

"The only news which I yet hear to-day is that Haugwiz has sent for the ministers from Mayence, Hesse Darmstadt, and one or two other lesser German princes who had applied for the protection of Prussia, and for being included in the line of demarcation, and he has formally told them all that Prussia can take no step of that nature, and has recommended to them to ask the protection of Austria; this measure confirms the final decision being taken here of adhering to their present system of neutrality. I have received a letter from le Baron de Gross, ancien Colonel Suisse, with a proposal for raising a légion Helvétique of 2,050 men in Switzerland and the Grisons. I do not send you his plan because he tells me that he had written to you himself. I know nothing of him, but he speaks of his project as having been approved by the Archduke Charles, and General Hotze."

Postscript. 6 p.m. "As I am going to seal my letter I stop to tell you that, in a short conversation with Haugwiz, he has just told me that, by letters arrived here from Vienna dated on the 2nd instant, they still seem ignorant of the French declaration, nor has he yet heard of any movement of the Austrian army. He thinks Philipsbourg will fall; it is besieged by Bernadotte and is defended by Salm with 4,000 men, but the troops are of the Empire and not reckoned very good. The French are preparing a general attack along the Adige, in the Grisons, on the Lac Constance, and up to Ulm at the same time. The Duke of Wurttemberg sends a Minister here to-morrow, but I fancy he will obtain no protection—so much for Germany. There are unpleasant reports from Milan of the 22nd February describing an insurrection in Sicily, and the King obliged to leave Palermo; the Grand Duke is allowed to remain in Tuscany, paying a large fine immediately for that indulgence.

“The accounts from Constantinople speak of Sir Sidney as having sailed with an expedition against Alexandria, and describe great preparations making for the army to be sent to Egypt. They add a vague report of some French frigates in the Red Sea, but I cannot find there is any reason for believing this. From Petersburg Suwarow is described to have accepted the command in Italy with the greatest joy, and is set forth; they have carried Mack back to France. I say nothing to you of the unpleasant situation in which my most valuable colleague and fellow-labourer is placed, because his correspondence with Count Woronzow will give you a better account of it; his instructions, which are positive, direct him, in case of a doubtful answer from hence, to withdraw immediately from Berlin to the baths of Carlbadt and to wait there. If the defensive concert is not enough explained to justify his pausing upon this order, he is afraid he must comply with it in form by withdrawing from the business, though in substance he cannot, as his wife is too ill to move. I shall try as much as in conscience I can to advise him to have recourse to any expedient which may be possible by which this step could be avoided. It is a mouvement d'humeur in the Emperor which can do no good, and the absence of Panin cannot but do great mischief.”

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, March 11. Dublin.—“I enclose to you a letter, which I have written with more heartfelt happiness than I ever felt, in answer to a very few lines that I received from our brother dated the 7th, under cover from Fisher. They promise me further details; but indeed I have not the heart to hear more on so perilous and dreadful an escape. I am most grateful to Providence for the result, and only look now to the certainty of his not having suffered in health.

“I now wish not to lose a moment in consulting you upon his private affairs; he says shortly that he has not saved a single shirt, and that his private loss is above 700*l*. I have written to him to draw upon me for whatever he wants, but I wish (for I know he will not do it) to ask you whether I should not present a memorial to the Treasury or somewhere else praying an allowance for equipage money to replace what is lost. In fact this will ultimately save my purse, which is, by various calls upon it, low enough, but which must replace to poor Tom his pacotille if Government will not. I do not know what precedents you have of wrecked ambassadors, but you well know that all army officers wrecked have their full losses replaced to them.

"Our judges are now all gone, under separate escorts of cavalry, to administer the blessings of civil law to counties all of which are disturbed, and in which no sheriff or magistrate dares to act except for the purpose of calling a mob meeting to oppose the union. The mischief done to private property by the new system (as ordered by the Directory here) of plunder and of destroying cattle is out of all calculation; none of the roads to Dublin are passable at any hour of the day save to large parties or military escorts; and this system is openly talked of as being more certain, and more destructive, than that of open force till their friends arrive, who are most impatiently looked for in the counties of Antrim, Galway, and Cork. I have no correspondent now likely to be informed, but everybody here tells me that the French fleet is 16 sail, and that they dropped into the outer road of Brest on the 1st of March. I should have doubted the number, and most certainly the seamen necessary for such a squadron.

"Opposition here are very much disconcerted by the defection which has left them in the lurch; the real secret of which is the conviction that Government is to be changed as soon as the Parliament is prorogued; and the disinclination to engage in opposition measures which, certainly, many of the new opponents personally dislike, and which they certainly see very contrary to their personal interests, vis-a-vis to a new Lord Lieutenant. In the meantime Lord Cornwallis has, for the benefit of his successor and of the Union, named for sheriff in Westmeath the most violent anti-Unionist, notwithstanding my representation of the fact, perhaps for that very reason, and has done the same in three other counties; in all of which he might, as in Westmeath, have named either of the other two on the roll, zealous Unionists."

Postscript. "George Nugent writes me word that, from the appearances in the county of Antrim, it is clear that they have been assured of the intention of a landing there.

"I open my letter to enclose to you one which I have just received from the Duke of York. I entreated six months ago, and again lately, that the regiment might be stationed at Chelmsford, that I might have the opportunity of passing one summer in my own house by living at Gosfield; and I pressed for leave for my regiment to halt 14 days in the county. Both are refused. I feel as I ought this return for all I have done, and all that I and my regiment have suffered. I do not know whether you can help me, but, when he is consulting the local case of others, I cannot but be sensible to this mark which is personal to me, because it can affect the convenience of no one but of me, which it does to a degree that cannot be over-stated when I assure you that nothing but my affection to my regiment will prevent my resignation instantly. I shall, however, keep this letter an entire secret for the present from everyone, in hope that you may be able to assist me in changing this cursed Ashford for Chelmsford.

"Pray let me hear from you on this cursed subject as soon as you can."

Enclosure.

A letter from the Horse Guards, dated March 7, and signed Frederick, Field Marshall, Commander-in-Chief, informing the Marquis of Buckingham that Ashford Barracks had been allotted to the Militia regiment under his command.

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, March 13. Dublin.—"I would not worry you to endeavour, through Mr. Dundas, to get this cursed arrangement made by the Duke of York, which sends my regiment to Ashford, changed, if it did not break in so essentially and so unhand-somely upon my individual and private comfort, to which I looked in my house at Gosfield; and I must say that I think it very wanton oppression to be sent where there is not a lodging or the means of living save in a barrack, and that at the distance of Ashford; when the barracks at Chelmsford, and even those, which are unhealthy, at Colchester, both within 12 miles of Gosfield, are actually vacated by the march of regiments to Ireland; particularly so as Mr. Dundas assured me (when I embarked) that he would urge the Duke to let me return to Chelmsford. I have not said one word to any creature breathing of this new arrangement, in hopes that you can assist me; and I know your kindness will exert itself whenever you can, without impropriety, contribute to my comfort and that of my family."

LORD GRENVILLE TO SIR CHARLES WHITWORTH.

1799, March 15. Cleveland Row.—"Although I am much pressed for time in sending off this messenger, I cannot omit troubling you with a few private lines to express to you the real concern I felt at the necessity of sending an official disapprobation of your conduct in the Austrian negotiation. I do this in order that you may not think that the answer which I gave to Count Woronzow's communication of the Emperor's offer to you of the order of Malta, was connected with that impression. It was, if I recollect right, anterior to it in point of date, and it originated in a sense of the many difficulties which belong to that subject, and which are daily increased by the Emperor's mode of acting with respect to it.

"I think it is very much the interest of this country to gratify the Emperor of Russia in his political views of obtaining an influence and footing in Malta; but some of the steps taken by him outrage both forms and principles so much, that the concurrence of a regular and systematic government like this in such proceedings becomes very difficult. For this reason I have endeavoured, as far as could be done without offending the Emperor, to keep his Majesty's government unmixed in those transactions; and I declined Count Woronzow's proposal on the ground that the King disapproved of his ministers employed abroad accepting foreign orders." Copy.

COUNT WORONZOW TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, March 18. Harley Street.—“Pénétré de reconnaissance pour les marques d'amitié et de confiance que je reçois ici, je suis Anglais par sentiment individuel, et je le suis encore parceque je suis bon Russe, qui ainssi que tout bon Anglais doit être persuadé que l'alliance entre leurs patries est la plus raisonnable, la plus utile, et la plus permanente de toute autre. Ce sentiment qui est gravé dans mon ame, et l'amitié et la confiance dont vous m'y honorez, m'encourage à vous écrire à coeur ouvert pour vous développer quelque idées qui me sont venues à l'occasion d'une lettre que je viens de recevoir du Prince Castelcicala du neuf janvier de Palerme, dans laquelle il me dit : ‘Il a fallu quitter Naples pour sauver la famille royale. Le malheur est grand, mais il peut être réparé dans peu de tems, si les trois grandes Puissances viennent à notre secours efficacement et sans tarder ; si l'Autriche seveille ; si votre magnanime souverain fait pour nous tout ce qui sera dans son pouvoir pour nous assister ; et si le vertueux ministère de la plus généreuse des nations, au milieu de laquelle vous avez le bonheur de vivre, renforce le brave Nelson et nous assiste en argent. Les Sicilliens sont fidèles : les trois-quatre du royaume de Naples ne sont pas encore envahis : mais notre marine est détruite, notre armée est débandée. Nous sommes occupés à construire de vaisseaux, à fondre des canons, à nous pourvoir d'armes de toutes espèces, à lever des troupes pour les porter au plus tôt possible dans les provinces Napolitaines non envahies, à fin de les conserver, et pouvoir, de là, délivrer les autres : mais nos ressources sont déjà épuisées : les moyens nous manquent pour tant de dépenses, aussi extraordinaires qu'indispensables et urgentes. Si l'ennemi s'empare de tout le royaume de Naples, il trouvera des ressources immenses pour continuer la guerre en Italie, et trouvera aussi des bois de construction et du chanvre à pouvoir former dans peu une marine qu'il n'avoit plus dans la Méditerranée.’

“Ce passage de cette lettre que je viens de vous transcrire m'a fait faire des réflexions qui m'ont conduit à la persuasion que si le Roi des deux Sicilles ne reçoit pas de vous une prompt assistance en argent, le royaume de Naples est perdu. Quand le prince m'écrivoit il ne savoit pas encore la prévoyante sollicitude avec laquelle le ministère Britannique et l'amiral Lord Saint Vincent avoit déjà renforcé Nelson : il ignoroit aussi le secours que l'Empereur mon souverain envoyoit au sien ; ainssi la cour de Palerme doit être à présent tranquille sur ces deux points. Quand à l'Autriche je crains qu'il ne se passe bien de tems avant qu'elle se mette en mouvement, et je crois qu'elle le tardera d'autant plus à présent qu'elle sait que, dès qu'elle aura lancé Souvorow, elle ne serat plus la maitresse de l'arêter ; car ce n'est pas un homme à se laisser conduire et diriger par des plans envoyés de Vienne, Si, en attendent, les Calabres se défendent, les Français qui ne ne sont qu'aux environs de Naples, seront obligés de courire vers la Lombardie, quand les Autrichieus y entreront, pour n'être pas pris entre deux feux, sans aucun moyen de retraite, ou d'appui de place forte comē ils en ont en Piédmont : mais s'ils parvienent à se rendre les maitres de ces provinces et du reste du royaume de Naples, rien ne pourra plus les y déloger. Ils auront le dos libre de ce coté, et tireront de ce pays tout ce qui leurs faut pour la continuation de la guerre.

“Jamais les Autrichieus n'irons les chercher au bout de la pointe de l'Italie, et ce seroit même une imprudence de le faire en laissent derière soi Mantoue et toutes les fortresses que l'ennemi a en Lombardie ; mais si par le secour pécunier que vous ferez parvenir immédiatement à Palerme, vous metez le Roi de Naples en état de s'armer et de secourir les Calabres, dont les habitans sont fidels à leurs souverains, et harasseront continuellement les Français qui sont autour de Naples, comē les Arabes harassent les Français aux environs du Cair, les Carmagnols n'ayant aucun renfort à espérer de la Lombardie, attaquée par Souvorow, iront vers le Po pour se réunire à leurs compatriotes, et dans ce cas inmanquable, c'est la grande Bretagne seule qui aura la gloire de rétablire le vertueux roi de Naples sur son trône.

“Si ce roi infortuné, faute de moyen, perd son principal royaume, les Français, maitres de toute la botte de l'Italie, le seront aussi dans peu de la Sicille ; les passages des Calabres dans l'isle où se trouve le roi est aussi court que facile, et il faut des milliers des vaisseaux pour l'en empêcher. Maitres de deux Sicilles ils deviendront dans peu d'anées les souverains de la Méditeranée et la proclameront, comē c'étoit déjà leur projet, la Mer Française. En attendent qu'ils aient des vaisseaux de guerre, ils auront des milliers de corsaires qui infesteront votre comerce du Lévant.

“Est il économique d'épargner dans un cas si grave et si extraordinaire 4 à 500 milles livres sterling, pour empêcher que l'ennemi n'en gagne 4 à 5 millions ? pour empêcher qu'il ne se donne des nouvelles ressources en tout genre, et pour empêcher que ses corssaires ne detruisent cette nouvelle mine de richesse que vous ofre à présent le comerce exclusif du Lévant et de la Méditeranée ?

“Il y a une autre considération majeure à ne pas négliger. Soyez perssuadez qu'une fois que les Français sont maitres de l'Italie, qui flaque l'Albanie, l'Epire, la Morée et l'entrée de l'Archipel, les Tures perdront courage, et l'Egypte une fois reprise pour eux, ils fairont la paix avec le Directoire ; car quelle espérance pourront-ils avoir dans leurs alliés quand ils les veront incapables de sauver le Roi de Naples.

“Peut-on craindre que le Parlement et la nation blament le ministère d’avoir fait cette dépense extraordinaire et indispensable, qu’il est généreux, sage, politique, et très utile de faire. Le Parlement et la nation vous blameront au contraire, et avec raison en vérité, de ne l’avoir pas fait, et vous reprocheront les suites funestes de cette économie mal-placée, et qui aurat des conséquences irréparables, et qui ternira la gloire d’un ministère et d’une nation qui font l’admiration de l’Europe.

“On ne peut pas se refuser à l’évidence que l’Italie est le centre de la vraie force et des ressources de la France, que celle-ci a eut le bon jugement de le comprendre d’abord. Elle l’a prouvé quand elle ne s’est pas soucie de l’Allemagne, et laissoit battre tout qu’on vouloit Jourdain et Morau [Moreau], pourvue qu’en Italie, cet important théâtre le la guerre pour elle, son armée fasse de progrès, et s’y établisse d’une manière à pouvoir, à la suite du tems, s’emparer du reste de cette plus belle partie de l’Europe.”

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, March 18. Berlin.—“The frequency as well as the length of my public letters leaves me very little to add to the two despatches which I am going to send to London, and which I am sorry to find again leave me without my having yet had a word from England. The situation of things becomes to the last degree critical, and it is peculiarly unlucky that the adverse winds should add so much to the long state of ignorance in which the frost had kept me, for there was never a moment in which communication with you was more important.

“You will naturally suppose that I feel in private a good deal more of the difficulties which I hint at in my public letter; on the one hand, though Prussia will not act, there is too much left of value for me to lose sight of, who think that Prussia tells so powerfully for Holland; while on the other hand, I scarce know how to flatter myself that even if our new device, of secret convention accompanying defensive concert, should succeed, it can be arranged in a pecuniary light so as to tally with the disposition which is made for continental charges. Panin has a notion that we might lend a sum to the king of Prussia for the enabling him to collect and put in motion a large body of troops, this loan to be repaid by him in instalments if the defensive concert alone should continue, but to be considered as discharged by him whenever his army marches into Amsterdam; if, however, their present fears of France continue, they will continue from the same wretched motive to think that, while they are marching to Amsterdam, General Jourdan will march into Berlin; and if they do not discharge their debt in the shape of Dutch conquest, I have not much more confidence in their punctuality here than we have found in our friends at Vienna. This name, too, recalls my second difficulty, which is that, for fear of Prussia slipping through our propositions, we must go on to feed them with hope there ; and yet for both arrangements we cannot suffice, if both should at once agree to proposals of concert by which they always mean proposals of subsidy. I have however sent you my letter to Sir M. Eden, which I trust you will think may keep the thing alive there without pledging us too strongly, even in the case of their ratifying the celebrated convention. Upon the whole my favourite project is still that about which I have employed General Stamford, who is grown quite as partial to it as myself ; and if I was to follow my own inclinations only, I should press vigorously at Petersburg for their directing 50,000 men immediately to march à la Stamford, and, electrifying the German electors as they pass, to frighten or encourage them into active co-operation. Still too, in further assistance, I think a naval disembarkation of 20 or 30,000 Russians and Danes would so distract the rulers of the great nation, that they would find it easier to give up their Batavian Republic than to defend it under such a pressure, even with Prussia only looking on. The point I fear for in this project is that, if it does not soon take place, the Emperor may make again some wretched peace patched up with the old rags of Campo Formio, and sell them the Republic of Swabia for a yard and a half of Bavaria, or a little more of elbow-room towards Ravenna ; in truth, however, his battle must perhaps be fought now for his existence, and in this view likewise it is that if I could I would set this plan in military array before I went to sleep this night, whereas all that I can now hope is to bring it into discussion between those distant ends of the globe called London and Petersburg. I have not, however, been idle in this cause, for I have written, besides the letter which I enclose in the despatch, both to Sir M. Eden and Sir C. Whitworth to implore their activity in this very critical and important moment. I have likewise seen the Prince of Orange and Baron Lynden, and have conversed with them much upon the necessity of better intelligence than they now have respecting Flanders and those, whoever they are, who still lead in creating very powerful risings in that country. In Holland I have still recommended patience in waiting for the favourable moment ; but, whenever that moment comes, I think you will agree that in every point of view, both as to present hope and future arrangement, a correspondence and common interest should be established and ready for action, whereas in point of fact I find there is no man in Breda or Boisleduc who has the least notion of what is passing at Ghent or Antwerp. I hope, however, that this will now soon be mended, as one or two discreet persons are going to be sent there. Baron Lynden has an offer of a good correspondent at Amsterdam to give naval intelligence ; if you employ him he must have three hundred florins for three months ; pray tell Lord S[pencer], for I am too much tired to write any more."

Postscript. "Musquiz, the Spanish Minister, has just heard from Azara at Paris that the French Directory has officially and confidentially declared to him that the object of France is to keep foreign interference of every kind out of Italy in order to consolidate the new republics there; that the Duke of Parma must therefore be provided for by Spain.

"Lehrbach is gone from Rastadt; Metternich is going. The French openly declare their intention of revolutionizing Suabia, and it is believed that they will direct their first attack against Venice and its territory."

THE MARQUIS OF BUCKINGHAM TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, March 23. Dublin.—"I have only a few minutes left before the mail goes out to thank you most warmly for your kind attentions to my wishes, and Mr. Dundas for the trouble he has so obligingly taken. I happen to know that the Colchester barracks are promised to the Warwick regiment, so that I take it for granted that the Duke of York will have apprized you long before you receive this letter that he cannot place my regiment there. To say truth I conceive that he means to make me feel that he has the power of doing a very unpleasant thing to me; for I wrote to him on this very subject twice in the months of October and November last, long before the 'two months' since which he has thought it necessary to promise those very barracks for which I applied, to Lord Euston, who landed in Ireland three months after me, has never done one hour's duty, and is (if I am rightly informed) to leave it before me. And in my letters I stated expressly the personal convenience which I proposed to myself in this arrangement, as one very highly interesting to me. Such is the return I meet with; and I leave you to judge whether it does not justify me in my persuasion that this act of power is intended. I enclose a letter to Mr. Dundas, which I will thank you if you will send him, and I shall wait impatiently for the return of the post that will untie my tongue, and enable me to explain to my officers how my wishes and theirs have been received by His Royal Highness in return for having led the way on this most thankless duty, which every hour makes me regret the having undertaken."

Postscript. "Surely Mr. Dundas's hint of his having expected the militia to remain longer in Ireland, does not apply to us, who will have been ten months absent from England."

THOMAS GRENVILLE TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, March 23. Berlin.—"I had not intended to have sent Dietry till the day after to-morrow, but I have myself felt so much pleasure in the account just received of Jourdan's retreat, that I pass over all diplomatic considerations, and send it to you as quick as it can go, depending upon the entire credit which Haugwitz gives to the official reports of which he has furnished an extract. I had doubtless proposed to have written to you in some detail for your own private consideration the many tempting and flattering prospects which belong to the little Holstein army that Count Panin and I are trying to raise for the nominal defence of Hamburg; but these advantages are so obvious in the view of assisting the operations of the Russian army in middle Germany or Switzerland by diversion, that I believe you have nothing to regret in my time becoming too limited to admit of any such wearisome dissertations. I must not, however, forget to observe that if this project be adopted, it may perhaps be very much assisted by your applying to it some modifications of the matter which was treated of by Colonel Anstruther, and it may be likewise worth considering whether the payment of any expenses so incurred might not be ultimately thrown either upon Holland, in case of success, or indeed upon England, where the deliverance of Holland would be enough valued in the result to make the burthen of such a debt comparatively light. You see that I am following General Brune's example in looking towards the Dutch trousers for money. Baron Lynden told me to-day that the General has had an amicable private conference with the rich merchants of Amsterdam, in which he has recommended to them the immediate voluntary loan of twelve millions of florins (above a million sterling); he has intimated that the Great Nation will expect this loan in money or accepted bills, and that the Great Nation will have infinite regret in being obliged to take it instead of borrowing it, but that one way or another the money must be forthcoming without delay. In their fleet the desertion increases; it is ready, and Story has accepted the command; but Linden's correspondent, who has a command in it, tells him that he thinks it will not sail.

"Syéyès has announced to Haugwiz the declaration of French war with Austria and the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

"I have not ventured in my public letter to give you the intelligence which Count Dietrichstein gave me yesterday as just arrived from Vienna; he tells me as a nouvelle qu'il sait estre sûre, that a letter has been found from Buonaparte to the Marquis del Gallo, in which, not knowing of the war between France and Naples, he begs the Marquis to be his mediator at the Porte to obtain for him la libre sortie d'Egypte.

"Count Dietrichstein sent a courier yesterday to Vienna, and I suspect that it is in consequence of my having conveyed to him through Panin that it would be utterly impossible for me to converse with him upon any arrangement of concert unless I had the full previous assurance of unqualified ratification; and, as a proof of my sturdiness upon this subject, I declined talking with Panin for any of the modifications which he seemed to think were intended to be proposed to me, and assured him he could do no such good service upon that subject as by persuading Count Dietrichstein that it would be most for the honour as well as for the advantage of his Court to give the simple ratification at once, instead of waiting to have it demanded and insisted upon by the British Minister. I hope this will succeed.

"I send you enclosed a notice about a supposed project of two French spies embarking for England, and I likewise send the same to Crawford at Hamburg."

COUNT WOROZOW TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, March 24. London.—“Ne croyez vous pas qu'il soit nécessaire d'après le refus de la Prusse de se coaliser, d'envoyer un courrier à St. Petersbourg pour prendre d'autres arrangements, vue que la dernière convention signée par le Chevalier Whitworth ne sert plus de rien, puisqu'elle a été faite d'après la base supposée que la Cour de Berlin entrera en jeu.

“Je vous demande pardon, mais je ne puis en conscience ne pas revenir encore sur l'état actuel du Roi de Naples, qui sera obligé d'abandonner toute idée de conserver les trois-quarts de son principal royaume, faute de moyens d'armer les fidèles sujets qu'il conserve là jusqu'à présents. Qu'est-ce que c'est qu'un amas d'hommes sans fusils, sans gibernes, sans poudre et balles, et sans eppées et sabres? Qu'est-ce qu'est qu'une armée sans tentes, sans artillerie, sans chariots, et sans chevaux pour tirer les canons, les caissons, et les vivres? Or de tout ceci il n'y a que les hommes et leur bonne volonté; ce qui est beaucoup il est vrai, mais ce qui, manquant de tout le reste, n'est qu'un troupeau sans armes et sans défense, qui n'iroit que pour être égorgé sans pouvoir même venger sa mort. Or tout ce qui manque à ce Prince infortuné ne s'obtient que par l'argent, et c'est-ce qui lui manque le plus. Vous m'avez dit, et M. Pitt me l'a aussi répété, qu'il y a 2½ millions qui sont en reserve pour les subsides de l'année courante; permettez-moi d'entrer dans le calcul de ces dépenses:—

“Pour 45,000 Russes, destinés par supposition à servir avec les Prussiens, et qui probablement seront actuellement employés par vous à être avec les Autrichiens, les subsides pour ces troupes sont fixés par le dernier traite provisionel, par mois à - - -	75,000/.
--	----------

“Je suppose qu'après avoir procuré à l'Autriche ce surcroît de troupes outre ce qu'elle a déjà de troupes Russes auxilliaires en vertu de notre alliance avec elle, vous voudrez encore avoir un pareil nombre de quarante-cinq milles de Russes pour être employés en Suabe, et aller vers la Suisse. Cette dépense par mois sera pareillement de - - - - -	75,000/.
--	----------

“Vous avés idée de lever un corps de 20,000 Suisses dont la dépense par mois, calquée sur celle des Russes, est de - - - - -	31,000/.
--	----------

Total par mois - - -	181,000/.
----------------------	-----------

“et dans l'année, qui est de douze mois, et non de treize comme on la compte ici, dans le service Anglais, où le mois est composé de quatre semaines, le total de la dépense sera de - - - - -	2,172,000/.
--	-------------

“Il restera donc de la somme de 2½ millions destinée pour les subsides - - - - -	328,000/.
--	-----------

“Vous m'objecterez que j'oublie l'argent nécessaire pour mettre en mouvement ces troupes, ainsi que pour les dépenses extraordinaires, et que les 328,000/ suffiront à peine pour les couvrir, et vous aurez raison. Mais je vous prie de considérer d'un autre coté qu'il y a déjà trois mois de passés de l'année courante, et que, vue la lenteur, la mauvaise foi, et les négociations entortillées de l'Autriche, vous serez deux mois avant que de pouvoir arranger vos affaires avec elle; que vous ne pouvez pas, à moins que vous ne vouliez jeter votre argent par la fenêtre, lui donner un Penny pour ses propres troupes, car elle ne les augmentera pas d'un seul homme, et mettera votre argent en poche, de sorte que vous ne pouvez l'aider qu'en lui procurant des troupes étrangères non corrompues, non intimidées par des défaites et des retirades continuelles, et que ces troupes, soit Russes, Saxones, ou Suisses, ne peuvent se mettre en train que d'après des arrangemens pris à Vienne, à Dresde et sur les confins de la Suisse, si tant est que les Autrichiens ne reculent pas d'avantage après la première défaite à Coire dans le pays des Grisons; et comme ces arrangemens ne peuvent même se faire que du consentement de la Cour de Vienne, par le territoire de la quelle les auxilliaires doivent marcher, et les Suisses être pourvus, ces arrangemens ne se feront pas si vite, et il se passera encore deux mois et plus avant que vous soyez arrangés avec le vertueux Thugut et compagnie; ce qui fait plus du tiers de l'année courante, et ce tiers de la somme destinée pour les subsides iroit à 833,000*l.* Quoique vous êtes généreux en votre particulier, j'ai observé que vous êtes bien avare des deniers publics. Ce qui est une vertu dans mille occasions, mais ce qui peut être dans plusieurs autres très dommageable pour le bien même du service public. Je sais que ni vous ni M. Pitt n'admettez pas la propriété de donner au Roi de Naples ce qui reste de non-employé dans le courant des premiers quatre mois de cette année, et que vous voudrez avoir au moins deux mois de dépense assurée pour l'année prochaine; mais en vérité vous devez, en toute et bonne politique, envoyer à Palerme 400,000*l.* pour dégager d'embaras le seul souverain qui a risqué son trône pour le bien de la bonne cause, et qui a été, lui-seul absolument, la vraie cause du renouvellement des hostilités entre la France et l'Autriche. Parceque celle-ci a été tellement menacée par la Russie d'être abandonnée par elle, et de la propension qu'avoit mon Empereur de se lier avec la Prusse si la Cour de Vienne ne va pas au secours du Roi de Naples, que Thugut, ne pouvant plus continuer ses négociations secrettes avec le Directoire, celui-ci a rompu et a pris les armes. Sauvez, pour l'amour de Dieu, l'infortuné roi de Naples, et vous avancerez vos propres affaires, mais vous ne pourrez le sauver qu'avec 400,000*l.* au moins. Tout ce qui sera donné à ce prince infortuné sera employé au détriment visible de la France. Il aura les moyens de conserver les Calabres, de chasser les Français du reste de son royaume. Dès que la guerre, rallumée en Lombardie, ne leur permettra plus de recevoir des renforts de leurs compatriotes, ils ne pourront plus piller le royaume, et en s'enrichissant, avoir des nouveaux moyens pour la guerre. Ils seront surtout privés des grands moyens à remettre leurs marins dans la Méditerranée, et ne pourront pas faire la guerre de course et en corsaires, qui auroient porté un coup mortel à votre commerce, car l'escadre de Nelson n'auroit pas été en état de l'empêcher, comme vos nombreuses flottes dans le canal et la Baie de Biscay n'empêchent pas que les corsaires sortent des ports de la France, et ne fassent continuellement des prises. Vous maintiendrez aussi, par là, les Turcs dans leur guerre contre la France, car si le royaume de Naples est conquis, ils seront forcés à faire la paix. Ce que vous voulez donner au roi est, en vérité, insuffisant. Cet argent ne le sauvera pas ; mais en proportionnant le secours à la grandeur du besoin, vous faites l'emploi le plus utile et le plus politique que vous puissiez jamais faire. Enfin, pour dernier argument, je suppose déjà fait ce qui malheureusement ne manquera pas d'arriver, que le Roi de Naples, faute de moyens, ne pourra pas armer assez de monde pour conserver les Calabres, et perdra son principal royaume d'où les Français menaceront la Sicile en amassant, en attendant, tout ce que le pillage leur procure pour se maintenir en Italie ; et infestant la Méditerranée et l'Archipel par leur corsaires, ruineront votre commerce, et souleveront les îles Grecques appartenantes aux Turcs. Si dans cet état des choses quelqu'un vous présente le plan de chasser les Français du royaume de Naples avec une armée de 60,000 hommes, en vous demandant un demi-million pour opérer cette diversion aussi heureuse qu'inattendue, auriez-vous quelque raison plausible pour refuser ce plan ?—Ne l'embrasseriez-vous pas avec reconnaissance ? C'est précisément ce que le Roi de Naples offre, et peut faire, lui seul, et aussi vite que vous serez prompts à le secourir et à vous secourir vous-mêmes ; car sa cause est plus intimement liée avec vous que ne l'est la cause de l'Autriche. Souvenez-vous, je vous supplie, que les deux Siciles sont dans la Méditerranée, et dominent l'Archipel, et que dans ces mêmes mers vous avez un ennemi, qui est l'Espagne, qui deviendra encore plus servilement dépendante de la France quand le royaume de Naples sera perdu ; et que vous avez pour amis les Turcs qui ont excité les Barbaresques contre le Directoire, et que ces amis et leurs adhérents se sépareront de ceux qui n'ont pas pu soutenir l'Italie méridionale, et finiront par s'accomoder avec la terrible République contre laquelle rien ne résiste, et contre laquelle les Puissances les plus formidables n'ont pas les moyens de secourir leurs alliés. Dieu veuille que mon sort ne soit pas celui de Cassandre, qui voyoit les malheurs à venir, les prévisoit, et n'étoit jamais crue.

“Je désire que mon idée soit fautive par l'événement, mais en attendant, je suis intimement persuadé que le point le plus important du théâtre de la guerre dans le moment où nous sommes, n'est ni sur le Rhin, ni sur le Danube, mais dans la partie méridionale de l'Italie.”

SPENCER SMITH to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, March 25. Constantinople.—“In addition to the public packets I have entrusted to the gentleman who will have the honour to deliver this letter to your Lordship, and to his companion, I embrace such a good opportunity to convey the letters for you from my brother, expressly recommended not to proceed by the common courier, the precariousness of which is a constant source of annoyance and inconvenience; and at the same time I beg leave to recommend to your Lordship's care a letter annexed for Lord Spencer.

"And I am moreover glad of an occasion, at the present moment of distress and embarrassment, to recommend myself rather more particularly to your Lordship's benevolent remembrance than would be proper on a mere official ground.

"When Mr. Liston made over the charge of the affairs here to me in the year 1795, he gave me to understand that I should naturally receive the full and usual allowances of that rank from his Majesty, in addition to the consular appointments of the Levant Company, about 1,000*l.* a year, a bare compensation for the heavy load of their local business here, and the judicial duties attached to this situation, as well as for the occupancy of a set of extensive premises at a rent of near 300*l.* a year, and the maintenance of a large household, augmented by the board and lodging of their Worships' chaplain and chancellor. My expectation of the full allowances was confirmed too by Mr. Liston from London, as I conceived, in your Lordship's name, as well as by Mr. Sidney Smith in explicit terms from the mouth of Mr. Aust; and the same idea encouraged by the expressions of my agents in the Office. So that, considering myself as having an income of 600*l.* a year accumulating in England, the arrears of which would meet the heavy debt incurred by my outset in such an expensive line of housekeeping, I devoted the whole of the Levant Company's pay to the keeping up of the establishment of the British palace, upon the necessary scale, for the credit of the nation; and even for the unavoidable contingencies of the post in a country where the corps diplomatique live constantly and almost alternately with each other; in a country where the Ministers are governors of their respective national colonies as well as representatives of their Courts; in a country where there are no inns for travellers, and where the frequency of the plague necessitates a double home in town and country, and where the situation and the nature of the communications and mode of transacting business require a double equipage by land and water. Thus, then, I went on till I received last summer your Lordship's explanation of the real footing I stood upon, and even that my appointment as Secretary of Legation only dated from the April preceding; whereby I found that I had been spending exactly double my income in a position that admitted of no retrenchment, as in other countries where a person is master of their society, their amusements, and even of the rank they chose to occupy; and received at the same time an increase of character, which together with my marriage (concluded under the former impressions) rendered domestic reform still more impracticable. I was therefore obliged to begin to devote a considerable part of my wife's little fortune to rub off the debt of my early equipments, settle long-standing accounts with my predecessor, and repay some advances made to me by friends here upon the spot; while the remainder of that fund devoted to the unavoidable expenses of removing the Mission from the old to the new palace, where I was hardly warm; (and still a little further involved by the pleasing duties of hospitality I had to exercise towards the ships of war of a size unseen here, during several weeks that my brother was here with the Le Tigre and La bonne Citoyenne; which furnished near seventy pretty constant guests in succession at bed and board), when I suffered the ruinous blow of the fire which consumed everything almost but my debts. At a time, therefore, that I have to begin entirely anew, under circumstances of such peculiar difficulty, and under circumstances of a public nature almost unprecedented at this Mission, I presume to hope your Lordship will stretch forth a hand to extricate me by approving my transfer of the palace rent, since the absence of an ambassador, to my contingent accounts, and by such a further grant upon any footing that the rules of government may admit, to defray my purchase of the furniture which the Prussian envoy, M. de Knobelsdorff, will make over to me in his house, which I have been so fortunate as to succeed him in at the easier rent of 1,600 piasters, or about 120*l.* sterling a year; he being upon the point of removal into the Dutch palace hitherto inhabited by his father-in-law, M. Dedem. I will not impeach your Lordship's humanity and gentlemanly feelings by dwelling longer upon these sort of details than barely to state the position of 1,000*l.* a year being inadequate to keep a sort of open table, support a family of near fifteen persons, besides comers and goers, with two official inmates quartered upon me, house rent for a dwelling fit for a public character, at, if anything, a more expensive rate than in London, and a country house and establishment upon rather a less scale. I assure your Lordship that, so far from being actuated by any money-making spirit at a post that has a far better reputation in that way, I can assure you, than it has ever deserved since I have known it, I make this appeal to your Lordship's indulgent patronage with clean hands, after devoting my all to keep up becoming appearances, simply that seven years' exile in discomfort and danger, in an unfavourable climate, and with an increase of labour unknown in this mission, may not terminate in penury and humiliation from the want of due knowledge alone perhaps in my superiors to guide the exercise of their bounty; which needful information I thus take the liberty of presenting to your Lordship in full confidence that you will be good enough to do for the best, and excuse a mode of application unavoidable in the haste with which I am obliged to throw my thoughts on paper.

"I am glad to take leave of all this egotism to mention to your Lordship's private ear that Mr. Reinaud, the bearer of this, is an agent of Mr. Manesty, the East India Company's very respectable and indefatigable resident at Basora. Mr. Manesty seems to feel himself hurt by the abrupt mission of a gentleman to Baghdad

Mr. Harford Jones, whose residence clashes a little with the jurisdiction attached to his post. While I must say, on the other hand, that Mr. Jones's appointment has equal need of being more distinctly defined to me or my successors here than by the simple recommendation he produced to me from your Lordship. It is for the Levant and East India Companies to settle where their respective charters are bounded; but it is for his Majesty's Minister at the seat of government to represent the tendency of any measure that leads to the formation of imperium in imperio; such for instance as the Chairman of the East India Company's credentials to a provincial governor of the Ottoman emperor, as well as to understand the precise relation between this Mission (hitherto the source of all consular appointments) and a new independent agency, whose conduct it is, nevertheless, and must be by the capitulations, responsible for to the sovereign. Mr. Jones, to ensure himself credit as a confidential agent, would have done well to present himself to the Pasha of Baghdaad with the usual and known patent under the broad Seal of this legation; or, if he aimed at the immunities of a public character, to have brought me instructions to sue out for him from the Porte the accustomed consular beraat or imperial diploma for his recognition by all Ottoman magistrates. I am glad of this unaffected opportunity to submit these reflections with the frankness the present form admits of, and before anything shall have happened between the gentleman in question and myself, which his captious reputation renders possible, and which might render such remarks more ad hominem than ad rem. For Mr. Reinaud has laid a complaint before me of Mr. Jones's excessive rigour in his police over his countrymen, that I have smothered officially, but think it right to make your Lordship timely and directly acquainted with in this way, by means of the annexed copies of his letter to me and correspondence with Mr. Jones when passing through Baghdaad, where he had the misfortune to excite Mr. Jones's jealousy to a high degree. But all these East India gentlemen are excessively punctilious and sensitive towards each other, so that a trifle creates misunderstanding. However Mr. Reinaud was in fact charged at his departure by the Pasha, in secret as it should seem, with two dispatches for the Board of Control and the Directory, which he voluntarily delivered up to me to be forwarded in a more regular channel. I therefore refer him to your Lordship for the disposal of these packets, which I have opened on account of the quarantine, to which their silk covering would be liable. Your Lordship will find enclosed a letter of Lord Nelson's, and at the same time I communicate some letters of Mr. Forest's, received since my last, prepared to accompany my despatches, but, which certain passages that cannot fail to strike your Lordship, equally determined on second thoughts to submit to your perusal confidentially instead of publicly. I must confess that my observations here coincide but too much with such opinions, but I have never thought the subject mature enough for ostensible correspondence."

COUNT WORONZOW TO LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, March 27. London.—“Je n’ai reçu votre lettre qu’à huit heures au soir hier, et pour ne pas retenir le courier, je n’ai écrit qu’une lettre très courte au Prince Bezborotka pour le prévenir du sujet de cette expédition. Je ne doute nullement qu’on n’en soit bien aise chez nous, où on est si zélé pour le salut de l’Europe, et si impatient de voir nos troupes agir et combattre contre les scélérats qui la désolent et la désorganisent. Il y a tout lieu de croire que Massena a été bien frotté par Hotz. Quand vous arriverez à Londres, je vous prie de me donner un quart d’heure.”

THOMAS GRENVILLE TO LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, March 27. Berlin.—“I am afraid that you will not feel much obliged to me for my despatches of to-day, which certainly do not offer a very pleasant picture or promising prospect of our negotiation. The state of things is worse than it was in my former despatches, because Sir Morton Eden’s letter, and Count Dietrichstein’s conduct here, appear to me to confirm beyond all doubt the suspicions which I have described, and render the concert with Vienna impracticable in the moment at which all arrangement with Berlin seems to grow more and more difficult. I own that I much regret that Count Dietrichstein has been so much informed of the bad state of our negotiation here, though I must not be understood as throwing any blame on Count Panin, whose situation on many accounts left him no option upon this subject. You will easily understand this if you recollect that Rozamowski [who] had been recalled from Vienna for not co-operating more actively in the common cause, was suddenly replaced there at the Palatine’s request, was decorated with the cordon bleu and rewarded with a magnificent diamond star; proof enough that the Austrian influence was very powerful at Petersburg, and that it could not be safe for Count Panin to refuse himself to the confidential intercourse which was established between the two courts. I have enclosed in my despatch Sir M. Eden’s letter, which has much the advantage of mine in point of conciseness, as he dismisses with one line a business upon which I have already written to him more, I believe, than one hundred. My answer I thought necessary to annex to the despatch, because, as we in some degree partners in this business, I wish to have it known how little I desire to be included either in such feeble representations or in the reasoning which he puts forward, pretty nearly in the same tone with that in which Thugut himself would have written. I presume, however, that you have fuller information on this point than I have, but till I know that you are better satisfied than I am to leave this subject in this lax, slovenly manner, I shall continue to write my daily philippics, and make the dose stronger and stronger until in some way or other it does its business. Certainly it is impossible for Dietrichstien to conceal the security which he feels that Austria, without any special convention with England new or old, will have the benefit of all the Russian troops which England may pay; that benefit too must be had even if my project should succeed of the Russian force of 50,000 men marching à la Stamford through the heart of Germany, for even in that case the Austrian right flank will be so protected that they will be able to withdraw Staray's corps of 20,000 men, and apply them either to Swisserland or Italy; yet such is my hope of this plan, that I confess I still feel partial to it, and see no very great difference as to its success, from our not having an Austrian convention; though doubtless there is much difference, which tells on other objects, from want of common concert with them. The great difficulty which I apprehend you will feel as to the plan which I sent to you is that such a march does not seem to acquit you as with respect to Switzerland; yet, in truth, it must not be forgot that your engagements there depended always upon concert with Austria, and that, in fact, to enable Austria to detach troops there by strengthening the right of their line, is as serviceable to Swisserland as a smaller force more peculiarly appropriated to that duty could be; nor does it seem to me to be out of the question that you might apply a smaller sum of money to the support of Swisserland than that which you would have given to it in Austrian concert; and you will then have, in reserve for the enterprise in Holland, a large remainder of the whole sum which you had destined to continental operations. You see I am still supposing that no pecuniary stipulations take place either with Prussia or Austria, and I own I am disposed to think that, with the little ground of confidence which they offer, it may be more expedient to apply those sums to purposes perhaps more advantageous, and certainly more popular with the good people of the good country that you are living in. As to the politics of Berlin, there is still a question about the sincerity of Haugwiz; but it is a question not very interesting to me to follow, for whether his wishes are honest and his influence weak, or his language false and his influence powerful, the result is the same; and beyond the general conciliation of his manners and conversation, I do not perceive any advantage from the favourable opinions which he sometimes expresses, and for which there are some who give him complete credit. The only one favourable circumstance which has lately appeared is that a contract is just signed here for five hundred horses for the artillerie légère, which are to be ready in three weeks, and General Stamford considers this as no small indication of its being in contemplation to take measures of hostility; it appears to me, however, more like a measure of precaution than activity. I cannot find time to write to you of the correspondence at Hamburgh and Petersburg in any shape so easy as by sending you copies of what I write there. I believe it would be more correct to send them officially, but I do not see that they can be of any use at the Office; if you think they can, it is very easy to leave them there as if they had been sent there. I send you likewise the letters from Eden and Thugut respecting Dietrichstein.

"It is to the last degree surprising that no official confirmation is yet arrived of the news which I sent by my last, although many corroborating circumstances daily arrive. Hotze is believed to be in force in the petits cantons, which seems to me to account for Jourdan's retreat in order to defend Swisserland, and I presume that Jourdan's retreat accounts for the panic of Strasburg and Kehl. The Archduke has shot five officers of Hulans who behaved ill with Hotze, and has sent one in irons to Vienna, said to be the commandant des manteaux rouges. The last news from the frontiers of Swisserland say that there is not a Frenchman between Schaffhausen and Lindau or the lac de Constance. I enclose to you Talbot's last letter from headquarters, by which it is evident that nothing so material was known on the 16th at headquarters; but I am still persuaded, and so is all Berlin, that Jourdan has retreated. A strong report prevails that Syéès has received an account of bad news from Paris which is believed to be an insurrection there, but I know nothing of this with any certainty."

LORD GRENVILLE to SIR CHARLES WHITWORTH.

1799, March 30. Dropmore.—"Although I trust the idea will of itself occur to the Emperor of Russia, yet it may be worth while to suggest to you that nothing could be more gratifying to the public here than that, on the occasion of the capture of Corfu of which we have just received the account, the two Imperial Courts, I mean Russia and the Porte, should request His Majesty's acceptance of it, as a testimony due to the conquerors at Aboukir, and to the gallant defence of the Leander itself."

HENRY DUNDAS to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, March 31. Downing Street.—"I have received the proposal relative to Surinam. I have long wished for the possession of it for the reasons mentioned by Sir J. Craufurd, and I was doubtful at the time if it should not be preferred to Trinidad; but, upon the whole, I was satisfied that the latter ought upon the same principles to be preferred; and since that time you are aware that our want of troops, and at one time our want of finances, checked all my ideas of any further offensive operations in that quarter of the world. If we can get Surinam without a great expenditure of men or money it is highly desirable. I suppose you will be in town on Wednesday."

COUNT WORONZOW to LORD GRENVILLE.

[1799, March. Harley Street.]—"On m'écrit de chez moi du 9 février, que la Cour de Vienne nous a demandé le Maréchal Souvaroff pour le commandement de son armée en Italie, que l'Empereur a fait chercher ce guerrier vétéran, qui a accepté. Cela comence à me faire croire que l'Autriche comence à aller de bon coeur.

"Le Grand Duc Constantin, second fils de l'Empereur, vat servir dans les armées comē volontaire.

“La nomination de Souvarow pour commander l'armée Autrichienne me ravi. C'est un homme incorruptible, d'un courage personnel à tout épreuve, ayant des grands talents militaires, et a pour principe constant, d'attaquer toujours l'ennemi.”

GEORGE CANNING to LORD GRENVILLE.

1799, April 1. Downing Street.—“It was with the view of getting the Secret Service Accounts in order that I called upon Duthiel for his statement. I will take care to have them in readiness to be passed immediately upon Talbot's arrival.

“I have just now put Frere into possession. I cannot close my last box to you without again expressing my hopes that no change of situation can alter or impair the kindness and friendship which you have shewn towards me; and again assuring you that you will always find me (pray do not think them words, of course) most faithfully and affectionately yours.”

THOMAS GRENVILLE to LORD GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, April 3. Berlin.—“If the time permitted, or the subject called for it, I might say much to you upon that explanation of their defensive concert here, which, after all the fine promises of Count Haugwiz, is reduced to a most impudent demand upon us to pay an extravagant price for what we think of little value, so that, in complying with it, we should fare like the Irishman in the Jubilee, who got nothing for supper and was obliged to pay double for it. Count Haugwiz has, however, penetration enough to see how little I am the dupe of all his familiar protestations, which, whether they are sincere or no, it is scarcely worth while to examine, while it is evident that they in no respect influence his conduct, or affect the course of the business which he appears to control. To persuade me, however, of his sincerity, he detaches De Luc with long narratives of most virtuous conversations, the results of which it is supposed must lead the British Government to give its money to the Prussian line of demarcation, and require no better security for warlike operations than the magnanimous whispers of Haugwiz as recorded by De Luc. With the candour and impartiality, however, of the most faithful of historians, I furnish to you most willingly all that may be matter of evidence on this point, and have had the generous attention to your eyes to send you Mr. Fisher's enlarged copy of the diminutive handwriting, which I have heard you so often speak of with despair; they are the confidential notes of three confidential dialogues between Haugwiz and De Luc; surely plain truth is more easily spoken and may be more concisely rendered either into English or into French. Another manuscript which I enclose to you is of a much more manly and decided character; it is a letter from General Stamford to the Duke of Brunswick, and is written under the impression that it may be possible for him to be more influenced by his Austrian prejudices than by plain and direct good sense. If his character is weak enough to be so worked upon, the letter is ably written in that sense, but among my sanguine hopes that of the Duke of Brunswick's exertions is not in the first rank. In that first rank stands first the project of Russian armies traversing Germany to the Rhine and aided by the diversion of the arms of Russia, Denmark and England in an attack on Holland. Judge only with all my partiality to this project, and all the pains which I have taken to recommend it to Petersburg that it might there ripen into action, judge of my delight in reading by Sir C. Whitworth's of the 19th ultimo that this very project had already been discussed, was eagerly adopted by the Emperor, and waited only for my evil reports from Berlin to hurry on to England in the shape of a projet. I trust that long before this time my reports to Sir Charles have been evil enough to have decided on the departure of that projet from Petersburg to London, but lest any doubt should yet remain I have again written to Sir Charles, and I enclose to you a copy of my letter to him. In the middle, however, of my Russian joy arrived this evening the letter from Sir Morton Eden which I have enclosed in my despatch, and I do assure you that it required as much patience as I could muster to find that, though I have wearied my pen with incessantly writing to him upon the same subject, I never can obtain the smallest approach to the business on which I write; and instead of any answer to my letter, I am put off with the second edition of M. de Thugut's lamentations over the tergiversations of the Court of Berlin. I really am so much at a loss what to turn to in this stage of the business, that I must beg from you some suggestions of what you wish upon it. In my correspondence with him, which I have always sent to you, you will see that I have managed the dignity of the resident minister there with all the respect which I could shew him; but, if he does not mind his business, and will not stir out of the coat-pocket of Thugut, I must tell him my mind upon the subject, and must liberate myself from the disgrace of so discreditable a partnership. I had scarcely finished reading his letter this evening, when Count Dietrichstein came into my room and gave me to read a letter which he had received by the same courier from Thugut full of complaints of the Court of Berlin; imagine only what was my indignant surprise when I found that one complete page of Thugut's letter to Dietrichstein was translated into English, and made into one side of Eden's letter to me; I mean the part which questions the efficacy of any motives to persuade the government of Prussia to go to war. The circumstance of these Vienna dispatches being, not like the former, under flying seal would make me imagine that he was grown angry as well as stupid, if my attention to that quarter was not entirely occupied by the shabby cunning of the Austrian Government, and the abject servility which Sir Morton exhibits there; for I am entirely persuaded that, with only common firmness and discretion, we had completely in our hands the management of the ministers there, who would have done whatever we pleased to have prevented Prussia from benefiting by us, though they would do nothing, not even what they promised to do, for their own benefit; but instead of supporting me in my remonstrances there, and strengthening them by the fear of what might be concluding here, he writes and acts in the business precisely in the words only which Thugut dictates to him. In short I am so completely out of humour with my Vienna correspondent that I know not how to write to him with any hope of advantage, and I will bring my mind back to a better train by thinking more entirely on the Russian march and on the magnanimous Paul. I find from Panin that, if Woronzow goes to Petersburg, his wish will be either to go there and work with him, or to succeed to him in the mission to England. I ought to wish him too well to wish him so desolate a state as that of a foreign minister in London, but charity begins at home, and Russian politics are too important to us now not to make it a most essential point to have such a man as Panin in England, and there are few such, very few such, to be found, I believe, in all the extent of that great empire. You will be tired of my joys, and of my sorrows, and of my opinions, and of my pen and ink; of the last I am myself tired."

Enclosure 1.

SIR MORTON EDEN to THOMAS GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, March 11. Vienna.—"My official despatch of this day, which I request of you to forward by your first messenger, will fully explain to you the object of Count Dietrechstein's mission.

"You will, I am sure, approve of the measure and do everything in your power to further its success, of which your letter of the 2nd instant, in which you seem to think that some such measure as that now adopted might prove effectual, holds up the fairest prospect. I need not tell you what pleasure the contents of that letter gave me. It may be essential to add that Count Dietrechstein was employed at Petersburg during the absence of Count Cobenzl, that he is on a very confidential footing with Baron Thugut, and that he has been uniformly steady and hearty in the good cause."

Copy.

Enclosure 2.

BARON DE THUGUT to THOMAS GRENVILLE.

Private.

1799, Mars 11. Vienne.—"M. le Comte de Dietrechstein se rendant à Berlin d'ordre de Sa Majesté, je saisis cette occasion pour me rappeler à votre souvenir, et pour vous renouveler l'assurance des sentimens invariables que je vous ai voués dès le tems que nous avons eû le bonheur de vous posséder à Vienne. M. le Comte de Dietrechstein est chargé des explications les plus propres à faire disparaître une bonne fois les doutes si fastidieusement affectés par la Prusse à l'égard de nos dispositions envers la France, et pour provoquer ainsi le Cabinet de Potsdam à une déclaration franche et positive de ses propres sentimens et faire cesser enfin une incertitude qu'a déjà fait tant de tort à la cause commune.

“Je vous prie d'aider M. de Dietrechstien de vos conseils pendant son séjour à Berlin, et de l'honorer de votre confiance. J'ose vous répondre du soin qu'il mettra à la mériter.

“Croyez-moi, je vous en supplie, que malgré tous les bruits, artificieusement répandus par la malviellance, nous n'avons jamais varié un seul instant ni dans nos anciens sentimens pour la Grande-Bretagne, ni dans notre manière d'envisager l'état des affaires en Europe; et il me seroit bien douloureux d'imaginer qu'on eût jamis pû nous soupçonner à Londres de la moindre vacillation dans nos principes, ou d'un refroidissement de notre ancien zèle.”

Copy.

Enclosure 3.

THOMAS GRENVILLE TO SIR JAMES CRAUFURD.

1799, March 21. Berlin.—“A courier from Petersburg is arrived here this morning with despatches to Count Panin, and with despatches likewise, which I shall forward to Lord Grenville, from Sir Charles Whitworth.

“They relate entirely to the subject of your last letter, and I therefore lose no time in writing to you by a courier sent from Count Panin to the Russian Minister at Hamburgh.

“The Emperor of Russia, apprised of the danger which menaces that city, and sensible of the importance which is attached to its preservation, proposes to concert with the King of Prussia and with his Majesty for the most effectual means of securing that city from the rapine and violence with which it is threatened; for this purpose his Imperial Majesty offers to send by sea a body of five thousand troops (in addition to those already agreed for) as soon as the season will permit, to co-operate with such Prussian troops as his Prussian Majesty may destine for this service, and his Imperial Majesty has already taken steps for inducing the Court of Denmark to accede to this measure.

“I have already begun in concert with Count Panin to urge the court of Berlin in this business, which is in many points of view likely to become of very great and extensive importance, and as such I cannot but recommend it to your very serious consideration.

“In the first place the mere circumstance of providing for the defence of the city of Hamburgh, without singly depending upon the determination of Prussia, is in itself a very considerable object; added likewise to that is the chance that a decided measure of this description may either at first, or ultimately, produce a more direct conduct in the Prussian Cabinet, as with respect to France, than could so well be obtained by any other means ; and it will easily occur to you that the assembling a force, though only in preparation, near the Elbe may tell with infinite advantage to more than one object.

“A good deal of management and discretion will however, I presume, be found necessary to the success of this very important object. In the first place Prussia will be jealous of it from an apprehension of its being likely to involve them in difficulties with France, although there is certainly no pretence in point of justice under which the French could complain that, while they are preparing to attack Hamburgh, the Northern Powers should be preparing to defend it. It is likely, however, that the ministers here may endeavour to put by this proposition, by obtaining from the city of Hamburgh some declaration of its being satisfied with Prussian defence only ; against this therefore it may be useful in some way to provide, by shewing to the most influencing persons how much better the independence of the city of Hamburgh will be secured by its becoming the object of attention to all the Northern Powers, instead of depending solely and absolutely upon Prussia only. It may likewise be a matter of consideration to the same persons whether their security will not be better provided for by a mixed garrison (if there be any) than by a garrison entirely Prussian. In no part, however, of this business is there more importance, as to the success of it, than in the secrecy with which all discussion relative to it must be carried on ; for it is obvious that if the French become apprised of this plan they may thwart it by an early and sudden attack, or may alarm the Court of Berlin by demonstrations of hostility, before measures of defence are taken. Great caution and secrecy is therefore obviously necessary ; but as Count Panin is writing confidentially to the Russian Minister at Hamburgh on the same subject, perhaps you will think it useful to communicate with him in this very interesting business.

“Any circumstance which may contribute to place a corps of ten or of fifteen thousand men so as to bear on the Elbe and the neighbouring country, seems to offer advantages of the greatest importance to the interest of the allied courts ; and, in this view, I am inclined to think the alarm which prevails at Hamburgh of attack from Holland may ultimately produce the most beneficial consequences.

“You will therefore, I am sure, forgive both the pressing manner in which I recommend it to your care, and the remarks which I have had to make upon the secrecy with which it must be conducted in order to ensure its success.

“They certainly will not venture here openly to oppose a proposition in which all the Northern Powers have so evident and so pressing an interest ; but it is probable that they will take every circuitous step in their power to prevent their being placed in a situation which may soon become more decisive than belongs to the irresolute system which they have hitherto adopted.

“Every reasoning and thinking man in Hamburgh might easily see the advantage of placing the security of their own independence rather in the hands of all the Northern Powers than in those of Prussia. But the difficulty will be to have the benefit of this reasoning without the inconvenience of that publicity which might disappoint our object.

"I have not time to add more, nor indeed can it be necessary that I should, although the magnitude of the business in question would not allow me to say less.

"We have no fresh accounts of the armies; letters from Vienna mention that the Archduke Ferdinand had just been informed that the French have been obliged to evacuate Naples and retire to Capua; and I am informed from good authority that a letter is found from Buonaparte to the Marquis del Gallo, in which, not knowing of the war with Naples, he desires the mediation of the Marquis del Gallo with the Porte to allow him libre sortie de l'Egypte."

Copy.

Enclosure 4.

THOMAS GRENVILLE TO SIR CHARLES WHITWORTH.

1799, March 23. Berlin.—"I received on the 21st instant your obliging letter of the 10th instant, together with your despatch to Lord Grenville, which I have forwarded to London by a messenger this evening.

"I am sorry that a great pressure of business, and the very short notice which there was of the present opportunity of writing to Petersburg, does not allow me more than a few lines upon the interesting subject of your last despatch.

"In every possible point of view it appears to me to be of the highest importance that the measure of sending Russian troops to co-operate with Danish and British force should be steadily pursued by the Northern Courts for their own security, whatever may be the decision of the Court of Berlin respecting it; nor does it seem in any degree desirable that the independence of the city of Hamburg, which is a common interest, should depend solely upon the protection of Prussia, or rest its security entirely on the Prussian army if any additional or other means can be supplied to strengthen its defence; nor should it indeed be forgotten that the protection of the Prussian line of demarcation did not secure the city of Hamburg from the insult of a forced loan, urged by the menaces of France within the boundary of the line of neutrality.

"If therefore by co-operation with Denmark, any such force as that destined by the Emperor could be brought to be assembled in the Duchy of Holstein, it might either there or in the Elbe become a sufficient and solid protection against the danger which threatens the city of Hamburg; nor is there any pretence for regarding such a measure as any trespass on the system of neutrality, the force in question being assembled to act upon the defensive against the attack which is so openly announced in the preparations which are carried on.

"Count Dietrichstein, the Austrian Minister, is arrived here. He seems both more desirous and more confident of co-operation with the allied Courts of London and Petersburg than with that of Berlin; and certainly you will have already seen that my instructions very much accord with those views, and that I am of nothing more desirous than to see the military force of Russia, in concert with Great Britain, giving to the German Empire that effectual assistance which is so slow in its appearance at Berlin.

"Hitherto, however, no communication of real advantage can have taken place between Count Dietrichstein and myself, nor indeed can there be any such until the great obstacle of the convention be removed by the simple, unqualified, ratification of the Court of Austria.

"That this step may be taken I will hope, and I trust that I have reason to think I may not be disappointed in that hope.

"When that is done I shall feel as anxious as they can feel at Vienna to see the force of the allied Courts directed to the support of Austria, by marching immediately to act in middle Germany or Swisserland, as may be found most useful.

"The news which I have desired Mr. Garlike to enclose to you is indeed of the most important description, and I trust will soon be described in more accurate detail.

"I enclose to you another copy for fear that he should have forgotten it.

"Allow me likewise to avail myself of this opportunity of sending to you a short paper written by that very able and active officer General Stamford, who has at my request thrown together in a few lines the general idea of such co-operation on the part of the Emperor of Russia as seems to promise well to the success which we desire so much to see. I have sent the same paper to England, and trust that both there and at Petersburg it may be found not undeserving of serious consideration."

Copy.

Enclosure 5.

GENERAL DE STAMFORD to the DUKE OF BRUNSWICK.

"Si j'ai déferé jusqu'ici de rendre compte à votre altesse sérénissime de l'état de nos affaires politiques pour autant qu'il m'est connu, c'est que cet état ne présentant ou ne laissant entrevoir que des choses infiniment vagues et incertaines, j'espérais, d'un jour à l'autre, que les négociations et les fréquentes conférences des ministres du roi avec les envoyés de Londres et de Petersbourg, amèneraient enfin un résultat quelconque sûr et positif. Mon espérance à cet égard, trop souvent trompée, m'oblige enfin de rompre le silence, et d'offrir à votre altesse sérénissime, faute de certitudes, du moins des probabilités, ou des conjectures, sur l'issue prochaine des ces conférences et de ces négociations.

"Les propositions faites à la Cour de Berlin par celles de Petersbourg et de Londres sont claires et précises. Elles consistent dans des offres de secours d'argent et de troupes, si la Prusse se décide à prendre une part active à la guerre. Celle-ci rejette ces offres, et témoigne le désir de substituer à des traités offensifs, des traités d'alliance défensive; mais sans vouloir stipuler d'autre casus fœderis que celui d'une attaque directe de la part des Français, contre sa ligne de neutralité. Ce qui doit paraître plus extraordinaire encore, c'est que le cabinet de Berlin donne à entendre, qu'en conséquence de ses vues, il lui serait agréable que l'Angleterre voulût fournir quelques subsides à la Prusse, afin de suppléer par là à ce qu'elle manque de moyens, pour se mettre sur un pied de guerre réputable, et pour renforcer par quelques mille hommes de troupes son armée d'observation en Westphalie. Cela veut dire, si je ne me trompe, que la Prusse désirerait que la Russie et l'Angleterre concourussent à consolider sa sûreté et son état d'inertie et de repos, même aux dépens des moyens qui leur sont nécessaires pour défendre une cause qu'il serait surprenant que la Prusse ne regardât pas comme la sienne, puisqu'elle ne saurait se perdre sans que ce malheur n'entraînât irrévocablement sa chute, ainsi que celle de tous les états du monde. Nous saurons dans peu ce que les cours de Londres et de Petersbourg jugeront devoir répondre à des vues si peu conformes aux leurs et aux circonstances; et je pense que leur réponse n'est pas difficile à prévoir.

“Au reste il ne me paraît pas, d'après la manière dont M. le comte de Dietrichstein se prononce ici, que la cour de Vienne désire infiniment d'engager la Prusse à reprendre les armes. Il me semble au contraire qu'elle ne serait pas fâchée qu'elle se tint strictement renfermée dans son système de neutralité, et que les secours qu'elle a à attendre de la part de la Russie et de l'Angleterre fussent augmentés de ceux que ces deux cours offrent à la Prusse, et que celle-ci refuse.

“Je suis d'autant plus porté à croire que telles sont les dispositions et les vues du cabinet de Vienne, qu'il me semble que j'en pénétre le motif et les raisons, que voici :—

“Ce cabinet voit dans le nord de l'Europe un faisceau de puissance et de forces qui, pour mériter ce nom, n'a besoin que d'un lien qui les unisse, et qui dans les circonstances présentes sera formé et serré aussitôt que la Prusse le voudra.

“Il voit que celle-ci, reprenant les armes, disposera de ce faisceau pleinement à son gré; et que combattant alors avec d'aussi puissans alliés sur un théâtre de guerre indépendant de celui de l'Italie et du Haut Rhin, elle sera en état de poursuivre ses succès au delà du Bas Rhin, aussi loin qu'elle le jugera à propos et convenable à ses intérêts et à ceux de ses alliés.

“Il voit que lorsque ces succès l'auront mise à même de régler avec ces mêmes alliés le sort de la Hollande et de disposer de celui de la Belgique, elle saura également trouver moyen de prescrire et de faire prescrire des bornes à l'Autriche, dans le cas où d'heureux succès l'engageraient à porter trop loin ses vues ambitieuses.

“Enfin il voit que si la Prusse se décidait dans le moment actuel de tirer parti de la position favorable où elle se trouve, il en résulterait probablement, pour des tems futurs, un système politique et une balance entre le Nord et le Midi de l'Europe, d'un avantage incalculable pour la Prusse; d'où le cabinet de Vienne conclut qu'il lui importe de ne point tirer cette puissance de l'inaction à laquelle elle se condamne, mais de profiter de son sommeil et de ses faux calculs, pour donner naissance à un système et à une balance qui tourne au profit de l'Autriche.

"Voilà, monseigneur, les raisons qui me paraissent motiver la froideur de la cour de Vienne envers celle de Berlin, et le peu d'empressement qu'elle témoigne, depuis quelque tems, de se rapprocher d'elle.

"Dans ce moment, il dépend encore de la Prusse de déjouer la politique de sa rivale. Les moyens lui en sont offerts, mais elle n'a plus qu'un instant à se décider; et je crains que ce ne soit en vain que ceux qui s'intéressent à sa gloire et à ses vrais intérêts forment des vœux pour qu'elle mette cet instant à profit. Elle s'aliène imprudemment les deux plus fermes appuis de son trône, qui sont l'Angleterre et la Russie, et cela dans un tems où les fondemens de ce trône sont journellement minés. Aussi s'apperçoit-on déjà que, par une conduite si peu appropriée aux tems et aux circonstances, et pour cette raison si inexplicable, elle a commencé à inspirer une sorte de méfiance à la cour de St. Petersbourg; puisque celle-ci, ne croyant pas la ville de Hambourg suffisamment garantie, se propose d'y suppléer par un corps de ses propres troupes, et que, ces jours passés, elle a fait donner connaissance de sa résolution à cet égard au Ministère de Berlin."

Copy.

Enclosure 6.

THOMAS GRENVILLE to SIR CHARLES WHITWORTH.

1799, March 26. Berlin.—"My letter of the 23rd instant will have shewn you what had appeared to us here to be the importance of pursuing the proposal made by the Court of Petersburg for sending a body of troops to co-operate with, or to act without the assistance of Prussia, for the defence of Hamburg.

"Since my last I have again heard from Sir James Craufurd, and should conceive by his answer that there would be great difficulty in prevailing upon the city of Hamburg to accept a Russian garrison, or perhaps any other.

"To me, however, it seems even more desirable that the Russian force in question should [land] in the Duchy of Holstein, if the consent and co-operation of Denmark could be obtained, with the assistance of some Danish troops; because, without some additional numbers, the five battalions alone would scarce be sufficient either for that or for any other object. The Government here have not yet formally given an answer to this proposal from Count Panin, but I apprehend that they will offer from hence to send some troops to Cuxhaven, and that they will endeavour to dissuade the Emperor of Russia from the opinion that any exertion on the part of his Imperial Majesty is necessary for the protection of Hamburgh; an opinion which, however, will, I hope, still be retained at Petersburg, and acted upon without scruple or delay, and with the co-operation of Denmark.

"The state of the negotiation here continues to be unpromising of active concert, and I have no reason to think that his Majesty's Government will sacrifice the object of vigorous hostility in order to partake of the wretched temporising system which prevails here.

"On the other hand I learn from Sir Morton Eden, by a letter of the 20th instant, that at Vienna they still obstinately refuse the ratification of the Convention. Since my arrival here I have written repeatedly to Vienna to state the absolute impossibility which there was of establishing any concert, general or limited, with Austria, till his Majesty's just claims shall have been satisfied; and I have again written to Sir Morton Eden to apprise him that my instructions absolutely forbid me from any concession on this point, and therefore, till he should succeed in his representations to M. de Thugut on this subject, all hope of concert between England and Austria was out of the question.

(Cipher.) "Count Dietrichstein's arrival here has not in any degree assisted me, as he has never made the least overture on this subject, although he is apprised of the importance we annex to it, and although he knows that without it I cannot stir in any concert or arrangement with them.

"I apprehend that the main object of his mission may be to endeavour to prevent our making any final arrangement with Prussia, and that the Austrian Government may hope to derive through Russia all the advantage of English subsidy, without satisfying those claims upon the good faith and honour of Austria which prevent the possibility of any direct arrangements between London and Vienna; if this, however, is their hope, it is one so little suited either to the object or to the time in question, that they will become by it the dupes of their own wretched policy, and again sacrifice to these little miserable shifts the great objects of public safety and success.

"It is doubtless vexatious to see the moment for action lost at Berlin and Vienna in these disgraceful and little discussions. Count Dietrichstein has in no respect hitherto lessened these difficulties; on the contrary, the violence of his prejudices against Prussia appears much too strongly for any measures of conciliation, and although M. de Thugut has written to me to avail myself of the full explanations which Count Dietrichstein would offer to the Court of Berlin, I do not find any yet made by him, or indeed likely to be made; and while he holds back upon the subject of the Austrian Convention, he knows well enough how useless all discussion must be with the English Minister here.

"To my wise and amiable colleague his arrival here is still more embarrassing, because the connection prevailing between the Imperial Courts leads him of necessity to more confidential intercourse, but puts him daily under new difficulties by the abruptness and want of prudent temper which is so strongly marked in the conduct of the new Austrian Minister.

"In this state my best hopes are that my repeated and pressing remonstrances through Sir M. Eden to M. de Thugut will at length prevail, and that we may arrive at the desirable object of combining for the common interest, in one common concert, the force of the two Imperial Courts and that of Great Britain. (Cipher ends.)

"The news of Massena's defeat and of Jourdan's retreat is more and more confirmed, though no direct official detail be yet arrived."

Copy.

Enclosure 7.

CONFIDENTIAL NOTES, by M. DE LUC.

1799, March 31. Berlin.—"Précis de ce que m'a dit M. de Haugwitz dans un entretien que j'ai eu l'honneur d'avoir ce matin avec lui, et que je lui avois demandé pour lui témoigner le chagrin de M. le Comte de Panin et de M. Grenville, d'avoir remarqué dans leurs deux dernières conférences qu'ils réculoient au lieu d'avancer, comparativement à ce qu'ils avoient eu lieu d'espérer soit dans leurs entretiens préliminaires, soit d'après ce que j'avois eu l'honneur de leur dire de lui.

"L'objet principal de cette différence remarquée concerne les stipulations d'un traité à faire, dans lequel le Roi de Prusse s'engageroit à rendre mobile un corps considérable de troupes pour l'amener aux lieux convenables sur les confins de la ligne de démarcation, et pour agir au besoin ; moyennant un subside de la part d'Angleterre, et un concert avec la Russie pour un autre corps de troupes ; et l'objet de la différence porte sur la stipulation de ce besoin ; c'est à dire sur le 'casus foederis' à exprimer dans le traité. On est d'accord à cet égard quant au fond, mais non quant à la stipulation à en faire. M. de Haugwitz ne propose d'exprimer que la défensive sur la ligne de démarcation, quoiqu'il soit d'accord avec les deux ministres que ce n'est pas à cela qu'il faut se borner. De leur côté ces ministres pensent que le corps de troupes ne sauroit être l'objet d'un traité sans ces stipulations ultérieures, et que puisque M. de Haugwitz les disoit être dans les intentions du Roi et les siennes propres, ils ne sauroient voir ce qui pouvoit empêcher de les exprimer dans le traité.

"C'est sur ce point que M. de Haugwitz a bien voulu entrer en explication avec moi ; et c'est le précis de ce qu'il m'a dit à cet égard que je vais tracer ici en le rangeant sous trois points.

1<sup>mo</sup>. "Que l'on pouvoit compter sur ce qu'il disoit être les intentions du roi et de lui-même, quant aux vues pour lesquelles Sa Majesté entreroit en négociation relativement à ce corps de troupes.

2<sup>o</sup>. "Que la négociation elle-même donnoit une assurance de ces vues.

3<sup>o</sup>. "Qu'il ne lui étoit pas possible, cependant, de stipuler formellement d'autre cas que la défense de la ligne de démarcation.

Premier Point.

“Pour me convaincre que le roi et lui-même n’avoient d’autres vues que celles des deux puissances, il a eu la condescendance de me communiquer les parties essentielles du mémoire qu’il remit au roi avant l’arrivée de S[on] A[ltesse] s[érénissime] le Duc de Brunswic, au sujet des propositions faites par la cour de Russie de concert avec celle de Londres, relatives à un traité conforme aux circonstances ; traité qui devoit avoir pour objet le corps de troupes dont il s’agit. Tout le mémoire tend à l’acceptation de ces offres, et les motifs de M. Haugwitz en forment l’introduction. Il y présente un tableau aussi fort que vrai des dangers de toute l’Europe et de la Prusse particulière, plus même par les principes de la guerre que font les François à toutes les nations, que par l’aggrandissement énorme qu’elle leur a déjà procuré ; principes d’après lesquels il montre qu’il ne peut y avoir avec eux aucune paix qui ne soit pas aussi menaçante que la guerre ouverte. Je doute qu’il fût possible de rien ajouter à ce tableau.

“Partant de cet état des choses, il représente les propositions de l’Angleterre et de la Russie comme une circonstance extrêmement heureuse à la quelle il faut donner la plus grande attention ; fondant le besoin de rendre mobile un corps de troupes très considérable sur trois cas qu’on pouvoit avoir déjà en perspective, d’après la situation de l’empereur des Romains vis à vis des François.

1<sup>er</sup> Cas. “Si la guerre recommençoit entr’eux, et que l’empereur, repoussant les François, reconquit ce qu’il a abandonné par la paix de Campo Formio, il ne faudroit pas balancer d’aller reconquérir la Hollande et la Belgique ; dont M. Haugwitz représente non seulement l’importance, mais la nécessité ; puisque jusqu’à ce que cet objet puisse être rempli, il n’y aura que danger à craindre pour la Prusse, y eut-il même une paix de l’empire ; les François ne pouvant que conserver toujours une guerre quelque part pour germe d’autres, fut-ce que contre l’Angleterre, dont la conservation est très importante à la Prusse.

2nd Cas. “Si en recommençant la guerre, l’empereur avoit au contraire des échecs qui missent l’Allemagne en danger, il ne faudroit pas balancer non plus à employer les troupes, dont il s’agissoit ainsi que tous les efforts de la Prusse pour aller à son secours, et pousser alors la guerre de concert avec lui.

3<sup>me</sup> Cas (celui-ci étoit plus possible au temps où le mémoire fut écrit). “C’étoit celui où l’empereur, par motif de crainte, ou par les appâts que pouvoient lui présenter les François, faisoit avec eux un traité d’alliance ; en ce cas, disoit-il, il ne pourroit y avoir de sureté pour le nord de l’Europe que par l’alliance le plus intime de toutes les parties.

“Tel fut donc le mémoire que M. de Haugwitz remit au Roi, et voici d’où il conclut qu’on peut compter sans stipulation de ces cas dans le traité, qu’ils ne peuvent qu’en être le but.

“En remettant ce mémoire au Roi, M. de Haugwitz dit à Sa Majesté que c’étoit le résultat des plus profondes méditations à sa part pour le bien de la Prusse, dans les circonstances présentes ; qu'il la prioit d'y accorder toute son attention, déclarant que sa conscience ne lui permettoit pas d'agir comme ministre de s[a] M[ajesté] si ce ne devoit pas être là le plan de sa conduite.* Or le Roi ayant examiné ce mémoire, répondit à M. de Haugwitz qu'il en approuvoit tout le contenu, et souhaitoit qu'il conduisit les affaires d'après le plan qui y étoit exposé.

“J'ai représenté à M. de Haugwitz que quoique cela fut très satisfaisant quant aux principes manifestés par lui-même et approuvés par le Roi, ainsi qu'à l'égard de leur application, il n'y avoit rien qui put être présenté aux deux Cours par leurs ministres comme conduisant à un traité ; puisqu'on ne vouloit pas en faire des objets de stipulation, et c'est ce qui a amené l'objet suivant.

Second Point.

“Il m'a représenté à cet égard que la seule stipulation d'un corps considérable à faire avancer sur la ligne de démarcation, et son exécution, emportoient implicitement les autres pour le fait ; puisqu'il étoit impossible que la Roi pût y acquiescer dans aucune autre vue.

“Dès le moment, dit-il, que nous prendrons cette attitude, nous devons nous considérer comme en état de guerre avec les François, et notre sûreté ne sera plus dès lors que dans la force. Il est impossible qu'on puisse supposer que notre idée soit à cet égard que les François, nous voyant dans cet état de défense, nous laisseront tranquilles par politique ; sûrs que s'ils ne nous attaquent pas, nous ne bougerons point. Car si, continuant ainsi à porter toutes leurs forces contre l'empereur, un des cas supposé possible arrivoit, savoir, que l'empereur vint à avoir de grands échecs, notre propre sûreté ne nous dieteroit-elle pas impérieusement d'aller à son secours ?

“Il n'est pas possible non plus de penser que nous fussions si aveugles sur nos intérêts les plus grands, pour ne pas profiter de l'événement contraire, soit de grands succès de l'empereur pour repousser ces ennemis de toute monarchie aussi loin qu'il seroit possible, en rétablissant la Hollande sous le Stathouder, et la fortifiant par une partie de la Belgique.

“Mais puisque ces intentions sont si naturelles à supposer et si positivement déclarés, pourquoi ne les pas stipuler ?

Troisième Point.

“Ici la réponse de M. de Haugwitz a été péremtoire, c'est que le Roi ne l'y autorise pas. Mais il m'a témoigné ensuite qu'il verroit avec la plus grande douleur que cette circonstance fit manquer le traité. Que personne ne sentoit plus que lui le besoin de cette armée, tant pour le salut de la Prusse que pour la cause commune qu'il ne séparoit point dans ses pensées ; et que cependant, si le traité n'avoit pas lieu, la Prusse se verroit obligée

* M. de Haugwitz prit déjà la même résolution auprès du Roi défunt, et par la même raison d'opposition d'autres ministres ; ce fut à l'occasion de la paix de Bâle, à laquelle on avoit entraîné le Roi, et il l'emporta sur la manière de la faire.

à ne rien changer dans la situation présente, et à attendre les événements ; avec plus de danger sans doute ; mais que telle étoit la situation des choses et qu'il ne pouvoit rien y changer. Que c'étoit, sans doute, aux deux puissances à examiner si elles pouvoient employer leurs moyens d'une manière plus conforme au but qu'il leur supposoit comme à la Prusse, de sauver l'Europe avec elles-mêmes ; qu'il souhaitoit que cela fût, mais qu'il craignoit qu'il ne vint un moment où l'on auroit lieu de regretter, quoique trop tard, de n' avoir pas concouru à avoir cet armée prête à agir pour le besoin.

“ Sur ce que je lui ai dit alors, que la Prusse elle-même pourroit en ce cas avoir à regretter de ne s'être pas procuré cette armée en acquiescant aux stipulations nécessaires, il m'a fait entendre que le jugement qu'il porteroit sur la chose ne pourroit influencer sur la négociation ; que sa conscience l'assuroit qu'en allant aussi loin qu'il lui étoit permis, il y avoit dans le fond, si non dans le forme, toute l'assurance nécessaire pour aller en avant, mais que surtout, puisque le Roi le pensoit ainsi, il ne pouvoit pas aller plus loin.”

Copy.

Enclosure 8.

THOMAS GRENVILLE to SIR CHARLES WHITWORTH.

1799, April 2. Berlin.—“ It is with infinite pleasure that I found by your despatch under flying seal to Lord Grenville of the 19th inst. how much the views entertained here by Count Panin and myself of the future course of the campaign appear to agree with those already adopted by h[is] I[mperial] M[ajesty] at Petersburg.

“ My conference of this morning has not increased my hopes as to the final result of the defensive concert proposed here, and you will already have seen by my letters that I have long ceased to expect from hence any active and immediate concurrence in hostilities, and have likewise long since been persuaded, whatever be the exertions of the allied Courts of London and Petersburg, they must depend either solely upon their own activity, or upon such concert of operations as might be advantageously combined with the course of the Austrian campaign ; but on this latter point I have still to complain that even these times of urgent pressure have not yet induced the Austrian Government to take the first necessary step of satisfying his Majesty's just claims by the ratification of the convention ; and it is the more irksome to remark the continuance of this fatal obstinacy, as it prevents me absolutely from pursuing that plan of limited concert with Austria which might already have proved so beneficial to both parties. In other respects I still think no difficulty could stand in the way of the plan which h[is] I[mperial] M[ajesty] seems disposed to adopt, and I cannot avoid expressing my earnest hope that not one moment may be lost in despatching the messenger from Petersburg to London with those necessary communications, which the distance and the season can scarcely admit to be as promptly made as it would be useful that they should be.

“The idea of a garrison continues to be very adverse to the wishes of the city of Hamburgh; but I doubt not that any military force, Danish and Russian, established with this view in Holstein, would answer that object as well, and would very happily combine with the other march as proposed in your letter to Lord Grenville.

“By letters from Munich authentic accounts are received that, on the 20th and 21st instants, the Archduke compelled Jourdan’s army to retreat from Pfullendorf behind Stockach; in this retreat the French lost their artillerie de reserve, and though the Austrians lost some men, amongst whom is P[rince] Lichsteinstein, the French suffered in more than double that proportion, and the advantage gained by the Austrians is considered as being of great importance.” Copy.

INTELLIGENCE FROM FRANCE.

Etat Général des Armées Françaises, remis au Directoire le 25 Février, par Scherer Ministre de la Guerre, sortant le lendemain de ce Département.

Note on this statement by Lord Grenville.

French army at the opening of the campaign of 1799.

Italy, Naples, and Piedmont	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	84,000
Malta and Corfu	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	11,000
Holland, Germany, and Switzerland	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	100,000
In France	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	100,000
In Egypt	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	31,000
								<hr/> 326,000 <hr/>

These details do not tally with the totals, which are stated to be :—on an establishment of 400,000 men—present, fit for duty, 353,000; independent of the troops of the affiliated Republics. The army under Jourdan reaching from Amsterdam to the Tyrol seems understated at 100,000 men. That in France must be exaggerated.

INDEX.

A

Abercorn, Earl of, his alleged want of public spirit, 385, 393.
his attitude towards the Act of Union, 441, 445, 447, 467.

Abercrombie, General Sir Ralph, Commander in Chief in Ireland, his order for free quarters in Ireland, 266.

Aboukir, Bay of, Nelson's victory in the, 332, 513.

Academy of Brunswick, scepticism of the Professor of History, 12.
of Gottingen, M. de Luc, professor of Natural History in, 10.

Achenholz, Herr, a German writer, 231.

Acre, St. Jean d', 476, 491.

Addington, Henry, Speaker of the British House of Commons, 387.

Adige, the, 496.

Admiralty, the British, 328, 332.

Adolphus, Prince, son of George III., 469.

Africa, 319.

Agaccio, 185.

Ahrens, M. de, 208, 215.

Albania, 500.

Albanians, to serve on British ships of war, 477, 491.

Albert, Duke, Austrian General, 371.

Albini, Chancellor, at Rastadt, 192.

Albuquerque, Portuguese Viceroy in India, his measures to increase Portuguese trade, 4.

Alcudia, Duke of, 483.

Aleppo, 414.
East India Company's agent at, 421.

Alexandria, 328.
British blockade of, 332-335, 344, 348, 477, 478, 480, 491, 496.

Alicant, 305.

Alien Bill, the, 174.

Allen, Bog of, 231.

Alliance, Triple, of Great Britain, Austria and Russia, conference in London regarding, 297. to be joined by Prussia under certain conditions, 350, 490.
as to its military operations in 1799, 355, 504, 512, 515-518.

Almeida or Almeida, Chevalier, Portuguese Minister in London, 182, 274. conferences of, with the British Ministry, 410, 421.

Alps, the, 244.

Alsace, a French province, 6, 112.

Altamont, Earl of, 288, 393.

Amelia, the, an English ship of war, 346.

America, South, as to opening the markets of, to Great Britain, 435.

America, United States of, quarrel of, with France, 269, 272, 288.
application from, for leave to buy small arms in England, 314, 317.
as to trade of, with India, 381.
—, intercourse of, with St. Domingo, 437.

Amherst, General Lord, an inefficient Commander-in-Chief, 264.

Amsterdam, 350, 501, 502, 528. forced loan from, to the French, 504.

Anacharsis, 193.

"Ancient Britons," Sir W. W. Wynne's regiment of, 226.

Ancients, Council of, the, 132, 145.

Ancona, 460, 477.

André, M. d', a French exile, 70, 118, 119.

Angouleme, Duke d', his marriage with Madame Royale, of France, 401.

Ankers, Indian, correspondence of, 475.

Annibale, Chevalier, priest of the Order of St. John, 343.

Anspach, Principality of, privilege de non appellando claimed for, 307.

Anstruther, Colonel, 504.

Antibes, 343.

Anti-Jacobin, the, Lord Grenville's connexion with, 385.

Antoine, a French Revolutionist, 39.

Antonelle, a French Revolutionist, 39.

Antrim, insurrection in, 234.
disturbed state of, 497.

Antwerp, 502.

Apennines, the, 461.

Arabia, 243, 244.

Arabian Moors, destruction of their coasting trade, 4.

Arabs in Egypt, 335, 500.

Arbuthnot, Charles, British minister at Stuttgart, his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 108, 430. offered a consular appointment by Lord Granville, 425.
accepts the appointment, 430.

Archipelago, 4, 5, 344, 500.
 infested by French Corsairs, 507.
 Arcola, battle of, 148.
 Arcot, Nabob of, his visit to Lord Mornington, 386.
 Arenberg, Duke d', 370.
 Arklow, 329.
 Armada, the Spanish, 278.
 Armagh, 55.
 Army. English, reduced state of, 237, 264.
 —, system of education for the, 263.
 French, Carnot's opinion in regard to, 150.
 —, on the Rhine, 149.
 —, effective strength of, in November 1798, 393.
 —, — in February 1799, 528.
 —, ordered to cross the Rhine, 489.
 Arran, Isles of, 318.
 Artois, Count d', known as Monsieur, communicates secret reports from Germany to Lord Grenville, 362-364, 368.
 Asgill, Sir C., 321.
 Ashford, 493.
 Assam, 386.
 Astle, Mr., Bucks Militia, 267, 297.
 Athlone, 286, 291, 297, 299, 301, 321.
 Attainder, Bills of, 273, 279.
 Auckland, Lord, his notes on the Civil War in Ireland, 225, 231, 234.
 his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 231, 234, 406.
 suggested as a Commissioner for Legislative Union, 436, 445.
 Audley End, 423, 435.
 Augereau, General, 146, 148.
 Augustus, H.R.H. Prince, 121, 407.
 Aust, Mr., Under-Secretary of State, 508.
 Austria, report on the state of its armies in 1795, by H. A. de Zinckel, 5.
 distrust of Prussia in, 26, 35, 44, 45, 53, 54, 74, 113, 150, 153, 198, 211, 267, 272, 358, 377-381. bad faith of, towards Great Britain, 55, 91-95, 99, 131, 178, 188, 253, 345, 523. danger of, from the French aggression, 76, 94.
 opposes a German indemnity for the Prince of Orange, 136.
 negotiations of, with Prussia, 137, 154, 155, 306, 485, 487, 493, 514, 521. proposals from, of new alliance with England, 150-159, 170, 175, 176, 187, 250, 252, 297, 332, 334, 337, 354.
 asked to protect Switzerland from France, 152. designs of, on Bavaria, 183, 309, 482.
 — and on Italy, 364, 368, 380.
 conferences at Berlin broken off, 267.
 —, renewed, 294, 447.
 projects of the French Directory in regard to, 270, 271. project of a convention between Austria and Prussia, proposed by Russia, 308.

Austria—cont.
 military aid to, from Russia, 332.
 aid from England only to be given to, indirectly, 338, 354.
 as to acquisitions of, from France, 428, 429.
 interests of, served by British pre-dominance in the Mediterranean, 434.
 as to its operations in Italy, 460.
 alleged negotiation of, with France, 478.
 France declares war against, 487, 489, 493, 496.
 abandons the King of Naples, 499.
 dilatory action of, 500.
 tortuous policy of, 506.
 — and influence at St. Petersburg, 511.
 obtains the advantage of British subsidies, while refusing British conditions, 512, 523, 527.
 policy of, in regard to Prussia, 521, 522.
 Austria, Leopold, Archduke of, 62.
 Beatrice, Archduchess of, 307.
 Archduke Charles of, 495.
 —, his severe discipline, 513.
 —, his victory at Stockach, 528.
 Archduke Ferdinand of, 519.
 Austrian loans from England unpaid, 93, 131. mediation of the Czar in regard to, 142, 152, 167, 171, 178, 180, 203, 248, 253.
 Aylesbury, 236.
 Aylmer, Mr., General of Kildare insurgents, surrenders, 265.
 exiled, 375, 473.
 Azara, Mr., Spanish Minister at Paris, 502.

B

Babelmandeb, Straits of, 414.
 Badcock, Mr., 297.
 Bagdad, E. I. C., Consul at, 510.
 Pasha of, 510.
 Bagwell, Mr. Beauchamp, 236.
 Bailey, Mr., fires on a Dublin mob, 455.
 Ball, Mr., political defeat of, at Newry, 469.
 Ballina, 288.
 Ballinamore, 292, 299.
 Ballinamuck, French prisoners taken at, 321, 326, 329.
 Ballyshannon, 302.
 Baltic, the, 17.
 Bamberg, bishopric of, proposed endowment of Prince of Orange with, 165.
 Banat, the, of Kraysové, 427.
 Banishment Bill, the, 305.

- Barbadoes, riot at, 381.
 Barcelona, 343.
 Bareuth, principality of, privilege de non appellando, claimed for, 307.
 Barnard, Lady Anne, 125.
 Barras, Chevalier, ex-knight of Malta, 341.
 Barras, M., French Director, his habits and character, 38, 39, 41, 62, 145, 147.
     his struggle with Merlin of Douai, 67, 132.
     his relations with Bonaparte, 133.
     Royalist intrigue with, 489, 495.
 Barrington, Mr., M.P. (afterwards Sir Jonah), his hostility to legislative union with Great Britain, 367, 459.
 Barrow, Mr., 125.
 Barthélemy, an exiled French Director, 144.
     a temporiser, 145.
     his refusal to fly from Paris, 146.
     his policy as a director, 147.
     as to his finding refuge in England, 461.
 Basle, peace of, 41, 52.
 Basora, 509.
 Batavian Republic, as to a landing of Russian troops in, 502.
 Bath, 56.
 Bath, Order of the, 424.
 Bavaria, Austrian projects concerning, 8, 183, 371, 482.
 Bavaria, Elector of :—
     Charles Theodore, apoplectic, 8.
     —, dies, 480.
     Maximilian Joseph, wishes to be neutral between Austria and France, 488.
 Bayard, M., French Royalist in pay of British Government, 41, 228.
 Beaufort, Chevalier, priest of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, 343.
 Beaumarchais, M., the French Dramatist, a mission of, to London, 40.
 Beaumont, Royalist agent, 41.
 Bedford, Duke of, 70.
     Lord Clare's opinion of, 154.
 Bedouins, 244.
 Belgioso, Count de, Minister of the Emperor Joseph II., 371.
 Belgium, project of insurrection in, against the French, 370, 465, 483.
     character of the people of, 370.
     Austrian misgovernment of, 371.
     as to Prussian operations in, 521, 525.
 Belgrade, siege of, 371.
 Belgrave, Lord, 233.
 Bellamont, Lord, speech of, in the Irish Parliament, 449.
 Belleck, 302.
 Bellegarde, le Comte de, Austrian General, 7.
 Belturbet, 302, 320.
 Benares, massacre at, 475.
 Bengal, 381, 476.
 Bentabolle, citizen, French Revolutionist, 38.
 Bentinck, Mr. (Count Charles), letter from, on Dutch affairs, 313.
 Beresford, John, Chairman of the Irish Revenue Board, 361, 406-411, 471.
     John Claudius, opposed to the Act of Union, 442.
 Berkeley, Earl of, 169.
 Berlin, 9, 13, 14, 17, 21, 23, 26, 28, 29, 30, 35, 39, 43, 48, 50, 56, 71-75, 97, 104, 113, 132, 156, 191, 230, 276, 293, 316, 349, 359, 364, 427, 478, 479, 490, 492, 496. conferences at, for a new coalition, 214, 218, 257, 267, 274, 294, 447, 520, 524.
     —, Austrian proposals and Prussian reply, 306.
     —, Russian proposals and Prussian reply, 308.
     as to political rumours in, 478, 513.
 Bernadotte, a French General, insubordination of his troops, 148.
     his angry departure from Vienna, 182.
     and discontent at Rastadt, 191, 273.
     besieges Philippsburg, 496.
 Bernard, the name assumed by Carnot in Italy, 184.
 Berne, 70.
     secret subsidy to, 78, 144.
 Berthier, a French General, 39.
 Bertholet, M., French Scientist, 192.
 Besborodko, Prince, Imperial Chancellor in Russia, his character, 247, 337, 349, 406, 511.
 Beverwyk, 350.
 Birr, 300.
 Biscay, Bay of, 507.
 Bischoffswerder, Colonel de, given the Order of the Black Eagle, 14.
 Blackheath, 306.
 Blackmore Hill, 225, 302.
 Black Sea, 193, 328.
 Blacksod, 227.
 Blain, an exiled French Deputy, 118.
 Blake, an Irish General of insurgents, hanged, 326.
 Blankett, Admiral, captured at Abouker, 332, 474.
 Blessington, 225, 301.
 Board of Control, Lord Mornington's wish to be president of, 387, 510.
 Bog, the river, 364.
 Bohemia, 73.
 Boileduec, 502.
 Bolton, Lord, 406.
 Bonaparte, Napoleon, his delay in going to Rastadt, 26, 27, 39, 41.
     his language at Geneva, 49.
     wishes for peace with England, 62.
     alleged fears and unpopularity of, 67.
     his conquest of Italy, 110.
     Jacobin intrigues in his army, 148.
     his language at Campo Formio, 183.
     his relations with the French Directory, 133, 148, 149.
     — with Carnot, 146.
     Carnot on the plans of, 149, 150.
     projects a confederation of the Rhine, 200.
     his expedition to Egypt, 178, 185, 192, 229, 243, 244.
     captures Malta, 250.
     lands in Egypt, 284, 286, 288, 328. progress of, in Egypt, 332, 344.

Bonaparte, Napoleon—cont.

- bad accounts from his army, 334, 337, 385.
- Count Cobentzl's stories of, 332.
- an account of his capturing Malta, 339-343.
- his proclamation in many languages, 355.
- supposed destruction of, in Egypt, 413, 414, 421.
- reports of his invading India, 420.
- and of the distress of his army, 478, 491, 504.
- invades Syria, 492.
- takes El Arisch Gaza and Jaffa, 492.
- alleged letter from, to Marquis de Gallo, 504, 519.
- Bonne Citoyenne*, a ship of war, 477, 509.
- Boredon de Ransijat, Commander of Malta, his treachery, 339, 343.
- Bornes, M., an exiled French Deputy, 70, 118.
- report from, regarding the Director Carnot, 144.
- his conversations with Carnot on French affairs, 146-150.
- Borough-owners in Ireland, combination of, 467.
- Bosch, Captain of the Dutch Navy, 465.
- Botanical Garden at Madras, 386.
- Bouillon, Prince de, 207.
- Bourbon, House of, 401.
- Boyd, Messrs., London bankers, refuse aid to the Austrian Government, 203, 248.
- Boyle, 292, 299, 301.
- Boyle, Lord, 441, 442.
- Brabant, 485.
- Brandenburg, House of, 307.
- Brazil, 410.
- Breda, 502.
- Bremen, city of, menaced by the French, 363, 464.
- Brest, 38, 131, 178, 218, 497.
- Bretagne, 38, 40.
- Breward, Chevalier, priest of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, 343.
- Bridewell infirmary, 287.
- Bridgewater, Duke of, 70.
- Bridport, Admiral Lord, 179.
- Brighton, 360.
- Brissac, Duchesse de, 343.
- Bristol, 235, 301.
- Brochant, M., French mining engineer, 192.
- Broughton, Mr., 420.
- Browne, Captain, Bucks Militia, 265.
- Brownrigg, Colonel, 356-359.
- Bruce, Mr., 267.
- his research among the public records, and scanty pay, 277, 278.
- Brühl, Count de, reproached by the Czar of Russia, 19, 241.
- Brune, General, commanding the French Army in Holland. As to his conduct in Holland, 464, 465, 486.
- alleged expedition under, against Ham-burgh, 486.

- Brunswick, Charles Duke of, correspondence of, with George III., 14, 16, 21, 22, 23, 25, 27, 30, 98.
- , —, with Lord Grenville, 8, 25, 175, 186.
- , his visits to the King of Prussia, 22, 24, 29, 30, 32, 72, 212, 219, 322, 363, 464.
- , his political views and irresolute character, 11, 15, 16, 23, 24, 31, 44, 45, 66, 123, 124, 185, 189, 201, 359, 464.
- , his relations with Count Haugwitz, 32, 68, 71, 97, 98, 101, 123, 162, 191, 193, 198, 202, 203, 205, 213, 219, 243, 260, 322, 359, 363, 364, 368, 395, 412, 418, 464.
- , his conferences and correspondence with General de Stamford and M. de Luc, 14, 19, 22, 23, 24, 26, 104, 120, 190, 191, 193, 198, 199, 200, 211, 213, 219, 221, 322.
- , his plan of a coalition against France, through the intervention of the Czar, 22, 24, 26, 29, 36, 45, 155, 175, 221, 350, 358, 363, 364, 368, 418.
- , an antagonist of Prince Henry of Prussia, 52, 64, 97, 189.
- , introduces M. de Luc to Count Haugwitz, 68, 71, 162.
- , urged to use his influence with the King of Prussia against France, 122, 124, 163, 171, 175, 176, 194, 260, 363, 364.
- , sends General de Stamford to the King of Prussia, 186.
- , confers with Count Panin, 322, 333, 349.
- , as to his plan of campaign in Holland, 418.
- , applied to by British Government to take command in Portugal, 419.
- , confers with Mr. Grenville at Berlin, 468.
- , warlike intelligence to, from Rastadt, 487.
- , report to, by General de Stamford, from Berlin, as to the failure of their efforts to change the policy of Prussia, 520.
- Duchess of, 415.
- Hereditary Princess of, 12, 187.
- Brussels, 372, 373.
- Bruyes, Admiral, killed at Abouker, 332.
- Buckingham, Marquis of, letter to, from the Rev. Charles M. Warburton, 55.
- correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 177, 179, 217, 222, 227, 231, 235, 245, 264, 286, 288, 289, 290, 291, 296, 299, 300, 301, 304, 315, 318, 322, 328, 330, 343, 345, 351, 352, 362, 367, 368, 373, 374, 392, 397, 404, 410, 412, 422, 435, 440, 442, 444, 445, 446, 450, 452, 454, 455, 459, 462, 469, 471, 472, 490, 498, 503.

Buckingham, Marquis of—cont.

- his views as to the organization and employment of English militia, 169, 177, 179, 227.
- correspondence of, with Mr. Pitt, 178, 452, 457.
- proposes to lead his regiment of militia on foreign service or to Ireland, 218, 222, 227, 231, 235, 385.
- his dissatisfaction with Lord Cornwallis in Ireland, 286, 296, 299, 301, 302, 304, 315, 319, 325, 343, 351, 353, 361, 367, 369, 392, 393, 404, 405, 411, 422, 436, 440, 446, 497.
- Major Fremantle's reports to, from the scene of war in Ireland, 296, 299, 305.
- his views as to the means of carrying the Legislative Union of Ireland with Great Britain, 322-326, 353, 360, 369, 393, 397, 404-406, 422, 435, 440, 442, 446, 451-456, 459, 469-473.
- asks to be a commissioner for signing articles of union with Ireland, 364, 436.
- wishes to return from Ireland, 392, 397, 402, 503.
- rejects the authority of Lord Cornwallis, 402, 404, 410, 412.
- and insists on the necessity of recalling him from Ireland, 451, 454, 459, 462, 469, 471, 473.
- his relations with Catholic Bishops in Ireland, 452, 462.
- his account of a dinner with the Irish speaker, 472.
- his grievance against the Duke of York, 497, 498, 503.
- Bulstrode, 166.
- Burges, Bland, Under Secretary of State, 1.
- Burke, Mr., an Irish rebel, 330.
- Burton-Coninghame, Mr., his Irish harbour, 318.
- Buysklooten, 350.
- Byrne, of Wicklow, an Irish rebel leader, 319.
- exiled, 375.

C

- Cabinet, the British. Notes of, concerning Legislative Union with Ireland, 416, 417, 421, 432.
- its measures in regard to Legislative Union with Ireland, 435, 440, 458, 467.
- Cable or Cabell, Mr., of the India Office, 327, 338.
- Cabul, 386.
- Cadiz, 303.
- Cadondal, Georges, a Chouan chief, 207.

Caiffa, 492.

- Caillard, Mr., French Minister at Berlin, his isolation, 210.
- proposes a treaty of alliance between France and Prussia, 202.
- Cainardji, peace of, 375.
- Cairo, 332, 335, 344, 500.
- Calabrias, the, 461.
- people of, faithful to their King, 500, 506.
- Calentea, 319, 384.
- Caliph, the Arabian; the Ottoman Sultan, successor of, 415.
- Calonne, M. de, a conversation of, with Lord Grenville, 282.
- Cambacères, M., French Deputy, 132.
- Camden, Earl of, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 120, 217, 228, 233.
- weakness of, 266.
- and violence, 326, 405.
- his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 143, 177, 195.
- applies for English troops, 222.
- superseded by Lord Cornwallis, 234, 236, 237.
- Cameron, Mr., a Scottish Radical, 70.
- Campbell, Mr., Scottish Radical, 70.
- Campo, Marquis del, 483.
- Campo Formio, peace of, unpopular in Paris, 67.
- secret articles of treaty cause distrust, 73, 107, 149, 182, 270, 307, 309, 337, 364, 478, 502, 525.
- , broken by the French, 429.
- Canada, 184.
- Canada, the, ship of war, 345.
- Canivet, citizen, a Revolutionary agent in England, 40.
- Canning, George, Under Secretary of State, 118, 228, 245, 337, 375, 485.
- letters from, to Lord Grenville, 356, 359, 514.
- quits the Foreign Office, 514.
- Cape of Good Hope, passage from India round the, 4, 225, 465.
- Capel, Captain, R.N., 331.
- Capitanate, the, 461.
- Capua, French retreat to, 519.
- Carhampton, Earl of, his "mad violence" in Ireland, 266.
- opposition of, to the Act of Union, 441, 450.
- Carleton, Lord, advocates an Act of Union in the Irish House of Peers, 449.
- Carlow, 225, 226, 228.
- Carlsbad, 496.
- Carnatic coast, the, 327, 328, 385.
- Carnot, M., French Statesman and Director, his sojourn in Switzerland, 70, 118.
- his conduct in connection with the revolution of Fructidor XVIII, explained, 144.
- escapes from Paris, 146.
- account of his conversations with M. Bornes, 146-150.
- his feigned names in Germany and Italy, 184.

- Carrick on Shannon, 304, 305.
 Carrisfort, Countess of, 267, 467.
 Earl of, 323, 331.
 —, his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 280, 436, 449, 457, 458, 467.
 —, is favourable to Legislative Union, 280, 331, 449.
 —, aspires to an English peerage, 436.
 —, his reports from Ireland on the question of union, 449, 458, 467.
 Cashel, Archbishop of, his opposition to the Act of Union, 449.
 Caspian Sea, 193.
 Cassandra, predictions of, 507.
 Cassel, fort of, demanded by France, 192.
 Casteleical, Prince, his letter from Palermo to Count Woronzow, 499.
 Castlebar, 288, 289. route of, 290-292, 297, 299, 300, 301, 304, 315, 328, 393.
 Castlecomer, 225.
 Castlereagh, Viscount, Chief Secretary of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 197, 216, 290, 291, 304, 369, 392, 418.
   Lord Cornwallis's preference for, 266. alleged incompetence of, 325, 368, 471.
   — and inexperience, 423.
   instructions to, from England, regarding Legislative Union, 416, 435, 440.
   as to his efforts to pass an Act of Union through the Irish House of Commons, 440, 442, 445, 447, 449, 451, 453, 459, 467.
   his negotiations with the Irish Catholic Bishops, 452.
 Catherine II., Empress of Russia, her deceptive promises, 27.
   a terrible enemy, 272.
   her project of invading India, 319.
 Catholics in Ireland, 140, 245, 322-324, 361, 393.
   as to religious endowment for, 293, 452.
   their attitude towards Legislative Union, 393, 397, 435, 441, 445, 447, 455, 458, 459, 462, 470.
   as to the removal of their religious disabilities, 441, 443.
 Cavalry, Regular, Yeomanry, and Provisional, as to the use of each in case of invasion, 48.
 Cavan, Earl of, 289.
 Cazales, M. de, letter from, to Lord Grenville, claiming a pension for Louis XVIII., of France, 401, 402.
   not accepted as representing Louis XVIII., 403.
Cerberus, frigate, the, 290.
 Ceylon, report of Bonaparte's arrival at, 420, 476.
 Chablais, 111.
 Champagné, General, 231, 320.
Champion, the, British frigate, 416, 419.
 Chandernagore, 476.
 Chapinan, Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Thomas, 289.
 Charette, Count de, allowed a soldier's death, 369.
 Charlemont, the Earl of, his defence of Legislative Independence in Ireland, 367, 397.
 Charles, Archduke of Austria, his victory at Stockach, 528.
 Charles Emanuel IV., King of Sardinia, abandoned by Austria, 464.
 Charlottenbourg, country house of the King of Prussia, 259.
 Charlotte, Queen of England, 115, 116, 186, 263, 386.
   Aunt of Queen Louise, of Prussia, 162.
Charon, the, a British ship of war, 443.
 Charretier, citizen, a French agent in England, 40.
 Chelmsford, 218, 227, 231, 235, 497, 498.
 Cherbourg, 39, 218.
 Chester, 233, 301.
 Chief Remembrancer of Ireland, sinecure office of, 381.
 Cholmondeley, Earl of, 431.
 Christian VII., King of Denmark, as to the co-operation of, in defending Hamburg, 485.
 Church, Catholic, in Ireland, as to endowment of, by the State, 323, 361, 393, 447, 452, 455.
 Church, Presbyterian, in Ireland, as to endowment of, by the State, 323, 361, 393, 447.
 Church, Established, in Ireland, neglect of duty by the clergy of, 55.
   to be secured by Legislative Union, 393.
 Churchill, Lady Mary, 387.
 Circello, M. de, Neapolitan Minister in London, 168, 171.
 Cisalpine Republic, 33, 74, 238, 482.
 Clare, county of, 265.
 Clare, John FitzGibbon Earl of, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, 197, 216, 280, 300, 325, 375, 406, 411, 418, 447.
   correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 120, 154.
   visit of, to London, 336, 343, 351.
   invited to Dropmore, 358, 359.
   his conversation with Pitt on the subject of Legislative Union, 344.
   advocates the Act of Union in the Irish House of Lords, 449.
   fired a blunderbuss to disperse a mob, 455.
   passes an Act to legalize Proclamation of Martial Law, 471.
 Clarke, Mr., an Indian Official, 384.
 Clerfayt, le Maréchal de, commanding the Austrian army of the Rhine, his animosity to Count de Wurmser, 6.
   his military defects, 7.
 Clèves, 111.
 Clifden, 382.
 Clifton, Lord, an Irish peer, 457.
 Clive, Lord, Governor of Madras, Lord Mornington's appreciation of, 387, 440, 476.

- Clonmel, 320.
- Cobentzl, Count Louis C., Imperial Vice-Chancellor, 183, 482, 490. proceedings at Rastadt, 211, 242.
 Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs, 202, 223.
 his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 223, 232.
 conference of, with François de Neuchateau at Seltz, 242, 273. his instructions to Count Starhemberg, in London, 261, 271, 334, 337, 352, 353, 354.
 his mission to Berlin, 268.
 in favour of peace, 271, 274, 293.
 his missions to Berlin and St. Petersburg, 274, 293, 332, 337, 352, 516.
 ill-will of, to Prussia, 306.
 —, to England, 337, 355.
 his stories of Bonaparte, 332.
 his Mémoire for the Czar, 345.
 his misrepresentations to the Czar, 467.
- Cochon, M., a French Minister under the Directory, 144.
- Coire, Austrian defeat at, 506.
- Colechester, 498, 503.
- Cole, Viscount, M.P., 441, 473.
- Cologne, 111.
- Colooney, 302, 304.
- Combe, Mr., an English Radical, 70.
- Commissioners, British, for arranging Legislative Union with Ireland, 432, 436.
 Irish, for arranging Legislative Union with Great Britain, 432, 436.
- Confederation of the Rhine, project of, at Rastadt, 200.
- Conference, at Berlin, for new coalition against France, 214, 218, 219, 257.
 —, broken off, 267, 272, 274.
 —, renewed, 294.
 —, proposals of Prince de Reuss, 306.
 —, —, and of Prince de Repnin, 308, 363.
 at Seltz, between France and Austria, 242, 273.
 in London, as to renewal of the Triple Alliance, 297.
- Coninck, M., 410.
- Connaught, 301, 330.
- Conolly, Thomas, M.P., 393.
- Constance, city of, 70.
- Constance, lake of, 496, 513.
- Constantine, Grand Duke, of Russia, joins the Russian Army as a volunteer, 513.
- Constantinople, 2, 3, 39, 284, 288, 314, 332, 334, 337, 348, 375, 413, 437, 443, 491, 496.
 Lord Elgin, British Minister to, 360, 414, 446, 478.
- Convention, the French, their bribery at Constantinople, 3. between France and Prussia (concluded August 6, 1796), 42. between Austria and Prussia, proposed at Berlin by Prince de Repnin, 308.
 —, Prussian observations thereon, 308, 311.
- Convention—cont.
 of May, 1797, between Great Britain and Austria, for the repayment of an Austrian loan; as to the non-ratification of, 171, 251, 261, 332, 335, 338, 354, 504, 527.
 —, Russian mediation in regard to, 297, 336, 354.
 Commercial, between Great Britain and the United States of America, 335. between Great Britain and Russia, to aid Prussia against France, 427, 428, 482, 505.
 Cooke, Edward, Under-Secretary at Dublin Castle, 290, 369, 374, 392.
 his reports from Ireland, 231, 346, 455.
 his pamphlet in support of Legislative Union, 404.
 —, and exertions to carry the measure, 441, 442, 463, 470.
 correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 441.
- Cooper, Mr., an English Radical, 70.
- Coote, Charles, M.P., supports the Act of Union, 447, 473.
- Copenhagen, 191, 230, 234, 249, 263, 269.
- Copley, Sir Lionel, his rambling habits and democratic connexions, 215.
- Corfu, strength of French army in, 528.
- Cork, 290, 320, 422.
 address from, in favour of Act of Union, 442.
 disturbed state of, 497.
- Cornwallis, Master-General of the Ordnance, 169, 179, 263-266, 385.
 his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 227, 314.
 —, with Lord Buckingham, 300.
 Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief in Ireland, 234, 235, 236, 237, 245.
 his dispositions against a French invasion of Ireland, 286, 287, 289, 296, 297, 299, 300, 302, 304, 306, 320. urged by Pitt to carry an Act of Union, 275, 458. his lenity condemned by political intriguers, 280, 291, 304, 305, 315, 321, 326, 331, 343, 351, 374, 375, 393.
- Lord Buckingham's dissatisfaction with, 286, 299, 300, 302, 304, 315, 328, 329, 343, 361, 373, 374, 422, 436, 440, 444, 445.
 —, and insists on his recall, 451, 459, 462, 469, 471, 473, 497.
 his humane administration, 326, 328, 331, 351, 374, 375, 392, 424.
 his reserve, 344, 360, 369, 411, 459.
 Censures Lord Enniskillen, 352.
 his treaty with Tippoo Sultan, 386, 474.
 his authority rejected by Lord Buckingham, 402, 404, 411.
 as to his policy in Ireland, 405, 411, 423, 442, 445, 451, 454, 455.

Cornwallis—cont.

- draft of his speech to the Irish Parliament, objected to by Lord Grenville, 438.
- dismisses Sir G. Parnell, Irish Chancellor of the Exchequer, for opposition to Legislative Union, 442.
- his proclamation of Martial law, 470.
- , and Bill to legalize it, 471.
- Corresponding Society, the, 78.
- Corry, Mr., M.P.; Chancellor of the Irish Exchequer, 442, 460.
- , returned to Parliament for Newry, 469.
- Corry, Viscount, M.P., 441.
- , moves for a Committee on the State of the Irish Nation, 470.
- , is beaten, 472.
- Cossacks, despatched to Italy, 427.
- Couchéry, M., exiled French Deputy, 118.
- Courier*, a Radical newspaper, 79, 233.
- Court of Directors, East India Company, 475.
- Coutance, 39.
- Cowper, Earl, 422.
- Craig, Lieutenant General, 286, 291, 304, 374.
- Crauford, General, 302.
- , Sir James, appointed Consul at Hamburg, 132.
- , Minister Plenipotentiary, 275, 513.
- , his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 132, 183, 208, 214, 230, 239, 251, 275, 294.
- , wishes to be attached to the Austrian army, 184.
- , as to his supplying secret information, 208, 215, 230, 239, 275.
- , his inadequate pay and allowances, 294-295.
- , his alarmist reports, 493, 517.
- , in communication with Mr. Grenville at Berlin, 504, 512, 517, 522.
- , instructed to ask admission of mixed garrison into Hamburg, 517.
- , —, but fails, 522.
- Crimea, the, 284.
- Croatia, 284, 427.
- Croppy ships, prisoners released from, 326, 351.
- Crosbie, Sir Edward, 225.
- , W. A., Commissioner of the Irish Barrack Board; his letter on Legislative Union to the Duke of Montrose, 423.
- Crown and Anchor* tavern, 79.
- Cuffe, Mr., M.P., his political delinquency, 470.
- Cumberland, H.B.H. Duke of, son of George II., 264.
- Cunliffe, Sir Foster, 233.
- Curran, John Philpot, his defence of Wolfe Tone, 374.
- Cuxhaven, port of, 10, 38, 48, 49, 230, 419, 420, 427, 465, 474, 522.
- Cuyler, General (?), to be employed in Portugal, 421.

D

- Dacca the Nabob of, his present to Lord Mornington, 387.
- Daendels, General, commanding Dutch expedition to Ireland, 465.
- , his journey to Paris, 495.
- Dalmatia, 260, 284, 427.
- Daly, Bowes, M.P., his opposition to the Act of Union, 469, 470.
- , St. George, M.P., Prime Sergeant of Ireland, 471.
- Damietta, 492.
- Dannon, M., French Deputy to the Council of Five Hundred, 132.
- Dantzic, seizure of, by Prussia, 16.
- Danube, the, 507.
- Dardanelles, the, passage of Russian war ships through, 332, 334, 476.
- Darmstadt, Madame Louise, Landgrave of, 81.
- Darnley, Earl of, 345.
- D'Asp, M., Envoy to London from Sweden, 277.
- Dean, Captain, of a Yarmouth packet boat, 466.
- Deane, Macdonald, R.N., 418.
- De Clifford, Lord, as to political conduct of, 455.
- Dedem, M., Dutch Minister at Constantinople, 509.
- De Dunstanville, Lord, 245.
- De Fay, Chevalier of St. John of Jerusalem, 343.
- De la Bardouanche, Commander of Malta, his treachery, 340-343.
- De la Tour Pin, knight of Malta, 341.
- Denmark, revolutionary spirit in, 17.
- , 76, 155, 199.
- , German literature read in, 281.
- , as to co-operation of, in defence of Hamburg, 485, 517.
- , and the North of Europe, 490, 494, 519, 522.
- , in an attack on Holland, 515, 522.
- , as to observance of neutrality by, 338, 349.
- , trade of, with India, 381, 410.
- De Préville, knight of Malta, 341.
- D'Erlach, General, death of, 144.
- , Baron, his death, 144.
- Desgrigny called Prevost, Royalist Agent in France, 41.
- Despomelles, Chevalier, Royalist Agent in France, 41.
- Desmeuniers, M., 132.
- Deux Ponts, Le Duc de, his hostility to the Court of Vienna, 8.
- , becomes Elector Palatine, 480.
- Diana*, frigate the, 290.
- Dickson, Admiral, 416, 418

- Diernstein, Tower of, where Richard Cœur de Lion was imprisoned, 62.
- D'iesre, M., French diplomatist, 39.
- Diet, the, of the Roman empire, 429, 430.
- Dietrichstein, Count de, Austrian minister at Berlin, 303.
- his story about Bonaparte, 504.
- intimate relations of, with Count Panin, the Russian minister, 511.
- letter from Baron Thugut to, 515.
- as to his mission to Berlin, 516, 520, 521, 523.
- Dietry, a Foreign office messenger, 492, 503.
- Directory, Irish, 265, 497.
- Directory of France, insists on the cession of the left bank of the Rhine, 21, 23, 27, 66, 74, 116.
- its policy of separate negotiations, 23, 44, 45.
- , and disorganization, 26, 28, 30.
- secret report of its proceedings, 37, 38.
- causes expulsion of the Count de Provence from Brunswick, 37.
- designs of, on Hanover, 42.
- , on Hambourg, 82, 130, 131, 137, 486, 493, 518.
- its system of propagandism, 39, 40, 74, 105, 110, 111, 113, 137.
- policy of, in regard to the British monarchy, 69, 133, 419.
- bad faith of, 73, 74, 76, 97, 486.
- "Satanic pride" of, 112.
- petition of Montagnards to, 132.
- internal conflicts of, 132, 144-150.
- fear aroused by its aggressions, 110, 271, 350, 396, 429, 525.
- sends an expedition to Egypt, 185, 194, 478.
- , to Ireland, 288, 345.
- instructions from, to General Bernadotte at Rastadt, 191, 197.
- demands at Rastadt, forts of Kehl and Cassel, islands of Rhine, and destruction of Ehrenbreitstein, 192, 429.
- aided by Count Haugwitz at Rastadt, 194, 257.
- proposes a treaty of alliance to King of Prussia, 202.
- quarrels with United States of America, 269, 288.
- proposes to turn Austria into a Republic, 270.
- hostile designs in India, 327, 384-392.
- declares war against Naples and Sardinia, 348, 379, 420, 500.
- insolence of, 335.
- , and humanity, 369, 525.
- declares war against Austria, 487, 489, 504.
- its plan of campaign, 496.
- as to policy of, in regard to Italy, 502.
- Directory of the East India Company, 510.
- Dissenters, Protestant, in Ireland, as to their attitude towards Legislative Union, 447.
- Diu, as to acquisition of, from Portugal, 440.
- Djezzar Pasha, 338, 476, 480, 491.
- bad state of his army, 492.
- Dobbs, Mr., a member of the Irish House of Commons, 216.
- Dolomieu, ex-commander of Malta, 340.
- Dolomieu, M. de, Intendant of Mines, accounts from, of Bonaparte's expedition to Egypt, 192, 243.
- Don, General, 279.
- Donat Doublet, Chevalier, of St. John of Jerusalem, 343.
- Donegal, Bay of, 327.
- Donegal, 329.
- Earl of, his attitude towards the Act of Union, 445.
- Dorchester, Lord, 436.
- Doris, frigate, the, 289.
- Down, county of, 141.
- Downshire, Marquis of, 393.
- his house burned, 225.
- his attitude towards the Act of Union, 441, 444, 445, 450, 455.
- Dresden, 242, 506.
- Drogheda, 320.
- Dropmore, Lord Grenville's country house, 263, 269, 277, 288, 316, 319, 334, 349, 353, 377, 386, 513.
- Drummond, Messrs., the London Bankers, 64.
- Dryad*, frigate, the, 289, 290.
- Dublin, 56, 141, 216, 233, 264, 280, 286, 287, 288, 289, 291, 296, 299, 300, 301, 302, 315, 318, 321, 323, 352, 361, 368, 373, 406, 444, 447, 449, 450, 503.
- hostility of, to a Union of Legislatures, 411, 446, 451, 452, 453, 497.
- Lord Mayor of, 411.
- Dublin Castle, 320, 346.
- Duffe, General Sir James, 225.
- Dufresnoy, name assumed by Kosciuzko, 348.
- Duhem, M., a member of the French Convention, 146.
- Dumolard, exiled French Deputy, 118.
- Dumouriez, General, Conquest of Belgium by, 372.
- Duncan, Captain, R.A., 231.
- Duncannon Fort, 226.
- Dundalk, 320.
- Dundas, General, 225.
- Henry, Secretary of State for War, correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 47, 79, 169, 174, 184, 185, 223, 224, 228, 263, 275, 277, 279, 284, 319, 326, 338, 381, 402, 404, 409, 410, 413, 420, 430, 513.
- , confident of repelling a French invasion, 48, 79.
- , opposed to English expeditions to France, 101, 152, 234, 245, 275, 385, 386, 387, 437, 498.
- , his sympathy for the French émigrés, 174.
- , his Militia Bill, 181.

Dundas, Henry—cont.

—, objects to employing English Militia in Ireland, 223.

—, letters from, to Mr. Pitt, 224, 433.

—, jealous of interference in the government of India, 384, 475.

—, his project of a military expedition from India to Egypt, 413-414.

—, his views as to Bonaparte's invasion of India, 420.

—, suggests obtaining from Russia a body of troops for service in Southern Europe, 430.

—, views of, on the situation and policy of Great Britain in December, 1798, 433.

—, vehement speech of, for Legislative Union with Ireland, 472.

—, his good offices for Lord Buckingham, 503.

Lord, 180.

Dunkirk, 133, 218.

Dunne, General, 301.

Députés honnêtes, a party in the French Legislature, 145.

allied to Carnot, 147.

Dupuy, M., Royalist agent in France, 41.

Dusseldorp, 484.

Duthiel, M., French Royalist agent, suspected treachery of, 229, 404.

Duvergne, M., a renegade Royalist, 41.

E

Earl, Mr., an English Radical, 70.

Earne Lough, 302.

East Friesland, 119.

East India Company, Russian troops for the, 328.

as to trade of, with Foreign powers, 381, 410.

agents of, 421, 509, 510.

concur in Mr. Dundas's project of a military expedition from India to Egypt, 413-414.

East Indies, 225.

Eberling, Herr, Chargé d'Affaires of Brunswick at Rastadt, 487.

Ecclesiastical Electors, as to indemnifying for loss of States, 310, 312.

Eden, Sir Morton, British Minister at Vienna, 94, 120, 122, 131, 178, 242, 250, 284, 332, 414, 480, 482, 486, 493.

his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 188, 354.

his close relations with Baron de Thugut, 251, 511.

—, and feeble diplomacy, 511, 515. in communication with Mr. Grenville, 502, 511, 515, 516, 523.

Grenville's irritation with, 515.

Edinburgh, 100, 368, 425.

Egan, Judge of Kilmainham, 321.

Egremont, Earl of, 233.

Egypt, the Bey of, 4.

French designs on, 4.

Bonaparte's expedition to, 178, 190, 192, 193.

sinister rumours respecting it, 194, 478.

sailing of the expedition, 229, 243.

its arrival, 284.

Bonaparte's supposed death in, 413, 414, 421.

project of English expedition, from India, 413-414.

"une parfaite Vendée", 491.

despatch of Turkish troops to, 496, 500.

strength of French army there, in February 1799, 528.

Ehrenbreitstein, claimed by the French at Rastadt, 54, 119, 192, 199.

surrender of to the French, 468.

El Arisch, capture of, by Bonaparte, 492.

Elbe, the river, 10, 42, 90.

frozen, 420, 465, 518.

Electoral Palatine, death of, 480.

Elgin, Earl of, British Minister at Berlin, instructed to support General de Stamford's representations, 58.

63, 69, 84, 104, 123, 161.

—, illness of, 72, 159, 173, 175, 204, 262, 268.

—, his relations with M. de Luc, 80, 81, 82, 85, 88, 95.

—, distrusts M. de Haugwitz, 96, 98, 205.

—, —, and is supported by Lord Grenville, 127, 131.

—, his intimate relations with Count Panin and Prince de Reuss, 173, 274.

—, his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 95, 114, 116, 127, 131, 159, 168, 171, 173, 174, 176, 204, 214, 226, 241, 242, 253, 254, 262, 268, 274, 306, 359, 380, 425, 446.

—, confers with Count Haugwitz, 204.

—, —, and Count de Cobentzl, 276.

—, seeks support from the Duke of Brunswick, 205.

—, complaint of Sir J. Crauford as to, 276.

—, appointed British Ambassador at Constantinople, 359, 380, 446, 456, 477.

—, applies for the Order of the Thistle, 425.

—, his marriage, 446.

Countess of, 274.

Elthrin, the, ship of war, 346.

Eliot, Mr., appointed British Minister at Munich, 160.

Elizabeth, Queen of England, 278.

Elliott, Hugh, British Minister at Dresden, 241.

asks Lord Grenville to aid the Rev. Mr. Marsh, in defending English policy against German writers, 281.

Elphin, Bishop of, 301.

Ely, Earl of, 393.

his conduct in regard to the Act of Union, 441, 444, 445, 449, 450, 455.

Emery, M., a French deputy, 132, 133.

Emigrants, French, proposals in regard to, 169, 174, 184.

Emmet, Thomas Addis, his manifesto, 290.

Enns, the river, 82, 256.

proposed cession of Prussian territory, on, to Holland, 366.

an insecure boundary for Prussia, 495.

England, 11, 461.

hostility to, at Berlin, 23, 26, 27, 33, 34, 51, 53, 103, 123.

anxious to form, in concert with Prussia, a Quadruple Alliance against France, 28, 34, 35, 114, 427-434.

her insolation, 35, 41, 76.

benefits accruing to, from neutrality of Prussia, 42, 76, 83, 89.

organization of its military forces to repel invasion, 47.

designs of the Directory in regard to, 69, 133.

mediation in favour of, by Prussia and Austria projected by Count Haugwitz, 76, 83, 88.

projected French invasion of, 133, 150, 167.

as to the relations of, with Austria, 91-95, 131, 150-159, 170, 250, 252, 253, 297, 332, 338, 354.

—, with Prussia, 103, 112, 396, 428, to save Europe by her energy and example, 112.

repression of discontent in, 167.

—, supposed exhaustion of, 271.

want of regular troops in, 237.

—, and small arms, 317.

unpopularity of, in Germany, 281, 396.

increased taxation in, 285.

basis of its reconciliation with Austria, 297.

proposed subsidies from, to Switzerland, 78, 297, 338.

—, to Prussia, 82, 99, 428.

—, to Portugal, 274, 297, 338.

—, to Sweden, 277.

—, to Russia, 283, 297, 338.

will only aid Austria indirectly, 338, 354.

increase of its revenue, 345.

—, and its trade in the Mediterranean, 360.

policy of, misrepresented by Count Cobentzl to the Czar, 345, 355.

to aid in invading Holland, 350, 515.

subsidies wanted from, by her allies, in 1799, 358, 456, 505, 512, 521.

policy of, in regard to Holland, Belgium and Switzerland, 365, 379, 486, 515.

England—cont.

Mr. Dundas's views on the situation of, in December, 1798, 433.

convention between, and Russia, to aid a Prussian invasion of Holland, 427, 428, 432, 487.

as to later relations of, with Austria and Prussia, 492-496, 511-513, 514, 523, 524-527.

Prussia will not openly join with, against France, 524-527.

Austria refuses direct co-operation with, 527.

Enniskillen, 301, 302, 320.

Enniskillen, Earl of, censured by Lord Cornwallis, 352.

and consequent anger of, 397, 450.

Ernest, Prince of Mecklenbourg Strelitz, uncle of the Queen of Prussia, 135, 162.

Eton, Mr., attaché at St. Petersburg, 95.

his statement as to Russian designs on India, 327.

Eurydice, the, Indianman, 440, 474.

Eustace, General, M.P., 319, 329.

votes for Legislative Union, 455.

Euston, Earl of, 169, 180, 436, 469, 503.

F

Fagel, H., Ex-Greffier of Holland, correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 313, 446.

Falkenstein, county of, 183.

Farnham, Lord, 449.

Faucet, General, 226.

Fauche-Borel, M., a French Royalist agent, his secret negotiation with the Director Barras, 489.

Faypoult, M., French Minister at Genoa, 340.

Fencibles, British regiments of, in Ireland, 296, 330.

Scots, in Ireland, 445.

Fenwick, Sir John, a Jacobite leader, 196.

Ferdinand, Archduke, of Austria, 519.

Ferdinand II., Duke of Wurtemberg, his discouragement, 485.

Court of Vienna asked to help, 486.

sends an Envoy to Berlin, 496.

Ferdinand IV., King of the Two Sicilies, 238, 419.

invades Rome and Tuscany, 419, 426, 429, 460.

helped by the Emperor of Russia against France, 427.

retires to Sicily, 457, 461, 499.

abandoned by Austria, 464, 467.

his precipitation defeats Austrian plans, 479.

his need of money to recover his dominions, 505, 506, 507.

advantage to Great Britain by subsidizing, 506, 507.

Ferdinand of Prussia, Prince, 128.
 Ferguson, Mr., a disaffected Scot, 70.
 Finchenstein, Count, Prussian Minister of State, advocates war with France, 481.
 Fingall, Earl of, his political conduct as a leader of the Irish Catholics, 459.
 Fink, Count de, a Prussian minister, 257.
 Fischer, Colonel, an Austrian officer, 71.
 Fisher, Henry, of the British Foreign Office, shipwrecked with Mr. Grenville, 465, 468, 514.
 Fitz Gerald, George, Prime Sergeant of Ireland, dismissed for opposing the Act of Union, 442, 444, 450.
 Lord Edward, the Irish patriot, 70, 197, 216, 217, 225, 331.
 —, Bill of Attainder against, 273, 279.
 Lord Robert, British Envoy at Copenhagen, applies for leave of absence on account of domestic troubles, 230, 234, 239, 249, 263, 268, 269.
 Mr., General of Kildare insurgents, surrenders, 265.
 Fitz William, Earl of, his friendship for the Irish Catholics, 469.
 Five Hundred, Council of the, 132, 145.
 Flanders, as to disaffection in, 502.
Flore, Réunion de, a Jacobin Club, 132.
 Flushing, English attempt on, 185, 218.
 Foote, Captain, R.N., 492.
 Forest, Mr., 510.
 Forth, barony of, 321.
 Fort St. George, Madras, 384, 388, 390, 440, 474, 476.
 Fort William, Calcutta, 381, 387.
 Foster, Colonel, son of the Speaker, to be dismissed from office, 458, 467.
 John, Speaker of the Irish House of Commons, 216, 300, 352.
 —, reported saying of, 315.
 —, invited to London by Mr. Pitt, 344, 360.
 —, Lord President of an Irish Board of Trade, 351, 353.
 —, as to the importance of gaining his aid to carry Legislative Union with Great Britain, 353, 360.
 —, his hostility to the Act of Union, 406, 423, 441, 442, 445, 446, 455, 458, 467, 469, 470.
 —, hostility of, to Catholics, 462, 470.
 —, his opinion of Pitt's speech on Legislative Union, 471.
 —, — and of Dundas's speech, 472.
 Fox, Charles James, condemned by the French Directory, 69.
 as to punishing for a speech at the Whig Club, 187.
 France, intrigues of French Jacobins in Turkey, 2, 3.
 —, in Egypt, 3.
 —, designs of on Hamburgh, 16, 17, 19, 26, 30, 130, 131, 518.

France—cont.

a common danger to other powers, 25, 35, 83, 103, 110, 113, 525.
 military organization of, 47.
 acquires Mayence by conceding Venice, 27, 133.
 secret intelligence from, 69, 132.
 aggressive designs of, in Switzerland, 100, 110, 111, 429.
 —, Germany, 105, 107, 108, 113, 119, 137, 221, 226.
 —, Italy, 121, 156, 429.
 expedition from, to Egypt, 185, 192, 229, 243, 284.
 —, to Ireland, 288, 306, 328, 345.
 quarrel of, with United States of America, 269, 288.
 intrigues of, in India, 327, 338, 384-392.
 —, and at Malta, 343.
 naval defeat of, at Aboukir, 332.
 conquest of Belgium by, 372.
 unpopularity of, in the Dutch Republic, 365-367.
 to be reduced by a Quadruple Alliance within her ancient limits, 380, 423, 429.
 effective military strength of, in November 1798, 393.
 —, in February 1799, 528.
 protest of, at Rastadt, against the advance of Russian troops into Germany, 444.
 as to destruction of her naval power in the Mediterranean, 499, 506, 507.
 military operations of, against Austria in 1799, 496, 528.
 makes Italy the scene of her chief efforts, 501.
 Louis XVIII. King of. See Provence, Count de.
 Madame Royale, of. See Madame Royale.
 Franche Comté, 70.
 Francis II., Roman Emperor, 6, 17, 21, 185, 238, 274, 373, 427, 434.
 his silence regarding secret articles of peace with France, 27, 73, 75, 107.
 duped by the French Directory, 35, 73, 74, 75, 84, 105, 112.
 his correspondence with Frederick William III., King of Prussia, 91, 97, 99, 104, 106.
 refuses the demands of General Bernadotte, 182.
 his attitude as to the Prince of Orange's claims in regard to Nassau, 202, 218, 259.
 anxious to cultivate the friendship of England, 253, 293.
 —, and of Prussia, 259.
 proposes to renounce his claims to indemnity in Germany, 307.
 vacillating policy of, 347.
 his theatrical entry into Brussels, 372.
 wishes for more territory in Italy, 479.
 refuses to ratify his convention of 1797 with George III., 523.
 Prussian policy in regard to, 525.

François, M., French agent in British pay, 41, 228.
 François de Neufchateau, a French Director, his habits, 38, 133.
 his conference with Count de Cobentzel at Seltze, 242, 273.
 Franconia, 307.
 circle of, 74.
 Frankfort, 105, 108.
 Frazer, Mr., British Minister at Hambourg, 131, 208.
 Frederick Augustus III., Elector of Saxony, his conversation with M. de Luc, 241.
 Frederick the Great, King of Prussia, a saying of, 52, 73.
 Frederick William II., King of Prussia, his last illness and death, 10, 14, 17, 25, 73.
 annexes Dantzic, 16.
 his relation with Count de Haugwitz, 102.
 his plan of securing an indemnity for the Prince of Orange, 172.
 Frederick William III., King of Prussia, 9, 10, 16, 19, 24, 26. needs good guidance, 20, 53, 83.
 illness of, 81, 85.
 invites the Duke of Brunswick to Berlin, 22.
 and confers with him, 32.
 as to his relations with Count Haugwitz, 34, 97, 175.
 his distrust of the French Directory, 44, 45.
 General de Stamford sent to, by Lord Grenville, 57, 130.
 —, their conversation, 135-139.
 his policy of peace, neutrality, and the defence of North Germany, 72, 82, 90, 125, 129, 137, 258, 311.
 his good intentions and difficulties, 72, 73, 82, 90, 97, 124, 126, 127, 171. letter from, to Emperor Francis II., 91, 97, 99.
 —, and friendly reply, 107.
 Prussian rejoinder unsatisfactory, 138.
 note from to French Directory delivered at Rastadt, 226.
 his reticence and bad advisers, 240, 259, 260.
 his second interview with General de Stamford, 259. pressed by the Czar to join a new coalition against France, 294, 308, 428-430, 464.
 willing to renounce indemnification in Germany, 307.
 refuses to guarantee the neutrality of Southern Germany, 311.
 refuses to join in offensive war against France, 311.
 distrusts the secret negotiations of Austria with France, 308.
 offers to mediate between France and Austria, 318.

Frederick William III.,—cont.
 wishes to restore the Prince of Orange as Dutch Stadholder, 379, 394, 418. adheres to defensive policy, 464.
 under the influence of Colonel Kockeritz, 481, 488, 493, 524-527.
 will defend Hamburg against the French, 486.
 proposes a concert of defence, to include Sweden and Denmark, 494.
 his conversation with Mr. Grenville, 494. refuses to give States of South Germany Prussian protection, 498.
 proposal to, from Paul I. of Russia, to send troops to Hamburgh, 517.
 —, in the hope of embroiling Prussia and France, 518, 519.
 his policy condemned by General de Stamford, 522.
 —, explained by Count de Haugwitz, 524-527.
 his continued confidence in Count Haugwitz, 525.
 Fremantle, Major John Edward, Bucks Militia, his reports to Lord Buckingham during the Irish rebellion, 180, 296, 299, 305.
 — illness of, 446.
 Mr., "too fat and too rich," 267.
 French Royalists, application from, to the English Government, 100, 101.
 Frere, John Hookam, becomes Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, 514.
 Friesland, East, French intrigues in, 255. province of, 313.
 Froissard, Colonel, an Austrian Officer, 71.
 Frotté, Count de, Royalist Chief in Normandy, 41, 207.
Fructidor 18. revolution of, 70.

G

Gallais, M., a French political agent, 70.
 Gallo, Marchese di, Neapolitan Minister at Vienna, 62, 182.
 anecdote of General Bonaparte's letter to, 504, 519.
 Galway, county of, 141, 265, 291, 320.
 —, disturbed state of, 497.
 Bay of, 227.
 Garet, M., French Deputy, 132.
 Garlike, Mr., Secretary of the British Embassy at Berlin, 159, 240, 242, 254, 262, 321, 346, 393, 415, 416, 480, 520.
 letters from, to Lord Grenville, 333, 349, 358.
 correspondence of, with Thomas Grenville, 463.

- Garter, Order of the, Lord Mornington's application for, 386.
 Gatschina, Palace of, Count Cobentzl's reception at, 332.
 Gaza, 491. captured by Bonaparte, 492.
 Generals, British in Ireland, "the worst in Europe." "worse than useless." 264, 266.
 Geneva, Bonaparte at, 49.
     111. 112. 146. 192.
     annexed to France, 195.
 Genoa, Republic of, its French partialities, 156. reports from, 185.
     193. 343.
 George III., King of Great Britain and Ireland, M. de Luc's letters to, 10, 14, 21. 48, 50, 160.
     "True Defender of the Faith," 12, 160, 243.
     his confidence in General de Stamford and M. de Luc, 134, 243. his "noble views," 133.
     "too sanguine," 337.
     opposed to the political enfranchisement of Catholics, 263, 277, 427, 463.
     letter from, to Lord Grenville, 344.
     pension claimed from, by Louis XVIII. of France, 401.
     disinclination of, to increase the peerage, 436.
     Count Starhemberg's reverence for, 484.
 Germany, 9, 12, 21, 29, 115, 355.
     its integrity menaced by France, 23, 27, 28, 35, 54, 73, 74, 88, 100, 110, 183, 192, 221, 490.
     —, maintained by Austria, 183.
     —, betrayed by Prussia, 183.
     —, defended by Prussia, 226, 525.
     thrown open to the French, 271.
     revolutionary propagandism in, 281, 488.
     unpopularity of England in, 281.
     Prussia refuses to guarantee the neutrality of Southern, 260, 313, 495.
     advance of Russian troops into, and French protest, 444, 489.
     distracted state of, 496, 501.
     strength of French army in, 528.
 Gerry, Mr., Minister of the North American States in Paris, dismissed by the Directory, 269, 272, 288.
 Gezzar, Pasha. See Djezzar Pasha.
 Ghent, 502.
 Gifford, Major, 430.
 Goertz, Count de, Prussian Minister at Rastadt, 192, 489.
 Gommoeus, General de, his death in Switzerland, 144.
 Gosfield, Lord Buckingham's house in Essex, 497.
 Graham, Colonel, a military attaché, 184.
 Grant, Colonel, 437.
 Greb, the, a Dutch river, 350.
 Greece, 255.
     Isles of, impatient of subjection to the Turks, 507.
 Greeks, the, in Malta, 341.
 Grenelle, camp of, 39.
 Grenville, Lady, 125, 381.
     —, Lord Mornington's devotion to, 386, 476.
 Lord, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, his correspondence with Count Starhemberg, 54, 55, 60, 66, 71, 91, 99, 120, 131, 142, 152-59, 167, 168-72, 178, 182, 187, 188, 203, 248, 250, 252, 261, 262, 270, 303, 352, 353, 370, 376, 460, 483, 484.
     —, —, with Sir William Hamilton, 65, 121, 237.
     —, —, with Rufus King, 67, 142, 269, 272, 283, 334, 365, 401, 437.
     —, —, with William Wickam, 70, 77, 216, 228, 229.
     —, —, with William Windham, Secretary at War, 85, 100, 101, 402, 403.
     —, —, with the Earl of Elgin, 95, 127, 131, 159, 173, 174, 176, 204, 214, 226, 253, 262, 268, 274, 306, 359, 380, 425, 446.
     —, —, with Sir Charles Whitworth, 95, 316, 377, 498, 513.
     —, —, with Count Woronzow, 131, 246, 249, 253, 267, 284, 285, 316, 331, 338, 345, 354, 355, 358, 359, 374, 375, 406, 414, 447, 449, 457, 461, 466, 482, 484, 499, 505, 511, 513.
     —, —, with Charles Arbuthnot, 108.
     —, —, with the Earl of Clare, 120, 130, 154.
     —, —, with the Earl of Mornington, 125, 381, 440, 474.
     —, —, with Sir James Craufurd, 132, 183, 208, 230, 239, 251, 275, 294.
     —, —, with R. Shepherd, 139, 177.
     —, —, with the Earl of Camden, 143, 177, 195, 204.
     —, —, with W. Pitt, 150, 152, 166, 187, 229, 234, 236, 245, 273, 274, 279, 283, 314, 337, 344, 354, 457, 468.
     —, —, with Earl Spencer, 166, 178, 181, 185, 277, 303, 320, 332.
     —, —, with the Prince of Orange, 172, 407, 411, 446.
     —, —, with the Marquis of Buckingham, 177, 179, 217, 222, 227, 235, 245, 264, 236, 288, 239, 290, 291, 296, 299, 300, 301, 304, 314, 318, 321, 322, 328, 330, 343, 345, 352, 360, 367, 368, 373, 374, 392, 397, 404, 410, 412, 422, 435, 440, 442, 444, 445, 446, 450, 452, 454, 455, 459, 462, 469, 471, 472, 496, 498, 503.

Grenville, Lord, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, his correspondence—cont.
 —, — with Lord Robert Fitz Gerald, 230, 234, 239, 249, 263, 268, 269.
 —, — with Lord Auckland, 231, 234.
 —, — with H. Fagel, 313, 446.
 —, — with Thomas Grenville, 232, 236, 415, 418, 419, 420, 426, 456, 457, 465, 468, 473, 479, 481, 485, 492, 501, 503, 511, 514.
 —, — with the Earl of Carysford, 280, 436, 449, 458, 467.
 —, — with John King, 425.
 —, — with the Duke d'Harcourt, 393.
 —, — with Sir Sidney Smith, 1, 2, 437, 443, 476, 480, 491.
 —, — with the Duke of Portland, 438.
 —, — with Edward Cooke, of Dublin Castle, 440.
 —, — with Spencer Smith, 463, 507.
 —, — with Baron de Lerthe, 478.
 —, — with M. de Luc, 25, 29, 30, 43, 56, 63, 65, 68, 71, 80, 86, 99, 101, 109, 119, 122, 123, 125, 127, 129, 142, 185, 189, 198, 201, 204, 209, 213, 218, 240, 254, 321, 393.
 —, — with Henry Dundas, Secretary of State for War, 47, 169, 174, 184, 185, 223, 228, 263, 269, 275, 277, 279, 284, 319, 326, 338, 349, 381, 402, 404, 409, 410, 420, 430, 513.
 —, — with George Canning, 356, 359, 574.
 —, — with Lord Minto, 362, 368.
 —, his instructions to M. de Luc, on mission to Germany, 25.
 —, endeavours to form a Quadruple Alliance against France, 29, 57, 59, 83, 129, 175, 358.
 —, his instructions to General de Stamford at Berlin, 57, 176.
 —, reply of, to Count Haugwitz's Mémoire on the political situation of Europe, 58.
 —, —, rejoinder of Count Haugwitz, 89.
 —, —, and Lord Grenville's observations thereon, 125, 129.
 —, his instructions to Mr. Frazer at Hambourg, 131.
 —, insists on Austria fulfilling her engagements, 171.
 —, letter from, to the Duke of Brunswick, 175.
 —, —, to Baron de Thugut, 222.
 —, —, to Marquis Cornwallis, 227, 314.
 —, —, to Count de Cobentzl, 223.

Grenville, Lord—cont.

—, repudiates the system of double negotiations, 127.
 —, distrusts Count Haugwitz, 175.
 —, memorandum by, on the military force at command of the Government, 237.
 —, —, in regard to Madame de Rochechouart, 282.
 —, alleged betrayal of, by French servants, 239, 251, 295.
 —, author of the alliance of England and Russia, 246.
 —, confers with Count Woronzow as to the renewal of the Triple Alliance, 297.
 —, proposes a commercial agreement with American States, 335.
 —, misrepresented at St. Petersburg by Count Cobentzl, 345.
 —, Overtures to, from Count Haugwitz, through Count Panin, 346-349.
 —, his sketch of the political situation of Europe in Nov., 1798, 358.
 —, secret overture to, from the Dutch Republicans, through Mr. Rufus King, 365-369.
 —, urges the Emperor Paul to form a Quadruple Alliance against France, 379.
 —, Emperor's answer, showing his efforts in this direction, 427-430.
 —, —, but Prussia adheres to a defensive policy, 490, 492-496.
 —, his edition of Homer, 382.
 —, his preface to the Anti-Jacobin, 385.
 —, letter to, from B. Garlike, 333.
 —, —, from M. de Cozales, 401.
 —, objects to the draft of Lord Cornwallis's speech to the Irish Parliament, 438.
 —, urged by Count Woronzow to aid the King of Naples, 499-501, 505-507.
 —, suggests an offer of Corfu to Great Britain, 513.
 —, note of, concerning the strength of the French armies in February, 1799, 528.
 Thomas, his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 232, 236, 415, 418, 419, 420, 426, 456, 457, 468, 473, 479, 481, 485, 492, 501, 503, 511, 514-528.
 —, offered the post of Chief Secretary in Ireland, 235, 236.
 —, his mission to Berlin, 392, 415, 420, 426.
 —, detained at Yarmouth, 456, 457, 464.
 —, shipwrecked, 465, 468, 496.
 —, asked to confer with the Duke of Brunswick at Berlin, 468.
 —, arrives at Berlin, 473.
 —, good reception, 479.
 —, stands aloof from French intrigues, 489.

- Grenville, Thomas—cont.
 —, his close relations with Count Panin, 473, 479, 504.
 —, conferences of, with Count Haugwitz, 487, 494, 495.
 —, —, and conversations with the King of Prussia, 494.
 —, his reasons for deferring a journey to Vienna, 493.
 —, fails in his object of bringing Prussia into a coalition against France, 493.
 —, discusses Count Hauwitz's plan of a defensive concert, 501.
 —, — and military operations in Germany and Holland, 502, 518, 519.
 —, as to his relations with the Austrian envoy, Count Dietrichstien, 504, 520.
 —, as to Austria refusing British conditions, while benefiting by British subsidies, 511, 512.
 —, stimulates Sir Morton Eden at Vienna, 511, 515.
 —, letter from Baron Thugut to, 516.
 —, describes Count Dietrichstein's attitude at Berlin, 523.
 —, tries to obtain the admission of a mixed garrison into Hamburg, and thereby compromise Prussia with France, 517, 518.
 —, letters from, to Sir Charles Whitworth, 519, 522, 527.
 —, tries to influence Baron Thugut, through Sir Morton Eden, 524.
 —, despairs of Prussian co-operation, 527.
 —, —, and welcomes the policy of Russia, 527, 528.
 Grey, General Sir Charles, military report of, 48.
   his views in regard to the Militia, 169.
   as to his commanding in Portugal, 421.
 Grisons, the, Austrian occupation of, 374, 416.
   invaded by General Massena, 489, 496, 506.
 Groningen, province of, 313, 350.
 Gross, Baron de, his proposal to raise a Swiss legion, 495.
 Guernsey, 39.
 Gultschmidt, M. de, of Dresden, 241.
 Gustavus IV., King of Sweden, 277.
 Gwydir, Lord, 430.

H

- Habeas Corpus Act, suspension of, 196. invoked for Wolfe Tone, 374.
 Haberland, Professor, Envoy of Brunswick at Rastadt, his correspondence with the Duke, 52, 201.
 Huddington, 446.

- Hague, the, 372, 427, 464.
Hamburg Journal, the, 466.
 Hamburg, the city of, 10, 183, 239, 348, 363, 466.
   menaced by the French, 16, 17, 19, 26, 30, 33, 42, 45, 82, 130, 131, 132, 137, 208, 215, 486, 493, 518.
   as to the best way of defending, 485.
   King of Prussia resolved to defend, 487.
   proposal of the Emperor Paul of Russia to send there a mixed garrison, 517, 518, 519, 522.
   —, rejected, 522, 528.
 Hamilton, Duke of, 425.
   Lady, letter from the Queen of Naples to, 236.
   Sir William, British Minister at Naples, correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 65, 121, 237, 466.
   —, his intimacy with the Czar, 121.
   —, as to return of, to England, 478.
 Hammond, Mr., Under Secretary of State, 67, 127, 241, 277, 282, 286, 303, 334, 415.
 Hanbury, Mr., a resident at Hamburg, 230.
 Hannibal, 54.
 Hanover, 21, 38, 41, 42, 50, 82, 189, 212.
   French designs on, 44, 45, 47, 49, 63, 75, 77, 89, 119, 123, 149.
   Neutral attitude of, offensive to the Emperor Paul, 444.
 Hans Towns, French intrigues in, 255.
   as to the best way of defending, 485.
 Harcourt, Duc d', representative of the Count of Provence in London, 30, 174, 401, 403.
   dispenser of British help to French Royalists, 207.
   his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 393.
 Hardy, Mr., an English Radical, 70.
 Harnswald, M. d', 54.
 Harrington, Earl of, 169.
 Harris, Lieut.-General, Commander-in-Chief at Madras, his military operations, 390.
 Harward, Mr., 419.
 Harwich, 435.
 Hassan Bey, of Rhodes, 476, 480.
 Hatsell, 195.
 Haugwitz, Count de, Prime Minister of Prussia, 14, 51.
   his political ascendancy, 27, 163, 175, 186, 196, 211.
   as to his character and opinions, 34, 41, 44, 47, 72, 73, 74, 76, 81, 82, 83, 90, 102, 103, 124, 130, 131, 138, 163, 190, 194, 198, 199, 205, 206, 209, 213, 219, 220, 221, 258, 274, 311, 394-395, 486, 490, 514.
   confers with the Duke of Brunswick, 32, 33.
   holds secret conferences with M. de Luc, 71, 80, 81, 82, 87, 88, 128.
   —, of which Lord Elgin complains, 95.
   —, —, and Lord Grenville disproves, 125.

Haugwitz, Count de—cont.

Mémoire of, on the political situation of Europe, 31, 33, 41, 57, 162.

—, and Lord Grenville's reply thereto, 58.

his project of mediation between France and England, 76, 83, 88.

his overture for a better understanding to the Court of Vienna, 81, 84, 91, 104, 137, 153.

connection of, with secret societies, 83, 186, 194.

his second Mémoire in reply to Lord Grenville, 87, 89, 123.

his conduct approved by Duke of Brunswick, 97, 98, 101, 104.

distrusted at Vienna, 98, 151, 153, 155, 168, 171, 175.

—, and by the envoys of England, Russia and Austria at Berlin, 124, 141.

—, and by M. de Luc, 139, 163, 164, 186, 194, 198.

—, and by Lord Grenville, 175, 358.

confides in M. de Luc, 99, 101, 102, 103, 209, 214, 258, 394, 395.

early friendship of, with King Fredk., William II and the Emperor Leopold, 102.

charged with deceiving the Duke of Brunswick, 186, 190.

declines proposals of alliance from Russia, 190, 198, 257.

—, from France, 210.

reliance of French Government on, 194, 257.

confidential relations of, with the Duke of Brunswick, 198, 260, 322, 363, 364, 395, 413, 418, 464.

efforts to overthrow him, 202, 205, 394, 408, 409, 412.

distrusts the ambiguous policy of Austria, 211, 219, 258, 364, 368, 396, 464.

letter from Citizen Siéyès to, 318.

inclines to a warlike policy against France, 322, 346-349, 358, 359, 363, 394-397, 409, 418, 464, 481.

his secret overtures to the British Government through Count Panin, 346-349, 358, 363, 364.

accused of changing his policy from pique against Siéyès, 409.

too weak for his situation, 409.

accused by Prince Radzivil, 412.

applies to Duke of Brunswick for a plan of campaign in Holland, 418.

conferences of, with Mr. Grenville, 487, 494, 495.

his reply to an Austrian proposal to break up the Congress of Rastadt, 487.

declares Prussian policy to be defensive, 490.

a concert of vigorous defence, 494, 495, 500.

confers with M. de Luc, 514.

—, and asks for an English subsidy, 514.

Baron Thugut imputes duplicity to, 517.

Haugwitz, Count de—cont.

opinions as to his sincerity, 512, 514.

Mémoire of, to the King of Prussia, as to proposals for an alliance from England and Russia, 525.

held in check by the King of Prussia, 526, 527.

his confidential discourse on Prussian policy with M. de Luc, 524-527.

Hawkesbury, Viscount, his speech for Legislative Union, 461.

Hazard, the, sloop of war, 290.

Hébert, a Revolutionary leader in France, 61.

Helder, the, 418.

Heligoland, 465.

Heliopolis, 243.

Helvoet, 418, 427.

Henry of Prussia, Prince, conversation of, with the Duke of Brunswick, 52.

Herbert, Baron d', Imperial Minister at Constantinople, 461.

Hertford, Marquis of, 287, 412, 436.

Hervey, Bagnal, an Irish rebel Chief, 234, 236.

Hesse Cassell, Landgrave of, 486.

—, Prince of, tampered with by the French Directory, 486.

Hesse Darmstadt, Prussian protection against France refused to, 495.

Hesse, Electorate of, 75, 108.

Hildesheim, Bishopric of, 256, 308.

Hippesley, Sir John, as to his influence with the Duke of Wurtemberg, 486.

Hobart, Lord, 287, 315, 322.

his rule at Madras, 384, 476.

Hobartins, or party of Lord Hobart, at Madras, 385, 476.

Hoche, the, a French ship of war, 345, 346.

Hoffman, Professor, President of the Revolutionary Committee at Franckfort, 108.

Holland, or the Dutch Republic, revolutionised by the French, 17, 28, 35, 38, 110, 271.

Prussia anxious to drive the French from, 69, 275, 346-349, 373, 418, 435, 490.

loss of English arms in, 317.

friendly overtures from Republican party in, to Lord Grenville, 365, 367.

policy of England in regard to, 365, 379, 418, 435, 456, 485.

plan for the conquest of, by the Duke of Brunswick, 350, 418.

as to the invasion of, by Russians, 495, 502, 515.

the French in, 464, 486, 528.

policy of Prussia in regard to, 482, 521, 525, 526.

intrigues of Orange party in, 486, 502.

expedition from, against England, 465, 515.

plans for expelling the French from, 501-503, 515.

as to making it pay for its own liberation, 504.

Province of, its leading position in the Dutch Republic, 313.

Holloway, Captain, 357.
 Holstein, Duchy of, revolutionary spirit in, 17.
     as to the landing of a Russian force in, 503, 519, 522, 528.
 Holt, General, commanding Wicklow rebels, 302, 319, 321, 326, 473.
     surrender of, 375.
 Holwood, Mr. Pitt's country house, 151, 152, 314, 344.
 Holymount, 292, 300.
 Homer, Lord Grenville's edition of, 382.
 Hood, Captain, R.N., 491.
 Hope, Captain, 357.
     —, R.N., 418.
 Horace, the Latin poet, quoted, 319.
 Horwood, Mr., of Cuxhaven, 466.
 Hotze, General, commanding Austrian troops in Switzerland, 495. reported victory of, 511, 513.
 House of Commons, British, 174, 196.
     Pitt's Union speech in, 456, 460, 469, 471.
     Irish, 216, 367.
     —, rejects a project of Union with Great Britain, 449-452, 454.
 House of Lords, British, 196.
     Irish, 216.
     —, approves a project of Union with Great Britain, 449-452.
 House of Representatives, United States of America, 288.
 Houe, a disaffected Englishman, 40.
 Howe, General Sir William, Lieut.-General of Ordnance, 169, 170, 180, 358.
 Hudelist, M. de, Austrian Chargé d' Affaires at Berlin, 487.
 Hungary, 371.
 Huntley, Marquis of, 276.
 Huskisson, Mr., Under Secretary of State for War, 314, 402, 413.
 Hutchinson, General, military operations of, in Connaught, 288, 289, 290, 297, 299.
 Hyderabad, 385, 389, 390, 391.

I

Ibrahim Bey, 491.
 Indemnities, in Germany, for despoiled German Princes, 105, 106, 165, 242.
     renounced conditionally by King of Prussia, 136, 307.
     —, and the Emperor, 307.
     Prince of Orange's claims to, opposed by Austria, 136, 172.
     —, partially renounced, 201, 307.
     advocated by Siéyès at Berlin, 242. claimed for Archduke Ferdinand, Duke of Modena, 307, 310. for the Ecclesiastical Electors, 310.

India, 193, 245. threatened with invasion, 319.
     French intrigues in, 327, 338.
 India Office, unfair charges upon, 278.
 Inn, the river, passage of, by the Austrians, 489.
 Institute, National, of France, 245.
 Ireland, project of a French descent on, 38, 227.
     state of Ulster, 55.
     designs of the French Directory in regard to, 69.
     disturbed state of, 120, 130, 140, 195, 216, 222, 225, 227, 228, 231, 233, 234, 245, 264, 305, 351, 424, 470, 497.
     Catholics in, 140, 245, 265.
     —, as to the political and religious emancipation of, 322-324, 424.
     —, their attitude in regard to Legislative Union, 397, 405, 435.
     Protestants in, 140, 141, 245, 265, 322-323, 424.
     as to Legislative Union of, with England, 225, 265, 278, 305, 322-326, 344, 351, 353, 367, 397-400, 404-406, 417, 421, 435, 449-452, 462.
     French invasion of, 286, 288, 290, 291-306.
     —, defeated, 306, 320, 345.
     unjust system of tithes in, 323, 399.
     Bank of, 287.
     Dutch expedition to, 465.
     Lord Corry's motion for a Committee on the state of, 470, 471.
 Issel, the river, 350.
 Italy, 9, 17, 332.
     conquest of, by Bonaparte, 110.
     dislike of the French in, 271.
     proposed mission of Lord Mulgrave to, 314.
     coveted by Austria, 335, 336, 378, 479.
     as to sending Russian troops for defence of, 427, 430.
     Marshal Suwarrow sent to command the allied armies in, 496.
     supplies France with all things needful, 501.
     French policy in regard to, 503.
     strength of French armies in, 528.

J

Jaccart de Ste. Croix, Carnot's assumed name in Germany, 184.
 Jackson, Mr., a British diplomatist in Italy, 393.

Jacobins. French, the intrigues of, at Constantinople, 3.
 —, in Germany, 105, 107, 108, 110.
 —, in Italy and Switzerland, 110, 111.
 —, — and in Bonaparte's Army, 132.
 "Infernal Spirit" of the, 103.
 opposed to the French Directory, 132.
 Jaffa, captured by Bonaparte, 492.
 Jallé, camp of, revived, 40.
 Jamaica, island of, objects to black troops, 225.
 Jarré, General de, his system of military education adopted in England, 263.
 Jersey, 39, 207.
 Johnson, General, 234.
 Jones, Harford, East India Company Consul at Bagdad, complaint against, 510.
 Jordan, Camille, an exiled French Deputy, 118.
 Joseph II., Roman Emperor, his misgovernment in the Netherlands, and duplicity, 371.
 Joubert, General, commanding the French in Italy, 148.
 Jourdan, General, commanding the French troops on the Rhine, his address to his army, 493, 501.
     beaten by the Archduke Charles, 513, 524, 528.
     as to the strength of his army, 528.
Joyeuse Entrée, a Charter of Belgian liberty, 372.
Juno, the, British frigate, 416.

K

Kascheleff, M. de, Russian Minister at Copenhagen, 234.
 Keene, Mr., M.P., 184.
 Kehl, fortress of, demanded by France, 192, 199.
     panic in, 513.
 Keller, Count, Prussian envoy at Vienna, 153, 154.
 Kemys, Mr., Crown Solicitor of Ireland, 374.
 Kenmare, Viscount, loyal to English rule in Ireland, 459.
 Keogh, Mr., an Irish political leader, 234, 236.
 Kerry, county of, tranquil state of, 265.
 Keuler, General, 82.
 Kilbeggan, 289.
 Kilcock, 286.
 Kilcullen Bridge, 318.
 Kildare, county of, 216.
     rising in, 222, 239, 291.
     surrender of rebels in, 265.
     tranquil, 296.
     disaffected, 300, 305, 321, 351, 361.
 Kilkenny, 329.
 Killalla, 288, 289, 290, 329.
 Killebeggs, 320, 329.
 Kilmaine, General, 289.
 Kilmainham gaol, 287, 321.
 Kilwarden, Lord, an Irish peer, opposed to the Union, 467.
 King, Colonel, M.P., 473.
     J., Under Secretary of State, 345, 376, 381.
     —, his application on behalf of Mr. Arbuthnot and Lord Grenville's reply, 425.
 Rufus, Minister in London from the United States of America, correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 67, 142, 269, 272, 288, 334, 365, 401, 437.
     —, communicates friendly overtures from Dutch Republicans to Lord Grenville, 366-367.
     —, application from, for leave to purchase small arms in England, 314, 317.
     —, discussion of, with British Ministers in regard to St. Domingo, 437.
 Kingsborough, the Earl of, 447.
 Kingston, the Earl of, 447.
 Kirkla, Baron, 465.
 Kirkpatrick, Captain, British Resident at Hyderabad, 391.
     Colonel, British Resident at Hyderabad, 391.
 Knobelsdorff, M. de, Prussian Minister at Constantinople, 509.
 Knox, George, M.P., a Commissioner of Revenue in Ireland, 445, 467.
 Koehler, Colonel, his mission to Turkey, 314, 338, 413, 443.
     opposed by the Duke of York, 356-358, 359.
 Koeziusko, General, packet from, to the Czar Paul, 317.
     as to secret movements of, 348.
 Kükëritz, Colonel de, 135, 137, 138.
     General de Stamford's conversation with, 259.
     Advocates a policy of Neutrality, 409, 464, 481, 493.
     the intimate adviser of the King of Prussia, 481, 493.
 Kotchoubei, M., Russian Minister of State, 331, 337, 349.
     Vice-Chancellor, 406. letter from, to Count Woronzow in London, 332.

L

- Laelos, M., a French official, 39.
 Lacroix, Charles, a French statesman, 133.
 Lake, General, commanding in Ireland, 222.
     —, his military operations in Connaught, 289, 290, 297, 301, 302.
     —, captures the French at Ballinamuck, 304, 305, 321.
     —, alleged strictures of, on Lord Cornwallis, 411.
     George, 306.
 Lambert, Mr., M.P., 473.
 Lameth, M.M., exiled leaders of the French Revolution, 118.
 Land Tax, Pitt's motion in regard to, 152.
 Lansdowne, 1st Marquis of, 70.
 La Reveillère Lepaux, M., a French Director, his habits and character, 38, 145, 147.
Latona, the, English ship of war, 421.
 Latouche, Mr., a Dublin banker, 411.
 Lauderdale, the Earl of, 70.
 Lausanne, 111.
Leander, the, ship of war, 513.
 Le Canu, a French merchant and revolutionary agent in England, 40.
 Leeds, 77, 78.
 Leghorn, 343.
 Lehrbach, Count de, an Austrian diplomatist, 8.
     Minister at Rastadt, 444.
     leaves Rastadt, 503.
 Leinster, Dowager Duchess of, 249.
     Duke of, 239.
     suspected of favouring Irish rebels, 265.
 Leipsic, 281.
 Lemerer, General, an exiled French Deputy, 132.
 Lenoir-Laroche, a French Deputy, 132.
 Leoben, the Treaty of, 158, 182, 253.
     its secret articles, 171.
 Leopold II., Roman Emperor, his relations with Count Haugwitz, 102.
 Le Pelletier, Felix, a French Revolutionist, 39.
 Lerigi Malagamba, his letter to Sir Sidney Smith, 491.
 Lerthe, Baron de, letter from, to Lord Grenville, as to Austrian negotiations with France, 478.
 L'Estrange, Colonel, his victory over Irish insurgents, 228.
 Letourneur, M., one of the French Directory, 147, 148.
 Levant Company the, as to their Consular establishment at Constantinople, 508.
 Levant, 163, 185, 191, 193. increase of British trade to, 336, 360, 477.
     danger to British trade in, 500, 506, 507.
 Leveson, Lord Granville, a British diplomatist, 159, 173.
 Lewins, Mr., Agent in France of the United Irishmen, 290.
 Lichtenstein, Prince de, killed at Stockach, 528.
 Lidda, 492.
 Liechtenaw, Mademoiselle de, her arrest, 14.
 Liège, as to the cession of, to France, 182.
 Ligne, Prince de, 371.
 Lille or Lisle, negotiations at, 148, 433.
 Lima, Monsr. de, 182.
 Limerick, 320.
 Lindon, 513.
 Lisbon, 410, 419, 420.
     British Consulship at, offered to Mr. Arbuthnot, 425.
     —, and accepted, 432.
 Liston, Mr., British Minister at Constantinople, 2.
     —, his difficult position, 4.
     —, 443.
 Liverpool, 233, 235, 301.
 Livingston, Mr., his mission to Naples, 121.
 Loftus, General, 226, 231.
 Lombardy, 267, 500.
     to be restored to Austria, 378.
 London, 11.
     plans for defence of, 169, 191, 218, 247, 293, 348, 435, 490, 493, 520, 527.
 Londonderry, 289.
 Long, Mr., Secretary to the Treasury, 275.
 Longford, county of, 286.
     disaffected, 300, 301, 302, 321.
     favourable to Legislative Union, 455.
 Longueville, Viscount, 393.
 Loof, Count de, 241.
 L'Orient, Cape, 330.
 Loughborough, Lord Chancellor of England, 77, 228.
     —, letter from, to Mr. Pitt, 335, 337.
 Lough Earne, 302, 329.
 Loughgilly, 55.
 Lough Swilly, 289, 290, 318, 320, 346.
 Louis XIV., King of France, an anecdote regarding, 461.
 Louis XVIII., of France. See Count de Provence.
 Louisbourg, 486.
 Louth, 321.
 Lubeck, city of, French intrigues in, 17, 54.
 Luc, M. de, his mission to Brunswick, 8, 26.
     —, and instructions from Lord Grenville, 25.
     Professor of Natural History at Göttingen, 26. acts in union with General de Stamford, 14, 25, 37, 43, 45, 65, 98, 114, 115, 122, 185, 186, 189, 191, 208, 220, 241, 242, 395.

Lue, M. de—cont.

his letters to and from Lord Grenville, 26, 29, 43, 56, 63, 65, 68, 71, 80, 86, 96, 109, 119, 122, 123, 125, 127, 129, 142, 185, 198, 201, 204, 208, 213, 218, 240, 254, 321, 393.

— to George III., 10, 14, 21, 48, 50, 160.

his conversation and correspondence with the Duke of Brunswick, 33, 34, 35, 49, 50, 68, 77, 97, 186, 189, 193, 198, 199, 200, 220, 226.

1st Mission of. to Berlin, 35, 36, 66, 68, 71, 72.

—, kept secret at request of Count Haugwitz, 80, 128.

suspected by the Berlin police, 81.

the secrecy complained of by Lord Elgin, 95.

— and disapproved by Lord Grenville, 125.

returns to Brunswick, 89, 96.

enjoys the confidence of Count Haugwitz, 99, 101, 102, 103, 209, 321, 394-396.

his proposed mission to St. Petersburg, 113.

—, renounced, 122.

2nd Mission to Berlin, 114, 115, 116, 122, 125, 130.

letter from, to the Queen of Prussia in favour of General de Stamford, 133.

enjoys the full confidence of George III., 134.

—, who encourages him to defend Christian teaching, 243.

a faithful servant of Queen Charlotte, 162, 164.

returns to London, 160.

account of his reception by the King and Queen of Prussia, 162, 164, 186.

3rd Mission of, to Berlin, 175, 176, 185, 201, 208, 219, 321, 393-397.

distrusts Count Haugwitz, 193, 198, 212, 213, 219.

his visit to the Elector of Saxony at Pillnitz, 241.

brings General de Stamford into friendly relations with Count de Haugwitz, 395.

his confidential discussions with Count Haugwitz concerning the refusal of Prussia to join a coalition against France, 514, 524-527.

Lusatia, 219.

Luxembourg, city of, taken by the French, 7.

Luxembourg, Palais de, 145.

Lynden, Baron, a Dutch emissary at Berlin, 486, 502, 504.

M

Macartney, Lord, 125.

Macauley, Mr., as to his private correspondence, 475.

Maddonald, Sir Archibald, Chief Baron of the Exchequer, 167.

Maddonnell, Mr., a Catholic merchant in Ireland, 455.

Mack, General, commanding the Neapolitan Army. His campaign against the French in Italy, 460, 462. sent prisoner to France, 496.

McIntosh, Mr., letter from to Mr. Grenville, 485.

Macleod, a Scottish Radical, 70.

McNevin, Thomas, M.D., his manifesto in Ireland, 290.

Madame Royale, daughter of Louis XVI. of France, her marriage with the Duke d'Angoulême, 401.

Madras, 125.

Madrid, 421.

Magdebourg, assembling of Prussian troops near, 54.

Magnum, the, ship of war, 346.

Mahé, a French fort in India, 476.

Mahomet Bey, 492.

Mahomet, the Prophet of Islam, 244.

Mahrattas, the, 327.

their alliance with the East India Company, 389-392, 474.

their jealousy, 476.

Maitland, Colonel, his mission to the Red Sea, 413-414.

General, his treaty with Toussaint, 402.

Makaroff, a Russian Admiral, 247.

Malabar coast, 327, 328, 385, 388.

Malet, Sir Charles, "a pompous blockhead," 476.

Mallet or Retel Crecy, a Royalist Agent in France, 41.

Mallow, 328.

Malouet, M., a distinguished French Statesman, 275.

Malta, capture of, by Bonaparte, 250, 260, 333, 339-343.

insurrection against the French in, 348.

treaty concerning between Great Britain, Russia and Naples, 419, 435.

reported capture of, by Lord Nelson, 420, 421.

Maltese, their distrust of the Knights of St. John, 339-343.

Manchester, political disaffection in, 167.

Manesty, Mr., East India Company Resident at Basora, 509.

Manfredonia, 121.

Manheim, capture of, by the French, 6, 8, 119.

- Manor-Hamilton, 302.
 Mansfield, Earl of, 425.
 Mantua, 479, 500.
 Mar, Earl of, the Jacobite Chief, 196.
 Marceau, M., a French Revolutionist, 39.
 March, the Rev. Mr., of St. John College, Cambridge, his defence of English policy against German writers, 281.
 Marcolini, Count de, 241.
     M., Minister of the Cisalpine Republic at Vienna, 482.
 Maret, M., a Minister of the French Directory, 148.
 Margate, 269, 288.
 Marlborough, Duke of, 70.
 Marriott, Sir James, 303.
 Marsa, Scirrocco, Port of, 341.
 Marseilles, 4.
 Marshalsea, prison, the, 287.
 Martial Law, proclaimed throughout Ireland, 222, 223.
 Mason, a Foreign Office messenger, 415, 427, 479.
 Massachusetts, State of, 269.
 Massena, General, commanding the French in Switzerland, 148. ordered to attack the Grisons, 487. reported defeat of, 511, 524.
 Maxwell, Mr., M.P., 473.
 Mayence, 7.
     acquired by France, 27, 54, 182.
     Revolutionary Committee of, 108.
     192, 355, 484.
     Electoral of, refused Prussian protection, 495.
 Mayo, tranquil state of, 265.
     286, 304, 305, 319, 320, 321, 328.
 Meath, end of rebellion in, 265.
     286, 289, 291, 296.
     disaffected, 300, 321, 351, 361.
 Mecklenbourg Strelitz, Duke of, 104.
 Mediterranean Sea, France not mistress of, 5.
     94, 168, 170, 172, 420.
     the British fleet in, 151, 166, 178, 245, 251, 298, 303, 320, 328, 415, 430, 477.
     —, reinforced by Russian ships of war, 332.
     —, destroys French flotilla, 348.
     as to combination of British, Russian and Turkish fleets in, 350, 360.
     British predominance in, established, 434, 500.
     destruction of French power in, 499, 506.
     as to French corsairs in the, 506, 507.
Melampus frigate, the, 289, 346.
 Melville Castle, 338.
 Memel, coveted by Russia, 334.
 Ménard, a French General of Brigade, his address to the Revolutionists of Nion, 111.
 Mengaud Citoyen, a French emissary at Stutgard, 485.
 Mercy, Count de, Austrian statesman and diplomatist, 61, 71.
 Merlin, French Director, his habits and opinions, 38, 39.
     his rising power, 67, 70.
 Messina, 461.
 Metternich, Count de, Austrian minister quits Rastadt, 503.
 Meuse, the River, 350.
 Michaelis, translation of, by the Rev. Mr. Marsh, 281.
 Miconi, capture of French ship Sibylle at, 4.
 Milan, 26, 496.
 Milanese, the, 378.
 Militia, English, regular officers employed to drill, 47, 179.
     as to the employment of, in Ireland, 222, 223, 245, 266, 301, 320, 321, 352, 369, 397, 402, 445.
     —, discontent among the, 410, 412.
     —, Royal message to Parliament concerning, 468.
 Irish, rapine, cruelty, and insubordination of, 264, 266.
     —, cowardice at Castlebar, 292, 297.
     —, disaffected, 301, 445.
     of Malta murder Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, 340.
 Miller, Captain, R.N., 478.
 Minorca, 328.
     capture of, by General Stuart, 419, 420.
     as to sending Russian troops to, 430.
 Minto, Lord, 101.
     his proposal to arm French emigrants, 169, 174.
     a medium of communication between Count d'Artois and Lord Grenville, 362-364, 368.
     correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 362, 368.
 Mitchell, Captain, R.N., 277.
 Mitford, Sir John, Solicitor General, 167, 179.
 Mittan, 401, 403.
 Modena, Duke of, Archduke Ferdinand of Austria, as to indemnifying him in Germany, 307, 309, 312.
 Mohil, 305.
 Moira, Earl of, condemned by the French Directory, 69.
     Speeches of, on the state of Ireland, 120.
 Moldavia, 427.
 Mollendorff, Field Marshal de, 14, 82.
 Monsieur, H.R.H. le Comte d'Artois, "his forlorn state," 269.
 Montagnards, a French political party, 132.
 Montrose, Duke of, 423.
 Moore, Captain, R.N., 289.
     Citizen John, President of Connaught, 305.
     —, ordered for trial, 326.
     General, 296, 302, 305.
 Morea, the, 491, 500.
 Moreau, General, 591.
 Morning Chronicle, the, 460.
 Morning Post, the, as to intelligence in, 419.

Mornington, Countess of, 381, 382.
 —, as to her presentation at Court, 386.
 Earl of, his letters to Lord Grenville, 125, 381, 440, 474.
 —, his accounts of his life and rule as Viceroy of India, 381-392, 440, 474.
 —, his views as to the English policy in Ireland, 385.
 —, his craving for honours, 386, 387.
 Moselle, the river, 6, 7, 149.
 Mountjoy Lord, killed at New Ross, 233.
 Mount Lebanon, 492.
 Mozer, a spy in British pay, 223.
 Mudge, Captain, R.N., 320.
 Muhldorffs, Mr., as to his private correspondence, 475.
 Muir, Mr., a Scottish Radical, 90.
 Mulgrave, Lord, proposed missions of, to Turkey and Italy, 314.
 as to his commanding in Portugal, 421.
 Mullingar, 302, 321.
 Munich, Court of, 8, 528.
 Munster, city of, 256.
 Murad Bey, 491.
 Murphy, Mr., a patriotic feather merchant, 331.
 Murray, W. V., his correspondence with Mr. Rufus King, conveying secret overtures to Lord Granville from Holland, 365-367.
 Musquiz, M., Spanish Minister at Berlin, 502.
 Myers, Major-General, 320.
 Mysore, 385, 474.

N

Naples, critical situation of, 65, 92, 151, 155, 171, 172, 183, 238, 253, 260, 500.
 Defensive alliance of, with Austria, against France, 273, 333.
 Army of, enters Rome, but is beaten by the French, 419, 420, 457.
 Russian aid to, 427.
 conquered by the French, 477.
 abandoned by Austria, 461, 491, 504.
 French retreat from, 519.
 as to advantages to Great Britain from subsidizing, 506, 507.
 Queen of, her letter to Lady Hamilton, 237.
 —, her hatred of the French, 238.
 King of. See Ferdinand IV.
 Napper Tandy, his landing in Ulster, 318.
 and escape from Lough Swilly, 346.
 Nassau, Principality of, 202.

Nelson, Admiral, Sir Horatio, afterwards Lord, 250, 262, 270, 339, 397, 467, 477, 507. his pursuit of the French expedition to Egypt, 284, 285, 286, 288, 328.
 his victory of Aboukir, 328, 331, 332, 385, 443, 475. reported capture of Malta by, 420.
 his portrait for the Sultan of Turkey, 443. letter from, to Sir Sidney Smith, 478. helps the King of Naples, 499.
 Netherlands, the, proposals in regard to the recovery from the French and future possession of, 151, 157, 158, 333, 370, 381.
 Neufchateau, Francois de. See Francois.
 Neufchatel, meeting of French exiles at, 118.
 Neutrality of North Germany, as to maintenance of, 350, 363, 364, 408, 409, 490, 494, 500, 514, 524-527.
 of South Germany, refusal of Prussia to guarantee, 260, 313.
 of Denmark and Sweden, 338, 349, 494-500.
 Neutral powers, seizure of ships belonging to, 181, 415.
 Newfoundland, destruction of British fishery in, 477.
 Newgate Prison, 287.
 New Ross, 226. battle of, 233, 234.
 Newry, 55, 301, 302, 320, 469.
 Newton Bellew, 299.
 Nework, 465, 479.
 New York, British Consulship at, offered to Mr. Arbuthnot, 425.
 Nile, the river, 333, 491.
 French flotilla destroyed at mouth of, 348, 363.
 Nelson's victory at, 443.
 Nion, a city of Pays-de-Vaud, 111.
 Nizam, the, 384.
 alliance of East India Company with, 388-392, 474.
 Norfolk, Duke of, 70.
 dismissed from public employment, 79.
 Normandy, 40.
 Northland, Lord, 393.
 Nugent, General, 301, 302, 320, 345. his alleged strictures on Lord Cornwallis, 412.
 his report of the state of Antrim, 497.

O

O'Connor, Arthur, M.P., a United Irishman, 70, 179, 217, 289.
 his Irish manifesto, 290, 305.
 O'Dowd, Mr., an Irish rebel, hanged, 326.
 Ogilvie, Mr., 263.
 Ogle, G., M.P., 473.

Oglio, the river, 479.
 O'Hara, Chevalier, Knight of Malta, and Russian Minister, 342.
 Orange, Princess of, wife of William V., letter from, to Duke of Brunswick, 13, 17.
   her loss of influence at the Prussian Court, 17.
   thwarted by her husband, 18.
 Orangemen, Irish, 226.
   A "Loyal Association on Jacobin principles," 265. their opposition to the Act of Union, 423, 435, 445, 447, 458.
 Order in Council regarding fugitives from Ireland, 223.
 Order of St. John of Jerusalem, surrender of Malta by, to Bonaparte, 339, 343.
 Hompesch, Grand Master of the, his weakness, 339-343.
 The Czar of Russia, Paul I., assumes the title of Grand Master of, 457.
 Ormonde, Earl of, 393.
   hustled by a Dublin mob, 451.
 Orr, Mr., editor of the Northern Star newspaper at Belfast, 217.
 Osborne, C., M.P., advocates the Act of Union, 450.
   H., M.P., opposition of, to Act of Union, 450.
 Osnabruck, bishopric of, 256.
 Ostend, English attempt on, 185, 218.
 Ouchy, 111.
 Oude, Indian province of, 391, 392.
   regarding the Nabob of, 475.
 Overysse, 350.

P

Paderborn, 256.
 Paine, Thomas, author of the "Rights of Man," 70.
 Pakenham, Captain, M.P., hustled by a Dublin mob, 451.
 Palatinate, the, 7, 482, 487.
 Palermo, 461, 496, 499, 500, 506.
 Panin, Count, Russian envoy at Berlin, his distrust of Count Haugwitz, 124. intrigues against Count Haugwitz, 202.
   his close relations with Lord Elgin, 173, 204.
   —, with the Duke of Brunswick, 189, 214, 221, 243, 364.
   proposes to Count Haugwitz to join a quadruple alliance, 190, 274, 364.
   —, and receives evasive answers, 408-409.
   letter from, to General de Stamford, 191. his loss of influence, 255.

Panin, Count—cont.

correspondence of, with the Czar, 293, 317, 374.
 his interview with the Duke of Brunswick at Potsdam, 322-333, 349, 358.
 confidential overtures to, from Count Haugwitz, 346-349, 364; and their friendly relations, 363, 395, 412, 469.
 Mr. Grenville's friendly relations with, 469, 473, 479, 504, 516, 517, 518. confidential correspondence of, with Count Woronzow, 346-349, 374.
 ordered to renew offers of Russian and English aid to Prussia, for the expulsion of the French from the Netherlands, 423, 464, 481, 487.
 disappointed by the Duke of Brunswick, 481. takes part in a Royalist intrigue at Paris, 489, 495.
 ordered to leave Berlin for Carlsbad, 496. advises a conditional subsidy to Prussia, 501.
 his confidential relations with Count Dietrichstein, 510. wishes to be transferred to St. Petersburg or London, 516.
 embarrassing position of, at Berlin, 523.
 —, and disappointed hopes, 524.
 Paris, secret reports from, to Lord Grenville, 69, 132, 420.
   rumours from, 513.
 Parisi, Marquis, a Maltese noble, 342.
 Park Gate, 233.
 Parliament, the British, as to a probable opinion of, 501.
 Parma, Duke of, his territory desired by France, 503.
 Parnell, Sir John, Chancellor of the Exchequer in Ireland, 406.
   his alleged duplicity, 423.
   dismissed for opposition to the Act of Union, 442, 444, 450, 458, 462, 472, 473.
   hostility of, to Catholics, 462.
 Parry, Mr., a disaffected Englishman, 40.
 Passanan or Panvan Ouglu, his struggle against the Ottoman Sultan, 234, 348.
 Paul I., Emperor of the Russias, 9, 15, 285.
   reproaches Count de Brühl, 19.
   an important factor of a new coalition against France, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 29, 36, 57, 158, 185, 257, 303.
   his friendship for Sir W. Hamilton, 121.
   proposes a defensive league to the King of Prussia, 191, 198, 257.
   sends naval help to England, 234.
   his mediation between Austria and Prussia, 138, 154, 168, 171, 212, 257, 258, 293, 378, 427.
   —, Austria and England, 154, 293, 354, 355, 427.

- Paul I., Emperor of the Russias—cont.
 his character, 247, 272.
 letters from, to Count Woronzow, 293, 415, 419, 427, 444.
 —, to Count Panin, 293.
 — Count Panin to, 317.
 his restless activity and generous spirit, 316.
 packet from General Kocziusko to, 317.
 his aid invoked by the East India Company, 319. welcomes Count Cobentzl at Gatschina, 332.
 covets the port of Memel, 334.
 Count Cobentzl's Mémoire to, 345, 355.
 his treaty with Turkey, 316, 328, 407.
 —, secret articles of, 466.
 asked by the British Government to propose a Quadruple Alliance to Prussia and Austria, 377, 381.
 his answer showing his efforts to accomplish this object, 427, 430.
 pension from, to Louis XVIII. of France, 401.
 a wise choice of ministers by, 406.
 interferes for the protection of Swedish trade, 415.
 his help to Naples, against France, 427, 466, 499.
 as to his treaty with Great Britain and Naples concerning Malta, 419.
 as to his convention with Great Britain for enabling Prussia to drive the French from the Netherlands, 427-428, 482.
 Prussia's evasive answers to the proposal, 487, 490-493, 513, 524-527.
 his instructions to the Russian Minister at Constantinople, 438. insists on the Hanoverian Minister to the Diet at Rotesbon opposing French demands, 444.
 his liking for Sir Charles Whitworth, 448. assumes the office of Grand Master of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, 457. wishes to defend Hamburg, 485, 528.
 march of his troops into Germany, 489, 515, 527.
 confers the order of St. John of Jerusalem on Sir C. Whitworth, 498.
 orders Count Panin to retire from Berlin, 496.
 his resentment with Austria for abandoning Naples, 506.
 asked by Lord Grenville to offer Corfu to Great Britain, 513.
 appoints Souvaroff to command the allied troops in Italy, 496, 513.
 as to his sending troops to Holland, 515.
 proposes to defend Hamburg against France, 517, 519, 522.
 Pays-de-Vaud. French aggression in, 110, 111, 112, 144.
- Pelham, T., asked to go to Ireland as Chief Secretary to Lord Cornwallis, 235, 236, 345.
 in bad odour in Ireland, 246, 353.
 Perge, M. de, his mission to England, 483.
 Perim, isle of, 414.
 Persia, 193, 243.
 Gulf of, 4.
 Russian influence in, 327.
 Pfullendorf, 528.
 Philanthropic Society, a Royalist Association in France, 119.
 Philippines, the proposed cession of, to France, 410.
 Philipsbourg, 119.
 Piohegru, General, 148.
 at Berlin, 489.
 Picot de Mores Chevalier, a Knight of Malta, 341.
 Piedmont, occupied by the French, 272.
 Pilmitz, 241.
 Pinto, Chevalier de, Portuguese Minister in London, 421.
 Pishwah, the, a Chief of the Mahrattas, his alliance with the East India Company, 389-392.
 Pitt, General Sir William, commanding the forces in Ireland, 222.
 William, 31, 95, 100, 169, 184, 263, 269, 278, 279, 335, 359, 374, 377, 409, 437, 445.
 —, his plan of subsidizing Prussia, 47.
 —, proposes to punish Fox for a speech at the Whig Club, 187.
 —, correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 150, 152, 166, 187, 229, 236, 245, 273, 274, 279, 283, 314, 348, 457, 468.
 —, letter from Mr. Dundas to, 224.
 —, his duel with Mr. Tierney, 222, 385.
 —, can only allow £2,000,000 in foreign subsidies for 1799, 338, 355.
 his conversations with Lord Clare in regard to Legislative Union with Ireland, 344.
 —, — with Lord Grenville, in regard to Lord Carysfort's English peerage, 436.
 —, Lord Carhampton's alleged defiance of, 441.
 —, letter of Marquis of Buckingham to, 452.
 —, his failing health, 476.
 —, his speech on the question of Legislative Union, 456, 460, 461, 469, 471.
 —, —, and determination to carry the measure, 458, 462.
 —, reserves 2½ millions for foreign subsidies in 1799, 505.
 —, unwilling to subsidize the King of the two Sicilies, 506.
 Plunkett, Major, a rebel leader in Roscommon, 301, 330.

- Plunket, Mr. (afterwards Lord), defends the legislative independence of Ireland, 367.
- Poland, 113, 255.
jealousies of Austria and Prussia in regard to, 407.
- Pole, Wellesley, M.P., opposed to Legislative Union, 447.
- Polypard, M., exiled French deputy, 118.
- Pondicherry, expulsion of Frenchmen from, 475, 476.
- Ponsonby, George, M.P., a leader of the Irish Whigs, his opposition to the Act of Union, 393, 397, 450, 462, 469.
negotiates with the Catholic leaders, 455, 458, 459, 462, 469.
- Ponsonby, William, M.P., a leader of the Irish Whigs, his opposition to Legislative Union, 454.
- Pope Pius VI., 92.
deprived of Rome by the French, 429.
- Portalis, M., an exiled French deputy, 118.
- Porte, the Sublime, 319, 334, 407, 438, 519.
- Portland, Duke of, Secretary of State for the Home Department, 166, 184, 195, 230, 245, 278, 291, 345, 353, 402, 404, 422, 458.
correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 438.
- Portsmouth, 233.
- Portugal, 167.
defence of, by Great Britain, 228, 245, 275, 297, 338, 419, 421.
as to trade of, with India, 381, 410.
as to a cession of its Colonial territory, 410.
project of sending Russian troops to, 430.
- Portumna, 296.
- Potemkin, Prince, 327.
- Potzdam, 47, 201, 211, 322, 333.
- Poussielgue, le Sieur, 340.
- Powerscourt, Viscount, his speech against the Act of Union, in the Irish House of Lords, 449.
- Praire, M., an exiled French deputy, 118.
- Précy, Count de, a French Royalist leader, 70, 118.
- Pretender, the old, attainer of, 196.
- Prevost or Desgrigny, M. l'Abbé, 41.
- Propagandism Revolutionary, in Switzerland, 39, 110, 111, 255.
in England, 40, 167.
in Germany, 108, 110, 137, 255, 281, 488.
- Proserpine*, the, English frigate, wrecked, 465-479.
- Protestant ascendancy in Ireland, 245.
to be strengthened by Legislative Union with England, 322, 393, 399.
but opposed to the Act of Union, 441, 445, 462, 469.
- Provence, Count de (afterwards Louis XVIII.), secret report to, 30.
expelled from Brunswick, 37.
agents of, in Paris, 41.
claims a pension from George III., 401. manifesto of, 483.
- Prussia, distrust of Austria in, 26, 44, 45, 57, 73, 138, 189, 259, 272, 300, 379.
to have a British subsidy to defend Northern Germany, 57, 59, 82.
state of society in Berlin, 128.
perfidious manœuvres of, at Rastadt, 153, 183.
—, at Paris, 154, 183.
to be compensated for joining a coalition, at the expense of France, 157, 333, 377-381, 428.
treaty of alliance with, proposed by France, 202, 396.
people of, generally adverse to war with France, 254.
a safe military frontier for, 256.
alliance of, with Austria, proposed by Russia, 308.
jealous of Austrian aggrandizement, 309, 310, 358, 364, 377.
offers to mediate between France and Austria, 318.
offered subsidies from Great Britain, and military aid from Russia, for driving the French from Holland, 347, 358, 428, 456, 501, 514, 520.
as to its joining the Triple Alliance against France, 350, 362-364, 377-381, 408, 409, 418, 427-430, 464, 485, 487, 490.
unpopularity of England in, 396.
ambiguous policy of, 418, 484.
Austrian jealousy of, 521.
probable advantage to, from war, 522.
exposition by Count Haugwitz of its policy in regard to France, 524-527.
Frederick William III., King of, his conversations with General de Stamford, 135-139, 201, 407.
—, willing to renounce an indemnity for loss of Cleves, 136.
—, his good intentions, 193, 347.
—, supports the claims of the Prince of Orange against Austria, 136.
—, governed by Count Haugwitz, 163, 193, 211, 394-396, 412.
—, M. de Luc's interview with, 164.
—, his conferences with Duke of Brunswick, 362-364, 464.
—, his relations with Prince Badzivil, 407, 412.
—, will not join a coalition against France, 408-409, 493.
—, not a strong character, 494.
—, adheres to a defensive policy, 490, 493, 514, 521.
—, —, but asks for a subsidy from England, 521.
- Princess Louise of, wife of Prince Badzivil, 407.

Prussia—cont.

- Prince Henry of, his French partialities. 15, 34, 97, 136, 200, 363, 394-397.
 —, memorial of, on behalf of France, 349, 363.
 —, demands the dismissal of Count de Haugwitz, 394, 409, 412.
 Public Records, shameful state of the, 278.
 Puisaye, Count de, leader of the Breton insurgents, 207.

Q

- Quadruple Alliance, to be formed in concert with Russia, against France, 29, 57, 59, 83, 87, 155, 379-383.
 salutary, but cannot be divulged without danger, 91.
 peaceful inclination of Prussia and its distrust of Austria, the chief obstacle to, 124, 129, 175, 194, 212, 227, 379.
 advocated by the Duke of Brunswick and General de Stamford, 136, 155, 176, 350, 363.
 Russian proposal to Prussia in regard to a, 191, 194.
 hindered by the ambiguous policy of Austria, 205, 211, 350.
 conference in regard to, at Berlin, 214, 218, 219, 257.
 broken off, 267, 274, 277.
 conditions of, as laid down by Duke of Brunswick, 350.
 again advocated by Lord Grenville, 358.
 Paul, Emperor of Russia, requested by Lord Grenville to submit the basis and objects of, for acceptance by Austria and Prussia, 379.
 Mr. Grenville's mission to Berlin in furtherance of, 392, 415, 420, 456.
 —, evasive replies of King of Prussia, 408, 409.
 Emperor Paul's practical agreement with Lord Grenville's proposal, 427-430, 485-491.
 Mr. Dundas views in regard to, 433-435.
 Prussia refuses to accede to, if offensive, 490, 493, 524-527.

R

- Racornier, Mr., a United Irishman, 70.
 Ramé, a Syrian village, 492.
 Ransonet, M., Austrian agent, 120, 178, 183.
 his mission to London, 188, 203, 248.
 Raper, Captain, R.N., 419, 427.

- Rastadt, congress of, 25, 26, 27, 32, 38, 39, 54, 83, 90, 153, 307, 381.
 Envoy of Brunswick to, 52, 201, 487.
 Ultimatum of the French at, 116.
 confidential accounts from, 191, 192, 200.
 Bernadotte at, 191.
 disaccord of Austria and Prussia at, 211, 257, 309.
 Prussian note to the French Ministers at, 226, 257.
 as to French demands at, 429, 489.
 notes addressed to, by the French Government, concerning the entrance of Russian troops in, to Germany, 444.
 —, followed by a declaration of war, 487, 490.
 Austrian proposal to Prussia to break it up, 481.
 —, replied to, 487.
 Austrian Ministers leave, 503.
 Ratisbon, Diet of the Empire at, 444.
 Ratzivill, Prince de, his temporary disgrace at the Prussian Court, 394, 407.
 accuses Count de Haugwitz, 412.
 Ravenna, 502.
 Raymond, Captain, A.D.C., alleged talk of, 454, 455.
 Razamoukoi, Count de, Russian Minister at Vienna, 253, 293, 331, 378. letter from, to Count Woronzow, 332.
 his recall and restoration through Austrian influence, 511.
 Reeke or Reck, Baron de, Prussian Minister of Justice, his Anti-French views, 19, 162. opposed to Count Haugwitz, 163, 202.
 Reeke or Reck, Baron de, Chamberlain of the King of Prussia, 75, 409.
 his mission to Vienna, 84, 162, 166.
 confers with General de Stamford, 164, 166, 186, 187.
 opposition of, to Haugwitz, 202, 205, 242.
 his relations with the Duke of Brunswick, 205, 214.
 Rede, Baron, 489.
 Red Sea, the, trade through, from India, destroyed by Albuquerque, 4.
 193, 385, 420, 496.
 Colonel Maitland's mission to, 413-414.
 Reggio, 461.
 Regnault de St. Jean d'Angély, ex-knight of Malta, and Commissary of France, 342.
 Reinaud, Mr., 509.
 complaints of Mr. Harford Jones, of Bagdad, 510.
 Repnin Marshall, Prince de, Russian envoy at Berlin, 212, 274, 277.
 desires an interview with the Duke of Brunswick, 220.
 distrusts the policy of Austria, 255.
 his conferences with General de Stamford, 256, 258.
 his project of a convention, and Prussian observations thereon, 308.
 additional discussion on the subject, 311.
 Republic, the Dutch. See Holland.

- Retel Crecy, called Mallet, a Royalist agent in France, 41.
- Reuss, Prince de, Austrian envoy at Berlin, 274, 309.
- his distrust of Count Haugwitz, 124, 141.
- his relations with General de Stamford, 141, 142, 166, 202, 215, 259.
- with Lord Elgin, 173.
- intrigues against Haugwitz, 202.
- insufficient instructions of, 205, 206.
- receives new instructions from Count Cobentzl, 294.
- his proposals to Prussia, 306.
- and the reply, 306.
- death of, 480.
- Reverchon, a French Minister, 39, 146, 147.
- Rewbel, French Director. his habits and opinions, 38, 39, 348.
- his quarrel with Bonaparte, 133.
- his conversation with Madame de Rochechouart, 282.
- Rhine, the. France claims the left bank of, 21, 73, 74, 84, 116.
- also islands, and forts on right bank of, 192, 257.
- cession not stipulated by treaty of Campo Formio, 182.
- army of, 149.
- as to military operations on right bank of, 485, 487, 507, 521.
- Rhodes, island of, 414, 476, 480.
- Richard I., Ceur de Lion, his imprisonment, 62.
- Richéry, Admiral, 474.
- destroys British fisheries, 477.
- Richmond, Surrey, 267, 284, 285, 316, 331, 337, 338, 339, 345, 359, 374, 377, 414.
- Duke of, 273.
- Rityebüttel, 160.
- Roberts, Lieutenant-Colonel, his military operations at Hyderabad, 391, 392.
- Robespierre, Maximilian, 40, 61.
- Robust*, the, ship of war, 346.
- Rochechouart, la Comtesse de, recommended by Count Starhemberg to Lord Grenville, 60, 270.
- her devotion to Queen Marie Antoinette, 61.
- undertakes to furnish secret intelligence from Paris, 62, 169, 270.
- death of her son, 66.
- her conversation with M. de Talleyrand, 270-272.
- and with M. Rewbel, 282.
- Lord Grenville's memorandum in regard to, 282.
- Mr. Wickham's distrust of, 303.
- Rocheotte dit Rozette, a Royalist agent in France, 41.
- Rochelle, la, 329.
- Rochfort, Mr., M.P., 473.
- Rolle, Baron de, his Swiss regiment, 85, 86, 100, 101.
- Roman Republic, 238.
- Rome, 121.
- French conquest of, 156, 171.
- Neapolitan invasion of, 419, 429, 460.
- Rosecommon, county of, 141, 301, 330.
- Roscrea, 300.
- Rosenkrantz, Baron de, Danish minister at Berlin, his close relations with Lord Elgin, 174.
- Rosenssiel or Rosenstiele, citizen, French Secretary at Rastadt, 192, 201.
- Ross, General, Surveyor-General of Ordnance, 317.
- Rostopchin, Count, a Russian Minister, 406.
- Roumentzow, a Russian Marshal, 338, 375.
- Rowan, Hamilton, a United Irishman, 70.
- Rowley, Mr., M.P., 473.
- Royalists of France, 19-20ths of the population, 150.
- British expenditure in support of, 207.
- the most useful allies of Great Britain, 368, 401.
- Royer, Chevalier, Commander of Order of St. John, 343.
- Ruchel, a Prussian General, 27.
- Russell, English Minister of Marine, in a Republican Government, 70.
- Russia, Sultan Selim's dread of, 3, 17, 35, 36.
- its co-operation against France, a necessary step to that of Austria and Prussia, 57, 113, 378.
- Prussia declines its proposal for an alliance, 194, 220.
- sends naval help to England, 234.
- German literature popular in, 280.
- treaty between England and, for war against France, 283, 419.
- as to British Subsidies to, in 1799, 283, 297, 338, 354, 355, 505.
- a convention between Austria and Prussia proposed by, and Prussian observations thereon, 308.
- , additional discussion on same subject, 311, 379-383.
- alliance of, with Turkey, 316, 328, 334.
- influence of, in Persia, 327.
- troops from, wanted for the East India Company, 328.
- , for British objects in Europe, 435.
- reinforces British Navy and Austrian Army, 332, 334.
- the natural ally of Great Britain, 434.
- Russian troops to be employed during 1799 in Switzerland rather than on the lower Rhine, 484.
- , and in Hamburg, 517.
- Paul I., Emperor of. See Paul I.
- Catherine II., Empress of. See Catherine.
- Grand Duke Constantine of, 513.
- Ruxton, Mr., M.P., 473.
- Ryan, Mr., a Dublin police officer, 216.

S

St. Barbe, Captain, 67.

St. Domingo, 184.

English treaty with Toussaint, Chief of, 402.

as to intercourse of the United States with, 437.

St. Helena, 410.

St. Helens, Lord, a British diplomatist, 427.

St. James's, Court of, 87, 364.

Cabinet of, 347.

St. John of Jerusalem, Order of: surrender of Malta by, 339-343.

Paul I., of Russia, assumes the office of Grand Master of, 457.

conferred on Sir C. Whitworth, but George III. disapproves, 498.

St. John, Mr. St. Andrew. M.P., 217.

St. Malo, 218.

St. Marcou, Isles of, 39, 207.

St. Petersburg, 39, 43, 84, 113, 121, 130, 156, 185, 247, 261, 274, 293, 319, 334, 382, 415, 419, 427, 490, 520, 527.

St. Thomas the Apostle, his incredulity, 284.

St. Vincent, Admiral the Earl of, 181-182. his operations in the Mediterranean, 237, 303, 320, 385, 477, 478, 499.

Salerno, 461.

Salm, Prince de, 496.

Sandys, Major, Provost Marshal (acting) of Ireland, 374.

Sardinia, peace between France and, 92.

French conquest of, 420, 429, 464.

Saurin, Mr., an Irish lawyer, 216.

Savoy, as to expulsion of the French from, 381.

Saxony, 21, 37, 82, 192, 275.

Frederick Augustus III., Elector of. his conversation with M. de Luc, 241.

Schaffhausen, 513.

Schawenberg, General, 416.

Scheld, the, quarrel about the opening of, 371.

Schérer, General, French Minister of War, 523.

Schulenburg Rehnert, Count. Prussian Minister of State. recalled to Court, 14.

his rivalry with Count de Haugwitz, 409, 412, 481.

a saying of, 481.

Sclavonia, 284.

Scotland, designs of the French Directory in regard to, 69.

413, 465.

Scott, Mr. David, of the East India Company, 413.

Sir John, English Attorney-General, 167, 179, 181.

Sir William, 303.

Secret Committee, East India Company, Lord Mornington's correspondence with, 387-392.

Secret Intelligence, as to the procuring of, at Hamburg, 208, 215, 230, 275. sent from France, by Madame de Rochechouart, 169, 270, 282.

sent from Germany to Count d'Artois, 362-364.

Secret Service Fund, as to the accounts of, 514.

Secularizations in Germany, 116, 136.

a cause of dissension between Austria and Prussia, 165, 166, 172, 310, 312.

advocated at Berlin by M. Siéyès, 242. "A French Snare," 256.

Selim III., Sultan of Turkey, his character and military plans, 2, 3, 4, 5.

letter from, to Tippoo, of Mysore, 476. suggested by Lord Grenville that he should offer Corfu to Great Britain, 513.

Seltze, conferences at, 242, 273.

Serent, Duke de, confidential Minister of Count d'Artois, letters from, to Lord Minto, 363, 368.

Serhampore, 476.

Seringapatam, treaty of, 386.

Serrurier, General, a friend of Bonaparte, 41.

Seymour, Major Lord Henry, 297, 369, 412.

Shakespeare, 378.

Shannon, the Earl of, 392.

his attitude towards the Act of Union, 441.

Shannon, the river, 286, 320.

Sharpe, Mr., an English Radical, 70.

Shaw, a Foreign Office messenger, 415, 427, 468, 492.

Sheares, Messrs., leaders of the United Irishmen, their proclamation, 216.

Shepherd, R., letter from, to Lord Grenville, on Irish affairs, 139.

Sheridan, Richard Brinsley, M.P., his speech against Legislative Union with Ireland, 461.

Shore, Sir John, Governor-General of India, 327.

bad effects of his rule in India, 383.

Siberia, 317.

Sibylle, a French ship, captured at Miconi, 4.

Sicilies, the two, Kingdom of, defended by Russia, 427.

as to the necessity of preserving from the French, 506-507.

King of. See Ferdinand IV.

Sicily, 496.

people of, faithful to their King, 499.

endangered by the French conquest of Naples, 507.

- Siéyès, citizen. French Minister to Berlin, 242. instructions to, 253, 504, 513. intrigues of, 267, 272, 276. receives a letter from Kocziusko for the Czar, 317.
 letter from, to Count Haugwitz, 318. his influence with Prince Henry of Prussia, 363, 409.
 his vigilance, 489.
- Siks, the, 327.
- Silesia, Prussian troops assembled in, 54.
 Count Haugwitz's estates in, 97, 219.
- Simple (Sempill, Sempell), Mr., a Scottish Radical, 70.
- Sinbad the Sailor, the adventures of, 457.
- Sinclair, Mr., a Scottish Radical, 70.
- Sion, Swiss town of, 70.
- Sitta, Chevalier, a Knight of Malta, 457.
- Sligo, Bay of, 320.
 tranquil state of, 265, 288.
 301, 302, 304, 330.
- Small arms, deficiency of, in Great Britain, 317.
- Smith, Commodore Sir Sidney, correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 1, 2, 437, 443, 476, 480, 491.
 —, his views as to the importance of counteracting French influence in Turkey, 3, 4, 5.
 —, his relations with the French Royalist party, 207.
 —, his mission to aid the Turks, 303, 320, 338, 437, 443, 476-478, 480, 496.
 —, his good relations at Constantinople with the Russian Minister and the Sultan, 438.
 —, letter from Lord Nelson to, 478.
- Spencer, British Secretary of Legation in Turkey, on the conflict of French and English influence at Constantinople, 3, 337.
 —, his obscure despatches, 336.
 —, painful position of, at Constantinople, 443, 463, 478.
 —, letters from, to Lord Grenville, 463, 507.
 —, marriage of, 464.
 —, his inadequate pay and allowances, 508-509.
 William, M.P., his pamphlet in favour of Legislative Union, 471.
- Smyrna, 477.
- Snuff-box, a, withheld from Count de Cobentzl, 306.
- Sombreuil, Count de, Royalist leader, shot in Brittany, 369.
- Sommers, Mr., an Irish agent of the Count de Provence, 41.
- Sourazen, a French General, captured at Ballinamuck, 304.
- Spain, 38, 39, 69, 507.
 English project of capturing her Navy, 80.
 makes peace with France, 92, 338.
 Charles IV., King of, 70.
- Spencer, Earl, 1st Lord of the Admiralty, 5, 166, 269, 336, 337, 345, 477, 478, 508.
 his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 166, 178, 181, 185, 277, 303, 320, 332.
- Spengler, Lieutenant, a Dutch naval officer, 464.
- Stadholderate, the Dutch, Prince of Orange's claims to, upheld by Lord Grenville, 365, 381.
- Stamford, General de, confidential adviser of the Duke of Brunswick, 10, 11, 12, 13, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 26, 30, 31, 34, 43, 104, 122, 186, 364.
 as to his co-operation with M. de Luc, 14, 25, 37, 43, 45, 65, 98, 104, 117, 122, 142, 185, 191, 212, 241, 254, 395. his plan of garrisoning Hambourg, 16. his relations with the Orange family, 17, 18, 34, 115, 175, 186, 219.
 as to his mission to Vienna on behalf of Prince of Orange, 36, 46, 58, 104, 105, 113, 116, 122, 139, 142, 166, 175, 177, 217, 242.
 his mission to Berlin, 57, 64, 65, 69, 77 (stopped by illness, 80), 99, 104, 122, 126, 130, 161, 166.
 his judgment as to Count Haugwitz, 102. his conferences with the King of Prussia, 133-139, 165, 201.
 confers with Baron de Reek, 164, 209.
 his second mission to Berlin, 177, 186, 201, 202, 205. discouragement of, 185, 256, 258.
 his interviews with Count de Haugwitz, 209.
 — and their friendly relations, 395, 412, 418, 464.
 letter to, from Count Panin, 191.
 his failing health, 242.
 return from Vienna to Berlin, 254-261.
 as to his conversations with Baron Thugut, 256.
 confers with Prince de Repnin, 256, 257.
 conversations of, with the King of Prussia, 258, 259, 260, 407.
 Envoy of Prince of Orange to the Court of Prussia, 407.
 his reports from Berlin to the Prince of Orange, 407, 411, 418, 446.
 dissatisfied with the Duke of Brunswick, 464, 481.
 takes part in the intrigues of French Royalists, 489, 495. works in concert with Mr. Grenville, 502.
 his plan of employing Russian troops in Germany, 512, 515.
 letters from, to the Duke, 514, 520.
 draws up a plan of military operations for Mr. Grenville, 520.
- Stanhope, Earl, 70.
- Staray, an Austrian General, 512.

Starhemberg, Countess de, 61.

Count de, Austrian Minister in London, his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 54, 60, 66, 71, 91, 99, 120, 131, 142, 150-159, 167, 168, 170-172, 178, 182, 187, 188, 203, 248, 250, 261, 262, 303, 352, 370, 376, 378, 460, 483, 484.

—, recommends Madame de Rochechouart to Lord Grenville as a French spy, 60.

—, his profession of faith, 92.

—, his sentiments in regard to England, Austria and France, 91-95, 261.

—, instructions from Baron Thugut to, 170.

—, —, and from Count Cobentzl, 293, 334, 336, 337, 352, 354.

—, dissatisfied with Count Cobentzl, 261, 270, 337, 352.

—, concerts with Lord Grenville the means of raising Belgium against the French, 370, 376, 483.

—, professed devotion of, to Lord Grenville, 373, 483.

—, his grief at the success of the French, 484.

Stavern, 350.

Steele, Thomas, Secretary of the Treasury, suggested for the Irish Chief Secretaryship, 460, 469.

Steigner or Steiger, M. Advoyer de Berne, 70, 78.

his narrow escape from death, 144.

invited to Berlin, 243, 259.

Steinberg, Baron de, Hanoverian Minister, his mission to Berlin, 24, 48, 49, 54, 106, 193, 261.

Stewart, Mr., M.P., Solicitor-General for Ireland, 471.

Stockach, battle of, 523.

Stockholm, 39, 415.

Stokes, Mr., an Indian official, 386.

Story, Admiral, in command of the Dutch fleet, 504.

Stowe, country seat of Lord Buckingham, 217.

Strasburg, 484.

panic at, 513.

Stuart, General, 86, 101.

captures Minorea, 419, 421.

Stuttgart, 74, 108, 109, 485.

Suabia, Circle of, 79.

French designs on, 119, 255, 502, 503.

Subsidies, British (1799), to be given to Russia, 233, 297, 338, 354, 355, 505.

—, to Switzerland, 78, 297, 338, 355, 505.

—, to Portugal, 274, 297, 338, 355.

—, to Prussia, 82, 99, 347, 363, 428, 456, 521.

—, to Sweden, 277.

—, to Austria, 298, 354, 355.

—, — not given, 523.

—, to Holland, 456.

—, to Naples, 506, 507.

—, amount of, to allies (in 1799), 338, 354, 355, 358.

Suez, Isthmus of, 193, 413, 421.

Sullivan, Mr., Chairman of the East India Company, 319.

Sun, the, newspaper, burned by order of the Irish House of Commons, 470.

Surinam, possession of, desirable, 513.

Suwarrow or Souvaroff, Marshal, appointed to command the allied army in Italy, 496, 513.

will not submit to the dilatory plans of Vienna, 500.

Swan, Mr. Justice, 331.

Sweden, Gustavus IV., King of, 277, 415.

Sweden, relations of, with England, 76, 155, 277, 338, 349, 415.

German literature, popular in, 281.

Jacobinism in, 349.

to be included in the King of Prussia's defensive concert, 494.

Swiss officers, unemployed, in England, 263.

Switzerland, French intervention in, 24, 26, 78, 100, 110, 143, 152, 209, 243, 253, 255, 267, 272, 513.

Jacobin propaganda in, 39, 110, 111, 112, 343.

British subsidy for, 297, 338, 505.

independence of, a main object of war with France, 298, 336, 350, 379, 420, 435, 484.

as to employing a Russian army in, 484-485, 505.

proposal of Baron de Gross to raise troops in, 495, 506.

Sylvester, a messenger, 77.

T

Tachereau, citizen, brother-in-law of Robespierre, 40.

Talbot, British Minister in Switzerland, 78.

Secretary of Legation at St. Petersburg, 95.

despatches from, 117, 119, 513.

Tale of a Tub, the, by Dean Swift, 470.

Talleyrand, M. de, French Minister for Foreign Affairs, 39, 133.

his communications to Mr. Gerry, 269, 272, 288.

—, and conversations with Madame de Rochechouart, 270-272, 282.

his secret letter to Louis XVIII, 272.

his Jacobinism, 349.

Tallien, M., a French Revolutionist, 38.

intercepted letters of, 337.

Tamara, M., Russian envoy to Constantinople, 336, 337.

signs a treaty with the Porte, 407.

arrogant pretensions of, 437.

Tandy, Napper, a United Irishman, 70, 318, 346.

Tarletan, General, 70.

- Taxation, heavy, in England, 285.
- Taylor, Captain Herbert, Private Secretary of Lord Cornwallis, 301. letter from, to Mr. Wickham, 320.
returns to England, 451.
- Taylor, General, 292, 297, 301.
- Teeling, Bartholomew, an Irish rebel leader, hanged, 321, 326.
- Teignmouth, Lord, Governor General of India, his proceedings in regard to Oude, 475. See also Shore, Sir John.
- Temple, the, 305.
- Texel, the, 218, 350.
- Thauvenay, M. de, a French refugee, 208, 215.
- Thebes, 243, 244.
- Thelwall, Mr., an English Radical, 70.
- Thessalonica, 284.
- Thistle, Order of the, Lord Elgin applies for the, 425.
- Thugut, Baron de, Imperial Chancellor, 120, 167, 248.
his conferences with Count Keller, 154. instructions from to Count Starhemberg, 170, 187, 250.
wishes to renew war with France in concert with Great Britain, 183, 202, 242, 250, 253, 271, 274.
his obstinacy and reticence, 188, 250, 332, 333, 335, 511. distrusted at Berlin, 198, 255.
moved up from Foreign Office, 202, 206, 218, 222.
letter from Lord Grenville to, 222. and reply, 252.
his conversation with M. de Stamford, 256.
report from, concerning Bonaparte, 414.
a friend of General Mack, 462.
his selfish policy, 464, 466, 479, 523.
—, thwarted by Naples, 479, 506.
his proposal to the Prussian Court, to break up the Conference at Rastadt, 481.
—, and Prussian reply, 487.
his ascendancy over Sir Morton Eden, 512, 515.
complains of Prussia, 515.
letter from, to Mr. Grenville, as to Count Dietrichstein's mission, 516, 523. will not ratify an Austrian Convention with England, 523.
- Thuisy, Charles de, Knight of Malta, his account of the taking of Malta by Bonaparte, 339.
- Tierney, Mr. M.P., 70.
his duel with Mr. Pitt, 222, 335.
- Tiger*, the, Sir Sidney Smith's ship, 333, 338, 437, 443, 476, 491, 509.
- Tipperary, 216.
- Tippoo, Sultan of Mysore, allied with France, 327, 355, 387-392.
"Beast of the Jungle," 474.
Lord Mornington's campaign against, 475, 476.
Sultan Selim's letter to, 476.
- Tithes, unjust system of, in Ireland, 323, 393, 399.
- Tivoli, 460.
- Tobercarry, 302.
- Tollius, M., 19.
Envoy of Prince of Orange at Rastadt, 32.
- Tone, Matthew, trial of, 321.
—, hanged, 329.
—, letter from, to a friend, 329.
Theobald Wolfe, capture of, 346.
—, trial of, by Court Martial, 369.
—, suicide of, 373, 374, 375.
- Tooke, the Revd. Horne, an English Radical, 70.
- Tophana*, an English ship of war, 438.
- Töplitz, Baths of, 262.
- Toulon, French expedition from, to Egypt, 178, 185, 229, 243, 245, 477.
- Tonissaint, de l'Ouverture, negro ruler of St. Domingo, English treaty with, 402.
- Touzard, Chevalier, Commander of Malta, 343.
- Trade, Board of, to be established in Ireland, 351. increase of British Trade in the Mediterranean and Levant, 360.
of Denmark, Portugal, and America with India, 383, 410.
Swedish, stopped by British squadrons, 415.
- Tranquebar, 475, 476.
- Trautmansdorff, M. de, his tyranny in the Austrian Netherlands, 371.
- Treilhard, Citizen, French envoy at Rastadt, 183, 192, 201.
- Trench, Major General, 320, 321.
his cruelty in Mayo, 328.
- Treves, Elector of, 199.
Electorate of, bailiwicks in claimed by House of Orange, 308, 310, 312.
- Trieste, 121, 343.
- Trim, 304.
- Trimouille, M. de la, a Royalist Chief, 41.
- Trinidad, 513.
- Triple alliance. See Alliance.
- Triumverat*, three victorious Directors in Paris, 145, 147.
- Troubridge, Captain, R.N., 477, 480, 491.
- Trouvé Citoyen, a French emissary at Stuttgart, 485.
antecedents of, 486.
- Troy, Archbishop of Dublin (Catholic), his negotiations with the Irish Government, 452, 453.
- Trugnet, a French Admiral, 70.
- Tuam, 291, 297, 300.
- Tullamore, 286, 304.
- Tunbridge Wells, 261, 262.
- Turin, 178.
citadel of, occupied by the French, 267.
- Turkey Company, the, 383, 443.

Turkey, Selim III., Sultan of, 2, 3, 5.
 Sir Sidney Smith selected to aid, with General Koehler, 303, 338, 443. alliance of, with Russia, 316, 328,
 407, 466.
 declares war against France, 333, 336,
 338.
 Koehler's mission to, opposed by the Duke of York, 356-358.
 English and Russian alliance with, a blow to France, 360.
 the legitimate successor of the Caliphs,
 415. his good relations with Sir Sidney
 Smith, 438, 443.
 his letter to Tippoo of Mysore, 476.
 Turks, Ottoman, brave but ignorant in war, 338.
 war of, with Joseph II. of Austria, 371.
 Tuscany, Grand Duke of, 261. alleged mediation of, between Austria and France, 478.
 France declares war against, 504.
 Tyrol, the, 9, 170, 528.

U

Udine, treaty of, 21, 25.
 Union Legislative of Great Britain and Ireland, historical researches in furtherance of, 278.
 as to the enactment of, 305.
 Lord Buckingham's views as to the means of carrying, 322-326, 351, 393, 397, 404-406, 422, 442.
 Lord Clare's conversation with Mr.
 Pitt regarding, 344.
 Protestant ascendancy to be confirmed by, 322, 393, 399.
 Lord Mornington's advice as to, 385.
 as to tariffs, revenues and National debt under, 399, 405, 421.
 hostility of Irish lawyers to, 367, 393, 397, 405, 411, 422. opposition to, in Dublin, 411, 423, 451, 455.
 — as to details of, for Lord Castlereagh's guidance, 416.
 Cabinet note as to the election of Irish peers under, 417.
 — as to Irish taxation under, 420.
 — as to preliminary proceedings regarding, 432.
 plan of, proposed in November 1798,
 397-400, 435.
 Mr. Cooke's pamphlet for, 404.
 Lord Cornwallis's policy in regard to,
 405.

Union Legislative of Great Britain and
 Ireland—cont.

First scheme of the British Cabinet concerning, 435, 440
 —, beaten, 449-452.
 —, Pitt and English Cabinet determined to persevere with, 458, 461, 462, 467.
 —, views thereon, of an Irish official, 432.
 hostility of Irish Orangemen to, 423, 435, 440, 441, 442, 462.
 — of Protestant ascendancy to, 441, 462.
 attitude of Irish Catholics towards,
 397, 405, 423, 435, 441, 443, 445,
 455, 458, 459, 462, 470.
 — of Irish boroughmongers, 444, 445, 459.
 — of Protestant dissenters, 447.
 bribery in connexion with, 436.
 debates on, in the Irish Parliament,
 449-452, 454.
 Pitt's speech for, 456, 460, 461.
 —, effect of this speech in Dublin, 469.
 —, the Irish Speaker's opinion of it,
 471.
 Sheridan's speech against, 461.
 Mr. Cooke's views and projects in regard to, 441, 442, 463.
 Mr. William Smith's pamphlet for, 471.

United Irishmen, the, 225.

Universities, German, democratic spirit in, 281.

Ursel, Duke d', history, character, and situation of, 370-373.

letter to, from Count Starhemberg, 376.

Duchess of, 370, 372.

V

Valais, the, 70.

Vandeleur, Mr., member of the Irish
 House of Commons, 216.

Vandenwyver, a Revolutionary Agent, 40.

Vanbois, General, Governor of Malta, his courtesy towards the dispossessed knights, 343.

Vauvilliers, M., an exiled French Deputy,
 118.

Veletri, 460.

Venice, cession of, to Austria, 27.

148, 216.

a danger to Austria, 271.

as to French designs on, 503.

Verona, 148.

Verteuil, M. de, a French refugee, 208.

"a doubtful character," 215, 295.

Vevay, 111.

Vienna, 7, 248.

war unpopular at, 274, 316, 332, 333, 377, 378, 481, 504, 506.

Court of, 8, 23, 28, 30, 35, 43, 48, 73, 74, 83, 121.

acquires Venice, 27.

mission of General de Stamford to, 36, 104, 113, 175, 241.

its unavowed articles of peace with France, 27, 73, 75, 87, 182.

overture to, from King of Prussia, 90, 97, 99, 205.

— and friendly reply, 104, 106.

distrusts Count Haugwitz, 98, 151, 153, 168, 171, 175, 359, 377, 520.

desires a good understanding with Court of Berlin, 176, 293.

— and with England, 252, 293, 354. departure of General Bernadotte from, 182, 205.

ambiguous policy of, 205, 211, 219, 250, 263, 284, 335, 337, 355-359, 364, 368, 464, 502, 506, 507, 512.

asked to help the Duke of Wurtemberg, 436.

proposes to the King of Prussia to break up the Congress of Rastadt, 481.

Prussian reply, 487.

asks for Marshal Souvaroff to command the allied troops in Italy, 513.

good faith of, asserted by Baron de Thugut, 517.

declines to ratify its convention of May, 1797, with Great Britain, 511.

— but profits by British subsidies, 512.

does not wish Prussia to join in war against France, 521, 523.

Villefort, Abbé de, 229.

Vizier Ali of Oude, commits massacres at Benares, 475.

Vreede, M., his party in Holland, 465.

W

Waddens, navigation of the, 464.

Wads, 367.

Wattman, Mr., an English Radical, 70.

Waltz, M., Minister of the Landgrave of Hesse at Paris, 119, 128.

Waldeck, Prince de, 71, 225.

Wallachia, 427.

Wallis, Captain, R.N., his good conduct praised, 479.

Wallmoden, Count de, 48, 50, 51, 106, 123, 198.

Walmer Castle, 273, 283, 315.

Walpole, Mr., British Minister at Lisbon, 410.

Warburton, Charles M., Revd., rector of Loughgilly, letter from, to the Marquis of Buckingham, 55.

Warmington, Mr., of Yarmouth, 420.

Warren, Commodore, Sir John Borlase, intercepts a French convoy, 131. defeats a French expedition to Ireland, 346.

Washington, General, President of the United States of America, his letter in regard to a rupture with France, 288.

Waterford, 235.

Wellesley, Mr. Richard, Lord Grenville's kindness to, 386.

Lord Mornington's affection for, 387.

Weser, the river, 11, 42, 90.

West Indies, loss of English small arms in, 317, 328, 465.

Westmeath, county of, disaffected, 300, 321, 361.

attitude of, towards Legislative Union, 454, 497.

Westminster, plans for defence of, 169.

Westphalia, 198, 521.

Westport, 288, 315.

Wexford, alleged murders in, 225.

226, 231, 232, 235, 320, 329, 351, 361.

end of rebellion in, 265.

Weymouth, 335, 353.

Whig Club, Fox's speech at the, 187, 305.

Whitworth, Sir Charles, British Minister at St. Petersburg, his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 95, 316, 377, 498, 513.

incurs censure for acting beyond his instructions, 283, 352, 354, 358, 448, 449, 498.

agrees to payment of a British pension to Count de Provence, 401.

— and to a Russian garrison in Malta, 419, 469.

signs a treaty with Russia giving joint help to Prussia, 428.

treaty annulled by Prussian policy, 505.

not allowed to receive the order of Malta from the Czar, 498.

in communication with Mr. Grenville at Berlin, 502, 512, 515, 519, 522, 527.

Wickam, William, correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 70, 77, 216, 228, 229, 233.

his notes on Swiss affairs, 144.

distrusts Madame de Rochechouart, 303.

his reports from Ireland, 222, 320.

Wicklow, 216, 226, 231, 232, 265, 302, 319, 320, 351, 361.

Wilford, General, 265, 319.

Williams, Mr., "a good judge of the temper of the City," 336.

Major, 233.

Willot, a French General, 148.

Wimbledon, 169, 184, 185, 269, 284, 313.

Winchelsea, the Earl of, 460.

Windham, William, Secretary at War, 61. alleged indiscretion of, 66.
 to have sole charge of negotiations with French Royalists, 100. expenditure by, in support of the Royalists cause in France, 207.
 correspondence of, with Lord Grenville, 85, 100, 101, 207, 402, 403.

Wolfe, Mr., M.P., to be dismissed from office in Ireland, 467.

Wrangel, M. Von, 277.

Woronzow, Count de, Russian Minister in London, 116, 185, 261, 430.
 his correspondence with Lord Grenville, 131, 246, 249, 267, 284, 285,
 316, 331, 334, 336, 345, 358, 359,
 374, 375, 377, 406, 414, 447, 449,
 457, 461, 482, 484, 499, 505, 511.
 his profession of political faith, 246, 449, 499.
 letters to, from the Czar, 293, 415, 419, 427.
 confers with Lord Grenville as to renewal of the Triple Alliance, 297.
 secret communications to, from Count
 Panin at Berlin, 346-349, 374, 448, 496.
 his knowledge of the Turks, 377. prevents the recall of Sir C. Whitworth from St. Petersburg, 448, 449.
 censures Irish peers for lack of zeal,
 457. his friendly relations with Lord Grenville, 482.
 urges Lord Grenville to succour the King of Naples, 499, 505-507. as to a project of transferring him to
 St. Petersburg, 516.

Wotton, a country seat of the Marquis of Buckingham, 232.

Wright, Mr., an agent of Sir Sidney
 Smith, 491.

Wurmser, General Count de, his disputes with Marshal Clerfayt, 6.
 his want of ability, 7.

Wurtemberg, Duchy of, spread of French principles in, 485.
 Duchess of, 115.
 Duke of, offended by English Government, 109.
 —, talks of quitting Stuttgart, 115, 485.
 —, help for, asked at Court of
 Vienna, 486.

Wurtzbourg, Bishopric of, proposal to endow the Prince of Orange with the, 165.

Wyndham, Mr., British Minister to Florence, 262.

Wynne, Sir W. W., 226, 232.

Y

Yarmouth, 415, 419, 420, 426, 435, 456,
 457, 466.

Yelverton, Lord Chief Baron, in Ireland, 321. his speech for Legislative Union in the Irish House of Lords, 449.

Yeomanry, Irish, rapine, cruelty, and insubordination of, 264-266.

York, Duke of, Commander-in-Chief; employs officers of the regular army to drill militia, 47, 48, 179.
 his views as to recruiting for the army, 85, 86, 101, 179.
 Bishop of Osnabruck, 169.
 229, 256, 263, 284, 421.
 opposes Colonel Koehler's mission to Turkey, 356-358.
 —, but gives way, 359.
 official letter from, to Lord Buckingham, 498-503.

Young, Admiral, a Lord of the Admiralty,
 320.

Sir William, 217.

Z

Zary, city of, 427.

Zastrow, Colonel de, a Prussian Minister, 318.
 an advocate of peace with France, 409, 418. exceeds his official instructions, 418.

Zaungein, M. de, his mission to London, 14.

Zeeland, 350.

Zeman, Shah, Ameer of Afghanistan, dangerous to British supremacy in India,
 326, 391.

Zeppelin, Count de, Chief Minister of the Duke of Wurtemberg, offended by the English Government, 109.

Zinckel, H. A. de, letter from, to Lord Grenville on the state of the German armies in December 1795, 5.

Zuyder Zee, the, 350, 464.

CIRCULAR OF THE COMMISSION.

---

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.

---

PUBLIC RECORD OFFICE,
CHANCERY LANE,
LONDON, W.C.

HIS MAJESTY THE KING has been pleased to ratify and confirm the terms of the Commission issued by Her late Majesty, appointing certain Commissioners to ascertain what unpublished MSS. are extant in the collections of private persons and in institutions which are calculated to throw light upon subjects connected with the Civil, Ecclesiastical, Literary, or Scientific History of this country; and to appoint certain additional Commissioners for the same purposes. The present Commissioners are:—

Sir R. Henn Collins, Master of the Rolls; the Marquess of Ripon, K.G., the Earl of Crawford, K.T., the Earl of Rosebery, K.G., the Earl of Dartmouth, Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice, M.P., Lord Alverstone, G.C.M.G., Lord Hawkesbury, Lord Lindley, Lord Stanmore, G.C.M.G., Sir Edward Fry, Mr. John Morley, O.M., M.P., Sir H. C. Maxwell-Lyte, K.C.B., and Prof. C. H. Firth, LL.D.

The Commissioners think it probable that you may feel an interest in this object, and be willing to assist in the attainment of it; and with that view they desire to lay before you an outline of the course which they usually follow.

If any nobleman or gentleman express his willingness to submit any unprinted book, or collection of documents in his possession or custody, to the Commissioners, they will cause an inspection to be made by some competent person, and should the MSS. appear to come within the scope of their enquiry, the owner will be asked to consent to the publication of copies or abstracts of them in the reports of the Commission, which are presented to Parliament every Session.

To avoid any possible apprehension that the examination of papers by the Commissioners may extend to title-deeds or other documents of present legal value, positive instructions are given to every person who inspects MSS. on their behalf that nothing relating to the titles of existing owners is to be divulged, and that if in the course of his work any modern title-deeds or papers of a private character chance to come before him, they are to be instantly put aside, and are not to be examined or calendared under any pretence whatever.

The object of the Commission is the discovery of unpublished historical and literary materials, and in all their proceedings the Commissioners will direct their attention to that object exclusively.

In practice it has been found more satisfactory, when the collection of manuscripts is a large one, for the inspector to make a selection therefrom at the place of deposit and to obtain the owner's consent to remove the selected papers to the Public Record Office in London or in Dublin, or to the General Register House in Edinburgh, where they can be more fully dealt with, and where they are preserved with the same care as if they formed part of the muniments of the realm, during the term of their examination. Among the numerous owners of MSS. who have allowed their family papers of historical interest to be temporarily removed from their muniment rooms and lent to the Commissioners to facilitate the preparation of a report may be named :—His Majesty the King, the Duke of Rutland, the Duke of Portland, the Marquess of Salisbury, the Marquess Townshend, the Marquess of Ailesbury, the Marquess of Bath, the Earl of Dartmouth, the Earl of Carlisle, the Earl of Egmont, the Earl of Lindsey, the Earl of Ancaster, the Earl of Lonsdale, Lord Braye, Lord Hothfield, Lord Kenyon, Mrs. Stopford Sackville, the Right Hon. F. J. Savile Foljambe, Sir George Wombwell, Mr. le Fleming, of Rydal, Mr. Leyborne Popham, of Littlecote, and Mr. Fortescue, of Dropmore.

The cost of inspections, reports, and calendars, and the conveyance of documents, will be defrayed at the public expense, without any charge to the owners.

The Commissioners will also, if so requested, give their advice as to the best means of repairing and preserving any interesting papers or MSS. which may be in a state of decay.

The Commissioners will feel much obliged if you will communicate to them the names of any gentlemen who may be able and willing to assist in obtaining the objects for which this Commission has been issued.

R. A. ROBERTS, Secretary.

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.

REPORTS OF THE ROYAL COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED TO INQUIRE WHAT PAPERS AND MANUSCRIPTS BELONGING TO PRIVATE FAMILIES AND INSTITUTIONS ARE EXTANT WHICH WOULD BE OF UTILITY IN THE ILLUSTRATION OF HISTORY, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, SCIENCE, AND GENERAL LITERATURE.

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1870 (Re-printed 1874.)	FIRST REPORT, WITH APPENDIX Contents:— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Cambridge Colleges; Abingdon and other Corporations, &c. SCOTLAND. Advocates' Library, Glasgow Corporation, &c. IRELAND. Dublin, Cork, and other Corporations, &c.	f'cap	[C. 55]	s. d. 1 6
1871	SECOND REPORT WITH APPENDIX AND INDEX TO THE FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS Contents:— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Cambridge Colleges; Oxford Colleges; Monastery of Dominican Friars at Woodchester, Duke of Bedford, Earl Spencer, &c. SCOTLAND. Aberdeen and St. Andrew's Universities, &c. IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde; Dr. Lyons, &c.	„	[C. 441]	3 10
1872 (Re-printed 1895.)	THIRD REPORT WITH APPENDIX AND INDEX Contents:— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Cambridge Colleges; Stonyhurst College; Bridgwater and other Corporations; Duke of Northumberland, Marquis of Lansdowne, Marquis of Bath, &c. SCOTLAND. University of Glasgow; Duke of Montrose, &c. IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde; Black Book of Limerick, &c.	„	[C. 673]	6 0
1873	FOURTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX. PART I. Contents:— ENGLAND. House of Lords. Westminster Abbey; Cambridge and Oxford Colleges; Cinque Ports, Hythe, and other Corporations, Marquis of Bath, Earl of Denbigh, &c. SCOTLAND. Duke of Argyll, &c. IRELAND. Trinity College, Dublin; Marquis of Ormonde.	„	[C. 857]	6 8

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1873	FOURTH REPORT. PART II. INDEX - -	f'cap	[C. 857 i.]	s. d. 2 6
1876	FIFTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX. PART I. - Contents:— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Oxford and Cambridge Colleges; Dean and Chapter of Canterbury; Rye, Lydd, and other Corporations. Duke of Sutherland, Marquis of Lansdowne, Reginald Cholmondeley, Esq., &c. SCOTLAND. Earl of Aberdeen, &c.	„	[C.1432]	7 0
„	DITTO. PART II. INDEX - -	„	[C.1432 i.]	3 6
1877	SIXTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX. PART I. - Contents:— ENGLAND. House of Lords: Oxford and Cambridge Colleges; Lambeth Palace; Black Book of the Archdeacon of Canterbury; Bridport, Wallingford, and other Corporations; Lord Leconfield, Sir Reginald Graham, Sir Henry Ingilby, &c. SCOTLAND. Duke of Argyll, Earl of Moray, &c. IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde.	„	[C.1745]	8 6
(Re-printed 1893.)	DITTO. PART II. INDEX - -	„	[C.2102]	1 10
1879 (Re-printed 1895.)	SEVENTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX. PART I. Contents:— House of Lords; County of Somerset; Earl of Egmont, Sir Frederick Graham, Sir Harry Verney, &c.	„	[C.2340]	7 6
(Re-printed 1895.)	DITTO. PART II. APPENDIX AND INDEX - Contents:— Duke of Athole, Marquis of Ormonde, S. F. Livingstone, Esq., &c.	„	[C. 2340 i.]	3 6
1881	EIGHTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX AND INDEX. PART I. Contents:— List of collections examined, 1869-1880. ENGLAND. House of Lords; Duke of Marlborough; Magdalen College, Oxford; Royal College of Physicians; Queen Anne's Bounty Office; Corporations of Chester, Leicester, &c. IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde, Lord Emly, The O'Connor Don, Trinity College, Dublin, &c.	„	[C.3040]	[Out of print.]
1881	DITTO. PART II. APPENDIX AND INDEX - Contents:— Duke of Manchester.	„	[C. 3040 i.]	[Out of print.]
1881	DITTO. PART III. APPENDIX AND INDEX - Contents:— Earl of Ashburnham.	„	[C. 3040 ii.]	[Out of print.]

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1883 (Re-printed 1895.)	NINTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX AND INDEX. PART I. - - - - - Contents:— St. Paul's and Canterbury Cathedrals; Eton College; Carlisle, Yarmouth, Canterbury, and Barnstaple Cor- porations, &c.	f'cap	[C.3773]	s. d. 5 2
1884 (Re-printed 1895.)	DITTO. PART II. APPENDIX AND INDEX - Contents:— ENGLAND. House of Lords. Earl of Leicester; C. Pole Gell, Alfred Mor- rison, Esqs., &c. SCOTLAND. Lord Elphinstone, H. C. Maxwell Stuart, Esq., &c. IRELAND. Duke of Leinster, Marquis of Drogheda, &c.	„	[C.3773 i.]	6 3
1884	DITTO. PART III. APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Contents:— Mrs. Stopford Sackville [re-issued as [Cd. 1892].	„	[C. 3773 ii.]	[Out of print.]
1883 (Re-printed 1895.)	CALENDAR OF THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE MARQUIS OF SALISBURY, K.G. (or CECIL MSS.). PART I. 1306-1571. - - -	8vo.	[C.3777]	3 5
1888	DITTO. PART II. 1572-1582. - - -	„	[C.5463]	3 5
1889	DITTO. PART III. 1583-1589. - - -	„	[C.5889 v.]	2 1
1892	DITTO. PART IV. 1590-1594. - - -	„	[C.6823]	2 11
1894	DITTO. PART V. 1594-1596. - - -	„	[C.7574]	2 6
1896	DITTO. PART VI. 1596. - - -	„	[C.7884]	2 8
1899	DITTO. PART VII. 1597. - - -	„	[C.9246]	2 8
1899	DITTO. PART VIII. 1598. - - -	„	[C.9467]	2 8
1902	DITTO. PART IX. 1599. - - -	„	[Cd.928]	2 3
1904	DITTO. PART X. 1599-1603. - - -	„	[Cd.2052]	2 3
1885	TENTH REPORT - - - - - This is introductory to the following:—	„	[C.4548]	[Out of print.]
1885 (Re-printed 1895.)	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Earl of Eglinton, Sir J. S. Maxwell, Bart., and C. S. H. D. Moray, C. F. Weston Underwood, G. W. Digby, Esqs.	„	[C.4575]	3 7
1885	(2.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - The Family of Gawdy.	„	[C.4576 iii.]	1 4
1885	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Wells Cathedral.	„	[C.4576 ii.]	[Out of print.]
1885	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Earl of Westmorland; Capt. Stewart; Lord Stafford; Sir N. W. Throck- morton; Sir P. T. Mainwaring, Lord Muncaster, M.P., Capt. J. F. Bagot, Earl of Kilmorey, Earl of Powis, and others, the Corporations of Kendal, Wenlock, Bridgnorth, Eye, Plymouth, and the County of Essex; and Stonyhurst College.	„	[C.4576]	[Out of print.]
1885 (Re-printed 1895.)	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Marquis of Ormonde, Earl of Fingall, Corporations of Galway, Waterford, the Sees of Dublin and Ossory, the Jesuits in Ireland.	„	[4576 i.]	2 10

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1887	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Marquis of Abergavenny; Lord Braye; G. F. Luttrell; P. P. Bouverie; W. Bromley Davenport; R. T. Balfour, Esquires.	8vo.	[C.5242]	s. d. 1 7
1887	ELEVENTH REPORT - - - This is introductory to the following :—	"	[C.5060 vi.]	0 3
1887	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - H. D. Skrine, Esq., Salvetti Corre- spondence.	"	[C.5060]	1 1
1887	(2.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - House of Lords. 1678-1688.	"	[C.5060 i.]	2 0
1887	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Corporations of Southampton and Lynn.	"	[C.5060 ii.]	1 8
1887	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Marquess Townshend.	"	[C.5060 iii.]	2 6
1887	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Earl of Dartmouth.	"	[C.5060 iv.]	2 8
1887	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Duke of Hamilton.	"	[C.5060 v.]	1 6
1888	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Duke of Leeds, Marchioness of Waterford, Lord Hothfield, &c.; Bridgwater Trust Office, Reading Corporation, Inner Temple Library.	"	[C.5612]	2 0
1890	TWELFTH REPORT - - - This is introductory to the following :—	"	[C.5889]	0 3
1888	(1.) APPENDIX - - - Earl Cowper, K.G. (Coke MSS., at Melbourne Hall, Derby). Vol. I.	"	[C.5472]	2 7
1888	(2.) APPENDIX - - - Ditto. Vol. II	"	[C.5613]	2 5
1889	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Ditto. Vol. III.	"	[C.5889 i.]	1 4
1888	(4.) APPENDIX - - - Duke of Rutland, G.C.B. Vol. I.	"	[C.5614]	[Out of print.]
1891	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Ditto. Vol. II.	"	[C.5889 ii.]	2 0
1889	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - House of Lords, 1689-1690.	"	[C.5889 iii.]	2 1
1890	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - S. H. le Fleming, Esq., of Rydal.	"	[C.5889 iv.]	1 11
1891	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Duke of Athole, K.T., and Earl of Home.	"	[C.6338]	1 0
1891	(9.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Duke of Beaufort, K.G., Earl of Donoughmore, J. H. Gurney, W. W. B. Hulton, R. W. Ketton, G. A. Aitken, P. V. Smith, Esqs.; Bishop of Ely; Cathedrals of Ely, Gloucester, Lincoln, and Peterborough; Corporations of Gloucester, Higham Ferrers, and Newark; Southwell Minster; Lincoln District Registry.	"	[C.6338 i.]	2 6

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1891	(10.) APPENDIX - - - - - The First Earl of Charlemont. Vol. I.	8vo.	[C. 6338 ii.]	s. d. 1 11
1892	THIRTEENTH REPORT - - - - - This is introductory to the following:—	„	[C.6827]	0 3
1891	(1.) APPENDIX - - - - - Duke of Portland. Vol. I.	„	[C.6474]	3 0
	(2.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Ditto. Vol. II. - - - - -	„	[C. 6827 i.]	2 0
1892	(3.) APPENDIX. J. B. Fortescue, Esq., of Dropmore. Vol. I. - - - - -	„	[C.6660]	2 7
1892	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Corporations of Rye, Hastings, and Hereford. Capt. F. C. Loder- Symonds, E. R. Wodehouse, M.P., J. Dovaston, Esqs., Sir T. B. Len- nard, Bart., Rev. W. D. Macray, and Earl of Dartmouth (Supplementary Report).	„	[C.6810]	2 4
1892	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. House of Lords, 1690-1691 - - -	„	[C.6822]	2 4
1893	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Sir W. Fitzherbert, Bart.; The Delaval Family, of Seaton Delaval; Earl of Ancaster; and Gen. Lyttelton- Annesley.	„	[C.7166]	1 4
1893	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Earl of Lonsdale - - - - -	„	[C.7241]	1 3
1893	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. The First Earl of Charlemont. Vol. II.	„	[C.7424]	1 11
1896	FOURTEENTH REPORT - - - - - This is introductory to the following:—	„	[C.7983]	0 3
1894	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Duke of Rutland, G.C.B. Vol. III. -	„	[C.7476]	1 11
1894	(2.) APPENDIX. Duke of Portland. Vol. III. - -	„	[C.7569]	2 8
1894	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Duke of Roxburghe; Sir H. H. Campbell, Bart.; Earl of Strath- more; and Countess Dowager of Seafield.	„	[C.7570]	1 2
1894	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Lord Kenyon - - - - -	„	[C.7571]	2 10
1896	(5.) APPENDIX. J. B. Fortescue, Esq., of Dropmore. Vol. II.	„	[C.7572]	2 8
1895	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. House of Lords, 1692-1693 - - - (Manuscripts of the House of Lords, 1693-1695, Vol. I. (New Series.) See H.L. No. 5 of 1900. Price 2/9.) Ditto. 1695-1697. Vol. II. See H.L. No. 18. 1903. Price 2/9.	„	[C.7573]	1 11
1895	(7.) APPENDIX. Marquis of Ormonde - - - - -	„	[C.7678]	1 10

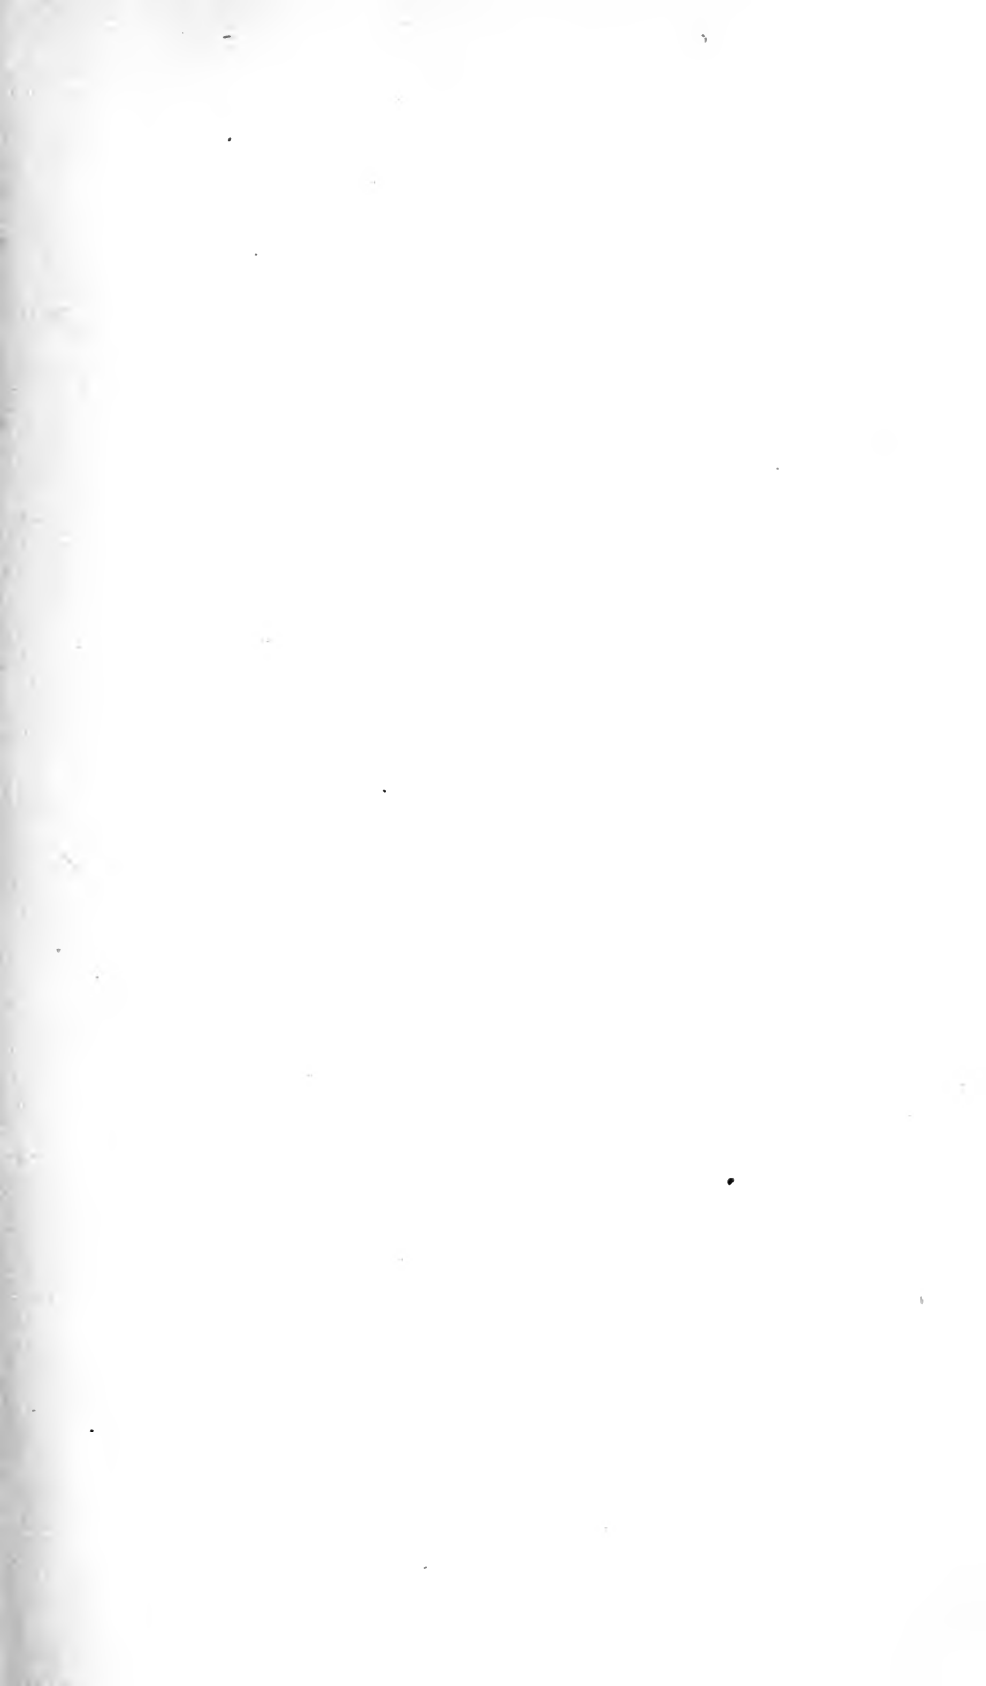

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1895	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Lincoln, Bury St. Edmunds, Hertford, and Great Grimsby Corporations; The Dean and Chapter of Wor- cester, and of Lichfield; The Bishop's Registry of Worcester.	8vo.	[C.7881]	s. d. 1 5
1896	(9.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Earl of Buckinghamshire; Earl of Lindsey; Earl of Onslow; Lord Emly; T. J. Hare, Esq.; and J. Round, Esq., M.P.	„	[C.7882]	2 6
1895	(10.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Earl of Dartmouth. Vol. II. American Papers.	„	[C.7883]	2 9
1899	FIFTEENTH REPORT - - - - - This is introductory to the following:—	„	[C.9295]	0 4
1896	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Earl of Dartmouth. Vol. III. - -	„	[C.8156]	1 5
1897	(2.) APPENDIX. J. Eliot Hodgkin, Esq. - - -	„	[C.8327]	1 8
1897	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Charles Haliday, Esq., of Dublin; Acts of the Privy Council in Ireland, 1556-1571; Sir William Ussher's Table to the Council Book; Table to the Red Council Book.	„	[C.8364]	1 4
1897	(4.) APPENDIX. Duke of Portland. Vol. IV. - -	„	[C.8497]	2 11
1897	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. The Right Hon. F. J. Savile Foljambe -	„	[C.8550]	0 10
1897	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Earl of Carlisle, Castle Howard -	„	[C.8551]	3 6
1897	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Duke of Somerset; Marquis of Ailesbury; and Sir F.G. Puleston, Bart.	„	[C.8552]	1 9
1897	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, at Drumlanrig. Vol. I.	„	[C.8553]	1 4
1897	(9.) APPENDIX AND INDEX. J. J. Hope Johnstone, Esq., of Annandale	„	[C.8554]	1 0
1899	(10.) Shrewsbury and Coventry Corporations; Sir H. O. Corbet, Bart., Earl of Radnor, P.T. Tillard; J. R. Carr-Ellison; Andrew Kingsmill, Esqrs.	„	[C.9472]	1 0
1898	MANUSCRIPTS IN THE WELSH LANGUAGE. Vol. I.—Lord Mostyn, at Mostyn Hall.	„	[C.8829]	1 4
1899	Vol. I. Part II.—W. R. M. Wynne, Esq. of Peniarth.	„	[C.9468]	2 11
1902	Vol. II. Part I.—Jesus College, Oxford; Free Library, Cardiff; Havod; Wrexham; Llanwrin; Merthyr; Aberdâr.	„	[Cd.1100]	1 9
1903	Vol. II. Part II.—Plas Llan Stephan; Free Library, Cardiff.	„	[Cd.1692]	1 8

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1899	Manuscripts of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, K.G., K.T., at Montagu House, Whitehall. Vol. I.	8vo.	[C.9244]	<sup>s.</sup> 2 <sup>d.</sup> 7
1903	Ditto. Vol. II. (Part I.) - - -	..	[Cd.930]	1 10
1903	Ditto. Vol. II. (Part II.) - - -	..	[Cd.930-i]	1 11
1903	Ditto at Drumlanrig Castle. Vol. II. -	..	[Cd.1827]	1 1
1899	Ditto Marquess of Ormonde, K.P., at Kilkenny Castle. Vol. II.	..	[C.9245]	2 0
1902	Ditto. New Series. Vol. I. - - -	..	[Cd.929]	1 7
1903	Ditto. Vol. II. - - - -	..	[Cd.1691]	1 10
1904	Ditto. Vol. III. - - - -	..	[Cd.1963]	2 0
1904	Ditto Mrs. Stopford-Sackville. Vol. I. -	..	[Cd.1892]	1 10
1899	Ditto Duke of Portland, K.G. Vol. V. -	..	[C.9466]	2 9
1901	Ditto. Vol. VI., with Index to Vols. III.-VI.	..	[Cd.676]	1 9
1901	Ditto. Vol. VII. - - - -	..	[Cd.783]	2 3
1899	Ditto J. M. Heathcote, Esq. - - -	..	[C.9469]	1 3
1899	Ditto J. B. Fortescue, Esq. Vol. III. -	..	[C.9470]	3 1
1899	Ditto F. W. Leyborne-Popham, Esq. -	..	[C.9471]	1 6
1900	Ditto Mrs. Frankland-Russell-Astley -	..	[Cd.282]	2 0
1900	Ditto Lord Montagu of Beaulieu - -	..	[Cd.283]	1 1
1900	Ditto Beverley Corporation - - -	..	[Cd.284]	1 0
1901	Ditto Various Collections. Vol. I. - Corporations of Berwick-on-Tweed, Burford and Lostwithiel; the Counties of Wilts and Worcester; the Bishop of Chichester; and the Dean and Chapters of Chichester, Canterbury and Salisbury.	..	[Cd.784]	2 0
1903	Ditto. Vol. II. - - - - Sir Geo. Wombwell; Duke of Norfolk; Lord Edmund Talbot (the Shrewsbury papers); Miss Buxton, Mrs. Harford and Mrs. Wentworth of Woolley.	..	[Cd.932]	2 4
1904	Ditto. Vol. III. - - - - T. B. Clarke-Thornhill, Esq.; Sir T. Barrett-Lennard, Bart.; Pelham R. Papillon, Esq.; W. Cleverly Alexander, Esq.	..	[Cd.1964]	1 6
1902	Calendar of the Stuart Manuscripts at Windsor Castle, belonging to His Majesty the King. Vol. I.	..	[Cd.927]	2 11
1904	Ditto. Vol. II. - - - -	..	[Cd.2189]	2 9
1902	Manuscripts Colonel David Milne-Home of Wedderburn Castle, N.B.	..	[Cd.931]	1 4

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
				s. d.
1904	Manuscripts Marquess of Bath at Longleat, Wiltshire. Vol. I.	8vo.	[Cd.2048]	1 9
1904	American Manuscripts in the Royal Institution of Great Britain. Vol. I.	„	[Cd.2201]	2 3
1904	SIXTEENTH REPORT (containing a list of the owners of Manuscripts upon whose collections Reports have been made to July, 1904).	„	[Cd.2209]	0 9
1904	Manuscripts of the Earl of Mar and Kellie at Alloa House, N.B.	„	[Cd.2190]	2 7
1905	Ditto J. B. Fortescue, Esq. Vol. IV. -	„	[Cd.2233]	2 6
	Ditto Marquess of Lothian, at Blickling Hall.	„		[ In the press. ]
	Ditto Lady Du Cane - - -	„		[ In the press. ]
	Ditto Dean and Chapter of Wells - -	„		[ In the press. ]

162248
Gt. Brit. Historical Manuscripts Commission
Manuscripts of J. B. Fortescue.
Vol. 3<sup>a</sup>-4

Gov. Doc.
G. B.
Com
Hi

University of Toronto Library

DO NOT REMOVE THE CARD FROM THIS POCKET

Acme Library Card Pocket
LOWE-MARTIN CO. LIMITED

